His next opera was a romantic work — the only one of the kind with which he lastingly enhanced his reputation. It was 'Undine', for which he had once again himself written the libretto, on the basis of La Motte Fouqué's novel of the same name and the libretto made by the author himself for E. T. A. Hoffmann, whose work was produced in 1816. (Another setting of that book, by Karl Friedrich Girschner, had appeared in 1837.) Hamburg, not Leipzig, was to have charge of the production, but owing to a delay in the scene-painting the much less important theatre of Magdeburg had a start of three days, producing 'Undine' on 21 Apr. 1845. The work reflects Weber, Marschner and Mendelssohn rather feebly, the faithless hero and his treacherous beloved are treated conventionally somewhat in the manner of the least successful portions of Weber's 'Euryanthe', and one of those too deliberately simple strophic songs that disfigure most of Lortzing's operas is perhaps the worst specimen of the kind. But the figures of the heroine, a water-sprite betrayed by her human lover, and of her father who avenges her, are respectively touching and impressive up to a point, and the few comic scenes are treated with Lortzing's usual felicity and delicacy. The use of the Wagnerian Leitmotiv is fairly extensive for that period, when Lortzing indeed could hardly have known it from Wagner himself, who in any case was not yet using it systematically.

After a visit to Hamburg, where 'Undine' brought him much honour, Lortzing returned to Leipzig to find himself under notice to relinquish his conductorship. He began to find it difficult to keep his large family going, and although his works were successful in many parts of Germany, they were not legally protected and were exploited by theatrical managements without yielding their author-composer adequate returns. In Feb. 1846, however, Lortzing secured a new engagement as conductor at the Theater an der Wien in Vienna, which had already secured for itself the first performance of the next comic opera, 'Der Waffenschmied' ('The Armourer'). He removed to the Austrian capital in April, the family following in June. The production took place on 31 May, and the piece, which is graceful, pleasant and sentimentally humorous, was a great popular success. The next two years were the last to bring Lortzing some happiness, fair satisfaction in his work and reasonable material comfort, though with such a family to support he did not find his income more than barely sufficient and certainly not commensurate with the profits his works yielded the German theatres. But all this began to wane even before the term of his engagement came to an end, for he found the theatre management unreliable, the press on the whole hostile and the Viennese public fickle. It was Leipzig again, not Vienna, which produced his next work, 'Zum Grossadmiral', on 13 Dec. 1847, a piece with a London setting based on Iffland's German translation of Alexandre Duval's comedy 'La Jeunesse de Henri V' and much more remotely on Shakespeare's 'Henry IV'. It did not hold the stage after 1849.

The revolutionary year 1848, during which Lortzing wrote a large number of patriotic songs and choruses as well as an opera, 'Regina', on a topical subject, brought with it grave financial cares. The opera, an attempt at the grand manner for which he was not fitted, was declined everywhere as too "liberal" in its tendencies, and was in fact not staged anywhere in the composer's lifetime, nor ever at all in its original form. The Theater an der Wien, where by that time Lortzing shared the conductorship with Suppé, was in a bad way long before the end of 1848. Lortzing was reduced to providing incidental music for one of the farces now played there as makeshifts, and when the theatre was sold on unfavourable terms he found himself without employment and obliged to pawn one household article after another. A new manager at Leipzig, however, called him back there to rehearse and conduct the production of the opera 'Rolands Knappen', which took place on 25 May 1849. But there was, for the moment, no permanent work for him at Leipzig, and his endeavours to secure the posts vacated in Dresden by Wagner's flight and in Berlin by the death of Nicolai were fruitless. The "comic-romantic" 'Roland's Knights' was an immediate success, but the composer was greatly worried by his inability to send sufficient funds to the family left behind in Vienna, where disturbances and executions were the order of the day. A brief spell of happiness came when he was able to fetch them away from Vienna, his Leipzig success having after all secured him the post of conductor he had so briefly held there in 1843-45. But no sooner had he settled down than he learned that his predecessor, Julius Rietz, disappointed of the Berlin appointment offered to Heinrich Dorn in his stead, had decided to remain at Leipzig. On being asked to take second place, Lortzing immediately resigned. To keep the wolf from the door he wrote a number of songs and some settings from 'Faust' for the centenary of Goethe's birth, took to acting again and toured as widely as he could as actor and guest conductor in the hope of securing some other engagement. A new opera, 'Cagliostro', based on the libretto by Scribe and Saint-Georges written for Adolphe Adam in 1844, did not proceed beyond a sketch for the text. Negotiations with London and a plan to visit Paris came to nothing. His travels became more and more fatiguing without proving sufficiently lucrative, and moreover he began to be threatened with deafness.

At last, in April 1850, he was engaged by the Friedrich-Wilhelmstadt Theatre in Berlin, a miserable concern which produced only comedies and farces in its spoken repertory and musically could rise to nothing better than Singspiele and such incidental music for plays the limited orchestra could perform. By the end of the year he managed somehow to produce 'The Two Marksmen' and 'The Poacher', only to find the house full every night except for his benefit performance. He became passionately embittered against theatre managements and the treatment meted out to German composers in their own country. He was justified: four of his operas were being played in Berlin while he and his people were all but starving. To crown all, he received notice of the termination of his engagement on 1 Feb. 1851. But he escaped this final humiliation. Treatment for an illness being postponed on account of the costs, he went to bed feeling very unwell on 20 Jan., while that evening the one-act comic opera, 'Die Opernprobe' ('The Opera Rehearsal')—his last—was produced at Frankfurt o/M.; and he died early the following morning.

Lortzing's art is so peculiarly German, and at the same time a small art, that it has never acclimatized itself elsewhere, though an occasional hearing of one of his three or four best comic operas would be sure to delight any not too sophisticated audience. He is as popular in Germany still as Sullivan is in Britain, but has not the Savoy master's versatility, rhythmic resource, skill in contrapuntal combination or variety in the imitation or parody of styles. Sullivan has wit and satire as well as humour; Lortzing only humour of a blunter and more obvious kind. He is also, in a technical sense, much less professionally finished as a musician. But without having quite Sullivan's brilliance of orchestration, Lortzing has a similar refinement in handling the orchestra, a gift doubtless derived from the best French models—Auber, Boieldieu, Isouard and others— which he must have heard frequently at the German theatres in his youth. Sullivan's fault of occasionally lapsing into mawkishness he shares in full, but that is a fault inherited in his case both from the older German Singspiel and from the French comédie larmoyante. It shows itself mainly in those four-square, oversimple and sentimental strophic songs of which it is a tradition in Germany to say that they have gone to enrich the treasury of German folksong—which can be true only if one agrees to the peculiar German interpretation of the term Volkslied as meaningsome minor composer's song accepted by the people, not one actually created by some remote anonymous member of the people. Only if the plainest songs in Balfe's operas could be regarded as English folksongs could we agree to call Lortzing's ingenuous tunes German ones. And it may here be said that Lortzing has a good deal more in common with Balfe than with Sullivan. But if he does not represent German folksong in the proper sense, he is a rare exponent of a very agreeable, attractive type of German comic opera, a type much more thoroughly national than that of, for instance, Flotow, which was far more largely French, or Nicolai, which shows more Italian influence; a type, too, that disappeared after him because it lost itself in the shallows of operetta on the one hand or on the altitudes of music-drama on the other.

E. B.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- DIPPEL, PAUL GERHARDT, 'Albert Lortzing: ein Leben für das deutsche Musiktheater' (Berlin, 1951).
 DÜRINGER, P. J., 'Albert Lortzing, sein Leben und Wirken' (Leipzig, 1851).
 'Gesammelte Lortzing-Briefe' (Ratisbon, 1913).

ISTEL, EDGAR, 'Die Blutezeit der musikalischen Romantik in Deutschland' (Leipzig and Berlin, 1921).
 KILLER, HERMANN, 'Albert Lortzing' (Potsdam, 1938).
 KOMORCZYNSKI, E. VAN, 'Lortzing's "Waffenschmied" und seine Tradition' (Leipzig and Vienna, n.d.).
 KRUSE, GEORG RICHARD, 'Albert Lortzing' (Berlin, 1914).
 LAUE, HELLMUTH, 'Die Operndichtung Lortzings' (Bonn, 1932).
 MÜLLER, EUGEN, 'Albert Lortzing' (Munster, 1921).
 NAYLOR, BERNARD, 'Albert Lortzing' (Proc. Mus. Ass., Vol. LVIII, 1931).
 WITTMANN, H., 'Lortzing' (Leipzig, 1902).

For Grabbe's tragedy 'Don Juan und Faust' (1829, unpublished).
 For Scribe's drama 'Yelva' (1832).
 For Bohm's farce 'Vier Wochen in Ischl' (1848).
 For Benedix's fairy-play 'Die drei Edelsteine' (? , lost).
 For the comedy 'Im Irrenhause' (1850).
 For Stotz's farce 'Eine Berliner Grisette' (1850).
 For the farce 'Ein Mittwoch in Moabit' (1850, unpublished).
 For Gottschall's drama 'Ferdinand von Schill' (1850, unpublished).
 For Nostroy's farce 'Der Zerrissene' (? , unpublished).
 For Kotzebue's drama 'Graf Benjowsky' (? , unpublished).

CATALOGUE OF STAGE WORKS

OPERAS

Title	Libretto	Year of Composition	Production
'Ali Pascha von Janina, oder Die Franzosen in Albanien.'	Composer, on a "true incident".	1824.	Munster, 1 Feb. 1828.
'Die beiden Schützen.'	Composer, based on Joseph Patrat's 'Les Méprises par ressemblance'. Robert Blum.	1835. 1836.	Leipzig, Municipal Theatre, 20 Feb. 1837. —
'Die Schatzkammer des Ynka', tragic opera. ¹	Composer, based on a play by A. H. J. Mélesville, J. T. Merle & E. C. de Boirie, 'Le Bourgmestre de Sardam, ou Les Deux Pierres'.	1837.	Leipzig, Municipal Theatre, 22 Dec. 1837.
'Zar [orig. Czaar] und Zimmermann, oder Die zwei Peter.'	Composer, trans. from A. Vilain de Saint-Hilaire & Paul Dupert's libretto 'Cosimo, ou Le Peintre badigeonneur' previously set by Eugène Prosper Prévost.	1839.	Leipzig, Municipal Theatre, 20 Sept. 1839.
'Caramo, oder Das Fischerstechen.'	Composer & Philipp Reger, based on a play by J. L. F. Deinhardtstein.	1840.	Leipzig, Municipal Theatre, 23 June 1840.
'Hans Sachs', festival opera.	Composer, based on the vaudeville 'Casanova au Fort Saint-André' by Varin, Arago & Desvergers.	1841.	Leipzig, Municipal Theatre, 31 Dec. 1841.
'Casanova.'	Composer, based on Kotzebue's comedy 'Der Rehbock'.	1842.	Leipzig, Municipal Theatre, 31 Dec. 1842.
'Der Wildschutz, oder Die Stimme der Natur.'	Composer, based on a story by Friedrich de La Motte Fouqué, and on the author's libretto written for E. T. A. Hoffmann.	1845.	Magdeburg, 21 Apr. 1845.
'Undine', romantic opera.	Composer, based on Friedrich Wilhelm von Ziegler's comedy 'Liebhaber und Nebenbuhler in einer Person'.	1846.	Vienna, Theater an der Wien, 31 May 1846.
'Der Waffenschmied [von Worms].'	Composer, based on Alexandre Duval's comedy 'La Jeunesse de Henri V'.	1847.	Leipzig, Municipal Theatre, 13 Dec. 1847.
'Zum Grossadmiral.'	Composer.	1848.	Berlin, Royal Opera, 21 Mar. 1899 (revised by Adolf L'Arronge).
'Regina, oder Die Marodeure', "revolutionary opera".	Composer, Georg Meisinger & Carl Haffner, based on a tale by Johann Carl August Musaeus.	1849.	Leipzig, Municipal Theatre, 25 May 1849.
'Rolands Knappen, oder Das ersehnte Glück', romantic opera.	Composer, based on a French play by Philippe Poisson, 'L'Impromptu de Champagne'.	1850.	Frankfurt o/M., 20 Jan. 1851.
'Die Opernprobe, oder Die vornehmen Dilettanten' (1 act).

ARRANGEMENT AND PASTICCIOS

Johann Adam Hiller's 'Die Jagd', newly arranged (1830).
 'Der Pole und sein Kind, oder Der Feldweibel vom 4. Regiment', play with songs (1832).
 'Der Weihnachtsabend', play with music (1832).
 'Szenen aus Mozarts Leben', play with music selected from Mozart (1832).
 'Andreas Hofer', play with music (1832).

INCIDENTAL MUSIC¹

For Kotzebue's drama 'Der Schutzgeist' (? 1820s, lost).
 For Sachs's play with songs 'Die Hochfeier, oder Die Veteranen' (1829, lost).

¹ Music lost, except a festival march.

² Listed by Killer (see Bibl.). Some of these entries are rather uncertain.

LIBRETTOS SKETCHED BUT NOT COMPOSED

'Der Amerikaner' (? 1833-34).
 'Cagliostro' (1849-50).

See also Wolf (H., pf. Fantasy on 'Zar und Zimmermann').

LOS ANGELES, Victoria de (b. Barcelona, 1 Nov. 1923).

Spanish soprano singer. She comes of a musical family and had learnt to sing and play the guitar at home before entering, in 1940, the Barcelona Conservatory, where she also studied the pianoforte. She made her début in her native city in 1944, first in concerts and then as the Countess in 'Le nozze di Figaro' at the Teatro del Liceo. Shortly afterwards she won the first prize in an international competition at Geneva; on her return to Spain she appeared with Gigli in 'Manon' and 'La Bohème', besides singing, in German, in 'Tannhäuser', 'Lohengrin' and 'Der Freischütz'. She soon became widely known as a concert singer, making tours, from 1949 onwards, in Scandinavia, France, Italy, South America, as well as in England, where she first sang in the B.B.C. Third Programme in a studio performance of Falla's 'La vida breve'. In the course of her concert tours she also made some further operatic appearances, notably in 'Faust' at the Paris Opéra and in the title-part of Strauss's 'Ariadne auf Naxos' at La Scala, Milan; since 1950 she has been a firm favourite at the Metropolitan Opera, New York. She was first seen in England earlier in the same year, when she sang in London in 'La Bohème' at Covent Garden and in a recital at the Wigmore Hall; other Covent Garden appearances have been as Elsa, Manon and Madame Butterfly. In all these parts, and more especially in the last two, she delighted a London public which had otherwise heard little first-class singing since the second world war.

Victoria de Los Angeles's voice is a warm, vibrant instrument of unusual clarity and flexibility, predominantly dark and southern in quality, but capable of much variety of tone-colour. The quality of tone is not fully equalized throughout her range. Her lowest notes are rich, full and appealing, and this quality is maintained up to d'' at all levels of intensity, and on up to a'' in her mezza voce, which is of delightful purity. Pressure on the upper notes sometimes produces a slight discoloration or hardening of the timbre, and the notes above a'' seldom come with ease, as was apparent at the end of the first act of 'La Bohème'. She is capable of brilliant vocalization in such music as the gavotte from 'Manon'; yet she sings Rossini's Rosina in the original mezzo-soprano version. She has essayed German songs with varying success; so far, however, the music of her native Spain has shown her voice and interpretative powers at their ripest. Her appearance is winning; her stage presence composed and serene, so that the smallest movements tell. D. S.-T.

LOS RÍOS, Alvaro de (b. ?; d. ? Madrid, 1623).

Spanish composer. He was appointed músico de cámara to the queen, Doña Margherita de Austria, on 10 Aug. 1607. He was highly praised by the dramatist Tirso de Molina (author of the first play on the subject of Don Juan), who describes a performance of another play of his, 'El vergonzoso en palacio', at Toledo, with music by Alvaro de Los Ríos and others. The Sablonara Manuscript at Munich (State Lib., E. 200) and Madrid (Bibl. Nac., M. 1263, a somewhat inaccurate modern copy) contains 8 compositions by him. J. B. T.

LOSSIUS, Lucas (b. Fack nr. Munich, 18 Oct. 1508; d. Lüneburg, 8 July 1582).

German theorist. He was rector or rector of a school at Lüneburg from 1533 to his death. He is the author of a theoretical work, 'Erotemata musicae practicae . . .' (Nuremberg, 1563), which passed through many editions; also the compiler of a comprehensive collection of liturgical music for the use of the Lutheran church, entitled 'Psalmodia hoc est Cantica sacra veteris ecclesiae selecta . . .' (Nuremberg, 1553). This latter work is introduced with a preface by Philip Melancthon and is divided into four parts, the first part containing the Latin texts and plainsong melodies of the antiphons, responsoria, hymns and sequences for all Sundays and chief holy days, also the Passion according to St. Matthew and the Lamentations; the second part makes a similar provision for all the minor holy days of the year; the third part contains the plainsong melodies for the mass and for funerals; the fourth contains the psalms and canticles with their antiphons and intonations according to the eight tones. Only a few German hymns appear in the collection.

A second revised and enlarged edition of this work was published by George Rhaw at Wittenberg in 1561, and two others appeared in 1569 and 1579. The musical editor of Schöberlein's 'Schatz des liturgischen Gesangs', F. Riegel, claims that the psalm-tones, with all their differences, have been preserved in greater purity in Lossius than in the form in which they have been current in the Roman church, based on Guidetti's 'Directorium chori', Lossius in 1553 being in closer contact with the older Catholic tradition than Guidetti in 1589. J. R. M.

LOSÝ¹ VON LOSYMTAL, Johann Anton (b. Prague, c. 1645; d. Prague, 1721).

Bohemian lutenist. He was a nobleman, and, after completing his university studies in his birthplace, he started a career as an official, and after several years he became imperial chamberlain and aulic councillor. He lived in Prague, but paid repeated visits to Germany and Italy, and died between 9 Aug. and 2 Sept. 1721. He was a lute player of considerable reputation as well as a highly esteemed composer for his instrument. Vol. V of D.T.Ö. contains an interesting selection of his works, and A. Koczirz gave Losý's biography in the study 'Österreichische Lautenmusik, 1650-1720'.² G. Č.

¹ In Mattheson's 'Ehrenpforte' wrongly spelt Logi.

² 'Studien zur Musikwissenschaft', V, 74.

LOTARIO (Opera). See HANDEL.

LOTHAR, Mark (b. Berlin, 23 May 1902).

German accompanist and composer. He studied at the High School for Music in Berlin in 1918 and privately with Justus Wetzell the following year, afterwards taking a course in orchestration under Mraczek at Dresden. In 1921 he began to travel with the singer Corry Nera as accompanist. His compositions include the operas 'Tyll' (on the subject of Till Eulenspiegel), produced at Weimar, 4 Oct. 1928), 'Lord Spleen' (after Ben Jonson's 'Epicoene'), produced at Dresden, 11 Nov. 1930, 'Münchhausen' and 'Schneider Wibbel'; incidental music to Eichendorff's 'Freier' and other plays; 'Narrenmesse' for men's chorus; lyric poem 'Märchen', 'Orchesterstücke' and Suite for orchestra; Serenade for chamber orchestra; Trio for violin, cello and pianoforte; pianoforte pieces; songs, etc. E. B.

Lothar, Rudolf. See Clutsum ('König Harlekin', opera), Graener ('Friedemann Bach', lib.). Hubay ('Az Alarc', opera). Tiefland (d'Albert, lib.).

Lotti, Pierre (Julien Viaud). See Guy-Ropartz ('Pêcheur d'Islande', incid. m.). Koechlin (memorial symph. poem; 'Heures persanes', orch. suite). Messager ('Madame Chrysanthème', opera). Pierné ('Ramuntcho', incid. m.).

LOTTCHEN AM HOFE (Opera). See HILLER (J. A.).

LOTTI, Antonio (b. ? Venice¹, c. 1667; d. Venice, 5 Jan. 1740).

Italian singer, organist and composer. He was the son of Matteo Lotti, a Venetian, chapelmaster to the then Catholic court of Hanover.² His early years were passed at Venice, and before he was sixteen he produced an opera, 'Giustino', to a libretto by a nobleman, Nicolo Beregani. His master was Legrenzi, then maestro di cappella to the Doge of Venice. Lotti entered the doge's chapel as a boy. In 1687 he joined the Confraternità Musicale di Santa Cecilia. On 30 May 1689 he was appointed cantore di contra alto with a salary of 100 ducats, and on 6 Aug. 1690 he became deputy organist, with an addition of 30 ducats. On 31 May 1692 the Procuratori of St. Mark's unanimously elected him second organist in place of Pollarolo, who advanced to the post of vice maestro di cappella. As second organist Lotti composed a book of masses, for which he received 100 ducats on 22 July 1698. On 17 Aug. 1704 he succeeded Spada as first organist, a post he retained until his death, receiving permission in 1732 to employ as substitute his pupil Saratelli, who eventually succeeded him.

In 1733 the maestro di cappella, Antonio Biffi, died, and an eager competition for the vacant post ensued. Lotti's chief rivals were Pollarolo and Porpora, and at the first election, on 8 Mar. 1733 (the dates throughout are from state documents), he obtained six votes out of twelve. A majority being necessary, the matter remained in suspense, and meantime Lotti was authorized to call himself maestro di cappella. Porpora retired before the second election (2 Apr. 1736), but his place was taken by a scarcely less formidable competitor, Giovanni Porta. Lotti, however, received nine votes and thus obtained the post, with its salary of 400 ducats and an official residence. In the interim he composed his celebrated 'Miserere', which superseded that of his master Legrenzi and has been performed in St. Mark's on Maundy Thursday ever since. This was followed by a number of masses, hymns and psalms, with organ accompaniment only, although his predecessors had employed the orchestra. He also composed seventeen operas, produced with success between the years 1693 and 1717 at the theatres of S. Angelo, S. Cassiano, S. Giovanni Crisostomo and SS. Giovanni e Paolo. They included the first setting of Zeno's 'Alessandro Severo', produced at the S. Giovanni Crisostomo on 26 Dec. 1716, his last Venetian opera. Some of these works having attracted the attention of the crown prince of Saxony during his stay at Venice in 1712, he engaged Lotti to visit Dresden with a company of singers, including Boschi and Personelli, both members of the chapel, and his own wife, a Bolognese singer named Santa Stella. The joint salary of husband and wife was fixed at 2100 doppie (about £1600). The party set out on 5 Sept. 1717, having obtained special leave of absence from the Procuratori of St. Mark's — "per farvi un opera".

At Dresden Lotti composed 'Giove in Argo' (25 Oct. 1717), 'Ascanio, ovvero Gl'odi delusi del sangue' (1718), and 'Teofane' (13 Nov. 1719), (librettos by S. B. Pallavicini); intermezzi and other pieces, including church works, among which may be specified the eight-part 'Crucifixus' occurring in a Credo for five voices and instruments. The Procuratori gave him one extension of leave, but in 1719 he was compelled to return or vacate his post; he accordingly left Dresden in Oct. in a travelling-carriage which he ever after retained as a memorial of his visit and finally bequeathed to his wife. After his return to Venice he composed entirely for the church and chamber.

Lotti died of dropsy and was buried in the church of S. Geminiano, where his widow (who died 1759 and was buried beside him) erected a monument to his memory. It was destroyed with the church in 1815.

¹ He styles himself "Veneto" on the title-page of his book of madrigals (1705), and his brother Francesco was lawyer to the Procuratori of Venice, a post tenable only by a native.

² No documents concerning music and musicians at Hanover in the 17th century are now to be found there. The register of the Catholic Church contains, under 5 Nov. 1672, an entry of the baptism of Hieronymus Dominicus, son of Matthias de Lottis and Maria de Papirinis, and under 9 Nov. 1673 of that of a daughter of Matteo de Lotti. The register was begun in May 1671, so that it does not go back far enough for our purpose.

Besides the compositions already mentioned, Lotti wrote for Vienna an opera, 'Costantino', overture by Fux (1716), and two oratorios, 'Il voto crudele' (1712) and 'L'umiltà coronata' (1714); for Venice the oratorios 'Gioia re di Giuda', 'Giuditta' (printed by Poletti) and the celebrated madrigal 'Spirito di Dio'¹ for the doge's espousal of the Adriatic, performed on the Bucintoro in 1736 — a very effective composition. His book of madrigals (1705), dedicated to the Emperor Joseph I, contains the one in five parts, 'In una siepe ombrosa', which Bononcini claimed in London as his own composition, and which led to his disgrace. Another is given as a model by Padre Martini in his 'Esemplare di contrappunto'. Nevertheless they were severely handled at the time in a 'Lettera famigliare d'un accademico filarmonico', circulated anonymously in manuscript, but attributed, on Fontana's authority, to Marcello, who had been a pupil of Lotti.² Many of his compositions³ are still in the Saxon State Library, and Breitkopf & Härtel once possessed several of his manuscripts, as did also Burney.

Lotti's rank among musicians is a high one, from the fact, that though the last representative of the old severe school, he used modern harmonies with freedom and grace. The expression and variety of his music struck even his contemporaries, especially Hasse, when he was at Venice in 1727. Burney⁴, who heard his church music sung there in 1770, credits him with "grace and pathos", and characterizes his choral music as both solemn and touching, and so capable of expression, though written in the old contrapuntal style, as to have affected him even to tears. Of his cantatas he says that they contain recitatives full of feeling.⁵ As a specimen of his writing for a single voice may be cited the favourite song 'Pur dicesti'. He was so afraid of overloading the voices that he never used orchestral accompaniments in church music. There are wind instruments as well as the four strings in his Dresden operas, but not in those produced at Venice.

Besides Saratelli and Marcello, Alberti, Bassani, Gasparini and Galuppi were among Lotti's pupils. A motet of his, 'Blessed be thou', and a madrigal, 'All hail, Britannia', both for four voices, are given in Hullah's 'Part Music' (1st ed.), and a fine Credo in C major, also for four voices, in his 'Vocal Scores' and 'Part Music' (2nd ed.). Proske has a Mass of his (a 4) in 'Musica divina', Vol. I, and Rochlitz a Crucifixus (a 6) and another (a 8), and a Qui tollis (a 4) in his 'Sammlung'. There is also a Kyrie in the 'Auswahl vorzüglicher Musikwerke' (Trautwein). Four masses and a Requiem are in Lück's 'Sammlung', and various other pieces in the collections of Schlesinger, Moskowa, etc.

F. G.

BIBL.: MOSER, A., 'Arcangelo Corelli und Antonio Lotti. Zwei künstlerische Ehrenrettungen' (Z.f.M., III, Apr. 1921).

See also Bach (16, influence on). Bononcini (2, alleged plagiarism from). Fux (overture for 'Costantino').

Lotti, Giovanni. See Tenaglia (lib.).

LOTTINI, Antonio (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 18-century bass singer. Nothing is known of his early career. In 1738 he was principal bass in London and made his début as Teobaldo in Handel's 'Faramondo' on 3 Jan. Subsequently he sang in Pescetti's 'La conquista del vello d'oro' (28 Jan.) and Elviro in Handel's 'Serse' (15 Apr.).

J. M., adds.

LOTTO, Izydor (b. Warsaw, 22 Dec. 1840; d. ?).

Polish violinist. He was educated at the Warsaw Conservatory and later became a pupil of Massart (violin) and Reber (composition) at the Paris Conservatoire, where he obtained a first prize in 1855. For some years he acted as solo violinist of the court orchestra at Weimar and later taught at the Strasbourg Conservatory. He returned to Warsaw and became a teacher at the Conservatory, where he trained many Polish violinists, among them Bronisław Huberman. He wrote several little pieces for violin, extremely difficult and very effective as displays of violinistic virtuosity. His 'Fileuse' (Op. 8) was frequently performed both in Poland and abroad.

G. R. H.

LOUEL, Jean (b. Ostend, 3 Jan. 1914).

Belgian conductor and composer. He studied at the Conservatories of Ostend, Bruges and Ghent, and then became a student for composition under Joseph Jongen and for conducting under Désiré Defauw at the Brussels Conservatoire. In 1943 he gained the Belgian Prix de Rome with the cantata 'De Vaart van Ulysses' ('The Odyssey'). He has been conducting at the Belgian National Radio Institution, at both the Concerts du Conservatoire and the Maison de Musique Ancienne and the Chapelle Musicale of Queen Elizabeth of the Belgians in Brussels. He is director of the Musical Academy of Aalst (Alost) and was appointed assistant professor and in 1948 professor of harmony at the Brussels Conservatoire.

As a composer Louel struggled long against the overwhelming influence of Ravel, but in his later works, dating from about 1944, he

¹ A MS of this is in the R.C.M. in London.

² See Chrysander's 'Handel', II, 294 and 303.

³ Q.-L. enumerates twelve operas as still extant and gives the names of fifteen more, and a list of masses, church music of different kinds, and arias and madrigals.

⁴ Present State, France and Italy', p. 145.

⁵ History, IV, 534.

found his own idiom, which is shaped of the blend of the elements of a classical education and modernistic aspirations. His chief works are:

- Cantata 'L'Enfant prodigue' (1939).
- Suite for chamber orch. (1944).
- Fanfare for brass (1948).
- Pf. Concerto No. 1 (1946).
- Pf. Concerto No. 2 (1948).
- Flute Concerto (1946).
- Sonata for clar. & pf. (1937).
- Sonata for flute & pf. (1938).

A. L. C.

LOUFENBERG, Heinrich von. See LAUFENBERG.

LOUIS FERDINAND (actually Friedrich Christian Ludwig), Prince, of Prussia (b. Friedrichsfelde nr. Berlin, 18 Nov. 1772; d. Saalfeld, 13 Oct. 1806).

German amateur musician. He was the son of Prince August Ferdinand of Prussia and therefore nephew of Frederick the Great and of Prince Henry (the patron of J. P. Salomon and cousin of Frederick William II, who played the cello). His sister Louise married Prince Radziwill, who composed the 'Faust' music. Louis Ferdinand thus belonged to a musical as well as a royal family. That he very early entered the army was a matter of course, for no other career was open to a Prussian prince; but that, amid all the distractions of a military life no small part of which (1792-1806) was spent in hard service, he should have become a sound practical musician and composer proves his energy and perseverance no less than his talent. But music was his passion, and in garrison or camp he had musicians with him and kept up his practice. He preferred English pianofortes, of which he is said to have purchased no fewer than thirteen.

We find no account of his masters and early studies, nor any but vague notices of his rapid progress, until 1793. He was then with his regiment at Frankfurt o/M. and is reported to have aided a poor musician not only with his purse, but by a very fine performance of a sonata at a concert. Three years later, in 1796, Beethoven, then in Berlin, formed the opinion of his playing which he afterwards expressed to Ries, that, though the playing of Hummel — then among the most renowned of pianists — was elegant and pleasing, it was not to be compared with that of the prince. Ries also records Beethoven's compliment to him, that he did not play at all like a king or a prince, but like a thorough, solid pianist.

In 1804 the prince made a journey to Italy. In Bohemia he visited Prince Lobkowitz at his seat, Raudnitz. There is no good reason to doubt the truth of an anecdote, the scene of which lay there. Lobkowitz had purchased from Beethoven the recently composed "Eroica" Symphony, and had had it performed in his palace in Vienna. He consulted with Wranitzky, his Kapellmeister, as to a programme for the entertainment of his guest. Wranitzky proposed the new Symphony. Louis Ferdinand listened with the utmost interest, and at the close of the performance requested a repetition, which was of course granted. After supper, having to depart early the next morning, he besought the favour of a third performance, which was also granted. It was under the fresh impression of this music that Louis Ferdinand renewed his acquaintance with Beethoven. We have no particulars of the meeting. Ries only relates that an old countess¹, at the supper after a musical entertainment, excluded Beethoven from the table set for the prince and the nobility, at which the composer left the house in a rage. Some days later Louis Ferdinand gave a dinner, and the countess and Beethoven being among the guests, had their places next the prince on either hand, a mark of distinction of which the composer always spoke with pleasure. A pleasant token of their intercourse survives in the dedication to the prince of the pianoforte Concerto in C minor, which was first played in July 1804.

In the autumn of the next year (1805), the prince being at Magdeburg on the occasion of military manoeuvres, Spohr was invited to join them. "I led", says Spohr in his autobiography, a strange, wild, stirring life, which for a short time thoroughly suited my youthful tastes. Dussek and I were often dragged from our beds at six in the morning and called in dressing-gown and slippers to the prince's reception-room, where he, often in shirt and drawers (owing to the extreme heat), was already at the pianoforte. The study and rehearsal of the music selected for the evening often continued so long that the hall was filled with officers in stars and orders, with which the costume of the musicians contrasted strangely enough. The prince, however, never left off until everything had been studied to his satisfaction.

Louis Ferdinand was killed at the battle of Saalfeld.

His compositions, like his playing, were distinguished for boldness, splendour and deep feeling; several of those which are in print were composed before the friendship with Dussek — which lasted from their meeting in 1803 until the prince's death — had ripened his taste and made him more fully master of his ideas. These he would gladly have suppressed. The pianoforte Quartet in F minor is considered to be his best work.

Ledebur's list of the published compositions (made 1861) is as follows:

Op.

1. Quintet, C mi., for 2 vns., viola, cello & pf.
2. Trio, A \flat ma., for vn., cello & pf.
3. Trio, E \flat ma., for vn., cello & pf.
4. Andante and Variations, B \flat ma., for viola, cello & pf.
5. Quartet, E \flat ma., for vn., viola, cello & pf.
6. Quartet, F mi., for vn., viola, cello & pf.
7. Fugue in 4 parts for pf.

¹ Not the Countess Thun, as has been stated: she had died long before.

8. 'Notturmo', F ma., for flute, vn., cello & pf. with 2 horns ad lib.
9. Rondo, B ma., for flute, 2 clars., 2 horns, 2 vns., viola, cello & pf.
10. Trio, E♭ ma., for vn., cello & pf.
11. 'Larghetto', variations for vn., viola, cello & pf.
12. Octet for clar., 2 horns, 2 vns., 2 cellos & pf.
13. Rondo for pf.
- Quintet No. 2 for 2 vns., viola, cello & pf.
- Trio No. 4 for vn., cello & pf.
- March for 2 oboes, trumpet & bass.

A. W. T.

BIBL.—POSECK, ERNST, 'Louis Ferdinand, Prinz von Preussen: eine Biographie' (Berlin, 1943).

See also Barmann (1). Dussek (friendship). Liszt (No. 168, Elegy for pf.).

LOUISE. Opera (roman musical) in 4 acts by Gustave Charpentier. Libretto by the composer. Produced Paris, Opéra-Comique, 2 Feb. 1900. 1st perf. abroad, Brussels, 8 Feb. 1901. 1st in U.S.A., New York (in French), 3 Jan. 1908. 1st in England, London, Covent Garden Theatre (in French), 18 June 1909. The sequel, 'Julien, ou La Vie du poète', in 4 acts with a prologue, also with a libretto by the composer, was produced in Paris, Opéra-Comique, on 4 June 1913.

LOULIÉ, Étienne (b. ?; d. ?).

French 17th-century music master and writer on music. He was a protégé of Mlle de Guise and a pupil of Gehenault and Ouvrard. He entered the Sainte-Chapelle in Paris in 1663–64¹ and left it in 1673. He is known as the author of 'Éléments ou principes de musique dans un nouvel ordre . . . avec l'estampe et l'usage du chronomètre' (Paris, 1696), at the close of which is an engraving and description of his early metronome. Loulié was the first to attempt to indicate the exact tempo of a piece of music by means of an instrument beating the time. The one he invented took the minute as the unit, and went up to seventy-two degrees of rapidity; but being six feet in height it was too cumbersome for general use. Nevertheless to Loulié belongs the merit of the idea which more than a century later was carried into practice by Maelzel. C. C., add. M. L. P.

Lourdé de Santerre, Jean Baptiste. See Duni (E. R., 2 libs.).

LOURE (Fr.). A term of uncertain derivation which originally signified a bagpipe common in many parts of France, especially Normandy.

From its primary signification the word loure came to mean a dance, in slower time than the gigue, generally in 6-4 time. As this was danced to the nasal tones of the loure, the term louré was gradually applied to any passage meant to be played in the style of the old bagpipe airs. Thus lourer is to play legato with a slight emphasis on the first note of each group. The louré style is chiefly met with in pastoral, rustic and mountaineer music.

¹ See Michel Brenet's 'Les Musiciens de la Sainte-Chapelle du Palais' (Paris, 1910).

A loure occurs as the sixth movement of the fifth of Bach's French Suites, in G major.

G. C.

See also Canarie (compared with).

LOURIÉ, Arthur (b. St. Petersburg, 14 May 1892).

Russian composer. He first attended the Conservatory of his native town, but the instruction he received there was so little to his taste that he decided to continue his studies alone. From this period date his first works, three sonatinas, 'Préludes fragiles', 'Synthèses', 'Formes en l'air' and several pieces in quarter-tones. His first attempts at religious music date from 1915: an 'Ave Maria', a 'Salve Regina' and 'Lamentations de la Vierge', this last based on a French text of the 13th century.

In 1918, after the Revolution, Lunacharsky, then Minister of Public Instruction, made Lourié Director of the Music Section, where he remained until 1921, when he left Russia for France.

He already had a number of works to his credit, including a ballet with chorus 'Le Masque de neige', choreographic fragments inspired by Cazotte's 'Diable boiteux', a march on a text by Mayakovsky; a cantata for chorus a cappella, 'Dans le temple du rêve d'or'; a funeral chant on the death of a poet, for mixed voices and twelve wind instruments; a 'Canzona di Dante' for chorus and strings; 'La Voix de la muse'; a Japanese Suite for voice and small orchestra; 'Pastorale de la Volga' for oboe, bassoons, two violas and cello; 'Elysium', eight songs on poems by Pushkin; 'Thé Alphabet', songs for children on poems by Tolstoy.

Until 1921 Lourié had been mainly influenced by Debussy and Schoenberg. On his arrival in France he became acquainted with Stravinsky, whose influence was apparent in the composer's new works. To this period belong a 'Regina Coeli' for contralto, oboe and trumpet; an 'Improperium' for baritone, four violins and double bass; a second Quartet; a third entitled 'Suite'; a Sonata for violin and double bass; a 'Divertissement' for violins and violas.

Lourié's more recent works show a deepening maturity and a more personal philosophy, as well as a great strengthening of technique: an opera on Pushkin's 'Feast in Time of Plague'; a 'Sonate liturgique' for orchestra, pianoforte and chorus (1928); a 'Concerto spirituel' for pianoforte, chorus and double bass (1929); a 'Symphonie dialectique' for orchestra (1930).

P. L. F.

LOUYS, Jan (b. ?; d. ?).

Flemish 16th-century singer and composer. He was a member of the imperial chapels of Maximilian I and Ferdinand. In 1576 he was organist of the royal chapel of the Netherlands. He composed 3 books of psalms (published Antwerp, 1555), motets, etc.

E. v. d. s.

Louÿs, Pierre. See Dandelot (17 songs from 'Bilitis'). Debussy ('Chansons de Bilitis', 3 songs). Dupré (2 songs ['Bilitis']). Honegger ('Roi Pausole', opera). Kocchlin (do., 5 songs). Rudhyar (do., 3 songs). Zandonai ('Conchita', opera).

LOVE IN A VILLAGE. Ballad and pasticcio opera in 3 acts. Libretto by Isaac Bickerstaffe. Produced London, Covent Garden Theatre, 8 Dec. 1762. 1st perf. in U.S.A., Philadelphia, before 22 Jan. 1767. 1st modern revival, London, G.S.M., 10 May 1923. The music was partly composed and partly compiled by T. A. Arne. The overture and ten numbers are his own; one number each is taken from Agus, Boyce, Howard and Weldon; three are old tunes; the finale of Act I, the only extended one, is a "medley". A modern version by Arthur Oldham was produced at the Aldeburgh Festival of 1952.

LOVE OF THREE ORANGES, THE ('Любовь к трем Апельсинам'). Opera in 4 acts by Prokofiev. Libretto by the composer, based on Gozzi's comedy 'L' amore delle tre melerancie'. Produced Chicago (in French, trans. by V. Janacopoulos), 30 Dec. 1921. 1st perf. in Russia, Leningrad, 1926.

Lovelace, Richard. See Parry (H., song). Quilter (song). Walker (E., song).

LOVELL, Thomas (b. ?; d. ?).

English 15th-16th-century composer. In 1501, at the wedding festivities of Prince Arthur with Catherine of Aragon, he had "the ordering and guydinge" of the trumpeters and minstrels, and he is probably identical with the sub-dean of Wells who died in 1524. Only two manuscript songs of his are known, in the University Library and in St. John's College, Cambridge.

E. v. d. s.

LOVER, Samuel (b. Dublin, 24 Feb. 1797; d. St. Helier, Jersey, 6 July 1868).

Irish author and composer. He was the eldest son of a stockbroker and displayed talent in many directions at an early age. After an unsuccessful attempt to follow his father's business he devoted himself to miniature painting and was elected a member of the Royal Hibernian Academy in 1828, becoming its secretary two years later. Ten years before this he had sung a song of his own composition at the banquet given to Moore in Dublin. He also achieved success as a writer of prose and verse, before the publication of his 'Legends and Stories of Ireland' in 1831. On 9 Feb. 1832 an opera to his libretto, 'Grana Uile, or The Island Queen', was given in Dublin. The music was selected from Irish airs and arranged by William Penson. In 1832 he gained much fame by the exhibition of a miniature he had painted of Paganini.

In 1835 Lover settled as a miniature painter in London, where he attained a good deal of social and artistic success. He was associated with Dickens in the foundation of 'Bentley's Miscellany'. His first novel, 'Rory O'More' (the title taken from his own song of the same name, dated 1826), came out in 1836, and he dramatized it in 1837 for the Adelphi Theatre, where it ran for more than a hundred nights. Other dramatic pieces written and composed by him were: 'The Olympic Picnic' and 'The Beau Ideal', both 1835; 'The White Horse of the Peppers', 1838; 'The Happy Man', 1839; 'The Greek Boy', 1840; 'Il Paddy Whack in Italia' (a burlesque Italian opera, English Opera House, Lyceum, 1841). His last play was 'M'Carthy More', 1861. Meanwhile he was writing novels, etc., and the best-known of his works, 'Handy Andy', came out in 1842.

In 1844 the regular practice of Lover's art had to be abandoned owing to failing eyesight, and on 13 Mar. 1844 he started a musical entertainment, called 'Irish Evenings', in the Princess Concert Rooms. The success of his experiment was so great that he repeated the entertainment in the chief towns of England, Scotland, and Ireland, going to America in 1846. In 1848 he returned to London and appeared in a new entertainment called 'Paddy's Portfolio'. He wrote two librettos for Balfe, married for the second time in 1852 (his first marriage had been to Miss Berrill, 1827) and brought out some books of poems which were not successful.

From 1864 Lover wrote no more, and in the latter years of his life he went back to live in Dublin. He died in Jersey, but was buried at Kensal Green, London. Among his most popular songs were 'The Angel's Whisper', 'Molly Bawn' and 'The Low-backed Car'. Some of these were adapted to old Irish tunes.

J. A. F.-M., rev.

See also Herbert (V., grandson). Hindemith (song).

LOVERIDGE, Iris (b. London, 10 Apr. 1917).

English pianist. She was educated at the Lady Eleanor Holles School, Hampton, and won the Ada Lewis scholarship to the R.A.M. in London. She studied there for three years and won many prizes, besides playing at the Queen's Hall with Sir Henry Wood while still a student. She won the Marlen Mayer Award after leaving the R.A.M. Since 1936 she has broadcast frequently and has given many recitals and concerts, in London at the Albert Hall and elsewhere, and in provincial towns, playing with the leading orchestras throughout Britain. She has also visited France, Holland and Germany. Her repertory includes both classical and romantic works, but she specializes in the compositions of Albéniz, Falla and other Spanish composers.

M. K. W.

LOVE'S TRIUMPH (1). Masque by Ben Jonson, acted at the court of Charles I in 1630 and printed in 1640. The name of the composer of the music has not survived; the designs for its staging were by Inigo Jones.

F. K.

LOVE'S TRIUMPH (2). Opera produced in London, at the Haymarket Theatre, in 1708, and printed in folio by Walsh and Hare about that year. Richard Leveridge and Mrs. Tofts were the principal English singers, while the other parts were taken by Italians. The words were adapted from the Italian of Cardinal Ottoboni by Peter Anthony Motteux, and the music was by C. F. Cesarini (or Carlo Cesarini Giovanni, surnamed "del Violone") and F. Gasparini.

F. K.

LOVE'S TRIUMPH (3). Opera. See WALLACE (VINCENT).

Lovey, Emmet. See Kfenek ('Tarquin', lib.).

LOVEY, Edward (b. Salisbury, c. 1610; d. Oxford, 11 July 1682).

English organist and composer. He was a chorister in Salisbury Cathedral under John Holmes, the organist. About 1630 he succeeded William Stonard as organist of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford. He married Alice, daughter of Sir John Peyton of Dodding-ton, in the diocese of Ely, who died on 17 Mar. 1649. In 1660 he was appointed one of the organists of the Chapel Royal. In 1661 he published at Oxford 'A Short Direction for the performance of Cathedrall Service, published for the information of such as are ignorant of it and shall be called upon to officiate in Cathedral or Collegiate Churches where it hath formerly been in use', containing the notation of the preces, responses, litany, etc., for ordinary days, and, under the title of 'Extraordinary Responses upon Festivalls', a version of Tallis's Responses and Litany, also 'Veni Creator', harmonized for four voices.

In 1662, on the resignation of Wilson, Lowe was appointed Professor of Music at Oxford, having been deputy for some time before. In 1664 he published 'A Review' of his 'Short Direction', adapted to the then newly revised liturgy, and including also several chants and John Parsons's burial service. This edition was reprinted by Rimbault in 1843 and by Jebb in his 'Choral Responses' in 1857. Lowe composed several anthems, some of which are in the Tudway collection and at Ely Cathedral. He is buried in the Divinity Chapel on the north side of the cathedral at Oxford.

W. H. H.

LÖWE, Ferdinand (b. Vienna, 19 Feb. 1865; d. Vienna, 6 Jan. 1925).

Austrian conductor. He was a pupil of Bruckner at the Vienna Conservatory and in his work as a conductor he became specially identified with the furtherance of his master's work. In 1883 he became a pianoforte teacher at the Vienna Conservatory and in 1897 conductor of the Kaim orchestra at Munich. His subsequent career as a conductor was pursued chiefly in these two cities and included such important posts as the Singakademie and Gesellschaftskonzerte in the former and the Konzertverein in the latter. He also directed concerts in Budapest and Berlin.

Löwe was one of those who induced Bruckner to allow cuts and alterations to be made in his symphonies.

H. C. C., adds.

LÖWE, Johann Jakob (b. Vienna, 1628; d. Lüneburg, Sept. 1703).

German composer. He was the son of the Saxon electoral resident in Vienna, studied music with Heinrich Schütz at Dresden and in 1655-62 was court conductor at Brunswick and Wolfenbüttel. In 1663, on Schütz's recommendation, he went, in the same capacity, to Zeitz, and from 1682 until his death he lived as organist at Lüneburg. Löwe was probably the composer of 13 operas, produced at Brunswick between 1657 and 1663, the first of which was 'Amelinde'. The libretto of this and of most of the others was the work of the Duke of Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel, Anton Ulrich, well-known as a dramatist, but only in the case of 'Orpheus aus Thracien' (1659) is it absolutely certain that Löwe was the composer. In any case, of all those early Brunswick operas only the librettos remain, while the music is lost. Löwe's high position among German composers of his time becomes, however, apparent from his published works outside the dramatic field. As a composer of songs he collaborated with Julius Johann Weiland in 'Zweyer gleichgesinnten Freunde Tugend- und Schertz-Lieder' (Bremen, 1657) and with Martin Kempe in 'Salamische Musenlust' (Jena, 1665), while, alone, he wrote 'Neue geistliche Concerten' (Wolfenbüttel, 1660) and 'Einstimmige neue Arien', with 2-part ritornels (Nuremberg, 1662). His 'Synfonien, Intraden, Gagliarden, Aricn, Balletten, Couranten, Sarabanden' (Bremen, 1658), for 2 violins, 2 violas, bass (viola or bassoon) and continuo is the first extant instance of German orchestral suites with an introductory sinfonia, after the French model.¹ A collection of 2-part 'Sonaten, Kanzonen und Kapricen' (Jena, 1664) concludes the list of his works.

A. L.

LOWE, Katherine. See GUDENIAN.

LOWE, Thomas (b. ?; d. London, 1 Mar. 1783).

English tenor singer. He made his first appearance on any stage at Drury Lane Theatre in London on 11 Sept. 1740, as Sir John Loverule in 'The Devil to pay'; on 17 Oct. he performed Macheath in 'The Beggar's Opera' and on 20 Dec. had the distinction of being the original singer of Arne's songs, "Under the greenwood tree" and "Blow, blow, thou winter wind" in 'As You Like It'. In 1743 he appeared in Dublin in 'The Provoked Wife', singing Carolan's song "Bumpers, Squire Jones".

¹ A copy of this rare work is in the B.M.

Lowe was the original singer of the following parts in Handel's oratorios: Priest of Dagon and Israelitish Man in 'Samson' (1742), First Elder in 'Susanna' (1743), Joshua (1746), Zadok in 'Solomon' (1749) and Septimus in 'Theodora' (1750). In 1745 and several subsequent years he sang at Vauxhall Gardens, and in 1763 he became lessee and manager of Marylebone Gardens, continuing so until 1768, when an unsuccessful season compelled him in Feb. 1769 to assign his interest in the place to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. His powers beginning to fail, he was obliged to accept engagements at Finch's Grotto Garden, Southwark, and similar places. In 1772 he was engaged at Sadler's Wells. Lowe is said to have possessed a finer voice than Beard, but to have been inferior as musician and singer.

W. H. H., adds.

Lowell, Amy. See Thomson (V., song).

Löwen. See Hertel (J. W., 'Ratsel', incid. m. & 'Oden und Lieder').

LÖWENBACH, Jan (b. Rychnov nad Kněžnou, Bohemia, 29 Apr. 1880).

Czech musical organizer and writer. Having received his education at the "Gymnasium" of his birthplace, he read law at the Charles University in Prague (LL.D.) and afterwards became a lawyer there. Being interested and well trained in music from his early boyhood, he soon began to play an important part in various branches of the Czech musical body. He turned his excellent knowledge of copyright to the practical advantage of musicians in particular, was one of the organizers of Hudební Matice — the publishing department of Umělecká Beseda — an outstanding member of the editorial circle of the periodical 'Hudební Revue' and a zealous exponent of the idea of international collaboration as represented by the I.S.C.M.

When the German occupation of Czechoslovakia became imminent (1939) Löwenbach escaped to Switzerland. Later he went to England and Cuba, and in 1941-46 he lived in New York. There he did much work in support of the cultural and political efforts of his countrymen and finally became cultural adviser to the Czechoslovak information service. In Nov. 1946 he was called to Prague to work as an expert adviser in the Ministry of Education and Culture, but in Feb. 1948 he was dismissed and in the autumn of the same year settled in New York again.

As an author Löwenbach has devoted himself chiefly to the writing of innumerable studies, critical articles and commentaries, both for the daily press ('Čas', 'Lidové noviny', 'Newyorské listy', 'New York Times') and for the reviews ('Dalibor', 'Hudební Revue', 'Listy Hudební Matice', 'Tempo', 'Der Merker', 'Die Musik', 'Signale für die musikalische Welt', 'The Chesterian', M.Q., 'Musical Courier', 'Musical America'). He also contributed articles to the 'Encyclopedia Americana'. Besides, he wrote several short monographs in Czech, the more important dealing with the relations between Czech and Russian music (Prague, 1947) and with music in America (Prague, 1948). His two librettos (for Křička's 'The Gentleman in White' and Martini's 'The Soldier and the Girl-Dancer'), and many translations of songs should also be mentioned.

G. Č.
Löwenberg, Jakob. See Vogler (C., 'Rubezahl', lib.).

LOWER RHENISH MUSICAL FESTIVALS. See NIEDERRHEINISCHE MUSIKFESTE.

LOWINSKY, Edward (Elias) (b. Stuttgart, 12 Jan. 1908).

American musicologist of German birth. He graduated from the Stuttgart Grammar School in 1926 and studied at the High School for Music there from 1923 to 1928 and then at Heidelberg University from 1929 to 1933, when he obtained the Ph.D. At Stuttgart he held a scholarship and taught theory and pianoforte in 1928 for a year. He also worked as a music pedagogue and appeared as a concert pianist. From 1942 to 1947 he was Assistant Professor of Music at Black Mountain College, North Carolina, and he was director of the Music Institute there in 1945. In 1947-48, having been awarded the Guggenheim fellowship to gather material for the writing of a history of the motet in the 16th century, he spent fifteen months in Italy doing research work. He was appointed a visiting Associate Professor of Music to the University of Chicago in the summer of 1949 and since then has been Associate Professor of Music at Queens College, Flushing, N.Y. For the academic year 1952-53 he was appointed member of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton.

He has written two books, 'Orlando di Lassos Antwerpener Motettenbuch' (The Hague, 1937) and 'Secret Chromatic Art in the Netherlands Motet' (New York, 1946), a second and enlarged edition of which is now (1954) in preparation. A 'Book of Children's Music' (Copenhagen, 1933) was compiled by him and his essays include:

'Zur Frage der Deklamationsrhythmik in der a-capella Musik des 16. Jahrhunderts', (Acta musicol., 1935).

'The Goddess Fortuna in Music' (M.Q., 1943).

'The Function of Conflicting Signatures in Early Polyphonic Music' (M.Q., 1945).

'The Concept of Physical and Musical Space in the Renaissance' (Amer. Mus. Soc., 1946).

'The Use of Scores by Sixteenth-Century Musicians' (ibid., 1948).

- 'Two Motets Wrongly Ascribed to Clemens non Papa' (Rev. Belge de Musicol., 1948).
 'On the "Tabula Compositoria" of Lampadius' (Amer. Mus. Soc., 1949).
 'A Newly Discovered Sixteenth-Century MS at the Biblioteca Vallicelliana in Rome' (ibid., 1950).

M. K. W.

LOWLAND, THE (d'Albert). See TIEF-LAND.

Loyola, Ignatius. See Kapsberger (Apotheosis).

LOZHKY ("Spoons"). The name is given to a Russian instrument of the Janissary-music class which gave much the same effect as the Turkish Crescent. Mahillon says that it was adopted by the Russians from the Turks when Janissary music became the rage, i.e. in the early 18th century. With the Turks it was called gâshiqlar ("spoons"), and when the Russians borrowed the device they merely translated its name into Russian. It consisted of a round hollow case of brass, to which were fixed, at an angle of 60°, two brass tubes adorned with jingles. These tubes were joined at the extremity of the angle by a solid brass arm, and by this latter the instrument was held. In shape it took the form of a lyre. It was used in pairs and played by clashing the two round hollow cases together. The lozhky were much favoured by the Russian cavalry and often accompanied the soldiers' songs. In the Uhlans especially, whose bands usually comprised 1 clarinet, 1 oboe, 1 tambourine, 1 Turkish crescent, a pair of cymbals and the lozhky, they became a special feature. Specimens are to be found in the museum of the Brussels Conservatoire de Music (Nos. 883-884).

H. G. F.

BIBL.—MAHILLON, V. C., 'Catalogue . . . du Musée instrumental du Conservatoire de Musique de Bruxelles', II, 182-83 (Ghent, 1909).

SACHS, CURT, 'Real-Lexikon', p. 245 (Berlin, 1913).

See also Lyra.

LUALDI, Adriano (b. Larino [Campobasso], 22 Mar. 1887).

Italian critic, conductor and composer. He studied at Venice under Wolf-Ferrari, obtaining his diploma with the cantata 'Attollite portas'. He has been active as a critic for many years, being at first attached to the 'Secolo' of Milan and afterwards, from 1936, to the 'Giornale d'Italia' in Rome. From 1929 he represented the Sindacato Musicisti in the Fascist Parliament. He was also one of the first organizers of the International Festivals at Venice. He was principal of the Conservatory of San Pietro a Maiella at Naples from 1936 to 1943. After a period of retirement from official teaching, for political reasons, he was readmitted to public service in 1949, when he became director of the Conservatory of Florence.

Lualdi's literary works include volumes of impressions gathered on his travels in Italy and other European countries, in South America and in Russia. Informative essays of his have been issued under the titles of 'Serate musicali', 'Arte e regime' and in the survey entitled 'Rinnovamento musicale italiano'. He has also exercised his pen in writing the librettos for most of his own operas, which are the following:

- 'Guerrin meschino', prod. Rome, Teatro dei Piccoli (puppets), 1920.
 'Le nozze di Haura' (unpublished and not produced).
 'La figlia del re', prod. Turin, Teatro Regio, 18 Mar. 1922.
 'Le furie d'Arlecchino' (libretto by Luigi Orsini), prod. Buenos Aires, 19 June 1924.
 'Il diavolo nel campanile', after Edgar Allan Poe, prod. Milan, Teatro alla Scala, 22 Apr. 1925.
 'La Grancela', after the story by Riccardo Bacchelli, prod. Venice (Festival), Teatro Goldoni, 10 Sept. 1932.
 'Lumawig e la Saetta', prod. Rome, 1937.

His works further include:

- 2 Choral Pieces for 3-part women's chorus.
 3 Choral Pieces for 4-part and 8-part mixed chorus.
 'La leggenda del vecchio marinaio' (after Coleridge) for orch.
 'Suite adriatica' for orch.
 'Africa', colonial rhapsody for orch.
 'Samnium', 3 folk tunes for orch.
 'Sire Halewijn' for soprano & orch.
 'La rosa di Saron' for tenor & orch.
 String Quartet, E ma.
 Sonata for vn. & pf.
 Passacaglia for organ.
 Numerous songs.

Lualdi has also been active in concert organization, founding and conducting a chamber orchestra with which he has given performances of unpublished old Italian music, particularly of the Neapolitan school, edited by him for modern use. G. M. G.

BIBL.—CONFALONIERI, G., 'L'opera di Adriano Lualdi' (Milan, 1932).

LUARD-SELBY, Bertram (b. Ightham, Kent, 12 Feb. 1853; d. Glanford Brigg, Lincolnshire, 26 Dec. 1918).

English organist and composer. He received his musical education at the Leipzig Conservatory under Reinecke and Jadassohn. On his return to England he became organist of the London church of St. Barnabas, Marylebone, and Highgate School in 1876. He gave chamber concerts in London before his appointment to the post of organist of Salisbury Cathedral in 1881, which he retained for two years. He was next organist at St. John's, Torquay, in 1884, and, back in London, of St. Barnabas, Pimlico, in 1886. He was appointed organist of Rochester Cathedral in 1900.

Luard-Selby's most important works are the incidental music to 'Helena in Troas', a drama by John Todhunter and E. W. Godwin, performed at Hengler's Circus in London on 17 May 1886, and 'Weather or No', a musical duologue, produced at the Savoy Theatre in Aug. 1896. The latter was popular in Germany and Austria, where it was given on very many stages as 'Das Wetterhäuschen', the original punning title being untranslatable. An orchestral 'Idyll' was played at one of Henschel's concerts in London on 11 Mar. 1897. This, two Quintets for strings and pianoforte, a Suite for violin and pianoforte, many pianoforte pieces and two operas, 'The Ring' (1886) and 'Adela' (Nottingham, 1888), remain unpublished.

The list of printed works includes the short cantatas 'The Waits of Bremen', 'The Dying Swan', 'Summer by the Sea', part-songs 'The Hag', 'It was a lover and his lass', trios, etc., for women's voices, a violin Sonata in B minor, some sixteen anthems, ten services, very numerous organ pieces and some songs, all of which show great taste and refinement of treatment.

J. A. F.-M., adds.

Lubahn, Robert. See Strauss (R.), 'Olympische Hymne', chorus & orch.).

LÜBECK (1). Dutch family of musicians of German origin.

(1) Johann Heinrich Lübeck (b. Alphen, 11 Feb. 1799; d. The Hague, 7 Feb. 1865), violinist and conductor. He held the post of conductor and head of the Conservatory of The Hague until his death.

(2) Ernst Lübeck (b. The Hague, 24 Aug. 1829; d. ?, 17 Sept. 1876), pianist and composer, son of the preceding. He first appeared in public at the age of twelve, when he played Beethoven's E♭ major Concerto. He made a tour to the U.S.A., Mexico and Peru, which lasted from 1849 to 1854. On his return he was made court pianist at The Hague. In 1855 he moved to Paris, where he principally resided until driven from the city by the disturbances of the Commune, which gave a shock to his brain from which it never recovered, and he became at length hopelessly insane.

Lübeck wrote only for pianoforte. Among his compositions are the following: Berceuse in A♭ major, Op. 13; Tarentelle; Polonaise, Op. 14; 'Trilby the Sprite: rêverie caractéristique' (after Charles Nodier's story). The two former were chosen by him for performance at the Philharmonic concert in London on 7 May 1860, when he also played Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor. In the same year he first appeared at the Musical Union. His playing was distinguished for brilliancy and technical dexterity. Berlioz says of him:

Son talent est tout à fait extraordinaire, non seulement par un mécanisme prodigieux, mais par un style musical excellent et irréprochable. C'est la verve unie à la raison, la force unie à la souplesse; c'est brillant, pénétrant, et élastique comme une lame d'épée.

(3) Louis Lübeck (b. The Hague, 1838; d. Berlin, 8 Mar. 1904), violoncellist, brother of the preceding. He was for some years teacher of the cello at the Leipzig Conservatory, until about 1872, when he moved to Frankfurt o/M. He was a member of the court orchestra in Berlin from 1880.

J. A. F.-M.

LÜBECK (2). German family of organists.

(1) Vincenz Lübeck (b. Padingbüttel, Hanover, Sept. 1654; d. Hamburg, 9 Feb.

1740), organist and composer. When about twenty years of age he was appointed organist at Stade, where he remained for nearly thirty years. In 1702 he was appointed organist of the church of St. Nicholas at Hamburg, where he remained until his death.

Lübeck's compositions include three cantatas, seven large works for the organ and chorale preludes for that instrument. They have been published in a modern collected edition by Gottlieb Harms (Klecken, 1921).

(2) Peter Paul Lübeck (b. Stade, ?; d. ? Stade, ?), organist, elder son of the preceding. He succeeded his father at Stade in 1702.

(3) Vincenz Lübeck (b. Stade, ?; d. ? Hamburg, ?), organist, younger brother of the preceding. He was organist at the church of St. George at Hamburg from 1724 and became his father's assistant at St. Nicholas, succeeding him at his death in 1740.

E. v. d. s.

BIBL.—RUBARDT, PAUL F. H., 'Vincenz Lübeck: sein Leben und seine Werke, nebst Nachrichten über seine Familie und Beiträge zur Geschichte der Kirchenmusik in Stade und Hamburg im 17. und 18. Jahrhundert', dissertation (Leipzig, 1921).

LUBELCZYK, Jakób (b. ?; d. ?).

Polish 16th-century musical editor. He edited the first dissident psalter with melodies entitled 'Psalterz Dawida, onego świętego króla i proroka, teraz na nowo na piosneczki przelożony' (Cracow, 1558) ('The Psalter of David, once Saint, King and Prophet, newly interpreted as Songs').

C. R. H.

Lubi, Michael. See Schubert (song).

LUBIN, Germaine (Léontine Angélique) (b. Paris, 1 Feb. 1890).

French soprano singer. She was a pupil at the Collège Sévigné in Paris and at first intended to make medicine her career. She entered the Paris Conservatoire at the age of eighteen, however, and was a pupil of Martini and of Isnardon. In 1912 she was unanimously awarded three first prizes, for singing, for grand opera and for light opera. She joined the company of the Opéra-Comique in the same year and remained there until 1914. During that time she created the principal part in Guy-Ropartz's 'Le Pays'. In 1914 she went to the Paris Opéra, where she was a brilliant success and in 1939 became chief dramatic soprano. She has sung the great Wagnerian parts, and also appeared in Berlioz's 'Faust' and 'Les Troyens', in Gluck's 'Alceste' and 'Iphigénie en Tauride', in Charpentier's 'Louise', in Vincent d'Indy's 'L'Étranger' and 'La Légende de Saint Christophe', in Fauré's 'Pénélope', in Dukas's 'Ariane et Barbe-Bleue', in Milhaud's 'Maximilien' and in Richard Strauss's 'Elektra' and 'Rosenkavalier', as well as at numerous concerts. She has appeared in London, Berlin, Vienna, Prague and many other European towns, has taken part in the Salzburg Festivals and in the Bayreuth production of 'Parsifal' in 1938, when she sang Kundry, in German, with marked success. This she had already sung in London, at Covent Garden, in 1937, when after appearing with the Paris Opéra company, she stayed on to join the German artists who followed it.

The beauty of her voice, the elegance of her style and the vigour and nobility of her dramatic power made her one of the most notable singers of the day. G. S.

LUBLINENSIS. See JAN Z LUBLINA.

LUCA, Giuseppe de (b. Rome, 25 Dec. 1876; d. New York, 26 Aug. 1950).

Italian baritone singer. In 1892 he entered the Santa Cecilia Academy in Rome to begin five years' vocal study with Vincelao Persichini, and he made his operatic début at Piacenza on 6 Nov. 1897, as Valentine in 'Faust'. This led to engagements at other Italian opera-houses. In 1903 he toured South America with an Italian opera company. In 1904 he went to the Scala at Milan, where he was the first to sing Sharpless in 'Madama Butterfly'. During the next ten years, while remaining there, he also sang in other European capitals, including London, Paris, Budapest and Leningrad. In 1915 he began a career of twenty years with the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, making his début on 25 Nov. as Figaro in 'Il barbiere di Siviglia'. In 1935 he went back to Italy, but returned to the Metropolitan for several guest appearances in Feb. and March 1940. Italy's entrance into the second world war prevented another American visit in 1941. He made no public appearances in Italy during the war years but, after returning to the U.S.A. in Jan. 1946 he gave several recitals in New York, where he was also heard in opera and with orchestra. On 7 Nov. 1947, fifty years and a day after his début, he gave his farewell New York recital, but he continued his musical activities as a teacher.

De Luca's voice was notable for its consistently high standard and also for its longevity; when he returned to the Metropolitan in 1940, at the age of sixty-three, critics were impressed by the quality of his singing. The results of good training and vocal musicianship were also shown at his last recitals, when he was over seventy. His interpretations were also admirable from a dramatic point of view, both in tragic and comic parts; Rigoletto was one of his favourite characters.

F. D. P.

LUCAS, Charles (b. Salisbury, 28 July 1808; d. London, 30 Mar. 1869).

English violoncellist, conductor, organist, publisher and composer. He was a chorister in Salisbury Cathedral under Arthur Thomas Corfe from 1815 to 1823, when he became a pupil at the R.A.M. in London and studied the cello under Lindley and harmony and composition under Lord and Crotch. He remained there for seven years. In 1830 he became a member of Queen Adelaide's private band, and composer and arranger of music for it, and soon afterwards music preceptor to Prince George (afterwards Duke of Cambridge) and the Princess of Saxe-Weimar.

In 1832 he succeeded Cipriani Potter as conductor at the R.A.M. He also became a member of the Opera and other orchestras as a cellist. In 1839 he was appointed organist of Hanover Chapel, Regent Street. He was for some time conductor of the Choral Harmonists' Society, and in 1840-43 he occasionally conducted at the Ancient Concerts. On the retirement of Lindley he succeeded him as principal cellist at the Opera, the provincial festivals, etc.

From 1856 to 30 June 1865 he was a member of the music-publishing firm of Addison, Hollier & Lucas. In 1859 he was appointed successor to Potter as Principal of the R.A.M., which office he held until July 1866, when ill-health compelled him to relinquish it. His compositions include the opera 'The Regicide' (libretto by Thomas Oliphant, after Metastasio; not performed, vocal score published in 1840), three symphonies, string quartets, anthems, songs, etc. He edited 'Esther' for the Handel Society.

His son, Stanley Lucas (b. London, 1834; d. London, 24 July 1903), was Secretary to Leslie's Choir from its formation to Oct. 1855, Secretary to the Royal Society of Musicians from 1861 and to the Philharmonic Society from 1866, and as a publisher did good work in London for many years.

W. H. H., adds.

LUCAS, Clarence (b. Niagara, Canada, 19 Oct. 1866; d. Paris, 1 July 1947).

Canadian instrumentalist, conductor and composer of mixed Dutch and Irish extraction. He received his musical education at Montreal, where he played trombone in a military band and second violin in the local Philharmonic Society, besides acting as organist at different churches. At the age of twenty he went to Paris and studied under Georges Marty before entering the harmony class of Théodore Dubois at the Conservatoire. In 1889 he returned to Canada and became professor of harmony and counterpoint at the College of Music, Toronto, and conductor of the Philharmonic Society at Hamilton, Ontario.

In 1893 Lucas took up his residence in London, acting as critic and correspondent for several papers. He was appointed conductor of the Westminster Orchestral Society in Dec. 1902, but resigned in the summer of 1904. Between 1880 and 1897 he wrote seven operas, only one of which, 'The Money Spider', appears to have been produced (1897). He also composed four oratorios and cantatas, one of which, 'The Birth of Christ', was performed in the Chicago Auditorium on 17 Feb. 1902. His overtures to Shakespeare's 'Othello', 'As You Like it' and 'Macbeth' were heard at Queen's Hall under Sir Henry Wood. He wrote nearly forty pieces for piano-forte, while a list of sixty-four songs comprises many varieties of styles. H. K., adds.

LUCAS, Leighton (b. London, 5 Jan. 1903).

English composer and conductor. He was mainly self-taught in music, having learnt from experience rather than from tuition. He began his career as a dancer, appearing with the Diaghilev Russian Ballet from 1918 to 1921. In the latter year he joined the Birmingham Repertory Theatre, where he remained until 1923. At the age of twenty he conducted a performance of Boughton's 'The Immortal Hour', after which conducting became his principal occupation.

He was musical director to the Markova-Dolin Ballet Company for three years (1935-1937) and joined the Arts Theatre Ballet as conductor in 1940. In the following year he joined the R.A.F. and, on being released from the forces, he formed his own orchestra (1946). With this he has given many concerts of lesser-known modern works, especially by French composers. He has also given educational concerts under the auspices of the Middlesex County Council, and has lectured on ballet, music and the theatre. On several occasions he has conducted for the B.B.C.

His first compositions were published in 1932, and they were followed by several works of depth and importance, among which the 'Missa pro defunctis' (in memory of Elgar, Delius and Holst), written in 1934, is outstanding. The ballet after Scarlatti, 'Death in Adagio', was produced by the Markova-Dolin Ballet in 1936, and a later ballet, 'The Horses', was produced in 1946 by the Edinburgh Ballet Club. In 1940 Lucas composed the 'Suite française' which was performed for the first time at the London Promenade Concerts in 1942.

After 1941, when he joined the R.A.F., Lucas's compositions consisted almost entirely of incidental music for films. He had written music for innumerable short films before the second world war, but it was with his music for 'Target for To-Night' (1941) that he became widely known in this sphere. In 1942 he produced his only independent work of war-time, the serious and sincere 'Litany' for orchestra, which created a deep impression. But he is perhaps best known to the general public as a writer of music for radio productions, especially, on the lighter side, for Richmal Crompton's 'Just William' series (1946 and onwards) and, more serious, for Patric Dickinson's 'Theseus and the Minotaur' (1948).

The catalogue of works which follows is concerned only with his most important compositions and excludes incidental music.

STAGE WORKS

- 'The Wolf's Bride', masque for singing, speech and dancing (1934).
- 'The Ghost of Abel', drama after Blake (1934).
- 'Kanawa', Japanese masque (1935).
- 'The Sleeping Beauty', masque (Edith Sitwell) (1936).
- 'Death in Adagio', ballet (after Scarlatti) (1936).
- 'The Horses', ballet (1945-46).

CHORAL WORKS

- 'Every Wind that blows' for unaccomp. chorus (1932).
- 'Masque of the Sea' for chorus & orch. (1932).
- 'Missa pro defunctis' for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1934).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 'La Goya', 2 dance impressions (1932).
- 'L'Europe galante' (after Campra) (1939).
- 'Quetzalcoatl Dances' (1939).
- 'Suite française' (1940).
- 'A Litany' (1942).

SOLO INSTRUMENT AND ORCHESTRA

- Partita for pf. & chamber orch. (1934).
- 'Sinfonia brevis' for horn & 11 insts. (1935).
- 5 Sonnets for pf. & orch. (1937).
- 'Sonatina concertante' for saxophone & chamber orch. (1939).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- String Quartet (1935).
- 22 Songs (James Stephens) for voice, flute, viola & harp (1944).

K. A.

LUCAS, Mary Anderson (b. London, 24 May 1882; d. London, 14 Jan. 1952).

English composer. She studied the piano-forte at the Dresden Conservatory (1899-1900) and at the R.A.M., London (1900-3). On marrying in 1903 she gave up her career for a time, but later studied composition with R. O. Morris, Herbert Howells and Maurice Jacobson. There have been performances of many of her orchestral and chamber works in London and other parts of England, as well as in the U.S.A., and her ballet 'Sawdust' was performed in London and Wolverhampton in 1941 by the Ballet Guild.

Her musical personality is distinct, if not strong enough to attract the general public. When her music was played before the second world war, it aroused a certain amount of opposition by its modernity, probably because its dissonance, though not often extreme, was always of the textural rather than the dynamic variety. It was, in fact, more in accordance with the ideals of serious composers of the present day than with those of Mrs. Lucas's own more spectacular contemporaries. For this reason her contribution to English music is not without interest or value, and may find greater recognition now than at the time of its composition.

The following are Mary Anderson Lucas's principal works:

Masque, 'Book of Thel' (William Blake), for solo voices, chorus & chamber orch. & male & female narrators (1935).

3 ballets:

1. 'Cupid and Death', chamber orch. & pf. (1936).
2. 'Undine', full orch. (1936).
3. 'Sawdust', small orch. (1941).

'Circus Suite', full orch. (1939).

'Variations on a Theme by Purcell', stg. orch. (1938).

'Ballet Preludes', chamber orch. (1941).

Concertino for flute & chamber orch. (1940).

String Quartets, Nos. 2 & 3 (1933 & 1935).

Trio for clar., viola & pf. (1939).

Rhapsody for flute, cello & pf. (1946).

Duo for clar. & viola (1941).

Sonata for clar. & pf. (1938).

Numerous songs, partsongs, etc.

C. M. (iii).

LUCCA. In 1640 an Academy, that of the Accesi, was founded at Lucca entirely for dramatic musical performance. C. M. P.

LUCCA, Pauline (b. Vienna, 25 Apr. 1841; d. Vienna, 28 Feb. 1908).

Austrian soprano singer of Italian parentage. As a child she sang in the choir of the Vienna Karlskirche, in 1856. One Sunday the principal singer was absent, and the young chorister, put forward to supply her place in the solo of a Mass by Mozart, revealed a beauty of voice and charm of style that startled all present. She studied under Uchmann and Lewy, and, her parents being in straitened circumstances, entered the chorus of the Opera, which she left in 1859 to come out at Olomouc. On 4 Sept. 1859 she made her début there as Elvira in Verdi's 'Ernani' and became a favourite at once. In Mar. 1860 she appeared in Prague as Valentine in 'The Huguenots' and as Norma. At Meyerbeer's instigation she was engaged for Berlin, where she first appeared in Apr. 1861 and soon roused an enthusiasm rarely equalled by any former singer. She studied several Meyerbeer parts under the composer's personal supervision, including that of Selika in 'L'Africaine', which he was destined never to see produced. In Berlin she was engaged as court singer for life.

On 18 July 1863 Lucca made her first appearance in London, at Covent Garden, in the part of Valentine in 'The Huguenots', creating an extraordinary impression, further enhanced by her performance of Marguerite in 'Faust', during her second visit in the following year. On 22 July 1865 'L'Africaine' was produced at Covent Garden, and Lucca's impersonation of Selika was of the highest rank. She reappeared in London every season (excepting 1869) up to 1872; and in 1882-84 she sang again at Covent Garden, in the parts of Selika, Cherubino, Carmen, etc.

She sang throughout Germany with triumphant success, and in St. Petersburg, where she was received with the wildest enthusiasm.

Her voice, a full soprano, with a compass of $2\frac{1}{2}$ octaves extending easily to c''' and sympathetic throughout, seemed capable of taking every grade of expression; and to her rare lyrical endowments she united one still rarer — a genius for acting. In London, besides the parts specified above, she was heard mostly in Zerlina ('Fra Diavolo'), Leonora ('Favorita') and Cherubino; but Berlin knew better the extent of a repertory said to include well over fifty parts. Auber was so delighted with her singing of his music that he presented her with the pen with which 'Fra Diavolo' had been written.

In 1872 Lucca severed her connection with Berlin and went to America, where she remained two years, on an operatic tour through the U.S.A. She returned to Europe in 1874 and sang at all the chief cities of Germany except Berlin. In Vienna she remained one of the chief attractions of each season. Besides starring engagements in Germany, she reappeared in Brussels, 1876, St. Petersburg and Moscow, 1877, and Madrid, 1878. B. T.

BIBL.—JANSEN-MARA, A. & ZÄHRER, D. WEISSE, 'Die Wiener Nachtigall' (Berlin, 1935).

LUCCHESI, Andrea (b. Motta di Livenza nr. Treviso, 28 May 1741; d. ?).

Italian composer. He was a pupil of Cocchi and Giovanni Paolucci, made his début as an opera composer at Venice in the autumn of 1765 and remained there as maestro al cembalo until 1771; the Mozarts, father and son, met him there in Feb. or Mar. of that year.¹ Soon afterwards Lucchesi appears at Bonn, at the head of a travelling opera company. He entered the service of the Elector Maximilian Frederick in 1773 and after the death of Beethoven's grandfather (24 Dec. 1773) succeeded him as court conductor on 26 May of the following year. Burney, on his German tour, saw Lucchesi, "a very pleasing composer", at Bonn and recalls a motet he had heard near Florence on his Italian journey. In the spring of 1783 Lucchesi was given about two years' leave of absence, but he returned to Bonn and stayed there until the end of the electorate and the court music in 1794. In the spring of that year he was presumably at Passau, where his last opera was produced. Further dates are missing.

As Lucchesi was the leading musician at Bonn during Beethoven's childhood and youth, his works must have been among the latter's earliest musical impressions. He cannot have failed to hear them frequently at church and theatre, and when playing the viola in the orchestra under Lucchesi as a young man. According to the reminiscences of the Bonn cellist Bernhard Joseph Mäurer, contained in the so-called Fischhof Manuscript of the Berlin State Library, Lucchesi revised and performed one of Beethoven's earliest works (the existence of which is not otherwise known), a cantata in memory of the British minister-plenipotentiary at Bonn, George Cressener, who died in 1781 when Beethoven was ten or eleven years of age.¹

¹ According to Leopold Mozart's 'Reise-Aufzeichnungen'. Lucchesi thus personally knew both the boy Mozart and the boy Beethoven — there cannot have been many contemporary musicians who enjoyed that privilege.

According to Gerber the number of Lucchesi's works was very large; he mentions 8 operas, 7 masses and other compositions for the church, also sonatas, trios, quartets, concertos and symphonies. His Op. 1, 6 violin Sonatas, was published at Bonn without date; besides these sonatas, Eitner knew only of the existence of two manuscript symphonies at Dresden. The bulk of Lucchesi's compositions, however, has been preserved at the Biblioteca Estense at Modena, consisting of three opera scores, one oratorio, 'La passione di Gesù Cristo', and more than 30 masses, hymns, motets, offertories, vespers, etc., all dated between 1775 and 1787. The following were his works for the stage:

- ¹ 'L' isola della fortuna', Venice, autumn 1765.
- ² 'Il marito geloso', Venice, 1766 (mentioned only by Gerber; no other evidence).
- ³ 'Cantata', in honour of the Duke of Württemberg, sung at the Teatro San Benedetto, Venice, 11 Feb. 1767 (words by Count Gasparo Gozzi).
- ⁴ 'Le donne sempre donne', Venice, autumn 1767 (score at Modena; Lucchesi revived this at Bonn, 27 Feb. 1772).
- ⁵ 'Il matrimonio per astuzia', Venice, autumn 1771 (score at Modena).
- ⁶ 'Il giocatore amoroso', intermezzo, Bonn, 1772 (unknown to Thayer; libretto in the catalogue of the Soleinne collection, No. 4770; given in various German towns, 1782, also in Warsaw, 1785).
- ⁷ 'Il natal di Giove', Bonn, 13 May 1772.
- ⁸ 'L' inganno scoperto, ovvero Il conte Caramella', Bonn, 13 May 1773 (score at Modena; libretto by Goldoni; in this opera Beethoven's grandfather, shortly before his death, sang a small part).
- ⁹ 'L' improvvisata, o sia La galanteria disturbata', Bonn, winter 1773-74 (libretto by the composer).
- ¹⁰ 'Die Liebe für das Vaterland', prologue, Frankfurt, 22 Apr. 1783.
- ¹¹ 'Ademira', Venice, 2 May 1784.
- ¹² 'L' amore e la misericordia guadagnano il giuoco', Passau, spring 1794.

A. L.

Lucchini, Antonio Maria. See Handel ('Jupiter in Argos', opera). Vivaldi (3 libs.).

LUCCIO (Lucio), Francesco (b. Venice, c. 1625; d. ?).

Italian composer. He was a pupil of Giovanni Antonio Rigatti and singing-master at the Scuola de' Incurabili, Venice, about 1650. He published 2 books of 'Motetti concertati' for 2 and 3 voices (1649-50) and a book of solo airs in 1655, and wrote 4 operas for Venice: 'Gl' amori di Alessandro Magno e di Rossane' (1651), 'Pericle effeminato'

¹ The same Cressener (Mäurer writes Kretzner) who entertained Burney during his short stay at Bonn in 1772. Thayer rejects the anecdote on the ground that Mäurer had left Bonn one year before Cressener's death; it should, however, be borne in mind that he had gone only as far as Cologne and could easily have returned for short visits. Altogether the account appears to be too circumstantial to be rejected offhand.

(1653), 'Euridamante' (1654) and 'Medoro' (1658), of which the first had the greatest success while the last is the only one extant.

Allacci gives the name of the composer sometimes in its Venetian form as "Luzzo" (which has resulted in his appearing twice in several dictionaries), but as a matter of fact this spelling does not occur either in his printed compositions or in the librettos of his operas.

A. L.

LUCERNE FESTIVAL. Lucerne, having become a centre of musical organization for Switzerland in 1808 as the town where the Swiss Musical Society was founded, acquired an international importance in European musical life by the establishment of an annual musical Festival on a large scale. Adolf Busch was one of the chief instigators. The programme of the first Festival, which lasted from 16 July to 1 Sept. 1938, of a varied character, maintained a classical level throughout and culminated in a brilliant concert held in the garden of the Wagner Museum in Tribschen, at which Toscanini conducted, among other things, the 'Siegfried Idyll' — composed by Wagner on this spot in 1870. Toscanini also directed another of the great symphony concerts; among other conductors were Bruno Walter, Willem Mengelberg, Fritz Busch and Ernest Ansermet.

The Musical Festival was combined with an exhibition of a unique character, made possible by the generous collaboration of French, German and Italian libraries and private collectors with the Swiss State and Swiss private and public institutions.

The great mass of priceless exhibits included hundreds of the most valuable autograph musical scores, documents, letters and souvenirs. Among the authors' own manuscripts, operatic scores, songs and musical works of all descriptions, were masterpieces by Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Donizetti, Berlioz, Schumann, Verdi, Brahms, Bizet, Wolf, Debussy, Reger, Strauss and Stravinsky.

In 1939, regardless of the threat of war, another brilliant Festival was held in Aug., with Toscanini, Boult, Ansermet and Busch as conductors, eminent soloists and the Sistine Choir taking part in concerts of church music. There was an interruption in 1940, but Switzerland's immunity from war made a revival of the Festival possible in 1941, and it has continued annually without interruption ever since. It is impossible here to detail the extremely rich and varied programmes; but among the special events may be named the appearance of an ad hoc orchestra of 100 Swiss musicians (1943 and on); the beginning of the annual tradition of a Mozart serenade concert near the lion monument (1944); Frank Martin's 'Le Vin herbé' (1945); Britten's operas 'The Rape of Lucretia' and 'Albert

Herring' (1947). Special features each year are concerts of church music and soloists' recitals as well as, for the last few years, master classes held by eminent artists. K. V. F.

LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR. Opera in 3 acts by Donizetti. Libretto by Salvatore Cammarano, based on Walter Scott's 'Bride of Lammermoor'. Produced Naples, Teatro San Carlo, 26 Sept. 1835. 1st perf. abroad, Vienna (in Italian), 13 Apr. 1837. 1st in England, London, Her Majesty's Theatre (in Italian), 5 Apr. 1838. 1st in U.S.A., New Orleans (in French), 28 Dec. 1841.

LUCIA, Fernando de (b. Naples, 11 Oct. 1860; d. Naples, 21 Feb. 1925).

Italian tenor singer. He studied at the Naples Conservatory and made his first appearance at the Teatro San Carlo there in 'Faust' in 1883. Having gained his reputation at Lisbon and elsewhere, he went to London in 1887, being engaged by Sir Augustus Harris for an experimental season of opera at Drury Lane Theatre. At first, however, de Lucia made no impression on London audiences. He was overshadowed by Jean de Reszke and the parts in which he appeared were scarcely suited to his voice and style. His real opportunity in London came in 1893, when, again under Harris's management, he appeared at Covent Garden as Canio in the first production in England of Leoncavallo's 'Pagliacci'. He remained associated with that theatre for some time, singing in 'Faust', 'Cavalleria rusticana', Boito's 'Mefistofele' and the first performance in England of Mascagni's 'L' amico Fritz'.

Ceasing to be a member of the Covent Garden company, de Lucia sang much in America and had not been in London for some years when he reappeared at the new Waldorf Theatre in May 1905, singing with undiminished power. His full tones did not fall very pleasantly on English ears, but he had a beautiful mezza voce. He was an admirable actor, especially in parts demanding vigour and passion. He was a professor of singing at the Royal Conservatory of Naples.

S. H. P.

LUCIANI, Sebastiano Arturo (b. Acquaviva delle Fonti, Bari, 1884; d. Acquaviva, 1950).

Italian musicologist. He studied composition at Naples under C. de Nardis and in Rome under Setaccioli, but devoted himself particularly to musical research and criticism. He contributed to the most important musical periodicals and was for some time attached to Roman daily papers as a critic. During his last years he was a member of the artistic council of the Settimane Musicali Senesi at Siena, where he promoted performances of Italian stage and symphonic works of the past, especially of the 18th century, of which he was an assiduous student. Much of his activity was directed towards the Scarlatti family, on whose members he published articles and essays. From among these must be singled out his monograph, 'Domenico Scarlatti' (Turin, 1942), and the publication, under his editorship, of notes and documents concerning the five chief members of the family, on the occasion of a week celebrating the Scarlatti held at Siena in Sept. 1940.

Interested in the problems of stage performance in all its phases, Luciani wrote an historical analysis of music-drama ('La rinascita del dramma', 1921) and a study of the aesthetics of the film ('Verso una nuova arte: il cinematografo', 1921), and he collaborated with Respighi in a manual of musical culture ('Orpheus', 1926). He also devoted himself to Vivaldi and was actively concerned with Olga Rudge in the establishment and the functions of the Centro di Studi Vivaldiani at the Accademia Chigiana of Siena. It was under his editorship that two contributions to the history and the criticism of the Venetian master were published: 'Antonio Vivaldi: note e documenti sulla vita e sulle opere' (1939) and 'La scuola veneziana' (1940). Other works of his, on Apulian musicians of the 16th and 17th centuries, brought to light unknown but important compositions of those periods.

G. M. G.

LUCIFER (Oratorio). See BENOIT (P.).

LUCILE (Opera). See GRÉTRY.

Lucini, Giovanni Battista. See Scarlatti (1, 'Equivoci in amore', lib.).

LUCIO, Francesco. See LUCCIO.

LUCIO PAPIRIO (Opera). See CALDARA. ZENO.

LUCIO SILLA (Opera). See BACH (J. C., 38). MOZART.

LUCIO VERO (Opera). See ZENO.

LUCKÝ, Štěpán (b. Žilina, Slovakia, 20 Jan. 1919).

Czech composer and critic. In 1936-39 he was a pupil at the Prague Conservatory under O. Šín and J. Řídký for composition and under A. Šíma for the pianoforte. During the second world war he was persecuted and imprisoned in Budapest, at Ilava (Slovakia) and successively in several German concentration camps at Oświęcim (Auschwitz), Niederorschel and Buchenwald. After his return in 1945 he continued his studies in Prague and finished the Master Class under Řídký in June 1947. At the same time he attended lectures in musicology at the Charles University until 1948. In 1945-48 he was music critic of the daily 'Práce' and since 1946 he has been music critic of the weekly 'Kulturní politika', working also in other branches of the Czechoslovak musical body. In Jan. 1949 he was appointed head of the music department at the Music and Artistic Central Office in Prague. He is a very gifted composer of modern style, fully appreciated at home and well known abroad, and an inspired writer of a broad outlook and an enterprising mind. The following is a short selection of his principal works:

- 'Capricious Music' (Divertimento) for 3 trombones & stgs., Op. 12 (1946).
- Cello Concerto, Op. 9 (1946).
- Pf. Concerto, Op. 13 (1947).
- Quintet for wind insts., Op. 11 (1946), performed at the I.S.C.M. Festival, Amsterdam, 1948.
- Quartet for 2 trumpets, horn & trombone, Op. 17 (1948).
- 'Sonata brevis' for vn. & pf., Op. 14 (1948).
- Sonatina for pf., Op. 8 (1944).
- Several song-cycles, etc.

G. Č.

LUCREZIA (Opera). See RESPIGHI.

LUCREZIA BORGIA. Opera in 2 acts, with a prologue, by Donizetti. Libretto by Felice Romani, based on Victor Hugo's drama. Produced Milan, Teatro alla Scala, 26 Dec. 1833. 1st perf. abroad, Vienna (in Italian), 9 May 1839. 1st in England, London, Her Majesty's Theatre (in Italian), 6 June 1839. 1st in U.S.A., New Orleans (in Italian), 27 Apr. 1844.

LUDFORD, Nicholas (b. ?, c. 1480; d. ?, c. 1542).

English composer. It has been supposed that he was a member of the Chapel Royal, but Flood (see Bibl.) shows him to be an exception in this respect — a master of considerable importance whose name is not to be found in the Chapel Royal records. Ludford married in 1535 and on 3 July 1538 was granted an exemption "from serving on juries and from being made escheator, coroner, collector of taxes, constable, or other officer".¹ On 1 June 1542 his widow was granted a lease of lands and a water-mill at Birmingham Manor, Warwickshire.

Ludford is mentioned at the end of Morley's 'Plaine and Easie Introduction' as one of the "practicioners" in music whose work he had consulted. There is a collection of masses (B.M., Roy. App. 45-48), one for each day of the week, bearing the composer's name — Nicholas Ludford. The collection dates from before 1536 (the date of the death of Katharine of Aragon — whose arms, together with those of Henry VIII, are on the binding) and is peculiar in that each Mass begins with a Kyrie and contains a Sequence inserted between the Gloria and the Credo, together with one offertory or a communion-verse. They are all for a solo voice and 3-part chorus (treble, countertenor and tenor) and are "lighter in character than Fayrfax's work . . . [but] rather more advanced, the parts often entering in one after another with points of imitation, showing a transition to a late style".² Part of a Mass is contained in two greatly mutilated pages (B.M., Add. MSS 30,520); it is there called 'Le Roy', as it is founded on a melody of that name. It is quite clear that this work completed the set of seven masses for the whole week, and this is confirmed by Collins³, who continues by saying that it is founded on the same melody as that used by Taverner in his Kyrie entitled 'Le Roy'. The Credo is set complete without any omissions, and the Mass also includes a setting of a lengthy Sequence, "Ave praeclara, Maris stella", which occurs in the Sarum Gradual on the Octave of the Assumption.

J. M. (ii), rev.

MASSSES

- 6 Masses for solo and 3-part chorus, each with a Sequence (B.M., Roy. MSS, App. 45-48).
- Missa 'Le Roy' (fragment belonging to above) (B.M., Add. MSS 30,520/2: 2nd tenor & bass solo part of B.; treble and 1st tenor of Agnus Dei).
- Missa 'Benedicta', 6 v. (Lambeth and Caius Coll., Cambridge: anon. in the former).
- Missa 'Videte miraculum', 6 v. (Caius).
- Missa 'Christi Virgo', 5 v. (Caius & Peterhouse, Cambridge).
- Missa 'Inclina Domine', 5 v. (Peterhouse); tenor part wanting.
- Missa 'Lapidaverunt Stephanum', 5 v. (Lambeth & Caius; anon. in former).
- Missa 'Regnum mundi', 5 v. (Peterhouse; tenor part wanting).

MAGNIFICAT

For 6 voices (Caius).

MOTETS

- 'Ave Maria ancilla', 5 v. (Peterhouse).
- 'Ave ejus conceptio', 5 v. (Peterhouse).
- 'Domine Jesu Christi', 5 v. (Peterhouse).
- 'Salve Regina, Mater misericordia' (Peterhouse & B.M., Harleian MSS 1709/49b); medius part only.
- 'Salve Regina, pudica Mater' (Peterhouse; tenor part wanting & B.M., Harleian MSS 1709/9; medius part only).

LUDIKAR, Pavel (real name Pavel Vyskočil) (b. Prague, 3 Mar. 1882).

Czech bass-baritone singer. From his early youth he grew up in a musical atmosphere, being the son of a choirmaster (later conductor) of the National Theatre in Prague. After studying the pianoforte he was educated in singing under experienced teachers. In 1904 he appeared for the first time as Sarastro at the National Theatre and he very soon became a well appreciated artist. He sang successively in Vienna (Volksooper), Dresden (Court Opera) and afterwards at Milan (Scala), Buenos Aires (Teatro Colón), Boston (Civic Opera), etc. In 1923-35 he was an outstanding member of the Metropolitan Opera in New York. During the second world war he willingly took part in German musical life. Besides his splendid career as an opera singer Ludikar has also gained a considerable reputation as recitalist. His linguistic abilities deserve mention: he sings in twelve languages and translates opera librettos as well as songs.

G. Č.

¹ Flood conjectures that this was due to some infirmity ('Calendar of Letters . . . of Henry VIII').

² H. B. Collins, 'Latin Church Music by Early English Composers' (Proc. Mus. Ass., 1916-17).

³ Loc. cit.

LUDOVIC (Opera). See HÉROLD.

LUDWIG, Friedrich (b. Potsdam, 8 May 1872; d. Göttingen, 3 Oct. 1930).

German musicologist. He became a teacher of musical science in the University of Strasbourg in 1905 and made a special study of the music of the 13th and 14th centuries. His contributions to the S.I.M.G. and the Riemann 'Festschrift' of 1909 ('Die liturgischen Organa des Leoninus Perotinus'), as well as his chapter on the non-liturgical and secular vocal music of the middle ages in Adler's 'Handbuch', record these researches. He became a professor at Göttingen in 1911 and subsequently rector there. H. C. C.

BIBL.—MÜLLER-BLATTAU, J. M., 'Dem Andenken F. Ludwigs' (Cassel, 1930).

LUDWIG, Joseph (b. Bonn, 6 Apr. 1844; d. London, 29 Jan. 1924).

German violinist and composer. He began the study of music at the age of eleven and was sent, four years later, to the Cologne Conservatory, where he studied for four and a half years under Grünwald (violin) and Ferdinand Hiller (composition). Later he went to Hanover and was taken in hand by Joachim, with whom he remained two years. After the inevitable military examinations and a period during which music was put aside, he accepted engagements to play solos in various German towns.

He went in 1870 to London, where he received, shortly after his arrival, an appointment at the R.A.M. in succession to Leopold Jansa. He identified himself with English musical life, took out naturalization papers and won a respected position as a performer of chamber music, both in public and private. He gave numerous quartet concerts in London and the provinces, his colleagues being usually G. Collins (2nd violin), A. Gibson or A. Hobday (viola) and W. E. Whitehouse (cello).

W. W. C.

Ludwig, Otto. See Bleyle ('Hannele und Sannele', opera).

LUDWIG (actually Ledwidge), William (b. Dublin, July 1847; d. London, 25 Dec. 1923).

Irish baritone singer. He was educated at the National Schools, Marlborough Street, Dublin, where he received musical instruction from John W. Glover, grandfather of James M. Glover, the conductor. Developing a fine baritone voice, he went to London and sang for several years in the chorus at the Old Gaiety Theatre in the Strand, and also took small parts in the operatic productions there, in some of which Santley appeared towards the end of his stage career.

What first brought Ludwig prominently into public notice was his performance in 'The Flying Dutchman'. The chief part fell to him when in 1877 he succeeded Santley as principal baritone in the Carl Rosa Company, and for many years he played it with unvarying success. The sombre tone of his voice was exactly suited to the music, and he acted with great imaginative force.

Ludwig's success both in London and the provinces in the Wagner operas was by no means limited to 'The Flying Dutchman'. He was excellent as Wolfram and Telramund, and late in his career, in performances otherwise imperfect, he did excellent work for the Carl Rosa Company as Wotan in the 'Walküre' and (in 1896) Sachs in the 'Meistersinger'.

Ludwig's voice was always marred by a pronounced tremolo, but he sang with such fervour and sincerity that the defect was readily forgiven. He played Claude Frolo in the production of Goring Thomas's 'Esmeralda' at Drury Lane Theatre in 1883 and on the following night the small part of Barracini in the first performance of Mackenzie's 'Colomba'. As a concert singer he was never given in London or at the Festivals the opportunities he deserved, but he sang Elijah in the 1880s. S. H. P. & H. K., abr.

LUENING, Otto (b. Milwaukee, 15 June 1900).

American conductor and composer. His first teacher in music was his father, and Luening was already composing at the age of six. His general education took place at Milwaukee and at Madison, Wisconsin, and in 1912 he went with his parents to Munich, where he was enrolled as student at the Royal Academy of Music. In 1917 he went to Zürich to the Municipal Conservatory, where he worked with Andrae and Jarnach. At the same period he worked as flautist and percussion player in the Tonhalle orchestra and in the Opera orchestra. At seventeen years of age he had his early compositions performed and conducted for the first time.

In 1920 he returned to the U.S.A., where he taught and conducted choral societies at Chicago. In 1925 he went to the Eastman School at Rochester, N.Y., as accompanist in the opera department, and shortly after he became director of the department, as well as one of the conductors of the Rochester American Opera Company. He returned for some years to Europe, but finally settled in the U.S.A., where he conducted for radio and musical comedy. In 1930 he was awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship and in 1932 he went to the University of Arizona as Associate Professor of Music. He later became chairman of the music division at Bennington College and is at present Professor of Music at Columbia University in New York. In 1952 he was elected to the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

Luening's works have been performed by the New York Philharmonic, the Philadelphia and Boston orchestras, and his opera 'Evangeline', receiving its first performance at Columbia University in the American Music Festival of 1948, was awarded the David Bispham Memorial Medal.

Luening has done a great deal of conducting in Europe and America, especially in the field of opera, where he has directed the productions of many American operas now established in the U.S.A. repertory.

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

OPERA

'Evangeline' (libretto by Composer) (1932-47).

CHORAL WORKS

2 Choruses for women's voices (Byron) (1923).
'Christ is arisen' for mixed chorus (1929).
'Alleluia' for mixed chorus (1941).
Chorus for women's voices (Byron) (1949).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

Symphonic Poem (1924).
Prelude to a Hymn-Tune (1935).
2 Symphonic Interludes (1936).
Suite for stgs. (1937).
'Fantasia brevis' for stgs. (1937).
Fantasy for stgs. (1939).
2 Fantasies (1945-46).
2 Pieces for chamber orch. (1947).

SOLO AND ORCHESTRA

Concertino for flute (1924).
Serenade for 3 horns & stgs. (1927).

CHAMBER MUSIC

Quintet for clar., 2 vns., viola & cello (1920).
Trio for vn., cello & pf. (1922).
Trio for soprano, flute & vn. (1923).
String Quartet No. 1 (1924).
String Quartet No. 2 (1928).
Short Suite for stg. trio (1937).
Suite for voice & flute (1937).
'Fuguing Tune' for flute, oboe, clar., bassoon & horn (1941).
Quartet for woodwind (1945).

ONE INSTRUMENT AND PIANOFORTE

Sonata No. 2 for vn. (1922).
'Fantasia brevis' for clar. (1936).
Sonata for flute (pf. or harpsichord) (1938).
Variations for cello (1942).
Sonata No. 3 for vn. (1945).
Sonatina for cello (1949).

UNACCOMPANIED SOLO INSTRUMENT

Sonata for cello (1923).
Suite for flute (1946).
Also pf. and harpsichord works, c. 60 songs, &c.

P. G.-H.

LUGG (Lugge), John (b. ?; d. ?).

English 17th-century organist and composer. His Service in D major (see below) is described in the manuscript as being "composed in King James y^e 1st time". He is apparently identical with John Lugg who was a vicar-choral at Exeter in 1634, and who for some time was also "organist in St. Peters in Exeter". This last description is given in manuscripts at Ch. Ch., which, among other compositions by "John Lugge", includes some (probably) autograph copies of organ scores of motets and 3 organ voluntaries (MS 49) by him, as well as a 'Jigg for Harpsichord' (MS 431). Some canons by a John Lugg are included in the second edition of Hilton's 'Catch that catch can' (1658), as well as an anthem, 'It is a good thing to give thanks', in Thomas Myriell's collection 'Tristitia remedium' (1616).

SERVICES (see also ROBERT LUGG below.)

Whole Service, D ma. Harl. 7340/46-53b. Score.
Service, including T.D.; J.; K.; C.; M. and N.D.
Ch. Ch. 437. Organ score.
Short Service, a 4, including T.D.; B.; K.; C.; M. and N.D. Ch. Ch. 6. Organ score with words.

ANTHEMS

Behold, how good and joyful. Verse anthem, a 5. PH.; Harl. 7339/149. Score, with organ part. Harl. 4142/2b. Words only.
I am the resurrection. Harl. 4142/11. Words only. Ch. Ch. 437. Organ score.
It is a good thing to give thanks. B.M. Add. MSS 29,372-7.
Keepe, we beseech thee. Harl. 4142/12. Words only.
Let my complaint. PH.; Harl. 4142/14b. Words only. Ch. Ch. 437. Organ score.
Not every one that saith. Harl. 4142/16. Words only.
Stir up, we beseech thee. Harl. 4142/25b. Words only. J. M. (ii).

LUGG, Robert (b. ?; d. ?).

English 17th-century organist and composer, ? related to the preceding. He graduated B.Mus. at Oxford in 1638 and later became organist of St. John's College there. According to the 'Oxonienenses alumni' he "changed his religion for that of Rome, and went beyond the seas". A Service in G major and three anthems are in a manuscript organ book which once belonged to St. John's College. With regard to a Service at Ely (Q.-L.) and a Short Service by "Lugg" (B.M. Add. MSS 17,792-6), there is no means of ascertaining whether they are the work of John or Robert. J. M. (ii).

LUIGINI, Alexandre (Clément Léon)

(b. Lyons, 9 Mar. 1850; d. Paris, 29 July 1906).

French violinist, conductor and composer. He was a violin pupil at the Paris Conservatoire, gaining a third accessit in 1867, a first accessit in 1868 and a second prize in 1869. In the latter year he was appointed leader of the orchestra in the Grand Théâtre at Lyons, becoming conductor there in 1877. He held this post till 1897, when he became conductor at the Opéra-Comique in Paris, at first with Danbé and afterwards (4 May 1904) as principal conductor. While at Lyons he was professor in the Conservatory there and founded the Concerts Bellecour and the concerts of the École de Musique, now the Concerts du Conservatoire.

Luigini wrote numerous ballets and also composed light orchestral music: 'Ballet égyptien', 'Ballet russe', 'Marche de l'émir', 'Carnaval turc', 'Marche solennelle', etc., chamber music, a cantata, 'Gloria victis', performed at Lyons in 1887, an opera, 'Les Caprices de Margot' (Lyons, 13 Apr. 1877) and 'Faublas', an opéra-comique (Théâtre Cluny, Paris, 25 Oct. 1881). G. F.

LUIK. See ALPHORN.

LUINIG (Luineag). A choral song used to accompany labour, sung (or formerly sung) principally by women in the remote Highlands and islands of Scotland. Patrick M'Donald, 1783, says that these songs were of a plaintive character and were then most common on the north-west coast of Scotland and in the Hebrides. He mentions that Luinigs were "sung by the women not only at their diversions but also during almost every kind of work where more than one person is employed, as milking cows, fulling cloth, grinding of grain", etc. When the same airs were sung as a relaxation the time was marked by the motions of a napkin held by all the performers. One person led, but at a certain passage she stopped, and the rest took up and completed the air. As the Luinigs were sung to practically extemporaneous words by the leader with a general chorus, they resembled the sailors' "shanty" of modern times. A 'Luineag' is given in 'Albyn's Anthology', 1818, Vol. II. F. K.

LUISA MILLER. Opera in 3 acts by Verdi. Libretto by Salvatore Cammarano, based on Schiller's play 'Kabale und Liebe'. Produced Naples, Teatro San Carlo, 8 Dec. 1849. 1st perf. abroad, Madrid (in Italian), 12 Apr. 1851. 1st in U.S.A. (in Italian), 20 July 1854. 1st in England, London, Sadlers Wells Theatre (trans. by C. Jefferys), 3 June 1858.¹

LUKASZEWICZ, Maciej (b. ?; d. Cracow, 25 Feb. 1685).

Polish ecclesiastic and composer. He was a member of the Capella Rorantistarum about 1662-68, also conductor of the Cracow cathedral choir. In the archives of the Cathedral were found three 4-part compositions by Łukaszewicz: 'Vexilla regis prodeunt', 'Lustra sex qui iam peregit' and 'Credo super in Natali Domini'. All these works were written for a mixed choir. C. R. H.

LULLUS, Raymondus (b. Palma, Majorca, 1236; d. Africa, 1315).

Spanish philosopher and vocalist. He was Doctor illuminatus and wrote a treatise, 'Ars generalis', in which three chapters are devoted to music. He was stoned to death in Africa. E. v. d. S.

LULLY. French family of musicians of Italian origin.

(1) Jean-Baptiste (Giovanni Battista) Lully (Lulli) (b. at or nr. Florence, 28 Nov. 1632²; d. Paris, 22 Mar. 1687), composer.

¹ Given in Italian at Her Majesty's Theatre only five days later, 8 June 1858.

² According to Nicolas Slominsky, who obtained a copy of the baptism certificate from Florence. See his article in 'Guide du Concert', 1 Feb. 1952.

The correct orthography of his name may be settled by the fact that all extant authentic documents signed by him end with the y. It is probable that he dropped the Italian i and substituted the y when he became a naturalized Frenchman. Lully, who was greatly in favour with Louis XIV — whose band of "Petits-Viols" he led — was a graceful composer of the minuets and dances then in vogue and the first important composer of French opera.

The whole history of his earliest childhood is veiled in obscurity. In spite of the statement in his lettres de naturalisation granted to him by Louis XIV in Dec. 1661, wherein he is declared to be the son of Lorenzo de' Lulli, a "Florentine Gentleman", and Caterina del Serta, it is most probable that Lully's origin was humble and that France only learned about his personal history what he himself chose to reveal. An old shoemaker monk gave the gifted but mischievous child some elementary instruction and taught him the guitar and the rudiments of music. Lully was in the midst of these studies when the Chevalier de Guise, returning from Malta, chanced to come across him, and, to please his niece Mlle de Montpensier (who wanted a "joli petit Italien" to teach her his language), brought this child, then about 10 or 12 years of age, with him to France. It is doubtful whether "La Grande Mademoiselle" thought Lully joli, for we are told he entered her service as a scullion in the kitchen and employed his leisure in learning the songs of the day and playing them on his second-rate violin. The Comte de Nocent, chancing to hear him one day, was so much struck with his talent that he mentioned it to Mlle de Montpensier, with the result that he was promoted from the kitchen to the princess's band, where he soon outdistanced the other violinists. Thus, when he was quite young, fortune smiled upon him and further favours were probably in store for him at the Palais d'Orléans, when his mischievous habit of writing sarcastic verses and setting them to characteristic music brought him all at once into disgrace with the princess. Mademoiselle, having discovered that he had composed the air of a satirical song at her expense, promptly dismissed him from her service.

That which seemed a loss was really a gain to Lully, for the young King Louis — then a youth of fifteen or so — had previously taken a fancy to Baptiste, as he was then called, and astutely perceiving his superior gifts made him a member of his "Twenty-four Viols". Here his wonderful powers on the violin, "an instrument which he played with a perfection none had heretofore attained"³, so impressed Louis XIV that his majesty was pleased to establish a band entirely for his favourite to train. He named these players Les Petits-Violons, and under Lully's instruction they soon surpassed the famous "Twenty-four Violins" both in power and celebrity. His new post enabled him to perfect himself as a solo player and gave him valuable practice as a conductor and composer for the orchestra. With his band of Petits-Violons as a means, he completely revolutionized the dull methods of composition formerly employed. Instead of treating his subjects as airs with an accompaniment (as was generally the custom) he studied the capacity of each instrument and arranged his harmony and counterpoint in such a manner that each one was allotted a "part" of individual interest, thus greatly adding to the novelty and balance of the whole composition. Baptiste had common sense as well as ambition and soon perceived that without deeper study he could not make full use of his talents. To remedy his defective education he took lessons on the harpsichord and in composition of Nicolas Mertu, a professor of singing, of François Roberdet, who combined the functions of valet de chambre to the queen-mother with those of organist at the Église des Petits-Pères, and of Gigault, the greatest man of the three, who filled the post of organist at several churches and was also a composer of talent. Lully's brilliant intellect and natural gifts were not slow in profiting by the superior knowledge of these masters, and in the meantime he lost no opportunity of ingratiating himself with men of rank. A born courtier, full of the resource and assurance necessary to face an intriguing court, he knew, above all, how to please and amuse the king and how to profit by this precious favour at the beginning of a reign full of youth, passion and art.

³ Charles Perrault, 'Hommes illustres'.

In the midst of his dissipated life he tenaciously continued composing and found time to write innumerable songs (among them 'Au clair de la lune'), dances, violin solos and even church music, and gained such a reputation that no court feast was complete without his music. He was soon chosen to compose the music for the court ballets, in which Louis XIV himself danced side by side with Lully; and after the success of 'Alcidiane' (1658, words by Benserade) he was commissioned to write the divertissements for 'Serse', an Italian opera by Cavalli, performed at the Louvre (22 Nov. 1660) in honour of the king's recent marriage with Maria Theresa of Austria (9 June previous), and a year and a half later the ballets for 'Ercole amante', another opera by Cavalli, performed at the opening of the magnificent Salle de Spectacles at the Tuileries (7 Feb. 1662). The royal favour was not slow in manifesting its pleasure in these performances in a palpable form. On 16 May 1661 Lully received the "Brevet de la charge de Composition de la Musique de la Chambre du Roi"; on 3 July 1662 a new brief, "La charge de Maître de Musique de la Famille royale". These two united were fixed at a value of 30,000 livres, and the benefit of them was extended after Lully's death to his daughter for her life. On 24 July 1662 Lully married the daughter of Michel Lambert, maître de musique de la cour, a man greatly esteemed for his talents, his singing and his amiable character, who brought with her a dowry of 20,000 livres, no doubt very welcome to a musician who was becoming as notorious for his rapacity in money matters as for various scandals connected with his name.¹ In the same year he became very friendly with Molière and collaborated with him in the composition of numberless ballets until 1671. It was by studying the works of the Venetian composer Cavalli, and observing his method, that Lully laid the foundation of his own individual style. In composing the divertissements of 'Le Mariage forcé', 'M. de Pourceaugnac', 'La Princesse d'Élide' and 'Le Bourgeois gentilhomme' he made good use of the feeling for rhythm he had imbibed from Cavalli and also endeavoured to make his music express the life and variety of Molière's situations and characters. The exquisitely comic scene of the polygamy in 'Pourceaugnac' (whom Lully himself impersonated to such perfection that he often employed it as a means to gain the king's pardon when his majesty was displeased) is in itself sufficient evidence of the success to which he had attained and of the glorious future which awaited him.

From 1658 to 1671 — the year in which Molière produced his tragedy 'Psyché' — Lully composed no less than thirty ballets.² These slight compositions, in which he personally took part with considerable success as dancer and comic actor, confirmed him still further in the favour of Louis XIV. But neither the lucrative posts granted him by the king nor his constantly increasing reputation were sufficient to appease his insatiable ambition. With all his genius he possessed neither honour nor morals and would resort to any base expedient to rid himself of a troublesome rival. His envy had been roused by the privilege conceded to the Abbé Perrin (28 June 1669) of creating an Académie de Musique and was still further excited by the success of Cambert's operas, 'Pomone' and 'Les Peines et les plaisirs de l'amour' (both 1671). With the astuteness of a courtier

¹ The unifying side of Lully's character is vividly outlined in Prunières's later book on him (1929, see Bibl.).

² Philidor's precious MS collection in the library of the Paris Conservatoire de Musique contains the music of several of these divertissements. Some, notably that of 'Le Bourgeois gentilhomme', have been revived on the Parisian stage.

Lully took advantage of the squabbles of the numerous associés directeurs of the Opéra and with the aid of Mme de Montespan procured the transference of Perrin's patent to himself (Mar. 1672). Once master of a theatre, the man whom honest Boileau branded as a cœur bas, a coquin ténébreux and a bouffon odieux proved his right to a place in the first rank among artists, though as a man he could claim neither sympathy nor respect. In the poet Quinault he was fortunate enough to discover a collaborator of extraordinary merit and a docile, modest character admirably adapted to agree with that of the excitable, domineering court musician. In conjunction with him Lully composed his first legitimate French opera, 'Les Fêtes de l'Amour et de Bacchus', which was produced with great brilliance at the new theatre on 15 Nov. 1672. The partnership so auspiciously inaugurated continued for a space of fourteen years, within which time Lully composed no less than twenty operas, paying Quinault a retaining fee of 4000 livres to supply him annually with an operatic libretto.

The variety of Quinault's subjects, classical, heroic, allegorical, pastoral, is surprising, but Lully was perfectly at home with all, passing easily from lively and humorous divertissements to scenes of heroism and pathos, from picturesque and dramatic music to downright comedy, and treating all styles with equal power. He revolutionized the ballets de la cour, replacing the slow and stately airs by lively allegros, as rapid as the pirouettes of the women dancers whom he introduced on the stage, to the great delight of the spectators. For the recitativo secco of the Italians he substituted accompanied recitative. In this very important part of French opera he scrupulously conformed to the rules of prosody and left models of correct and striking declamation. On the other hand he made no attempt to vary the form of his airs, but slavishly cut them all after the fashion set by Cavalli in his operas, and by Rossi and Carissimi in their cantatas. But although the chanson à couplets, the air-complainte (or arioso as we call it) and the air déclamé — afterwards brought to such perfection by Gluck — unduly predominate in his works, that monotony of form is redeemed by a neatness of execution and a sweetness of expression worthy of all praise. He thoroughly understood the stage — witness the skill with which he introduces his choruses — had a true sense of proportion and a strong feeling for the picturesque. The fact that his works are not forgotten, but are still republished is sufficient proof of his genius. Not but that he has serious faults. His instrumentation, though often laboured, is poor and his harmony not always correct: a great sameness of treatment disfigures his operas, and the same rhythm and the same counterpoint serve to illustrate the rage of Roland and the rocking of Charon's boat. In criticizing works of art of a by-gone age we should put them back in their original frames; and according to this rule we have no right to demand from the composer of 'Thésée', 'Atys', 'Isis', 'Phaéton' and 'Armide' outbursts of passion or agitation which would have disturbed the solemn majesty of his royal master and outraged both stage propriety and the strict rules of court etiquette. The chief business of the king's surintendant de la musique undoubtedly was to please his master, who detested brilliant passages and lively melodies; and making due allowance for these circumstances we may affirm that Lully's operas exhibit the grace and charm of Italian melody and a constant adherence to that good taste which is the ruling spirit of French declamation.

Lully was also successful in sacred music. Ballard published his motets for double choir in 1684, and a certain number of his sacred pieces, copied by Philidor, exist in the libraries of Versailles and of the Paris Conservatoire. Mme de Sévigné's great admiration of his 'Miserere' and 'Libera' (letter, 6 May 1672) is familiar to all. Equally well known is the manner of his death. While conducting a 'Te Deum' (8 Jan. 1687) celebrating the king's recovery from a severe illness, he accidentally struck his foot with the baton; an abscess followed; the quack in whose hands he placed himself proved incompetent, and he died in his own house in the rue de la Ville-l'Évêque.

During the whole of his fifteen years' directorship of the Opéra Lully guarded his privileges with the uttermost care and jealousy. The national archives chronicle the numerous commands issued in favour of Lully by Louis XIV: 12 Aug. 1672, order forbidding any theatre other than Lully's to employ more than six violins or twelve musicians in all; forbidding Lully's actors and dancers to play at any other theatres but his own, unless expressly given leave by Lully. Apr. 1673, forbidding any of the other theatres to employ more than "two voices and six violins" in any of their performances. In 1684 a royal command that no opera should be played in the kingdom unless by the permission of the "Sieur Lully"; for infringement of this rule a penalty of 500 livres was demanded.

Mounting still higher in the king's favour, Lully was granted in 1681 his lettres de naturalisation and his lettres de noblesse, and, through sheer impudence, he was made one of the secrétaires du Roi, a privilege previously accorded only to the nobility of the land.

As both surintendant de la musique and secretary to Louis XIV Lully was in high favour at court and used his opportunities to amass a large fortune. At his death he left four houses, all in the best quarters of Paris, besides securities and appointments valued at 342,000 livres (about £14,000). His wife, by whom he had three sons and three daughters, shared his economical tastes. For once laying aside their parsimonious habits, his family erected to his memory a splendid monument surmounted by his bust, which still exists in the left-hand chapel of the church of the Petits-Pères near the Place des Victoires. Cotton¹ was the sculptor, and the Latin epitaph was composed by Santeul:

Perfida mors, inimica, audax, temeraria et excors,
Crudelisque, e caeca probris te absolvimus istis,
Non de te querimur tua sint munia magna.
Sed quando per te populi regisque voluptas,
Non ante auditis rapuit qui cantibus orbem
LULLIUS eripitur, querimur modo surda fuisti.

'Lulli musicien', a pamphlet to which both Fétis and the author of this article are indebted, was chiefly compiled by Le Prévost d'Exmes from various articles written by Sénécé, de Fresneuse and Titon du Tillet. There are many portraits of Lully, of which the best known are those engraved by Edelinck, Thomas, Saint-Aubin (from the bust by Colignon) and Desrochers. The full-length engraving by Bonnard, which forms the frontispiece to the score of 'Psyché', published by Fourcalt, is now extremely scarce.

G. C., adds.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BORREL, EUGÈNE, 'Jean-Baptiste Lully: le cadre, la vie, la personnalité, le rayonnement, les œuvres' (Paris, 1949).
 BOTTOER, F., 'Die Comédie-Ballets von Molière und Lully' (Berlin, 1931).
 CAMPISTRON, JEAN, 'Acis et Galatée': pastorale héroïque mise en musique par Lully, texte de livret de 1686'. Ed. by H. Prunières (Paris, 1933).
 GROUT, DONALD JAY, 'Some Forerunners of the Lully Opera' (M. & L., XXII, 1941, p. 1).
 LA LAURENCIE, LIONEL DE, 'Lully' (Paris, 1911).
 LE PRÉVOST D'EXMES, 'Lulli musicien' (Paris, 1779).
 MELLERS, WILFRID, 'Jean-Baptiste Lully' in 'The Heritage of Music' Vol. III (Oxford, 1951), p. 32.
 POUGIN, A., 'J. B. Lully' (Paris, 1883).
 PRUNIÈRES, HENRY, 'Lully' (Paris, 1910).
 'La Vie illustre et libertine de J. B. Lully' (Paris, 1929).
 PRUNIÈRES & LA LAURENCIE, 'La Jeunesse de Lully' (S.I.M., 1909).
 RADET, E., 'Lully homme d'affaires, propriétaire et musicien' (Paris, 1891).
 VALENSI, THÉODORE, 'Louis XIV et Lully' (Nice, 1951).
 WINTERFELD, C. VON, '"Alceste" von Lully, Händel und Gluck' (Berlin, 1851).

CATALOGUE OF STAGE WORKS

Title	Category	Acts or Entrées	Text by	Production
'La Nuit.' ³	Ballet.	4.	Isaac de Benserade.	23 Feb. 1653.
'Les Proverbes.' ³	Ballet.	23.	Benserade.	17 Feb. 1654.
'Les Noces de Pelée et de Thétis.' ⁴	Ballet music for Caprioli's opera 'Le nozze di Peleo e di Teti'.	(3).	Benserade.	Paris, Petit Bourbon, 14 Apr. 1654.
'Le Temps.' ⁵	Ballet.	23.	Benserade.	30 Nov. 1654.
'Les Plaisirs.' ⁶	Ballet.	25.	Benserade.	4 Feb. 1655.
'Les Bienvenus.' ⁷	Ballet.	18.	Benserade.	Compiègne, 30 May 1655.
'Psyché et la puissance de l'amour.' ⁸	Ballet.	27.	Benserade.	16 Jan. 1656.
'Les Galanteries du temps.' ⁹	Ballet.		?	14 Feb. 1656.
'L'Amour malade.' ¹⁰	Ballet.	10.	Benserade.	17 Jan. 1657.
'Les Plaisirs troublés.' ¹¹	Ballet.	16.	?	14 Feb. 1657.
'Alcidiane.'	Ballet.	21.	Benserade.	14 Feb. 1658.
'Édipe.'	Entr'actes for Corneille's tragedy.	(5).	—	Paris, Hôtel de Bourgogne, 24 Jan. 1659.
'La Raillerie.'	Ballet.	12.	Benserade.	Paris, Louvre, 19 Feb. 1659.
'Xerse.'	Ballet music for Cavalli's opera.	6.	—	Paris, Louvre, 22 Nov. 1660.
'La Revente des habits du ballet et comédie.'	Ballet.	10.	Benserade.	(? performed; before 1661; music preserved and libretto published.)
'L'Impatience.'	Ballet.	16.	Benserade.	Paris, Louvre, 19 Feb. 1661.
'Les Saisons.'	Ballet.	9.	Benserade.	Fontainebleau, 30 July 1661.
'Hercule amoureux.'	Ballet music for Cavalli's opera 'Ercole amante'.	18.	Benserade.	Paris, Tuileries, 7 Feb. 1662.
'Les Arts.'	Ballet.	7.	Benserade.	Paris, Palais Cardinal, 8 Jan. 1663.
'Les Noces de village.'	Ballet.	13.	Benserade.	Vincennes, 3 Oct. 1663.
'L'Impromptu de Versailles.'	Comédie.	1.	Molière.	Versailles, 14 Oct. 1663; Paris, Palais-Royal, 4 Nov. 1663.
'Le Mariage forcé.'	Comédie.	1 (8 entrées).	Molière.	Paris, Louvre, 29 Jan. 1664.
'Les Amours desguisés.'	Ballet.	14.	Benserade & Périgny.	Paris, Palais-Royal, 15 Feb. 1664.
'Les Plaisirs de l'île enchantée', and 'La Princesse d'Élide'.	Comédie-ballet.	5.	Molière.	Versailles, 8 May 1664; Paris, Palais-Royal, 9 Nov. 1664.

¹ Not Cosson, as Fétis called him.

³⁻¹¹ Only partly by Lully.

Title	Category	Acts or Entrées	Text by	Production
'La Naissance de Vénus.'	Ballet.	12.	Benserade.	Paris, Palais-Royal, 26 Jan. 1665.
'Les Gardes.'	Ballet.		?	(? June 1665; performed ?)
'Masquerade du capitaine.'	Ballet.		?	(? 1665; performed ?)
'Petit Ballet de Fontainebleau.'	Ballet.		?	(1665; performed ?; music preserved.)
'L'Amour médecin.'	Comédie.	3.	Molière.	Versailles, 15 Sept. 1665; Paris, Palais-Royal, 22 Sept. 1665.
'Le Triomphe de Bacchus dans les Indes' (= 'Ballet de Créquy').	Ballet.	6.	?	? Versailles or Paris, 9 Jan. 1666 (libretto published; music partly by Lully).
'Les Muses.'	Ballet.	10.	Benserade.	Saint-Germain, 2 Dec. 1666.
'Pastorale comique.'	Pastorale.	1.	Molière.	Saint-Germain, 5 Jan. 1667.
'Le Sicilien, ou l'Amour peintre.'	Comédie.	1.	Molière.	Saint-Germain, 10 Feb. 1667; Paris, Palais-Royal, 10 June 1667.
'Le Carnaval' ('Masquerade royale'; also called 'Le Grand Porte-diadème').	Ballet.	7.	Benserade.	Paris, Tuileries, 18 Jan. 1668; revived in a different version (9 entrées) Opéra, 17 Oct. 1675.
'George Dandin', with 'Grand Divertissement royal' (also called 'Les Fêtes de Versailles').	Comédie.	3.	Molière.	Versailles, 18 July 1668; Paris, Palais-Royal, 9 Nov. 1668.
'La Grotte de Versailles.'	Églogue en musique.	1.	Philippe Quinault.	Versailles, c. Aug. ? 1668; revived as 'L'Églogue de Versailles', Paris, Opéra, Nov. 1685.
'Flore.'	Ballet.	15.	Benserade.	Paris, Tuileries, 13 Feb. 1669.
'La Jeunesse.'	Ballet.		?	(1669; performed ?; music preserved.)
'Monsieur de Pourcèaunac' (= 'Divertissement de Chambord').	Comédie.	3.	Molière.	Chambord, 6 Oct. 1669; Paris, Palais-Royal, 15 Nov. 1669.
'Les Amants magnifiques' (= 'Divertissement royal').	Comédie.	5.	Molière & Benserade.	Saint-Germain, 4 Feb. 1670.
'Le Bourgeois gentilhomme' (with 'Ballet des nations').	Comédie-ballet.	5.	Molière.	Chambord, 14 Oct. 1670; Paris, Palais-Royal, 23 Nov. 1670.
'Les Jeux pythiens.'	Ballet.		?	(1670; performed ?; music preserved.)
'Psyché.'	Tragédie-ballet.	5.	Molière, Pierre Corneille & Quinault.	Paris, Tuileries, 17 Jan. 1671.
'Le Comtesse d'Escarbagnas' (with 'Le Ballet des ballets').	Comédie.	1 (7 entrées).	Molière.	Saint-Germain, 2 Dec. 1671; Paris, Palais-Royal, 8 July 1672.
'Les Fêtes de l'Amour et de Bacchus.'	Pastorale (pasticcio).	P. 3. ¹	Quinault, Molière & Benserade.	Paris, Opéra, 15 Nov. 1672.
'Cadmus et Hermione.'	Opera. ²	P. 5.	Quinault.	Paris, Opéra, 27 Apr. 1673.
'Alceste, ou Le Triomphe d'Alcide.'	Opera.	P. 5.	Quinault.	Paris, Opéra, 19 Jan. 1674.
'Thésée.'	Opera.	P. 5.	Quinault.	Saint-Germain, 12 Jan. 1675; Paris, Apr. 1675.
'Atys.'	Opera.	P. 5.	Quinault.	Saint-Germain, 10 Jan. 1676; Paris, Apr. 1676.
'Isis.'	Opera.	P. 5.	Quinault.	Saint-Germain, 5 Jan. 1677; Paris, Apr. 1677.
'Psyché.'	Opera.	P. 5.	Thomas Corneille & Bernard de Fontenelle.	Paris, Opéra, 19 Apr. 1678.
'Bellérophon.'	Opera.	P. 5.	T. Corneille, (?) Fontenelle & (?) Nicolas Boileau.	Paris, Opéra, 31 Jan. 1679.
'Proserpine.'	Opera.	P. 5.	Quinault.	Saint-Germain, 3 Feb. 1680; Paris, 15 Nov. 1680.
'Le Triomphe de l'Amour.'	Ballet.	20.	Quinault & Benserade.	Saint-Germain, 21 Jan. 1681; Paris, 16 May 1681.
'Persée.'	Opera.	P. 5.	Quinault.	Paris, Opéra, 18 Apr. 1682.
'Phaéton.'	Opera.	P. 5.	Quinault.	Versailles, 9 Jan. 1683; Paris, 27 Apr. 1683.
'Amadis de Gaule.'	Opera.	P. 5.	Quinault.	Paris, Opéra, 18 Jan. 1684.
'Roland.'	Opera.	P. 5.	Quinault.	Versailles, 8 Jan. 1685; Paris, 8 Mar. 1685.
'Idylle sur la paix.'	Divertissement.	1.	Racine.	Sceaux, 16 July 1685; Paris, Nov. 1685.
'Le Temple de la paix.'	Ballet.	6.	Quinault.	Fontainebleau, 20 Oct. 1685; Paris, Nov. 1685.

¹ "P." stands for Prologue.² The operas were described as tragédies-lyriques.

Title	Category	Acts or Entrées	Text by	Production
'Armide et Renaud.'	Opera.	P. 5.	Quinault, based on Tasso's 'Gersa-lemme liberata'.	Paris, Opéra, 15 Feb. 1686.
'Acis et Galatée.'	Pastorale héroïque.	P. 3.	Jean Galbert de Campistron.	Anet, 6 Sept. 1686; Paris, 17 Sept. 1686.
'Achille et Polyxène.'	Opera.	P. 5. ¹	Campistron.	Paris, Opéra, 7 Nov. 1687.

A. L.

See also Académie de Musique. Anglebert (J. H., adapts. from operas). Anthem (influence on). Ballard (printers of works). Ballet. Ballet de Cour. Berens (opera on L.). Bertin de La Doué (adds. to 'Atys'). Cambert (rivalry). Canarie (use of). Caplet (reorch. of 'Triomphe de l'Amour'). Chaconne (use of). Charpentier (M. A., adds. to 'Psyché'). Colasse (assistant). Couperin (4, 'Apothéose de L.', list, Chamber Music). Dumanoir (2, quarrel with). Incidental Music. Linstead (orch. suite on 'Cadmus'). Lorenzani (rivalry). Mysliveček (resetting of 'Armide', lib.). Opera. Overture (form established by L.). Rébel (3, adds. to 'Persée'). Schurmann (resetting of 'Alceste', lib.).

(2) Louis de Lully (b. Paris, 4 Aug. 1664; d. ? , 1736), composer, son of the preceding. He composed with his brother Jean-Louis 'Zéphire et Flore', five acts (1688), revived in 1715; by himself 'Orphée' (1690), a failure; and with Marais 'Alcide', five acts, successfully produced in 1693 and revived, as 'La Mort d'Hercule', in 1705, and again under its original title in 1744. He also composed with Colasse a four-act ballet 'Les Saisons', the memory of which has been preserved by one of J. B. Rousseau's satires.

See also Marais (collab. in 'Alcide').

(3) Jean-Baptiste de Lully (b. Paris, 6 Aug. 1665; d. ? , 9 June 1701²), composer, brother of the preceding. He was appointed surintendant de la musique in 1695 and wrote a cantata, 'Le Triomphe de la raison', performed at Fontainebleau in 1696.

(4) Jean-Louis de Lully (b. ? , 23 Sept. 1667; d. ? , 28 Dec. 1688), composer, brother of the preceding. He was a musician of considerable promise. His father's court appointments devolved on him, and on his death his brother (3) became surintendant and compositeur de la chambre du roi, to which posts he owed the slender reputation he succeeded in acquiring.

G. C.

LULLY ET QUINAULT (Opera). See ISOUARD.

LULU. Unfinished opera in 3 acts by Alban Berg. Libretto by the composer based on Frank Wedekind's plays 'Erdegeist' and 'Die Büchse der Pandora'. Prod. (posthumously) Zürich, 2 June 1937.

LUMBY, Herbert (Horace) (b. Birmingham, 8 Oct. 1906).

English violinist, violist, pianist and composer. He studied at the Midland Institute School of Music under Bantock. He made the violin and viola his principal study under

¹ First act only concluded by Lully before his death; the work was finished by Colasse.

² Fétis has, erroneously, 1761.

Arthur Hytch, but also made second studies of the pianoforte with Tom Bromley and of the cello with Percy Hall. He became leader of the students' string orchestra and performed several modern violin concertos at the students' concerts. Having passed all the examinations, he became an Associate of the school (A.B.S.M.). He joined the Birmingham City Orchestra as viola player under Leslie Heward and was its principal viola for four years before that conductor's death in 1943.

In composition Lumby was a pupil of Christopher Edmunds, and he began to write a good deal of music of various kinds, mainly instrumental and abstract. Many of his works have been performed in the Midlands, and a recital of his chamber music, songs and pianoforte works was given in Birmingham in Apr. 1940.

The following are Lumby's more important compositions:

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

Op.

1. 'Three Country Sketches' for stgs.
11. 'The Lovely Rosalind' for stgs.
16. 'Pastorale' for stgs.
21. 'Ankerdine Suite.'
26. 'Summer Pastoral.'
27. Symphony, A mi.

CHAMBER MUSIC

13. Trio, A mi., for vn., viola & cello.
15. 2 Songs with 2 vns., viola, cello & pf.
19. Trio, B mi., for vn., cello & pf.

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

8. Sonata, E mi.
22. 2 Pieces.
24. 2 Pieces.

VIOLA AND PIANOFORTE

3. Gavotte and Musette.
4. Nocturne.
5. Elegiac Piece.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

2. 2 Preludes.
6. Variations on an Original Theme.
7. Poem 'Autumn Thoughts'.
9. 'Scherzo alla Toccata.'
18. Rhapsody-Ballade.
20. 'Lyric Suite.'
23. 2 Preludes.
25. Prelude and Rondo for 2 pfs.

SONGS

10. 4 Shakespeare Songs.
17. 2 Shelley Songs.

E. B.

LUMBYE. Danish family of musicians.

(1) Hans Christian Lumbye (b. Copenhagen, 2 May 1810; d. Copenhagen, 20 Mar.

1874), trumpeter, conductor and composer. As a child he took violin lessons from the organist at Randers, in Jutland, where his father was serving in the garrison. At the age of fourteen he entered his father's regiment as a trumpeter, and in five years had become so proficient that he secured a place in the crack regiment of the Horse Guards in Copenhagen. He continued his musical studies in the capital, played in dance orchestras in the evenings and began to compose dance tunes. In 1839 the Viennese musician Siegl gave in Copenhagen a series of "Concerts à la Strauss", which produced great enthusiasm for the Viennese waltz and inspired Lumbye to emulate Johann Strauss's compositions. His first attempt at a waltz in the Viennese style ('Danmarkvalsen') was written in 1840. Within a year he had acquired a considerable reputation as a composer of light music, and when the Tivoli gardens opened in 1843 Lumbye's orchestra became one of the principal attractions. In 1844, with state support, Lumbye made a tour of various European countries and was warmly greeted in Paris by Berlioz, in Vienna by Johann Strauss and in Berlin by Meyerbeer. Between 1846 and 1860 he made further successful tours, and in 1860 performed at Stockholm at the coronation of Charles XV. At home the Tivoli remained the chief centre of his activities. He composed many hundreds of tunes, including waltzes, polkas, quadrilles, galops (including the celebrated 'Champagne Galop') and marches. He collaborated with Bournonville in ballets and wrote some dance divertissements for the stage. One of his more ambitious works was a 'Concert Polka' for two violins and orchestra, in which his sons Carl Christian and Georg August played the solo parts. In 1872 Lumbye was compelled, on account of defective hearing, to resign the conductorship of the Tivoli orchestra.

(2) Carl Christian Lumbye (b. Copenhagen, 9 July 1841; d. Copenhagen, 10 Aug. 1911), violinist and composer, son of the preceding. He became a member of his father's orchestra at the Tivoli gardens in Copenhagen at the age of fifteen. Later he distinguished himself as a composer of dances, marches and other light music.

(3) Georg August Lumbye (b. Copenhagen, 26 Aug. 1843; d. Oringe, 30 Oct. 1922), violinist and composer, brother of the preceding. He studied in Copenhagen and Paris, where he played for a time in the same orchestra as Svendsen. He wrote songs and some string quartets, but like his father and elder brother was known chiefly as a composer of light music. J. H. (ii).

Lunacharsky, A. See Steinberg ('Faust and the Town', incid. m.).

LUNCEFORD, Jimmie. See Jazz.

LUND, Engel (Cathrine) (b. Reykjavik, 14 July 1900).

Icelandic singer. She was educated in Iceland and in Denmark, and was trained as a singer privately in Copenhagen, Paris and Germany. She gave her first concert on 25 Mar. 1926 in Copenhagen, and has since appeared in many European towns, including London, Paris, Vienna, Berlin, Dresden, Prague, The Hague, Amsterdam, Stockholm, Oslo and Reykjavik, besides appearing at concerts in New York, Chicago and elsewhere. She has also given series of concerts for schools and universities and for broadcasting. Having begun her career as a Lieder singer, she has since 1930 devoted herself to the study of folksongs of many lands. She had two volumes of folksongs published, 'Engel Lund's Book of Folk Songs' (1936) and 'Engel Lund's Second Book of Folk Songs' (1946). Her considerable accomplishments include a knowledge of many languages, which enables her to sing all the folksongs in her large repertory with the original words. M. K. W.

LUND, Signe (b. Christiania, 15 Apr. 1868).

Norwegian composer. She studied under Wilhelm Berger in Berlin and later in Copenhagen and Paris. Living abroad for some twenty years, mainly in the U.S.A., she wrote music for the Bjørnson memorial concert held at Chicago in 1910 and won first prize in 1917 in a competition organized by the National Art Club with a work entitled 'The Road to France', commemorating America's entry into the first world war. Other works of hers include a cantata for the celebration of the centenary of the Norwegian constitution, other cantatas, small orchestral works, violin pieces and a large number of pianoforte pieces and songs. E. B.

LUNDBERG, Lennart Arvid (b. Norrköping, 29 Sept. 1863; d. Karlshamn, 27 July 1931).

Swedish composer and pianist. He studied at the Stockholm Conservatory, in Berlin with W. H. Ehrlich and in Paris with Camille Dubois and Paderewski. In 1903 he joined the staff of the Stockholm Conservatory as a pianoforte teacher, where he was appointed professor in 1913. In 1904 he was elected member of the Academy of Music. His compositions include 3 pianoforte Sonatas, 9 sets of Ballades, preludes, nocturnes, pieces in dance-forms, &c., many of which are published. He also wrote songs. K. D.

BIBL.—RANSTRÖM, T., 'De tystlåtna — och en stridsman!' ('Musikmänniskor', Uppsala, 1943).

LUNDÉN, Lennart (Suneson) (b. Ytterlännas district, 11 Sept. 1914).

Swedish composer and conductor. He studied composition with H. M. Melchers and conducting with O. Morales at the Stockholm Conservatory in 1935-39. He has also been a pupil of C. Garaguly for violin, H. Freudenthal for viola, M. Rudolf for conducting and K. Jeppesen for composition. In 1944 he was appointed organizer of municipal music at Katrineholm, the first post of its kind in Sweden. He is conductor of the Katrineholm Orchestral Society.

His compositions include a Symphony in B minor, a Concert Overture 'Summer 1939', an Overture-Fantasy 'Thallata', a Pastoral Suite and songs with orchestra. K. D.

LUNDAVIK, Hildor (b. Hille, Gävleborgs län, 6 Mar. 1885).

Swedish organist and composer. He was a pupil at the Stockholm Conservatory, where he qualified in organ playing in 1912 and in church music in 1919, and where he studied composition with Andreas Hallén and Harald Fryklöf, also taking lessons in singing. After holding the post of precentor at the German Church in Stockholm in 1924-25 and at the Gustav Vasa Church in 1926-27, he was appointed to St. Göran's Church in 1928. He was conductor of the Stockholm Choral Association in 1932-41.

Lundavik's compositions include 'Sången' for baritone solo, men's chorus and orchestra, works for unaccompanied choir; a suite and two Elegiac Pieces for orchestra; songs with orchestra and with pianoforte; pianoforte music. K. D.

BIBL.—Articles in 'Sångartidningen' (1934, pp. 126-27 and 1936, p. 42).

Lundy, Arkwright. See Scott (C., 'Mystic Ode', choral work).

Lunel, Armand. See Maximilien (Milhaud, opera). Milhaud (6 libs.; cantata; 8 songs). Sauguet ('Chartreuse de Parme', lib.).

LUNGA PAUSA (Ital., long pause, long rest). An indication that a pause is to be made at the performer's discretion, not according to rests showing its precise length.

LUNN, Charles (b. Birmingham, 5 Jan. 1838; d. London, 28 Feb. 1906).

English tenor singer, teacher and writer. He studied singing in Italy under Catteraneo, whom he esteemed highly, and other masters. He started professional life as a singer of considerable promise: in 1867 he settled in his native town as a teacher of singing, removing in 1895 to London. Lunn's chief publication, 'Philosophy of Voice', which ran through nine editions, was a scientific and historical exposition of the old Italian school of singing, associated principally with the names of Porpora and Manuel Garcia. It contained an original and interesting description of the action of the false cords and their influence in the production of true tone, and the development and preservation of the voice, allowing the singer to make full and unhampered use of his elocutionary powers and artistic gifts. Though a noted predilection for the clash of intellectual armour militated against his success in the world at large, Lunn was much esteemed in certain circles for his entertaining and informative conversation and his fearless and untiring championship of what he felt to be the truth. J. M. L.

LUNN, (Louisa) Kirkby (b. Manchester, 8 Nov. 1873; d. London, 17 Feb. 1930).

English mezzo-soprano singer. She was first taught singing by J. H. Greenwood, organist of All Saints' Church, Manchester; later, 1893-96, by Visetti at the R.C.M. in London, where in 1894 she gained a scholarship. On 6 Dec. 1893, as a student, she made her débuts in opera at Drury Lane Theatre as Margaret in Schumann's 'Genoveva' and at the Prince of Wales's Theatre on 13 Dec. 1894, as the Marquise de Montcontour in Delibes's 'Le Roi l'a dit', on the production of these operas in England by the R.C.M. Her success, both as singer and actress, was such that Sir Augustus Harris engaged her for five years to sing in opera, but the contract became void by his death in 1896. In the meantime, on 2 Mar. of that year, she played with great success as Norah on the production of Stanford's 'Shamus O'Brien' at the Opera Comique Theatre, and later in the summer sang small parts at Covent Garden. From 1897 to 1899 she was the principal mezzo or contralto of the Carl Rosa Company, both in London and in the provinces. Her parts included Ortrud, Brangäne, Magdalena, Carmen, both Frederick and the heroine in 'Mignon', Julia in a stage version of Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch' (23 Oct. 1897), Eila on the production of MacCunn's 'Diarmid' at Covent Garden, etc. For a time from 1899 she sang at concerts only, but on 14 May 1901 she reappeared at Covent Garden. In 1904 she made a great advance there in public favour, notably as Amneris and Fricka, continued singing each year up to and including 1914 and made occasional appearances there after the war of 1914-18.

Kirkby Lunn, with her fine mezzo-soprano of over two octaves in compass from g to b \flat ''', was equally successful in the concert-room in oratorio and song, singing with equal facility in four languages. In 1902 she went to the U.S.A. and appeared in opera in New York as Brangäne, Ortrud, Erda in 'Siegfried', Amneris, etc. She also sang six times with the Symphony Orchestra at Boston and elsewhere, twice at Chicago with the Pittsburg Orchestra and twice with the Chicago Orchestra under Theodore Thomas. In 1904 she took part in the Elgar Festival at Covent Garden. In the autumn she again went to America and on 17 Oct. sang Kundry at Boston in the first English performance of 'Parsifal' with great success. A. C., abr.

LUNSSSENS, Martin (b. Molenbeck-Saint-

Jean, Brussels, 16 Apr. 1871; d. Etterbeek, Brussels, 1 Feb. 1944).

Belgian conductor and composer. He studied at the Brussels Conservatoire and in 1895 obtained the Prix de Rome with the cantata 'Callirhoé', having already, at the age of 19, done duty as a student-teacher of harmony. He was later professor there for many years. In 1905 he became director of the Musical Academy of Courtrai, in 1916 of that of Charleroi, in 1921 of the Louvain Conservatory and in 1924 of that of Ghent. He conducted Wagner's works at the Flemish Opera at Antwerp and many orchestral concerts in the chief cities of Belgium.

His works include 4 symphonies (1. "romaine"; 2. "florentine"; 3. "française"), symphonic poems on Shakespeare's 'Romeo and Juliet' and 'Timon of Athens', Racine's 'Phèdre' and Corneille's 'Le Cid'; 3 vn. concertos, one for viola and one for cello; sextets, string quartets, sonatas for vn. & pf.; numerous songs, etc. E. B.

LUPACCHINO, Bernardino dal Vasto (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-century composer. He was famous for his 2-part solfeggi written in collaboration with J. M. Tasso (1559), which appeared in numerous editions down to the 18th century. He also composed 2 books of madrigals for 4 voices (1543 and 1546) and a book of madrigals for 5 voices (1547).

E. V. D. S.

LUPI (Lupus). See LELEU, JEAN.

Lupi, Johannes. See Albrecht (Hans, 10 secular songs, ed.).

BIBL.—ALBRECHT, HANS, 'Lupus Hellinck und Johannes Lupi' (Acta mus., VI, 1934).

LUPIS. See LUPO and LUPUS, MICHAEL.

LUPO (Lupus, Luppò).¹ English family of string players and composers of Italian origin. They settled in England and worked as court musicians between 1540 and 1640: (1) Lupus Italus, known only by 2 works in the Peterhouse (Cambridge) MSS, c. 1535; (2) Ambrose (= Ambroso, Ambrose de Milan), appointed as one of the "vials" in 1540 and in service until his death in 1594; (3) Joseph, appointed in 1563 and last heard of in 1604; (4) Peter (= Pietro), in the service of the Duke of Leicester when young and mentioned in court records, 1570–1605; (5) Thomas I, son of (3), in service 1593–1628 (the year of his death); (6) Thomas II, son of (4), appointed in 1605 and dead by 1660; (7) Theophilus, son of (5), mentioned in court records, 1628–41 and dead by 1660; (8) Horatio, appointed for life in 1612 and last heard of in 1625.

A Thomas Lupo (? I or II, or perhaps both) is the only member of the family who seems to have been an active composer. Some 80 viol fantasies a 3, 4, 5 and 6 are found under this name in manuscripts at Oxford, London and Dublin, 15 of them appearing in a collection of English viol music published in Amsterdam (1648); in addition a number of dances have survived, mostly a 3. A dance was printed in Rosseter's 'Lessons for Consort' (1609), a song in the masque for Lord Hay's wedding (1607) and three anthems (one, under the pseudonym "Thimolphus Thopull", perhaps a joint work of Thomas and Theophilus) in Leighton's 'Teares' (1614). Other motets and anthems remain in manuscript. Several of the fantasies a 5 and some of the pavans and allmains a 3 are excellent music in a lyrical, untroubled vein, but in general his viol music lacks depth and tends to become rather dull, trivial note-spinning.

¹ For Giovanni Lupi see HELLINCK.

R. T. D.

See also Lupus Italus.

LUPOT. French family of violin makers. They came from the village of Mirécourt in the Vosges mountains, which has been for three centuries or more the seat of a violin manufacture.

(1) Jean Lupot (b. Mirécourt, ?; d. Mirécourt, ?). He worked in the family's place of origin.

(2) Laurent Lupot (b. Mirécourt, 1696; d. Orléans, 1762), son of the preceding. He established himself at Lunéville in 1751, but in 1756 transferred his workshop to Orléans.

(3) François Lupot, sen. (b. ?; d. Orléans, ?), son of the preceding. He first worked with his father at Lunéville, but in 1758 migrated to Stuttgart, where he remained for twelve years as fiddle maker in ordinary to the Grand Duke of Württemberg. In 1770 he returned to France and settled at Orléans.

(4) Nicolas Lupot (b. Stuttgart, 1758; d. Paris, 1824), son of the preceding. He began his career early: we have good instruments made by him at Orléans (rue d'Illiers) before he had completed his twentieth year. In 1794 he removed to Paris and set up a shop in the rue de Grammont (1798–1803). He afterwards removed to the rue Croix des Petits Champs, where he made those famous copies of the great Italian makers on which his reputation rests. Lupot wisely dropped all pretensions to originality and became the first of copyists. His favourite pattern was the Stradivari, and he became known as "the French Stradivarius". His few copies of Guarneri violins are less successful. Many instruments are signed with his autograph. He made several quintets of two violins, two violas and cello, to which he sought to give a perfect unity of tone and appearance. Nicolas Lupot ranked in his time as the first of his trade in Europe. Spohr, who long played on one of his violins, recommends him as a maker. His weakest point is his varnish. He employed several kinds: the usual one is a thick and not very transparent oil varnish, which is sometimes badly dried and presents a rough and lumpy appearance.

(5) François Lupot, jun. (b. Orléans, 1774; d. ?, 1837), brother of the preceding. He became a reputable bow maker and invented the coulisse or metal groove attached to the nut and carefully fitted to the stick, on which it works. He left as his successor Dominique Peccate, who ranks as the best bow maker after Tourte.

(6) Charles Francis Gand (b. ?; d. Paris, 10 May 1845), son-in-law of (4). He was a pupil of Nicolas at the end of 1806, but left him in 1812 to succeed the violin maker Koliker. He took the title of "Luthier du Conservatoire" and succeeded to the Lupot business on the death of Nicolas in 1824.

(7) Charles Adolphe Gand (b. Paris, ?; d. Paris, 1866), son of the preceding. He took over the firm at his father's death in 1845 and directed it alone for ten years, the business becoming Gand Frères in 1855.

(8) Eugène Gand (b. Paris, ?; d. Paris, 1892), brother of the preceding. He joined the firm in 1855, when it became Gand Frères, and after Charles Adolphe's death in 1866 he took as his partners Ernest and Gustave Bernardel, sons of Sébastien Philippe Bernardel, an old workman of Nicolas Lupot (4). The name of Gand et Bernardel Frères became Gand et Bernardel in 1884, by the retirement of Ernest.

(9) Albert Caressa (b. ?, 25 Dec. 1866; d. ?), successor to Gustave Bernardel, who remained in sole charge of the firm in 1901, when he handed it over to Caressa, who had entered it on 20 May 1891, jointly with Henri Français, who had been his partner since 1880. From 1920 Caressa remained sole director until May 1938. E. J. P. & M. P.

Luppis. See ALFANO (songs).

LUPPO. See LUPO.

LUPRANO (Lurano), Filippo de (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 15th–16th-century composer. Thirty-one frottole by him are published in collective volumes, by Petrucci and others, between 1504 and 1517. E. V. D. S.

LUPUS, Eduardus. See LOBO, DUARTE.

LUPUS HELLINCK (or Hellync). See HELLINCK.

LUPUS (Lupo) ITALUS. (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 15th–16th-century composer. He wrote a motet, 'Aspice Domine', and a Mass without a name — but with the trope 'Surrexit pastor' in the Kyrie, from which it might be named — in the Peterhouse part-books at Cambridge. It is tempting to connect him with the rest of the Lupo family: the Peterhouse books, being written late in the reign of Henry VIII, are not too early for an identification of Lupus Italus with Ambrose Lupo of Milan, who was in England in 1540.

A. H.

LUPUS (or Lupis, prob. orig. de Wolf), Michael (b. ?; d. Lierre, 15 July 1567).

Flemish composer. He was the son of a singer in the chapel of Charles V and is himself mentioned as being in imperial service between 1520 and 1531. In 1534 he obtained a prebend at Soignies. In 1535 he was at Naples with Charles V, but he returned to the Netherlands in 1546 and, resigning his benefice at Soignies, received one at the church of Saint-Gommaire at Lierre. He accompanied Charles V to Germany in 1547–48. Lupus retired when Charles resigned the Netherlands to Philip II in 1555. In 1559 he received the sum of 20 écus as one of the old court servants.

Motets by Lupus are published in Fuenllana's collection of 1554 and Petrucci's 'Motetti de la corona'.

F. B.

LUR (Luur, i.e. Great Horn). A prehistoric instrument of bronze whereof many specimens in a remarkable state of preservation have been discovered from time to time in the peat bogs of Denmark and Sweden, nineteen of them being in the National Museum at Copenhagen.

Its peculiar shape resembles somewhat that of a contorted S, the bell of the instrument, represented by a flat ornamental disc attached to the larger end of the tube, projecting above the head of the performer.

The natural sound of this horn is rough and blatant, and small pendant plates of metal are attached to the smaller end of the tube apparently for the purpose of increasing by their rattling the terrifying effect of the blast, as noted by Polybius and Diodorus Siculus in connection with the Celtic and Gallic warriors before the Christian era.

Under the lip and embouchure of a modern player the longer horns easily produce the eleven natural harmonics above the prime or fundamental note and also certain chromatic sounds descending below the prime. Some writers have therefore supposed that the intervals of the modern scale were known to those horn-blowers of 2500 years or more ago; but it is more probable that as the player's cheeks were in those days puffed out in blowing (whence the need of the capistrum or cheek bandage used by Greeks and Romans), only one or two of the lower harmonics were obtained, the octave and possibly the twelfth.

F. W. G.

BIBL.—BROHOLM, H. C., LARSEN, W. P. & SKJERNE, G., 'The Lures [sic] of the Bronze Age: an Archaeological, Technical and Musicological Investigation' (Copenhagen, 1949).

See also ALPHORN. Folk Music (Norwegian).

LURANO, Filippo de. See LUPRANO.

LURLINE (Opera). See WALLACE.

LUSCINIUS (actually Ottomar Nachtgall) (b. Strasbourg, 1487¹; d. nr. Freiburg i/B., 1537).

Alsatian organist, theorist and composer. He was a pupil of Hofhaimer and became organist at Strasbourg in 1515 and afterwards canon of St. Stephen's there. Owing to the reformation troubles he was obliged to leave the town in 1523, after which he led a somewhat wandering life, dying at the Carthusian house near Freiburg-im-Breisgau. He was the author of 'Musicae institutiones' (1515), also of 'Musurgia' (1536), the latter work mainly a translation into Latin of Virdung's 'Musica getutscht'. His name appears as the composer of a three-part organ piece in Kleber's organ 'Tabulatur-Buch', with the date 1516.

J. R. M.

LUSH, Ernest (b. Bournemouth, 23 Jan. 1908).

English pianist. He studied with Tobias Matthay in London and with Carl Friedberg in New York. His development was precocious; he broadcast for the first time at the early age of fifteen. Four years later (1927) he made his début with a concerto at the Bournemouth Winter Gardens under Sir Dan Godfrey. The same year he joined the B.B.C., where in due course he became senior staff accompanist; but although he has made a specialty of accompanying and is an excellent chamber-music player, he has given many pianoforte recitals of his own and played a considerable number of concertos with various orchestras. At the Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts in London he was first heard in 1930. The circumstances of his career, which have made by far the greatest number of his appearances unseen by the public, have not been those which fall to the lot of the virtuoso; but unostentatious as his solid and sensitive musicianship has been, it has earned the admiration and respect of discerning musicians.

E. B.

LUSINGANDO } (Ital. = flattering, wheedling, coaxing). In their musical sense these directions suggest performance "in a soft, tender manner", resembling amoroso in character, but with perhaps a hint of coquetry in it. Amoroso, however, is generally used at the beginning of movements, to indicate the character of the whole piece, whereas lusingando or lusinghiero is as a rule applied only to incidental passages.

LUSINGHIERO }

J. A. F.-M., rev.

LUSITANO, Vicente (b. Olivença, ?; d. ?).

Portuguese theorist and composer. In his own country he was known as Vicente de Olivença; but in Rome, where he established himself about 1550, he was called Lusitano (the Portuguese). His name came prominently forward in musical circles in 1551, through an academic dispute with Nicola Vicentino, in which the Spaniard Escobedo and the Netherlander Danckerts were appointed as judges. Bains (II, 342-47) relates the affair in a footnote which occupies six pages, though in this, as in other matters, his authority should not be accepted without question. The verdict was given in favour of the Portuguese, who, to make sure of his position, published an 'Introductione facilissima et nouissima de canto fermo . . .' (Rome, 1553, with two later editions at Venice.) He also composed a book of motets, 'Epigrammata, quae vulgo motetta dicuntur, cum 5, 6 et 8 v.' (Rome, 1551).

J. B. T.

See also Danckerts (dispute with Vicentino).

LUSSAN, Zélie de (b. Brooklyn, N.Y., 21 Dec. 1863; d. London 18 Dec. 1949).

American mezzo-soprano singer of French parentage. Her parents settled in the U.S.A. in the 1850s; her mother, a singer, was a descendant of Madame de Sévigné. In spite of a promising talent they refused to let their daughter follow a professional career until persuaded by Christine Nilsson, who heard her privately. Trained by her mother, she first appeared in opera with the Boston Ideals in 1886 as Arline in Balfe's 'Bohemian Girl' and won immediate success. In 1888 she went to London and was engaged by Augustus Harris for his first Covent Garden season, appearing in a single performance of 'Carmen' on 7 July, directly after Minnie Hauk and Nordica. Comparisons, however, did not prevent her from gaining marked favour in a part which she subsequently made her own and sang over a thousand times in Great Britain and America with 57 different Don Josés of all nationalities. Nature and art had combined to make her an ideal exponent of Bizet's heroine, whom she made both vocally and histrionically picturesque, forcible and attractive, without falling into exaggeration. With a range of 2½ octaves her voice had the rich quality of a mezzo-soprano while mounting easily to a bright, ringing tone in the head register; and thus, thanks to rare technical facility, she was able to do justice to a wide range of parts, including Zerlina, Mignon, Juliette, Desdemona (these two created by her in English), Nedda and Musetta. She appeared more or less regularly at Covent Garden, chiefly as Carmen, between 1890 and 1910. During the same period she was a leading member of the Carl Rosa Company, her versatile labours with which will perhaps be best remembered. She also appeared in eight command performances before Queen Victoria, including 'The Daughter of the Regiment' and 'Carmen' in 1892 and 'Fra Diavolo' in 1893. In 1894-95 she sang at the ¹ Between 1478 and 1480, according to Vogeleis.

INSTRUMENTS OF THE LUTE FAMILY

(former Galpin Collection)

1. Mandore or Lutina, 18th century. 2. Pandurina, M. A. Bergonzi, 1756. 3. Lute, Sixtus Rauwolf, 1593. 4. Theorbo, Mathye_Hofman (or) the elder, 1619. 5. Archlute or Chitarrone, Italian, 17th century. 6. Guitar, R. Champion, c. 1725.

Metropolitan Opera House, New York, taking among other parts that of Anne in Verdi's 'Falstaff' on its production in America. In the following year she toured successfully in France, Spain and Portugal, and in 1900 again sang in New York with H. W. Savage's English Opera Company.

In 1907 Zélie de Lussan married the pianist Angelo Fronani and retired from the stage, but she reappeared in 1910 during the Beecham season at Covent Garden. Her husband died on the day the armistice was signed at the end of the first world war (11 Nov. 1918). Ever since her marriage she had lived in London, where she made many musical friends and in her old age delighted her visitors with her vivid recollections.

H. K., adds.

LUSTIG, Jacob Wilhelm (b. Hamburg, 21 Sept. 1706; d. Groningen, [buried 17 May] 1796).

German-Dutch organist, composer and writer. His father, also Jacob Wilhelm, was a pupil of J. A. Reinken and became organist and Kirchenschreiber at St. Michael's Church at Hamburg. He gave his son a good musical education so that at the age of eleven he could act as deputy organist. The father died in 1722 and as the son was too young for an official position the appointment was given to Anton Altzen. Lustig then assisted at the Dutch Reformed Church and the Lutheran Chapel at Hamburg. He also became a pupil of Mattheson for theory and composition and of Telemann for organ playing. Later, on the recommendation of Mattheson, he took lessons from Johann Paul Kuntzen and in his turn gave lessons to the latter's son, Rudolph Karl. He also studied organ building with Arf Schnitger and in 1727 took the opportunity of hearing J. S. Bach when that master visited Hamburg. In July 1728 Lustig was appointed organist at St. Martin's Church, Groningen, and he spent the remainder of his life in Holland. The organ, originally built to the specification of Rudolph Agricola, was one of the largest and best in western Europe, having 3 manuals and independent pedal, with 47 speaking-stops.

At Groningen Lustig won an excellent reputation as organist and writer, his literary works comprising treatises not only on music but on physics and other subjects, and translations of German and English works, including Burney's travels. He also made contributions to Marpur's 'Historisch-critische Beyträge', which, however, were marred by self-praise and exaggerated depreciation of his rivals and contemporaries. His services as adviser in the building and rebuilding of organs were in demand all over Holland and to some extent in western Germany. As a composer he won a moderate reputation in his own days which did not continue after his death. He was a keen reformer of psalm singing and took a leading part in the introduction of the new (Dutch) metrical translation.

Prints and manuscripts of Lustig's musical and literary work are still to be found in no less than 24 leading libraries in Holland, Germany, England, America, France, Belgium and Austria. The compositions still in existence are 6 'Suites pour le clavecin', 6 'Sonates pour le clavecin, première partie', 3 'Vervolgstukken for Mahaut's Maendelijk Muzikaal Tydverdrijf' and 5 'Geestrijke Zang- en Muzyk-Stukjes'. There is also record, under the name of G. G. (probably Giacobbe Guglielmo) Lustig, of 'Villanelles hollandaises: 6 Concerten', 'Villanelles angloises: 6 Concerten' and a 'Serenata'. Traces of other works are vague, but suggest that he knew the works of Bach and followed them fairly closely, particularly in the titles. His printed literary works are 'Inlediding tot Muzykkunde'; 'Muzykaale Spraakkunst'; 'Samenspraaken' (Conversations) issued periodically and running to 12 numbers, and nearly a dozen literary manuscripts are still extant. He translated works by A. Driessen, J. Barbeyrac, J. F. Stiebritz, J. J. Quantz, A. Werckmeister, J. M. Schmidt, T. Wodiczka, F. W. Marpur, Niccolò Pasquali, J. C. Gottsched, J. G. Kruger and Burney. H. A.

BIBL.—Du SAAR, J., 'Het Leven en de Werken van Jacob Wilhelm Lustig' (Amsterdam, 1948).

LUSTIGE KRIEG, DER (Opera). See STRAUSS (J.).

LUSTIGE WITWE, DIE ('The Merry Widow'). Operetta in 3 acts by Lehár. Libretto by Victor Léon and Leo Stein. Produced Vienna, Theater an der Wien, 30 Dec. 1905. 1st perf. abroad, Hamburg, 3 Mar. 1906. 1st in England, London, Daly's Theatre (trans. by E. Morton and A. Ross), 8 June 1907. 1st in U.S.A., New York, New Amsterdam Theatre (in German), 21 Oct. 1907.

LUSTIGEN WEIBER VON WINDSOR, DIE. Opera in 3 acts by Nicolai. Libretto by Salomon Hermann Mosenthal, based on Shakespeare's 'Merry Wives of Windsor'. Prod. Berlin, Court Opera, 9 Mar. 1849. 1st perf. abroad, Riga, 1 Dec. 1852. 1st in U.S.A., Philadelphia, 16 Mar. 1863. 1st in England, London, His Majesty's Theatre, 3 May 1864.

LUTE (Arab. al-ūd; Old Fr. lut; M.H.G. lūt; Prov. laut; Fr. luth; Ger. Laute; Ital. liuto or leuto; Dutch luit; Spa. laud; Port. alaude). The lute is the most highly developed instrument of the mandore type, with a large convex-backed body and a short neck with fretted fingerboard. It was formerly in almost universal use in western Europe, but now is exceedingly rare. It is an instrument capable of the utmost expressiveness and beauty of tone, but requiring great artistry and technical skill. Its future depends upon a growing body of lutenists able to do as much for its technique and reputation as Segovia and a few others have done for the guitar.

The lute occupies a most important position in the history of instrumental music. It is one of the first instruments for which we find any large quantity of written music, and was the commonest, yet most highly regarded, domestic musical instrument of the intensely creative 16th century. Study of much of the music of that period cannot properly be divorced from consideration of the instrument which was not only its interpretative agent, but also a main cause of its popularity and spread. In the lute music of the 16th century is found the bringing together of the hitherto divergent arts of vocal polyphony and popular songs and dances, while the character of the instrument contributed largely to the development both of vertical harmony and of pure instrumental forms. In the dance suites for the lute can be seen the germ of the later keyboard suites.

DESCRIPTION.—The body of a lute resembles in shape a half pear, split lengthways, and consists of a convex back and flat belly. The back is built up of ribs, varying from nine to nearly forty in number, and usually $\frac{1}{4}$ in. to $\frac{1}{6}$ in. thick or even less. These ribs, shaped and bent over a mould, are glued together edge to edge; after the removal of the mould the joints are reinforced internally with strips of paper or parchment. At the upper end of the body the ribs are gathered together on a neck-block of light wood, while the lower end is strengthened internally and externally with thin wooden strips. The most usual material for the ribs is sycamore or a similar wood, though soft woods such as cedar, yew, cypress or pine are found; ebony and ivory, though acoustically inferior, were sometimes chosen for their decorative qualities. The belly (table or deck) is nearly always of silver fir, $\frac{1}{8}$ in. to $\frac{1}{4}$ in. thick, supported below by transverse bars. The musical quality of a lute depends a great deal upon the barring, and considerable variation in the number and position of the bars is found. The sound-hole of the belly lies about half-way between the root of the neck and the bridge; the latter, which combines the functions of bridge and tailpiece, is glued low down on the belly. In its characteristic form the sound-hole is carved in the wood of the belly in an elaborate "rose" or "knot". The whole body, which in the normal treble lute is, very roughly, 20 ins. long, 12 ins. wide and 6 ins. deep, is very light and resonant.

The length of the neck is usually a little more than a third of the open string length, and in the treble lute may be of the order of 10 ins. The fingerboard surface lies in the same plane as the belly, and its width, usually between $2\frac{1}{2}$ ins. and 4 ins., varies according to the number of strings carried by the lute. It is fretted in semitones with movable gut frets, usually 7 to 10 in number, tied round the neck.

The peg-box in its characteristic form is open and lies back at a right angle, more or less, with the neck. This makes the strings bear strongly on the nut and also helps to keep the centre of gravity of the instrument lower. The slender pegs or lute-pins lie across the peg-box; in the later instruments a special peg was sometimes mounted close to the nut for the treble string.

The strings are arranged in pairs, termed courses, with the exception, usually, of a single treble string. The English names for the courses are treble, small mean, great mean, counter-tenor, tenor and bass. In addition to these six courses, there may be up to eight bass courses or diapasons, usually arranged in a diatonic scale below the sixth (bass) course. Until the latter part of the 17th century all the strings were made of gut, though there are references to the use of silk.

The treble string demands particularly fine gut, and its tendency to break is notorious. In former times these fine strings, called "minikins", were highly valued. They are now unobtainable. The invention of covered (gimped) strings is usually attributed to Sainte-Colombe or his pupil Marin Marais in Paris in the second half of the 17th century. By about 1700 the thick gut basses were generally replaced by covered strings.

PLAYING.—The lute is played held across the body, with the fingers of the left hand stopping the strings on the fretted fingerboard, while the thumb lies behind the neck of the instrument. The strings are plucked or, in the technical term, struck with the thumb, first, second and third fingers of the right hand; the little finger rests lightly on the belly on or near the treble end of the bridge. Single notes are struck either downwards with the thumb or upwards (i.e. towards the thumb) with the first or second fingers. Chords are played, usually, with the thumb and fingers drawn towards each other. Where the chord consists of more than four notes, the thumb or first finger may have to strike more than one course. A raking stroke, in which finger and thumb move across all the strings in full chords, is uncommon in the earlier music and is found more often in the period of the lute's decline. The actual striking is executed with the soft part of the tip of the thumb or fingers, and short nails are essential. An important principle of play is that in general every note is held out as long as possible; that is, the fingers of the left hand are not lifted from a stop until the exigencies of a new stop or "griff" (multiple stop for a chord) make it necessary to do so. The old writers stress that both stopping and striking should be performed with the minimum movement of the hands and fingers. There are a number of ornaments and graces of play which can be executed on the lute, some of which found their way into keyboard music. Moreover, the 17th-century French school of harpsichordists were also greatly influenced by the texture of lute music, its delicate and arpeggiated style.

The lute has always been especially valued for its delicate, expressive and finely shaded tone, but, as said already, the production of this requires great artistry. It is essentially an instrument for intimate performance; in this matter, in Renaissance times and later, it was honoured above all other instruments for its power to stir the emotions and for its beauty of tone.

Many surviving instruments are much inlaid and decorated, and perhaps owe their preservation to this. But they give a misleading impression; the old playing instruments were quite plain, apart from the carved rose, and the more ornamental lutes were little regarded by musicians.

The instrument shown in PLATE 42, No. 3 is a typical and beautiful late 16th-century lute by a German maker.

HISTORY.—The western European lute is largely derived from the Persian-Arabian instrument — al-ud — from which it takes its name. The latter instrument was brought into Spain by the Moors and may have first found its way into Christian Europe from that country. The general spread of the instrument, however, seems to have coincided more with the period of the Crusades. There was an instrument of the mandore type already in use, but the numerous parallels between the European lute and its earlier Eastern original leave little doubt about their relationship.

At first the form of the instrument and method of its stringing seem to have been rather variable, but by the 14th century a more stable type emerged. Somewhat smaller and rounder in the body than the later instrument, it had four strings and was played, like the eastern original, with a plectrum or quill. About the middle of the century, paired strings appear to have been introduced, giving increased resonance. The tuning of the four strings was probably at intervals of a fourth, a major third, a fourth. When, about 1400, a fifth string was added in the treble, it was at an interval of a fourth higher again.

No 15th-century instruments have survived, but a fairly clear idea of their appearance can be formed. On a folio of the manuscript of Henri Arnaud of Zwolle (Bibl. Nat., Paris, MS. Lat. 7275) of about 1440 there is an accurate drawing of a lute with some rules for its construction. No dimensions are given, nor details of stringing, but it is interesting to find that the rule for finding the position of the bridge is the same as that given by Mersenne ('Harmonie universelle', 1636) some 200 years later. There are also very numerous examples in paintings of the period, where often both the instrument and the method of playing it are shown with almost photographic accuracy.

The latter half of the 15th century saw three very important developments: the general introduction of the technique of striking the strings with the fingers instead of with a plectrum, the introduction of written tablature and the evolution of the classical lute-body form.

Towards the end of the 15th century a sixth course was added in the bass, two octaves below the treble string. This six-course lute, with its courses tuned at intervals of a fourth, broken by a major third in the middle, is the foundation of the classical instrument. Sebastian Virdung ('Musica getutscht', 1511) gives an illustration of the fingerboard, showing six paired courses and seven frets. He remarks that lutes could have five, six or seven courses; while five were too few, and seven were not commonly met with, the six-course lute was in almost universal use.

All the old books, from Virdung to Dowland and Robinson about a hundred years later, say that there was no absolute tuning as regards pitch. They usually instruct the reader to tune his treble string as high as it will stand, and then tune the other strings at the appropriate intervals below it. For a given length of open string, using the finest gut, this admits less variation than may be imagined. In England, France and Italy the normal lute tuning was nominally G c f a d' g' or A d g b e' a'; this was later known as the "old English lute tuning" and, in France, as the vieil accord or vieux ton. With the indications given by the old authors it is clearly a waste of time trying to relate the tuning to any standard pitch, but experiments with strings of the average length used point to the treble-string tuning not being higher than $\frac{3}{4}$ tone below g' in our standard pitch (a' = 440 c.p.s.).

The seventh course, mentioned by Virdung in 1511 as being uncommon, became more general by the middle of the century, though by no means universal. It was in fact the first of the series of bass courses which were later added below the six standard courses; it was tuned a fourth or sometimes a tone or a fifth below the sixth (bass) course, and was played both open and stopped (i.e. fingered with the left hand).

The 16th century and the opening years of the 17th were the golden age of the lute. An enormous amount of music was composed and printed for it and a number of tutorial works were published for the use of amateurs. Professional lutenists were a feature of the courts and great houses of western Europe, and talent was both eagerly sought and handsomely rewarded. The only country where exception must be made is, surprisingly enough, Spain, where the vihuela de mano, which was more like a guitar in construction, reigned supreme. It was, nevertheless, tuned and played like a lute, and its music, which is mostly of high artistic value, can be included with lute music proper.

Though the period round about 1600 can be regarded as the lute's apogee, it was very quickly followed by decline. The 17th century is characterized by two main developments: first, the increase in the number of courses by the addition of bass strings and, secondly, the adoption of various new tunings. Both proved to be symptoms of decadence. Praetorius ('Syntagma musicum', 1618) says of the number of the courses that they:

are from year to year augmented and increased by lutenists. Lutes can now [i.e. in 1618] be found with 8, 9 and sometimes 10 and 11 courses. As, however, for the 7th, 8th and 9th courses, it is here agreed that no mention is necessary other than to say that each is employed on its own merits and tuned either according to custom or as the song is set.

In some lute music the tuning of the bass strings was specially indicated. Praetorius lists a whole family of lutes of different sizes, from the smallest, a klein octav Laut with its treble string at d'', down to a gross octav Bass Laut with its treble string at g, an octave lower than the treble lute or, as he terms it, the recht chorist oder alt Laut, with its treble at g'. But all were tuned alike at the intervals of the vieil accord.

Three courses of basses are found, from about 1600 onwards (Dowland's later music uses them), tuned C or D, E or E♭, F; by about 1630 four, five or six courses were not uncommon. This extension of the range of the instrument into the bass, however, accentuated the problem of obtaining satisfactory tone from gut strings. During the first half of the 16th century this difficulty was usually met by tuning the second string an octave above the first in the counter-tenor, tenor and bass courses. This practice was abandoned by the virtuosi of c. 1600, such as Dowland, but does not seem to have died out entirely. With the growing number of basses in the 17th century the solution which was most generally adopted was the borrowing of the longer neck and upper peg-box of the theorbo¹, by which means the lower basses were given a greater open length. The eighth course and below were by this time always played unstopped. The resulting theorbo-lute, which Praetorius calls newly invented in 1618, remained the most usual arrangement until towards the end of the century. In form it varied from merely carrying the lowest two or more courses of basses on a small raised saddle fixed to the normal turned-back lute peg-box, to having a separate upper peg-box, with its nut at greater distance from the bridge than the lower peg-box, in order to carry the lower basses in a manner similar to that of the theorbo. Praetorius ('Sciagraphia', 1620) and Mersenne ('Harmonie universelle', 1636) show pictures of theorbo-lutes of the latter type. They differed from true theorbos in having, usually, smaller bodies and a shorter open string length for the fingered strings. All the strings, except the treble, were arranged in paired courses, while in the theorbo they were, until the latter half of the 17th century, usually single.

Thomas Mace's 'Musick's Monument' (1676) is perhaps the best-known English source of information about the lute of this period in its decline. He describes, as the normal type of instrument, a theorbo-lute with eight courses on the lower peg-box, which is turned back in the normal way, and four further courses of basses of graduated lengths fastened to a long upright peg-box. This type of lute was known in England as the French lute and became popular about the middle of the century. Mace considered that the basses made lute playing easier; this is true in as far as they were mostly struck open and the stopping by the fingers of the left hand was simplified, but the work of the right hand is made harder, the correct bass having to be picked out with the tip of a nearly stiff thumb. Towards the end of the century the theorbo-lute gave place again to the single peg-box lute, when the use of covered strings allowed satisfactory tone to be obtained from basses of the same length as the fingered strings.

Variations in tuning were not entirely new. Music is found at the beginning of the 16th century which requires the lowering of the bass string by a tone from its normal tuning; another variation involved lowering both tenor and bass by a tone. A later variation tuned the treble a minor third instead of a fourth above the small mean. But these were rare exceptions; practically all the very large quantity of lute music written before c. 1620 was written for the vieil accord.

The new tunings seem to have originated in France; between 1600 and 1620 a "Sharp Tune" of G c f a c' e' and a "Flat Tune", G c f a♭ c' e♭, came into use, and a few years later, about 1630, an "accord nouveau ou extraordinaire"—A d f a d' f'. Several other tunings are found, but these are the most important. The "Flat Tune" is given by Mace (1676) as the normal tuning of his

¹ See THEORBO & CHITARRONE.

French lute; he describes it as incorrectly termed the "Flat French Tuning". The old tuning, G c f a d' g', which Mace calls the old English lute tuning, was retained for the theorbo, though, owing to the greater length of string, the treble was usually lowered an octave. Mace also discusses the merits of what he still calls a "New Tuning"—A d f a d' f'. The latter tuning is important not only in relation to the music of the Paris school of lutenists of the 17th century, but also because it was the one used in the German revival of the lute in the following century.

The multiplication of tunings was a great nuisance and bears a share in responsibility for the lute's decline in popularity. By about 1650 a single lute-book might contain pieces requiring several different tunings. The results of continuous alterations to the tuning of the strings can have been little short of disastrous. A lute, once it has settled down in tune, requires only minor adjustments to keep it in perfect order. Constantin Huygens, writing in 1680, confirms modern experience in this matter, and says that he was very careful not to alter the tuning of his lute, since a good piece, in his opinion, remained a good piece in whatever tuning it was played. He regarded the striving after novelty of the French lutenists as part of their national malady. Mattheson's oft-quoted gibe ('Das neueröffnete Orchestre', 1713), that a lutenist spent most of his life tuning his instrument, clearly refers to one less competent and less strong-minded than Huygens. Part of the attraction of the different tunings lay in the fact that, like the scordatura of the violin, they considerably alter the character of the instrument. For example, the "new tuning"—A d f a d' f'—especially invites an arpeggiato style of playing, which is little found in music written for the viel accord. Apart from inconvenience, however, the new tunings had another adverse effect on the instrument. They all involved a greater total tension in the strings than the viel accord for the same tuning of the treble string; the tension was, of course, further augmented by the numerous courses of basses. The greater tension in turn demanded heavier barring of the belly and even greater strength, and therefore weight, in the body, to the detriment of tone.

The final development is that described by E. G. Baron ('Historisch-theoretische und praktische Untersuchung des Instruments der Laute', 1727) as the Eilff-chorichte Laute, tuned both treble and small mean are shown single, and the three lowest bass courses have their second strings tuned an octave up. Some lutes of this period, which was the beginning of the so-called 18th-century German revival of the lute, had even more courses, eight courses of basses being sometimes found. An instrument like this, tuned as indicated by Baron, is virtually a different instrument from that used in the golden age of the late 16th century. Moreover, the status of the instrument had altered, and it was inevitable that the music written for it—some of it of great charm—should tend to be conceived in terms of the keyboard. But the lute was still alive and appreciated; J. S. Bach wrote for it, as did the lutenists Esaias Reussner and S. L. Weiss.

The frontispiece of the work shows the author holding one of these instruments; all the courses have the same length of open string,

Since the mid-18th century such true lutes as have been made have been reproductions of one of the earlier types already described. The instrument had ceased to play an active part in contemporary musical life. Not to be confused with true lutes are the lute-bodied guitars, mostly of German origin, which are still quite commonly met with. They are, as a rule, relatively heavily built and have not much in common with true lutes except superficial shape. Even when the arrangement of the strings has been altered to that of a lute, the instrument remains musically separate.

OLD INSTRUCTION BOOKS, ETC.—Only a few years after the publication of the first printed music for the lute (1507) there appeared printed instructional treatises for the use of amateurs. The earliest, Sebastian Virdung's 'Musica getutscht' (1511), reviews the musical instruments then in use and gives directions for playing the lute, clavicord and recorder. Hans Judenkünig's 'Utilis et compendiarie Introductio' is a practical but elementary work published in Vienna between 1515 and 1519. Hans Gerle of Nuremberg, a maker of lutes as well as a lutenist, was the author of a series of lute books, of which the two earliest, 'Musica teutsch, auf die Instrument der grossen und kleinen Geygen auch Lautten' (1532) and 'Tabulatur auff die Laudten' (1533), are fairly elementary tutors. A later school of German lutenists is represented by Hans Neusiedler, who gave practical instructions, with pieces of graded difficulty, in his 'Ein neugeordnet künstlich Lautenbuch' (1536). Other German instruction books were Sebastian Ochsenkuhn's 'Tabulatur-Buch' (1558) and Wolf Heckel's 'Lauttenbuch' (1562).

In Italy Petrucci's 'Intabulatura de lauto. Libro Quarto' (1508) is prefaced by a brief explanation of the Italian system of tablature, but more detailed information is contained in V. Galilei's 'Fronimo', published in 1568 and reissued, revised, in 1584.

The first French instruction book, 'Tres breve et familiere introduction', was published by Pierre Attaignant in 1529, but only, in a couple of pages, explains the French system of tablature and the method of tuning the lute. The later treatise of Adrien Le Roy is known only through its English translation, published in London in 1568 and reprinted with instructions on transcribing music into lute tablature in 1574. J. B. Besard appended a short practical treatise (in Latin) on lute playing to his 'Thesaurus harmonicus' (1603) and gave further instructions in his 'Isagoge in artem testudinariam' (1617). Mersenne's 'Harmonie universelle' (1636) contains very detailed directions on lute playing, written by Jehan Basset.

In England, besides the translation of Le Roy's work, other well-known tutors were Thomas Robinson's 'Schoole of Musicke' (1603) and Robert Dowland's 'Varietie of Lute Lessons' (1610). The latter is particularly interesting, as it not only contains a translation of Besard's Latin treatise from the 'Thesaurus harmonicus', but also some further observations by John Dowland, Robert's more famous father.

It must be confessed that, with the exception of Mersenne, most of the tutors are very sparing of information. They give little more than an explanation of the tablature and instructions as to which fingers were to be used for stopping and striking. Mersenne expressed the view that some authors were at pains to conceal rather than make plain their art.

Thomas Mace's 'Musick's Monument' (1676) has already been mentioned. It is unfortunate that the parts of Mace's work which have attracted most general attention are oddities such as the advice that a lute is best kept in a well-used bed, for this may obscure the fact that the book contains much valuable information. Mace gives a detailed course of instruction for the French lute, with exercises and examples (the latter mostly rather dull). Although the style of play reflects a falling off from the practice at the beginning of the century, the instructions contain, as the late Arnold Dolmetsch pointed out, many useful indications on the interpretation of 17th-century music generally.

A later work, already noted, is Baron's 'Historisch-theoretische und praktische Untersuchung' (1727). He gives, among other things, some information on the old makers of lutes, not all of it accurate, and his treatise is a bridge between the earlier art and the 18th-century German revival.

OLD LUTES AND THEIR MAKERS.—Comparative study of old lutes is by no means easy. Very few of the older instruments are in their original condition, most having been re-necked in the 17th and 18th centuries. The internal barring was often rearranged at the same time. The great majority of instruments are museum specimens, and musical trial is impossible.

Ascriptions, even when supported by makers' labels, cannot by any means always be accepted at their face value. It is known that a good deal of forgery went on, particularly during the 17th century, when old lutes were fetching very high prices. Virtually no close critical study has been made of this problem, as has been done with the violin.

The finest collection of old lutes is that in the musical instrument collection of the Kunsthistorisches Museum, Vienna, which now includes the instruments formerly belonging to the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde. There are also good collections in the Brussels and Paris Conservatoire Museums, and a considerable number of old lutes were to be found spread among the many instrumental collections in Germany, of which the Heyer collection at Leipzig was the most notable. In Great Britain there are a few very good old lutes in private hands and some interesting specimens in the Donaldson Collection at the R.C.M. and in the Victoria and Albert Museum in London. There are probably a number of fine instruments in Italy besides the ones recorded there in the well-known instrumental collections. Relatively few good old lutes are to be found in American collections.

Lutes were made in all western European countries, but the first to acquire a general reputation came from Italy, though the makers themselves appear usually to have been Germans. The most famous school of lute making was that of Bologna in the 16th century, and it is the earliest from which specimens still survive. It remained the most esteemed as long as the lute was in general use. Chief among the masters there was Luca (Laux) Maler, a Tyrolese, who flourished between 1518 and 1552, and produced lutes in great numbers. Other famous Bologna makers were Laux Maler's son Sigismond, Hans Frei and Nicholas Sconvelt, but by about 1600 Bologna seems to have lost its position in favour of Padua and Venice. The best-known Paduan master is perhaps Wendelin Tieffenbrucker; more surviving lutes are ascribed to him than to any other old maker, but the variation in both model and labelling, apart from the wide range of dates (1551-1620) and the large number of instruments, suggest that there are many more forgeries than are at present officially admitted. Two other Paduan makers were Leonardo Tieffenbrucker and Michael Hartung (Harton). The name Tieffenbrucker also occurs at Venice, one Magnus Tieffenbrucker (Duiffoprugcar, Dieffopruckar) having worked there in the early 16th century and another of the same name between 1589 and 1621; a fair number of instruments by the latter still exist. Other Venetian masters were Cristoforo Cocco (who, it has been suggested, may have been an Englishman — Cocks), Magnus Stegher (c. 1570), Marx Unverdorben (16th cent.) and Matteo and Domenico Sellas (early 17th cent.). Round about 1600 several makers in Rome were turning out bass lutes — the chitarrone was also called the Roman theorbo — among them Matteo Buechenberg, Alberto Attore and Pietro Alberto.

The Flemish, French and German lutes which are still to be found are mostly later than those of the Italian makers mentioned above. Some, particularly the German lutes of about 1670 to 1730, are of fine workmanship.

No English lutes appear to survive.

THE LUTE TO-DAY.—The lute is commonly regarded as an obsolete instrument, revived solely for antiquarian performances. This is a mistaken view. In Germany its use has never died out, and it is likely that even in England there have always been a few — sometimes very few — practising lutenists. Since 1900 or so there has been some revival of interest in the lute, largely due to the work of the late Arnold Dolmetsch, and quite an amount of its music has been transcribed and published in staff notation. Unfortunately lute music is often much less effective when played on a keyboard instrument, especially the modern pianoforte, than on the instrument for which it was composed. True lutes are now being made in small numbers. The charm of the instrument, the mass of unexplored music for it, combined with the present increasing interest in the older music and growing favour of the less powerful instruments (of which the clavichord is the obvious example) make it not improbable that the near future may see a revival of the lute.

M. W. P.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BARON, ERNST G., 'Historisch-theoretische und praktische Untersuchung der Laute' (Nuremberg, 1727).
 BOETTCHER, WOLFGANG, 'Studien zur solistischen Lautenpraxis des 16. und 17. Jahrhunderts' (Berlin, 1943).
 BRENET, M., 'Notes sur l'histoire du luth en France' (Riv. Mus. It., 1899).
 BRONDI, MARIA RITA, 'Il liuto e la chitarra: ricerche storiche sulla loro origine' (Turin, 1926).
 DOLMETSCH, ARNOLD, 'The Lute' ('The Connoisseur', Apr.-May 1904).
 FARMER, HENRY G., 'An Old Moorish Lute Tutor, edited with Translation, Commentary and an Appendix' (Glasgow, 1933).
 FRATI, L., 'Liutisti e liutai a Bologna' (Riv. Mus. It., 1919).
 GABRIELLI, RICCARDO, 'I liutai marchigiani: contributo alla storia liutistica italiana' (Rome, 1935).
 GALPIN, F. W., 'Old English Instruments' (London, 1911).
 GEIRINGER, KARL, 'Geschichte und Vorgeschichte der europäischen Laute' (Z.M.W., X, 1928).
 HAHNE-OVERMANN, 'Ikongraphie der Lautengriffe' (Z.M.W., XII, 1930).
 KINSKY, G., 'Alessandro Piccinini und sein Arciliuto' ('Acta Musicologica', X, Copenhagen, 1938).
 'Der Lautenmacher Hans Frei' ('Acta Musicologica', IX, Copenhagen, 1937).

- KÖRTE, OSWALD, 'Laute und Lautenmusik bis zur Mitte des 16. Jahrhunderts' (Leipzig, 1901).
 KOSACK, HANS P., 'Geschichte der Laute und Lautenmusik in Preussen' (Cassel, 1935).
 LA LAURENCIE, LIONEL DE, 'Les Luthistes' (Paris, 1928).
 LÜTOENDORFF, W. VON, 'Die Geigen- und Lautenmacher vom Mittelalter bis zur Gegenwart' (Frankfurt a/M., 1922).
 MACE, THOMAS, 'Music's Monument' (London, 1676).
 MAGNI DUFLOQ, E., 'Storia del liuto' (Milan, 1931).
 MAIRY, ADRIENNE & LA LAURENCIE, L. DE, 'Le Luth' ('L'Encyclopédie de la Musique et Dictionnaire du Conservatoire').
 PULVER, JEFFREY, 'The Lute in England' (Mus. Op., Apr.-Aug. 1923).
 SOMMER, HERMANN, 'Die Laute in ihrer musikgeschichtlichen Kultur und Kunst' (Berlin, 1920). Excellent iconography.
 TOSCANELLI, A., 'Il liuto, con un cenno sulle intavolature' (Milan, 1922).
 WASIELEWSKI, W. J. VON, 'Geschichte der Instrumentalmusik im 16. Jahrhundert' (Berlin, 1878).
 WOLF, J., 'Handbuch der Notationskunde. II. Tabulaturen' (Leipzig, 1919).
 ZUTH, JOSEPH, 'Handbuch der Laute und Gitarre' (Vienna, 1926-28).

A very great deal of information about lutenists and lute music is contained in articles in musical journals, especially in the publications of the I.M.G.

LUTE HARP. See HARP LUTE.

LUTE-HARPSICHORD (Ger. Lautenclavicymbel). An instrument called by this German name was made for J. S. Bach in 1740, strung with gut strings for the two "unison" stops and with an octave stop of wire. Its tone, when checked by a damper of cloth, was so like that of a lute as to deceive a professional lute player.¹

A. J. H.

See also Harpsichord. Lautenclavicymbel.

LUTE MUSIC.² Knowledge of the existence of vast quantities of written and printed music for the lute has for some time been fairly general, but knowledge of the music itself is still far less widespread. A good deal of the exploration in this field has been done in an antiquarian or historical spirit, and appreciation and enjoyment of the admittedly rather inaccessible store has also been severely limited by the scarcity of practising lutenists. Note-for-note interpretations of lute tablature, even when proper adjustment of the time-values has been made, are not always effective when played on the pianoforte. Failing the instrument for which the music was written, a virginal or small harpsichord probably serves best. If a guitar is used, its distinctive tone-quality somewhat alters the character of the music; the technique required is often considerable.

For convenience of treatment lute music may be divided into

- The 16th century, 1500-90.
- The Golden Age, 1590-1630.
- The Paris school, 1615-99.
- The German revival, 1660-1790.

Naturally such classification cannot be applied rigidly and music can be found which resists such definitions.

¹ See Adlung, 'Musica mechanica organoedi', II, 139, and Spitta, 'J. S. Bach' (Eng. trans.), II, 47.

² See also TABLATURE.

(a) THE 16TH CENTURY.—In the absence of written music the development of lute music before 1500 can only be conjectured. The use of the fingers to strike the strings in place of the plectrum began to come in about 1450, and this must have marked considerable progress in technique. Certainly, when in 1507–1508 Petrucci published the first printed lute music at Venice, the pieces we encounter are of an unexpectedly developed kind. Books I and II, 1507 (formerly in the Berlin State Library and now lost), contain works by Francesco Spinaccino of Fossombrone and consist of transcriptions of vocal music and ricercari. Book III has long been lost. Book IV, 1508 (Bibliothèque Royale, Brussels, Vienna State Library and Newberry Library, Chicago [incomplete copy]), is by Joanambrosio Dalza of Milan and consists mostly of dances, some of them arranged in suites: Pavana, Saltarello and Piva; many have a lively rhythm and are devoid of archaic flavour. Most of the dances have regional labels, such as “alla Venetiana”, “alla Ferrarese”, and some calate called “alla Spagnola” show a very distinctive character, which is nevertheless unlike the Spanish vihuela music of thirty or more years later. Three dance suites arranged for two lutes are especially noteworthy. The few free compositions — tastar le corde and recercar — are in the nature of improvisations. Petrucci's book of 1509, ‘Tenori e contrabassi intabulati’ by Francesco Bossiniensis, contains about 70 three-part frottole, with the soprano left for voice and the tenor and bass allotted to the lute, together with 26 short loosely constructed ricercari. (Copies in Conservatoire, Paris; Vienna, Nat. Lib.; Bibl. Colomb., Seville; Newberry, Chicago [incomplete]). A second book of this kind was published in 1516 (sole copy in the Brera Library, Milan). Belonging to this period also is the fine manuscript of Vincenzo Capirola of Brescia, which now belongs to the Newberry Library, Chicago.

A characteristic of the earlier lute music — that is, up to about 1550 — is the predominance of vocal polyphony, both sacred and secular, arranged for the lute. More than half the printed music is of this type. It is often more effective than might be imagined, and some of the freer arrangements sound very well. The lute is, on the whole, not heard at its best in successions of full chords, and the most pleasing arrangements are those in which the texture has been thinned by passages of quavers and semiquavers.

Italy was not only the first country to produce printed lute books, but during this period remained their principal source. The year 1536 saw the publication of a number of new tablature books, Castellano's ‘Intabolutura de leuto’ (the only lute book printed at Milan during the 16th century), Francesco de Milano's ‘Intabolutura di liuto’, Book I, Giulio Abondante's ‘Intabolutura’ (all in the Vienna State Library) and Adriaan Willaert's transcription of Verdelot's madrigals (B.M.).

The outstanding figure is Francesco da Milano. He was highly honoured by his contemporaries, and his compositions are still found in manuscript lute books at the end of the century. He brought great depth of thought and feeling into his fantasies, which perhaps of all the earlier lute music most deserve revival. His works were often reprinted and are also found in conjunction with those of Pietro Paolo Borrono and Perino fiorentino, between 1546 and 1566. Several books are in the B.M. Phalèse's ‘Luculentum theatrum’, 1568, and ‘Thesaurus musicus’, 1574, also contain pieces by him.

A large number of new lute books appeared in Italy in 1546. Venice was the main centre for Italian music publishing, and at least fourteen lute books came out in this year. They include Antonio Rotta, ‘Intabolutura de lauto’; D. Bianchini (Rossetto), ‘Intabolutura de lauto, Lib. 1^o’; Marc-Antonio del Pifaro, ‘Intabolutura de lauto, Lib. 1^o’; Giovanni Maria da Crema, ‘Intabolutura de lauto, Lib. 1^o’ (all in B.M.); Antonio Becchi, ‘Intabolutura’; Francesco Vindella, ‘Intabolutura’ (both in Vienna Nat. Lib.), as well as reprints of Francesco da Milano's first two books and of Abondante's works. More dance music is found in these books but, not unexpectedly, the quality is uneven and invention sometimes less sustained. Melchiorre de Barberis's fourth book appeared in 1546, and by 1549 he had ten books of tablature to his credit, not all of which survive. Among the works issued in 1547 Simon Gintzler's ‘Intabolutura’ (B.M.) is noteworthy, particularly for his ricercari. The tablature of Matelart, a Flemish musician, published in 1559, contains some of Francesco da Milano's ricercari arranged for two lutes.

Five important books of tablature by the blind lutenist Giacomo Gorzanis were published between 1561 and 1579. They include dance suites of pass' e mezzi, saltarelli and padovane, and display more originality and life than much of the dance music of this period. Another major figure in Italy was Vincenzo Galilei (father of the astronomer), whose ‘Fronimo’, 1568, 2nd ed. 1584 (B.M.), contains besides theoretical matter both original works and transcriptions of pieces by nearly all the best-known composers of the time. If Galilei himself is to be believed, these works, together with a book of tablature published in 1564 (Vienna Nat. Lib.) and such pieces as are found in manuscript, comprise only a small portion of his total output of some 1000 pieces for the lute.

Lute music was printed in Germany only slightly later than in Italy. Schlick's beautifully printed book of tablature for the lute and organ, 'Tablaturen ettlicher lobgesang und lidlein' (Tübingen, Univ., and Leipzig) was published at Mainz in 1512. Judenkünig's 'Utilis et compendiaria Introductio' (n.d., 1515-19) (Vienna Nat. Lib.) and 'Ain schöne . . . Büchlein . . . der Lautten', 1523 (Bibl. Roy., Brussels, Vienna Nat. Lib.) are fairly elementary works which reflect early practice, as Judenkünig was born about 1450. The lute books of Hans Gerle of Nuremberg, 'Musica Teusch', 1532 (B.M., Wolfenbüttel), 2nd ed. 1537 (Bibl. Nat., Paris) and 'Tablatur auff die Lautten', 1533 (B.M.), are more important. In 1536 there appeared Hans Newsidler's 'Neugeordnet künstlich Lautenbuch' (Bibl. Roy., Brussels) and Gerle's 'Musica und Tablatur'. Other works by Hans Newsidler were 'Ein newes Lautenbüchlein', 1540, 'Ein new künstlich Lautenbuch', 1544, and 'Teutsch Lautenbuch', 1556, all printed at Nuremberg. Though in German tablature, these works reflect a considerable change in taste and style. French works are included, with transcribed pieces by Jannequin, Josquin and Ghiselin, and some of the Preambels are virtually indistinguishable in style from the ricercari and fantasies of Italy and France. The list of German lute books is completed by books edited or composed by Wyssensbach (Zürich, 1550 and 1563), Tielman Susato (1551), Wecker (Basel, 1552), Drusina (Frankfort o/O., 1556 and 1573, the first being in Italian tablature), Wolf Heckel (1556, 2nd ed. 1562), Melchior Neusiedler (1574 and 1596), Ochsenkuhn (Heidelberg, 1558), Weisselius (Frankfort o/O., 1573 and 1591-92) and Sixtus Kargel (1586).

The lute books of France and the Low Countries can be conveniently considered together. The first came from the office of Pierre Attaignant, 'Dix-huit Basses Dances . . .' and 'Tres breve et familiere [sic] introduction . . .', both in 1529 (solesurviving copies Tübingen Univ. Lib.). The first book contains a total of 64 dances, including bransles, galliards and pavans, as well as two songs, while the second has six preludes, 'La Guerre', and a number of transcriptions of vocal music, some in alternative versions for lute and voice, and for solo lute. The latter are among the most successful of their kind.

In 1545 Pierre Phalèse published 'Des Chansons reduictz en tablature de luc . . .', the first of five similar books (Books I-IV in Hirsch Coll., B.M.), the last appearing in 1547. The title is rather misleading: they contain, in addition to French songs, fantasies and dances by well-known Italian lutenists, including Francesco da Milano, Pietro Paolo Borrono and Pietro Teghi. In 1552-53 Phalèse published two volumes of 'Hortus Musarum', and other large collections of lute music followed, 'Luculentum theatrum musicum', 1568, 'Theatrum musicum', 1571, and 'Thesaurus musicus', 1574.

In 1552 Albert de Ripe (Alberto da Ripa of Mantua) died. He had been lutenist to François I and Henri I of France, and his contemporary fame is reflected in the literature of the period. His pupil Guillaume Morlage edited six books of his works (5 in the Bibl. Roy., Brussels), as well as three of his own (also in Bibl. Roy., Brussels). Leroy and Ballard's fourth book, published in 1553, contains work by de Ripe, as does Phalèse's 'Thesaurus musicus'. Most of the work thus preserved consists of transcriptions of songs by Gombert, Sandrin and others, but there are a number of original fantasies and a few dance measures.

Spain produced no lute music proper, but the books for the vihuela deserve particular notice. The greatest is probably Luis Milan's 'El maestro', 1536 (B.M.), which contains a wide variety of music; the fantasies and pavans have much dignity and distinction. Besides 'El maestro' there were Narvaez's 'Los seys libros . . . de Delphin', 1538, Mudarra's 'Tres libros de música', 1546, Valderravano's 'Silva de sirenas', 1547, Pisador's 'Libro de música', 1552, Fuenllana's 'Orphenica lyra', 1554, and Daza's 'Libro de música en cifras', 1576. Three books also exist written for both vihuela and other instruments, by Luis Venegas de Henestrosa, 1557, Thomas de Sancta María, 1565 and Antonio Cabezón, 1578. The vihuelists' books are well represented in the B.M.

England contributed relatively little to the lute music of this period. The Stationers' Register shows lute books published in 1563 (John Alde), 1565 and 1567 (Ballard's 'Exhortation . . .'), but the earliest surviving work is 'A Brief and Easie Instrution [sic]' (B.M.) translated from the French of Adrien Le Roy and published in London in 1568. It contains, besides instructions on lute playing, some 28 dance tunes, mostly French, which show a certain change in style; some appear to be based on popular airs, resembling to a certain extent the English popular airs which appear in manuscript lute books of the end of the century. These relatively simple tunes sound well on the lute. In 1574 another work by Adrien Le Roy appeared in translation by 'F. Ke', 'A briefe and plaine instruction to set all musicke . . .' (B.M.), with songs by Lassus put into lute tablature and with a reprint of the instructions in the 1568 book, but without the music.

A persistent feature of the 16th-century lute books is the reappearance of certain programme pieces, such as the 'Canzon degli ucelli' and, above all, the 'Battle'. The latter is divided up into sections, with imitations of trumpet calls and with funeral music for the dead. Although these pieces may appear rather unsuitable for the lute, they are not ineffective in practice and retained their popularity right into the first quarter of the 17th century.

It is interesting to consider, during this period, how far the repertory for the lute became international. By the mid-century we find transcriptions of French songs and Italian lute music published everywhere, including Spain, Germany and the Netherlands. The interchange between countries is well illustrated by the Hungarian-Polish lutenist Valentin Bakfark (Greff). His books were published at Lyons (1552), Cracow (1565), Paris (1564) and Antwerp (1569). England appears to have been largely dependent on foreign talent.

The last quarter of the century is characterized by a decline in the popularity of transcribed vocal music and by the publication of a number of large collections of music. Jobin's two books of 1572-73 contain 89 pieces of which over 50 are dance measures. Other collections, besides those of Phalèse, Waisselius and Kargel already mentioned, are those of Adriaensen (Hadrianus) (1584, 1592) and Denss (1594). Original composers include Fallamero (1584) and Krengel (1584). But the close of the century saw also some of the most brilliant writing for the lute.

(b) THE GOLDEN AGE.—This term conveniently covers the forty or so years from 1590, when lute music of the highest order appeared. In Italy the lute books of Gio. Antonio Terzi, 1593 and 1599 (both in Bibl. Naz., Florence) and Simone Molinaro with G. B. della Gostena, 1599 (B.M., Cambridge Univ. Lib. and Bibl. Naz., Florence), and, to a much lesser extent, of Gio. Maria Radino, 1592 (Ist. Mus., Florence), show elegance, clear rhythm and modern harmony. But Italy, after having led the way for so long, did not share to any great extent the achievement in this period of England and France. From 1600 onwards the lute in Italy was being displaced by the theorbo and chitarra. Kapsberger wrote between 1604 and 1640 for both lute and chitarra. Alessandro Piccinini produced duets for lute and chitarra in 1623, and more of his work was edited by his son, L. M. Piccinini, in 1639. A little more music was produced for the solo lute by B. Montana, 1643, and B. Gianoncelli, 1650. But the golden age of the lute in Italy had really ended about 1600, and from 1680 onwards no more lute music is found apart from concerted music for the theorbo or theorbo-lute.

In France the air de cour, graceful solo song with lute accompaniment, which had first made its appearance in Adrien Le Roy's 'Livre d'airs de cour', 1571, reached its highest development in the numerous song books of Tessier, Bataille, Boësset, Ballard, Moulinié and, finally, Richard (1637). For the lute itself Francisque's 'Trésor d'Orphée', 1600 (Bibl. Nat., Paris), is important. It contains 71 pieces, mostly dances, the majority written for the vieil accord, a few à cordes avallées. Even more notable is J. B. Besard's anthology 'Thesaurus harmonicus', 1603 (B.M.). Nearly all the great lutenist composers of the late 16th century are represented here, including John Dowland, Bakfark, Albert Dlugorai, Diomedes of Venice, Alfonso Ferrabosco, Jean Edinthon and others. Nearly all forms of lute music are found among its 403 pieces, including 37 preludes, 40 fantasies, madrigals, villanelles (some for 3 voices with lute accompaniment by Luca Marcenzio), songs, airs and dances of all kinds. There is a section for the lute tuned à cordes avallées. Besard produced another shorter collection, 'Novus partus', in 1617 (Bibl. Naz., Milan, and Strasbourg Univ. Lib.). Nicolas Vallet's 'Le Secret des Muses', 1618-19 (B.M., Paris Conserv.), contains, in addition to solo music, pieces arranged for two, three and four lutes.

The golden age in England was brilliant but short-lived. Through E. H. Fellowes's notable edition most of the thirty-odd surviving books of airs published between 1597 and 1622 are fairly well known. At its best the English air is a perfect blend of lyric poetry and music, and among all the composers John Dowland stands out as the greatest. Dowland's solo music for the lute, however, equally establishes him as the leading figure. Most of his work is found scattered among the great manuscript collections that are characteristic of English lute music of this period, for, unlike the rest of Europe, England produced relatively little printed lute music. The main printed works are Barley's 'New Booke of Tabliture', 1596, Robinson's 'Schoole of Musicke', 1603 (his 'Medulla musice' of 1603 is lost) and Robert Dowland's 'Varietie of Lute-lessons', 1610. Only part of the last is, however, English music. (All three works in the B.M.) The most important collections of manuscript lute books are those of the Cambridge University Library and the B.M.; the Folger Shakespeare Library at Washington, Trinity College, Cambridge, Edinburgh University Library, Marsh's Library in Dublin and the National Library of Wales possess valuable lute books, and there are others in private hands. Among the composers were Anthony Holborne, who also published music for the cittern and viol, Cutting, Batchelor, John and Robert Johnson, Allison, Rosseter and Pilkington.

A feature of English lute music of this period which deserves special mention is the popular tune. Such tunes are found both in simple arrangements and in more elaborate variations, both very effective on the lute. Thomas Mace's description, written over seventy years later, cannot be bettered: he says they were "as sung in the streets, including very excellent and well contrived pieces, of neat and spruce air". They are found in a number of manuscripts, but Ballet's Manuscript (Trinity Coll., Dublin), used by Chappell in his 'Old English Popular Music', is the richest source. The Dallis Manuscript (also T.C., Dublin) is a large, more catholic collection which includes much foreign music, from Petrucci's second book, 1507, onwards.

With the death of John Dowland in 1626 the burst of creative genius, which produced the mass of English lute music that is one of the glories of the age, inexplicably faded away. The music may have remained popular for a few years longer, but it was not significantly added to.

In Germany and the Low Countries there was no corresponding production of original work, but some notable collections were published. Johann Rude's two books of 'Flores musicae' came out at Heidelberg in 1600, and van den Hove of Antwerp produced his collections between 1601 and 1616. Elias Mertel's 'Hortus musicalis novus' and G. L. Fuhrmann's 'Testudo Gallo-Germanica' are both large collections and include pieces by Dowland. Other collections are those of Reymann, 1613, and Laelius, 1617, and, in manuscript, of Thysius, c. 1600 (Leyden Univ.), Hainhofer, 1603 (Wolfenbüttel), Fabritius, 1613 (Royal Lib., Copenhagen) and a manuscript in the Germanisches Museum, Nuremberg. The last printed collections seem to be the 'Thesaurus gratiarum', 1622, of J. D. Mylius and the 'Nederlandsche Gedenck-Clanck', 1626, of A. Valerius, the latter including music for cittern as well as lute. All these anthologies are rich sources of "golden-age" music.

(c) THE PARIS SCHOOL.—The new school of lutenists which dominated most of the 17th century seems to have been founded early in that century by Ennemond Gaultier and his relation Denis Gaultier (the elder). Over fifty other lute music composers are known, including Pierre Gaultier, Jacques Gaultier, who was at the English court from 1619 to 1648, Du But, Du Fault, Gallot, Saint-Luc and Mouton. Perhaps the most important composer was Denis Gaultier (the younger), a pupil of Charles Bocquet.

The music of this school is characterized by a striving for picturesque expression, a delicate texture and a free use of ornament. A parallel can be found in contemporary literary taste. Exactly to what extent the use of ornament differed from earlier practice it is difficult to say. The lutenists of the golden age certainly used many graces of play, mostly inserted at the performer's discretion. The use of symbols to denote ornaments by the Paris lutenists is as confusing and inconsistent as in earlier music, and the common accusation levelled at the Paris school of over-use of ornament may be due to the fact that the symbols are generally more freely used than formerly in written notation, rather than to much increased use of graces in actual play. New tunings were employed, both in the fingered strings and in the basses. Very little music of this school appeared in print, but manuscript collections are numerous and are found in most of the leading libraries. The suite now appears in much more developed form: a prelude followed by allemande, courante and sarabande, varied by the insertion or addition of various other dances including the gigue, bourrée, gavotte, chaconne, etc. There was little real descriptive composition: fanciful titles were often given to quite ordinary pieces in dance time.

The main works of Denis Gaultier (the younger), 'Pièces de luth sur trois différens modes nouvelles', 1664, and 'Rhétorique des Dieux' (a MS), have been republished by the French Musicological Society. Jacques Gallot's 'Pièces de luth' appeared in 1670. Perrine in 1679 produced his 'Livre de musique pour le lut' and in 1680 'Pièces de luth en musique', in which he tried to introduce music in staff notation instead of tablature. The swan-song of the Paris school was Charles Mouton's 'Pièces de luth sur différents modes', issued in two books in 1699 and containing suites off from four to eleven movements, as well as some minuets from Lully's operas. By 1732 Titon de Tillet was able to say that in Paris there were only three or four old men who played the lute.

The Paris school is important for its influence on the keyboard music of the time. The style and texture of the lute music were often imitated as well as its ornaments, although some of the latter were not well suited to keyboard execution.

England at that time was influenced by the French lutenists. Little original lute music was produced there after 1630, but both in Mathew's 'The Lute's Apology', 1652 (sole copy County Archives, Bedford), and in Thomas Mace's 'Musick's Monument', 1676, the predominating influence of the French school can be seen, though Mace's suites do not follow the French pattern. By this time, in England, the lute had virtually become an accompanying instrument, like the theorbo.

(d) THE GERMAN REVIVAL.—While the revival itself really belongs to the early years of the 18th century, some important music had appeared in Germany rather before this. Esaias Reusner's 'Musicalischer Lustgarten' was published in 1645, followed by his son's 'Delitiae testudinis', 1667, reprinted 1668 and 1697, and 'Neue Lauten-Früchte', 1676. Some of the Reusners' work has been reprinted in 'Das Erbe deutscher Musik'. J. Büttner's 'Pièces de lute' appeared in 1682. Belonging to the revival proper is P. L. Lesage de Richée's 'Cabinet der Lauten', (1695-?1715), containing work by Comte de Logy. J.-T. Herold's 'Harmonia quadripartita', 1702, is also for solo lute. Some concerted music for the lute also appeared. J. G. Weichenberger's 'Lauthen Concert', 1700, contains six Partien for lute, violin and bass, W. L. von Radold's 'Die aller treueste Freindin', 1701, has works for two lutes, violin, viola da gamba and bass, while J. M. Kühnel's concertos and J.-P. Guzinger's 'Sinfonie da camera' include pieces for lute and transverse flute. The B.M. possesses an incomplete concerto for lute and viola d' amore by Vivaldi (in MS). Haydn not only wrote chamber music with a part for the lute (some is lost), but also performed on the instrument himself.

Four suites, two preludes and two fugues for solo lute by J. S. Bach survive in manuscript; not all, however, seem to have been written primarily for the lute. He also used the instrument for accompaniment, as did Handel. Perhaps the greatest lutenist of the period is Sylvius Leopold Weiss, who was a friend of Bach's. His works were not published, but the B.M. is fortunate in possessing a substantial amount of his music in manuscript. Some has been reprinted in 'Das Erbe deutscher Musik'. Other important lutenists of the last period were E.-G. Baron, Adam Falkenhagen and David Kellner.

By the middle of the 18th century the revival was virtually spent. Apart from concerted music by the Kohaut brothers, with important parts for the lute, the tendency was now to adapt partsongs and operatic arias, which, however well done, can only be of secondary value.

CONCLUSION.—For three centuries the music of the lute occupies an important place in the history of music. But apart from its interest from the historical point of view, much of it will be found most rewarding to those who take the trouble to uncover it, and, in spite of the amount of work which has already been done, the store is so vast that new treasure can still be extracted.

M. W. P.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ANGLÈS, HIGUINI, 'La música en la corte de Carlos V', with transcription of Luis Venegas's 'Libro de cifra', 1552 (Barcelona, 1944).
 APEL, W., 'Early Spanish Music for the Lute and Keyboard' (M.Q., XX, 1934).

- BAL, J., 'Fuenllana and the Transcriptions of Spanish Lute Music' ('Acta Musicologica', XI, 1939).
 BOETTICHER, WOLFGANG, 'Studien zur solistischen Lautenpraxis des 16. und 17. Jahrhunderts' (Berlin, 1943).
 BRUGER, H. D., 'J. S. Bachs Kompositionen für die Laute' (Wolfenbüttel, 1925).
 'Schule des Lautenspiels' (Wolfenbüttel, 1926-28).
 CHILLESOTTI, O., Article in 'Encyclopédie de la Musique et Dictionnaire du Conservatoire' (fasc. xx-xxii, Paris, 1912).
 (ed.) 'Biblioteca di rarità musicali', Vols. I, V, VII, VIII & IX (Milan, n.d.).
 'Da un codice "Lautenbuch" del quinquecento' (Leipzig, 1890).
 'Di Hans Newsidler e di un' antica tavolatura tedesca di liuto' (Riv. Mus. It., I, 1894).
 'Giacomo Gorzanis, liutista del quinquecento' (Riv. Mus. It., XXI, 1914).
 'Il 1° libro di liuto di V. Galilei' (Riv. Mus. It., IX, 1902).
 'Lautenspieler des 16. Jahrhunderts' (Leipzig, 1891).
 'Note circa alcuni liutisti' (Riv. Mus. It., IX, 1902).
 'The Lutenist Francesco da Milano' (in Italian) (S.I.M.G., IV, 3, 1903).
 CUMMINGS, W. H., 'Thomas Mace' (Proc. Mus. Ass., Vol. XXXV, 1908-9).
 DART, THURSTON, 'Simone Molinaro's Lute-book of 1599' (M. & L., XXVIII, 1947).
 'Das Erbe deutscher Musik': 'Reichsdenkmäler', XII: German lute music of the 17th and 18th centuries, E. Reussner & S. L. Weiss (Brunswick, 1939).
 DIECKMANN, J., 'Die in deutschen Lautentabulaturen überlieferten Tänze des 16. Jahrhunderts' (Cassel, 1931).
 DODGE, JANET, 'Les Airs du cour d'Adrien Le Roy' (S.I.M.G., IX, 1907).
 'Lute Music in the XVI and XVII Centuries' (Proc. Mus. Ass., Vol. XXXIV, 1908).
 'Ornamentation as Indicated by Signs in Lute Tablature' (S.I.M.G., IX, 3, 1907).
 'The Lutenists and Lute-Music in England' ('Euterpe', Book VII, 1907).
 EITNER, ROBERT, (ed.) 'Arnold Schlick: Tabulaturen etlicher lobgesang und liddlein uff die orgeln und lauten' (reprint) (M.f.M., XVIII, 1886).
 'Zwei Lautenbücher von 1536 und 1566' (M.f.M., III, 1871).
 ENGEL, E., 'Die Instrumentalformen in der Lautenmusik des 16. Jahrhunderts' (Leipzig, 1915).
 FELLOWES, EDMUND H., 'The English School of Lutenist Songwriters' (London, 1920-32).
 FITZGIBBON, H., 'The Lute Books of Ballet and Dallis' (M. & L., XI, 1930).
 FLEISCHER, OSCAR, 'Denis Gaultier' (V.M.W., Vol. II, Leipzig, 1886).
 FRATI, L., 'Liutisti e liutai a Bologna' (Riv. Mus. It., XXVI, 1919).
 GERHARTZ, K., 'Neuausgaben alter Lautenmusik' (Z.M.W., VIII, 1926).
 GIESBERT, J., 'Klassiker des Lautenspiels—I. Fantasien und Tänze aus der Blütezeit der Lautenmusik' (Bonn, 1925).
 GOMBOSI, OTTO, 'Der Lutenist Valentin Bacfark' ('Ungarische Jahrbücher', Vol. III, Budapest, 1935).
 GRIMM, H., 'Die Frankfurter Lautentabulaturen' ('Meister der Renaissance Musik', I & III).
 GULLINO, G., (ed.) 'Gio. Battista della Costena: Intavolatura di liuto—fantasie e canzoni' (Florence, 1949).
 (ed.) 'Gio.-Maria Radino: Intavolatura di balli per sonar di liuto' (Florence, 1949).
 (ed.) 'Simone Molinaro: Intavolatura de liuto, libro 10' (Florence, 1940).
 HAFNER, R., 'Lautenstücke des Denis Gaultier' (Freiburg, 1938).
 HARASZTI, E., 'V. Bakfark' (Rev. Musicol., X).
 KOCZIRZ, A., 'Der Lutenist Hans Judenkünig' (S.I.M.G., VI, 2, 1905).
 'Oesterreichische Lautenmusik im 16. Jahrhundert' (D.T.O., XVIII, 2, 1911).
 'Oesterreichische Lautenmusik zwischen 1650 und 1720' (D.T.O., XXV, 1919).
 'Verschollene neudeutsche Lautenisten' ('Archiv für Musikforschung', III, Leipzig, 1920).

- KÖRTE, O., 'Laute und Lautenmusik bis zur Mitte des 16. Jahrhunderts' (Leipzig, 1901).
- LA LAURENCIE, LIONEL DE (ed., with B. Thibaud), 'Chansons au luth et airs du cour français du XVI^e siècle' (Soc. Franç. Musical, I, 3-4, 1934).
- 'Essai de la chronologie de quelques ouvrages de luth de l'école française du XVIII^e siècle' (Soc. Franç. Musical, 1919).
- 'Le Luthiste Jacques Gaultier' (Rev. Mus., 1924).
- 'Les Luthistes' (Paris, 1929).
- 'Les Luthistes Ch. Bouquet, A. de Francisque et J.-B. Besard' (Rev. Mus., 1925).
- 'Quelques Luthistes français du XVII^e siècle' (Rev. Mus., 1923).
- 'Un Maître de luth au XVII^e siècle; Jehan Basset' (Rev. Mus., 1923).
- LAND, J. P. W., 'Het Luitboek van Thysius' (Amsterdam, 1889).
- LINDGREN, J., 'Ein Lautenbuch von Mouton' (M.f.M., XIII, 1891).
- LUMSDEN, D., 'The Sources of English Lute-Music (1540-1620)' ('Galpin Society Journal', VI, 1953).
- 'The Lute in England' ('The Score', No. 8, 1953).
- MERIAN, W., 'Der Tanz in den deutschen Tabulaturbüchern' (Leipzig, 1927).
- MITJANA, O., Article in 'Encyclopédie de Musique et Dictionnaire du Conservatoire', fasc. lxiv (Paris, 1914).
- NEEMAN, HANS, 'Alte Meister der Laute', 2 vols. (Berlin, 1923).
- 'Die Lautenhandschriften von Silvius L. Weiss im der Bibliothek Dr. W. Wolffheim' ('Archiv für Musikforschung', X, 1928).
- NEWTON, RICHARD, 'English Lute-Music of the Golden Age' (Proc. Mus. Ass., Vol. LXV, 1939).
- OSTHOFF, H., 'Der Lautenist Santino Garri da Parma' (Leipzig, 1926).
- PRUSIK, L., 'Der Lautenist Silvius Weiss' (Vienna, 1919).
- PUDELKO, WALTHER, 'Meisterwerke alter Lautenkunst' (Books I & V, Augsburg, 1925).
- PUJOL, EMILIO, 'Alonso Mudarra: tres libros de música en cifra para vihuela. Sevilla, 1546' (Barcelona, 1949).
- 'Luis de Narbæz: los seys libros del Delphin de música de cifra . . . 1538' (Barcelona, 1945).
- QUITTARD, H., 'A. Francisque: Le Trésor d'Orphée, 1600', transcribed for pianoforte (Paris, 1906).
- Article in 'Encyclopédie de Musique et Dictionnaire du Conservatoire', fasc. xxx (Paris, 1913).
- 'The Hortus Musarum of 1552-53' (S.I.M.G., VIII, 2, 1907).
- RADECKE, E. L. S., 'Das deutsch-weltliche Lied in der Lautenmusik des 16. Jahrhunderts' (V.M.W., VII, 1891).
- RIEMANN, H., 'Das Lautenwerk des Miguel de Fuenllana, 1554' (M.f.M., XXXVII, 1895).
- SCHÉURLEER, D.-F., 'Het Luitboek van Nic. Vallet' ('Tijdschrift der Vereniging voor Noord-Ned. Muziekgeschiedenis', V, 1889).
- SCHRADE, LEO, 'Das Problem der Lautentabulatur-Übertragung' (Z.M.W., XIV, 1931-32).
- 'Die Lautenmusik im 16. Jahrhundert' (A.M.Z., LIV, 3, 1928).
- (ed.), '“El Maestro” von Luis Milan' ('Publikationen alterer Musik', Vol. II, Leipzig, 1927).
- SIMON, A., 'Die Lautenmusikbestände der Kon. Bibliothek in Berlin: III. Kongressbericht der I.M.G.' (Vienna, 1909).
- STRAETEN, EDMOND VAN DER, 'Jacques de Saint-Luc, luthiste athenais du XVII^e siècle' (Mainz, 1887).
- TAPPERT, W., 'Bachs Kompositionen für die Laute' (Berlin, 1901).
- 'Die Lautenbücher des Hans Gerle, 1533' (M.f.M., XVIII, 1886).
- 'Esajas Reusner' (M.f.M., XXXI, 1900).
- 'Zur Geschichte des französischen Lautentabulatur' (A.M.Z., XIII, 1886).
- TESSIER, A., (ed.), 'La Rhétorique des Dieux et autres pièces de luth de D. Gaultier' (Soc. franç. Musical, I, 6 (facsimile) & 7 (transcription) (Paris, 1932-1933).
- TORNER, E. M., 'Colección de vihuelistas españoles del siglo XVI', Vol. I (Madrid, 1923).
- TREND, J. B., 'Luis Milan' ('Hispanic Notes and Monographs', Oxford, 1925).
- 'The Music of Spanish History to 1600' (ibid., Oxford, 1926).

VERCALY, ANDRÉ, 'Gabriel Bataille et son œuvre personnelle pour chant et luth' (Rev. Musical, XXIX).

VOLKMANN, H., 'Sylvius Leopold Weiss: der letzte grosse Lautenist. Biographische Skizze' ('Musik', VI, 17, 1906).

WARLOCK, PETER, 'Lachrimae or Seven Tears' (by John Dowland) (Oxford, 1927).

'The Lute Music of John Dowland' (London, 1928).

'The English Ayre' (Oxford, 1926).

WASILEWSKI, W. J. VON, 'Geschichte der Instrumental-Musik im 16. Jahrhundert' (Berlin, 1878).

WOLF, J., 'Handbuch der Notationskunde', Vol. II (Leipzig, 1919).

LUTENIST. A lute-player. In the 16th and 17th centuries lutenists or, as they were sometimes called, "lewters" or "luters", invariably formed part of the musical retinue of kings and princes, and one at least was commonly attached to the households of nobles and landed gentry. As late as 8 Aug. 1715 a lutenist's place was created in the Chapel Royal of St. James's, and John Shore was appointed to it, holding it until his death in 1752, when it was given to John Immyns, who filled it until his death in 1764. The office afterwards became a sinecure and was eventually annexed to the Mastership of the Children as a means of increasing the stipend. It continued until the death of William Hawes in 1846, when it was abolished. W. H. H.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BRUGER, H. D., 'Alte Lautenkunst aus drei Jahrhunderten' (edited), 2 vols. (Berlin, 1923).

FELLOWES, EDMUND H., 'The English School of Lutenist Song Writers' (ed.), 24 vols. (London, 1920-32).

KOCZIRZ, A., 'Oesterreichische Lautenmusik im 16. Jahrhundert' (D.T.O., XVIII, ii).

LA LAURENCIE, LIONEL DE, 'Les Luthistes' (Paris, 1928).

MAIRY, A., LA LAURENCIE, L. DE & THIBAUT, G., 'Les Chansons au luth et airs de cour français du XVI^e siècle' (ed.) (Paris, 1930).

LUTHER, Martin (b. Eisleben, 10 Nov. 1483; d. Eisleben, 18 Feb. 1546).

German reformer and hymnologist. For the main facts of his life other sources must be consulted, his relation to music, and especially to hymns and church services, being alone relevant here. It was after his departure from the Wartburg near Eisenach, on 22 Mar. 1522, that he began to occupy himself with projects for the reform of the services of the Church, among which his alterations in the musical parts of the Mass led to important results. There is ample evidence that German hymns were sung during the service before Luther's alterations; but, if not the actual founder, there is no doubt that he was the establisher of congregational singing. In his first 'Formula Missae' (1523) Luther objects to the singing of long graduals and recommends that the choice of certain hymns should be left to the priest. The reformer had long cherished the idea of a German Mass, and during the latter part of the year 1524 he was occupied with arranging that service. In order to help him in the musical part of his work he summoned to Wittenberg two able musicians, Conrad Rupff, Kapellmeister to the Elector of Saxony, and Johann Walther, cantor at the court of Frederick the Wise at Torgau. To the latter we are indebted for much information about Luther as a musician.

Walther says that at this time he stayed with Luther at Wittenberg for three weeks, and that the reformer himself set to music several Gospels and Epistles as well as the words of Consecration, inventing the tunes with the aid of his flute, while Walther noted them down. Luther used also to discuss the eight church modes, giving the Epistle to the 8th tone and the Gospel to the 6th. "For", said he, "Christ is a gentle Lord, and His words are lovely; therefore let us take the 6th tone for the Gospel; and since St. Paul is a grave apostle, we will set the Epistle to the 8th tone."

The result of these labours was the publication of the 'Order of the German Mass', which contained the following alterations. Instead of the introit there was ordered to be sung a hymn or German psalm ('Ich will den Herrn loben' or 'Meine Seele soll sich rühmen'). Then followed the Kyrie Eleison, sung three times (instead of nine). After the Collect and Epistle a German hymn ('Nun bitten wir den heil'gen Geist' or another) was sung, and after the Gospel, instead of the Latin Creed, the German ('Wir glauben all'). The sermon then followed, and after this a paraphrase of the Lord's Prayer and the exhortation to communicants. After the Consecration was sung 'Jesaia dem Propheten', Huss's hymn 'Jesus Christus, unser Heiland' or 'Christe, du Lamm Gottes'.

This form of service was first used on Christmas Day 1524, in the parish church of Wittenberg, but it was not published until the following year. It is evident that while introducing a more popular element into the music of the Mass, Luther did not despise the singing of a trained choir. In the 'Vermahnung zum Gebet wider den Türken' (1541) he says:

I rejoice to let the 79th Psalm, 'O God, the heathen are come', be sung as usual, one choir after another. Accordingly, let one sweet-voiced boy step before the desk in his choir and sing alone the antiphon or sentence 'Domine, ne secundum', and after him let another boy sing the other sentence, 'Domine, ne memineris'; and then let the whole choir sing on their knees, 'Adjuva nos, Deus', just as it was in the Popish Masses, for it sounds and looks very devotional.

At the same time that he was engaged in arranging the German Mass Luther was turning his attention to writing and adapting hymns to be sung during the service. In 1524 he wrote to his friend, Georg Spalatin:

I wish, after the example of the Prophets and ancient Fathers of the Church, to make German psalms for the people, that is to say, sacred hymns, so that the word of God may dwell among the people by means of song also.

In the same year (1524) the first German Protestant hymn-book appeared:

Etlich christliche Lyeder Lobgesang und Psalm dem reinen Wort Gottes gemess auss der h. gschrift durch mancherlay Hochgelerter gemacht, in der Kirchen zu singen, wie es den zum tail bereyt zu Wittenburg in yebung ist. Wittenburg [sic], 1524.

It is not certain whether Luther actually arranged this book; it contains only eight hymns (four of which are by him) and five tunes. During the same year several other collections appeared, and their number increased rapidly.¹ Scattered as they are through these different collections there is great difficulty in deciding what hymns are really Luther's and what are merely adaptations. The immediate popularity which these early Protestant hymns attained was immense: they were taught in the schools and carried through the country by wandering scholars, until his enemies declared that Luther had destroyed more souls by his hymns than by his writings and speeches.

On 11 June 1525 Luther was married to Catherine von Bora, formerly a nun at Nimptsch in Saxony. This marriage proved a most happy connection, and the letters of his friends abound with descriptions of the domestic felicity to which it gave rise. We are told that after supper he used to sing motets and hymns with his children and friends, his favourite composers being Senfl and Josquin des Prés, the works of the latter of whom he particularly admired. Luther possessed a fine deep voice and played both the flute and lute, the latter so well as to attract the attention of passers-by as he journeyed to Worms. It has been said that he wrote motets himself, but there is no proof of this and it is probably a mistake arising from the existence, in the Munich Library, of a collection of motets with a preface by the reformer.

In 1538 Luther wrote a short treatise in praise of music; a poem by him on the same subject (entitled 'Frau Musika') also exists.

The following is a list² of hymns the words of which were written or arranged by Luther, together with their dates, so far as it has been possible to ascertain them:

I. TRANSLATIONS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF LATIN HYMNS

1. 'Jesus Christus unser Heiland' (1524). From John Huss's hymn 'Jesus Christus nostra salus'.
2. 'Verleih uns Frieden gnädiglich' (1529). From 'Da pacem Domine', an antiphon of the 6th or 7th century.
3. 'Christum wir sollen loben' (1524). From a Christmas hymn by Coelius Sedulius (5th cent.), 'A solis ortus'.
4. 'Der du bist drei' (1543). From 'O Lux beata', an Epiphany hymn of the 5th century.
5. 'Herr Gott, dich loben wir' (1529). From the 'Te Deum'.
6. 'Komm, Gott, Schöpfer' (1524). From the 'Veni Creator'.
7. 'Komm, heiliger Geist' (1524). From the 'Veni sancte Spiritus' attributed to King Robert of France, 997.

¹ See CHORALE.

² The lists have been compiled chiefly from Koch's 'Geschichte des Kirchenlieds' (Stuttgart, 1866-77).

8. 'Nun komm der Heiden Heiland' (1524). From a Christmas hymn by St. Ambrose, 'Veni Redemptor'.
9. 'Was fürchtst du Feind' (12 Dec. 1541). From 'Hostis Herodes impie', an Epiphany hymn by Coelius Sedulius.
10. 'Wir glauben all' an einen Gott' (1524). From the creed 'Patrem credimus'.

II. AMPLIFICATIONS OF EARLY GERMAN TRANSLATIONS OF LATIN HYMNS

11. 'Gelobet seyst du' (1524). Six verses added to a 15th-century translation of the Christmas Sequence of Gregory the Great, 'Grates nunc omnes'.
12. 'Mitten wir im Leben sind' (1524). Two verses added to a 15th-century funeral hymn on Notker's Antiphon 'Media vita in morte sumus'.

III. CORRECTIONS OR ARRANGEMENTS OF EARLY GERMAN HYMNS

13. 'Christ lag in Todesbanden' (1524). From the 12th-century hymn 'Christ ist uferstanden'.
14. 'Gott der Vater wohn uns bei' (1524). From a 15th-century Litany.
15. 'Gott sei gelobet und gebenedeiet' (1524). From a sacramental hymn of the 16th century.
16. 'Nun bitten wir den heiligen Geist' (1524). From a 13th-century Whitsuntide hymn.

IV. HYMNS BASED UPON LATIN PSALMS

17. 'Ach Gott vom Himmel' (1523). Ps. XII, 'Salvum me fac'.
- 18a. 'Aus tiefer Not' (1523). First version, containing four verses. Ps. CXXX, 'De profundis'.
- 18b. 'Aus tiefer Not' (1524). Second version, containing five verses.
19. 'Ein feste Burg' (1529). Ps. XLVI, 'Deus noster refugium'.
20. 'Es spricht der Unweisen' (1521). Ps. XIV, 'Dixit insipiens'.
21. 'Es wollt uns Gott' (1524). Ps. LXVII, 'Deus miserere'.
22. 'War' Gott nicht mit uns' (1521). Ps. CXXIV, 'Nisi qui Dominus'.
23. 'Wohl dem, der in Gottesfurchte' (1524). Ps. CXXXVIII, 'Beati omnes'.

V. HYMNS BASED UPON PASSAGES OF THE BIBLE

24. 'Christ unser Herr' (1541). The Baptism of Christ.
25. 'Dies sind die heiligen zehn Gebot' (1524). The Decalogue.
26. 'Jesaja, dem Propheten' (1526). The Vision of Isaiah.
27. 'Mensch, willst du leben' (1524). Abbreviated version of the Decalogue.
28. 'Mit Fried und Freud' (1524). The 'Nunc Dimittis'.
29. 'Sie ist mir lieb' (1535). The Christian Church (Rev. vii).
30. 'Vater unser' (1539). The Lord's Prayer.
31. 'Vom Himmel hoch' (1535). The Nativity (a children's hymn).

VI. ORIGINAL HYMNS

32. 'Ein neues Lied' (1523). A hymn to the memory of two Lutheran martyrs, H. Voes and J. Esch, who were burnt at Brussels, 1 July 1523.
33. 'Erhalt uns, Herr' (1541). A children's hymn against the two arch-enemies of Christ, the Pope and the Turk.
34. 'Jesus Christus, unser Heiland' (1524). An Easter hymn.
35. 'Nun freut euch' (1523). A hymn of thanksgiving.
36. 'Vom Himmel kam' (1543). A Christmas hymn.

The following are the hymn-tunes which have been ascribed to Luther, though none with any degree of certainty:

1. 'Jesaja dem Propheten das geschah.' Appeared in the place of the Sanctus in Luther's 'Eine Weiss, Christlich Mess zu halten' (1526).

2. 'Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott.' First appeared in 'Geistliche Lieder, auff's new ge bessert zu Wittenberg. Dr. Mart. Luther, 1529.' This book was printed by Joseph Klug.

The following arrangements of this hymn appeared during Luth.'s life:

- (a) For 3 voices, with the melody in the tenor, in 'News Gesang, mit dreyen stimmen den Kirchen und Schulen zu nutz, neulich in Preussen durch Joannem Kugelmann gesetzt' (Augsburg, 1530). Hans Kugelmann was Kapellmeister to Duke Albert of Brandenburg.
- (b) For 4 voices, with the melody in the bass, in G. Rhaw's 'Neue deutschē geistliche Gesenge CXXXIII' (Wittenberg, 1544).
- (c) For 5 voices, with the melody in the tenor, by Stephen Mahu, in G. Rhaw's Hymn-book.
- (d) For 4 voices, with the melody in the bass, by M. Agricola, in G. Rhaw's Hymn-book.
- (e) For 4 voices, with the melody in the bass, by L. Hellinck, in G. Rhaw's Hymn-book.
3. 'Aus tiefer Not ruf' ich zu dir.' First appeared in the 'Geistliche Gesangbuchleyn'. Tenor (Wittenberg, 1524).
4. 'Ein neues Lied wir heben an.' First appeared in 'Enchiridion, oder Eyn Handtbuchlein eynem veltlichen Christen fast nützlich bey sich zu haben zur stetter vbuung unnd trachtung Geystlicher gesenge vnd Psalmen, Rechtschaffen vnd kunstlich vertheuscht. 1524.' Printed at Erfurt.
5. 'Es spricht der Unweisen Mund wohl.' Appeared in the 'Gesangbuchleyn' (1524).
6. 'Mensch, willst du leben seliglich.' From the 'Gesangbuchleyn' (1524).
7. 'Mit Fried und Freud ich fahr dahin.' From the 'Gesangbuchleyn' (1524).
8. 'Vom Himmel hoch, da komm ich her.' Appeared in Lotther's 'Magdeburg Gesangbuch' (1540).
9. 'Jesus Christus unser Heiland.' From the 'Enchiridion' (1524).
10. 'Nun freut euch, liebe Christen g'mein.' From the so-called 'Achtliederbuch' (1524). In Adam Dyson's Hymn-book (Breslau, 1525) it is set to the tune of 'Es ist das Heil', which was probably composed by Speratus.
11. 'Nun freut euch, liebe Christen g'mein.' From Klug's 'Geistliche Lieder' (Wittenberg, 1529).
12. 'Vater unser im Himmelreich.' In Kophyl's 'Strassburg Gesangbuch' (1537) and in Lotther's 'Magdeburg Hymn-book' (1540).
13. 'Wohl dem, der in Gottesfurchte steht.' In the 'Geistliche Gesangbuchleyn' (1524).

W. B. S.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BUSZIN, WALTER F., 'Luther on Music' (M.Q., XXXII, 1946, p. 80).
- GREW, EVA MARY, 'Martin Luther and Music' (M. & L., XIX, 1938, p. 67).
- MAHRENIOLZ, CHRISTHARD, 'Luther und die Kirchenmusik' (Cassel, 1937).
- MOSER, HANS JOACHIM, 'Die Melodien der Lutherlieder' (Leipzig, 1935).
- NETTL, PAUL, 'Luther and Music', trans. by Frida Best and Ralph Wood (Philadelphia, 1948).
- SCHNEIDER, CHARLES, 'Luther poète et musicien et les Enchiridiens de 1524' (Geneva, 1942).
- SMEND, FRIEDRICH, 'Luther und Bach' (Berlin, 1947).
- STAPPL, WILHELM, 'Luthers Lieder und Gedichte' (Stuttgart, 1950).
- WOLFRAM, GEORG, '"Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott": die Entstehungszeit und der ursprüngliche Sinn des Lutherlieds' (Berlin, 1936).

See also Ach Gott, vom Himmel. Baumgarten (hymn). Brahms (motet). Calvisius. Chorale. Cornelius (chorus). Heintz (friendship). Hindemith ('Frau Musica' for voices & insts.). Mahu (setting of 'Ein feste Burg'). Otto (S., do.). Passion Music. Senfl (letter to). Walther (J., friendship & collab.).

LUTHIER (Fr.). Originally the word for a lute maker, it has become a general term for makers of lutes and viols as well as of more modern bowed string instruments, of which the violin is chief. The derivative lutherie

(orig. lute-making) came into even more general use for instrument-making.¹

E. H. F., adds.

LUTHISTES ESPAGNOLS DU XVI^e SIÈCLE, LES. A collection of music by Spanish lutenists of the 16th century, in two volumes, edited by G. Morphy, with a foreword by F. A. Gevaert. The French text was revised by C. Malherbe and a German translation provided by H. Riemann. It was published by Breitkopf & Härtel of Leipzig in 1902. K. D.

LUTINA. See MANDORE.

LUTOSŁAWSKI, Witold (b. Warsaw, 25 Jan. 1913).

Polish composer. He studied composition with W. Maliszewski and pianoforte with J. Lefeld at the Warsaw Conservatory. His compositions include 3 Carols for solo voices, chorus and instrumental ensemble (1946); Symphonic Variations for orchestra; 3 sets of Miniature Pieces for wind instruments (1944); a Trio for oboe, clarinet and bassoon (1945); 20 Carols for voice and pianoforte (1946); 'Lacrimosa' for voice and organ.

C. R. H.

LUTYENS, (Agnes) Elisabeth (b. London, 9 July 1906).

English composer. She is a daughter of Sir Edwin Lutyens the architect, and studied viola and composition at the R.C.M. in London and later in Paris. Among her teachers were Harold Darke and Caussade. While she was still a student her ballet 'The Birthday of the Infanta', which she has since rejected, was produced by the Camargo Society at the Savoy Theatre. Other early works she no longer regards as representative were given at the Macnaghten-Lemare concerts during the 1930s. Towards the end of this period she became attracted to twelve-note technique. By 1931 she had written, under the influence of Purcell's fantasias, a Fantasy for five strings (since discarded) in which she attempted to organize "atonal" conceptions in accordance with an indigenous tradition. The attempt gave birth, unconsciously, to a twelve-note theme, and after some years, starting with the Concerto for nine instruments (1940), she used the twelve-note method in all her compositions.

Elisabeth Lutyens's music began to reach an international audience just before the second world war, when the string Quartet No. 2 (1938) was given at the I.S.C.M. Festival at Warsaw in 1939. In the following year her 'Five Pieces for Orchestra' (1939) were given at a Promenade Concert in London. During the war she was commissioned to write a march for orchestra, 'Bustle for W.A.A.F.s' (1944) and music for the R.A.F. film 'Gen'. Her 'Divertissement' for orchestra (1944) was given various performances by the R.A.F. band. Since the war she has been several times represented at I.S.C.M. festivals, with the 'Three Symphonic Preludes' (1942) at that of London in 1946, the horn Concerto (1945) at that of Amsterdam in 1948 and 'The Pit' (1947) at that of Palermo in 1949. Her 'Petite Suite' was given at a Promenade Concert in 1947 and her viola Concerto in 1950.

¹ See for instance the illustration in the article BASSOON, Vol. I, p. 486.

Elisabeth Lutyens has been a pioneer of twelve-note music in England and, with Humphrey Searle, has laid the foundations for an English national school of twelve-note composers. Although not so widely known as that of her comparable contemporaries, such as Rawsthorne and Tippett, her music commands a high regard among musicians for its integrity, its expressive power and the highly imaginative variety of its conceptions and invention. It does not obviously proclaim its dodecaphonic structure and is essentially a vehicle of the same kind of emotional expression as, say, the music of Rawsthorne, which it further resembles in its formal brevity and conciseness. Among the outstanding works from this point of view are the 'Three Symphonic Preludes', the dramatic scene 'The Pit' and the viola Concerto, all of which made a powerful impression at their London performances. The chamber music and the various chamber concertos are inevitably more subtle, but not less eloquent in their statement of the emotional and musical convictions on which this composer's art is based.

Apart from music for films and radio productions, her principal works are as follows:

BALLET

- 'The Birthday of the Infanta' (based on Oscar Wilde) (1932).
- Ballet for 9 wind insts. & perc. (1949) (see also Chamber Orchestral Works).

CHORAL WORKS

- 'Winter the Huntsman' (Osbert Sitwell), chamber cantata for chorus, horn, trumpet, cello & pf. (1934).
- 'Three Salutes' No. 3 (Milton) for tenor, chorus & orch. (1942) (for Nos. 1 and 2 see Orchestral Works).
- 'The Pit' (W. R. Rodgers), dramatic scene for tenor and bass, women's chorus & orch. (1947).
- 'Requiem for the Living' for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1948).
- 'Penelope', music drama for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1950).
- 'Bienfaits de la lune' (Baudelaire) for soprano and tenor, chorus, stgs. & perc. (1952).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Fantasy for stgs. (1937) (see also Chamber Music).
- 5 Pieces (1939).
- 'Three Symphonic Preludes' (1942).
- 'Three Salutes' (1942)
 - No. 1 for brass, stgs. & perc.
 - No. 2 for full orch. (for No. 3 see Choral Works).
- 'Petite Suite' (1943).
- 'Divertissement' (1944).
- 'Suite gauloise' (1944) (see also Chamber Music).
- Overture 'Proud City' (1945).

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

Viola Concerto (1947).

'Lyric Piece' for vn. (1951).

(See also Chamber Orchestral Works below.)

CHAMBER ORCHESTRAL WORKS

Six Chamber Concertos

No. 1 for 9 insts. (oboe, clar., bassoon, horn, trumpet, trombone, vn., viola & cello) (1939).

No. 2 for clar., tenor saxophone, pf. & stgs. (1940).

No. 3 for bassoon, stgs. & perc. (1945).

No. 4 for horn and small orch. (1945).

No. 5 for double woodwind (except oboes), 2 horns, 2 trombones, perc., stg. 4tet. & double bass (1946).

No. 6 for oboe, harp & stgs. (1948).

Ballet for 9 wind insts. & perc. (1949) (see also Ballet).
(See also Solo Voice[s] with Instrumental Ensemble below.)

CHAMBER MUSIC

Fantasy for 5 stgs. (1937) (see also Orchestral Works).

String Quartet No. 1 (1938).

String Quartet No. 2 (1938).

Partita for 2 vns. (1938).

String Trio (1939).

'Suite gauloise' for 2 oboes, 2 clars., 2 bassoons & 2 horns (1944) (see also Orchestral Works).

String Quartet No. 3 (1949).

'Concertante' for 5 players (flute & piccolo, clar. & bass clar., vn. & viola, cello & pf.) (1951).

String Quartet No. 4 (1952).

String Quartet No. 5 (1952).

String Quartet No. 6 (1952).

(See also Chamber Orchestral Works above and Solo Voice[s] with Instrumental Ensemble below.)

SOLO VIOLIN

'Aptote' (1948).

SOLO VIOLA

Sonata (1938).

SOLO VIOLONCELLO

'Prelude and Capriccio' (1949).

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

9 Bagatelles (1942).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

'The Check Book' (12 pieces for children) (1938).

'Five Intermezzi' (1942).

'Ouverture' (1944).

'Three Improvisations' (1948).

'Holiday Diary' (children's pieces) (1949).

ORGAN MUSIC

Suite (1948).

SOLO VOICE(S) WITH INSTRUMENTAL ENSEMBLE

'The Dying of Tanneguy du Bois' (Austin Dobson) for tenor, 4 horns & stgs. (1934).

4 Songs for tenor and stg. 4tet (1934)

1. O Death, rock me asleep (Rochford).

2. Die not, fond man (anon.).

3. O cruel love (Lyly).

4. A good night (Quarles).

4 French Songs for soprano & solo viola, or stg. orch., or chamber orch. (1938)

1. Mort, j'appelle de ta rigueur (Villon).

2. Voici le verd et beau May (A. de Baif).

3. La nuit froide et sombre (J. du Bellay).

4. Quand un cordier cordant (anon.).

'O saisons, O châteaux' (Rimbaud) for soprano, mandolin, guitar, harp & stgs. (1946).

'Nativity' (W. R. Rodgers) for soprano and stgs. (1951).

SONGS

6 Songs (1934-36)

1. The Deserter (Housman).

2. The night is darkening (E. Brontë).

3. The Appeal (E. Brontë).

4. Fall, leaves, fall (E. Brontë).

5. Mother, I cannot mind my wheel (W. S. Landor).

6. Fara-diddle-di-do (anon.).

'Refugee Blues' (W. H. Auden).

'As I walked out one evening' (Auden).

'Paper and Sticks' (Dylan Thomas).

'O yet forgive' (Edith Sitwell).

2 French Songs (J. du Bellay and Christine de Pisan).

3 Songs (Stevie Smith).

G. M. (iii).

LUTZ, Wilhelm Meyer (b. Männerstadt nr. Kissingen, 1822¹; d. London, 31 Jan. 1903).

German organist, conductor and composer. His father was organist and teacher of harmony to the Schoolmasters' Institute at Männerstadt. He showed a gift for the pianoforte at a very early age and when twelve played in public with the orchestra. His father removing to Würzburg, he entered the "Gymnasium" and University there, and at the same time studied music under Eisenhofer and Keller. From 1848 Lutz was settled in England, first as organist to St. Chad's, Birmingham, and St. Ann's, Leeds, and then organist and choir-master to St. George's R.C. Cathedral, London, for which he composed several masses and much other music.

Meyer Lutz also had a long and wide experience of the stage as conductor, first at the Surrey Theatre (1851-55) and from 1869 at the Gaiety Theatre. He also had the management of the operatic tours of Grisi and Mario, Pyne and Harrison, and other eminent artists. Many of his operas and operettas were favourably known in England, among them 'Faust and Marguerite' (Surrey Theatre, 1855), 'Blonde and Brunette' (1862), 'Zaida' (1868), 'Miller of Milburg' (1872), 'Legend of the Lys' (1873), a cantata entitled 'Herne the Hunter', etc., etc. More generally popular than these were the many compositions for the Gaiety Theatre in its most fashionable days. The well-known tune of the 'Pas de quatre' was by him. A string Quartet, which he wrote for Sainton's chamber concerts, was very well spoken of, and he left much music, orchestral and chamber, in manuscript.

G.

LUX, Friedrich (b. Ruhla, 24 Nov. 1820; d. Mainz, 9 July 1895).

German conductor and composer. He was a pupil of his father and of Friedrich Schneider at Dessau. He became conductor at the court opera there in 1841 and retained that post until 1850. He then went to live at Mainz, where he divided the activities of an operatic and choral conductor with those of a composer.

Lux's works include the opera 'Das Käthchen von Heilbronn', in five acts, based on Kleist's play. This was produced at Dessau on 23 Mar. 1846, and a revised version, in three acts with a prologue, was first given at Wiesbaden on 9 Jan. 1847. For not far from forty years after this Lux was content with occasional revivals of this work, and it was not until 29 Mar. 1882 that another opera of his, 'Der Schmied von Ruhla', was produced at Mainz. It was followed by a third opera, 'Die Fürstin von Athen'. Other compositions are the choral symphony 'Durch Nacht zum Licht' and other choral works, a scene from Shakespeare's 'Coriolanus' for voices and orchestra, various orchestral works, string quartets, a Trio for violin, cello and piano-forte, organ and pianoforte pieces, songs, etc.

¹ The dates 1829 and 1830 are given by various authorities, but the above is probably correct.

E. B.

Luyken, Jan. See Sigtenhorst Meyer (works on poems). Voormolen (songs).

LUYR, Adam. See AQUANUS.

LUYTHON (Luyton), Karel (b. Antwerp, c. 1556; d. Prague, Aug. 1620).

Netherlands composer. According to Burbure (see Bibl.) he was the son of Claude Luython, a native of Valenciennes who had settled at Antwerp as a teacher and published a life of Aesop and a French-Flemish dictionary. Paul Bergmans says that he was a choir-boy at Antwerp Cathedral, but there is no document to prove this. About 1566-67 he was recruited for the choir of the Imperial Chapel in Vienna, and there, in July 1571, he was presented with 50 florins and clothes by the emperor on the breaking of his voice. He may then have gone to Italy to finish his studies, but if so, he remained in the service of the imperial court, which was later described as having been continuous from that date. On 30 July 1575 he received from the emperor 20 florins for his first Mass and on 26 Feb. 1576 another 20 for a second one; and on 18 May of the same year he was enrolled as Cammernicus to the court. On the death of Maximilian II on 12 Oct. 1576 he remained in the service of Rudolph II. On 1 Jan. 1582 he became court organist with a substantial increase in his emoluments. He followed the new emperor to Augsburg in the same year and there dedicated to him his book of madrigals on 2 Sept. It was published by Gardano of Venice. Rudolph's usual place of residence was Prague, and it was there that on 23 July 1603 Luython succeeded Philippe de Monte (who had died on 3 July) as composer to the court, where he was already first organist. On 16 May 1611 he was pensioned, receiving 200 florins a year in consideration of "35 years of good service", but this was contested on the death of Rudolph II in 1612. In 1613 he was obliged to sell his harpsichord for 100 ducats to the Bishop of Breslau, and repeated demands during the following year failed to bring in his arrears, which he had to leave to his heirs in his will made on 7 Apr. 1618; but they were never paid. He was unmarried, possibly in holy orders, his heirs being his brother Claude, a teacher at Antwerp, and two sisters, Clara and Sibilla.

Luython's chief works are: one book of Italian madrigals a 5, 21 numbers (Venice, 1582); 'Sacrae Cantiones' a 6, 29 numbers (Prague, 1603); 'Lamentationes' a 6 (Prague, 1604); 'Lib. I Missarum', 9 masses a 3-7 (Prague, 1609). Of these F. Commer republished the Lamentations in Vol. XX of his 'Musica sacra' and 3 masses a 3-4 in Vols. XVIII and XIX. Ritter describes two of Luython's motets appearing in the 'Promptuarium' of Schadaeus as masterly in treatment and full in harmony. Generally speaking, Luython is remarkable as a pioneer in the use of chromatic modulation without any sacrifice of harmonic euphony or pleasing melody.

Of his instrumental works only two are preserved, one entitled a 'Fuga suavissima', which appeared in Woltz's 'Tabulatur-Buch' of 1617, and fully deserves its name. It is reproduced in Ritter's 'Geschichte des Orgelspiels', Ex. 29, and is remarkable for its union of attractive melody with a freedom of modulation into different keys after a more modern fashion. The other work is an organ ricercare in a manuscript of 1624.¹ In connection with these experiments in chromatic modulation it is interesting to be told by Michael Praetorius that he had seen, in the possession of Luython at Prague, a Clavicymbal of Vienna manufacture in which different keys were provided for two distinct semitones between each whole tone, so as to have pure major thirds, and to allow the transpositions of the church modes on any key; also two keys were inserted between the semitones E-F and B-C, for enharmonic modulation; there were thus, as Praetorius says², seventy-seven keys in the four octaves from C to c'''. J. R. M., adds.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BURBURE, L. DE, 'Charles Luyton' (Brussels, 1880).

'Charles Luyton' (S.I.M.G., IX, 4, 1908).

KOCHFL, J. VON, 'Die kaiserliche Hofmusik-Kapelle in Wien' (Vienna, 1869).

SMIJERS, A. A., 'K. Luyton als Motettenkomponist' (Vienna, 1907).

'Karel Luython' ('Tijdschrift', XI, Amsterdam, 1923).

LUZZASCHI, Luzzasco (b. Ferrara, 1545; d. Ferrara, 11 Sept. 1607).

Italian organist and composer. He was a pupil of Cyprien de Rore at Ferrara, before Rore left that city in 1558, and was afterwards first organist at the court chapel of the Duke of Ferrara, Alfonso II. He is also designated as maestro di cappella. Van der Straeten³ communicates the text of a document, relating to a composition by Rore, subscribed by Luzzaschi in 1606. Frescobaldi was his most illustrious pupil. His compositions consist of seven books of madrigals a 5, published from 1575 to 1604, but not all perfectly preserved (two books altogether missing); another book of madrigals for one, two and three sopranos, 1601; and a 'Liber I Sacrarum Cantionum' a 5, 1598, containing fourteen motets. A few other madrigals appeared in collections. In Diruta's 'Il Transilvano' there is an organ Toccata in the fourth tone, reprinted in Ritter, 'Geschichte des Orgelspiels', also two ricercari in the first and second tones.

¹ Concerning this and the 'Fuga suavissima' see Ritter, op. cit., pp. 51-52.

² 'Syntagma musicum', II, xl.

³ 'La Musique aux Pays-Bas', VI, 134.

J. R. M.

BIBL.—EINSTEIN, ALFRED, 'The Italian Madrigal' (Princeton & Oxford, 1949), passim.

LUZZO, Francesco. See LUCIO. ("Luzzo" is a mistaken spelling.)

LVOV, Alexis Feodorovich (b. Reval, 6 June 1798; d. Romanovo nr. Kovno, 28 Dec. 1870).

Russian violinist and composer. He was the son of Feodor Petrovich Lvov, an authority on church music and folksong, who succeeded Bortniansky as director of the imperial court chapel, St. Petersburg, in 1825. Before entering the army he received some musical education at home. He rose rapidly in the military service and was appointed adjutant to the Emperor Nicholas I. In 1836 he succeeded his father as director of the imperial court chapel. An excellent violinist, he was well known in Russia and Germany as a good quartet player. The permanent string quartet which he organized in St. Petersburg was celebrated for its perfection of ensemble.

Lvov composed a violin Concerto, a fantasy ('Le Duel') for violin and cello and twenty-four violin caprices. His operas 'Bianca e Gualtiero' (Dresden, 13 Oct. 1844, and St. Petersburg, 9 Feb. 1845), 'Undina' (St. Petersburg, 20 Sept. 1848) and 'Starosta Boris' (1854) had very little success. He also wrote a considerable quantity of church music, but the work by which his memory lives is the Russian national hymn, 'God save the Tsar' (words by Zhukovsky), composed in 1833. Previously to this the English national anthem had been used on state occasions. The tune is devoid of those national characteristics which endear the 'Slavica' from Glinka's opera 'A Life for the Tsar' to the hearts of musical Russians. Lvov, who suffered from deafness, retired from active service in 1867 and died on his estate near Kovno. R. N., adds.

See also National Anthems (Russia).

LYDIAN MODE. See MODES.

Lyly, John. See LUTYENS (song with stg. 4tet). Vaughan Williams ('In Windsor Forest', cantata). Wood (R., song).

LYMPANY, Moura (b. Saltash, Cornwall, 18 Aug. 1916).

English pianist. She first studied the piano-forte with Jules Dèbève of the Liège Conservatory. Then she won the Ada Lewis scholarship to the R.A.M. in London and studied there for three years with A. Coviello before going to Vienna to take lessons with Paul Weingarten. On her return to England she became a pupil of Mathilde Verne for a year and of Tobias Matthay for ten more years. Meanwhile she had given her first concert when she was twelve years old, at Harrogate with Basil Cameron. While she was at the R.A.M. in London she won the Challen Gold Medal and also the Hine Gift for composition. In 1948 she was made an F.R.A.M.

Moura Lympany has toured both in North and South America as well as in Australia and New Zealand, and plays much in London and many provincial towns of Great Britain. She has made a number of records and has broadcast many times. She is perhaps most widely known for her performances of the Schumann, Grieg and Rakhmaninov concertos; but no work is too difficult for her to undertake, and she has done much to make the works of modern composers better known, especially the Concerto by John Ireland. M. K. W.

Lyndesay, (Sir) David. See Thorpe Davie ('Thrie Estatis', incid. m.).

LYNE, Felice (b. Slater, Mo., 1891; d. Allentown, Pa., 1 Sept. 1935).

American soprano singer. She studied at first at Allentown and then went to Paris to work under Marchesi, d'Aubigné and Jean de Reszke. She made her début on the stage at Hammerstein's new London Opera House in 1911, as Gilda in 'Rigoletto', but when that short-lived venture came to grief she toured the English provinces with the Quinlan Opera Company. Later she joined the Opera at Boston, Mass., and she also appeared as singer in some of Anna Pavlova's ballet performances.

E. B.

LYON, James (b. Manchester, 25 Oct. 1872; d. Australia, 25 Aug. 1949).

English composer. He was chiefly self-taught, but took the Mus.D. degree in 1905 and later taught composition at the Midland Institute School of Music, Birmingham, when Bantock was principal of the institution.

Lyon's works include the operas 'The Palace of Cards', 'Stormwreck', 'Fiammetta' and 'La sirena', the ballets (or "melomimes") 'Toinette', 'The Necklace' and 'Madame s'amuse'; 'Gwalia', 'Poems on Manx Tunes', 4 suites and prelude 'Aucasin and Nicolette' for orchestra; 'Idyll' for string orchestra; 'Ballade' for violin and orchestra; Fantasy for string quartet, Trio for violin, cello and pianoforte; organ and pianoforte pieces; songs, etc. E. B.

LYRA (or Lira) (1). A name given in medieval times to (1) a rebec class of instrument played viol-wise and (2) the hurdy-gurdy. We read of the first in an Arabic writer named Ibn Khurdādhbih (d. c. 912) who, speaking of Byzantine instruments, said that the lirā of the Rūm was made of wood and was similar to the rabāb of the Arabs, but had five strings.¹ This seems to have been the lira outlined by Gerbert¹, although his dating (9th century) has been shifted to the 12th century. The instrument appeared even earlier (11th century), in precisely the same configuration, with two double strings but no bow.² In a 12th-century Strasbourg manuscript it occurs in a similar predicament.³ In the same century it is shown played violin-wise.⁴ This lira flourished in Europe side by side with the more elongated Moorish rubebe or rebec with a parchment belly. It continued in use by the Greeks until recent years, and even in the 18th century had not changed its older form.⁵ The Turks borrowed it from the Greeks in the 15th century and sometimes used the one-string instrument. Nejáti (d. 1509), their poet, recalled this rabâb with its "thousand airs on one string". Under the name kamâncha it is still in favour with them, although the Egyptians have called it the arnaba; but its shape and sound-holes are still those of the medieval lira. H. G. F.

¹ Al-Mas'ūdī, 'Les Prairies d'or', VIII, 91.

See also Kamâncha. Rabâb. Rebec.

LYRA (2). (Ger. Stahlspiel). A portable glockenspiel used in army bands since the disappearance of the Turkish Crescent. It consists of a lyre-shaped metal frame to which are attached tuned metal bars in the conventional two rows. In British army bands its notes are invariably featured in the trio of the 'Christchurch Bells', which is generally used as the "church call". It is said that the lyra was introduced into Britain when the Belgian Guides Band came to this country in 1859, but the instrument was already in use by the Royal Artillery Drums and Fifes before 1854, although the name "lyra", used also in Dutch and Russian, may have been derived from the Belgians. It is beaten with a metal striker held in the right hand, while the lyra itself is held by the left hand although its foot is supported by means of a socket in a leathern sling worn round the neck. H. G. F.

BIBL. — Farmer, H. G., 'Papers on Military Music', p. 46 (London, 1948).

See also Lozhky. Stahlspiel. Turkish Crescent.

LYRA BARBERINA. See DONI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA.

LYRA DA BRACCIO. See LIRA DA BRACCIO.

LYRA DA GAMBA. See LIRA DA GAMBA.

LYRA VIOL (Ital. viola bastarda). A bass viol (viola da gamba) of small proportions, designed for a special class of chamber music. The chief characteristics of this music are (1) a free use of chords and (2) a mingling of bowed and plucked techniques. Its vogue occurred during the 17th century, and it acquired particular popularity in England.

The instrument was constructed in two forms:

¹ 'De Cantu', II, pl. 32.

² Galpin, 'Old English Instruments', pl. 21.

³ Kinsky, 'History of Music in Pictures', pp. 35-37.

⁴ Galpin, op. cit., p. 15. ⁵ Niebuhr, I, pl. 26.

(a) The standard form (PLATE 66, Vol. VIII, p. 146 i, No. 8) is precisely that of the standard viola da gamba, except in being particularly small for its pitch, with a sounding-length of string from nut to bridge of only 23 ins. to 25 ins., compared with a standard of perhaps 27½ ins. John Playford refers to the lyra not as a separate instrument, but as "This way of playing on the Violl".⁶ He distinguishes it solely by the use of tablature for the notation of its music:

an Imitation of the Old English Lute or Bandora, whose Lessons were prickt down by certain Letters of the Alphabet, upon Six Lines or Rules; which 6. lines did allude to the 6. course of strings upon those Instruments, as they do now unto the 6. Strings of the Viol.

The choice of a small size resulted in two practical advantages: the stretch of the fingers of the left hand is diminished, so that agility in catching chords is facilitated, while the body of the instrument itself lies farther out of the way of the high positions of the hand; the strings are slacker for a given pitch and thickness, so that the higher notes are particularly clear and easy to sound, and the entire instrument is particularly ready of speech. The second advantage is inevitably paid for by weaker bass notes, where longer strings at higher tension, together with a resonating-chamber of larger capacity and therefore lower resonance, are to be desired. It is for this reason that "consort" basses intended primarily for chamber music were built large, while "division" basses for solo music employing the full range of the viol from its lowest to its topmost registers were a little smaller. The still smaller size of the "lyra" basses — scarcely larger than a big tenor viol — may be attributed to the desire for the utmost facility and resonance in playing the full chords so typical of the instrument.

The choice of tablature for the notation of lyra music derived indirectly from the same cause. In order to increase the variety of chords which may be played without undue difficulty, the tuning of the lyra viol is itself variable. To read from staff notation on an instrument of variable tuning is unnecessarily confusing. For this purpose, tablature has the advantage of showing, not the notes themselves, but the position of the player's fingers. As soon as the strings have been set to the tuning for which the tablature is intended, the player can ignore the tuning and follow the positions indicated without reference to the pitch. The tuning intended should be, and in printed editions normally is, shown at the beginning of the piece; where this is omitted it must be recovered laboriously by trial and error before the tablature can be read. The letter a indicates the unstopped or open string corresponding to the line (or space between lines) on which it is set; the letters b, c, d, e, f, g, h indicate each the fret, and therefore the semitone, one higher than the preceding; the letters i, k, l . . . further semitones stopped above the frets. The normal staff signs for crotchet, quaver, etc., or more commonly strokes with comparable tails, placed above the tablature, indicate the duration.

⁶ 'Musick's Recreation on the Viol, Lyra-way' (1661), Preface.

The tunings employed for the lyra viol include the following, where the absolute pitch of the top string (shown in tablature only relatively) is taken as d' (the normal bass-viol top string), it being clearly understood that tablature tunings show only the relative and not the absolute pitches, so that other pitches at the same relative intervals would represent them with equal correctness, with the exception of those shown by Praetorius, who gives absolute pitches.

Common lyra tunings:

D G c e a d' (normal bass-viol tuning).
 C G c e a d' (the same, with bottom string lowered a tone, as commonly in normal bass-viol parts. Given by Praetorius).
 A, D G d a d' (Praetorius).
 C F c f a d' ("Bandora set": Hume, Ferrabosco).
 A, E A e a d' (Ferrabosco).
 A, D A d a d' (Ferrabosco).
 D G d g b d' ("Harp-way Sharp": Playford).
 D G d g b \flat d' ("Harp-way Flat": Playford).
 D A d f \sharp a d' ("High Harp-way Sharp": Playford).
 D A d f a d' ("High Harp-way Flat": Playford).

The principle on which the tuning is chosen may be learnt from Thomas Salmon:

I would therefore play . . . upon some pleasant Lyra Tuning, that the most frequent Notes be always struck open, and their concords may be their nearest neighbours, and at last the whole Viol, with an unstop'd freedom, may echo forth a full Consort-stroke, usually the key of the Lesson.¹

Where all or most of the open strings are tuned to the main key of the piece a very high degree of sympathetic resonance is obtained; and this resonance is the characteristic feature of the lyra technique. The same quality of resonance makes peculiarly effective the plucked notes whose interpolation among bowed notes is associated with lyra music. This idiom recalls the old association of lute and viol in the Spanish vihuela, and reminds us that many stringed instruments of the middle ages and the early Renaissance retained some ambivalence as between the bowed and the plucked techniques. Long pizzicato passages occur in lyra music, as well as interjections of a few notes, or one note, at a time. Left-hand pizzicato is occasionally demanded.

The instrument described and depicted by Praetorius² under the name of viola bastarda corresponds with the English instrument, his name for it being attributed by G. R. Hayes³ to the variable tunings; but German music specifically designed for it has not been forthcoming, and the characteristic technique appears to have been an English development of the early 17th century. Playford, in the passage already cited, continues:

The First Authors of Inventing and Setting Lessons this way to the Violl, was, Mr. Daniel Farunt [Farrant], Mr. Alphonso Ferrabosco, and Mr. John Cooper alias Cooper; the First of these was a person of such Ingenuity for his several Rare Inventions of Instruments, as the Poliphant and the Stump, which were strung with Wire: And also of his last, which was a Lyra Viol, to be strung with Lute Strings and Wire Strings, the one above the other; the Wire Strings were conveyed through a hollow passage made in the Neck of the Viol, and so brought to the Tail thereof, and raised a little above the Belly of the Viol, by a Bridge of about $\frac{1}{4}$ an inch: these were so laid that they were equivalent to those above, and were Tun'd Unisons to those above, so that by the striking of those Strings above with the Bow, a Sound was drawn from those of Wire underneath, which made it very Harmonious. Of this sort of Viols, I have seen many, but Time and Disuse has set them aside.

(b) The above passage has been carelessly read as describing the lyra in standard form, whereas it will actually be seen to refer to a subsidiary variant invented (if Playford is correct) by Farrant. Playford does not give Farrant the credit for the lyra itself; his attribution, however, of the principle of separate sympathetic strings to an Englishman is somewhat strengthened by the circumstance that Praetorius⁴ apparently regarded them as an English peculiarity in 1618. Bacon⁵ also describes the invention of a viol with added sympathetic wire strings, but dismisses it as "of no use". The principle was subsequently reintroduced or familiarized in the viola d' amore and its bass relative, the baryton, but this last differed from the lyra and the viola d' amore alike in carrying its sympathetic strings behind the neck, where they could also be plucked.

It has been suggested, on account of the name, that the standard lyra was imitated from the contemporary lira da gamba, likewise an instrument peculiarly adapted to chords. But this is misleading. The lira da gamba has many more strings, a flatter bridge and two drone strings lying outside the finger-board; it is not a viol, but the bass of the lira da braccio, the two instruments comprising the true family of Renaissance lira, with which the lyra viol of 17th-century England has no family connection whatsoever. Strictly, the English lyra is not a distinct instrument at all, but the bass member of the viol family specially diminished (even this feature not being indispensable) and tuned and handled in a special manner, to suit a special variety of music.

R. D.

LYRE. A stringed instrument having a quadrilateral frame consisting of sound-box, two arms and a yoke. The strings, which are struck with the fingers, with a plectrum or, in ¹ 'Essay to the Advancement of Musick' (1672), p. 49.

² 'Syntagma', Vol. II (1618), ch. xxi.

³ 'Viols and Violins' (1930), p. 126.

⁴ 'Syntagma', II, 47.

⁵ 'Sylvia sylvarum', Cent. III, No. 280.

a few cases, with a bow, run from the base of the sound-box over a bridge to the yoke, where they are tuned.

In civilization the lyre is as ancient as the harp, for it was used by the Sumerians. Three specimens from the royal tombs at Ur are in London (B.M.), Philadelphia and Baghdad. They are large instruments about 3 ft. 6 ins. tall, of wood overlaid with precious metal and other ornament, and played with the fingers. All three are illustrated in Galpin, 'The Music of the Sumerians' (Cambridge, 1937). Subsequently lyres were smaller and portable. In Assyria and in Egypt, where the lyre was introduced during the second millennium B.C., it was held with the strings almost horizontal and generally played with a long thin plectrum. The yoke was curved or oblique, perhaps to allow fine adjustment of tuning by sliding a string along the yoke without untying it. The strings numbered from six to twelve. Specimens of such Egyptian lyres are in Cairo and Berlin. The kinnor, the national instrument of the ancient Jews and that upon which David played before Saul, was also a lyre of this kind (though called "harp" in the English Bible) and may have had a rounded base like the earliest lyres depicted in Greek art.

This early Greek lyre is probably that which is mentioned in Homeric poems as phorminx and citaris. In historic times the Greeks had two distinct kinds of lyre: the cithara, κυθάρα, and the lyra, λύρα.

Apollo with a Cithara, from an amphora, c. 400 B.C.
(in the B.M.)

The cithara (see fig. above), of which no specimen has survived, had a hollow box-like sound-box of wood to which plates of metal, horn or tortoiseshell could be fixed at the base (whether on the bottom, the front or the back is not clear) in order to increase the tone. The back is sometimes shown vaulted. The two arms were also hollow, adding to the resonating cavity of the instrument, and appear to have been faced with ivory, horn or similar material. The strings were gut and it is not known whether or not they were graduated in thickness. They were attached to the yoke and tuned by winding on strips of greasy ox-hide or by an ingenious way of tying round loose pegs or by yet other means. The instrument was supported by a cord loop passing round the left wrist. The left-hand fingers are usually shown pointing upwards along the strings while the right hand is shown either lowered and holding a long, bulky plectrum, or raised in the act of adjusting the strings at the yoke.

The cithara was principally a professional's instrument, and citharoedia held the highest place in the musical events at the contests. In this the performer accompanied his song with his left hand and when the voice left off struck or strummed the strings with his plectrum. (Curt Sachs, in the article cited below, mentions similar methods of performance still in use in Japan and elsewhere.) The citharoedus added to his performance facial expressions and movements of his feet, and was garbed in long robes of Asian character; the cithara was said to have originally been brought over from Asia Minor and asiatis was another of its Greek names.

The lyra was the indigenous kind of lyre, and the partial remains of one are in the B.M. The sound-box was the shell of a tortoise¹, or its imitation in wood, covered with a sound-board which was originally of ox-hide, but later of wood. Carried up from the base of the sound-box and projecting high above it were the two curving arms of horn or wood, and resting upon notches in the arms was the hardwood yoke. Its stringing was like that of the cithara, but its sound was deeper. It was associated with conviviality and with the amateur, and lyroedia included love songs, drinking-songs and suchlike. (The lyre still played in Arabia and Ethiopia bears a striking resemblance to the ancient lyra of the Greeks.)

No Greek author explains fully how these lyres were tuned. According to the widely accepted explanation of Curt Sachs² an ancient and fundamental three-string tuning was nete, mese, hypate, which are conventionally transcribed to-day as e', a, e. Next were added the paramese (b) and the paranete (d'). The sixth string was the lichanos (g), so named after the forefinger because on the earlier five-stringed lyre this g, which completed two Dorian semitone-less tetrachords, had to be obtained by stopping the e string with this finger of the left hand. Addition of the seventh string (d) brings the lyre up to the time of Terpander, victor at the Spartan games in 676 and initiator of the classic period of lyre playing. So far the tunings given are substantiated by clear statements by various ancient authors; but it was till recently believed that the next strings to be added were those which would supply the c' and the f missing on the seven-stringed lyre. Sachs, however, concludes that these two notes were regularly obtained by stopping the b and the e strings by pressing the left-hand forefinger against them close to the yoke, and that in the Greek instrumental notation, while the first row (upright) signs indicate open strings, the second row (supine) signs indicate notes obtained by sharpening a string a semitone in this way. This explains why the notes C and F (in any octave) are indicated by second-row signs in most of the surviving pieces of Greek music (e.g. in Mesomedes's Hymn to Helios). The first-row signs for C and F were reserved for use in the alternative tuning, in which the B and E strings were retuned to C and F; the first-row signs for B and E then do not occur. The third-row (reversed) signs indicated, with certain exceptions, whole-tone sharpenings by stopping, generally with the middle finger.

¹ According to the legend of Orpheus, his instrument was made of tortoiseshell; that is why the music for the tortoises in Saint-Saëns's 'Carnaval des animaux' contains a quotation (ponderously slowed down) from Offenbach's 'Orphée aux enfers'.

² 'Die griechische Instrumentalnotenschrift', Z.M.W., VI, 1924.

This technique supplied every note within the nine-note compass of the seven-stringed lyre (the enharmonic pyknon was played on the same principle as the chromatic and required no special note-signs) and further additional strings served to extend its compass, while still preserving the pentatonic structure. Thus with eleven strings, which appeared in the 5th century and made the largest standard number, the tuning would have run:

a' g' e' d' b' a g' c' d' B A.

However, the seven-stringed instrument remained the most usual throughout classical times. A quantity of pictorial evidence to illustrate the quick movement of the left hand in stopping a string is not to be expected, but nevertheless Sachs found a clear example in a painting at Herculaneum.

In late classical times the lyra vanished while the cithara multiplied into various new types, including some curious instruments portrayed in Roman sculpture. These sometimes had fingerboards, and some are so elongated that they have been described as lutes. From the middle ages¹ onwards the lyre, where it has survived in Europe, has been played with a bow, in which case either it has a finger-board² or it has not, as in the kantele of Finland and Esthonia. In the kantele the strings are stopped by touching them with the finger-tips. It is fully described by Otto Andersson.³ For further particulars of lyres, see H. Panum, 'Stringed Instruments of the Middle Ages', trans. J. Pulver (London, n.d.).

In modern Greek lyra denotes a small bowed instrument of the rebec kind with three strings.

The lyre survives in Africa as the kissar of the Sudan, Uganda and elsewhere, and in two Abyssinian forms, kerar and baganna. Both the latter have a rectangular (sometimes round) wooden sound-box covered with a sound-board of hide and with wooden arms supporting a wooden yoke round which the strings are secured by free pegs over rolls of cloth or hide.

Egyptian Lyre, c. 1000 B.C.

Abyssinian Baganna.

Both are played with a leather or claw plectrum, though sometimes the fingers are used as well, recalling the passage in 1 Samuel xvi, 23, where David plays to Saul on the kinnor "with his hand". Villoteau gives the tuning of the five-string kerar as d', g', a', b', e', and it was this writer who first scented here a possible reminiscence of ancient Greece. This tuning is, as already stated above, the probable tuning of the old five-string Greek lyre.

The baganna is a taller lyre, about 30 ins. high, more costly and used by noblemen of the country. Its tuning, according to Villoteau, is d', b', e', d', g', a', e', g', a', b'. Like the kerar it is mainly used for accompaniment to the voice.⁴ Here are two ostinato figures of song accompaniment on the kissar in Nubia⁵:

¹ See CRWTH.

² 'Strakharpn' (Stockholm, 1923); trans. 'The Bowed Harp' (London, 1930).

³ See 'La Musique éthiopienne' by M. Mondon-Vidailhet in Lavignac's 'Encyclopédie'.

⁴ Quoted from Lavignac, where they were taken (a) from Villoteau and (b) from Bull. Soc. Franç. de Musicol., 1919.

¹ For the post-classical lyre see ROTTE.

Villoteau¹ gives the second example in a slightly different form emanating from the Dongola (Sudan). The upper notes were played by the fingers of the left hand and the lower by the plectrum held, as always, in the right hand. Another method of playing, in which the plectrum is drawn across the strings while the left hand damps any string not required to sound, is described by Sachs.²

A. B.

See also Greek Music, Ancient, 5, i.

LYRE-GUITAR. A guitar, called in England the Apollo lyre, modelled on the lines of the ancient lyre, the six strings, however, being placed over a fretted fingerboard. It appeared in France towards the end of the 18th century when the classical style was in vogue (PLATE 70, Vol. VIII, p. 146 v, No. 6). The Harpo-Lyre, invented by Salomon of Besançon in 1829, has a guitar body from which rise three fretted necks united at the top, the left-hand neck having 7 chromatic bass strings, the middle neck 6 strings for accompaniment, as in the ordinary guitar, and the other neck 8 diatonic strings for melodic passages.

F. W. G.

LYRICHORD. See SOSTINENTE PIANO-FORTE.

LYRIQUE (Fr.). Although derived from a musical instrument, the Greek lyre (λύρα), this is properly a literary term, applied to a species of poetry. It is thus used exclusively in English, properly speaking, and if sometimes employed to carry a musical sense, it is so only by derivation from the French, where it has acquired such a secondary meaning.³ Thus a drame lyrique is an opera, a scène lyrique a sung dramatic scena or cantata, and the Théâtre-Lyrique in Paris was an opera-house.

E. B.

¹ 'Description de l'Égypte' (Paris, 1823).

² Curt Sachs, 'The History of Musical Instruments' (New York, 1940), p. 132.

³ It was discussed in this sense in previous editions of this Dictionary under the heading LYRIC; LYRICAL. That article has now been suppressed as having no musical relevance, except in a derivative way.

LYSBERG, Charles Samuel. See BOVY-LYSBERG.

Lyser, Johann Peter. See Bohemian Girl (Bälfe, Ger. trans.). Pixis (3, 'Sprache des Herzens', lib.).

LYTTICH, Johann (b. ?; d. Eisleben, c. 1612).

German composer. He was cantor of the church of St. Nicholas at Plauen and teacher at the college there at the time of his death. He composed instrumental pieces and several books of songs, also occasional songs, separate or in collective volumes.

E. v. d. s.

Lytton, Edward George Earle Lytton Bulwer-, Baron Lytton. See Arnold (Y., 'Last Days of Pompeii', opera). Bantock ('Eugene Aram', opera). Bendl ('Leila', opera). Cowen ('Pauline', opera). Fry ('Leonora', opera). Kashperov ('Rienzi', opera). MacDowell ('Brook', poem for pf.). Perosi (M., 'Pompeii', opera). Petrella ('Ione', opera). Rienzi (Wagner, opera). Scott (C., 2 songs). Sousa ('Last Days of P.', orch. suite). Wagner ('Rienzi', opera).

LYZARDEN (or Lyzardyne). A name given in old English records to the corno torto, the bass member of the cornett family before the serpent (an octave lower) came into use in the 17th century, when it took a tenor part.⁴ It has recently been claimed that the serpent was known in Italy some years before its "invention" by Guillaume of Auxerre (c. 1590); but if so, it is strange that neither Italian nor German writers on the instruments of their day, such as Zacconi (1592-1619), Cerone (1613) and Praetorius (1618-20), allude to it or its compass in their detailed lists. Mersenne (1635), however, figures and describes it. In an inventory of 1596 instruments called "serpents" (Schlangen) — bass, tenor and descant — are enumerated; but cornetti with the bell-end shaped as a serpent's mouth were not unknown, and their curved or wavy shape would also suggest the similarity. With reference to the use of the word "lysard" or "lizard" for a form of serpent, Wycliffe (1380) alludes to "a serpent that is called a liserd"; and, even at the present day, the legless lizards are popularly regarded as "snakes".

The lyzarden is named as a musical instrument in inventories of the 16th and 17th centuries. Both the Exeter Waits and Sir Thomas Kytson of Hengrave had cornetts and a lyzarden in their bands; while, in 1584, "one old Lyzardyne" was in the custody of the Waits of Norwich.

F. W. G.

⁴ See CORNETT.

M

M. D. (abbr. Fr. main droite; Ital. mano destra = right hand).

M. G. (abbr. Fr. main gauche = left hand).

M. S. (abbr. Ital. mano sinistra = left hand).

These abbreviations are often used in pianoforte and harp music to indicate which hand is to play a given passage in cases where this is not made obvious by the notation.

MA MÈRE L'OYE ('Mother Goose') (Suite for pf. duet and Ballet). See RAVEL.

MA TANTE AURORE (Opera). See BOIELDIEU.

MÁ VLAST ('My Country') (6 Symphonic Poems). See SMETANA.

MAA SYTSONG. See CHINESE MUSIC (MODERN).

MAAMME-LAULU. See NATIONAL ANTIEMES: FINLAND.

Maartens, B. See Schouwman (2 songs).

MAAS, Joseph (b. Dartford, 30 Jan. 1847; d. London, 16 Jan. 1886).

English tenor singer. He began his career as a chorister at Rochester Cathedral¹ and was taught singing by J. L. Hopkins, the organist there, and later by Mme Bodda-Pyne. He was for some time a clerk in Chatham dockyard, but went to Milan in 1869 and studied under San Giovanni. He made his début in London, at one of Leslie's concerts, on 26 Feb. 1871, and sang in the place of Sims Reeves, with great success. He then appeared on the stage at Covent Garden on 29 Aug. 1872 and afterwards went to America with Miss Kellogg's English Opera Company. He reappeared in London at the Adelphi Theatre under Carl Rosa, as Gontran on the production of Brüll's 'Golden Cross', 2 Mar. 1878, and was engaged by Rosa for three years as his principal tenor. His principal parts were Rienzi, Raoul in 'Les Huguenots', Wilhelm Meister in 'Mignon', Radamès in 'Aida', Faust, etc. He sang at Her Majesty's Theatre in Italian in 1880, at Covent Garden (as Lohengrin) in 1883, and was the Chevalier des Grieux on production in London of Massenet's 'Manon' on 7 May 1885.

Maas was very popular on the stage on account of his very fine voice, which was said to resemble Giuglini's, rather than for his dramatic gift, since he was a very indifferent actor. He was equally popular at all the principal concerts and at the various Handel and provincial festivals. He sang also in Paris at Padeloup's concerts, 6 Apr. 1884, and in Brussels at the Bach and Handel Festival of 1885. His last important engagement was at the Birmingham Festival of 1885, where he sang in Dvořák's 'Spectre's Bride', 27 Aug., and Stanford's 'Three Holy Children', 28 Aug., on the production of those works. Massenet's scena 'Apollo's Invitation' (Norwich Festival, 1884) was specially written for him.

A Maas Memorial Prize was established at the R.A.M. A. C., abr.

MAAS, Marcel (b. Clermont-Ferrand, 7 May 1897; d. Rode-Saint-Génèse nr. Brussels, 11 June 1950).

Belgian pianist born in France and of Dutch descent. His father was a Dutch opera singer with a fine bass voice, who sang Wagnerian parts in Belgium, France and Germany. Marcel Maas became a naturalized Belgian and studied at the Brussels Conservatoire with Arthur de Greef. After the 1914-18 war he began his international career by playing in England, the U.S.A., France, Italy, Holland, Denmark, Germany, Poland, Hungary, Greece, etc.

In 1933 Maas became professor of the pianoforte at the Brussels Conservatoire in succession to de Greef, and for several years before the 1939-45 war he taught at Mills College, Oakland, and in 1947 he gave a course at the University of Seattle.

A. L. C.

MAAS, Robert. See PRO ARTE QUARTET.

MAASKOFF, Anton (b. New York, 12 Jan. 1893).

American violinist. He studied privately, at first in New York and then for some years with Adolph Brodsky at the Royal College of Music, Manchester. A brilliant technician and a stylist, he has travelled in Europe, South America and South Africa, and has given frequent recitals in London. F. B.

MAATSCHAPPIJ TOT BEVORDERING DER TOONKUNST (Association for the Promotion of the Art of Music). The largest musical society in Holland. Founded in 1829, it has to-day some fifty branches in different places, with a membership of about 8000. Among its objects are the improvement of music teaching; the education of capable instrument makers; the performance of choral and orchestral works; the systematic encouragement of young talent; the support and pensioning of aged musicians; the collection and circulation of a comprehensive music library. An important activity of its branches is choral singing, and the great choirs under its auspices in Amsterdam and The Hague have won world-wide recognition. The per-performances of Bach's St. Matthew Passion given annually on Palm Sunday in the Concertgebouw at Amsterdam since 1899 draw large international audiences.

¹ There is a memorial to Maas in Rochester Cathedral placed there by his widow.

The Association also controls music schools in seventeen towns in Holland, among them being the Conservatories of Amsterdam, The Hague and Utrecht. In 1929 it founded, at Utrecht University, the first Chair of Musical Science in Holland.¹ Through its instrumentality also the Vereniging voor Nederlands Muziekgeschiedenis was formed in 1868. The administrative centre of the Association is in Amsterdam.

H. A.

BIBL.—DOKKUM, J. D. C. van, 'Honderd jaar muziek-leven in Holland: een geschiedenis van de Maatschappij tot Bevordering der Toonkunst bij haar eeuwfeest, 1829-1929' (Amsterdam, 1929).

Mabbe, James. See Warlock (song).

MABELLINI, Teodulo (b. Pistoia, 2 Apr. 1817; d. Florence, 10 Mar. 1897).

Italian conductor and composer. He was a student at the Istituto Reale Musicale of Florence, and when he was only nineteen years of age his opera 'Matilda e Toledo' was given at Florence (1836), with the result that the Grand Duke Leopold II gave the composer funds to study under Mercadante at Novara. His second opera 'Rolla' was given at Turin in 1840 with great success. Mabellini settled at Florence in 1843, becoming conductor of the Società Filarmonica and eventually court maestro di cappella and conductor at the Teatro della Pergola (from 1848). In 1859-87 he was professor in his old school.

His other operas were: 'Ginevra di Firenze' (Turin, 1841), 'Il conte di Lavagna' (Florence, 1843), 'I Veneziani a Costantinopoli' (Rome, 1845), 'Maria di Francia' (Florence, 1846), 'Il venturiero', with Luigi Gordigiani (Leghorn, 1851), 'Il convito di Baldassare' (Florence, 1852), 'Fiammetta' (Florence, 1857).

Two oratorios, 'Eudossia e Paolo' (Florence, 1845) and 'L' ultimo giorno di Gerusalemme' (Florence, 1848), the cantatas 'Etruria' (Florence, 1849), 'La caccia', 'Il ritorno', 'Cantata elegiaca per la morte di Bartolini' (the sculptor), 'Lo spirito di Dante' (Florence, 1865) and the hymn 'Italia' (Florence, 1847) are among his more important works, as well as a great quantity of church music.

J. A. F.-M., adds.

BIBL.—SIMONATTI, A., 'Teodulo Mabellini' (Pistoia, 1923).

Mabinogion, The. See Jones (D. J., 'Scenes' for orch.).

McARDEN, Joy (b. Amsterdam, 1906; d. Birmingham, 17 Apr. 1952).

Dutch soprano singer. She was a pupil of Roberto Tamanti, Mme Charles Cahier and Blanche Marchesi. She made her operatic début in Copenhagen and later sang at opera-houses in Paris, London, San Francisco, The Hague, etc. She was an extremely versatile artist, capable of sustaining a variety of parts in opera and of giving song recitals in a large number of languages. Her appearance in London in the production of Strauss's 'Rosenkavalier' in English at Sadler's Wells Theatre was notable, and she sang in Paris in first performances of vocal works by Ravel. Having married and settled in Birmingham, she taught singing at the Birmingham and Midland Institute School of Music, and she died there during an operation.

¹ See SMIJERS and UTRECHT.

E. B.

MACARDLE, Donald W. (Wales) (b. Quincy, Mass., 3 July 1897).

American musicologist. He was educated at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he graduated, taking the B.S. in chemistry and the M.S. in chemical engineering. He became a consulting management engineer by profession. In music he was trained privately, at Longy School, Boston, and the Juilliard Institute in New York, and finally he took a course in musicology at New York University. To gain experience in listening to music of all kinds he served on the usher staffs of Boston Symphony Hall and the Boston Opera House during his adolescence, and later he became junior music critic for a Boston newspaper and a national music magazine. To these experiences he added those of conducting amateur and semi-professional orchestras, choruses and operatic groups, and for several years he conducted weekly radio programmes, wrote for gramophone companies and lectured on music.

During the second world war MacArdle served in the U.S. Army. As a colonel in the Corps of Engineers, U.S. Army Reserve, he was stationed in London during 1944-45, taking part in choral groups and other musical activities. All his spare time in Europe was spent in research, already undertaken by him at home, in Beethoven biography and bibliography, a field in which he has become one of the leading specialists, indeed probably the most widely experienced and practised of his period. His work in this direction has resulted in a vast amount of detailed discovery and has produced the following publications, all of which add vital new information to Beethoven research:

- 'A Check-List of Beethoven's Chamber Music' (M. & L., XXVII, 1946, Nos. 1-4).
- 'Beethoven's Quartet in B flat, Opus 130' (M. Rev., 1947).
- 'An Unpublished Beethoven Letter' (Journ. Amer. Musicol. Soc., 1949).
- 'Beethoven, Artaria and the C major Quintet' (M.Q., 1948).
- 'The Family van Beethoven' (M.Q., 1949).
- 'Five Unfamiliar Beethoven Letters' (M.Q., 1951).

E. B.

Macaulay, Thomas Babington. See Dale (B., 'Horatius', overture). Speer (C., 'Battle of Lake Regillus', cantata).

MACBETH. Opera in 4 acts by Verdi. Libretto by Francesco Maria Piave, based on Shakespeare's tragedy. Produced Florence, Teatro della Pergola, 14 Mar. 1847. 1st perf. abroad, Madrid (in Italian), 20 Feb. 1848. 1st in U.S.A., New York (in Italian), 24 Apr. 1850. New version made by Verdi for the French translation by C. Nutter and A. Beaumont, produced Paris, Théâtre-Lyrique, 21 Apr. 1865. 1st perf. in England, Glyndebourne Opera House, 21 May 1938.¹

For other works based on the play see SHAKESPEARE.

MACBETH, Allen (b. Greenock, 13 Mar. 1856; d. Glasgow, 25 Aug. 1910).

Scottish organist, conductor and composer. He received his musical education chiefly in Germany, studying at the Leipzig Conservatory under F. Richter, Jadassohn and Reinecke in 1875-76. In 1880 he was appointed conductor to the Glasgow Choral Union, but he resigned the post in 1887. He was organist of various churches in Edinburgh and Glasgow. He was appointed principal of the music school connected with the Glasgow Athenaeum in 1890.

Macbeth, in spite of much occupation of his time in teaching (pianoforte and singing), wrote a number of pleasing pianoforte pieces, besides two or three orchestral movements played at the Choral Union concerts. As a song-writer he was especially successful; he also ably arranged for voices several Scots melodies and wrote some original partsongs. His cantata 'The Land of Glory' won a prize given by the Glasgow Society of Musicians and was performed in 1890. He left other cantatas, short orchestral pieces and chamber music, as well as incidental music to a play, 'Bruce (Lord of the Isles)', and an operetta, 'The Duke's Doctor'. w. h. (ii).

McBRIDE, Robert (Guyn) (b. Tucson, Arizona, 20 Feb. 1911).

American instrumentalist and composer. He learnt to play the clarinet, oboe, saxophone and pianoforte at a very early age and worked in local theatre and jazz-band groups in his home territory. In 1933 he obtained from the University of Arizona a B.Mus. degree, and two years later he graduated with an M.A. degree in composition. In 1935 he joined the teaching-staff of Bennington College. He also taught at the Concord Summer School of Music in 1937 and at the Bennington Summer School of Arts in 1940-41. He toured South America as clarinet player in a woodwind quintet, sent under the auspices of the League of Composers.

Among McBride's awards and commissions have been the Guggenheim Fellowship (1937), the American Academy of Arts and Letters award (1942), the Composers Press award (1943) and a commission from the League of Composers for which he wrote his 'Go Choruses'. His works have been played at the Yaddo Music Festival, by the League of Composers, the New York Philharmonic Chamber Orchestra, the Rochester Philharmonic, the Chicago, San Francisco and Buffalo orchestras.

His large output of works includes pieces for orchestra, chorus, band, chamber music, stage works and scores for films, the most important being the following:

- 'Show Piece', ballet (1937).
- 'Punch and Judy', ballet with 2 pfs. (1941).
- 'Furlough', ballet with pf. (1945).
- 'Sir Patrick Spence' for men's chorus (1932).
- 'Hot Stuff, we Hope' for chorus (1938).
- 'Mexican Rhapsody' for orch. (1934).
- 'Strawberry Jam' for orch. (1941).
- 'Stuff in G' for orch. (1942).
- 'Swing Stuff' for clar. & orch. (1938).
- 'Sherlock Holmes' Suite for military band (1945).
- 'Fugato on a Well-known Theme' for 25 insts. (1935).
- 'Workout' for 15 insts. (1936).
- Oboe Quintet (1937).
- 'Depression', sonata for vn. & pf. (1934).
- 'Workout' for oboe & pf. (1936).

P. G.-II.

McCALLUM, David (b. Kilsyth, Stirling, 26 Mar. 1897).

Scottish violinist. He began his studies at the Glasgow Athenaeum and continued them at the R.C.M. in London and at Essen. After filling important posts as leader and conductor at Llandudno and Scarborough, he was appointed to the leadership of the Scottish Orchestra (1932), which he resigned to become the leader of the London Philharmonic Orchestra in 1936.

During the war of 1914-18 McCallum saw service at home and abroad from 1915 till the cessation of hostilities.

F. B.

MACCARTHY, Maud (b. Clonmel, Ireland, 4 July 1884).

Irish violinist, singer and lecturer. She gave evidence of great talent at an early age, but was not sent to a musical college, her parents preferring to place her under the tuition of Arbós in London. She made her début there at the age of nine, and in the ensuing years, after an interval of further study, made many public appearances under August Manns, Richter, Wood, Nikisch, etc. During a tour in the U.S.A. she played with the leading American orchestras, her repertory including the principal violin concertos. At the age of twenty-three she was compelled to give up solo playing owing to neuritis, and went to India with Mrs. Annie Besant, where she studied Indian music. On her return she gave a series of Indian vocal lecture-recitals before the Musical Association in London, the Oxford Folk-Song Society, etc. She was an early exponent of unaccompanied song and of the performance on Indian instruments of minute subdivisions of the scale (microtones). She married John Foulds, the composer, in ¹ Productions in London were planned in 1861 and 1870, but failed to take place.

1915, and led the orchestra during the performance of his 'World Requiem' on Armistice Night (11 Nov.) 1923. W. W. C.

* MacCattikhaoil, Seosamh. See Gurney (song).

McCORMACK, John (Count) (b. Athlone, 14 June 1884; d. Dublin, 16 Sept. 1945).

Irish tenor singer. He won the gold medal for singing at the National Irish Festival (Feis Ceoil), Dublin, joined the choir of the Dublin R.C. Cathedral in the following year and in 1904, with that choir, sang at the St. Louis Exhibition. In 1905 he went to Milan and received instruction in singing from Sabbatini.

On 17 Feb. 1907 he sang at a Sunday League concert in London and on 1 Mar. 1907 appeared at a London Ballad Concert, when he sang with such success that the promoters engaged him for the remaining concerts of the season. On 15 Oct. he made a successful début on the stage at Covent Garden as Turiddu in 'Cavalleria', and he confirmed his success the same season as Don Ottavio and as the Duke in 'Rigoletto'. His technical delivery of Ottavio's "Il mio tesoro" was a staggering feat. He established his reputation as an oratorio singer when on 7 Nov. he undertook the tenor music in 'Elijah' at the Royal Choral Society's concert in London, and subsequently he fulfilled several engagements at the English festivals. In the spring of 1909 he sang at the Teatro San Carlo, Naples, and in the autumn (10 Nov.) made a successful début at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, in 'La Traviata'.

McCormack for some years during and after the war of 1914-18, when as an Irish separatist he had made himself highly unpopular in the United Kingdom, pursued his career principally in America, and his ardent nationalism did not prevent him from becoming a citizen of the United States in 1917. He sang with the Boston Opera Company (1910-11) and with the Chicago Opera Company (1912-13), but later devoted himself more especially to concert work, in which his success has been gained not only through the natural qualities of a remarkable voice, but through his interpretative power. Trained in the Italian style, he added German Lieder to his repertory. He paid a return visit to England at length in 1924, when he gave a recital in London on 10 June, filling the hall to capacity and earning such success that all was forgiven, though by this time he could no longer be taken altogether seriously as a musician, since in his later years he devoted his extraordinary and unimpaired gifts too largely to sentimental and popular ditties, not to be listened to with patience by critics or with enjoyment by true music-lovers. But he had an enormous following among the frequenters of celebrity concerts and made a large fortune, much of which he devoted to the cause of the Roman Catholic Church. His title of "Count" was a papal award.

A. C., adds.

BIBL. — STRONG, L. A. G., 'John MacCormack' (London, 1949).

McCrae, Hugh. See Benjamin (2 songs).

McCRISTAL, Allen (b. Sydney, N.S.W., 21 May 1911).

Australian pianist. He studied at the Sydney Conservatory, where he had a brilliant career, winning two scholarships, and then went to Townsville, where he started the North Queensland College of Music. He has examined in every state for the Australian Music Examination Board. He gave the first Australian performance of Bliss's piano Concerto during the British Music Festival at Sydney in 1946 and has appeared as soloist under Schneevoigt and Szell and frequently with the major Australian orchestras.

R. D.-S.

MacCrone, G. F. See Béatrice et Bénédicte (Berlioz).

MACCUNN, Hamish (b. Greenock, 22 Mar. 1868; d. London, 2 Aug. 1916).

Scottish composer. He was the son of James MacCunn, a Greenock shipowner. He showed an early aptitude for music, and when barely fifteen he won a scholarship to the newly established R.C.M. in London, where for three years he studied composition with Parry and Stanford, also pianoforte and viola. A cantata, 'The Moss Rose', was sung at the R.C.M. in Dec. 1885, and in the same year his overture 'Cior Mhor' was performed under Manns at the Crystal Palace. Two years later Manns also performed the work of MacCunn's which keeps his fame alive in all Scottish orchestral repertories, the overture 'The Land of the Mountain and the Flood'; and the less terse 'The Ship o' the Fiend' and 'The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow' followed in 1888. These works showed that MacCunn was possessed of fresh individuality, and they all make some attempt to establish a Scottish atmosphere.

The cantatas and ballads for chorus and orchestra which followed are still occasionally sung in Scotland. 'Lord Ullin's Daughter' (1888), first given by Manns at the Crystal Palace, is probably the most interesting. 'The Lay of the Last Minstrel' was commissioned and performed by the Glasgow Choral Union in the same year. 'Bonny Kilmeny' had its first performance in Edinburgh (1889), as had also 'The Cameronian's Dream' (1890).

In 1894 MacCunn was commissioned by the Carl Rosa Company to write an opera. 'Jeanie Deans' was performed in Edinburgh in 1894 and in London on 22 Jan. 1896. It held the operatic stage until after the first world war and the advent of Puccini on the British opera stage. In 1938, however, it was successfully revived in Edinburgh by Ian Whyte, who demonstrated that, in spite of occasional unevenness and lapses into period mannerisms, the opera is a fine work — the best thing which came from this composer's pen.

'Diarmid', written for Covent Garden and produced there in 1897 by the Carl Rosa Company, although also successful in its day, suffers from a less compact and exciting libretto than that of 'Jeanie Deans', which is based on Scott's 'Heart of Midlothian'.

In 1889 MacCunn married the daughter of John Pettie, R.A., a "Glasgow School" artist who painted the composer in his well-known picture 'Two Strings to her Bow' (MacCunn is the "beau" on the left of the girl, who, of course, became Mrs. MacCunn).

The last years of his life were spent as a conductor with the Carl Rosa Company. MacCunn directed the production in English of several of the later Wagner operas, including 'Tristan' and 'Siegfried'. After the death of Sullivan he conducted the last season of light opera at the Savoy Theatre in London, where he was in charge of the long runs of Edward German's 'Merrie England' and 'A Princess of Kensington'.

Like those of all the composers associated with the Parry-Stanford-Mackenzie group, MacCunn's influences were basically Germanic. Although much more successful than Mackenzie in his Scottish nationalist musical aspirations, MacCunn's fundamental dependence on the German tradition prevented him from achieving the status of a significant national Scots composer. The earlier choral and orchestral ballads, the two Scottish operas and the early Scottish orchestral works represent the best of his output. Later in life he moved away from his Scottish influences, and such works as 'The Golden Girl' (1905) and 'The Pageant of Light and Darkness' are little more than accomplished Brahms-out-of-Sullivan pastiche. One or two of his songs have survived by virtue of their melodic charm; but as a song-writer he rose only a little above the general run of Victorian balladists. He was born out of time, when Scotland could not yet sustain a considerable native talent such as his. He died in mid-passage, broken and disappointed.

The following are MacCunn's chief compositions:

WORKS FOR THE STAGE

- 'Jeanie Deans', opera in 4 acts (libretto by Joseph Bennett, based on Scott's 'The Heart of Midlothian'), prod. Edinburgh, Lyceum Theatre, 15 Nov. 1894.
- 'Diarmid', opera in 4 acts (lib. by the 9th Duke of Argyll [then Marquis of Lorne]), prod. London, Covent Garden Theatre, 23 Oct. 1897.
- 'The Masque of War and Peace' (lib. by Louis N. Parker), prod. London, Her Majesty's Theatre, 13 Feb. 1900.¹
- 'The Golden Girl', musical comedy (lib. by Basil Hood), prod. Birmingham, 5 Aug. 1905.

¹ A single performance for the benefit of the Household Troops.

- 'Pageant of Darkness and Light', stage pageant in 6 episodes (scenario by John Oxenham).
- 'Prue', light opera in 3 acts (lib. by C. Taylor). Also extra numbers for various musical comedies.

CHORAL WORKS

- 'Lord Ullin's Daughter' (Scott) for chorus & orch. (London, Crystal Palace, 18 Feb. 1888).
- 'Bonny Kilmeny' for solo voices, chorus & orch. (Edinburgh, 15 Dec. 1888).
- 'The Lay of the Last Minstrel' (Scott) for solo voices, chorus & orch. (Glasgow, 18 Dec. 1888).
- 'The Cameronian's Dream' for baritone, chorus & orch. (Edinburgh, 27 Jan. 1890).
- 'Queen Hynde of Caledon' for solo voices, chorus & orch. (Glasgow, 28 Jan. 1892).
- Psalm VIII for chorus & organ (Glasgow Exhibition, 1901).
- 'The Wreck of the Hesperus' (Longfellow), for chorus & orch. (London Coliseum [with pictorial illustration], 28 Aug. 1905).
- 'The Death of Percy Reed' for male voices & orch. (London [posth.], 1925).
- 'Livingstone, the Pilgrim' (Sylvester Horne) for chorus & orch.
- 'Kinmont Willie' for chorus & orch.
- 'The Jolly Goshawk' for chorus & orch.
- 9 Partsongs.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Overture 'Gior Mhor' (London, Crystal Palace, 27 Oct. 1885).
- Overture 'The Land of the Mountain and the Flood' (after Scott) (London, Crystal Palace, 5 Nov. 1887).
- Overture 'The Ship o' the Fiend' (London, 21 Feb. 1888).
- Overture 'The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow' (London, Crystal Palace, 13 Oct. 1888).
- 'Highland Memories', 3 descriptive pieces (London, Crystal Palace, 13 Mar. 1897).
- Also 3 pieces for cello & pianoforte, 'Scotch Dances' for pianoforte, over 100 songs, etc.

M. L.

MacDiarmid, Hugh. See Scott (F. G., 20 songs).

MACDONALD, Donald. See PIBROCH.

MCDONALD, Harl (b. nr. Boulder, Colorado, 27 July 1899).

American pianist, conductor and composer. He spent his early boyhood on his father's cattle ranch. At the age of four he started pianoforte lessons with his mother and at seven he began to compose. His teachers included Vernon Spencer, Ernest Douglas and Yaraslav de Zielinsky. He also learnt the horn, which as a lad he played in the Los Angeles orchestra, thus earning enough to continue his education at the University of California, University of Redlands, Cal., and the Leipzig Conservatory. He received his diploma there in 1922 and went to Paris to lecture on composition at the Académie Tournéfort. After his return to the U.S.A. he appeared as pianoforte soloist with orchestras and at recitals; also as guest conductor at Los Angeles, Philadelphia, etc. He visited England and Germany as pianist and conductor.

In 1926 McDonald settled at Philadelphia, where he secured various teaching appointments at the Musical Academy and the University of Pennsylvania and became conductor of the University of Pennsylvania Choral Society. He engaged in research work, 1930-33, under a Rockefeller grant, with a physicist and two electrical engineers, on the measurement of vocal and instrumental tone, new scale divisions and resultant harmonies, and the recording and transmission of tone. This resulted in his 'New Methods of Measuring Sound' (publ. 1935).

McDonald's compositions include the following:

Several choral works including a setting of Walt Whitman's 'Dirge for Two Veterans' for women's voices & orch. (1940).

Symphony No. 1 ('The Santa Fé Trail') (1932).

Symphony No. 2 ('Rhumba') (1934).

Symphony No. 3 ('Tragic Cycle') (1935).

Symphony No. 4 (1937).

'Three Poems on Aramaic Themes' for orch. (1938).

'The Legend of the Arkansas Traveller' for orch. (1939).

'Chameleon Variations' for orch. (1940).

Overture (1941).

Symph. Suite 'My Country at War' (1944).

'Saga of the Mississippi' (1948).

Concerto for 2 pfs. (1936).

Suite 'From Childhood' for harp & orch. (1941).

'Song of the Free Nations' for soprano & orch. (1942).

Trio, G. m., for vn., cello & pf. (1927).

String Quartet on Negro Themes (1933).

G. R., rev.

M'DONALD, Joseph (b. Strathnaver, 26 Feb. 1739; d. India, 1762).

Scottish musician, brother of Patric M'Donald. He noted down some of the Scottish airs published in his brother's 'Collection' in 1784. He left Scotland for India in 1760 and was the author of a 'Treatise on the Theory of the Scots Highland Bagpipe', which forms part of a work, a 'Collection of Bagpipe Music', published in Edinburgh in 1808.

F. K.

M'DONALD, Malcolm (b. ?; d. ? Inver, ?).

Scottish 18th-century composer. Little is known of his personal history save that he was associated with the Gow family, and that he lived (and probably died) at Inver, the birthplace of Niel Gow. A footnote in 'The Beauties of Niel Gow' states that he played the cello in Gow's band at Edinburgh. His published collections of Strathspey reels number four. The first in oblong folio was published in 1788; 2nd in folio, c. 1789; 3rd folio, c. 1792; a 4th folio, c. 1797.

F. K.

M'DONALD, Patric (b. Durness Mansc, Sutherland, 22 Apr. 1729; d. Kilmore, 25 Sept. 1824).

Scottish violinist and musical editor, brother of Joseph M'Donald. He was the son of a minister, whom he followed in his profession. He was educated at St. Andrews and ordained minister of Kilmore in Argyllshire on 12 Oct. 1756. He remained in this post for sixty-nine years. He was one of a musical family and a skilled performer on the violin. He is deserving of remembrance for his valuable work (the first attempt at such a gathering), a 'Collection of Highland Vocal Airs', in which he was assisted by his brother, issued at Edinburgh in 1784, with a preface dated 1783.

F. K.

MACDONALD, Patrick. See PIBROCH.

MACDOWELL, Edward (Alexander) (b. New York, 18 Dec. 1861; d. New York, 23 Jan. 1908).

American composer. He was descended from a Quaker family of Scottish-Irish extraction which emigrated to America about the middle of the 18th century. As a boy he studied the pianoforte with Juan Buitrago, a South American, and Pablo Desvernine, a Cuban, and for a brief space with Teresa Carreño.

His European studies were varied. In 1876 he became a pupil of Savard in composition and Marmontel in pianoforte at the Paris Conservatoire. For three years he remained under French influences, then exchanged them for German, going first to Stuttgart to Lebert; but wearying of that teacher's pedagogic methods in less than a month, he went to Wiesbaden, where he studied with Louis Ehlert during the summer months of 1882. In the autumn he joined the pianoforte class of Karl Heymann at the Conservatory and the class in composition under Raff, then director of the institution. The admiration which he felt for Raff's music and the attachment which sprang up between master and pupil were among the strongest influences which shaped his creative career, and speak out of much of his music, especially the first Suite for orchestra, Op. 42. On Heymann's departure from the Conservatory MacDowell was a candidate for the position vacated by him, but failed of appointment, ostensibly because of his youthfulness, but probably because of his adherence to the romantic ideals exemplified in Heymann's playing. Thereupon he went to Darmstadt as chief pianoforte teacher at the Conservatory there. The duties were onerous and the remuneration was inadequate, but MacDowell had made up his mind to stay in Germany as a country more congenial to his artistic nature than his native land. He next settled at Frankfurt o/M. as a private teacher. In 1882, at the instance of Raff, he went to Weimar to visit Liszt. He played his first Concerto for that master with d'Albert at the second pianoforte, and was invited to take part in the approaching meeting of the Allgemeiner Deutscher Musikverein at Zurich. There he played his first pianoforte Suite. Raff died shortly after, and MacDowell set up a home at Wiesbaden, where he devoted himself to composition for four years, till 1887.

In that year he went to America, settled in Boston, where he made his first appearance as a pianist with the Kneisel Quartet on 19 Nov. 1888, taught and gave concerts, producing his two pianoforte Concertos with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Boston and the Theodore Thomas Orchestra in New York. (The second Concerto was played by the composer at the Philharmonic Concert in London on 14 May 1903.) In 1896 he was called to Columbia University in New York to fill the chair of music¹ — a new foundation. He remained professor at the institution until Jan. 1904, when he resigned the post because of a disagreement with the faculty touching the proper footing of music and the fine arts in the curriculum. For two years he was conductor of the Mendelssohn Glee Club, one of the oldest and best men's choruses in the United States. Princeton University and the University of Pennsylvania conferred on him the degree of Mus.Doc. MacDowell's career ended in the spring of 1905, when overwork and insomnia, the consequence of morbid worry over disagreeable experiences, brought on what eminent medical specialists pronounced to be a hopeless case of cerebral collapse.

When MacDowell went to Boston he gave a healthy impulse to American composition, chiefly through the performances of his works which had been stimulated by his return to his native land, but also by the attitude he assumed as to the proper treatment of the American composer by the American public and press. He expressed himself as opposed to their segregation for the purpose either of laudation or condemnation. Naturally this came somewhat easier to him than to some of his fellows. He had grown artistically into man's estate in Germany and won quite as much recognition there as he found waiting for him in America on his return. It should be said that he found his position upheld by the majority of American musicians worthy of association with him.

As a composer MacDowell was a romanticist. He believed in poetical suggestion and programmatic titles; but he was not a musical cartoonist. He aimed at depicting the moods of things and the moods awakened by things rather than the things themselves. He was fond of subjects and titles which, like those of his master Raff, smack of the woods — not the greenwood of the English ballads, but the haunted forests of Germany, in which nymphs and dryads hold their revels and kobolds frolic.

The supernaturalism which is an ineradicable element of German romanticism breathes through his first Suite for orchestra. In his second Suite, entitled "Indian", he makes use of aboriginal American idioms, forming his principal themes out of variants of Indian melodies — a harvest-song, a war-song and a women's dance of the Iroquois, and a love-song of the Iowas. A similar device is practised in the fifth of his 'Woodland Sketches' for pianoforte, Op. 51, which has a melody of the Brotherton Indians as its theme. Mac-

Dowell was contemporaneous with Dvořák in thus calling attention to the existence of native American folk-song elements capable of use in a characteristic body of artistic music, though, unlike the composer of the "New World" Symphony, he never permitted himself to be influenced by the melodic idioms of the Negro slave. His "Indian" Suite, Op. 48, first played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York on 23 Jan. 1896, was fully sketched before Dvořák's Symphony appeared, though it was not performed till three years later, the composer wishing to become better acquainted with what to him, as well as the world, was a new kind of music. As for the rest, great concentration, refined and highly emotionalized harmonization, exalted poetical feeling and a spirit of breezy freshness are the characteristics chiefly to be found in MacDowell's compositions for the pianoforte. H. E. K.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ADAMS, C., 'What the Piano Writings of Edward MacDowell mean to the Piano Student' (Chicago, 1913).
 BROWN, ABBIE FARWELL, 'The Boyhood of Edward MacDowell' (New York, 1924).
 CURRIER, T. P., 'MacDowell as I knew him' (M.Q., I, Jan. 1915).
 ERSKINE, JOHN, 'MacDowell at Columbia: some Recollections' (M.Q., XXVIII, 1942, p. 395).
 GILMAN, LAURENCE, 'Edward MacDowell' (New York & London, 1906).
 'Edward MacDowell: a Study' (New York, 1909).
 MACDOWELL, EDWARD, 'Critical and Historical Essays, delivered at Columbia University' (Boston & New York, 1912).
 PAGE, E. F., 'Edward MacDowell: his Works and Ideals' (New York, 1910).
 PORTER, J. F., 'Edward MacDowell', an annotated catalogue (London, 1922).
 SONNECK, O. G., 'Catalogue of First Editions of Edward MacDowell' (Washington, 1917).
 'MacDowell versus MacDowell', in 'Sum cuique' (New York, 1916).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Op.
 22. Symphonic Poem 'Hamlet and Ophelia', after Shakespeare (1885).^a
 25. Symphonic Poem 'Lancelot and Elaine', after Tennyson (1888).
 29. Symphonic Poem 'Lamia', after Keats (1908, posth.).
 30. Two Fragments from the Song of Roland (1891)
 1. The Saracens.
 2. The Lovely Alda.
 42. Suite No. 1 (1891, No. 3 1893)
 1. In a Haunted Forest.
 2. Summer Idyl.
 3. In October.
 4. The Shepherdess' Song.
 5. Forest Spirits.
 48. Suite No. 2 ("Indian") (1897)
 1. Legend.
 2. Love Song.
 3. In War-time.
 4. Dirge.
 5. Village Festival.

SOLO INSTRUMENT AND ORCHESTRA

15. Pf. Concerto No. 1, A mi. (1885).
 23. Pf. Concerto No. 2, D mi. (1890).
 35. 'Romance' for cello (1888).

¹ His lectures at Columbia University were edited by W. J. Paltzell and published in 1912 (see Bibli.).

^a Dates are those of publication.

PIANOFORTE SOLO

- Op.*
 1. 'Amourette' (1896) (E.T.¹).
 2. 'In Liltin' Rhythm' (1897) (E.T.).
 4. 'Forgotten Fairy Tales' (1897) (E.T.)
 1. Sung outside the Prince's Door.
 2. Of a Tailor and a Bear.
 3. Beauty in the Rose-Garden.
 4. From Dwarfland.
 7. 'Six Fancies' (1898) (E.T.)
 1. A Tin Soldier's Love.
 2. To a Humming-Bird.
 3. Summer Song.
 4. Across Fields.
 5. Bluettes.
 6. An Elfin Round.
 8. Waltz (1895).
 10. 'Modern Suite' No. 1 (1883)
 1. Praeludium.
 2. Presto.
 3. Andantino and Allegretto.
 4. Intermezzo.
 5. Rhapsody.
 6. Fugue.
 13. Prelude and Fugue (1883).
 14. 'Modern Suite' No. 2 (1883)
 1. Praeludium.
 2. Fugato.
 3. Rhapsody.
 4. Scherzino.
 5. March.
 6. Fantastic Dance.
 16. 'Serenata' (1883).
 17. 'Two Fantastic Pieces' (1884)
 1. Legend.
 2. Witches' Dance.
 18. 'Two Compositions' (1884)
 1. Barcarolle.
 2. Humoresque.
 19. 'Forest Idyls' (1884)
 1. Forest Stillness.
 2. Play of the Nymphs.
 3. Revery.
 4. Dance of the Dryads.
 24. 'Four Compositions' (1887)
 1. Humoresque.
 2. March.
 3. Cradle Song.
 4. Czardas.
 28. 'Six Idyls after Goethe' (1887)
 1. In the Woods.
 2. Siesta.
 3. To the Moonlight.
 4. Silver Clouds.
 5. Flute Idyl.
 6. The Bluebell.
 31. 'Six Poems after Heine' (1887)
 1. From a Fisherman's Hut.
 2. Scotch Poem.
 3. From Long Ago.
 4. The Post Wagon.
 5. The Shepherd Boy.
 6. Monologue.
 32. 'Four Little Poems' (1888)
 1. The Eagle (after Tennyson).
 2. The Brook (after Bulwer Lytton).
 3. Moonshine (after Rossetti).
 4. Winter (after Shelley).
 36. 'Étude de concert', F# ma. (1889).
 37. 'Les Orientales', after Victor Hugo (1889)
 1. Clair de lune.
 2. Dans le hamac.
 3. Danse andalouse.
 38. 'Marionettes', 8 little pieces (1888, with Nos. 1 & 1901)
 1. Prologue.
 2. Soubrette.
 3. Lover.
 4. Witch.
 5. Clown.
 6. Villain.
 7. Sweetheart.
 8. Epilogue.

- Op.*
 39. 'Twelve Studies' (1890)
 Book I
 1. Hunting Song.
 2. Alla tarantella.
 3. Romance.
 4. Arabesque.
 5. In the Forest.
 6. Dance of the Gnomes.
 Book II
 1. Idyl.
 2. Shadow Dance.
 3. Intermezzo.
 4. Melody.
 5. Scherzino.
 6. Hungarian.
 45. 'Sonata tragica' (1893).
 46. 'Twelve Virtuoso Studies' (1894)
 1. Novelette.
 2. Moto perpetuo.
 3. Wild Chase.
 4. Improvisation.
 5. Elfin Dance.
 6. Valse triste.
 7. Burleske.
 8. Bluettes.
 9. Traumerei.
 49. 'Air and Rigaudon' (1894).
 50. 'Sonata eroica' (1895).
 51. 'Woodland Sketches' (1896)
 1. To a Wild Rose.
 2. Will-o'-the-Wisp.
 3. At an Old Trysting Place.
 4. In Autumn.
 5. From an Indian Lodge.
 6. To a Water-Lily.
 7. From Uncle Remus.
 8. A Deserted Farm.
 9. By a Meadow Brook.
 10. Told at Sunset.
 55. 'Sea Pieces' (1898)
 1. To the Sea.
 2. From a Wandering Iceberg.
 3. A.D. 1620.
 4. Starlight.
 5. Song.
 6. From the Depths.
 7. Nautilus.
 8. In Mid-Ocean.
 57. 'Norse Sonata' (1900) } ded. to Grieg.
 59. 'Keltic Sonata' (1901) }
 61. 'Fireside Tales' (1902)
 1. An Old Love Story.
 2. Of Brer Rabbit.
 3. From a German Forest.
 4. Of Salamanders.
 5. A Haunted House.
 6. By Smouldering Embers.
 62. 'New England Idyls' (1902)
 1. An Old Garden.
 2. Midsummer.
 3. Midwinter.
 4. With Sweet Lavender.
 5. In Deep Woods.
 6. Indian Idyl.
 7. To an Old White Pine.
 8. From Puritan Days.
 9. From a Log Cabin.
 10. The Joy of Autumn.
 — 'Six Little Pieces on Sketches by Bach' (1890).
 — 'Technical Exercises'
 Book I (1893).
 Book II (1895).

PIANOFORTE DUET

20. 'Three Poems' (1886)
 1. Night at Sea.
 2. A Tale of the Knights.
 3. Ballad.
 21. 'Moon Pictures', after Hans Andersen (1886)
 1. The Hindoo Maiden.
 2. Stork's Story.
 3. In Tyrol.
 4. The Swan.
 5. Visit of the Bear.

SONGS

9. 'Two Old Songs' (1894)
 1. Deserted (Robert Burns).
 2. Slumber Song (words by the Composer).
 11. 'Album of Five Songs' (1883)
 1. My love and I.
 2. You love me not.
 3. In the sky, where stars are glowing.
 12. 2 Songs
 1. Night Song.
 2. The Chain of Roses.

¹ Early works so marked were published under the pseudonym of Edgar Thorn, or Thorne.

Op.

26. 'From an Old Garden' (Composer) (1887)
 1. The Pansy.
 2. The Myrtle.
 3. The Clover.
 4. The Yellow Daisy.
 5. The Bluebell.
 6. The Mignonette.
33. Three Songs' (1894)
 1. Prayer.
 2. Cradle Hymn.
 3. Idyl.
34. 'Two Songs' (Burns) (1899)
 1. Meme.
 2. My Jean.
40. 'Six Love Songs' (W. H. Gardner) (1890)
 1. Sweet, blue-eyed maid.
 2. Sweetheart, tell me.
 3. Thy beaming eyes.
 4. For love's sweet sake.
 5. O lovely rose.
 6. I ask but this.
47. 'Eight Songs' (1893)
 1. The robin sings in the apple-tree (Composer).
 2. Midsummer Lullaby (after Goethe).
 3. Folk Song (W. D. Howells).
 4. Confidence.
 5. The west wind croons.
 6. In the Woods (after Goethe).
 7. The Sea (Howells).
 8. Through the meadow (Howells).
56. 'Four Songs' (Composer) (1898)
 1. Long ago.
 2. The swan bent low to the lily.
 3. A maid sings light.
 4. As the gloaming shadows creep.
58. 'Three Songs' (Composer) (1899)
 1. Constancy.
 2. Sunrise.
 3. Merry Maiden Spring.
60. 'Three Songs' (Composer) (1902)
 1. Tyrant Love.
 2. Fair Springtide.
 3. To the Golden Rod.

PARTSONGS

3. 2 Choruses for male voices (1897) (E.T.)
 1. Love and Time.
 2. The Rose and the Gardener.
5. 'The Witch' for T.T.B.B. (1898) (E.T.).
6. 'War Song' for male voices (1898) (E.T.).
27. 3 Songs for male voices (1890)
 1. In the starry sky above us (after Heine).
 2. Springtime (after Goethe).
 3. The Fisherboy (after Schiller).
41. 2 Songs for male voices (1890)
 1. Cradle Song (P. Cornelius).
 2. Dance of the Gnomes.
43. 'Two Northern Songs' for mixed voices (1891)
 1. The Brook.
 2. Slumber Song.
44. 'Barcarolle' for mixed voices with pf. duet (1892).
52. 3 Choruses for male voices (1897)
 1. Hush, hush!
 2. From the Sea.
 3. The Crusaders.
53. 2 Choruses for male voices (Burns) (1898)
 1. Bonnie Ann.
 2. The Collier Lassie.
54. 2 Choruses for male voices (1898)
 1. A Ballad of Charles the Bold.
 2. Midsummer Clouds.
- 'Two Songs from the 13th Century' for male voices (1897)
 1. Winter wraps his grimmest spell (after Neithardt, 1230).
 2. As the glowing shadows creep (after Frauenlob, 1290).
- College Songs for male voices (1901)
 1. Columbia's Sons.
 2. We love thee well, Manhattanland.
 3. Columbia, O Alma Mater.
 4. Sturdy and strong.
 5. O wise old Alma Mater.
 6. At Parting.
- 'Summer Wind' for women's voices (from Richard Hovey's 'Launcelot and Guenevere').

See also Bruckshaw (memorial pf. piece).

MACDOWELL MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION, THE.

On the death of Edward MacDowell his widow transferred to this Association the property at Peterboro', New Hampshire, which had been his summer home, in order that it might be maintained as a centre of interest to artists working in varied fields, who, being there brought into contact, may learn to appreciate fully the fundamental unity of the separate arts.

This idea, which originated with MacDowell himself, has been carried out in the summer colony at which artists foregather for work and intercourse. Since 1910 an annual festival, chiefly musical, has been held there.

H. E. K.

MACE, John (b. ?; d. ?).

English 16th-17th-century composer, possibly the father of Thomas Mace. The bassus cantoris part of an anthem by him, 'Let Thy merciful ears', is included in Barnard's manuscript collection (R.C.M., 1051).

J. M. (ii).

MACE, Thomas (b. Cambridge, c. 1613; d. ?, ? 1709).

English writer on music. He was one of the clerks of Trinity College, Cambridge, and author of a remarkable book published (in small folio, 272 pp., besides 18 pp. of prefatory matter) in 1676, entitled:

Musick's Monument: or A Remembrancer of the best Practical Musick, both Divine and Civil, that has ever been known to have been in the world.

The first part treats of the then condition of parochial psalmody and cathedral music and the means of improving their performance; the second of the lute, including directions for choosing, tuning, repairing, performing on and composing for the instrument, with a full explanation of the tablature and numerous lessons; and the third of the viol and of music generally, with other more curious matter.

The book, one of the most important and informative source-books for English 17th-century instrumental music which we possess (ranking with Morley and Christopher Simpson), is written in a misleadingly informal style, intermingled with a profusion of strangely compounded terms, and produces a striking impression of the author's love of his art and his devout and amiable disposition. It was published by subscription at 12s. per copy in sheets. A lengthy epitome of it is given in Hawkins's 'History', pp. 727-33 (Novello ed.). A few scanty biographical particulars are culled from it, viz. that Mace married in or shortly after 1636; that before the marriage his wife lived in Yorkshire, he at Cambridge; that in 1644 he was at York during the siege of the city by the Parliamentary army; that in consequence of having broken both arms he was compelled to make a shake upon the lute in an irregular manner; that he designed (outwardly) a "table organ" (described in his book, with an engraving) to accompany a "consort of viols"; that in consequence of partial deafness, rendering the soft tones of the lute inaudible to him, he in 1672 invented a lute of fifty strings, which he termed the Dyphone, or Double Lute; that he had a family, and that his youngest son, John, learned in 1672 to play well upon the lute almost solely by the perusal of the manuscript of his book¹; that the writing of the work was not begun until after Christmas 1671, and it was licensed for publication on 5 May 1675; and lastly that owing to his increased deafness, which we may presume prevented his pursuing his profession, he was in somewhat straitened circumstances.

Hawkins asserts that Mace was born in 1613, evidently arriving at that conclusion from the inscription beneath the portrait (engraved by Faithorne after Cooke) prefixed to his book, "Ætat. suæ 63". The date of his death is not known, but 1709 is conjectured.²

Mace was further responsible for another, minor work, 'Profit, Conveniency and Pleasure to the whole Nation, being a short rational discourse lately presented to His Majesty concerning the Highways of England . . .' (1675). A copy is in the B.M. An anthem, 'I heard a voice' (MS at PH.) is the only record of Mace as composer apart from the lute and viol music contained in 'Musick's Monument'. W. H. H., add. R. D.

BIBL.—WATSON, HENRY, 'Th. Mace: the Man, the Book and the Instruments' (Proc. Mus. Ass., 1908-9, pp. 87-107).

McEWEN, (Sir) John (Blackwood) (b. Hawick, 13 Apr. 1868; d. London, 14 June 1948).

Scottish composer and educationist. He was educated at Glasgow, where from 1871 his father was minister of Sydney Place Church. He entered the University there, took his M.A. degree in 1888 and studied music while he was choirmaster of St. James's Free Church and subsequently of Lanark Parish Church.

He went to London in 1891 and entered the R.A.M. as a student two years later. There Prout, Corder and Matthay were his teachers. His studentship was, however, comparatively short, for in 1895 he returned to Scotland and settled at Greenock as choirmaster of South Parish Church and teacher of pianoforte and composition at the Athenaeum School of Music at Glasgow. In 1898 he was invited to join the teaching staff of the R.A.M. as professor of harmony and composition, and henceforward his life as a teacher became bound up with the R.A.M. He exerted an ever-increasing influence not only on the pupils who passed through his hands, but on the policy of the institution in the direction of a sane liberalism of outlook. On the retirement of Sir Alexander Mackenzie in 1924, the appointment of McEwen to succeed him in the principalship was widely approved as an assurance of continuity and progress in the work of the R.A.M. He held this position till his retirement in 1936.

McEwen had been active in undertakings for the advancement of British music. He was one of the founders of the Society of British Composers in 1905 and later of the Anglo-French Music Publishing Company, which was begun with similar educational aims. He was for a time musical adviser to the Æolian Company, but these latter interests he resigned on assuming the principalship of the R.A.M. In 1926 he received the degree of Mus.D. honoris causa at Oxford. He was knighted in 1931.

Apart from his executive work, McEwen steadily pursued his way as a creative artist in composition, though few modern composers have been so little concerned as he about the problem of bringing their work before the public. An early performance in 1894 — the first in public — of his first string Quartet (composed in 1893) was not followed by equally quick recognition of his high merits later. Indeed, if these merits are borne in mind, he must be regarded as perhaps the most grievously neglected British composer of his generation. He never composed for the festivals, though a short Prelude for orchestra was played at the Gloucester Festival of 1925, and scarcely one of the long list of his works (see below) bears any trace of having been composed for an occasion. Incidental music for three scenes of the Empire Pageant held at the Crystal Palace in 1910 is almost the only work so marked; a Concerto for viola seems to be a recognition of the demand of Lionel Tertis for such music for his instrument. Otherwise the major events of McEwen's output are symphonic works for orchestra and string quartets, the qualities of which he left performers to discover when publication allowed them opportunity; but many of his compositions are still in manuscript.

His work first became generally known through 'Grey Galloway', one of three Border Ballads for orchestra, which was widely played. Of his several symphonies that in C# minor known as 'Solway' (produced Bourne-mouth, 1922) alone received repeated performance owing to its publication by the Carnegie Trust. The suggestions of a programme in the one case and of some delicate landscape painting in the other are incidental rather than essential. McEwen's characteristics, found most decisively in the string quartets, are a seriousness of musical purpose which is never dull because the composer always remains free from the conventions of style, and an aptness of expression which, while perfectly direct, leaves the hearer feeling that the composer could say more if he would. A concert of his chamber music given as part of the R.A.M. centenary celebrations (1922) gave a rare opportunity of hearing a number of his works together. Their total impression was described as music "for those who are ready to forego excitement and take measured delight in fine quality".¹ H. C. C., adds.

¹ See IMMYNS, JOHN.

² See an important advertisement in the Bagford Collection (Harl. MS. 5936 [384]).

McEwen is not thought of as an innovator, but his art, though unostentatious, is by no means conventional or unenterprising; and it is to him that British music owes the first, if not the only example of the Sprechgesang of Schoenberg and his school — in the Poems for inflected voice and pianoforte of 1943. This is an interesting and mature work, not an experiment, owing nothing to the Schoenberg school in any strictly musical sense. Incidentally it has the merit of introducing into the English musical vocabulary a term that deserves to be accepted as the equivalent of a foreign word British composers have no need to adopt even if they should come to make extensive use of the technical device that gave rise to it in Central Europe. This Dictionary, for one, is now taking its share in giving currency to the useful term invented by McEwen.

E. B.

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

CHORAL WORKS

- Scene from 'Hellas' (Shelley), for soprano, women's chorus & orch. (1894).
 'The Last Chanty' (Rudyard Kipling), for chorus & orch. (1894).
 'Hymn on the Morning of Christ's Nativity' (Milton), for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1901-5).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Symphony in A mi. (1892-98).
 Suite in E ma. (1893).
 Comedy Overture (1894).
 3 Border Ballads (1905-8)
 1. Coronach.
 2. Grey Galloway.
 3. The Demon Lover.
 'Solway' Symphony (1911).
 7 Bagatelles, 'Nugae' for stgs. (1912) (see also Chamber Music).
 Suite No. 1, 'The Jocund Dance', for stgs. (1916) (see also Chamber Music).
 'A Winter Poem' for full orch. (1922).
 Suite of National Dances for stgs. (1923) (see also Chamber Music).
 Suite for theatre orch. (1924).
 Prelude for full orch. (1925).
 Suite No. 2, 'Ballet Suite', for theatre orch. (1935).
 Suite No. 3, G ma., for stgs. (1935).
 5 Preludes and a Fugue for vns. or vns. & violas (1939).
 Suite No. 4, D ma., for stgs. (1941).

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

- Concerto for viola (1901).
 Scottish Rhapsody, 'Prince Charlie', for vn. (1915) (see also Violin and Pianoforte).
 'Hills o' Heather', a retrospect, for cello (1918) (see also Cello and Pianoforte).

VOICE AND ORCHESTRA

- 'La Lune blanche' (Paul Verlaine) (1905).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- String Quartet No. 1, F ma. (1893).
 String Quartet No. 2, A mi. (1898).
 String Quartet No. 3, E mi. (1901).
 String Quartet No. 4, C mi. (1905).
 Fantasy for 2 vns., viola & 2 cellos (1911).
 String Quartet No. 5, 'Nugae', 7 Bagatelles (1912) (see also Orchestral Works).
 String Quartet No. 6, A ma., 'Biscay Quartet' (1913).
 String Quartet No. 7, E♭ ma., 'Threnody' (1916).
 String Quartet No. 8, E♭ ma. (1918).
 String Quartet No. 9, B mi. (1920).
 String Quartet No. 10, 'The Jocund Dance: four Trivial Tunes' (1920) (see also Orchestral Works).
 String Quartet No. 11, E mi. (1921).
 String Quartet No. 12, 'Six National Dances' (English, Scottish, French, Japanese) (1923) (see also Orchestral Works).
 String Quartet No. 13, C mi. (1928).
 String Quartet No. 14, D mi. (1936).
 String Quartet No. 15, 'A Little Quartet "in modo scotico"' (1936).
 String Quartet No. 16, G ma., 'Provençale' (1936).
 Trio, A mi., for vn., cello & pf. (1937).
 Quintet, 'Under Northern Skies' for flute, oboe, clar., horn & bassoon (1939).
 5 Preludes and a Fugue for 2 vns. or vn. & viola (1939) (see also Orchestral Works).
 6 Trios for vn., viola & cello (1943).
 String Quartet No. 17, C mi., 'Fantasia' (1947) (arr. from stg. Trio No. 4).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- 'Six Highland Dances' (1900).
 Sonata No. 1, E♭ ma. (1913).
 Sonata No. 2, F mi. (1913).
 Sonata No. 3, G ma. (1913).
 Sonata No. 4, 'A Little Sonata', A ma. (1913).
 2 Poems (1913)
 1. Breath of June (from Sonata No. 1).
 2. The Lone Shore (from Sonata No. 3).
 'Martinmas Tide' (1913).
 Scottish Rhapsody, 'Prince Charlie' (1915).
 Sonata No. 5, 'Sonata-Fantasia', E mi. (1922).
 Sonata No. 6, G ma. (1929).
 6 Improvisations, 'Provençale' (1936).
 Sonata No. 7, A mi. (1939) (arr. from viola Sonata).

VIOLA AND PIANOFORTE

- Sonata, A mi.

CELLO AND PIANOFORTE

- 'Hills o' Heather: a Retrospect' (1918).
 'Heather and Bracken', 3 Scottish Pieces (1947-48).
 'Cypress and Citron', 3 Grecian Pieces (1947-48).
 'Five Characteristic Pieces' (1947-48).

PIANOFORTE WORKS

- Sonata, E mi. (1903).
 'Four Sketches' (1909).
 '5 Vignettes à la Côte d'Argent' (1913).
 Sonatina, G mi. (1918).
 'Three Keats Preludes' (1919).
 Suite or Theatre Orchestra (arr.) (1924).
 'On Southern Hills', 3 Sketches from Provence (1938).

SONGS

- 3 Songs (Paul Verlaine) (1905).
 'Three Pagan Songs' (Alexander Archibald) (1942).

RECITATIONS

- 'Romney's Remorse' (Tennyson), with pf. (1899).
 'Graith my Cree' (Hall Caine), with stg. 4tet, pf. & drums (1900).
 14 Poems (Margaret Forbes) for inflected voice & pf. (1943).
 Various songs and partsongs.

THEORETICAL WORKS

- 'Harmony and Counterpoint' (1908).
 'The Elements of Music' (1910).
 'A Primer of Harmony' (1911).

¹ Mus. T., Aug. 1922.

- 'The Thought in Music' (1912)
- 'The Principles of Phrasing and Articulation' (1914).
- 'The Foundations of Musical Aesthetics' (1916).
- 'Musical Composition', Part I (1921).
- 'Tempo Rubato' (1928).
- 'Introduction to the Piano Sonatas of Beethoven' (1931).
- See also Bell (W. H., brother-in-law). Inflected Speech (use of). Society of British Composers. Sprechgesang (modified use of).

MACFARREN. English family of musicians of Scottish descent.¹

(1) (Sir) George (Alexander) Macfarren (b. London, 2 Mar. 1813; d. London, 31 Oct. 1887), composer and teacher. He was a son of George Macfarren, a dancing-master. In early life he displayed partiality for music, but did not begin regular study until 1827, when he became a pupil of Charles Lucas. In 1829 he entered the R.A.M. and made composition his principal study, learning also the pianoforte and trombone. In 1834 he was appointed one of its professors. On 27 Oct. 1834 he produced at the Society of British Musicians his first important work, a Symphony in F minor, and in 1836 his fine overture 'Chevy Chase'. On 13 Aug. 1838 his 'Devil's Opera', produced at the English Opera House, Lyceum Theatre, at once drew public attention to him. The libretto was by his father. In 1840 he produced at Drury Lane Theatre an 'Emblematical Tribute on the Queen's Marriage', and he also edited, for the Musical Antiquarian Society, Purcell's opera 'Dido and Aeneas'. In 1843 he became secretary of the Handel Society, for which he edited 'Belshazzar', 'Judas Maccabaeus' and 'Jephthah'. In Jan. 1845 he directed the successful production of Mendelssohn's 'Antigone' at Covent Garden Theatre. On 3 Feb. 1846 his Cervantes opera 'Don Quixote' was successfully produced at Drury Lane, and on 27 Oct. 1849 the opera 'Charles II' was given at the Princess's Theatre. His serenata 'The Sleeper Awakened' was brought out at the National Concerts at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1851, and in the same year he composed the cantata 'Lenora'. His cantata 'May Day' (long a favourite with choral societies) was written for the Bradford Festival of 1856, and the cantata 'Christmas' was composed in 1859. He then resumed the composition of opera and brought out 'Robin Hood' (libretto by John Oxenford) at Her Majesty's Theatre on 11 Oct. 1860, with great success. This was followed by 'Frey's Gift', masque, and 'Jessy Lea' (libretto by Oxenford, after Scribe's 'Le Philtre'), produced at the Gallery of Illustration, 2 Nov. 1863; 'She Stoops to Conquer' (after Goldsmith), 'The Soldier's Legacy' and 'Helvellyn', operas, 1864. The last had a libretto by Oxenford based on Mosenthal's novel 'Der Sonnenwendhof', and was produced at Covent Garden on 3 Nov. Several more operas remained in manuscript, and Macfarren also wrote music for a number of farces and melodramas.

Macfarren's eyesight had at a comparatively early age become impaired; the malady increased year by year until it terminated in total blindness. But this calamity did not diminish his exertions, and with extraordinary energy he continued to perform his duties as a professor at the R.A.M. and to compose, dictating his compositions to an amanuensis. On 23 Oct. 1873 his oratorio 'St. John the Baptist' was produced at the Bristol Festival with marked success. On 16 Mar. 1875 he was elected Professor of Music at Cambridge on the death of Sterndale Bennett, and he greatly distinguished himself by the manner in which he performed the duties of the office. In Apr. following he accumulated the degrees of B.Mus. and D.Mus. In 1876 he was appointed Principal of the R.A.M. 'The Resurrection', oratorio, was produced at the Birmingham Festival in 1876; 'Joseph', oratorio, at the Leeds Festival in 1877; 'The Lady of the Lake' (Scott), a cantata, at Glasgow, on 15 Nov. 1877; the music to Sophocles' 'Ajax' was performed with the play at Cambridge in 1882; the oratorio 'King David' was produced at the Leeds Festival of 1883, and in that year Macfarren was knighted.

Besides the before-mentioned works Macfarren's compositions are very numerous; they include a cathedral service, anthems, chants and psalm tunes, and 'Introits for the Holy Days and Seasons of the English Church', 1866; 'Songs in a Cornfield', 1868; 'Shakespeare Songs for 4 voices', 1860-64; songs from Lane's 'Arabian Nights' and Kingsley's and Tennyson's poems; very many songs (among which the beautiful 'Pack, clouds, away', with clarinet obbligato, is perhaps the best known), duets, etc.; overtures to 'The Merchant of Venice', 'Romeo and Juliet', 'Hamlet' and to Schiller's 'Don Carlos'; symphonies, string quartets and a Quintet; a Concerto for violin and orchestra; sonatas for pianoforte alone and in combination with other instruments. He harmonized the airs in Chappell's 'Popular Music of the Olden Time' and arranged 'Moore's Irish Melodies' (1859) and Scottish songs. He was eminent as a writer on music, having produced 'Rudiments of Harmony' (1860) and 'Six Lectures on Harmony' (1867), analyses of oratorios, etc., for the Sacred Harmonic Society (1853-57) and of orchestral works for the programme-books of the Philharmonic Society (1869-71), also many articles in 'The Musical World' and lives of musicians for the 'Imperial Dictionary of Universal Biography'. He lectured at the Royal and London Institutions. His 'Addresses and Lectures' were published in 1888.

¹ The name in the birth certificate is McFarren. For the family's Scottish ancestry see Mus. T., Dec. 1905.

Macfarren's last published work was an Andante and Rondo in E major for violin and organ, contained in 'The Organist's Quarterly Journal' for Oct. 1887. A cantata for women's voices, 'Around the Hearth', was published posthumously.

BIBL.—BANISTER, H. C., 'Sir George Macfarren' (London, 1891).

See also Additional Accompaniments. Monk (E. G., Oratorio texts compiled).

(2) Natalia Macfarren (born Andrae) (b. Lubeck, 1828; d. Bakewell, Derbyshire, 9 Apr. 1916), contralto singer and translator, wife of the preceding. She appeared in London, at the Princess's Theatre, in Oct. 1849, in Macfarren's 'Charles II', having previously appeared in the U.S.A. with great success. She was married at the age of seventeen to George Macfarren. Her life was spent in teaching and in translating operas and German songs. She was endowed with a fine intellect, her power of musical interpretation was extraordinary and she was an excellent linguist.

(3) Walter (Cecil) Macfarren (b. London, 28 Aug. 1826; d. London, 2 Sept. 1905), pianist and composer, brother-in-law of the preceding, brother of (1). He was a chorister of Westminster Abbey under James Turle in 1836–41 and a pupil at the R.A.M. in 1842–46, studied the pianoforte under W. H. Holmes and composition under his brother and Cipriani Potter. He was a professor of the pianoforte at the R.A.M. from 1846 to 1903 and conductor of its concerts from 1873 to 1880. He was elected a director of the Philharmonic Society in 1868 and became its treasurer in 1876.

Walter Macfarren composed two church services and a number of chants and hymn-tunes; a Symphony in B \flat major, produced at Brighton, 1880; overtures, 'A Winter's Tale' (1844), 'Taming of the Shrew' (1845), 'Beppo' (1847), 'Pastoral' (1878), 'Hero and Leander' (Brighton Festival, 1879), 'Henry V' (Norwich Festival, 1881), 'Othello' (London, Queen's Hall, 1896); a pianoforte Concerto; sonatas for pianoforte alone and in combination with other instruments; songs both sacred and secular; many madrigals and partsongs; numerous pieces of all kinds for pianoforte. He edited Mozart's pianoforte works, Beethoven's sonatas and the extensive series of pianoforte pieces known as 'Popular Classics'. W. H. H., adds.

BIBL.—MACFARREN, WALTER, 'Reminiscences' (London, 1905).
Mus. T., Jan. 1898.

M'GIBBON, William (b. Edinburgh, ?; d. Edinburgh, 3 Oct. 1756).

Scottish violinist and composer. Little is known of his biography save what is related of him and of other Scottish musicians by William Tytler of Woodhouselee, who contributed to the 'Transactions of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland', Vol. I (1792), some personal remembrances of them. William was the son of Matthew M'Gibbon, an oboist in Edinburgh. He was early sent to London and studied the violin under William Corbett. On his return to Edinburgh he was appointed leader of the orchestra in the Gentlemen's Concerts, a post he held for a long period. He was considered an excellent performer.

In 1740 M'Gibbon published 'Six Sonatas [sic] or Solos for a German Flute or Violin. Edin.: R. Cooper for the author, 1740', obl. folio. A copy of this now very rare publication was sold at the Taphouse Sale in July 1905. Another of his compositions is 'Six Sonatas for two German Flutes, compos'd by Mr. Wm. M'Gibbon of Edinburgh' (London, J. Simpson, royal 8vo.). His most important work, however, was a valuable collection of Scots tunes, in three oblong folio volumes, of great value in the study of Scots music. These were issued in Edinburgh and originally published in 1742, 1746 and 1755, though there are several later reprints.

M'Gibbon died in Edinburgh and was buried in Greyfriars' Churchyard, having bequeathed the whole of his effects to the Royal Infirmary. He is mentioned in a verse by Robert Ferguson, the poet, and a portrait of him occurs in the title-page of 'Flores Musicae' (Edinburgh, J. Clark, 1773), which is reproduced in Glen's 'Early Scottish Melodies' (1900). W. Gillies Whittaker, shortly before his death (1944), edited M'Gibbon's 'Six Sonatas' for modern performance.

F. K., adds. M. L.

McGLASHAN, Alexander (b. ?; d. Edinburgh, May 1797).

Scottish violinist and violoncellist. We first know of him in Edinburgh at the back of Bailie Fyfe's Close in 1759. From his stately appearance and dress he was nicknamed "King McGlashan". He was in the habit of giving fashionable concerts at St. Cecilia's Hall, near the Cowgate, regularly from 1766 to 1779, his last concert being given in conjunction with Joseph Reinagle, secundus. He was buried in Greyfriars' churchyard.

McGlashan issued four important books of Scottish national airs, of great value in tracing the history of those melodies. They were all published in oblong folio by Stewart of Edinburgh:

- 'A Collection of Strathspey Reels . . .' (1780).
- 'A Collection of Reels, consisting chiefly of Strathspeys, Athole Reels, &c. . . .' (1781).
- 'A Collection of Scots Measures Hornpipes Jigs . . . and Fashionable Country Dances' (1781).
- 'A Second Collection of Strathspeys, Athole Reels, &c. . . .' (1786).

F. K., adds.

M'GUCKIN, Barton (b. Dublin, 28 July 1852; d. Stoke Poges, 17 Apr. 1913).

Irish tenor singer. He began his career as a chorister at Armagh Cathedral, where he received instruction from R. Turle, the organist, in singing, organ, violin and pianoforte. He became first tenor at St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, in 1871, and was for a time a pupil of Joseph Robinson. He sang at one of the Philharmonic concerts in Dublin in 1874, and in the following year made his début in London at the Crystal Palace concerts, on 5 July 1875, after which he went to Milan and studied under Trevulsi. He reappeared with success at the same concerts on 28 Oct. 1876, where he first appeared as an oratorio singer in Mendelssohn's 'Lobgesang', 3 Nov. 1877. He made his début on the stage under Carl Rosa at Birmingham, 10 Sept. 1880; at Dublin as Wilhelm Meister in Ambroise Thomas's 'Mignon' on 9 May 1881; in the same part at Her Majesty's Theatre in London on 20 Jan. 1882, and as Moro on the production in England of 'The Painter of Antwerp', an English version of Balfe's Italian opera 'Pittore e duca', 28 Jan. 1882. He remained in Rosa's company in London and the provinces until the summer of 1887, and became a great favourite both as a singer and an actor. His most important parts were Lohengrin, Faust and Don José; in new operas he created at Drury Lane the parts of Phoebus (Goring Thomas's 'Esmeralda'), 26 Mar. 1883; Orso (Mackenzie's 'Colomba'), 9 Apr. 1883; Waldemar (G. Thomas's 'Nadeshda'), 16 Apr. 1885; Guillem de Cabestanh (Mackenzie's 'Troubadour'), 8 June 1886; Oscar (Corder's 'Nordisa'), 4 May 1887; at Edinburgh, Renzo on the production in English of Ponchielli's 'Promessi sposi', and at Liverpool, Des Grieux (Massenet's 'Manon'), 17 Jan. 1885. He sang in opera in America in 1887-88 and rejoined the Carl Rosa Company from 1889 to 1896, adding to his repertory the part of Éleazar in Halévy's 'La Juive' and that of Thorgrim in Cowen's opera of that name, 22 Apr. 1890. A. C.

Mácha, K. H. See Skuherský ('May', symph. poem). Suk (V., 'Lesnoy Tsar', opera).

Machado, A. See Dallapiccola (4 songs).

MACHADO, Augusto (b. Lisbon, 27 Dec. 1845; d. Lisbon, 26 May 1924).

Portuguese composer. At first he devoted himself to the pianoforte, having studied with Lavignac in Paris, and was influenced by the literary generation that became known in Portugal as "Generation of the Seventies", to which belonged some of the outstanding Portuguese intellectuals of the last quarter of the 19th century. He rebelled against the Italian school and allowed himself to be swayed by French operatic composers, particularly Massenet, whose friend he became in Paris. He was appointed professor of singing at the Lisbon Conservatory and became its director in 1901, holding the post until 1910. He was many times appointed director of the S. Carlos opera-house.

Machado composed, among others, the operettas 'O desgelo' (1875) and 'Maria da Fonte' (1879), the operas 'Laureana' (based on Guiot's French libretto of George Sand's novel), 'Les Beaux Messieurs de Bois Doré', which was produced at the Grand Théâtre of Marseilles in 1883, 'I Doria' (1887), 'Mario Wetter' (1898), 'La Borghesina' (1909) and other minor pieces of a more Portuguese style, such as 'Espadachim do Outeiro', 'Rosas de todo o ano', 'Triste viuvinha' and 'O tição negro'. J. J. C.

Machado, Manuel. See Arambarri ('Castilla', choral work).

MACHAUT¹, Guillaume de (b. Diocese of Rheims, c. 1300; d. Rheims, 1377).

French poet and composer. He took holy orders at an early age, studied theology probably in Paris, and took the university degree of magister. About 1323 he became secretary to John of Luxemburg, King of Bohemia, whom he accompanied on expeditions to Poland, Lithuania and Italy, sharing his life with its dangerous adventures of the campaigns and with its luxuries of the court in Prague and in Paris. Documents show that Machaut was clericus elimosinarius (almoner) in 1330, notarius in 1332, notarius secretarius in 1333 and secretarius in 1335.

By the time John of Luxemburg met a heroic death in the battle of Crécy, in 1346, Machaut was probably no longer with him, for it must have been about 1340 that he entered the service of Bonne, John's daughter and the wife of Jean, Duke of Normandy, who later became King of France. When Bonne died in 1349 Machaut found a new patron in Charles, King of Navarre. This sovereign became involved in political affairs hostile to France and was kept as a prisoner in that country for eighteen months. It was then that Machaut wrote his 'Confort d'ami' to inspire his royal friend with courage. This narrative poem supplies a number of facts for the biography of the poet himself. Although of humble origin, Machaut became the personal friend and adviser of kings and ruling princes. His clerical orders enabled him to move freely among the high aristocracy, for whom the musician-poet's creative power had a strong attraction.

After 1357 Charles of Navarre no longer appears in Machaut's work, probably because the relations between the former and the rulers of France had become so strained that Machaut was forced to decide which side to take and, as a man of common sense, turned to the rulers of his native country. Among his later patrons were the King of France — whether Jean or Charles VI is undecided — and the Duc de Berry. His old age he spent comfortably as a canon of Rheims, widely known and celebrated as the greatest musical genius of his age.

¹ Also Machault, de Machaudio, de Machaudo or de Mascaudio.

The tradition of Machaut's music is admirably maintained, all his works being preserved in 32 manuscripts, some of them prepared under his own supervision for bibliophiles and princes. The most important are: one in the possession of the Marquis of Vogüé, very good from a musical point of view; Paris Bibl. Nat. fr. 1585 is a 15th-century copy of the Vogüé MS; Paris Bibl. Nat. fr. 9221 is magnificently illuminated but musically not very reliable; Paris Bibl. Nat. fr. 1584 has paintings of great artistic value, among them two portraits of Machaut.

The poet-composer arranged his compositions in a particular order which is kept in the good manuscripts: 19 lais (set for one part only, except for 2 chaces), 23 motets, 1 hoquetus (in some MSS following the *virelais*¹), 42 ballads, 21 rondeaux, 33 virelais. Seven pieces were also interpolated into the narrative poems 'Remède de fortune' and 'Livre du voir dit'.

A complete edition of Machaut's musical works was published by F. Ludwig with an introduction giving exhaustive information about the sources (see Bibl.).

The lais (long lyrical poems written in twelve pairs of stanzas, each pair having a metrical form and a melody different from the rest, except for the last pair, which repeats the metre and melody of the first) are set to one musical part only — except for the two chaces — as are also many of the chansons balladées, a form more generally called virelai.

Machaut's treatment of the poetry in his Latin motets is conservative: whereas Philippe de Vitry uses the Latin motet to express his own views, the outcome of his independent thoughts on society, philosophy or literature, Machaut prefers erotic rhetorical poetry in French (in 17 out of 23 motets). In his Latin motets he probably paid tribute to their long and great tradition. One, 'Bone Pastor Guillelme', was composed in honour of Guillaume de Trie, when he became Archbishop of Rheims in 1324; therefore the date of the motet must also have been 1324. Another one was probably composed in 1356.

Musically Machaut takes over the isorhythmic types as they were created and developed by Vitry, without adding anything essentially new to them in form, rhythm, melody or harmony. Only in three motets he uses pre-isorhythmic types, thus showing another conservative feature.

The ballads are Machaut's most important new creation. He calls them ballades notées, as opposed to the ballads not to be set to music. Being polyphonic, they are the successors of the old short French secular motet of the 13th century, representing the music of society and partly that of the trouvères. No given tenor cantus firmus is used, and in this the ballads differ from the old motets. The music consists of a treble cantus or a vocal duet forming the main part, accompanied by one or two instrumental parts, all of them freely invented.

The refrain is typical of ballads, rondeaux and virelais. The ballads consist of three verses, each of them with seven or eight lines rhyming ABAB, BCC or ABABCCDD, the first two lines being musically identical with the third and fourth; the last two lines form the refrain.

The poetry of the ballads reveals Machaut as the true exponent of the medieval chivalrous ideas with their religious, moral and social code — a belated trouvère. He praises love with all the effects of the seconde rhétorique: mythology, the Old Testament and allegory. Their music is not constructive, as is that of his motets, but expressive and capable of rendering various and varying moods. According to Besseler (see Bibl.) Machaut is the romanticist of the 14th century. He is the first composer to use syncopation; this, and his free treatment of common chords and discords, serves for his means of expression. In these ballads he seems to have found a style far more personal than in the motets.

Rondeaux and virelais are shorter and simpler than the ballads. No mythology or other classical themes find their way into this poetry, whose subject is still the conventional praise of women. Occasionally the poet inclines to puns and riddles. Machaut's rondeau refrains consist of two lines, except one that consists of six. They were sung according to the formula AB, AA, ABAB. Only AB is actually written out in music, the sign ♪ indicating the end of A.

The virelai had three verses, the refrain being sung at the beginning and after each verse. The latter consisted of three pairs of stanzas, the first two of them musically alike. The music of the third pair was identical with that of the refrain. The musical notation consisted of the refrain, the first and the third pairs of the stanzas.

These ballads, virelais and rondeaux were music typical of the French nobility, who found in it what they understood and admired, and Machaut's music became well known among the aristocracy in many parts of Europe. The manuscripts were copied in Spain, Poland and even Cyprus. Some scholars have suggested that Chaucer was influenced by Machaut's poetry, but this has not been established beyond doubt. Some of the poems were copied long after the turn of the 15th century.

A great variety of musical instruments must have added colour to the performances. Machaut gives an interesting account in his 'Remède de fortune':

¹ Virelays in Machaut's own archaic spelling.

Car je vis la tout en un cerne viele, rubebe, guiterne,
leu morache, michanon,
citole et le psalterion,
harpe, tabour, trompes, naquaires, orgues, cornes, plus de dis paires, cornemuses, flajos, chevrettes douceinnes, simbales, clochettes
tymbre la fauste beaigne, et le grant cornet d'Alemaignes flajos de saus, fistule, pipe, muses d'Aussay, trompe petite.

The only Mass by Machaut that has been preserved (for 4 voices) is traditionally said to have been composed for the coronation of Charles V at Rheims in 1364, though there is no proof of this. After the Mass of Tournai, which was composed in the 13th century, it is the earliest ordinarium missae in a polyphonic setting. The 'Kyrie', the end of the 'Credo', 'Sanctus', 'Agnus Dei' and 'Ite missa est' are isorhythmic, the main part of the 'Credo' and the 'Gloria' non-isorhythmic.

The source of Machaut's creative power is described in his own words in a letter to Péronne, a lady of great musical understanding: "toutes mes choses ont été faites de vostre sentement, et pour vous espécialment" and

Qui de sentement ne fait,
Son dit et chant contrefait.

To hear his own music gave him great satisfaction; furthermore he considered it necessary for its appreciation that it should be heard: "Je y ay fait les chans a quatre et les ay plusieurs fois ois, et me plaisent moult bien". Remarks such as this are unique in the middle ages, and they are the more valuable for showing that human reactions to music were then similar to our own.

Machaut holds the foremost place in the French literature of the 14th century. As composers he and Vitry are head and shoulders above their contemporaries. E. D. (ii).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BESSELER, H., 'Die Musik des Mittelalters und der Renaissance' (Potsdam, 1931-34).
'Studien zur Musik des Mittelalters', II (A.M.W., VIII, Leipzig, 1926).
CHAILLEY, J., 'La Messe Notre-Dame de Guillaume de Machaut' (Paris, 1948).
CHICHMAROFF, V., 'Poésies lyriques de Guillaume de Machaut', I (Paris, 1909).
DAVISON & APPEL, 'Historical Anthology of Music' (Cambridge, Mass., 1946).
DOUCI, ANDRÉ, 'Guillaume de Machaut: musicien et poète rémois' (Rheims, 1948).
GENNIGCH, E., 'Formenlehre des mittelalterlichen Liedes' (Halle, 1932).
GLEASON, H., 'Examples of Music before 1400' (New York, 1946).
GOMBOSI, OTTO, 'Machaut's "Messe Notre-Dame"' (M.Q., XXXVI, 1950, p. 204).
HARRIS & EVANSON, 'Singing through the Ages' (New York, 1940).
HOEFFNER, E., 'Œuvre de Guillaume de Machaut', publ. by the Société des anciens textes français, I-III (Paris, 1908-21). The Appendix contains all the music from the 'Remède de fortune', edited by F. Ludwig.

LUDWIG, F., 'G. de Machaut, Musikalische Werke' ('Publikationen alterer Musik', Leipzig, 1926 ff., I, 1; 1926, 'Balladen' etc., III, 1; 1928, 'Einleitung', IV, 2; 1929, 'Motetten'). A volume containing the Mass and the lais was edited in the same series by H. Besseler in 1943, but the edition was destroyed in an air raid.

Article in G. Adler's 'Handbuch der Musikgeschichte', 2nd ed. (Berlin, 1930).

'Die mehrstimmige Musik des 14. Jahrhunderts' (S.I.M.G., Leipzig, 1902-3).

'Die mehrstimmige Messe des 14. Jahrhunderts' (A.M.W., Leipzig, 1925).

MACHABEY, A., 'G. de Machaut' (Rev. Mus., XI-XII, Paris, 1930-31).

PERLE, G., 'Integrative Devices in the Music of Machaut' (M.Q., XXXIV, 1948, p. 169).

QUITTARD, HENRI, 'Notes sur Guillaume de Machaut et son œuvre' (Bull. Soc. Franç. Mus., 1918).

REESE, G., 'Music in the Middle Ages' (New York, 1940).

SMYTHE, B., 'Earliest Polyphonic Masses' ('The Catholic Review' London, 1921).

WOLF, J., 'Geschichte der Mensuralnotation', II-III (Leipzig, 1904).

WOOLDRIDGE, H. E., O.H.M., II (Oxford, 1905; 2nd ed. 1932).

See also Chanson (mus. ex. of ballade). Hocket (mus. ex. of). Song, p. 915.

MACHÊTE (Port.). A small 4-stringed guitar used by the Portuguese and found also in Madeira and the Azores. F. W. G.

Machiavelli, Niccolò. See Castelnovo-Tedesco ('Mandragola', opera). Ullrich (do., symph. prelude). Waghalter (do., opera).

MACHICOTAGE. A species of ornamentation applied to plainsong melodies by means of extraneous notes inserted between those of the true canto fermo, after the manner of floritura. To the once prevalent custom of machicotage in France are to be attributed many of the corruptions observable in Gallican office books before the modern revisions. The 'Processionale Parisiense' (Paris, 1787) directs that the melodies shall be machicotées by the clergy, and continued by the choir sine macicolatice; and in former times the ecclesiastics entrusted with the duty of so singing them were called maceconici or machicots.

W. S. R.

MACHIN, Richard. See ENGLISH MUSICIANS ABROAD.

MACHU, Étienne. See MAHU.

MACHY, ?, Sieur de (b. ?; d. ?).

French 17th-century violist and composer. He was a player of the viola da gamba in Paris at the court of Louis XIV. The Bibl. Nat., Paris, has his 'Pièces de viole en musique et en tablature' (Paris, 1685). This work is prefaced by an introduction containing valuable information on contemporary French ornaments, slightly marred by the fact that de Machy tends to give to familiar ornaments unfamiliar names of his own. R. D.

MACICOTATICUM. See MACHICOTAGE.

MACIEJEWSKI, Roman (b. Berlin, 1910).

Polish pianist and composer. He studied first at Poznań and then moved to Warsaw, where he became a composition pupil of K. Sikorski at the Conservatory. He left Poland for Paris in 1934 and four years later worked with Kurt Jooss at Dartington Hall, Totnes, Devonshire. He then settled in Stockholm. Soon after the second world war he moved to the U.S.A., where he has lived since then.

As a composer Maciejewski belongs to the foremost group of the Polish modernists. His earlier works, such as his Mazurkas and 'Dances of the Highlands', for pianoforte, and 'Songs from Kurpie' (1933), are based on Polish folklore, presumably under the influence of the great composers who in the late 1920s came forward with works drawing on folk idioms (Bartók, Szymanowski, Kodály, etc.). His later works (e.g. 'Songs of Bilitis') display impressionist trends. His Concerto for two pianofortes, a work almost severe in its form and employing a chorale, a fugue and a passacaglia on the same thematic material, shows another aspect of his talent: it is absolute music without a trace of a folk idiom. His 'Kolysanka' ('Lullaby') and 'Tryptyk', both published in 1948, and his '4 Mazurkas', published in 1952, show a further development in his ability to solve problems of construction, form and individual style.

C. R. H.

MACINTYRE, John. See Pibroch.

MACINTYRE, Margaret (b. India, c. 1865; d. London, Apr. 1943).

Scottish soprano singer. She made her début in 1888 on the second night of Augustus Harris's first season at Covent Garden, playing Micaela to the Carmen of Nordica. Her success was emphatic, and during the season she sang Incz in 'L'Africaine', Mathilde in 'Guillaume Tell' to the Tell of Lassalle, and Margaret in Boito's 'Mefistofele'. In the following year she sang, among other parts, Marguerite in 'Faust'. Soon in request as a concert singer, she made her first festival appearance at Leeds in 1889. She was the first Rebecca in Sullivan's 'Ivanhoe' on 31 Jan. 1891. At Covent Garden in 1892 she sang Senta in 'The Flying Dutchman'. She was at the Leeds Festivals in 1892 and 1895, and at the Birmingham Festival in 1891.

Margaret MacIntyre possessed a voice of exceptional beauty, but she had a tendency to force the tone and her career as a leading singer was rather short. While her voice was still at its best she sang in St. Petersburg and Moscow, an interesting feature of her visit to Russia being her appearance as Elizabeth in 'Tannhäuser' with Battistini as Wolfram.

S. H. P.

MACISZEWSKI, Waldemar (b. Warsaw, 1897).

Polish pianist. He began his studies at the early age of ten at the Kurpiński Music School in Warsaw. In 1941 he became a pupil of Drzewiecki at the Warsaw and then at the Cracow Conservatory, which he left with distinction in 1948. At the Chopin International Competition for Pianists in Warsaw he won the third prize in 1949. Since then he has toured in many European countries and in the U.S.S.R.

C. R. H.

MACKAY, Angus (b. ?; d. nr. Dumfries, 21 Mar. 1859).

Scottish bagpiper. He became famous as a Highland piper and collected and published some interesting pipe melodies taken down from traditional sources. The book is now rare and its title runs: 'A Collection of Ancient Picbairachd or Highland Pipe Music', folio, 1838. Another of his works is 'The Piper's Assistant'. He was piper to Queen Victoria and was accidentally drowned in the Nith, near Dumfries.

P. K.

See also Pibroch.

Mackay, Charles. See Elgar (3 partsongs).

Mackay, John Henry. See Reger (song). Schoenberg (song). Strauss (R., 1 song with orch., 3 with pf.).

Mackaye, Percy. See Converse (2 libs. & 'Jeanne d'Arc', incid. m.).

MACKENZIE, (Sir) Alexander (Campbell) (b. Edinburgh, 22 Aug. 1847; d. London, 28 Apr. 1935).

Scottish composer, violinist and teacher. He was the fourth musician of his family in direct descent. His great-grandfather belonged to the Forfarshire Militia Band; his grandfather, John Mackenzie (1797-1852), was a violinist at Aberdeen and Edinburgh; his father, Alexander Mackenzie (1819-57), was also a violinist, pupil of Sainton and Lipinski; he edited the 'National Dance Music of Scotland' and was leader of the band at the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh.

A. C. Mackenzie was educated at Hunter's School, Edinburgh, and when only ten years old was sent to study music in Germany at Schwarzbürg-Sondershausen on the recommendation of a member of Gung'l's band named Bartel. Here he was a pupil of K. W. Uhlich for the violin, and for theory of Eduard Stein, the conductor of the Sondershausen ducal orchestra. The boy played second violin in the orchestra and took part in many performances of the most advanced music, Liszt, Berlioz and the then existing works of Wagner being his daily bread. In 1862 he returned to Edinburgh and soon afterwards came to London, intending to take lessons from Sainton; but on the latter's advice Mackenzie entered for the King's Scholarship at the R.A.M., and won it in Dec. of the same year, remaining at the Academy till 1865. Besides Sainton, who taught him the violin, his masters were Charles Lucas for harmony and counterpoint, and F. B. Jewson for pianoforte. While at the Academy Mackenzie played in various theatre orchestras and thereby acquired experience of orchestral work at first hand. On the conclusion of his Academy course he returned to Edinburgh, where he quickly became known as an excellent violinist; he also gave chamber concerts, at which Schumann's pianoforte Quartet and Quintet were given for the first time in Scotland. He was appointed conductor of the Scottish Vocal Music Association in 1873, meanwhile fulfilling many teaching engagements and officiating as precentor in St. George's Church. He found time to compose some chamber music, a piano Trio and string Quartet (unpublished), besides a piano Quartet in E \flat (Op. 11).

Hans von Bülow had seen the proof-sheets at the German publishers' and had made inquiries about the composer. When he visited Glasgow and Edinburgh in 1877-78 he made Mackenzie's personal acquaintance and accepted his overture 'Cervantes' (performed at Sondershausen in 1877) for performance at Glasgow, where it was given on 17 Dec. 1879. As Mackenzie added to his other labours by playing in the orchestra of the Birmingham Festivals of 1864, 1867, 1870 and 1873, it is not surprising that his health was affected by the strain of his work. He wisely went abroad and settled at Florence in order to devote himself to composition. For about ten years, in fact until his appointment to the principalship of the R.A.M., Florence was his residence for at least part of the year; but as time went on his importance in regard to music in London steadily increased, and at last he was obliged to live in England altogether. From the beginning of his residence in Italy dates the first of his more important choral works, the cantata 'The Bride', performed at the Worcester Festival of 1881. Each year after this saw some work of large calibre, and many festival and other commissions followed rapidly. In 1885-1886 Mackenzie was appointed conductor of Novello's Oratorio Concerts, at which he introduced many important works to London audiences. It was primarily in order to hear his 'Saint Elizabeth' under Mackenzie's direction that Liszt paid his final visit to England in 1886, and Mackenzie renewed his old friendship with the composer. By this time his second Scottish Rhapsody called 'Burns' (produced at Glasgow under Manns in 1881), the opera 'Colomba', and 'The Rose of Sharon', an oratorio composed for the Norwich Festival of 1884, had raised Mackenzie to a high position among British composers, and on the death of Sir George Macfarren he was appointed to succeed him as principal of the R.A.M. He undertook the duties of the post on 22 Feb. 1888. Mackenzie's long tenure of office at the R.A.M. (1888-1924) was begun when the institution was feeling the pressure of criticism and the competition of younger teaching-schools. He brought his musicianship to bear on its internal problems and showed such statesmanship in guiding its fortunes that not only was the artistic reputation of the Academy completely vindicated, but its material resources were increased and stabilized. Mackenzie taught composition, conducted the students' orchestra and lectured for many years in addition to all the administrative work which he personally controlled. The Academy's move into its new building (1911) and the celebration of its centenary (1922, for which his last numbered work, the overture 'Youth, Sport and Loyalty', was composed, witnessed the triumph of Mackenzie's organization; the subsequent careers of the innumerable students who passed through his hands are still more decisive evidence of his power as a teacher and leader.

As a concert conductor Mackenzie did important work outside the R.A.M. He conducted the Royal Choral Society occasionally during the lifetime of Sir Joseph Barnby, on whose death he directed the concerts for the remainder of the season. In 1892 he was appointed conductor of the Philharmonic Society, and during his tenure of the post, which he resigned in 1899, he introduced Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony to London, as well as Borodin's Symphony in B minor. In 1903 he undertook a tour in Canada, in the course of which he conducted concerts of British music in all the most important towns of the Dominion. The tour (organized by Charles A. E. Harriss) lasted six weeks and extended from Halifax, N.S., to Victoria, B.C. Eleven new choral bodies were raised for this scheme; other existing ones were augmented, and thus, besides introducing many contemporary British works for the first time in Canada, a movement in the direction of choral singing was begun which was the foundation of the present widespread cultivation of the art, furthered by the competition festivals. Mackenzie was general president of the International Musical Society 1908-12, a period which included congresses in Vienna (1909) and London (1911). As a lecturer Mackenzie did important work in frequent courses delivered before the Royal Institution.

Mackenzie received the Mus.D. degree from St. Andrews in 1886, Cambridge in 1888, Edinburgh in 1890; that of LL.D. from Glasgow, 1901, the M'Gill University in 1903 and from Leeds University in 1904, and the D.Mus. from Oxford in 1922. He received the gold medal for art and science from the Grand Duke of Hesse in 1884 and the Saxe-Coburg and Gotha Order for Arts and Science in 1893. He was a corresponding member of the Istituto Reale Musicale of Florence, a member of the Royal Swedish Academy and honorary member of the Accademia di Santa Cecilia in Rome. In 1895 he was knighted; he was created Knight Commander of the Victorian Order (1922) and received the gold medal of the Royal Philharmonic Society (1923).

J. A. F.-M.

QUALITIES OF COMPOSITION.—Mackenzie's high importance to his generation rests primarily on the fact that he was essentially both a Briton and a cosmopolitan. His early upbringing in Scotland was removed from those influences of the church and the organ-loft which set their stamp both for good and ill on so many of his English contemporaries. As a violinist he lived in the freer atmosphere of the orchestra and the theatre, and his long periods of life on the Continent, besides giving him a command of the German and Italian languages equal to his command of English, enabled him to mix with the keenest musical minds of his time, to breathe their air and live their life, without for one moment being deflected from his own course or belying his character as a sturdy long-sighted North Briton. These qualities are reflected in his music.

His appointment to the R.A.M. suggests a natural division of his compositions into two periods at about Op. 40. Before that time (1888) composition was the first business of his career; after that it had to take second place, to be accomplished in time snatched from other duties, and be undertaken either for a special occasion or for relaxation.

Equality of output is scarcely to be expected, and for the most part Mackenzie's reputation has rested on his earlier works. Among these none served to establish his position more firmly than the oratorio 'The Rose of Sharon', when it was produced at the Norwich Festival in 1884. Its romantic style, the warmth and fervour of its orchestral colouring and its freedom from the conventions of current English oratorio, marked its composer as a man of individual outlook and originality of ideas. Fortunately the libretto, though devised in a quasi-operatic manner, was put together by Joseph Bennett from the words of Holy Scripture, so that the work is saved from the literary banalities of Bennett's own texts. Mackenzie, however, has suffered seriously from his librettists, both in his larger choral works and in his operas. At a time when English composers, led by Stanford and Parry, were re-discovering the musical possibilities of great English literature and poetry, Mackenzie accepted too readily the hackwork of Bennett and Hueffer for cantatas and operas respectively. They stultified much fine and imaginative work on his part. Mackenzie's apparent indifference to the qualities of a libretto seems, however, to be the defect of one of his strongest qualities. Without the literary sensitiveness of Stanford or the philosophic mind of Parry, he took his stand on purely musical values and wrote with a freedom and frankness which showed genuine creative impulse.

It is significant that the list of his instrumental works contains neither symphony nor sonata; but suites and overtures, generally with descriptive titles, rhapsodies, ballads, preludes and entr'actes are numerous, and testify to his refusal of any classical pose. The three Scottish Rhapsodies, the piano Concerto, the Pibroch suite for violin and orchestra (Op. 42), played by Sarasate at the Leeds Festival of 1889, and 'The Cottar's Saturday Night' (one of his most effective choral works) have sufficient reference to Scottish folksong and other suggestions of local colour to give him a place among musical nationalists; but his idiom was really cosmopolitan, and he did not generally handle Scottish themes with special native sensitiveness. Max Bruch's Scottish Fantasia, for example, might be placed beside his Scottish Concerto (Op. 55), produced by Paderewski in 1897. His nationality found expression in more general characteristics less easily defined, in a steadfast persistence in the pursuit of an aim, in an imagination which was not afraid of the commonplace and, by no means least, in a buoyant sense of humour.

Mackenzie's autographs and manuscript copies are in the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge.

H. C. C.

BIBL.—MACKENZIE, ALEXANDER C., 'A Musician's Narrative' (London, 1927).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

OPERAS

Op.	Title	Libretto	Production
28	'Colomba', lyric drama in 3 acts. ¹	Francis Hueffer, based on Prosper Mérimée's story. ²	London, Drury Lane Theatre, 9 Apr. 1883. ³
33	'The Troubadour', lyric drama in 4 acts.	Hueffer.	London, Drury Lane Theatre, 8 June 1886.
51	'Phoebe', comic opera.	B. C. Stephenson.	—
56	'His Majesty, or The Court of Vingolia', comic opera in 2 acts.	Francis Cowley Burnand & R. C. Lehmann.	London, Savoy Theatre, 20 Feb. 1897.

¹ Originally in 4 acts, but revised in 1912.

² Revised version by Claude Aveling (1912).

³ The revised version was produced in London, His Majesty's Theatre, 3 Dec. 1912.

⁴ Originally entitled 'Guillem le Troubadour'.

Op.	Title	Libretto	Production
62	'The Cricket on the Hearth', 3 acts.	Julian Sturgis, based on Dickens's story.	London, R.A.M., 6 June 1914. ¹
65	'The Knights of the Road', operetta.	H. A. Lytton.	London, Palace Theatre, 27 Feb. 1905.
87	'The Eve of St. John', 1 act.	Eleanor Farjeon.	Liverpool, 16 Apr. 1924.

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

Op.	Title	Play by	Contributions	Production
43	'Marmion.'	Robert Buchanan, based on Scott.	Prelude, interludes & songs.	Glasgow, Theatre Royal, Apr. 1891.
45	'Ravenswood.'	Herman Merivale, based on Scott's 'The Bride of Lammermoor'.	Prelude & 3 interludes.	London, Lyceum Theatre, Sept. 1890.
57	'The Little Minister.'	J. M. Barrie.	Overture, 3 dances & interludes.	London, Haymarket Theatre, 6 Nov. 1897.
58	'Manfred.'	Byron.	3 Preludes ('Astarte', 'Pastorale' & 'The Flight of the Spirits') and vocal music.	—
61	'Coriolanus.'	Shakespeare.	Preludes, interludes & incid. music.	London, Lyceum Theatre, 15 Apr. 1901.
—	'A Riot in the 'Scutcheon'.	Robert Browning.	1 Song.	London, St. George's Hall, 1884.

CHORAL WORKS WITH ORCHESTRA

- Op.
25. 'The Bride', cantata (from the German of R. Hamerling) (1881).
26. 'Jason', dramatic cantata (William E. Grist) (1882).
30. 'The Rose of Sharon', dramatic oratorio (Joseph Bennett, based on the 'Song of Songs') (1884, rev. 1910).
34. 'The Story of Sayid', dramatic cantata (Bennett, based on Edwin Arnold's 'Pearls of Faith') (1886).
36. 'A Jubilee Ode' for Queen Victoria's jubilee (Bennett) (1887).³
— 'The Empire Flag', with solo voice (Stuart Reid & W. A. Barrett) (1887).
38. 'The New Covenant', ode (Robert Buchanan) (1888).
39. 'The Cottar's Saturday Night' (Burns) (1888).
41. 'The Dream of Jubal', poem with music (Bennett) (1889).
46. 'Veni, Creator Spiritus', with solo 4tet ad lib. (paraphrased by John Dryden) (1891).
49. 'Bethlehem', a mystery (oratorio) (Bennett) (1894).
— 'Firm in her native strength' (A. C. Ainger) (1900).
66. 'The Witches' Daughter', cantata, with soprano & baritone solos (John Greenleaf Whittier) (1904).
69. 'The Sun-God's Return', cantata (Bennett) (1910).
— 'The Temptation' (Milton) (1914).

PARTSONGS, Etc.

8. 7 Partsongs (1879)
1. It is this (Thomas Moore, from 'Lalla Rookh').
2. How I love the festive boy (Moore).
3. Autumn (Haven).
4. When spring begems the dewy scene (Moore).
5. The day of love (Moore).
6. A Franklyn's dogge leped oer a style (adapted from R. H. Barham's 'Ingoldsby Legends').
7. The stars are with the voyager (Thomas Hood).

- Op.
— 'The Evening Star' (J. Leyden), partsong (1880).
22. 3 Trios, with pf. & perc. (E. Oxenford) (1881)
1. Waken, waken! day is dawning.
2. Distant bells.
3. Come, sisters come.
— 'Great Orpheus was a fiddler' (John Oxenford) (1885).
— 'Hark, 'tis the horn of the hunter' (R. Neil) (1885).
— 'Three merry dwarfs' (E. Oxenford) (1887).
— 'Bonnie Bell' for 4 voices (Burns) (1888).
48. 2 Choral Odes from 'The Bride of Love' (Robert Buchanan) (1891)
1. Rejoice for love is lord.
2. O thou divine.
— 2 Toasts for male voices (S. S. Stratton) (1893)
1. To the ladies.
2. To a brother artist.
— 'The Singers—in memoriam Arthur Sullivan' (Longfellow) (1901).
— 'An Empire Song' (S. Wensley) (1908).
71. 4 Partsongs
1. My soul would drink those echoes (Byron) (1910).
2. Midnight by the sea (N. Paton) (1911).
3. Qui vive! (G. Parker) (1912).
4. A Song of Love's Coming (Ethel Clifford) (1911).
73. 3 Trios for female voices (1910)
1. The Earth and Man (Stopford A. Brookes).
2. A Song of Morning (E. Clifford).
3. The Rhyme of Four Birds (Dorothea Mapleson).
77. 'Perfection (Sinfonia domestica choralis)', humorous song in 8 parts (1913).
— 4 Partsongs (1914)
1. Is the moon tired? (Christina Rossetti).
2. A motherless soft lambkin (C. Rossetti).
3. Fisherman's Song (Joanna Baillie).
4. A Broken Web (W. H. Ogilvie).
85. 3 School Songs (1918)
1. The Bonnie Burnie (G. Mackay).
2. What the birds say (S. T. Coleridge).
3. The Fountain (Thomas Moore).
— 'Tell me where is fancy bred' (Shakespeare) (1924).
— 'Schola Regiae Edinensis Carmen' (Dr. Marshall) (1925).
92. 2 Partsongs (Burns) (1931)
1. Some hae meat and canna eat (The Selkirk Grace).
2. O thou in whom we live and move.
— 'With wisdom, goodness, grace' (?) (?)

¹ Published in 1901 and overture performed London, Philharmonic concert, 2 July 1902.

² Written for the Lyceum Theatre in London (1898), but not produced.

³ An adaptation was made, with new words by Joseph Bennett, for the Diamond Jubilee of 1897.

⁴ Also issued as 'The Holy Babe'.

ANTHEMS, HYMNS, CAROLS, Etc.

Op.

19. 3 Anthems (1876)
 1. I will lay me down in peace (Ps. iv. g).
 2. The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away (Job, i. 21).
 3. The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich (Prov., x. 22, 24).
 — 'A Christmas Morn', carol (G. Weatherley) (1893).
 — 'Kyrie Eleison' (2 settings) (1893).
 — 3 Carols (1894-95)
 1. Noel (Traditional).
 2. On Christmas Morn (Weatherley), revised version.
 3. Joy fills my inmost heart (W. C. Dix).
 — 'From the deep heart of our people', hymn (W. St. H. Bourne) (1897).¹
 — Amen in 4 parts (1922).²

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Overtures to a Comedy (1876).
 — Overture 'Cervantes' (1877).
 — Scherzo (1878).
 22. 'Rapsodie écossaise' (Scottish Rhapsody No. 1) (1880).
 — Overture 'Tempo di ballo' (c. 1880).
 24. 'Burns' (Scottish Rhapsody No. 2) (1881).
 29. 'La Belle Dame sans merci', ballad after Keats (1883).
 37 No. 3. 'Benedictus' arr. for small orch. (see also Violin and Pianoforte) (1888).
 40. Overture to Shakespeare's 'Twelfth Night' (1888).
 52. Overture 'Britannia' (1894).
 53. 'From the North' 3 Scottish Pieces (see also Violin and Pianoforte) (1895).
 — 'Processional March' (?) (1899).
 61. 'Suite dramatique "Coriolanus"' (see also Incidental Music) (1901)
 1. Prelude.
 2. Alla marcia.
 3. Marche funèbre.
 4. Interlude 'Voces populi'.
 63. Coronation March for King Edward VII (1902).
 64. Suite 'London Day by Day' (1902)
 1. Humoresque 'Under the Clock'.
 2. Valse 'Merry Mayfair'.
 3. Song of Thanksgiving (1 June 1902).
 4. Hampstead Heath (for Albert Chevalier).
 67. 'Canadian Rhapsody' (1905).
 — 'Morris Dance' (?) (1909).
 72. 'Air de ballet "La Savannah"' (1911).
 74. 'Tam o' Shanter' (after Burns) (Scottish Rhapsody No. 3) (1911).
 75. 'An English Joy-Peal' for the Coronation of King George V (1911).
 76. 'Invocation' for the Philharmonic centenary (1912).
 82. 'Ancient Scots Tunes' for stgs. (1915)
 1. Lett never crueltie.
 2. Honest Luckie.
 90. Overture 'Youth, Sport and Loyalty' (1922).

MILITARY BAND

- Funeral March.

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

10. 'Larghetto and Allegretto' for cello (1875).
 32. Vn. Concerto, C♯ m. (1885).
 42. Suite 'Pibroch' for vn. (1889)
 1. Rhapsody.
 2. Caprice.
 3. Dance.
 47 No. 1. 'Highland Ballad' for vn. (1893).
 55. Scottish Concerto, G ma., for pf. (1897).
 68. Suite for vn. (1897)
 1. Celtic Legend.
 2. Scherzo capriccioso.
 3. Ritornello.
 4. Alla zingara.
 — Postlude 'In Memoriam' for organ & stgs. (1919).³

¹ One of the 12 hymns by various composers "to commemorate the Queen's long reign", devised by Sir Walter Parratt.

² For the R.A.M. Centenary Celebration, 17 July 1922.

³ For members of the R.A.M. and R.C.M. fallen in the 1914-18 war.

VOICE AND ORCHESTRA

See songs marked *

CHAMBER MUSIC

Op.

- Trio, D ma., for vn., cello & pf. (1874).
 — String Quartet, G ma. (1875).
 11. Quartet, E♭ ma. for vn., viola, cello & pf. (1875).
 82. 'Two Ancient Scots Tunes' for stg. 4tet (1915) (see also Orchestral Works).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- 'Six Favourite Scotch Airs' (1875).
 — '100 Scotch Airs' (?) (1875).
 37. 6 Pieces (1888)
 1. Gavotte.
 2. Berceuse.
 3. Benedictus.
 4. Zingaresca.
 5. Saltarello.
 6. Tema con variazioni.
 47 No. 2. 2 Pieces (1891)
 a. Barcarola.
 b. Villanella.
 53. 'From the North', 9 pieces, 3 books (1895).
 — 'Larghetto religioso' (1905).
 80. 'Four Dance Measures' (1915)
 1. Waltz.
 2. Polka.
 3. Sarabande.
 4. Jig.
 86. 'Six Easy Impromptus', 3 books (1919).
 89. 'Distant Chimes' (?) (1921).

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

91. 2 Pieces (1928)
 1. Andante espressivo.
 2. Valse humoresque.

FLUTE AND PIANOFORTE

- 'Variations sur "Nel cor più"' (1878).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- 'National Dance Music of Scotland' (1859).⁴
 — 'Scottish Melodies: 106 of the Most Popular Scottish Airs', arr. (1867).
 — 'Scottish Melodies', 2 books (1867).
 1. 'Romance' (1873).
 24. 'The Vocal Melodies of Scotland', arr., 4 books (1867-70).
 25. 'The Vocal Melodies of Scotland', arr., 6 books (1876).
 — 'Rondino', G ma. (1877).
 9. 'Rustic Suite' (1877, pub. 1892)
 1. Rustic Dance.
 2. Forester's Song.
 3. Curfew.
 4. Harvest Home.
 13. 5 Pieces (1877)
 1. Impromptu.
 2. Gigue.
 3. Saga (after Longfellow).
 4. La Coquette.
 5. Evening in the Fields.
 15. 'Trois Morceaux' (1878)
 1. Valse sérieuse.
 2. Nocturne.
 3. Ballade.
 20. 'Compositions' (1877)
 1. Hymnus.
 2. Ritornello.
 3. Reminiscence.
 4. Chasse aux papillons.
 5. Réverie.
 6. Dance.
 23. 'Scenes: In the Scottish Highlands' (187?)
 1. On the Hillside.
 2. On the Loch.
 3. On the Heather.
 — 'Processional March', E♭ ma. (see also Orchestral Works) (1899).
 — 'Morris Dance' (1899).
 70. 'Fantasia' (1910).
 81. 'Old English Air with Variations' (1915).

⁴ By Alexander Mackenzie, sen., with additions and arrangements by A. C. M.

- Op.*
 83. 'Odds and Ends' ('Par ci, par là') (1916)
 1. Refrain.
 2. High Spirits.
 3. Telling a Story.
 4. Pavane and Musette.
 84. 'Jottings' (1916)
 1. On the Village Green.
 2. Gossiping.
 3. Drums and Trumpets.
 4. Humours.
 5. A Game in the Garden.
 6. Heave-ho! (A Sea Song).
 88. 'In Varying Moods' (1921)
 1. Revery.
 2. Ariel (Study).
 3. Varying Moods.
 4. Grotesque Dance.

ORGAN MUSIC

27. 3 Pieces (1882)
 1. Baptism.
 2. Wedding.
 3. Burial.
 — 'Hymnus' (1893).¹
 — Scottish Melodies for harmonium (1897).
 — Postlude 'In Memoriam' with vn. ad lib. (see also Orchestral Works) (1920).

SONGS

3. 2 Songs (with chorus) ('Traditional') (? 1876)
 1. Jamie, dear Jamie.
 2. Sailor boy.
 6. 8 Songs (? 1878)
 1. As the flower clings to the vine.
 2. Blessed are the lowly of earth.
 3. Dar's a new coon weddin'.
 4. Gates of Glory.
 5. Little Mary Kelly.
 6. One comfort sweet is mine.
 7. White Horse Inn.
 8. Within thine eyes.
 7. 'The Song of Love and Death' (Tennyson) (? 1878).
 12. 3 Songs
 1. Dormi Jesu, with vn. or cello obbligato (1892).
 2. While my lady sleepeth (J. G. Lockhart, from the Spanish) (1878).
 3. In our boat (Miss Muloch), with vn. or cello obbligato (1892).
 14. 3 Lieder (Heinrich Heine) (187?)
 1. Wenn du mir vorüber wandelst.
 2. Die Wellen blinken.
 3. Es treibt dich fort.
 16. 3 Songs (J. Logie Robertson) (1885)
 1. Up with the sail.
 2. O roaming wind.
 3. Something sad.
 17. 3 Songs (Christina Rossetti) (1878)
 1. The First Spring.
 2. When I am dead.
 3. A Birthday.
 18. 3 Songs (1878-83)
 1. Edenland (Miss Muloch).
 2. There sits a bird (R. H. Barham).
 3. At her window (Frederick Locker).
 31. 10 Songs (1885)
 1. Phyllis the Fair (Burns).
 2. It was a time of roses (Thomas Hood).
 3. Light slumber is quitting the eyelids (Locker).
 4. O, hush thee, my baby (Scott).
 5. The earth below and the heaven above
 (Charles Grant).
 6. If love were what the rose is (Swinburne).
 7. What does the little birdie say? (Tennyson).
 8. Of all sweet birds (Pierre Vidal).
 *9. Lift my spirit up to thee (Grant).
 10. Russian Love Song (J. Arthur Blaikie).
 35. 3 Songs (Shakespeare) (1887)
 1. It is thy will.
 2. Fair is my love ('The Passionate Pilgrim').
 3. Pedlar's Song (attributed to Shakespeare).
 43. 2 Songs from 'Marmion' (Scott) (1891)
 *1. Where shall a lover rest.
 *2. Lochinvar.

- Op.*
 44. 'Spring Songs' (Alfred Perceval Graves) (1890)
 1. The First Rose.
 2. Hope.
 3. Spring's Secrets.
 4. Spring is not dead.
 5. April Weather.
 6. A May Song.
 7. Summer at last.
 50. 3 Sonnets (Shakespeare) (1893-94)
 *1. When in disgrace (XXIV).
 *2. The forward violet (XCIV).
 *3. Shall I compare thee (XVIII).
 54. 3 Songs (John Hay) (1894)
 1. Love, song and wine (Students' Song).
 2. The Light of Love.
 3. She comes to me: 'Expectation'.
 60. 'Six Rustic Songs' (Harold Boulton) (1898)
 1. The first leaf has fallen.
 2. In leafy June.
 3. Solitude.
 4. The time for wooing.
 5. The bird that sings in winter.
 6. We'll all make holiday.
 — 'Four Canadian Songs' (adapted by N. Carlton Hill) (1907)
 1. The Exile.
 *2. Canadian Girls.
 3. Bytown.
 4. Teniaouiche tenega ouich'ka!
 78. *'The Walker of the Snow' (Charles Dawson Shanly) (1913).
 79. 4 Songs (Tennyson) (1913)
 1. Beat upon mine little heart (from 'Romney's Remorse').
 2. Love flew in at the window (from 'The Foresters').
 3. The Milkmaids' Song (from 'Queen Mary').
 4. The bee buzz'd up in the heat (from 'The Foresters').

Songs marked * also exist with orchestral accompaniment.

Also 51 separate songs and 16 contributions to 'The Popular Songs of Scotland' (1884-1906).

RECITATIONS WITH PIANOFORTE

39. 'Five Recitations' (1899)
 1. Jaberwocky (Lewis Carroll).
 2. The Dream of Eugene Aram (Thomas Hood).
 3. The Confession ("Thomas Ingoldsby":
 R. H. Barham).
 4. Queen Mab (Hood).
 5. Faithless Nellie Gray (Hood).

W. H. S. (ii).

See also Thorpe Davie (Vars. for orch. on theme by M.).
Mackenzie, Elizabeth. See Incognita (Wellesz, lib.).
 Wellesz (do.; 1 song).

McKIE, (Sir) William (Neil) (b. Melbourne, 22 May 1901).

Australian organist. He was educated at Melbourne. He first went to England in 1919 and won the Clarke's Scholarship at the R.C.M. in London. After two years there he went to Oxford as organ scholar of Worcester College, whence he graduated B.A. and B.Mus. in 1924. After considerable experience both as organist and as public-school music master, at Radley College (1923-26) and Clifton College (1926-30), he returned to Australia to become city organist in his native place. This appointment he held with distinction for seven years, and during part of that time he was also music master and organist at Geelong Grammar School. In these very diverse appointments he exercised a strong influence as an organist of first-rate ability, an accomplished musician and a man of reliable judgment. He returned to England in 1938 to become organist and instructor in music of Magdalen College, Oxford. But in 1941 he settled in London on being appointed Organist and Master of the Choristers at Westminster Abbey, where he officiated at the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth II on 2 June 1953, when he received the honour of knighthood.

¹ For Novello's 'Village Organist' series.

H. C. C.

MACKINLAY, Jean Sterling. See STERLING, ANTOINETTE.

MACKINLAY, M. Sterling. See STERLING, ANTOINETTE.

MACKINTOSH, Abraham (b. Edinburgh, 15 June 1769; d. ?).

Scottish musician and dancing-master, son of Robert Mackintosh. He followed his father's profession. He published 'Thirty New Strathspey Reels' (Edinburgh, folio, 1792), and some other works. He removed about the beginning of the 19th century to Newcastle-on-Tyne, where he was established in 1807, teaching both music and dancing.

H. G. F.

MACKINTOSH, John (b. London, 1767; d. London, 23 Mar. 1844).

Scottish bassoon player. From 1821 to 1835 he held the first place in all the principal London and provincial orchestras. He produced full, rich and powerful but somewhat coarse tone. His son Alphonse was a violinist.

W. H. H.

MACKINTOSH, Robert (b. Tullymet, Perthshire, 1745; d. London, Feb. 1807).

Scottish violinist and composer, father of Abraham Mackintosh above. He was established as a musician in Skinner's Close, Edinburgh, in 1773. At various addresses in the northern capital he advertised himself as teacher of the violin, and he organized concerts. He was leader of the Aberdeen concerts from 1785 until 1788, when he returned to Edinburgh; but he went back in 1789 as principal second violin at the Aberdeen concerts and remained until 1791. There he became acquainted with Andrew Shirrefs and composed the music to the latter's song 'A cogie o' ale and a pickle ait-meal'. In 1796 he became famous for another song, 'Athole Brose', and the next year he conducted the production of Shirrefs's ballad opera 'Jamie and Bess' at the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, which has led to the erroneous impression that he was the resident conductor there. His fame as a composer of strathspeys earned him the nickname of "Red Bob".

Mackintosh removed to London in 1803. His Scottish dance music is of considerable merit. He published four books of compositions and arrangements: 'Airs, Minuets, Gavottes and Reels' (1782); 'Sixty-eight New Reels' (1792); a second book (1793); 'A Third Book of Sixty-eight New Reels' (1796); 'A Fourth Book of new Strathspey Reels' (c.

1804-5). All, except the last, which was published in London, were issued in Edinburgh, in folio. It is said that Mackintosh gave the first professorial lessons on the violin to Nathaniel Gow, on the latter's first coming to Edinburgh.

H. G. F.

BIBL.—FARMER, HENRY G., 'A History of Music in Scotland' (London, 1947), pp. 313, 341, 344.

GLEN, JOHN, 'The Glen Collection of Scottish Dance Music' (Edinburgh, 1891), I, xi.

GOW, NIEL (secundus), 'Collection of Airs, Reels and Strathspeys' (Edinburgh, 1837), preface.

See also Shirrefs (A.).

MACKLEAN, Charles (b. ?; d. ? Edinburgh, c. 1772).

Scottish violinist and composer. He is first known in connection with a music school at Montrose between 1731 and 1736. In the latter year he succeeded Alexander Scott (1721-36) as Master of the Aberdeen Song School, where he taught the spinet, harpsichord, violin and flute for 300 marks per annum, remaining until 1740. Meanwhile he published a most interesting 'Twelve Solos or Sonata's for a Violin and Violoncello with a Thorough Bass for the Harpsichord . . .', Op. 1 (Edinburgh, 1737), the last four solos being for the traverso — the German flute.¹ We also come across a few stray items from the pen of "Mr. McLean" in Neil Stewart's 'Collection of Marches and Airs' (Edinburgh, c. 1756) and in the Gillespie Manuscript (1768) in the National Library of Scotland. There was also published 'A Collection of Favourite Scots Tunes with Variations for the Violin &c. and a Bass for the Violoncello or Harpsichord by the Late Mr. Chas. McLean and other Eminent Masters'. It was issued by Neil Stewart, Edinburgh, c. 1770 (according to W. Barclay Squire) or c. 1772 (as dated by Frank Kidson). Kidson thought it "doubtful" whether he was the same as the Charles Macklean who composed the 'Twelve Solos' (1737), although both W. Barclay Squire and Alfred Moffat thought otherwise. Indeed, as the latter shows, "there are certain points in the style which remind us strongly of the [Twelve Solos or] Sonatas". That there is a difference in the spelling of the name does not count for anything, since the engraver of the latter work gives the publisher's address as "Parliament Squair".

Nothing further is known about Mac(k)-lean, but on the title-page of the 1770-72 publication he is referred to as "the Late Mr. Chs. McLean", which shows perhaps his recent decease. There was a "Mr. McLean" as a partner of Neil Stewart, the music publisher, in a "Music School" from 1773 to 1775. If this is the same as the composer, the date of the 'Collection of Favourite Scots Tunes', which has been assigned to 1770 or 1772, is certainly too early. H. G. F.

¹ The fifth of the solos, a Sonata in E major, was edited by Alfred Moffat and published in Novello's 'Old English Violin Music' (No. 10). The ninth solo, for flute and pianoforte, was edited by Dr. Ernest Bullock and published by the O.U.P. (1948).

BIBL.—FARMER, HENRY G., 'A History of Music in Scotland' (London, 1947), pp. 329-31.

KIDSON, FRANK, 'British Music Publishers' (London, 1900), pp. 182, 196.

MOFFAT, ALFRED, 'Old English Violin Music', No. 10 (Novello & Co., London), Pref. Note.

SQUIRE, W. BARCLAY, 'Catalogue of Printed Music in the British Museum' (London, 1912), II, p. 78.

MACLEAN, Alick (Alexander Morvaren) (b. Eton, 20 July 1872; d. ?, 18 May 1936).

English conductor and composer. He inherited his musical gifts from his father, Charles Maclean. He was educated at Eton and began operatic composition with 'Crichton' (3-act comic opera) and the first version of 'Quentin Durward' (1892-93), and had considerable success both as composer and conductor. In 1895 he won the Moody-Manners prize for a one-act opera by a British subject with 'Petruccio'; he became musical director to Sir Charles Wyndham (1899), to the Spa Company at Scarborough (1911) and conducted at Chappell's Ballad Concerts (Queen's Hall, London) in 1915-23. His principal operatic productions were the following:

'Petruccio' (after Shakespeare's 'Taming of the Shrew'), prod. London, Covent Garden Theatre, 29 June 1895.

'The King's Price', prod. London, Royalty Theatre, 29 Apr. 1904.

'Die Liebesgeige' (libretto on François Coppée's 'Le Luthier de Crémone'), prod. Mainz, 15 Apr. 1906.

'Maitre Seiler', prod. London, Lyric Theatre, 20 Aug. 1909.

'Waldidyll' (lib. based on Erckmann-Chatrian), prod. Mainz, 23 Mar. 1913.

'Quentin Durward' (after Scott) (2nd version), prod. Newcastle-on-Tyne, 13 Jan. 1920.

H. G. C., adds.

BIBL.—B.M.S. Ann., 1920 (list of works).

MACLEAN, Charles (Donald) (b. Cambridge, 27 Mar. 1843; d. London, 23 June 1916).

English organist and composer, father of the preceding. He was educated at Shrewsbury and Exeter College, Oxford (being both classical scholar and organist of the latter), studied music under Ferdinand Hiller at Cologne and had an early career as a composer and organist in London. From 1871 to 1875 he was musical director to Eton College. He then spent twenty-two years in India as a civil servant, and subsequently his most important work for music was done in connection with the International Musical Society, where his brilliant linguistic gifts stood him in good stead. He became English editor of that society's publications in 1899 and general secretary of the whole society in 1908. He edited the report volume of the society's Congress held in London in 1911 and continued as secretary until the disruption of the society caused by the war of 1914-18. His compositions are numerous but not important.

H. G. C.

BIBL.—B.M.S. Ann., 1920 (list of works).

MACLEAN, Charles. See MACKLEAN, CHARLES.

Maclean, Murdock. See Rubbra (song). Stanford (5 songs).

McLeish, Archibald. See Chanler (song). Duke (T. W., 'Pole Star for this Year', chorus). Finney (8 songs). Gerhard (R. 'Conquistador', incid. m.). Mills (C., 2 choral works). Newman (W. S., dance m. for 'Colloquy for the States').

MACLENNAN, George S. See SKINNER.

Macleod, Fiona (see also William Sharp). See Bantock (songs). Bax (songs). Boughton ('Immortal Hour', opera). Delius ('Hy-Brazil', song). Griffes (3 poems for voice & orch.). Hart (F., 35 songs). Immortal Hour (Boughton, opera).

M'LEOD, Peter (b. West Calder, Midlothian, 8 May 1797; d. Bonnington nr. Edinburgh, 10 Feb. 1859).

Scottish musical editor and composer. He published several collections of original airs to the words of Scottish poets, such as 'Original National Melodies of Scotland' (1838), 'Original Scottish Melodies', 'New National Songs, the melodies never before published', etc., and was the composer of many now favourite Scots songs, 'Oh! why left I my hame?' being among the most famous of these. His collection of 'Original Scottish Melodies' was published with a view to the completion of the Burns monument in Edinburgh, and the profits of it enabled this to be effected.

F. K.

MACMAHON, Desmond (b. Sunderland, 26 July 1898).

English educationist and composer. He was trained as a violinist, but after the first world war he became a school music teacher at Sheffield, conducting the school choir, which gained him a high reputation. He also wrote a number of works associated with the industry of the city, notably the 'Hallam Overture' and 'Steel'. Later he was appointed Music Adviser to the Education Committee at Manchester (1935) and later to a similar post in Birmingham (1937), where he has remained, continuing his activities as a choral conductor. His other compositions include a Concerto for two trumpets and orchestra, a Concerto for oboe and strings, based on 18th-century melodies, and many choral and orchestral arrangements of folksongs. He has edited numerous song-books and 'The Wellspring of British Music', a collection of folk melodies, national songs and old English tunes, on material from which he has also based five orchestral suites.

C. M. (iii).

See also Birmingham.

MACMILLAN, (Sir) Ernest (Campbell) (b. Mimico, Toronto, 18 Aug. 1893).

Canadian organist, conductor and composer of Scottish descent. His father, the Rev. Alexander MacMillan, Presbyterian minister, a native of Edinburgh, was also a musician and an authority on Christian hymnology. His mother was descended from the earliest Scottish settlers in the Canadian Dominion who emigrated to Nova Scotia in the 18th century. While still a child Ernest MacMillan showed a precocious talent as an organist and made public appearances when ten years old. At thirteen he took the R.C.O. His general education was obtained at the University of Toronto, from which he graduated with honours in modern history. His studies in music were carried on at Edinburgh University under Alfred Hollins and Frederick Niecks.

While he was attending the Bayreuth Festival in 1914 war broke out, and he was interned in Ruhleben from Aug. 1914 to Nov. 1918. As one among many musicians so situated he made an intensive study of all important orchestral scores and took part as conductor in musical entertainments. At Christmas 1916 he conducted a performance of 'The Mikado', arranged by prisoners as an entertainment for officials of the United States Embassy who had visited Ruhleben on behalf of the allied powers. While still a prisoner, Oxford conferred on him in absentia the degree D.Mus., his doctoral thesis being an overture and choral and orchestral setting of Swinburne's ode 'England'.

On his release MacMillan returned to Canada and settled at Toronto, filling many engagements as a concert organist in the U.S.A. In 1926 he was appointed principal of the Toronto Conservatory of Music in succession to A. S. Vogt, and in 1931 he was chosen as conductor of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra. Within four years he built up the organization so that it takes rank among the leading orchestras of North America. He has also served as guest conductor in many centres of the U.S.A., Great Britain and the Continent of Europe. He has been responsible for many first performances of important works in Canada.

MacMillan's activities have been a great stimulus to musical effort in many parts of his native country, and his services have been in demand as adjudicator at musical festivals on both sides of the Atlantic. He conducted the first performance of Vaughan Williams's 'Hugh the Drover' in America, at Toronto in 1931, and other operatic performances have been given under his baton. His compositions include several string quartets and settings of French-Canadian and Indian folk tunes; and he has edited 'Four Chansons of French Canada', 'Twenty-one Chansons and Carols of French Canada' and 'Three Indian Songs of the West Coast'. He is the author (with Boris Berlin) of several textbooks for students.

H. C. (ii).

Macmillan, George A. See Royal College of Music.

M'MURDIE, Joseph (b. London, 1792; d. Merton, Surrey, 23 Dec. 1878).

British composer. He was a pupil of Crotch and composed many glees (principally for the Concentores Societies) and songs, and made numerous arrangements for the pianoforte. He was for some time a director of the Philharmonic Society.

W. H. H.

MACNAGHTEN, Anne (Catherine) (b. Whitwick, Leicestershire, 9 Aug. 1908).

English violinist. The daughter of an eminent judge, the Rt. Hon. Sir Malcolm Macnaghten, she was educated in London and matriculated in 1925. Her musical education was completed at Leipzig in 1926-29. Never attracted by solo concert work and deeply interested in chamber music, she devoted all her activities to the cultivation of that branch of her art. In 1931, in conjunction with Iris Lemare, she organized series of chamber concerts in London, held at the Mercury Theatre; they continued until 1936, introducing new works by young British composers (Elizabeth Maconchy, Elisabeth Lutyens, Imogen Holst, Benjamin Britten, Alan Rawsthorne and others). Meanwhile, in 1932, she had formed the Macnaghten String Quartet, which consisted entirely of women players and made a speciality of performing all its programmes from memory. It continued, with some changes, until 1940, when the second world war forcibly brought it to an end. From Sept. 1945 to July 1947 Anne Macnaghten was leader of a string quartet playing for the Music in Schools Scheme at Barking, and from Sept. 1948 she did the same kind of educational work at Ealing. That year she formed the Macnaghten Quartet anew, with her second husband, Arnold Ashby, as violoncellist. E. B.

McNally, Leonard. See Cogan ('Ruling Passion', opera). Robin Hood (Shield, ballad opera).

McNAUGHT, William (Gray) (b. London, 30 Mar. 1849; d. London, 13 Oct. 1918).

English musical educationist and editor. He had been engaged in a business career before he entered the R.A.M. in London as a student (1872-76). During his studentship he was active as a choral conductor, notably at the Bow and Bromley Institute, with which he was closely associated for sixteen years. In such work he naturally became convinced of the practical value of the tonic sol-fa notation, and in his subsequent work as a teacher, lecturer and journalist he laid stress on its uses. For some years he was in charge of music at the Homerton Training College, and he then became assistant inspector in music under the Board of Education. In 1892 the 'School Music Review' was founded by Novello under his editorship, a publication through which a large number of folksongs, national songs and new compositions were made available for school use. As a judge at the competition festivals McNaught, by wide experience and kindly good sense, carried great weight and exerted a far-reaching influence on the quality of the performances achieved therein.

In 1909 McNaught succeeded F. G. Edwards as editor of 'The Musical Times', and he retained the editorship until his death.

H. C. C.

McNAUGHT, William (b. London, 1 Sept. 1883; d. London, 9 June 1953).

English music critic, author and editor, son of the preceding. He was educated at University College School and at Worcester College, Oxford, became assistant editor of the 'Musical Times' under his father and editor in succession to Harvey Grace in 1944. His book, 'Modern Music and Musicians', is a brilliant critical exposition, admirably free from prejudice of any sort, of various tendencies and techniques in 20th-century composition. As a writer of programme notes and gramophone reviews McNaught was unsurpassed.

H. C. C., adds.

McNeice, Louis. See Alwyn ('The Careerist', radio prod.; songs). Britten ('Dark Tower', radio play). Garland for the Queen (Rawsthorne, choral song). Seiber ('Grettir the Strong', incid. m.).

MAÇON, LE (Opera). See AUBER.

MACONCHY, Elizabeth (b. Broxbourne, Herts., 19 Mar. 1907).

English composer of Irish parentage. She studied at the R.C.M. in London from 1923 to 1929 and later went to Prague with the Blumenthal travelling scholarship, where her first substantial work, a pianoforte Concerto, was performed under Karel Jiráček in 1930. Her teachers at the R.C.M. were Charles Wood, C. H. Kitson and Vaughan Williams for composition, and Arthur Alexander for pianoforte. Though she took an A.R.C.M. for solo pianoforte performance, her talent, which showed itself at the early age of six, has been for composition, predominantly instrumental composition. She so impressed the juries of the I.S.C.M. that in the 1930s her works were played at its festivals with fair regularity. Her chamber music, which is her most frequent and most characteristic medium of expression, gained at that time a wide currency on the continent and was played in capitals so diverse as Brussels, Warsaw, Prague and Budapest; in 1937 a whole programme was devoted to five of her compositions at Cracow. At home she gained recognition by winning the third prize in a competition for chamber music organized in 1933 by the 'Daily Telegraph'. Fifteen years later she wrote her fifth string Quartet, which won the prize established in memory of Edwin Evans and once more called attention to her distinctive manner, which had been less prominent in contemporary English music during the disruptions of the war years.

Actually Elizabeth Maconchy has, from the first, continued steadily to compose, despite a period of ill-health, marriage and the domestic rigours of the 1940s. Her 'Dialogue' for pianoforte and strings (1940), her Theme and Variations for strings (1942), her fourth string Quartet (1943), her Sonata for violin and pianoforte (1944) and her Concertino for clarinet and strings (1945) testify to her assiduity at that time, and the Symphony, which took longer to write and was not finished till 1948 nor performed till 1950, must be regarded as the culmination of her constant and concentrated activity as a composer. Concentration is indeed the fundamental, as it is the most conspicuous, feature of her style. There is nothing diffuse in anything she writes and it was a criticism of her Symphony that it was too consistently tense and did not take advantage of the relaxation which the more spacious dimensions of a symphony could have afforded to one accustomed to work in the straiter medium of the string quartet. The Quartets form the central pillar of the edifice of her work as a whole. They are fundamentally contrapuntal in conception and do not therefore follow the outlines of sonata form based on key—she uses no key signatures though she is no atonalist. The Quartets, notably the fourth and fifth, grow out of a group of themes, the third and sixth from a single main theme, which in the case of the last is treated in a passacaglia movement. Her forms therefore are organic: the music is propelled by the force of its own inner logic, and the logic causes new derivative ideas to sprout from the initial idea. She defines her art as the impassioned pursuit of an idea, and in the string quartet, by abjuring the side-issues of tone-colour and the expressiveness of the voice, she seeks, and obtains, a taut musical argument, a "passionately intellectual and an intellectually passionate discourse". Her artistic bias is indeed intellectual, rather than sensuous or imaginative, which is not to say that it is either cold or calculated; but it springs from and is addressed more directly to the mind than to the sensibility or the emotions.

But idea, feeling and logic are inextricable; how much they are at one in the creative art, even beyond the composer's own awareness, is demonstrated by the Concertino for clarinet and strings, which was played at the Copenhagen Festival of the I.S.C.M. in 1947, but was a product of the war years and had its character determined by the composer's physical environment at the time it was written. The listener attempting to define its difference from the tight argument of the quartets and symphony would be driven to call its chromatic agitation romantic. Even here the thematic material is closely related and based on ideas formed on close intervals, which is the most marked feature of her personal idiom. She has, for instance, written an 'Impromptu' for pianoforte solo which is a fantasy on one note, and the sharp and flat inflections of seconds and thirds are the chief counters of thought in all her principal works. Such close intervals insistently worked into a contrapuntal texture are conducive to compact argument, but not to vocal writing. In 'A Winter's Tale', which is for soprano voice and string quartet, the voice declaims the words but is treated instrumentally.

There are, however, a few songs and some early eight-part motets, settings of Donne, which have been followed twenty years later by six settings of Yeats for three-part women's chorus with harp, clarinet and two horns. Here we find a new feeling for instrumental colour and a willingness to employ a more traditional style of vocal writing. Elizabeth Maconchy thus has the rare distinction of having by austerity of purpose mastered the ardours of musical thought, relaxing in lighter moments to the wit of her ballet suites, 'Great Agrippa' (1933) and 'Puck Fair' (Promenade Concerts, 1942), before allowing herself the easier imaginative stimuli of words, colours and emotions of everyday life. F. S. H.

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

BALLETS

- 'Great Agrippa' (from Heinrich Hoffmann's 'Struwwelpeter') (1933).
- 'The Little Red Shoes' (after Hans Andersen) (1934-1935).
- 'Puck Fair' (1940).

CHORAL WORKS

- 'The Leaden Echo and the Golden Echo' (Gerard Manley Hopkins) for small chorus & chamber orch. (1930-31).
- 2 Motets (John Donne) for unaccomp. double chorus (1931)
 1. A Hymn to Christ.
 2. A Hymn to God the Father.
- 'The Voice of the City' (Jacqueline Morris) for unaccomp. women's chorus (1943).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Suite 'The Land' (on a poem by Victoria Sackville-West) (1929).
- Suite for chamber orch. (1930).
- Theme and Variations for stgs. (1942).
- Variations on a Well-known Theme (for Vaughan Williams's 70th birthday) (1942).
- Symphony (1945-48).

SOLO AND ORCHESTRA

- Concerto for pf. & chamber orch. (1928).
- Viola Concerto (1937).
- 'Dialogue' for pf. & orch. (1940).
- Concertino for clar. & stgs. (1945).
- Sonnet Sequence (Kenneth Gee) for soprano & stgs. (1946).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- Quintet for oboe & stgs. (1932).
- String Quartet No. 1 (1933).
- Duo for 2 vns. (Prelude, Interlude and Fugue) (1934).
- String Quartet No. 2 (1936).
- String Quartet No. 3 (1938).
- String Quartet No. 4 (1942-43).
- String Quartet No. 5 (1948).
- 'A Winter's Tale' (Kenneth Gee) for soprano & stg. 4tet (1949).

SOLO INSTRUMENTS

- 5 Pieces for unaccomp. viola (1937).
- Sonata for viola & pf. (1938).
- Sonata for vn. & pf. (1943-44).
- Serenade for cello & pf. (1944).

PIANOFORTE SOLO

- Impromptu (1939).
- Suite 'A Country Town', for children (1939).
- Contrapuntal Pieces (1940-41).

SONGS

- 'Ophelia's Song' (Shakespeare) (1926).
- 'A Meditation for his Mistress' (Herrick) (1926).
- 'Have you seen but a bright lily grow?' (Ben Jonson) (1929).
- 'The Woodspurge' (Christina Rossetti) (1930).
- 'The Thrush' (Keats) (1935).
- 'The Arab' (Meredith) (1935).
- 'Sleep brings no joy to me' (Emily Brontë) (1937).
- 'How Samson bore away the Gates of Gaza', scena (Nicholas Vachell Lindsay) (1937).
- 'The Garland', cycle (trans. from the Greek by W. R. Le Fanu) for soprano (1938).
- 'The Winkle Woman' (Eamonn Clifford) (1940).
- 2 Songs (Sheila Wingfield) (1941)
 1. Sailor's Song.
 2. The Disillusion.

McPHEE, Colin (b. Montreal, Canada, 15 Mar. 1901).

American composer. His first serious studies in composition were made with Strube at Baltimore, and thereafter he went to Paris, where he worked at pianoforte with Philipp and composition with Le Flem. Later, back in New York, he worked with Varèse at composition.

McPhee's output is more notable for its quality than for its quantity, his short list of rare works having been composed before and after his sojourn of many years in Bali, where he was engaged in research.

His 'Revelation of St. John the Disciple' was a League of Composers' Commission. His 'Sea Shanty Suite' was first produced by the Princeton Glee Club and has since been widely heard. His Concerto for pianoforte and wind octet and the 'Iroquois Dances' were heard in New York and elsewhere. His Symphony (based on Balinese musical systems), 'Tabuh-Tabuhan', was written for and first produced by Carlos Chávez and the Mexico City Orchestra. It has had several subsequent performances in Mexico and in New York.

McPhee was twice awarded the Guggenheim Fellowship, and also a Bollingen Foundation Grant (1949). He has written witty and penetrating criticism of jazz for a column that he conducted for the League of Composers' journal 'Modern Music'.

During the 1930s McPhee lived in Bali, where he made a comprehensive study of the music, drama and ceremonials of Java and Bali, compiling the most complete record extant of that ancient and fabulous musical art. Known as one of the few authorities in the world on his subject, he has published in both Java and New York monographs and booklets on music, dance and the shadow plays. His two books, 'A House in Bali' and

'A Club of Small Men', have been hailed as classics of their kind, and these, together with his articles on modern music, jazz and various aspects of Indonesian life and art, have won him a unique reputation as writer and musical anthropologist.

As a composer and brilliant pianist McPhee was instantly attracted to the Gamelan percussion orchestras of Bali; they represented to him a gigantic and imaginative extension of the keyboard, and his own work, 'Tabuh-Tabuhan', is in no sense a transcription of Balinese materials: rather has he taken the underlying principles in their construction, the pentatonic scale, the block polyphonic structure of melody and rhythm without harmony, and has evolved from this starting-point his own vivid, stylized and powerfully free form of expression. As a synthesis of ancient and modern elements 'Tabuh-Tabuhan' is a work without parallel, and one that alone would make McPhee an important composer.

McPhee's chief compositions are:

- 'Sea Shanty Suite' for baritone, men's chorus, 2 pfs., & 2 sets of timp. (1929).
- 'From "The Revelation of St. John the Divine"' for men's chorus, 3 trumpets, 2 pfs. & 2 timp. (1935).
- 'Tabuh-Tabuhan', for orch. (1936).
- 'Four Iroquois Dances', for orch. (1944).
- Concerto for pf. & wind octet (1929).
- 'Balinese Ceremonial Music' for 2 pfs. & flute (1942).
- 'Invention' for pf.
- 'Kinesis' for pf.

P. G.-H.

MACPHERSON, Charles (b. Edinburgh, 10 May 1870; d. London, 28 May 1927).

Scottish organist and composer. His father was Burgh Architect to the city of Edinburgh. At the age of nine Charles Macpherson entered the choir of St. Paul's Cathedral in London; he remained there till 1887, when he was appointed choirmaster under Dr. Pearce at the London church of St. Clement's, Eastcheap. Sir George Martin gave him organ lessons. He entered the R.A.M. in 1890 and won the Charles Lucas prize in 1892, becoming A.R.A.M. in 1896. After first holding the post of private organist to Sir Robert Menzies, at Weem, Perthshire, and afterwards to Mme de Falbe, at Luton Hoo, Bedfordshire, he returned to London, being appointed in 1895 sub-organist of St. Paul's, a post of much responsibility as regards the choir as well as organ playing, and this he filled until the death of Sir George Martin in 1916, when he succeeded to the organist's post. He conducted the London Church Choirs Association from 1914 till his death, served as President of the R.C.O. and was a professor at the R.A.M. The degree of Mus.D. was conferred on him (honoris causa) by Durham University in 1919.

Macpherson's compositions include a setting of Psalm CXXXVII for chorus and orchestra; nine anthems and other church music; three Gaelic melodies, accompanied on strings and harp; an overture, 'Cridhe an Ghaidhil', played at the Crystal Palace in 1895; a 'Highland Suite' for orchestra, another suite, 'Hallowe'en'; a Quartet in E \flat major for strings and pianoforte, and two movements of a Sextet for wind instruments. His glee 'There sits a bird' gained the prize given in 1893 by the Bristol Orpheus Glee Society.

J. A. F.-M. & H. C. C.

Macpherson, James. See Ossian.

MACPHERSON, Stewart (b. Liverpool, 29 Mar. 1865; d. London, 27 Mar. 1941).

English organist, teacher, writer on music and composer of Scottish descent. He was educated at the City of London School and won the Sterndale Bennett open scholarship at the R.A.M., entering that institution in 1880. He was a pupil of Macfarren for composition and of Walter Macfarren for the pianoforte. He gained the Balfé scholarship in 1882, the Charles Lucas medal for composition in 1884 and the Potter exhibition in 1885. At the conclusion of his studentship in 1887 he was appointed professor of harmony and composition and made an Associate of the institution, becoming a Fellow in 1892.

He was appointed organist of Immanuel Church, Streatham Common, in 1885, and in the same year became conductor of the Westminster Orchestral Society, a post which he held until 1902. He also conducted the Streatham Choral Society from 1886 to 1904. In 1898 he was appointed examiner to the Associated Board of the R.A.M. and R.C.M., and in that capacity visited Canada, Australia, New Zealand and Ceylon in 1900. In 1903 he succeeded Corder as professor of composition at the Royal Normal College for the Blind and was appointed a member of the Board of Musical Studies in the University of London. He lectured at the R.A.M. and in many parts of the country, and specialized in the teaching of "musical appreciation" and kindred matters.

Macpherson was founder of the Music Teachers' Association in 1908 and its chairman till 1923. He became a member of the Associated Board in 1925 and still retained that position after his retirement from his teaching at the R.A.M. in 1931. He was Dean of the Faculty of Music in the University of London (1925-27) and for some years a director of the Royal Philharmonic Society.

His compositions include a Symphony in C major (1888), two overtures and short pieces for orchestra. More important is a Mass in D major for solo voices, chorus and orchestra, produced at St. James's Hall in May 1898. Many songs, pianoforte pieces and services were published and a 'Concerto alla fantasia' for violin and orchestra was played at the Queen's Hall Promenade Concert in 1904.

The following are Macpherson's books :

- 'Practical Harmony' (trans. German) with Appendix 350 exercises.
- 'Practical Counterpoint.'
- 'Rudiments of Music.'
- 'Form in Music.'
- 'Music and its Appreciation.'
- 'Aural Culture based upon Musical Appreciation', with Ernest Read, 3 parts.
- 'Studies in Phrasing and Form.'
- 'Musical Education of the Child.'
- 'Melody and Harmony' (1920).
- 'The Appreciation Class' (1923).
- 'Studies in the Art of Counterpoint' (1927).
- 'An Introduction to the Principles of Tonality' (1929).
- 'A Commentary on the Forty-eight Preludes and Fugues of Bach' (Vol. I, 1934; Vol. II, 1937).
- 'First Steps in Musicianship', with Hilda Collens (1934).
- 'Cameos of Musical History' (1937; new and revised ed., 1938).

J. A. F.-M. & H. C. C.

MCQUAID, John (b. Lochgelly, Fifeshire, 14 Mar. 1909).

Scottish composer. He was educated at St. Mungo's Academy and University at Glasgow, and also spent some time in 1929-30 at the École Normale of La Roche-sur-Yon in France. He studied music with Erik Chisholm in 1934-39 and in 1937 was assistant master at his former Glasgow school. He was co-founder, with Chisholm, of the Celtic Ballet Society in 1938. In 1941-46 he served with H.M. Forces in W. Africa, India and Burma. On being demobilized he was awarded a Carnegie Travelling Grant, which enabled him to undertake research in Scottish music of the 16th and 17th centuries at Edinburgh University. In connection with these studies he compiled a biographical index of Scottish musicians of that period.

McQuaid's compositions include a ballet for Lady Galloway's play 'The Witch Ladye', Symphony and 'Symphonic Study' for orch., 'African Melodies' for oboe, vn., cello & pf. and suite 'The Sea', 'Elegy' and 'Impromptu' for pf. E. B.

MACQUE, Giovanni (de) (b. Valenciennes, c. 1551; d. Naples, Sept. 1614).

Flemish composer. The evidence for his nationality and for his place and approximate date of birth is to be found on the title-page of a collection of motets published in Rome in 1596 ("Joannis Macque, Valentiniatis Belgae"), on his marriage contract of 1592 ("fiammingo della Città di Valencena") and in the date of his first published works (Venice, 1576). He was, like Carolus Luython, a pupil of Philippe de Monte. At the age of about fifteen he went to Italy, where he spent the rest of his life; at first he stayed in Rome for at least five years, and he is next heard of in the service of Don Fabrizio Gesualdo (father of the composer Carlo Gesualdo) at Naples in 1586. There Macque found himself in a circle of congenial companions, such as Fabrizio and Scipione Dentice, Scipione Cerreto, Gian Leonardo dell' Arpa and others, all passionately fond of music.

On 20 May 1590 Macque was appointed second organist of the Neapolitan Church of the Annunciation; the choir of this church was one of the finest in Europe, under the direction of its choirmaster, the aged composer Gian Domenico de Nola. Macque's salary was soon raised from 10 to 12 ducats a month, as the result of his very satisfactory work at the church. His marriage contract contains a curious clause forbidding him ever to leave Naples; in fact he remained there for the rest of his life, entering the royal chapel on 11 Sept. 1594 at a monthly salary of 16 ducats, later raised to 19. In Dec. 1599 he was promoted to the post of director of music of the chapel, assisted by some of his more promising pupils, notably G. M. Trabaci and Ascanio Mayone. The chapel choir was enlarged considerably at this time, one of the tenors being the famous theorist Pedro Cerone, author of an encyclopedic book on music, published in 1613. Other pupils were Luigi Rossi and Falconieri. Macque died in 1614, after holding the post of director of music for fifteen years to the great satisfaction of four successive viceroys.

Macque was a prolific composer of madrigals and, to a lesser extent, motets. His publications extend from 1576 to 1613; the madrigals include 2 books a 6, 6 a 5, 3 a 4, 1 a 4, 5 and 6, and two books of 'Madrigaletti e canzonette napolitane' a 6. Some of these are now lost, others have survived incomplete. Several of his madrigals and motets were reprinted in various collected editions of the time, including Yonge's 'Musica Transalpina' (1588) and Morley's Italian collection (1598). A certain amount of Macque's keyboard music has survived in manuscript, being printed in its entirety in the volume listed below. Much of it is highly experimental (note especially the very curious chromatic harmonies in the two 'Stravaganze' and the 'Toccata a modo di trombette'). A complete list of his works, a biography and a bibliography are also to be found in this volume. R. T. D.

BIBL.—EINSTEIN, A., 'The Italian Madrigal' (Princeton & Oxford, 1949), pp. 697-98.

'Monumenta Musicae Belgicae', Year IV: C. Guillet, G. (de) Macque, C. Luython (werken voor orgel of voor vier speeltuigen), ed. J. Watelet, with biographical introductions by A. Piscaer (Antwerp, 1938).

MACROPEDIUS, Georgius (Georges van Langhveldt or Lankveld) (b. Gemert nr. 's Hertogenbosch, c. 1475; d. 's Hertogenbosch, July 1558).

Dutch grammarian, poet, philosopher and composer. He became a monk of the order of St. Jerome, taught Greek and Latin and then directed the school at 's Hertogenbosch, which counted some 1200 pupils. Later he became rector at Utrecht, where he had taught from 1537 at the latest; but he retired to 's Hertogenbosch, where he died. His compositions include hymns and sequences, as well as settings of the choruses in his Latin comedies, of which 11 were published in 1552-53 under the title of 'Omnes Georgii Macropedii fabulae comicae, . . .'. E. B.

BIBL.—LILIENCRON, R. VON, Article (V. f. M., VI, 1890), with 10 examples of the choruses in the comedies. WECKERLIN, J. B., Catalogue (1885), p. 364, with a musical example.

MacSwiney, Owen. See Leveridge ('Quacks', songs).

MACURA, Władysław (b. Silesia, 1898; d. ?, 1935).

Polish composer. He was a pupil of Schreker in Vienna. He composed very many partsongs and solo songs. His nursery songs enjoyed great popularity in Poland. He also wrote several orchestral works, frequently based on Polish folk tunes from Silesia. His ballet 'Kleks' ('A Blot') was staged at the Warsaw Opera in 1929. C. R. H.

MACZYNSKI, Fabian (b. ?; d. ?).

Polish 18th-century composer. Of all his works only one remains: 'L' arpa, arietta, minuet con quattro variazioni e con due balli pollachi' (1780). C. R. II.

Madách, Imre. See Buttykay ('Tragedy of Man', incid. m.). Farkas (F., do.).

MADAMA BUTTERFLY. Opera in 3 (originally 2) acts by Puccini. Libretto by Giuseppe Giacosa and Luigi Illica, based on David Belasco's dramatic version of a story by John Luther Long. Produced Milan, Teatro alla Scala, 16 Feb. 1904. After the failure of the original version, which was taken off after the first night, the new version was produced at Brescia, 28 May 1904. 1st perf. abroad, Buenos Aires (in Italian), 2 July 1904. 1st in England, London, Covent Garden Theatre (in Italian), 10 July 1905. 1st in U.S.A., New York (in English), 12 Nov. 1906.

MADAME CHRYSANTHEME (Opera).

See MESSENGER.

MADAME FAVART (Operetta). See OFFENBACH.

MADAME L' ARCHIDUC (Operetta). See OFFENBACH.

MADAME SANS-GÊNE (Opera). See GIORDANO.

Madariaga, Salvador de. See Barraud ('Numance', lib.). Gerhard (R. 'Cristóbal Colón', incid. m.). Tansman ('Toison d'or', opera; 'Mappemonde', incid. m.).

MADEMOISELLE FIFI (Opera). See CUI.

MADETOJA, Leevi (Antti) (b. Oulu [Uleåborg], 17 Feb. 1887; d. Helsingfors, 6 Oct. 1947).

Finnish conductor, critic, teacher and composer. He studied privately at Oulu at an early age and then became a pupil of Järnefelt and Sibelius. In 1910 he went to Paris and became a pupil of d'Indy for a year, and finally he studied under Robert Fuchs in Vienna. On his return to Finland he was appointed conductor of the Helsingfors orchestra for two years (1912-14), but in 1914-16 he was in charge of the orchestra at Viipuri (Viborg). In 1916 he was appointed teacher at the Helsingfors Conservatory and in 1926 at the University. In 1937 he received the Professor's title. He was also music critic of the 'Helsingin Sanomat' from 1916 to 1936.

Madetoja was, next to Sibelius, the most considerable Finnish composer of his time. His music is characterized by a deep and warm humanity and by a poet's sensitivity. He is a truly national composer, a "bard of the North", in whose style there are, it is true, traces of French impressionism, but whose musical personality shows great individuality and power. His work holds a quite exceptionally high place in the estimation of the Finnish musical world, but has merits which give it significance beyond his country's boundaries. Though Madetoja is as yet little known outside Finland, there are signs of an awakening of interest in his work in several countries, including the U.S.A. and Great Britain, where his second Symphony has been several times conducted by Clarence Raybould.

His opera, 'Pohjalaisia', produced at Helsingfors on 25 Oct. 1924, has had a success wherever performed. It has been given more than a hundred times in Finland and was also performed at Kiel (1926), Stockholm (1927, revived 1950), Göteborg (1930), Berlin (broadcast 1931), Copenhagen (1932) and later on in Budapest. His second and last opera, 'Juha', was produced at Helsingfors on 17 Feb. 1935.

Madetoja was married to the distinguished Finnish poetess L. Onerva (b. 28 Apr. 1882), on whose verse he drew largely for his songs and choral works.

BIBL.—TUUKKANEN, K., 'Leevi Madetoja: Suomalainen säveltäjä persoonallisuus' ('L. M.: a Finnish Composer's Personality') (Helsingfors, 1947).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

OPERAS

Op.

45. 'Pohjalaisia' ('Dwellers in Pohjanmaa' [Ostrobothnia]), 3 acts (libretto by Artturi Jarviluoma) (1923).

74. 'Juha', 6 scenes (lib. by Juhani Aho) (1934).

BALLET

58. 'Okon Fuoko' (scen. by Poul Knudsen), 1 act, prod. Helsingfors, 2 Dec. 1930.

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

5. 'Shakkipeli' ('A Game of Chess'), E. Leino (1910).
6. 'Alkibiades', E. Leino (1910).
75. 'Life is a Dream', Calderón (1930).
— 'Oedipus Rex', Sophocles (1936).
80. 'Antony and Cleopatra', Shakespeare (1944).
— 'Olviretki Schleusingenissa' ('A Beer Trip to Schleusingen'), comedy by A. Kivi (1944).

FILM MUSIC

77. 'Taistelu Heikkilän talosta' ('The Fight for Heikkilä's House') (1936).

CHORAL WORKS WITH ORCHESTRA

(some with solo voices, some with string orchestra, some with organ)

10. Cantata 'Merikoski' (V. A. Koskenniemi) (1911)
22. University Cantata (E. V. Knappe) (1914).

- Op.*
 24. 'Sammon ryöstö' ('The Capture of Sampo'), from the 'Kalevala' (1913).
 27. 3 Choruses
 1. 'Kevät hymni' ('Spring Hymn') (L. Onerva) (1912).
 2. 'Stabat Mater' (Jacopone da Todì) (1915).
 3. 'Isänmaan virsi' ('Psalm of the Native Land') (N. Mantere) (1917).
 37. 'Aslak Smaukka' (Larin Kyösti) (1917).
 40. 3 Songs (1917-18).
 42. 5 Songs (1913-19).
 46. 'Väinämöisen kylvö' ('Väinämöinen's Sowing') from the 'Kalevala' (1919).
 47. 'Eläimän päivät' ('Days of Life') (Koskenniemi), cantata in 6 movements (1919).
 48. 'Napuen sankareille' ('To the Heroes of Napue') (A. V. Koskimies) (1919).
 59. 'Planeettain laulu' ('Song of the Planets') (Koskenniemi), cantata (1927).
 61. 'Pako Egyptiin' ('The Flight to Egypt') (Onerva) (1924).
 63. 'Lux triumphans' (O. Manninen), cantata in 3 movements (1927).
 64. 'Suomi' ('Finland'), being the Finnish contribution to a club cantata, 'A Song of the North', by Scandinavian composers (1929).
 70. Cantata for the 150th anniversary of Tampere (L. Pohjanpää) (1929).
 72. 'Suomen itsenäisyyden kuusi' ('The Fir Tree of Finnish Independence') (Rudolf Ray) (1931).
 73. 'Karitsan lippu' ('The Banner of the Lamb') (Pohjanpää), sacred cantata in 3 movements (1934).
 76. 'Vainamöinen soitto' ('The Play of Väinämöinen') from the 'Kalevala', festival cantata in 4 movements (1935).
 78. 'Lauluseppel' ('Wreath of Songs') (Pohjanpää), cantata in 3 movements (1938).
 — 'Integer vitae' (Horace).
 — Psalm CXXI (1936).

UNACCOMPANIED CHORUS

- 8, 23, 33, 62, 66, 81. Partsongs for men's voices (1908-1929).
 13, 30, 50, 82. Partsongs for mixed voices (1908-46).
 28. Partsongs for women's voices (1916 & 1925).
 54. 3 Vesper Songs and 3 Antiphons (1925).
 56. 'De profundis', 4 pieces (1925).
 — 13 Partsongs for mixed voices (1922-25).
 57. 3 Folksongs for solo voice and mixed chorus (1927).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

4. 'Suite symphonique' (1910).
 7. Concert Overture (1911).
 11. 'Tanssinäky' ('Dream Vision') (1911-12).
 12. 5 Pieces arr. for orch. (1912) (see also Pianoforte Music).
 15. Symph. poem 'Kullervo' from the 'Kalevala' (1913).
 29. Symphony No. 1, F ma. (1915).
 34. 4 Pieces arr. for orch. (1916) (see also Pianoforte Music).
 35. Symphony No. 2, E♭ ma. (1917-18).
 53. Comedy Overture (1923).
 55. Symphony No. 3, A ma. (1926).

BRASS BAND MUSIC

67. 3 Pieces (1929).
 69. 'Ouverture-Fantaisie' (1930).

CHAMBER MUSIC

1. Trio for vn., cello & pf. (1909-10).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

3. Ballad and Scherzo (1910).
 14. 5 Pieces (1912).
 18. 5 Folksongs from Pohjanmaa (1913).
 19. Sonata (1913).
 38. 'Romances intimes', 4 pieces (1917).
 — 'Melodia intima' (1923).

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

51. 'Lyric Suite' (1921-22).

CLARINET AND PIANOFORTE

- 2 Polkas (Finnish folk dances).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- Op.*
 12. 6 Pieces (1912).
 17. 3 Pieces (1912).
 21. 5 Small Pieces (1914).
 31. 4 Pieces (1915).
 — 'Berceuse' (1915).
 34. 4 Pieces (1916).
 41. 'Kuoleman puutarha' ('The Garden of Death'), 3 movements (1918-19).
 65. 5 Pieces (1928 & 1942).

SONGS

2. 4 Songs (1908).
 9. 5 Songs (1911-12).
 16. 3 Songs (1912).
 18. 5 Folksongs from Pohjanmaa (1913).
 20. 3 Patriotic Songs and 5 Songs for the Young (1912-1919).
 25. 5 Songs (1915).
 26. 5 Songs (1915-17).
 36. 'Romance sans paroles' (Paul Verlaine) (1916).
 44. 4 Songs (Danish poetry) (1920).
 49. 2 Songs (1920).
 60. 3 Songs (1921 & 1942).
 68. 'Syksy' ('Autumn') (L. Onerva), cycle of 6 songs (1930) (also orch. by the Composer).
 71. 2 Songs (1929).
 79. 2 Songs (1942-44).
 — 7 Sets of songs for various occasions (1910-38).

RECITATION AND PIANOFORTE

32. 2 'Melodramas' (1927)
 1. 'Prometheus' (Goethe, trans. E. Leino).
 2. 'Pövilinnat' ('Castles in the Air') (L. Onerva).

VOCAL DUETS

43. 4 Duets (1919).

A. R.

MADIN (recte Madden), Henri (b. Verdun, 1698; d. Versailles, 1748).

French theorist and composer of Irish origin. His parents came from Eyrecourt, Co. Galway. He developed a taste for music at an early age. His uncle, the Rev. Dr. Ambrose Madden, of Loughrea, was advanced to the bishopric of Kilmacduagh (Ireland) on the nomination of the Pretender, James III, in 1705. In 1730 we find Henri Madin a cleric and maitre de musique in the Cathedral of Tours, a position which he vacated in 1737 for the more important one of deputy maitre de chapelle to the king. He published a treatise on counterpoint in 1742 and was nominated maitre de chapelle to the king in succession to Campra. In June 1742 he is described as "Canon of the Chapel Royal of Saint-Quentin and Master of the Music to the King". Not only was he a good theorist, but he was also a successful choir-trainer and composed many popular motets.

W. H. G. F.

MADONIS, Luigi (b. Venice, c. 1700; d. St. Petersburg, after 1767).

Italian violinist and composer. He was probably a pupil of Vivaldi, lived at Venice in 1725 (where Quantz heard him) and joined a travelling opera company soon after. In 1729 and 1730 he played at the Concert Spirituel in Paris and in 1733 went to Russia, where he seems to have remained for the rest of his life. His works include two sets of violin sonatas (or "symphonies") published in Paris 1731 and St. Petersburg 1738 respectively. Of the second set one copy only has survived, and according to N. Findeisen these sonatas show the rhythmical and melodic influence of Russian folk music to an extent remarkable for that early date. Madonis also contributed additional airs to Hasse's opera 'La clemenza di Tito' when produced at Moscow in 1742, at the coronation of the Tsaritsa Elizabeth.

A. L.

BIBL.—MOOSER, R. A., 'Luigi Madonis' (Riv. Mus. It., 1941).

MADONNA IMPERIA (Opera). See AL-FANO.

MADRIGAL (Ital. madrigale). A form of secular composition for two or more voices practised originally in northern Italy in the 14th century and revived in the 16th and early 17th centuries, during which period it assumed the style by which it is chiefly known and became popular over the greater part of Europe.

The etymology of the word has puzzled philologists for several centuries. It was applied originally to a particular form of short poem of pastoral character, and since such poems were often called mandriali in the 14th century, it was supposed that the word was derived from mandria (Latin mandra and Greek μάνδρα), a herd. The form madriale also appears, and it gave rise to the theory that the madrigal was originally a hymn to the Virgin Mary. It has been shown by Leonardo Biadene, formerly Professor of Neo-Latin Philology in the University of Pisa, that the word comes from a medieval Latin word matricale, meaning a rustic song in the mother tongue.¹ Italian writers on literature in the early 14th century also make use of the words mandriale and marigale as synonyms, the latter word being in more common use. The forms madrigale, marigale and madriale are all easily and naturally derived from matricale under the influence of various North Italian dialects; Biadene regards mandriale as a word invented by the literary men of the 14th century resulting from a fusion of madriale and mandria.

The madrigal as a musical composition makes its first appearance about 1340. Its origin may be traced to the conductus of the French composers in the 13th century, but the great Florentine school of the 14th century has an individual style of its own. The most important composers of this school were Giovanni da Cascia, Jacopo da Bologna and Francesco Landini (d. 1397). Landini is described by contemporary writers as being not only a composer of very moving love-songs, but also as a marvellous performer on the organetto (portative organ). Specimens of his madrigals are quoted by Wooldridge (O.H.M.) and Ludwig (in Adler's 'Handbuch der Musikgeschichte').² The madrigal of this period consists generally of two or three stanzas of three lines each, repeated to the same music and followed by a pair of lines in a different rhythm. The subjects are chiefly amorous, but often satirical or political as well. The music is generally for two voices. Another form common at this period is the caccia (chase), originally used for poems dealing with the chase; the music is for two voices in canon, with a free instrumental bass. It has been suggested by German writers that the English catch is derived from the caccia. Both madrigal and caccia often illustrate the words with a strong sense of musical wit. The madrigals often begin with long florid passages, and it has been suggested by Riemann and others that these were played by instruments.

¹ In an article published in the 'Rassegna Bibliografica di Letteratura Italiana', Vol. VI, Mar.-Apr. 1898. An English translation of this, by the author of the present article, appeared in M. & L., Apr. 1948.

ITALY.—The period of Landini shows secular music considerably in advance of music for the church, but in the 15th century the church seems to have taken the lead. The secular music of the early Netherland school is of comparatively little importance in the history of technical developments. From the beginning of the 16th century onwards the leadership passes to the Italians again. The madrigal and various other secular forms return to prominence, and by the end of the century the madrigal, especially in Italy, represents the most daring advance in the technique of musical composition. The transition is well summarized by Alfred Einstein (Adler's 'Handbuch der Musikgeschichte') as the passage of the principal melody from the tenor to the uppermost part. In the early years of the 15th century the favourite secular form was the chanson of the French and Netherlandish composers. It was in most cases a traditional popular tune, sung by the tenor and accompanied by the other voices in more or less elaborate counterpoint. During the course of the century composers gradually learned to give organic unity to their work by making the subsidiary voices sing free imitations on motives taken from the main tune. It has been well pointed out that the principle of perpetual free and fragmentary imitation was a very important step in musical technique, because it was the first step towards thematic unity and thematic development, neither of which was possible so long as the ideal of absolutely strict canon prevailed. This aspect of technique is best studied in the church music of the period, which offered larger forms than the chanson in which to develop the principle. The chanson, which eventually imposed its definitely French style of expression on the Netherlanders as well, found its most artistic exponent in Josquin des Prés (d. 1521), who has been regarded by the general consensus of musical historians as the first composer whose music appeals unmistakably to our modern sense of the art. It is from Josquin onwards that secular music, which of course is much older, may be said to maintain its own independent life as free composition.

² For complete edition of Landini's works see Bibl. at the end of this article.

The history of secular music in Italy during the first half of the fifteenth century is very obscure. From about 1450 onwards there are numerous songs of a popular nature, especially those connected with the popular festivals of Florence. The most important are the conti carnascialeschi, the words of which were first printed in 1559, edited by Anton Francesco Grazzini, known as Il Lasca. They had been sung in the carnival processions organized by Lorenzo de' Medici, by groups of men dressed up as various types — tradesmen of all sorts, Jews, German soldiers, devils, women (including nuns), etc. Their songs often begin: "We are" so and so, and are addressed to women, often in very insulting terms; the words are often obscene, and in any case there is hardly one that does not convey an obscene meaning. As there was a certain amount of dancing and acting too, these songs have been regarded as contributory to the history of the Italian theatre. The festivities were interrupted during the period of Savonarola's preaching (1490-98), and the songs were often transformed into laudi spirituali by the substitution of religious words to the same tunes. After 1498 the festivities were resumed and the production of secular songs continued, leading to the frottole, collections of which were printed from 1504 to 1514. The music of the canti carnascialeschi was not discovered until 1847, and even then little notice was taken of it. A few songs were transcribed by Eugenia Levi in 1900, but the first serious study of the manuscript in the National Library at Florence was made by Paul Marie Masson, who published a selection of 20 carnival songs in 1913. Since then more manuscripts have been discovered and transcribed.

The carnival songs are largely by Heinrich Isaac (Arrigo il Tedesco), but Italian composers are found among them, notably Bartolomeo Tromboncino and Marchetto Cara. The music is in four parts and intended for male voices, despite the fact that the uppermost part is often written in the soprano clef; it is almost entirely in block harmony. Whether the melody is in the tenor or in the soprano is difficult to guess; the tenor generally makes the normal medieval cadence to the final, but it is often very unmelodious, and the soprano is more interesting. Some of the carnival songs are also included among the printed frottole. The frottola, strictly speaking, is a definite metrical form of poetry, but the printed collections of Petrucci include various other metrical forms, even sonnets of Petrarch. The typical frottola, as a musical composition, is a strophic song (as were all the canti carnascialeschi) with the melody in the soprano; the music is mainly homophonic, but the parts are flowing and agreeable to sing. But there is considerable evidence that they were mostly sung as solo songs with instrumental accompaniment, and it is probable that they were rarely sung by voices in unaccompanied harmony except perhaps out of doors. The frottole are not peasant songs: they were written for educated people, although the words were frivolous and often indecent.

The name madrigale, after having been apparently forgotten (as applying to a musical form) for over a hundred years, was revived again in 1533, when a collection of 'Madrigali noui de diuersi excellentissimi musici' was published by Valerio Dorico in Rome. Out of twenty compositions sixteen have Italian words, the rest French; the composers of the Italian pieces are given as Carlo (3), Constantio F[esta] (2), Sebastiano F[esta] (1), Maistre Jan (1), Jacobo de Tho[scana ?] (1), Verdelot (7) and Anon. (1). The poetical form of the madrigal has been variously defined, according as the authorities followed the examples of the 14th or the 16th centuries. Bembo, the greatest literary authority of the later madrigal period, to whom also the actual musical composition of madrigals owed some of its instigation, says that the madrigal is bound by no rule as to the number of its lines or the arrangement of its rhymes. It was a short poem rarely exceeding twelve lines; its rhymes could be arranged as the poet pleased, provided that the last two lines, which generally formed some sort of pointed coda, should rhyme together; and its lines were free as to length, the metre being iambic, usually of seven or eleven syllables, more rarely of five.

The literary aspect of the madrigal is of great importance. It has been discussed at some length by G. Cesari.¹ The composers of the frottole are mainly Italians, notably Tromboncino and Cara. The madrigal, a reaction against the frivolity and vulgarity of the frottola, was in its early stages the work of Netherlandish composers settled in Italy; but it could not have come into existence but for the incentive of Italian poets. Bembo was the leader of the movement towards an essentially aristocratic poetry that deliberately avoided all contact with that of the common people. The last collection of frottole was printed in 1531; Bembo's famous 'Canzoniere' appeared in 1530 and the first collection of madrigals was set to music in 1533. The disciples of Bembo took Petrarch as their model, and Petrarch himself was one of the poets most often set to music by the madrigalists; but, as John Addington Symonds pointed out, the conditions of social life in Petrarch's own day were very different from those of the Renaissance, and the imitation of Petrarch in the 16th century merely led to preciosity and affectation. Yet this movement, disastrous as it was in some ways to poetry, had a certain very valuable influence on music. In the first place, it made the madrigal the musical expression of the highly cultivated life of the small Italian courts; a definitely aristocratic type of music was created. The Netherlandish composers brought to it the accomplished contrapuntal technique of the motet; but this technique soon had to learn to adjust its paces to the swift and supple rhythms of the new Italian poetry. A typical example of the early madrigal is the well-known poem by Guidiccioni set to equally well-known music by Arcadelt:

¹ Riv. Mus. It., XIX.

Il bianco e dolce cigno
Cantando more, ed io
Piangendo giungo al fin del viver mio.
Strana e diversa sorte,
Ch' ei more sconsolato,
Et io moro beato.
Morte, che nel morire
M' empie di gioia tutto e di desire;
Se nel morir altro dolor non sento,
Di mille mort' il di sarei contento.¹

The ingenious irregularity of its lines and rhymes compel the composer to invent musical forms that will correspond with them. As the ten lines are a complete poem there is no restriction to a simple tune to which a succession of stanzas are to be sung. The poem is short enough to admit of melismata and of contrapuntal elaboration, but, in conformity with the artificial spirit of the words, the counterpoint must be suggested rather than worked out. Music for a cultivated and elegant society must not become boring. Every line of the poem contains at least one word that is full of emotional suggestion — dolce, cantando, piangendo, strana, sconsolato, etc. The word morire bears the erotic double sense familiar in the English madrigal poets. The epigrammatic point made by the final rhymed couplet gives the composer the opportunity of "driving a point" of imitation, in order to end his work with an effective coda. In most madrigals, early or late, this coda, so carefully provided by the poet, is made still more pointed in the music by a repetition.

Most of these early madrigals are largely homophonic, but the parts (at this period four is the usual number) are all melodious and agreeable to sing, whether they move contrapuntally or not. They are probably in the first place intended to be sung by four voices; but it is clear that the uppermost part has the chief melody, and there can be little doubt that in many cases the lower parts were played by instruments. There are definite records of madrigals being sung to instrumental accompaniment, voices and instruments sometimes uniting in all parts, sometimes a voice singing the top part only. But the fact that the collection of 1533 was the first issue of separate partbooks with the words printed in full for each part shows that musicians had begun to require a more careful adjustment of words to notes in all voices; the previous practice had been to print all four parts in the same book, not in score but on facing pages, and to print words for the soprano alone in full.

¹ This is Arcadelt's version; the original has three more lines after l. 6, and ends with "desire". The last 2 lines were added by the composer, destroying the original metrical structure.

The madrigal composers of this early period are almost exclusively Netherlanders occupying positions at the various small Italian courts. The chief representatives are Arcadelt, Verdelot, Willaert and Gero. The only Italians of distinction are Costanzo Festa and Alfonso della Viola. The madrigal, however, soon became an important feature of the courtly life. At the marriage of Cosmo de' Medici and Eleonora of Toledo at Florence in 1539 a whole series of madrigals was performed, some as interludes to a comedy, others as accompaniments to the entrance and exit of the ducal couple. The list of madrigals, singers and instruments, gives in itself quite a vivid picture of the scene.

'Ingrederere', a 8, sung over the archway of the great door of the Porta al Prato with 24 voices on one side and on the other 4 trombones and 4 cornetti, on the entrance of the most illustrious Duchess.

'Sacro et santo himeneo', a 9.

'Vattene almo riposo', a 4, sung by Aurora and played by a harpsichord and little organs with various stops at the beginning of the comedy.

'Guardane almo pastore', a 6, sung at the end of the 1st act by 6 shepherds and then repeated by them and played as well by 6 other shepherds with storte (? crumhorns).

'Chi me l' a toll' oime', a 6, sung at the end of the 2nd act by 3 sirens and 3 sea-monsters, played by 3 flutes and 3 sea-nymphs with 3 lutes all together.

'O begli anni dell' oro', a 4, played at the end of the 3rd act by Silenus with a violone, playing all the parts and singing the soprano.

'Hor chi mai cantera', a 4, sung at the end of the 4th act by 8 huntress nymphs.

'Vientene almo riposo', a 5, sung at the end of the 5th act, at nightfall, and played by 4 trombones.

'Bacco, Bacco evoe', a 4, sung and danced by 4 bacchanals and 4 satyrs with various instruments all at once, which at nightfall was the end of the comedy.

There were innumerable madrigals composed for social events such as weddings, as their words plainly show. Palestrina and others often allude to the lasciviousness of the madrigals; Corteccia, the composer of the wedding madrigals just mentioned, apologized for this in the dedication to Cosmo de' Medici of these and others which he published in 1544, being then a priest. He excuses himself partly on the ground that they were composed in his youth, but mainly because they had been printed incorrectly by unauthorized persons and ascribed to other composers. Peter Wagner¹ quotes the words of a very curious specimen which must be left in the decent obscurity of a learned periodical.

The chief composers of the second period of madrigal-writing are Willaert and his pupil Ciprien de Rore, who was also a Fleming; Lassus, Palestrina and Andrea Gabrieli also belong to this group, though Palestrina's contributions to madrigal literature are of comparatively small importance. The output of minor Italian composers, almost all of considerable merit, was enormous. The typical madrigal of this period is for five voices, which not only enriched the harmony but allowed of frequent division of the singers into opposing groups, the middle voice often having to do duty in both. Six-part madrigals are also common. Counterpoint becomes the adroit servant of emotional expression; phrases are much broken up by rests which emphasize the rhetoric of the words and illustrate the sighs and groans of unsatisfied desire; both words and music acquire a marvellously skilful technique of delicate voluptuousness. But love is by no means the only subject of the madrigals; the whole life of the later Renaissance is mirrored in them. Jacques du Pont, organist of San Luigi dei Francesi in Rome, shows us the street-seller of roast chestnuts; Giovanni Croce of Chioggia teaches us to play the game of the Goose, still popular with Italian children to-day; Striggio describes the chattering of the women washing clothes in the river — their gossip of love-affairs, their grumbles at their mistresses, their ghost stories, their quarrels and the folksongs which another group suddenly start to sing by way of putting an end to abusive language — and from Striggio it is only a short step to the 'Amfiparnaso' of Vecchi and the rather puerile buffooneries of Banchieri.

The third and most interesting period of the Italian madrigal is represented by Luca Marenzio, Monteverdi and Gesualdo, Prince of Venosa. Their madrigals have been very severely criticized by earlier writers on musical history, such as Burney, Rockstro, Wooldridge and even Parry²; but it may be noted that Martini, the teacher of Mozart, speaks of them with the highest praise. The free use of chromatic alteration brings about the complete breakdown of the modal tonality; modulations are introduced which even to-day sound bewildering. In the earlier years of the madrigal, it is fairly clear, madrigals were written more for the pleasure of the singers than for that of an audience; the delight of singing them arises from the fact that every part is contrapuntally interesting as well as admirably vocal. In the third period the personality of the composer dominates; the separate voices have to sink their individuality in the organic whole. The madrigal is not the choral expression of a corporate body such as may perhaps be found in the church music of the period; the voices are the skilled and sensitive servants of the composer, like the instruments in a late quartet of Beethoven. The madrigal becomes in fact a conscious and accomplished work of art, and in the madrigals of Gesualdo we seem to see for the first time the expression of a composer's own private emotions.

Alongside of the madrigals there existed in the 16th century a number of smaller secular vocal forms. The frottole have already been described.³ The giustiniana belongs to the same date and to much the same category. It derives its name not (as Morley and Praetorius supposed) from that of a notorious courtesan of Bergamo, nor from Leonardo Giustiniani, the Venetian statesman and humanist (b. 1385), who in his youth was a prolific poet and composer of songs in the popular Venetian manner, but (according to Alfred Einstein) from some eccentric member of the Giustiniani family. It was always in three parts, like the villanella alla napoletana, and the sentiments expressed were those of an old, scatterbrained Venetian patrician who stutters in the dialect of Venice. The villanella (Venetian villota) is of the same type. The villanelle (villanesche, napoletane, moresche, greghesche, etc.) are more usually in three parts, and one of their characteristics is the frequent use of three or more consecutive triads. This practice was pursued not from ignorance but from a deliberate intention to offend the "good taste" which cultivated the madrigal, as the words show pretty clearly. The villanelle were not written for the lower classes, but for the same classes as the madrigals were, and among their most spirited composers we find Lassus and Marenzio. Triads of exactly the same kind, involving consecutive fifths, are numerous among the laudi spirituali, as these were popular tunes, supplied, for words, with edifying parodies of the far from edifying originals.

The balletto belongs chiefly to the second half of the 16th century; its principal exponent is Giovanni Gastoldi. The balletto, which, as its name implies, was a song for dancing, is mainly homophonic, and has a quasi-instrumental refrain to the syllables "fa la la". Gastoldi's balletti enjoyed a great popularity outside Italy, and had a considerable influence on the English school of madrigal composers.

The madrigal (taking the word in its broadest sense) covers the whole 16th century and is the completest illustration of the progress of music during that period. The secular music looks forward to the future; the church music looks back to an earlier age, and such slight progress as it does show is due entirely to the gradual absorption of secular methods of musical expression. It must not be supposed that madrigals, of any kind, or at any period, were habitually sung unaccompanied; even church music was rarely sung entirely unaccompanied outside the Sistine Chapel in Rome. The vocal parts were printed as a matter of convenience; if the instrumentalists could play from notes at all, they could play easily enough from these. Single instrumental part-books are not found until towards the end of the century; but the common practice of singing madrigals with instruments, especially ceremonial madrigals for weddings and receptions, etc., must have prepared the way for the conception of orchestral writing shown by Gabrieli and Monteverdi.

¹ 'Das Madrigal und Palestrina' (V.M.W., VIII, 423).

² But see 'The Significance of Monteverdi', by C. H. H. Parry, Proc. Mus. Ass., 1915-16.

³ See also FROTTOLA.

The poet most frequently set by the madrigalists is Petrarch, and along with Petrarch we must include his innumerable imitators. Since most of the Petrarch poems set are sonnets, the strict literary form of the madrigal soon becomes loosened. Dante was rarely set; in the latter half of the century we often find stanzas from Ariosto and some from Tasso, but Tasso generally wrote madrigals on purpose to be set by his composer friends. It is possible that the cult of Petrarch, rather than the direct influence of the Counter-Reformation, led to the development of the madrigale spirituale, the words of which if not actually by Petrarch are generally sonnets by some priestly imitator such as Fiamma, the favourite poet of Lassus. The musical style of the madrigale spirituale is, however, practically indistinguishable from that of any secular setting of Petrarch, so that it is not necessary to discuss it here as a separate genre.

The humorous types of madrigal mentioned above are of great importance. The frottola died out by about 1537, but the other types came more and more into demand as the century proceeded. Their harmony became orthodox and the consecutive fifths somewhat disguised by a four-part setting — the original consecutive triads were indeed appropriate only to three-part writing; but they made their influence very conspicuously felt in the more elaborate madrigals, notably in quick conversational passages imitating the natural rhythms of ordinary speech. Such passages are usually homophonic. Throughout the century it is these popular dance rhythms which lead to the breakdown of the modal system and the development of the classical sense of tonality, because cadences at periodic intervals require expected harmonies regulated by strong accents. The later madrigals show, too, a more modern and extended sense of pure melody; it is taken for granted that the scale covers the whole octave and includes a leading-note, instead of being restricted to the compass of the hexachord. The new chromatic writing arises from purely melodic considerations, beginning with the practice of musica ficta; chromatic notes are always used for purely melodic expression of words, and the harmonies which some critics of to-day find so surprisingly modern are purely accidental products. In the canti carnascialeschi we see the pleasure which the Italians derived from the direct physical sensation of what to us is the simplest four-part block harmony; the strophic songs indicate the pleasure of simple melody. With the madrigals proper we see the beginning of the appreciation of music as an art, though it was never more than an accessory to cultivated life, like the goldsmith's work of Cellini; practically all madrigals were written to order, commissioned for social occasions such as serenades to ladies, weddings and receptions of great personages. Musical expression is at first purely verbal; puns are made on the Italian names of the notes, such as mi, fa, sol, and visual objects are described visually by the appearance of the notes on paper. The expression of feelings comes later, and the rhythmical imitation of the bodily movements associated with emotion. But such expression seems to be purely objective; all music is written for the pleasure of other people, whether the performers or the listeners, and for the stimulus of their pleasure in poetry, perhaps a greater conscious pleasure than their pleasure in music. Monteverdi exhibits an extraordinary violence of passion, but it is externally descriptive, whereas Gesualdo gives the impression that he is composing solely for his own personal self-expression and satisfaction, like any romantic composer of modern times.

The habit of accompanying madrigals with the lute or harpsichord had continued since the days of the frottole; the lute-books of the 16th century contain innumerable transcriptions of madrigals which were more likely to have been made for accompaniment purposes than for solo performance, though practicable for both. The printing of a figured bass for madrigals at the end of the century brought no sudden change in performance, but it did represent a general change in musical style, the emergence of what is sometimes called the "baroque" principle of regarding the bass not as a contrapuntal part but as a support for harmony. Although the first creators of opera reacted violently against counterpoint, it is evident that Monteverdi's recitative is derived largely from the madrigal technique; conversely it may be held that the madrigal, as its treatment becomes more literary and dramatic, tends to the declamatory style of opera. Most of the more elaborate comic madrigals, such as those of Striggio, Croce, Vecchi and Banchieri, show more humour in the words than in the music. Most of them are in dialects and various grotesque jargons, often with imitations of animals and of musical instruments. The words, for those who understand them, are often ludicrously funny, and a good deal of the fun consists in the very fact of their being set to music at all. Many of them suggest fragments of the conventional slapstick and backchat of the commedia dell'arte; Vecchi's famous 'Amfiparnaso' treats the comedy in a series of fourteen madrigals, divided into three acts. But it is quite erroneous to suppose that it was intended to be acted as an opera, or even in dumb-show to choral accompaniment, for Vecchi himself (if, as is generally supposed, he was the author or arranger of the words) tells us in the preface and prologue that the novelty of this "comedy" is that it is set to music, and that it is addressed solely to the ear and not to the eye. On the other hand, we hear of Lassus himself acting in scenes from the comedy at Munich on the occasion of the wedding of Duke William of Bavaria in 1568, and it may be thought that the eight-part setting of a similar short scene published by Lassus in 1581 was the actual music of that occasion; but it is clear from Troiano's contemporary account of the performance that madrigals were sung only between the acts. Many of the comic madrigals (including the villanelle, etc.) are obviously reminiscences of the primitive theatre of the people, but these musical pictures are no more "opera" than Callot's etchings are "plays", and the influence of the comedy on real opera does not make its appearance until nearly the middle of the following century, by which time the madrigals had become completely obsolete.

No real madrigals were printed or reprinted after about 1620, although before 1600 and for a few years afterwards Italian madrigals were reprinted in vast quantities by publishers in countries north of the Alps, chiefly at Antwerp. It is true that one or two real madrigals were composed in the seventeenth and even eighteenth centuries, by Stradella, Alessandro Scarlatti, Lotti and possibly others, but they are merely isolated imitations of an archaic style. The real successor of the madrigal is the cantata for two voices and bass, as written by Handel; it is derived from the florid "madrigals" of Luzzaschi (1601) composed for the three famous lady singers of the court of Ferrara, with written-out accompaniment for harpsichord.

Luzzaschi's madrigals suggest the reason why the genuine madrigal fell into oblivion.

A new type of professional singer was appearing: the castrati, already long employed in the church, now found their supreme opportunity in the theatre and on other secular occasions. They rapidly came into fashion and soon dominated musical life. At the same time there was a production of violins and harpsichords on a large scale; both instruments were admirably adapted to virtuosity, and it is obvious that merely for accompaniments the harpsichord was far more convenient, practicable and musically effective than the lute. Petrarch was forgotten and lyric poetry was mainly pastoral and erotic; the serious and contemplative style of the old madrigal, with its exquisite and leisurely savouring of every literary artifice and elegance, was a thing of the past, which the passionate violence of the new century was utterly unable to appreciate.

FRANCE.—It is difficult to draw a clear distinction between the French and Netherlandish composers of the 16th century. A number of Josquin's pupils were connected with the French court in the days of Francis I and Henri II; several of them are mentioned by Rabelais and other contemporary men of letters. A collection of chansons by various composers, of whom Claude de Sermisy and Jannequin are the best known, was published by Attaignant in Paris in 1529. This was followed by a number of other collections, in which a definitely French style soon makes its appearance. The general technique is more or less that which we have seen in the works of Josquin and Arcadelt, but the characteristic rhythms of French poetry make themselves clearly felt. The French temperament reveals itself here as in the 17th century; instead of the outspoken passion of the Italians, which was often uncongenial to French taste, we find a more delicate sentimentality and a lighter handling of the frivolous aspects of love. Clément Marot was a favourite poet for musical setting. Jannequin appears to have been the creator of the descriptive style with his 'Bataille de Marignan' and 'Les Cris des oiseaux', which even to-day sound extraordinarily vivid. Descriptive madrigals of this type were also composed by Nicolas Gombert and Guillaume Costeley. The style was not confined to France; street cries and cuckoo songs are to be found in Germany and England as well; but Jannequin is the most elaborate of the descriptive composers.

The French never pursued the Italian ideals of madrigal-writing as exhibited in Marenzio and Monteverdi. In the second half of the 16th century the French composers came under the literary influences of Ronsard and the Pléiade. Ronsard, in spite of his deafness, was devoted to music; one of his first biographers tells us that he held the view "que sans la Musique la Poësie était presque sans grâce". Jannequin, Goudimel, Certon and eventually Lassus set his poems to music. The vers mesurés (quantitative verses) of Jean Antoine de Baif were set by Claude Le Jeune, whose collection entitled 'Printemps' is dedicated to King James I of England, and also by Jacques Mauduit, who lived on into the 17th century and contributed to the new ideals of dramatic music. These settings of Ronsard and Baif are almost entirely homophonic, though composed for four voices. Goudimel makes more use of counterpoint, but the general impression of the musical settings of Ronsard and his friends is frigid and formal.

The French chanson of the 16th century has a further historical importance in view of its connection with the Huguenot Psalter, for Goudimel's settings of the metrical versions of the Psalms made by Marot and Béza are clearly derived from the style of secular songs.

GERMANY.—The 'Lochamer Liederbuch' (1460) and other manuscript collections of the same date contain secular polyphonic music by Dufay, Busnois and other Netherlanders, but also an important quantity of similar songs by German composers, who exhibit considerable skill in counterpoint. Most of these songs are folksongs sung by a tenor and accompanied by instruments. The first German composer of distinction who composed original four-part songs for voices was Heinrich Finck (1445-1527); a collection was printed at Nuremberg in 1536. Like most of the leading German composers of his day he was attached to the court of the Emperor Maximilian, which resided chiefly at Innsbruck, Augsburg, Constance and Vienna. To this group belong Paul Hofhaimer (1459-1537), Heinrich Isaac (? 1450-1517), known as "Arrigo tedesco", but of Flemish origin, and Ludwig Senfl (1490-? 1550), possibly a Swiss. Isaac spent a considerable time at the court of Lorenzo il Magnifico at Florence and composed French and Italian songs as well as German. His work shows the influence of the canti carnascialeschi and the frottole. Otto Kade says of these three that Hofhaimer is eminently a harmonist, Isaac a melodist and Senfl a contrapuntist. The German carmina, as they were generally called, show the influence of German folksong and German poetry in their style, which is much heavier than that of the Italians — one might almost call it pedestrian. Another characteristic form of German vocal music was the "Quodlibet", in which each voice entered with a different folk tune; this shows considerable contrapuntal ingenuity, but the original melodies are of necessity much distorted. Towards the middle of the 16th century the German courts employed a large number of Netherlanders and Italians, to the detriment of the native German composers, who could seldom hope for anything better than municipal appointments. The foreigners seem, however, to have done their best to adapt themselves to German life. Mathieu Le Maistre, a Fleming, and his successor Antonio Scandello from Bergamo, both Kapellmeister at the court of Dresden, even became Protestants and composed Lutheran church music. Both of them wrote secular songs for four or five voices to German words, mostly of a convivial type, in the manner of the villanelle. With these may be associated Lassus, another Fleming, during his residence at Munich; he, too, although a Catholic, set words of Luther himself and wrote characteristically German drinking-songs. Regnart, another Netherlander, published three sets of "kurtzweilige teutsche Lieder" for three voices in the style of the Neapolitan villanelle, with their typical chains of consecutive fifths. In 1579, the year of Regnart's last collection, Leonhard Lechner, an Austrian, rearranged Regnart's songs for five voices in correct counterpoint. Lechner, who came from Tyrol, was the teacher of Hans Leo Hassler (1564-1612), who is the chief German madrigalist. Hassler spent some fifteen months at Venice and was the first of the many notable German musicians to be educated in Italy. Many of his madrigals are set to Italian words; but the 'Neue teutsche Gesäng' of 1596 and the 'Lustgarten' of 1601 have German words written by Hassler himself. Hassler was influenced mainly by the two Gabriellis, from whom he derived his partiality for double chorus in 8 parts, and by Gastoldi; his German madrigals are full of life and feeling, but are mainly homophonic and squarely rhythmical. Like most of the Germans he avoids chromaticism. Johann Staden (1581-1634) is another composer of humorous and popular songs, but his chief work belongs to the style of the 17th century.

As in France, the secular vocal music of Germany is closely related to the Protestant musical movement. Another German product which must be mentioned here was the musical setting of classical Latin poems, chiefly the Horatian odes. Horace was set to music in Latin by various composers outside Germany; 'Integer vitae' is to be found among the Italian frottole, and Goudimel also set some of the odes. The earliest German settings are those of Peter Treibenreif (Petrus Tritonius) of Ingolstadt (1507); there are others by Hofhaimer and Senfl, as well as by many lesser composers. They were written for use in schools, and it was only in Germany that this musical aid to classical education was systematically practised.

ENGLAND.—The records of early English secular music are scanty. 'Sumer is icumen in' (13th century) is far in advance of any extant Continental work of its period, but it is an isolated specimen; nevertheless it may be presumed that, in England at any rate, other compositions of the same kind were produced in some quantity. Up to the death of Dunstable England took the lead in musical technique; after that the leadership passed to the Netherlands, and English music is of less importance. A few secular songs for voices by Fayrfax and Cornysh have been preserved, and the madrigalian period may be said to begin with the collection of secular songs published by Wynkyn de Worde in 1530. Edwards's 'In going to my naked bed', which is not later than 1564, corresponds in its style to the early madrigals of Arcadelt. There are a few others by Tallis and Tye belonging to this period. The next collection to be printed in England was Thomas Whythorne's 'Songes of three, fower, and five voyces' (1571). To judge from the examples quoted by Edmund H. Fellowes these songs, attractive as they are, are a long way behind the contemporary Italian music in their technique. Fellowes brings forward evidence to prove that Italian madrigals by Willaert, Verdelot, Lassus, Arcadelt and others, as well as contemporary French chansons, were sung in England as early as 1564. In 1588 Nicholas Yonge published his first volume of 'Musica Transalpina', a collection of Italian madrigals with words translated into English. This seems to have been the stimulus which produced the copious output of madrigals and kindred works by English composers from 1588 to 1627. But it is evident from Yonge's preface that 'Musica Transalpina' was published later in the year than Byrd's 'Psalmes, Sonets and Songs of Sadnes and Pietie', also printed in 1588. In the "Epistle to the Reader" Byrd says:

If thou delight in Musicke of great compasse, heere are diuers songs, which being originally made for Instruments to expresse the harmonie, and one voyce to pronounce the dittie, are now framed in all parts for voyces to sing the same. If thou desire songs of small compasse & fit for the reach of most voyces heere are most in number of that sort.

On the opposite page is a list of "these songs which are of the highest compasse". The collection includes ten Psalmes in metrical translations by an unknown author, sixteen "sonnets and pastorals", of which only two are poems in sonnet form, and nine "songs of sadness and piety", the last two being funeral songs for Sir Philip Sidney. All are for five voices, and it is fairly clear that all of them were originally solo songs with accompaniment for four viols. A large number have one voice marked as "the first singing part", which is generally the uppermost voice, sometimes the second and occasionally the third. Even where this direction is not given the uppermost part can be clearly recognized as "the first singing part". It is distinguished from the accompanying parts by various characteristics. It does not enter until after the other voices, which often have a complete series of imitations on the theme; its successive entries are separated by rests while the other voices continue; its words are as a rule set in a strictly syllabic way, and they are never repeated, whereas in the other parts two or three notes may be given to one syllable, and sentences may be broken up and fragments repeated, in order to fill up the musical phrase, since the accompanying voices have many more notes to sing than the "first singing part". There are exceptions to these rules, but they are rare.

In view of what has already been said about the treatment of the madrigal in Italy, this collection of Byrd's seems to point to a very highly developed system of accompanied solo singing in England. These psalms and songs by Byrd are akin to the frottole in that they are poems in square and simple metres with several stanzas sung to the same music; but their contrapuntal elaboration ranks them with the most accomplished of the Netherlandish madrigals. The psalms, too, are a good deal more elaborate than Goudimel's, which may possibly have served as a model for them. Byrd's songs are akin further to the songs by various composers written for the plays of the Elizabethan choristers, and they exhibit the same rhythmical ingenuities. This appears to be peculiar to the English composers. Byrd's elaborate cross rhythms and alternations of 3-2 and 6-4 bars are hardly to be paralleled in the Italians, who were either more directly passionate or more directly jovial, and wasted no time on ingenious learning. But with Byrd this ingenious learning is far remote from pedantry, for Byrd's chief characteristic is his exuberance of melody; these English songs are conspicuously more tuneful, both in the "first singing part" and in the others, than any of the chansons or carmina of continental composers.

In Byrd's next set (1589) he approximates more to the true madrigal style of Marenzio in some cases. In others we can still trace his habit of building up on a plain and regular tune, even when this is elaborated near the end with imitations and repetitions. Byrd's music, in spite of its wonderful constructive skill and its unfailing beauty of melody, is not expressive in the Italian manner; its inspiration is purely musical and hardly ever literary.

The next publication was Morley's 'Canzonets to three voyces' (1593). Morley is the most popular, the most attractive and perhaps the most characteristically English of all the English madrigalists. He was strongly influenced by Gastoldi and made the ballett or "Fa la" as much an English as an Italian form of composition. Morley delighted in cheerful subjects, and his madrigals present many vivid and fascinating pictures of English country life. It is interesting to note that Morley's set of balletts was published by East in two separate editions, both in 1595, one with English words and the other with Italian words which in most cases, if not all, are the original poems of which the English is a translation. Another edition with German words was published at Nuremberg in 1609.

Thomas Weelkes and John Wilbye, unlike Byrd and Morley, were both quite young men in their early twenties when they produced their first sets of madrigals, and both of them showed remarkable originality and daring. They adopted the extreme chromatic style of the Italians and rivalled Marenzio and Monteverdi in their power of passionate expression. Like the Italians, they conceived of the body of singers as the instrument of the composer's own thought and feeling; their madrigals are works of art intended for listeners, whereas in the earlier writers it often seems as though theirs were composed mainly for the pleasure of the singers. Weelkes was not only a master of painful emotion, but also a very picturesque and dramatic writer of descriptive music; in his 'Ayres or Phantasticke Spirites' of 1608 he shows himself a witty satirist and his balletts are fully equal to those of Morley.

Of the later madrigalists the most important are Orlando Gibbons, John Ward and Thomas Tomkins. Gibbons confined himself to madrigals of a serious type such as the well-known 'What is our life?' Ward, who seems to have been an amateur, had no great power of expression, but showed sound musicianship and constructive ability, which gives his madrigals a singular dignity. Tomkins, a pupil of Byrd, invented a happy combination of madrigal and ballett, in which he gave evidence of notable rhythmic originality.

Mention must also be made of Thomas Ravenscroft, whose three collections, 'Pam-melia' (1609), 'Deuteromelia' (1609), 'Melismata' (1611), as well as 'A Brief Discourse of the True (but neglected) Use of Charact'ring the Degrees, by their Perfection, Imperfection and Diminution in Measurable Musicke, against the Common Practise and Custome of these Times' (1614), are of great value for the history of popular English music. They contain a number of tavern songs, rounds, catches, etc., many of which, such as 'Three Blind Mice', are still familiar to all Englishmen however unskilled in music. In England, as in France, there seems to have been no equivalent of the villanelle in the Neapolitan style, though these were well known to Morley.

England was the only country in which the Italian madrigal became completely naturalized; no other country outside Italy produced madrigals either in such quantity or of so high a standard of quality. Continental writers have sometimes suggested that the English school was no more than a mere imitation of that of Italy, probably because the words of English madrigals are so often imitations or even direct translations of Italian originals; but even in those composers, such as Morley, Weelkes and Wilbye, who came most obviously under Italian influence, a definitely English musical character is always apparent. The English language imposed its own rhythms on them and English surroundings affected their style, partly by providing them with singers and audiences whose home was the English country-house instead of the Italian palace, and partly by offering them the sights and sounds of English rural life as appropriate subjects for illustration.

SPAIN.—The records of early Spanish music are scanty compared with those of the other countries described above; but the caccia was practised in Catalonia (Spanish caça), though chiefly to sacred words. Spain, during the 15th century, kept up a close musical connection with the Netherlands; Spanish musicians went there to study, and it has been proved that Netherlandish and also English musicians went to Spain. Petrucci's 'Harmonice musices odhecaton' (1502) contains four Spanish tunes set in four parts, which seem to be more instrumental than vocal in character. J. B. Trend¹ suggests that the editor of the book, Petrus Castellanus, was a Spaniard. In the earlier part of the 16th century Spain produced a large number of villancicos, which are the Spanish equivalent of the Italian frottola, the chief composer of them being Juan del Encina (1469–1534). Juan Vásquez (1560) and Diego Garzón are also attractive writers of villancicos. A manuscript collection in the Medinaceli library contains a large number of villancicos and madrigals by Spanish composers, along with sacred works by Gombert, Ciprien de Rore and others. Of the Spaniards, the brothers Pedro and Francisco Guerrero, and Rodrigo Cevallos are the most interesting among the early composers, but they seem to have been more at home in sacred music than in secular. Many of the madrigals and villancicos were afterwards adapted to sacred words in the manner of the Italian laudi spirituali. But the Spaniards were by no means without humour; there is in this collection an anonymous madrigal, rather in the style of Orazio Vecchi, describing a friar who mixes gallantry with religion and is ignominiously ridiculed by his two girl penitents. Comic madrigals were also written by Matéo Flecha (1481–1553), whose nephew, also called Matéo Flecha, published a set of Italian madrigals at Venice in 1568. But there seems to have been no great interest in madrigals in Spain, as compared with Italy and England; the only collections printed in Spain were those of Vásquez ('Villancicos y canciones', Seville, 1551 and 1560), Brudieu ('Madrigales', Barcelona, 1585) and Pedro Vila ('Madrigales', Barcelona, 1561). In 1585 Joan Brudieu, a Frenchman by birth, but maestro de capilla at Urgell in the Pyrenees, composed a series of madrigals in Catalan for the reception at Barcelona of Charles Emmanuel, Duke of Savoy, who was on his way to Saragossa to marry Doña Catalina de Austria.¹ Victoria wrote no madrigals, and of Morales only two are known. Of the later period the most finished and elaborate madrigals are those of Pedro Ruimonte ('Parnaso español de madrigales', Antwerp, 1614), which are worthy to stand by those of Marenzio.

¹ 'The Music of Spanish History.'

E. J. D.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- AMBROS, A. W., 'Geschichte der Musik', Vol. IV, new ed. by H. Leichtentritt (Leipzig, 1909).
- BORREN, C. VAN DEN, 'Le Madrigalisme avant le madrigal' ('Festschrift Guido Adler', 1930).
- 'The Aesthetic Value of the English Madrigal' (Proc. Mus. Ass., Vol. LII, 1926).
- BRANCOUR, R., 'Les Maîtres musiciens de la renaissance française' (S.I.M.G., VIII, 115).
- BRENET, MICHEL, 'Musique et musiciens de la vieille France' (Paris, 1911).
- CESARI, G., 'Le origini del madrigale cinquecentesco' (Riv. Mus. It., XIX, i, 1912).
- COMBARIEU, J., 'Histoire de la musique', Vol. I (Paris, 1913).
- DELLA CORTE, A., 'Le relazioni storiche della poesia e della musica italiana' (Turin, 1936).
- DENT, E. J., 'Music of the Renaissance in Italy' ('Proceedings of the British Academy', 1933).
- 'Notes on the "Amfiparnaso" of Orazio Vecchi' (S.I.M.G., XII, 330).
- 'The Musical Form of the Madrigal' (M. & L., XI, 1930, p. 230).
- 'William Byrd and the Madrigal' ('Festschrift Johannes Wolf', Berlin, 1929).
- DOHRN, ELLINOR, 'Die Madrigale des Marco Antonio Ingegneri' (Berlin, 1929).
- 'Marc' Antonio Ingegneri als Madrigalkomponist' (Hanover, 1936).
- EINSTEIN, ALFRED, 'Augenmusik im Madrigal' (Z.I.M.G., XIV, 8).
- 'Claudio Merulus Ausgabe der Madrigale des Verdelot' (S.I.M.G., VIII, 220, 516).
- 'Das 11. Buch der Frottole' (Z.M.W., 1928).
- 'Das Madrigal' ('Ganymed', 1921).
- 'Die mehrstimmige weltliche Musik von 1450-1600' (in Adler's 'Handbuch der Musikgeschichte', Frankfurt o/M., 1924).
- 'Die Parodie in der Villanella' (Z.M.W., II, 212).
- 'Eine Cacia im Cinquecento' ('Lilencron-Festschrift', 1910).
- 'Italian Madrigal Verse 1500-1600' (Proc. Mus. Ass. Vol. LXIII, 1937).
- 'Narrative Rhythm in the Madrigal' (M.Q., XXIX, 1943, p. 475).
- 'The Elizabethan Madrigal' and 'Musica Transalpina' (M. & L., XXV, 1944, p. 66).
- 'The Italian Madrigal', 3 vols. (Princeton & Oxford, 1949). The 3rd vol. contains reprints of countless madrigals not before available in modern editions.
- ENGEL, HANS, 'Contributo alla storia del madrigale' (Rass. Mus., No. 5, Sept. 1931).
- 'Luca Marenzio' (1932, not yet published).
- 'Luca Marenzio. Saggio biographico' (Rass. Mus., VIII, 1930).
- 'Madrigal und Villanella' ('Neuphilologische Monatsschrift', 1932).
- FELLOWES, E. H., 'English Madrigal Composers' (Oxford, 1923).
- 'English Madrigal Verse' (Oxford, 1920).
- GHISI, F., 'I canti carnascialeschi nelle fonti musicali del XV e XVI secolo' (Florence, 1937).
- GLASEL, RUDOLF, 'Zur Geschichte der Battaglia' (Leipzig, 1930).
- HERTZMANN, ERICH, 'Adrian Willaert in der weltlichen Vokalmusik seiner Zeit' (Leipzig, 1931).
- 'A. Willaert und die weltliche Vokalmusik Italiens' (Leipzig, 1931).
- HESELTINE, P. & GRAY, C., 'Carlo Gesualdo' (Oxford, 1926).
- HEUSS, A., 'Claudio Monteverdi als Charakteristiker in seinen Madrigalen' ('Lilencron-Festschrift', 1910).
- HOLL, KARL, 'Horatio Vecchi als weltlicher Komponist' (Basel, 1917).
- HUBER, K., 'Ivo de Vento' (Munich, 1917).
- KFINER, F., 'Die Madrigale des Gesualdo di Venosa' (Leipzig, 1914).
- KINKELDEY, O., 'Luzzasco Luzzaschi Solo-Madrigale mit Klavierbegleitung' (S.I.M.G., IX, 538).
- KIWI, EDITH, 'Studien zur Geschichte des italienischen Liedmadrigals im 16. Jahrhundert' (Würzburg, 1937).
- KLINO, H., 'Les Compositeurs de la musique du psautier huguenot' (Riv. Mus. It., VI, 496).
- KROYER, THEODOR, 'Dialog und Echo in der alten Chormusik' (J.B.P., 1909).
- 'Die Anfänge der Chromatik im italienischen Madrigal des 16. Jahrhunderts' (Suppl. I.M.G., 1902).
- LALOY, LOUIS, 'La Chanson française du XVI^e siècle' (Rev. Mus., 1901).
- LEICHTENTRITT, H., 'Claudio Monteverdi als Madrigalkomponist' (S.I.M.G., XI, 255).
- MAGNI-DUFOCQ, E., 'Il madrigale' (Milan, 1931).
- MARROCCO, THOMAS, 'The Fourteenth Century Madrigal: its Form and Contents' ('Speculum', XXVI, July 1951).
- MITJANA, R., 'Estudios sobre algunos músicos españoles del siglo XVI' (Madrid, 1918).
- MONTI, G. M., 'Le villanelle alla napoletana e l'antica lirica dialettale a Napoli' (Città di Castello, 1925).
- MOSER, H. J., 'Geschichte der deutschen Musik' (Vol. I, 1920).
- MULLER, K. F., 'Die Technik der Ausdrucksdarstellung in Monteverdis monodischen Frühwerken' (Berlin, 1930).
- PANNAIN, GUIDO, 'Note sulle madrigali di Monteverdi' (Rass. Mus., 1931).
- PATTISON, BRUCE, 'Music and Poetry in the English Renaissance' (London, 1948).
- PIRRO, A., 'Histoire de la musique de la fin du XIV^e siècle à la fin du XVI^e' (Paris, 1940).
- REDLICH, HANS F., 'Claudio Monteverdi', Vol. I, 'Das Madrigalwerk' (Berlin, 1932).
- 'The Italian Madrigal: a Bibliographical Contribution' (M. & L., Vol. XXXII, 1951, p. 154).
- SANDBERGER, A., 'Vorrede zu der Gesamtausgabe Orlando di Lassos' (reprint in 'Ausgewählte Aufsätze zur Musikgeschichte', Munich, 1921).
- SCHERING, ARNOLD, 'Das kolorierte Orgelmadrigal des Trecento' (S.I.M.G., XIII, 172).
- SCHMITZ, E., 'Zur Frühgeschichte der lyrischen Monodie Italiens' (J.B.P., 1916).
- 'Zur Geschichte des italienischen Continuo-Madrigals im 17. Jahrhundert' (S.I.M.G., XI, 509).
- SCHWARTZ, R., 'Die Frottole im 15. Jahrhundert' (V.M.W., 1886, p. 427).
- 'H. L. Hassler und der Einfluss italienischer Madrigalisten' (V.M.W., 1893).
- SPRUNGER, H., 'Zu Leonardo Giustiniani und den Giustinianen' (S.I.M.G., XI, 25).
- TIERNOT, J., 'Ronsard et la musique de son temps' (S.I.M.G., IV, 70).
- TORRI, L., 'Giovanni Croce Chiozzotto' (Riv. Mus. It., XVI, 550).
- 'Vincenzo Ruffo madrigalista' (Riv. Mus. It., III, 635, IV, 233).
- TRADE, H., 'Manierismus und Barock im italienischen Madrigal des 16. Jahrhunderts' (Erlangen, 1928).
- TREND, J. B., 'The Music of Spanish History to 1600' (Oxford, 1925).
- 'Spanish Madrigals' (Proc. Mus. Ass., LII, 1925).
- VATIELLI, F., 'Canzonieri musicali del 1500' (Riv. Mus. It., 1921).
- VOGEL, E., 'Bibliothek der gedruckten weltlichen Vokalmusik Italiens aus den Jahren 1500-1700' (Berlin, 1892).
- WAGNER, PETER, 'Das Madrigal und Palestrina' (V.M.W., VIII, 423, 1892).
- WALKER, ERNEST, 'History of Music in England', new ed. (Oxford, 1932).

¹ Cf. Corteccia's madrigals with instruments described under Italy above.

- WESTRUP, J. A., 'Monteverdi and the Madrigal' ('The Score', No. 1, Aug. 1949).
 WINTERFELD, C. VON, 'Gabrieli und sein Zeitalter', 3 vols. (Berlin, 1834).

COMPLETE OR SELECTED EDITIONS OF MADRIGALS RECENTLY PUBLISHED

- BANCHIERI, ADRIANO, Selected Madrigal Comedies, in 'I classici della musica italiana' (Milan, 1930).
 CLEMENS NON PAPA, 'Souter-Liedekens', ed. by Bernet Kempers, 3 vols. (Delft, 1935-36).
 GESUALDO DA VENOSA, CARLO, Selected Madrigals, ed. by I. Pizzetti, in 'I classici della musica italiana' (Milan, 1930).
 JANNEQUIN, CLEMENT, Chansons, ed. by Maurice Cauchie (Paris, 1925-28).
 LANDINI, FRANCESCO, Complete edition, ed. by Leonard Ellinwood (Cambridge, Mass., 1939).
 MARENZIO, LUCA, 5-part Madrigals, ed. by Alfred Einstein, 3 vols. (Leipzig, 1929).
 Villanelle, ed. by H. Engel (Cassel, 1928).
 MONTE, PHILIPPE DE, 'Madrigali spirituali', ed. by G. van Doorslaer (Düsseldorf, 1929).
 MONTEVERDI, CLAUDIO, Madrigal Books I-IX; 'Scherzi musicali' (1607 & 1632), ed. by G. F. Malipiero (Vols. I-X of the complete ed.) (Asolo, 1926-39).
 SENFL, LUDWIG, Complete ed., containing German madrigals, in course of publication.
 VECCHI, ORAZIO, 'L'Amfiparnaso', ed. by Carlo Petrillo (Milan, 1938).
 WILLAERT, ADRIAAN, Selected Madrigals, ed. by Wiora & Hertzmann, in F. Blume's 'Chorwerk' (Wolfenbüttel, 1930).
 Complete ed., containing madrigals, villanelle, chansons, &c., ed. by H. Zenck, in course of publication.
 See also Pearsall (19th-cent. exts.).

MADRIGAL OPERA. A sequence of madrigals in a quasi-dramatic form, said to be the 16th-century forerunner of opera in Italy and long supposed to have been performed in dumb-show while the music was sung behind the scenes. This view is now no longer held by musical scholars and is, indeed, refuted by the preface to Orazio Vecchi's 'Amfiparnaso', the most famous example of the species, but not the earliest. Similar works by Vecchi are 'La selva di varie ricreazioni' ('The Forest of Multifarious Delights'), 'Il convito musicale' ('The Musical Gathering') and 'Le veglie di Siena' ('The Vigils of Siena'). A madrigal opera based on Tasso's 'Aminta', Simone Blasamino's 'Novellette', appeared in the same year as 'L'Amfiparnaso' (1594). Among earlier works of the kind Striggio's 'Il cicalamento delle donne al bucato' ('The Cackling of Women at the Wash') is the most celebrated. Vecchi was later imitated by Banchieri and others. E. B.

See also Amfiparnaso.

MADRIGAL SOCIETY. Founded in London in 1741 by the elder John Immyns, this association has met regularly ever since for the performance of English and foreign madrigals by its members for their own enjoyment, except during part of the second world war, when the meetings were not held owing to the aerial bombardments of London.

Its existing records begin in 1744, but an account of its earlier formation is given in his History by Hawkins, who, as a member, attended its meetings in Nov. and Dec. 1748, and from Oct. 1752 to Mar. 1765. Immyns, he says:

got together a few persons, who had spent their lives in the practice of psalmody: and who, with a little pains, and the help of ordinary solmisation, which many of them were very expert in, became soon able to sing, almost at sight, a part in an English and even an Italian Madrigal. They were mostly mechanics; some weavers from Spitalfields, others of various trades and occupations.

He describes them as singing, "though not elegantly, with a degree of correctness that did justice to the harmony", and states that the members "were men not less distinguished by their love of vocal harmony, than the harmless simplicity of their tempers, and their friendly disposition towards each other". Practitioners in psalmody at this date would know the Elizabethan composers through their settings of psalm tunes which were still being sung.

The first meetings of the Society were held in the Twelve Bells alehouse in Bride Lane. Subsequently meetings were held in various other taverns, mainly in the City of London. From 1827 meetings have been held as follows: Freemasons' Tavern (1827-82), Grosvenor Galleries Restaurant (1882-84), Willis's Rooms (1884-90), Holborn Restaurant (1890-1919), Carpenters' Hall (1919-40) and the Tallow Chandlers' Hall, where they are now held (1946 and on).

At the beginning of its history the Society was known as the "Monday Night Club", owing to the day of the week on which it then met. Until 1820 meetings were held weekly or fortnightly throughout the year; in that year four fortnightly meetings in July and Aug. were omitted.

Up to 1769 meetings began at 8 P.M. and ended at 10.30 P.M. unless some members "will be cheerfully incited to sing catches", in which case they might be extended at first till 11 o'clock and later "at pleasure". Between 8.30 and 10 supper might not be eaten, this part of the evening being reserved for music, "a more refined and intellectual pleasure" — a rule which it seems to have been difficult to enforce, owing to the late arrival of members. The performances of the night were divided into two "acts" with an interval of about half an hour between them; the first began at 8.30 and the second at 9.30. Four madrigals were performed in each of the acts. At the end of the second act the programme for that night four weeks was announced "so that every member may have timely notice what pieces are to be done and write out or practice their parts". On 25 Oct. 1769 the hour of meeting from Michaelmas to Lady Day was advanced to 7.30 P.M. and the beginning of the programme to 8 P.M. By 6 Apr. 1802, 7.30 P.M. had become the regular hour of meeting throughout the year, but by 24 Apr. 1821 it had again been postponed to 8 P.M.

On this date it was agreed to hold a monthly dinner. Dinner was to be placed on the table at 5 o'clock precisely and madrigals were to be sung till 9 o'clock, when tea was to be brought in, after which the function of the President was to cease "as far as regards expense to the Society". The season at this time lasted from Oct. to July. In Oct. 1874, a period when few members attended, the number of meetings was reduced to eight a year, and in Oct. 1876 under similar circumstances to six a year, the present number, the season now being from Nov. to Apr. At the present time dinner is served at 6.30 P.M. The programme is still divided into two acts. It finishes at 10 o'clock.

Programmes are now sung unaccompanied, but references dating from 1753 to 1823 to a bass viol, the hire and purchase of harpsichords, the hire of a pianoforte, suggest that this was not always the case. At an anniversary dinner in 1832 "Dragonetti the great double-bass player assisted the voices".

Other sources for treble voices having been tried, on 24 Nov. 1756 it was agreed to obtain "two boys skilled in music from St. Paul's or elsewhere" for this purpose, who were to be paid "a gratification not exceeding 1s. 6d. each per night". Boys drawn from the St. Paul's Cathedral, the Westminster Abbey and the Chapel Royal choirs and elsewhere continued to sing the treble parts, until the suspension of meetings during the second world war. Since their resumption in 1946, choir-boys being unobtainable, ladies have been invited for this purpose.

An early classification of members as "performing" and "auditory" has long since disappeared; all members are now "performing". Care has always been taken to ensure the vocal capacity of those who perform and steps have been taken to attract those with voices and musical attainments. Rules provided: (1750) for the admission at his pleasure of any gentleman educated in or belonging to any cathedral or choir; (1751) for the admission gratis of members of the Academy of Ancient Music; (1753) for every candidate not belonging to a cathedral choir to be vouched for by two or more members as capable of singing his part in time and tune or, by way of probation, to sing his part in a madrigal or song between the acts, such madrigal or song to be chosen by his proposer and to have been given to him to practice; and (1802) for encouraging the attendance of "professional gentlemen". In 1827 it was agreed to form a list of the organists and professional members (principals) of the Three Choirs and of the Catch and Glee and Conventores Clubs, not exceeding six, to be invited by the Committee in rotation. In 1873 it was decided to nominate six honorary members, to improve the musical performances, two of each voice, alto, tenor and bass. Since 1923 the rules have provided that candidates should satisfy one of the musical directors as to their capability.

No special privileges are now accorded to professional musicians, except the appointment of those of distinction as honorary members.

A limit to the number of members has from time to time been imposed by the rules: (1745-1750), 14, 16, 21; (1802) 36; (1814) 30; (1828) 35, when members and candidates amount to 40, and 40 when members and candidates amount to 50. The present limit is 40 members, 10 country members and 8 honorary members. The limits, during early years, were not always observed. The proportion of members attending meetings has varied and, though it has sometimes been small, the record of Monday 7 Jan. 1745, "Mr Randall solus from 8 to 10", has never been equalled. On 26 Apr. 1949, 36 members, 3 honorary members and 16 guests attended the meeting.

Former members of the Society included Dr. John Worgan, the Rev. C. Torriano, Jonathan Battishill, E. T. Warren, T. A. Arne and his son Michael, L. Atterbury, T. Aylward, Joah Bates, Dr. B. Cooke, J. Bartleman, R. J. S. Stevens, W. Horsley, R. Spofforth, R. Cooke, W. Beale, Dr. J. W. Callcott, W. Linley, G. E. Williams, the Rev. T. Gretorex, J. T. Cooper, J. Nield, the Rev. W. J. Hall, P. J. Salomons, T. Oliphant, J. W. Hobbs, J. Calkin, G. Cooper, Charles Santley, the Rev. Sir G. Ouseley and Sir Percy Buck.

The subscriptions and entrance fees of members have been as follows: (Jan. 1744) 1s. 6d. for six nights; (July 1745) at least 3d. a night for 12 nights at least; (1749) 4s. 6d. for twelve nights; (1754) entrance fee of 14s.; (1756) 5s. a quarter, subscription raised to 6s. 6d. a quarter in Dec. 1756; (1768) 8s. a quarter; (1802) entrance fee £1 : 1s. and subscription 10s. 6d. a quarter, excluding supper; (1814) subscription 15s. a quarter; (1828) entrance fee £1, subscription £1 a quarter and 7s. 6d. for each attendance; (1877) £5 : 5s. and professional members £3 : 3s. (all including dinner); (1920) £5 : 5s. for all members, (1946) £6 : 6s. There is now no entrance fee.

Until 1761 the President was the only officer of the Society. At first members held this office in turn for one night and from Aug. 1747 for two nights only. The first recorded President is Samuel Jeacocke, a baker by trade, referred to by Hawkins, who held office on 8 Oct. 1744. The President selected the programme, a duty now performed by the Librarian, and according to rules of 1757 laid out the books required for singing and was responsible for the Society's library and cash, for paying the reckoning and keeping a record of those absent. He was fined sixpence if absent himself, a sum which in 1760 was thought insufficient, but he had the consolation of being at liberty to nominate two catches to be performed after the acts were concluded.

In Sept. 1761 a Librarian was appointed owing to the confusion and disorder of the library. He also in some degree served as Secretary and was paid a gratuity of £3 a year for his services. This has long since been discontinued.

By 1802 a Treasurer and Secretary had appeared on the scene in addition to the Librarian. In Nov. 1816 the President was given the duty of seeing that the members limited themselves to "a pint of wine or other liquors"; he was relieved of this duty in Feb. 1828, from which date two wine stewards were appointed.

By 1832 the President for some years had been Sir John Rogers, the old rule as to President having fallen into disuse. He resigned and, when the appointment of his successor was discussed, the question of reviving the old rule was raised. He was therefore asked to withdraw his resignation, which he did, and continued to serve until Feb. 1842. In Feb. 1833 it was resolved that the President and Vice-President should hold their offices for life. In July 1898 this rule was altered and the existing rule was enacted, under which Presidents are elected annually, but can in no case hold office for more than two years in succession.

Since Sir John Rogers the Presidents have included: the 16th Baron Saltoun; Sir George Clark; Prince Duleep Singh; Thomas Oliphant; the Hon. and Rev. H. Legge; the 6th Earl of Beauchamp; the 8th Duke of Beaufort; Lord Alverstone; Sir Frederick Bridge; J. E. Street, whose family have been associated with the Society since 1795 and are still so associated; Sir G. Martin; Alderman Sir E. E. Cooper, sometime Lord Mayor of London; Sir Arthur Sullivan, who first attended meetings as a "Child of the Chapel Royal" in 1862; the 8th Baron Howard de Walden; and A. M. Fox.

The first musical director appointed was William Hawes, who held office from 1827 to 1846. His successors have been James Turle (1846-49), James King (1849-54), Cipriani Potter (1854-70), Otto Goldschmidt (1871-1877), Sir John Stainer (1877-87), Sir Frederick Bridge (1887-1924), Dr. C. H. Lloyd (jointly with Sir Frederick Bridge) (1917-19), E. Stanley Roper (1924-33), the Rev. E. H. Fellowes (1933-1934), L. H. B. Reed (1934-1936) and Richard Latham (1936-).

In 1811, on the suggestion of W. Hawes, a silver cup of the value of ten guineas was offered to the composer of the best madrigal, to be approved, in not less than four or more than six parts, the upper part or parts to be for one or two treble voices, the character of the composition to be after the manner of madrigals by Bennett, Wilbye, Morley, Ward, Weekes, Marenzio and others, and each part to contain a certain melody either in fugue or imitation, therefore a melody harmonized to be inadmissible. In Jan. 1813 the prize was awarded by vote of the members to W. Beale for his 'Awake, Sweet Morn'. In 1881 Thomas Molineux, a member, provided endowment for a yearly prize of £10 and the Society endowment for a yearly second prize of £5 for the best and second-best approved madrigals, composed in accordance with the formula of 1811, the awards to be made by judges appointed by the Society. The trusts of these endowments were slightly varied in 1937 by a scheme of the Board of Education, in accordance with which the competition for these prizes is now held triennially.

The office of Honorary Secretary is at present filled by J. G. Craufurd.

J. G. C.

BIBL.—NETTEL, REGINALD, 'The Oldest Surviving English Musical Club' (M.Q., XXXIV, 1948, p. 97).

See also Immyns (John 1).

MADRILEÑA (Spa.; Fr. madrilène). A popular Spanish dance of the city or province of Madrid.

MAELZEL, Johann Nepomuk (b. Ratisbon, 15 Aug. 1772; d. at sea, 21 July 1838).

German inventor. He was the son of an organ builder. In 1792 he settled in Vienna, and devoted himself to teaching music and to constructing an automatic instrument of flutes, trumpets, drums, cymbals, triangle and strings struck by hammers, which played music by Haydn, Mozart and Crescentini, and was sold for 3000 florins. His next machine was the Panharmonicon, like the former, but with clarinets, violins and cellos added. It was worked by weights acting on cylinders and exhibited in Vienna in 1804. Maelzel then bought Kempelen's Chessplayer and took it with the Panharmonicon to Paris. The Chessplayer he afterwards sold to Eugène Beauharnais. He next constructed a Trumpeter, which played the Austrian and French cavalry marches and signals, with marches and allegros by Weigl, Dussek and Pleyel. In 1808 he was appointed court mechanic and about that time made some ear trumpets, one of which Beethoven used for years. In 1812 he opened the "Art Cabinet", among the attractions of which were the Trumpeter and a new and enlarged Panharmonicon; and soon afterwards he made public a musical chronometer, an improvement of a machine by Stöckel, for which he obtained certificates from Beethoven and other leading musicians.

Maelzel and Beethoven were at this time on very friendly terms. They had arranged to visit London together, and Maelzel had meantime aided the great master in his impecuniosity by urging on him a loan of 50 ducats in gold. In order to add to the attractions of the Panharmonicon, which they proposed to take with them, Maelzel conceived and sketched in detail the design ¹ of a piece to commemorate the battle of Vitoria (21 June 1813), which Beethoven composed for the instrument. While it was being arranged on the barrel Maelzel further induced him to score it for the orchestra, with the view to obtain funds for the journey; and it was accordingly scored, and performed at a concert on 8 Dec. 1813, the programme of which consisted of the Symphony No. 7, the marches of Dussek and Pleyel, by the automaton, and the battle-piece. The concert was repeated on the 12th, and the two yielded a net profit of over 4000 florins. At this point Beethoven took offence at Maelzel's having announced the battle-piece as his property, broke completely with him, rejected the Trumpeter and his marches, and held a third concert (2 Jan. 1814) for his sole benefit. After several weeks of endeavour to arrange matters, Maelzel departed to Munich with his Panharmonicon, including the battle-piece, and also with a full orchestral score of the same, which he had obtained without Beethoven's concurrence and caused to be performed at Munich. Beethoven on this entered an action against him in the Vienna courts, and it is his memorandum of the grounds of the action, as prepared for his advocate, which is usually entitled his "deposition".² He further addressed a statement ³ to the musicians of London, entreating them not to countenance or support Maelzel.

The action came to nothing, and Maelzel does not appear to have gone to London. He stopped at Amsterdam, and there got from the mechanic Winkel the idea of employing a new form of pendulum as a metronome. He soon perfected the instrument, obtained a patent for it, and in 1816 we find him in Paris established as a manufacturer of this metronome, under the style of Mälzl et Cie. A wish to repurchase Kempelen's Chessplayer and to push his metronome took him back to Munich and Vienna in 1817. Beethoven's good word was of more consequence than any one else's, and knowing Maelzel's cleverness, the lawsuit was given up and the costs were divided equally. After this Maelzel travelled much, and even reached the U.S.A., where he passed the rest of his life, except for a voyage or two to the West Indies, exhibiting the Chessplayer, the Conflagration of Moscow and his other curious inventions. He was found dead in his berth on board the American brig "Otis". Maelzel was evidently a sharp, shrewd, clever man of business, with a strong propensity to use the ideas of others for his own benefit.

His metronome was entirely different from the Stöckel-Maelzel "Chronometer", and it was upon the latter and not upon the metronome that Beethoven wrote the catch which is connected with the Allegretto of his Symphony No. 8.

See also Loulie (invention anticipating metronome). Metronome. Winkel.

MAESTOSO (Ital., majestic). A direction indicating a stately, dignified manner of performance. It is used either alone or as a direction of time, in which case it indicates a pace rather slower than andante or, combined with other indications of tempo, as a guide to the expression. Beethoven uses it frequently in both these ways.

J. A. F.-M.

MAESTRALE (Ital., magisterial). See STRETTO (for stretto maestrale).

MAESTRO (Ital. = master). An unofficial courtesy title given in Italy to musicians of a certain eminence, both creative and executive, who are thus addressed both verbally and in writing.

Maestro al cembalo (= master at the harpsichord). Formerly a player in the orchestra, particularly in the opera-house, who not only performed the continuo parts from the figured bass, but also took control of the other players, either in place of a conductor or as the conductor's important assistant, in the latter case much as the leader does to-day. The duties of the maestro al cembalo also included the superintending of rehearsals and accompanying of them.

Maestro dei putti (= master of the boys). A musician whose office was founded in Rome in 1538 (not, as has been supposed, in the papacy of Julius II, which was much earlier). It was first held by Arcadelt. Its duties are to teach singing to the boys of St. Peter's and more or less to superintend the choir arrangements. Its nearest equivalent in England was the post of Master of the Children at the Chapel Royal.

Maestro di cappella (= chapel-master). The Italian term is not, or rather no longer, the equivalent of the German Kapellmeister, a word which gradually changed its meaning until it came to signify simply "conductor". In Italy the maestro di cappella superintends the musical performances at a church and thus corresponds to the French chef de la maîtrise.

J. A. F.-M., rev.

MAESTRO CAPITAN. See ROMERO (MATEO).

Maeterlinck, Maurice. See Alexandrov (A. N., 'Ariane et Barbe-Bleue', incid. m.). Ariane et Barbe-Bleue (Dukas). Boulanger (L., 'Princesse Maleine', incid. m.). Bréville (do., overture & 'Sept Princesses', incid. m.). Burghauer ('Aladina and Palomid', opera). Burian (E., do.). Carse ('Death of Tintagiles', overture). Chausson ('Serres chaudes', 3 songs). Chlubna ('Aladina and P.', opera). Collingwood ('Death of Tintagiles', opera). Davies (J. D., 'Intruse', prelude). Debussy ('Pelléas et Mélisande', opera). Dukas ('Ariane et Barbe-Bleue', opera). Fauré ('Pelléas', incid. m.). Février ('Monna Vanna', opera). Freitas Branco (L., 3 songs). Gibbs (C. A., 'Betrothal', incid. m.). Grechaninov ('Sister Beatrice', opera). Hart (F., 13 scenes from 'Blue Bird', for orch.). Heward (do., incid. m.). Honegger (Prelude to 'Aglaïa', incid. m.). Humperdinck ('Blue Bird', incid. m.). Křička (do., overture). Lazzari (songs). Liadov

¹ Moscheles, note to his 'Schindler', I, 154.

² Schindler. Thayer, III, 465. ³ Thayer, III, 467.

('Sœur Béatrice' chorus). Loeffler ('Mort de Tintagiles', symph. poem). Marquéz Puig ('Sor Beatriz', opera). Mitropoulos ('Sœur Béatrice', do.). Nechayev ('7 Princesses', do.). Nougues ('Mort de T.', do.). O'Neill ('Blue Bird', incid. m.). Pannain ('Intruse', opera). Pelléas et Mélisande (Debussy, opera). Radó (song). Rasse ('Sœur Béatrice', opera). Santoliquido ('Morte di Tintagiles', symph. poem). Šatra (songs). Schmitt (F., song). Schoenberg ('Pelleas und Melisande', symph. poem; 'Herzgewächse', voice & chamber m.). Scott (C., overtures to 3 plays). Séverac (song). Sibelius ('Pelléas', incid. m.). Steinberg ('Princesse Maleine', do.). Szeligowski ('Blue Bird', do.). Taneyev (S. I., song). Tocchi ('Destino', symph. poem). Voormolen ('Mort de Tintagiles', orch. prelude). Wolff (A., 'Oiseau bleu', incid. m.).

BIBL.—NEWMAN, ERNEST, 'Maeterlinck and Music', in 'Musical Studies' (London, 1914).

Maffei, Andrea. See Masandieri (Verdi, lib.). Verdi (2 lib., 3 songs).

Maffei, Scipione. See Vivaldi ('Fida nimfa', lib.).

MAGADA (or Magas) (Gr.). The semi-circular wooden bridge fixed at one or both ends of the monochord. The name was also applied to the movable bridge inserted below the string of the monochord to mark the harmonic intervals (Boethius, V, 18), and generally to the bridge in stringed instruments (Philostratus, 778). J. F. R. S.

See also Monochord.

MAGADIS. An ancient Greek instrument, our knowledge of which is almost wholly derived from a passage in the fourteenth book of Athenaeus, in which the scattered references to it in Greek literature are brought together. Athenaeus died in A.D. 194. The instrument had then long been obsolete, and the doubts which existed as to its exact form and structure are no nearer solution at the present day. From the conflicting statements of the authorities quoted, some of whom identify it with the pectis, others with the sambuca and others again with the psaltery, it would seem that the magadis was an instrument of the dulcimer type, provided with a bridge (magas) or bridges so placed that octaves could be played on adjoining strings. It was introduced from the East through the Lydians and was in use in Greece as early as the 6th century B.C., when Anacreon speaks of playing on a magadis of twenty strings. According to Aristoxenus it was played without a plectrum. The characteristic of the instrument was the production of sounds in octaves, and consequently we find the name also applied to a species of double flute, also said to be of Lydian origin, on which octaves could be played, and a verb magadizein signifying to play in octaves on any instrument (Pseudo-Aristotle, 18). J. F. R. S.

See also Greek Music, Ancient, 5, 1.

MAGADIZING (verb derived from the above). Singing or playing in octaves.

MAGALHÃES, Filipe de (b. Azeitão, ?; d. ? Lisbon, ?).

Portuguese 16th–17th-century composer. He was a pupil of Manuel Mendes at Évora. In 1590 he received a salary at Évora Cathedral, which means that he was then appointed there, probably as a singer. From a letter dated 5 Mar. 1610 we learn that Mendes had bequeathed to Magalhães, apparently his favourite pupil, his books and other earthly goods. After leaving Évora he became choir-master at the Misericórdia at Lisbon, and in Mar. 1623 he succeeded Francisco Garro as master of the royal chapel in Lisbon, under the Spanish King Philip III. On 15 May 1641 he was pensioned by John IV of Portugal and he died some time after Mar. 1648.

Several modern scholars of his country consider Magalhães to be the most reputed and expressive polyphonist of the school which succeeded Mendes.

PRINTED WORKS

- 'Missarum liber cum antiphonis Dominicalibus in principio et motetto pro defunctis in fine . . . (Lisbon, Laurens Craesbeck, 1631 or 1636). (Lamego, Paço Episc.; Évora, Cathedral; Viseu, Cathedral; Coimbra, Bibl. Univ.)
- 'Cantica Beatissimae Virginis' (Lisbon, Laurens Craesbeck, 1636). (Coimbra, Bibl. Univ.; Lamego, Paço Episc.; Viseu, Cathedral; part of MS copy of 1769, Lisbon, Cathedral.)
- 'Cantus ecclesiasticus . . .' (Lisbon, 1614, 1642, 1724; Antwerp, 1691). (B.M.)

MANUSCRIPT

Psalm in a MS copy of 1735, preserved at Vila Viçosa, Paço Ducal.

S. K.

MAGANINI, Quinto (b. Fairfield, California, 30 Nov. 1897).

American flautist, conductor and composer. He started his musical career as flautist in the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra in 1917. Two years later he became a member of the N.Y. Symphony Orchestra under W. Damrosch, remaining with that organization until 1928. In 1927 he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize and in 1928–29 the Guggenheim Fellowship in Music. From 1929 to 1932 he conducted the N.Y. Sinfonietta and from 1932 his own Maganini Chamber Symphony, with which he made frequent tours through the U.S.A.

As a composer Maganini received private instruction from Emilio Puyans, Georges Barrère, Domenico Brescia and Nadia Boulanger, and was a student (1926–27) at the Conservatoire Américain at Fontainebleau. About 100 works of his are published (including original compositions, transcriptions, etc.). The following may be singled out for special mention: 'Tuolumne—a California Rhapsody', for orchestra with trumpet obbligato (first performed 1924); 'Cuban Rhapsody' (first performed 1926); 'South Wind—an Orchestral Fancy' (first performed 1931).

Other works are the ballet 'Even Hours'; 'Songs of the Chinese' for women's chorus, 2 pfs. & perc. (1925); 'Cathedral at Sens' for chorus, cello & orch. (1935); 'Ornithological Suite' for orch. (1928), Concerto after Dante for stgs. (1929), 'Sylvan Symphony' (1932), 'Americane' for orch. (1940), 'Peaceful Land' for orch. (1946); chamber music, etc. G. R., adds.

MAGAS. See MAGADA.

MAGE, LE (Opera). See MASSENET.

MAGELONE ROMANCES. See BRAHMS.
TIECK.

MAGENTA (Victory Song). See AUBER.

MAGGIELLO (Magiello), Domenico (b. Valeggio nr. Verona, ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-century composer. He is known by two books of madrigals for 5 voices (Venice, 1567 and 1568). E. v. d. s.

MAGGINI, Giovanni Paolo (b. Brescia, 1581; d. Brescia, c. 1632).

Italian violin maker. According to information culled from the Brescian State Archives his family came originally from Botticino, a village in the neighbouring hills of Brescia. His grandfather, Bartolommeo de Maggini, lived and died at Botticino, but after his death his son Zovan or Giovanni migrated with his wife Giulia to Brescia, where Giovanni Paolo, their second son, was born. The Brescian income tax papers for 1568 state that Giovanni Paolo's elder brother was a shoemaker, but no mention is made of his father's following any profession or trade. In all probability he was a retired farmer with private means.

Nothing is known of Giovanni Paolo's childhood, or what caused him to adopt the profession of violin making, but a legal document, signed by him in 1602, proves two things clearly: first, that his signature is that of a person of scanty education and, secondly, that at the age of twenty-one he was working at Brescia as an apprentice under Gasparo da Salò. On 20 Jan. 1615 he married Maddalena Anna, daughter of Fausto Forrestio, and after his marriage he and his wife settled in a house in the Contrada del Palazzo Vecchio del Podestà. In this home, with the assistance of his apprentice, Jacopo de Lanfranchini, Maggini built up a very successful business in the manufacture of citharas, cellos, violas and violins. In 1626 he prospered still more and acquired a second house and shop in the Contrada delle Bombasaire, whither he removed with his wife and family. He also purchased property in the hills and plains surrounding Brescia, and a residential farm-house and land, which abutted upon the grandfather's old home near the village of Botticino.

The date of his death is conjectural. After 1626 the Brescian income tax papers cease to mention his name, and in 1632 he was undoubtedly dead, as, in a schedule presented in that year by his son Carlo, he uses the formula "Filius quondam Johannis Pauli". Although documentary evidence proves that Maggini's wife died on 24 Nov. 1651 and was buried in the church of St. Agatha, all research for the certificate of her husband's death and burial has been in vain. It is possible that as the town of Brescia was ravaged by an excessively severe plague in 1632, Maggini was one of its victims and, being taken to one of the "pest-houses" which were organized for the sick, at the public expense, died away from home, without any note of his death or burial being made.

As a maker Maggini is known for many progressive innovations in the construction of the violin, and especially in the method of cutting the wood. In his earliest work these alterations are not discernible, as he was still under the influence of Gasparo da Salò, whose inaccuracy of modelling, rough workmanship and dark brown varnish he at first copied. But once he had cast aside the methods of his veteran master, and of the old school of viol makers, Maggini created an era in the history of violin making which has deservedly immortalized his name. He was among the first makers who discarded the then customary method of cutting the soft pine-wood used for the bellies of violins in what is termed "slab fashion", i.e. parallel with the upward growth of the tree, and instead adopted the practice of using the wood the straight way of the grain, brought about by cutting it wedge-ways out of the tree from the bark inwards to the core. He was almost if not quite the earliest maker to use corner blocks and linings such as are now employed, and he modulated his thicknesses with far more intention and accuracy than any of his predecessors.

Maggini's purfling is beautifully executed. His instruments are mostly ornamentally or double purfled, but there are some violins of his bearing the single line. Three of these and one viola are known to exist. Many of his violins bear a purfled or painted conventional design upon the back, but as his violin model advanced in originality he gradually discarded the customary ornamentations so dear to the viol makers, probably having discovered that this practice only served to muffle the tone of his instruments. His violins are large in size and made of the best materials. The model is quite original and bears no resemblance to the Amati pattern; the varnish of his best instruments is orange-yellow, the f holes are clearly cut, the lower circles, unlike those of Stradivari, being always smaller than the upper ones, a feature peculiar to Maggini. The scroll is well cut, but shorter than that of other makers, and for this reason appears to be wider than it really is. The labels are placed close to the centre of his instruments: they are in black Roman type, and, like those of his master da Salò, undated.

Maggini was not a prolific maker, the result of his life's work, as represented by extant instruments, numbering about fifty violins and under two dozen violas and cellos. For this reason authentic specimens of his work are scarce. Some of his finest fiddles have been in the hands of Ole Bull, Léonard, Vieuxtemps and Bériot; the last-named possessed two fine examples, one of which he picked up in an old curiosity shop in Paris for 15 francs. An excellent summary of Maggini's contributions to the development of violins, violas and cellos is given in Lady Huggins's work (see Bibl.).

No authentic pupils of Maggini have come to light. None of his seven children followed his profession; his only surviving son, Carlo Francesco, became a silk merchant. But the Maggini influence can be clearly traced both in the Guarneri and the "Long Strad" models. In modern times few makers have been more copied, both honestly and dishonestly. Fine copies were made by Bernard Simon Fendt and Remy (two French makers who settled in London); by Darches and N. F. Vuillaume in Belgium; by Gand (père), Bernadel, Chanut and Vuillaume in Paris, and at Mirecourt, where it is one of the favourite models.

E. H.-A.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BERENZI, D. ANGELO, 'Di Giovanni Paolo Maggini, celebre liutaio bresciano' (Brescia, 1890).
'La patria di Giovanni Paolo Maggini' (Cremona, 1891).
FLEMING, JAMES M., 'Old Violins and their Makers' (London, 1883).
HART, GEORGE, 'The Violin and its Famous Makers and Imitators' (London, 1875).
HUGGINS, MARGARET L., 'Gio. Paolo Maggini: his Life and Work' (London, 1892).
PICOLELLI, G. DE, 'I liutai antichi e moderni' (Florence, 1885).
ROYER, A., 'Le Violon' (Paris, 1886).
SANDYS, WILLIAM & FLEMING, SIMON ANDREW, 'History of the Violin' (London, 1864).
VIDAL, A., 'La Lutherie et les luthiers' (Paris, 1889).
WASIELEWSKI, J. V. VON, 'Die Violine und ihre Meister' (Leipzig, 1883).

MAGGIO MUSICALE FIORENTINO.

See FLORENCE.

Maggioni, S. Manfredo. See Verdi (3 songs).

MAGGIORE (Ital., major). The word is sometimes used in 18th- and the earlier 19th-century music as a supplementary guide in passages of music where a change is made from the minor to the major mode, generally to the tonic, not the relative major, lest a careless reader should disregard the correction of the minor signature. G., rev.

MAGHRIBÍ MUSIC. The Maghrib constitutes the part of Mediterranean Africa from the Atlantic to the border of Egypt, i.e. Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia and Tripolitania. In this article is treated the music of the Arab settlers and Arabicized Berbers of this region, as distinct from that of the Moors of Spain and of the Berbers proper.¹ The Arab conquest of the Maghrib began in the year 670 and was completed by 712, when the Arabs and their Berber levies crossed the straits and invaded Spain. The Umayyad governors of the Maghrib, and the petty rulers who succeeded them, Arab and Berber, soon began to favour music and musicians, as did their former masters at Damascus. Their courts at Tripoli, Mahdiya, Tunis, Algiers, Tangier and Fes became the haunts of singer (ghanna't) and instrumentalist (mu'trib). The famous virtuoso Ziryáb was at the Aghlabid court at Qairawan near Tunis before he went to Spain (822), although it is claimed that the first school of Maghribí music was formed in this town by Mu'nis al-Baghdádí under the patronage of the Mahdí 'Ubaidalláh, the first Fátimid caliph (909-34). During the heyday of Moorish music in Spain the Maghrib was deeply affected by the Hispano-Moorish art, as both Ibn al-Khaṭīb (d. 1374) and Ibn Khaldún (d. 1406) have testified. The well-known Hispano-Moorish music theorist Abu'l-Ṣalt Umayya (d. 1134) spent about twenty years at Mahdiya in Tunisia. His 'Treatise on Music' ('Risálat al-músiqí') was of such importance that it was translated into Hebrew. A greater Hispano-Moorish theorist was Ibn Bájja or Avenpace (d. Fes, 1138). His treatise on music was of as great repute in the Maghrib as that of Al-Fárabí was in the East.

Meanwhile the Almoravids, a Berber dynasty, had risen to power in the western Maghrib (1061), and these rulers, with a puritanic outlook, did not regard music with favour, although they eventually succumbed to it. Their successors, the Almohads (1128), were even more orthodox in condemning music, and the very instruments of this forbidden pleasure (milha) were destroyed wholesale. Time brought its own revenge. These rugged Berbers having extended their rule to Moorish Spain, they were soon persuaded by its art and culture. Eventually they had their qainát or singing-girls at their courts, just as all their predecessors had done. Incidentally, this puritanic objection to music became the subject of debate, as it had been in Moorish Spain. This we see in the 'Mut'at al-asmá' fi 'ilm al-samá' by Al-Tifáshí (d. 1253) and the 'Kitáb al-imtá' wa'l-intifá' of Al-Shaláhí (fl. 1301). Although much Hispano-Moorish culture had spread throughout the Maghrib during the Almoravid and Almohad rules, it was not until the coming of the Hafsíd amirs in Tunis (1228) and the Marínid rulers to Morocco (1269) that Maghribí art and music reached its zenith. They were further enhanced by Moorish exiles from Spain, notably those who took refuge at Tlemçen on the fall of Córdoba (1236), with another exodus to Tunis on the conquest of Seville (1248). These were followed by refugees to Tetuan after the capture of Granada (1492), the forced emigration to Fes from Valencia (1526) and finally the wholesale expulsion of half a million moriscos from Spain (1609). The Moorish newcomers to the Maghrib became a cultural aristocracy in the land and were the means of bringing its music to a higher level than before. At the same time they were responsible for the regional differences in style which exist to this day in the so-called traditional Granaṭī and Andalusī music; that of Algiers-Tlemḡen being the Cordovan interpretation, that of Tunis the Sevillan manner, and that of Fes and Tetuan the Granadan and Valencian tradition.

¹ See BERBER MUSIC.

At the opening of the 16th century, however, an alien factor began to influence the music of the eastern Maghrib. At Algiers, Bougie, Constantine, Mascara, Tlemḡen, Tripoli and Tunis the Turks had become masters. They formed a military autocracy which imported its own music and musicians. As a result Turkish music soon began to influence the Maghribī art. This not only showed itself in the adoption of a microtonal scale, but in musical form, e.g. in the overture called bashraf (Turk. pīshrev), in such melodic modes (ṭubūʾ sanaʿāt) as sīka and jārika (chahārgah), in rhythmic modes as in the janabar (chanbar) and many other features. In the extreme west, Morocco, where the Turks never gained a permanent foothold, there was little of this alien influence. For that reason the best Maghribī music, especially of the more traditional Granadan or Andalusian type, is to be found in Morocco. Although neither great theorists nor virtuosi found a place in the later history of the eastern Maghrib, those of the western Maghrib, i.e. Morocco, have been remembered. Of the theorists we have a work on 'The Natures, Elements and Musical Modes' ('Tabāʾī wa'l-ṭubūʾ wa'l-uṣūl') attributed to Ibn al-Khaṭīb (d. 1374), but more likely written by 'Abd al-Wāhid al-Wansharīsī (d. 1549). Then there are 'Abd al-Rahmān al-Fāsi (fl. 1650), Muḥammad al-Bū 'Iṣāmī (d. c. 1690) and his pupil Muḥammad b. al-Ṭayyib al-ʿAlamī (d. c. 1721), the author of 'Al-anīs al-muṭrib'. All their works have been edited and translated by the present writer. The 18th century produced some song collectors and editors, notably Al-Hasan b. Ahmad al-Ḥa'ik (d. 1717), whose surname means "a weaver of poetry". He belonged to Tetuan, but came of an old Hispano-Moorish family. His son, Muḥammad, issued another edition of this collection about 1785, which was popularly called "Al-Ḥa'ik", and it became, as Alexis Chottin has said, "the Bible of both the amateur and professional". A contemporary composer and collector was 'Allāl al-Baṭla (fl. 1740).

The marginalia to the manuscript of Al-Fāsi mentioned above demonstrate the fact that on the instrumental side there had been no change over the centuries. His two-string rabāb, tuned by a fifth, is identical with the rubēba of Jerome of Moravia (13th cent.), which the Occident had borrowed from the Moors (cf. the 'Lyra de arco, ou Arte de tanger rabeca' published by Agostinho da Cruz at Lisbon in 1639). On both the theoretical and practical sides Maghribī music was based on the principles of the old Arabian School of the 7th-8th centuries¹, with its eight finger modes (aṣḍī), relics of which are still discernible in the Moroccan Hijāz al-mashriqī mode, which is identical with the thousand-year-old Muṭlaq fī majrā al-wuṣṭā mode, and the Algerian Mazmūm mode, which fits the Khinṣir fī majrā al-biṣīr mode. In the course of time these finger modes, known in the Maghrib as ṭubūʾ, ṣanaʿāt or uṣūl, were increased to twenty-four by compounding a tetrachord (jins) of one mode with that of another, hence such titles as 'Raṣḍ al-dhail' or 'Ramal al-māya'. These twenty-four modes were still flourishing in the opening years of the 17th century. They were DHAIL, Ramal al-dhail, Mujannab al-dhail, Mashriqī, Raṣḍ al-dhail, Istihlāl al-dhail, 'Irdq al-ʿarab', 'Iraq al-ʿajam, MĀYA, Ramal al-māya, Inqilāb al-ramal, Husain, Hijāz al-mashriqī, Raṣḍ or Madani, MAZMŪM, Gharibat al-husain, Ḥamdān, ẒAIDĀN, Iṣbahān, 'Ushshāq, Hijāz al-kabīr, Ḥisr, Zaurakand, and Gharibat AL-MUḤARRAR. The five in capital letters were "root modes" (uṣūl), the other nineteen being "branch modes" (ḡurūʾ). From their names, it is evident that, despite statements to the contrary, very little Persian influence had asserted itself.

After the opening of the 16th century the troubled political conditions which came to Morocco, and the tumults of the Turkish janissary factions in the eastern Maghrib, wrought havoc in the arts and general culture. Since there was no written music in those days in the Maghrib, every note being learned viva voce and performed ex memoria, it only required two generations for some music thus acquired to be utterly changed or entirely lost. By the opening of the 18th century, as we know from Al-Ḥa'ik, almost half of these twenty-four modes had been lost, although some Turkish or Perso-Turkish modes, such as jārika and sīka, had been added, which to-day are wrongly included among the modes of Andalusī and Maghribī music. If, however, we are denied indigenous accounts of the music of those days by reason of anarchic conditions, we can still turn to European travellers. John Addison ('West Barbary', 1671) tells us that the usual instruments in vogue were the rebec (rabāb) and lute (ūd), and that at Fes he found good teachers on the lute. Yet to him the singers had "very harsh and sawing voices" which "grated" on his ears. Windhus ('Journey to Mequinez', 1735), who visited Morocco in 1721, adds the tambourine (ṭār) to the string team and speaks of a performer who clapped his hands "very loud and well". Handclapping (ṣafq) is, and always has been, a constituent part of rhythmic accompaniment in Maghribí music. Thomas Shaw ('Travels . . . to Parts of Barbary and the Levant', 1768) was careful to discriminate between the music of the Bedouins and the Moors. Of the first, he describes the rabáb and quşşába (vulg. qaşba), the latter an obliquely held flute, as well as the tár or tambourine, which was touched "very artfully" with fingers, knuckles or palms. On their cantatas (naubdí) he pens quite a symphonious line or two. As for the Moroccans of the towns, he considered their music to be "more artful and melodious than that of the Bedouins", and mentions the lute ('úd), the mandoline (kuwaitira) in different sizes and the tambourine. He heard twenty or thirty playing together "without making the least blunder or hesitation". Yet, he says, they "all learn by ear" and could pass from one measure to another with "the greatest uniformity and exactness". Incidentally, he thought Turkish music to be inferior to that of the Moroccans. The Turks played on "a long-necked kitt" (kamánja) and an instrument like "our dulcimer" (sunítir). The best account of Maghribí music by travellers is that of Höst ('Nachrichten von Marokos und Fes', 1787), who had visited the land in 1760. The instruments he describes are the lute, rebec, small flute (shabbába), shawm (ghaiṭa), side drum (ṭabl), vase-shaped drum (aqwál) of Berber origin, three types of tambourine (tár, duff and bandair) and diminutive kettledrums (tubailát). He mentions many of the modes, the tuning of the instruments, which are delineated, as well as notating some music.

¹ See MOORISH MUSIC.

From the 19th- and 20th-century accounts we are able to get a better understanding of Maghribí music. It is revealed how widely it was practised, even though it had fallen from its high estate. To-day, there is both a classical and a popular art or, to be more precise, as the Algerians put it, a "serious utterance" (kalám al-jadd) and a "profane utterance" (kalám al-hazl). He who sings the former is a "panegyrist" (maddáḥ), the latter a "singer" (ghanna't). Within the province of the first would be religious themes¹ and the classical ode (qaşṭda), while the repertory of the second covers the love song (ghczal or taghazzal), the Bedouin song (a'rābít), suburban music (hauzt) and the popular couplets (zandání). In Morocco a similar classification obtains. All profane music is dubbed dla, possibly because the instruments (dldt) are featured. It includes the classical cantatas (naubdí), the vulgar ode (qaşṭda malhún) and the popular ditty (qaríṭha). Religious music is called samá' (lit. "listening"), although singing (ghina') is not heard in the Moroccan mosque. What takes its place is cantillation (ta'bír, lit. "interpreting") which, to the real musician, is a distinction without a difference. On the other hand, the pious song of the people is pure and simple melodizing (talhín), although it is devoid of any embellishment (shughl), which belongs to the professional musician. Much of the folk music has this simplicity.

The instruments used in the Maghrib are much the same from west to east. The classical orchestras are confined to such as the lute ('úd), mandoline (kuwaitira), rebec (rabáb) in two sizes, violin and viola (kamánja) played vertically, and very rarely the psaltery (qánún) and dulcimer (sanítir), the latter of Turkish introduction. Then there are the tambourine with cymbalets (tár) and small kettledrums (tubailát, nuqatrát), with occasionally a vase-shaped drum (darbúka, duraj, qullál or aqwál). Those of popular acceptance are the pandore (gunṭbrí), recorder (juwáq, lira), flute (quşşába, vulg. qaşba), simple tambourine (bandair), vase-shaped drums and finger cymbalets (sunítij). When a festivity or procession is afoot the shawm (ghaiṭa, zamr), trumpet (naṣfír) and side-drum (ṭabl) make the welkin ring.

As elsewhere in Arabic-speaking lands all music is homophonic, i.e. unisonal or symphonious (in the medieval sense). It is quite destitute of what the modern Occident terms "harmony", save that an occasional fifth or octave may be sounded by an accompanist as an ornament (za'ida). Yet, as Ernest Newman pointed out many years ago (1915), "the Arab who hears a melody accompanied by drum notes of various pitches is, willy-nilly, listening with a rudimentary harmonic sense". One must have aural experience of this music to appreciate what this homophony really is and was. Yet what dominates the whole is measure (míẓán) itself. The old classical rhythmic modes still exist in some form or another, but not by their names. The most used, in Morocco for instance, are the Bayít (8-4 or 3-2), Qa'im wa nusf (16-4), Bata'ihi (16-8 = 3-4, 6-8 and 2-4), Quddám (6-8 syncopated), Darj (8-8 syncopated in Morocco, 6-8 in Algeria, 3-8 in Tunisia), Inṣiráf (5-8 in Algeria and Morocco), Sufyán (7-8 in Algeria), a Turkish mode. There is also unrhythmic music, both vocal and instrumental, and one hears the latter in the prelude called bughiya in Morocco and taqsim in Tunisia. When vocal recitatives have their opportunity, as in the Moroccan baitain (couplet), the fioriture usually carry audiences away in a frenzy of excitement. Yet these ornaments (shughlúl, za'idat) are not so elaborate in the Maghrib as they are in eastern Arabian lands. This vocalizing, more especially the portamento, nasalities and guttural effects, as well as the unusual rhythms, make much of this music difficult for western ears to appreciate. Here is a prelude (unrhythmic) and a song (rhythmic) from Tunis, as recorded by Robert Lachmann:

¹ See MOHAMMEDAN MUSIC.

(b) Tempo giusto ♩ = 148

Drum loud soft

(1) (2)

etc., another drumming

(1)

1 2 II

Fine
etc.

at 9/8

etc.

In Maghribí music the scale was originally the Pythagorean¹ with an optional neutral third and sixth, which notes (later known as 'irdq and stka') were, and are, to be found in the Turkish scale. Traces of the former may still be heard in Moroccan and Algerian music, although the Tunisian art is based on an unadulterated Turkish scale of quarter-tones (arbd'), a preference emphasized by proximity to Egypt. Here, while many of the melodic modes retain their old Hispano-Moorish-Maghribí names, they are impressed with microtonal features. Indeed there is but little resemblance, save in name, between any of these modes in Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia.

By the year 1830, when the Turks were ejected from their last stronghold, Maghribí music had fallen into desuetude. In Algeria the first to make an attempt to study and revive the old traditional art was F. Salvador Daniel, who was in Algiers in the 1850s and 1860s as a music professor in the École d'Alger. Unfortunately he succumbed to the notion that he had discovered the old Grecian modes in the Algerian art and tried to fit the ṣana'dt into their scales. Alexander Christianovich, a little later, also lent a hand in this revival, but it was not until the dawn of the 20th century, when Edmond Yafil and Jules Rouanet, who were directors in succession of the Algiers École de Musique, spent most of their lives in revivifying this art, that any real progress was made. The only native contribution was a work on theory entitled 'Kashf al-qinā' (Algiers, 1904) by Abú 'Alí al-Ghauthí.

In Morocco the renaissance was due to the unceasing efforts of the French Ministry of Education. Thérèse de Lens had certainly made studies at Meknes on the old Moroccan music, and at Fes and Salé H. Buret also contributed to the uplift. Then followed the enthusiastic support of the French Director-General of Education and Fine Arts in Morocco, G. Hardy, and the solicitude of his successor, J. Gotteland, under whom a census of musicians in all the great towns was made in an endeavour to resuscitate the great music of the past that was passing out of ken. That was in 1927. The following year brought a three days' festival of Moroccan music. Meanwhile the leading French gramophone companies were producing records of the old music which had been revived. This was not only for the sake of conservation, but for scientific study. In the year 1930 the Moroccan Conservatory of Music was opened at Rabat under the direction of Alexis Chottin and the surveillance of Prosper Ricard, to both of whom the greatest praise is due for their share in the renaissance. The present writer also took a share in this revival when, in 1933, he published the Arabic texts, with an English translation, of all the known old manuscripts on the Moroccan theory of music. About this theory little had been known, and the work of a modern Moroccan musician, Ibráhm b. Muhammad al-Tádílí, entitled 'Aghání al-síqá fí 'ilm al-músíqá' ('Songs of Síqá upon the Theory of Music'), written in 1885, still remains in manuscript.

¹ See ARABIAN MUSIC.

Tunis, in the eastern Maghrib, had once been considered to be the soul of novelty in Maghribí music; hence the proverb "Tunis invents, Oran adopts, Algiers perfects". But Tunis had long lost this status. True, it was the half-way house between the east and the west, but most of the novelties that entered through its portals were injurious to the purely indigenous art. Indeed, Rouanet has said that Tunis "preferred quantity to quality". In any case, like that of the rest of the Maghrib, its music had decayed in the political upheavals, and it was not until Baron Rodolphe d'Erlanger, and his assessor Sídí al-Manúbí al-Sanúsí, took its revival in hand in the 1920s that Tunisia was able to stand abreast with Morocco and Algeria.

Apart from its intrinsic value, Maghribí music has an extrinsic importance for the musicographer to-day. Having practically stood still since the 11th century, it enables us to appreciate, to some extent, what medieval European music was like in its time. Whether the Moors of medieval Spain and the Maghrib actually practised the organum of the 'Musica enchiriadis' of the 9th century we do not know, but something very similar to the examples of free organum given in this work may be found in the writings of Al-Kindi (9th cent.).

H. G. F.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

(European Works only)

GENERAL

- 'ABD AL-WAHHÁB, HASAN H., 'Le Développement de la musique arabe en Orient, Espagne et Tunisie' ('Revue Tunisienne', 1918).
ACHOUR, A. & M[ASSIGNON], L[OUIS], 'Un Chant maghribin . . . [et] note sur la métrique des mōwashshahat' ('Revue du Monde Musulman', 1920).
FARMER, HENRY G., Articles in the 'Encyclopaedia of Islam' (Leyden, 1928-38), notably 'Músíqí', 'Ghina', 'Ziryáb' and various instruments.
'Historical Facts for the Arabian Musical Influence' (London, 1950).
'History of Arabian Music' (London, 1929).
'Sources of Arabian Music' (Bearsden, 1940).
ROUANET, JULES, 'La Musique arabe dans le Maghreb' (Lavignac's 'Encyclopédie de la musique', V (Paris, 1922)).
SHAW, THOMAS, 'Travels, or Observations relating to . . . Barbary' (Oxford, 1738).

MOROCCO

- AUBIN, E., 'Le Maroc d'aujourd'hui' (Paris, n.d.).
BERNARD, R., 'Congrès de musique marocaine à Fès' (Rev. Mus., 1939).
BOURILLY, J., 'Éléments d'ethnographie marocaine' (Paris, 1932).
CHEVRILLON, A., 'Chants dans la nuit à Marrakech' ('France-Maroc', 1918).
CHOTTIN, A., 'Airs populaires recueillis à Fès' ('Hespéris', 1923-24).

- 'Corpus de musique marocaine', I, 'Nouba de Ouchák' (Paris, 1931).
'La Musique marocaine' ('Ouvre-Mer', 1929).
'Les Genres dans la musique marocaine' ('Revue musicale du Maroc', 1930).
'Note sur le rythme à cinq temps' ('Hespéris', 1928).
'Tableau de la musique marocaine' (Paris, 1939).
DERMENGHEM, E., 'Trouvères, jongleurs, musiciens et danseurs' ('Sciences et Voyages', Paris, 1935).
DOLMETSCH, MABEL, 'Music in Morocco' ('The Consort', 1931).
FARMER, HENRY G., 'An Old Moorish Lute Tutor' (Glasgow, 1933).
'Studies in Oriental Musical Instruments', ser. ii (Glasgow, 1939).
GARCÍA BARRIUSO, P., 'La música hispano-musulmana en Marruecos' ('Publ. del Instituto General Franco para la investigación hispano-árabe', ser. vi, No. 4, 1941).
'La música marroquí' ('Mauritania', 1934-47).
LENS, THÉRÈSE DE, 'Ce que nous savons de la musique . . . du Maroc' ('Bull. Inst. des Hautes Études Marocaines', 1920).
MAMMERY, A., 'La Musique andalouse à Marrakech' ('Nord-Sud', Casablanca, No. 5).
MARANGUE, M. DE, 'La Musique marocaine' ('Courrier Musical', 1924).
MARÇAIS, W., 'Le Dialecte arabe parlé à Tlemçen' (Publ. de l'École des Lettres d'Alger, XXVI, Paris, 1902).
MITJANA, R., 'En el-Magreb el-Aksa' (Valencia, 1906).
RICARD, P., 'Essai d'action sur la musique et le théâtre populaire marocains' (Rabat, ? 1936).
'La Rénovation des arts musicaux au Maroc' ('Revue d'Afrique', 1936).
'Le Conservatoire de musique marocaine de Rabat' ('Ouvre-Mer', 1932).
THORNTON, P., 'The Voice of Atlas: in Search of Music in Morocco' (London, 1936).

ALGERIA

- AUDISIO, G., 'Un Aperçu de la musique algérienne' (Rev. mus., 1930).
BEN CHENEB, S., 'Chansons satiriques d'Alger' ('Revue Africaine', 1933).
CHRISTIANOVICH, A., 'Esquisse historique de la musique arabe . . .' (Cologne, 1863).
DESPARMET, J., 'Les Chansons de geste dans la Mitidja' ('Revue Africaine', 1939).
FARMER, HENRY G., 'Studies in Oriental Musical Instruments', ser. i (London, 1931).
ROUANET, J., 'La Chanson populaire arabe en Algérie' (Rev. mus., 1905).
'Esquisse pour une histoire de la musique arabe en Algérie' ('Mercure musical', 1905-6).
SALVADOR-DANIEL, F., 'La Musique arabe' (Algiers, 1863; 2nd ed. 1879), Eng. trans. by Farmer as 'The Music and Musical Instruments of the Arab . . . with Notes' (London, 1915).
YAFIL, E. & ROUANET, J., 'Répertoire de musique arabe et maure; collection de mélodies . . .' (Algiers, 1904 et seq.).

TUNISIA

- DEVROLLE, E., 'Les Danseurs tunisiens' ('Bull. Soc. d'Anthropol.', Paris, 1911).
ERLANGER, R. D., 'Mélodies tunisiennes' (Paris, 1937).
'La Musique arabe', V (Paris, 1949).
GIRONCOURT, G. DE, 'Recherche de géographie musicale dans le Sud tunisien' ('La Géographie', Paris, 1939).
HORNOSTEL, E. M. VON, 'Phonographierte tunesische Melodien' (S.I.M.G., Leipzig, 1906).
LACHMANN, R., 'Die Musik in den tunesischen Städten' (A.M.W., 1923).
LAFFAGE, A., 'La Musique arabe' (Tunis, 1904).
MARTY, P., 'Les Chants lyriques populaires du Sud tunisien' ('Revue Tunisienne', 1936-37).
STUMME, H., 'Fünf arabische Kriegslieder . . . [und] tunesische Melodien . . .' (Leipzig, 1915).
'Neue tunesische Sammlungen, Kinderlieder, Strassenlieder . . .' ('Zeit. für afr. u. oceanische Sprachen', 1894).
'Tripolitaniisch-tunesische Beduinenlieder' (Leipzig, 1894), trans. by A. Wagnon as 'Chants des Bédouins de Tripoli et de la Tunisie' (Paris, 1894).

TRIPOLITANIA

- B., 'Musica e danza nella Tripolitania' ('Musica', 1911).
CULTRERA, G., 'I canti di Libia' (Catania, ? 1936).

FALLS, J. C. E., 'Beduinenlieder der libyschen Wüste . . .' (Cairo, 1906).

HARTMANN, M., 'Lieder der libyschen Wüste . . .' (Leipzig, 1899).

PRATELLA, F. B., 'La musica nelle nostre colonie d' Africa' ('Musica d' oggi', 1927).

STUMME, H., 'Tripolitanisch-tunisische Beduinenlieder' (Leipzig, 1894).

MAGIC FLUTE, THE (Mozart). See ZAUBERFLÖTE, DIE.

MAGIC OPAL, THE (Opera). See ALBÉNIZ.

MAGIC OPERA. See ZAUBEROPER.

MAGICIEN SANS MAGIE, LE (Opera). See ISOUARD.

MAGICIENNE, LA (Opera). See HALÉVY.

MAGIELLO, Domenico. See MAGGIELLO.

MAGNARD, (Lucien Denis Gabriel)

Albéric (b. Paris, 9 June 1865; d. Baron, Oise, 3 Sept. 1914).

French composer. He was the son of Francis Magnard, who was editor of 'Le Figaro' from 1879 to 1894. He studied the pianoforte in his youth and in 1886 matriculated at the Paris Conservatoire, where his first masters were Dubois (harmony) and Massenet (composition). He left this institution in 1888 and became a pupil of Vincent d'Indy. He was at that period strongly under the influence of Wagner's music. In 1889-90 he wrote his first Symphony and in 1891 completed his first dramatic score, 'Yolande'. This first Symphony was performed in 1893 at Angers (no other performance was ever given) and 'Yolande' was produced in 1892 in Brussels. The 'Chant funèbre', written under the influence of his father's death, was completed in 1895, at a time when he was already planning his lyric drama 'Guercoeur', which was finished in 1901. In 1902 Ysaÿe and Pugno gave the first performance of his violin Sonata.

At that time Magnard, who was saturnine and distrustful by nature, had already developed a tendency to receive advances with suspicion and an intense dislike for anything resembling self-advertisement. He became his own publisher and thereby sacrificed all the aids to diffusion which a competent business organization may provide. The public, on the other hand, did not prove responsive to his music (except at Nancy, where his friend and colleague, Guy-Ropartz, made all his chief works known). The few, often inadequate, performances of his works that took place in Paris (e.g. string Quartet, 1904; third Symphony, 1906; concert performance of one act of 'Guercoeur', 1910) did not create a profound impression except among a very small circle. The opera 'Bérénice' (libretto by the composer, based on Racine's tragedy) fared no better on its production at the Opéra-Comique on 15 Dec. 1911. But if his admirers were few, they were enthusiastic, and they never ceased to support his music staunchly. This was the one bright spot in the tragedy of his artistic career. At the outset of the war, when the Germans reached Baron, where he lived, he fired on them from his window; he was killed, and his house was burned down. The fire destroyed the only existing copies of his 'Yolande', of his songs Op. 3, of the score of two acts of 'Guercoeur' and of a newly completed set of twelve songs. But 'Guercoeur' was eventually produced at the Paris Opéra on 24 Apr. 1931, reconstructed by Guy-Ropartz from the manuscript full score of the second act and the vocal score of the whole work.

Magnard's music is austere in character. He did not believe in the possibility of poetic expression in music. Deeply interested in musical architecture, he devoted his utmost attention to form and aimed at achieving new forms without infringing traditional principles. For colour and ornamentation he cared very little. His harmonic schemes and his scoring are plain and unadorned. Gaston Carraud (see Bibl.) defines the inain idiosyncrasies of his music thus:

His tendency was to intensify the dramatic element in his instrumental music, and to introduce into dramatic music the logic and restraint of pure symphonic music. He expected from the co-operation of symphony and drama that symphony should govern the flow of dramatic matter, endow that matter with an order, a logic, a rhythm similar to its own. For him symphony and drama are two parallel things, which, in the course of their evolution, may be brought closer to one another, but never intermingle. Symphonic music will acquire a greater wealth of dramatic significance without ceasing to be self-supporting; and the texture of dramatic music will be improved by the operation of principles which are those of pure music.

His later works illustrate his progress in that twofold respect: the lyric drama 'Bérénice' is an instance of pure, severe classicism; whereas in the cello Sonata and the fourth Symphony the dramatic character is more intense than ever.

From the interpenetration of drama and music Magnard expected the long-desired form which would satisfy both senses and mind, aesthetic conceptions and spontaneous emotions. His works are so many steps towards that gradual concourse of two modes of expressing the same inner activity.

Magnard's works remain untried and practically unknown outside France. Even in France there has been no adjustment between the high praise of his admirers and the unqualified detractions of a limited number of writers. But what may be confidently asserted is that his music is worthy of serious attention. It may never become popular, but it has power and depth, and is remarkable for its impassioned earnestness, stern resolution, gravity and concentration.

M. D. C., adds.

BIBL. — CARRAUD, GASTON, 'La Vie, l'œuvre et la mort d'Albéric Magnard' (Paris, 1921).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS¹

OPERAS

Op.

5. 'Yolande', 3 acts (1894).

12. 'Guercoeur', 3 acts (1904).

19. 'Bérénice', 3 acts (1911).

¹ The dates given are those of original publication. Works Opp. 8-20 were first published by Magnard himself, but later taken over by Rouart Lerolle.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

2. 'Suite dans le style ancien' (1892).
4. Symphony No. 1 (1894).
6. Symphony No. 2 (1899).
9. 'Chant funèbre' (1904).
10. Overture (1904).
11. Symphony No. 3 (1902).
14. 'Hymne à la Justice' (1903).
17. 'Hymne à Vénus' (1906).
21. Symphony No. 4 (comp. 1913) (1918).

CHAMBER MUSIC

8. Quintet for wind insts. & pf. (1904).
16. String Quartet (1904).
18. Trio for vn., cello & pf. (1906).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

13. Sonata (1903).

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

20. Sonata (1911).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

1. 3 Pieces (1891).
7. 'Promenades' (1895).

SONGS

3. 6 Songs (1891).
15. 4 Songs for baritone (1903).

MAGNETTON. An electrophonic instrument invented by Stelzhammer of Vienna in 1933, producing its notes by means of electromagnets and capable of imitating the sound of various instruments.

MAGNIFICAT. The 'Song of the Blessed Virgin Mary' has been used as the Vesper canticle of the western Church from time immemorial, and the evening office has always been so constructed as to lead up to it as its chief point of interest.

In plainsong services of the Roman Catholic Church¹ it is sung to the same tones as the psalms, but to a different form, with more elaborate intonations and mediations.²

After the invention of descant a custom arose of singing the Magnificat in alternate verses of plainsong and faburden. Sometimes the faburden was simply a harmonized psalm-tune, with the melody in the tenor, as in the following example of a very beautiful "use" which has long been traditional in French cathedrals:

'MAGNIFICAT', Primi Toni

¹ For the Anglican treatment of the Magnificat see SERVICE.

² See PSALMODY.

Sometimes the plainsong was contrasted with an original faburden, written in the required mode, but not, like the former example, on the actual melody of the psalm-tone. Burney, during his visit to Rome, met with an exceedingly interesting manuscript collection of faburdens of this description, by some of the greatest masters of the 16th century. From his autograph transcription of this volume — now preserved under the name of 'Studi di Palestrina' in the B.M. — we extract the following beautiful example by Giovanni Maria Nanini³:

But the development of the idea did not rest there. It is scarcely possible to name any great church composer who has not illustrated the text of the canticle with original music over and over again.

W. S. R.

BIBL. — ILLING, CARL HEINZ, 'Zur Technik der Magnificat-Komposition des 16. Jahrhunderts' (Wolfenbüttel, 1936).

MAGNIFIQUE, LA (Opera). See GRÉTRY.
MAGPIE MADRIGAL SOCIETY. In 1885 and 1886 Alfred Scott Gatty collected a small choir to sing choruses and glees at the concerts given by Helen, Countess of Radnor, for charitable purposes. These practices proved so popular that in Nov. 1886 a society was founded under the name of The Magpie Minstrels. Lionel Benson was the conductor, and the singers, first limited to 80, rapidly increased to nearly 200. In 1889 H.R.H. Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, became President. One charity concert and one invitation concert were given annually. Over £4500 was handed over to various charitable institutions. The name was altered to The Magpie Madrigal Society in 1896.

In order to encourage good vocal part-

³ It will be seen that Nanini has ended his chant with the harmony of the dominant, instead of that proper to the final of the mode. A similar peculiarity is observable in many other faburdens adapted by the old masters to alternate verses of canticles and Psalms. The reason of this is self-evident. One or other of the subsidiary cadences of the mode is employed, in order that its true final cadence may be reserved for the conclusion of the antiphon which is to follow. The Sistine 'Miserere' may be cited as the exception which proves the rule. It ends with the proper final cadence, because in the office of Tenebrae it is always sung without an antiphon (see ANTIPHON).

writing a cappella the society from time to time gave prizes for competition among the students of the R.A.M. and R.C.M., the prize works being performed at the invitation concerts. Many of the best-known madrigals were included in the programmes, together with works of all schools of the 16th and 17th centuries. Many compositions were specially written for the society by Parry (elected President in 1906), Somervell, Stanford, Vaughan Williams and others. The society came to an end in 1911.

s. H. W., abr.

Bibl. — 'The Magpie Madrigal Society', souvenir (London, 1911).

Mahabharata, The. See Holst ('Sāvitrī', opera). Zumpfe (II., do.).

MAHAGONNY (Opera). See WEILL.

MAHAUT¹, Antoine (Antonio) (b. ?; d. ?).

Franco-Dutch 13th-century flautist, composer and editor. He settled in Amsterdam probably in 1737, remaining until 1780, when he fled his creditors by entering a monastery. He is known chiefly by his work as editor of a series (about 20 numbers) of 'Maendelijks Muzikaels Tijdsverdrif' ('Monthly Musical Pastime'), to which he himself contributed most of the compositions, and as author of a book 'Nieuwe manier om binnen korten tijd op de Dwarsluit te leeren spelen', which appeared also in a French edition, as 'La Méthode de flûte de Mahaut'.

H. A.

MAHILLON. Belgian family of instrument makers made famous by

(1) Charles Mahillon (b. Brussels, 1813; d. Brussels, 1887), who in 1836 founded the Brussels firm of wind instrument-makers called by his name. Three of his sons entered the business.

(2) Victor Mahillon (b. Brussels, 10 Mar. 1841; d. Saint-Jean, Cap-Ferrat, 17 June 1924), one of Charles's sons, is of outstanding importance as a writer on acoustics and musical instruments, and was the honorary and zealous custodian of the museum of the Brussels Conservatoire.

After studying music under some of the best professors there, he applied himself to the practical study of wind-instrument manufacture and was taken into his father's business in 1865. He started a musical journal, 'L'Écho musical', in 1869 and continued it until 1886, when his time became too much occupied to attend to its direction. In 1876 he became the honorary curator of the museum of the Conservatoire, which, begun with Fétis's collection of 78 instruments, was, through his special knowledge and untiring energy, increased (1888) to upwards of 1500. An important contribution to it, of Indian instruments, was a division of the fine collection of the Rajah Sir Sourindro Mohun Tagore between the Brussels Conservatoire and the R.C.M. in London. Victor Mahillon published two very important works, besides three synoptical tables of harmony, voices and instruments. The first is 'Les Éléments d'acoustique musicale et instrumentale', an octavo volume published in 1874, which gained for him in Paris in 1878 the distinction of a silver medal. The other is the catalogue of the Conservatoire, which appeared in volumes annually from 1877 and is of the highest interest. As well as these noteworthy works he contributed to the ninth edition of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica' several historical and technical articles of great value on wind instruments, both wood and brass. As soon as Mahillon could introduce a workshop into the Conservatoire he did so, and he had reproductions made of many rare instruments which, through their antiquity or the neglect of former owners, had too much deteriorated for purposes of study. Among these reproductions the Roman Lituus and Buccina in the Music Loan Collection at Kensington, in 1885, were prominent objects of interest in the fine selection contributed under Mahillon's auspices by the Brussels Conservatoire. He reproduced from authentic sources the complete families of wind instruments that were in use in the 16th and 17th centuries.

Victor Mahillon's services to the Inventions Exhibition of 1885, in the above-named contribution of instruments to the Loan Collection, and the historical concerts under his direction performed by professors and students of the Brussels Conservatoire, at which several rare instruments were actually played upon in contemporary compositions, were so highly appreciated by the Executive Council of that Exhibition that a gold medal was awarded to him.

A. J. H.

Bibl. — 'Bulletin de la Société Union Musicologique', 1924, II.
CLOSSON, E., 'Victor Mahillon'.

MAHLER, Gustav (b. Kališt, 7 July 1860; d. Vienna, 18 May 1911).

Austrian (Bohemian) conductor and composer. He was born of Jewish parents, the second of a family of twelve. From 1869 to 1875 he went to the grammar-school at Jihlava (Iglau), the neighbouring large town. From there he was sent to Vienna, where he studied at the Conservatory until 1878, in which year he met Anton Bruckner, an occurrence which made a great impression on the younger man. Hugo Wolf had entered the Conservatory in the same year as Mahler, but was not able for long to submit to its discipline. Mahler, however, prospered under such teachers as Julius Epstein for piano, Robert Fuchs for harmony (Hellmesberger is said to have excused him from counterpoint owing to his exceptional gifts for composition, a freedom which Mahler later regretted) and Theodor Krenn for composition. By 1877 he had started on a course of history, philosophy and the history of music at the University of Vienna, but in 1879 he gave up the course. In 1880 he left Vienna and took up the post of Kapellmeister during the summer season at Hall in Austria. That year saw the completion of his first mature composition, 'Das klagende Lied'.

¹ Sometimes wrongly spelt Mahaut.

From then onwards Mahler worked unremittingly as opera conductor in different towns in Austria and Germany, gradually making his way from post to post until he reached the summit of the profession. In 1881 he was Kapellmeister at Ljubljana (Laibach) and in 1882 at Olomouc. In 1883 he was back again in Vienna, this time with a small appointment, chorus-master of the Italian opera at the Carltheater, and it was in this year that he made a pilgrimage to Bayreuth and was deeply moved on hearing 'Parsifal'. In 1883 he finished the 'Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen' and took up a fresh post, the most important and extended hitherto, that of Kapellmeister at Cassel. He stayed at this work for two years and conducted operas of all styles. His letters from that time show him dissatisfied with his situation. He was already beginning to find a second-rate position irksome.

In 1885 he went to fill a post at Prague similar to that which he had previously held at Olomouc. Anton Seidl was first Kapellmeister at Prague, but soon went on tour to America, leaving Mahler virtually in charge. At last things began to fall out for him as he had wished. His performance of Beethoven's ninth Symphony awakened enthusiasm, and to a great extent he was able to have his own way with productions of Mozart and Wagner. In 1886 he went, again as second Kapellmeister, to Leipzig, remaining in the post for two years and increasing his knowledge of opera scores and his capabilities as producer whenever the chance offered. There his chief was Artur Nikisch.

In 1888 he was given his first appointment as director, this time at Budapest, where he found affairs in a chaotic state with the new Intendant, Beniczsky, struggling to keep the balance between the old school of opera-goers who preferred Rossini and Meyerbeer and the new Magyar element which clamoured for national opera. Mahler signed a contract for ten years and started with the utterance "I will work with enthusiasm". But within two years he gave up the post and left Budapest disillusioned. While there he had managed to produce 'Don Giovanni' with such vitality that Brahms ejaculated "famos" and "grossartig" and called the young conductor a "devil of a fellow". In 1889 'Rheingold' and 'Die Walküre' were produced in Hungarian.

From 1891 to 1897 he filled the post of first Kapellmeister in the municipal theatre at Hamburg. It was a step backward from his former directorship, but for all that these years at Hamburg were the most enjoyable of his life as a conductor of opera, and he was able to find real quiet, to give himself up to composition and to the comparatively unhindered production of opera. In 1892 he visited London and conducted performances of German opera, with a contingent from Hamburg, in Augustus Harris's season at Drury Lane. It was during these years that his second and third symphonies were finished. In 1895 he became a Roman Catholic.

In 1897 he was given the appointment of Kapellmeister at the Court Opera in Vienna. The post came to him largely through the strong recommendation of Brahms. Shortly before this Mahler had visited Brahms at Ischl, and it is possible that the elder man, then very near his end, remembered the performance of 'Don Giovanni' which had so stirred him at Budapest. It was not long after Mahler's return to Vienna that his duties were enlarged, and he was given the title of Artistic Director and placed at the real head of affairs. This had a liberating influence on his work and enabled him to bring about the reforms which he at once started upon. During the ten years that he spent in this post he got through a mass of productions of opera, wiped out the debt that had been crippling the Court Opera and gathered about him not only a cultivated and enthusiastic audience but a strong artistic following. There was nothing that he did not look into. Every detail of production as well as of stage deportment and musical phrasing he considered to be within his province and worthy of his close attention. And all this immense zeal was expended for the sake of the work. For himself he cared nothing, except in so far as he was a chosen instrument for the doctrines of faultless opera production. But he lacked a sense of tactful management, and as fast as he made friends who were uplifted by his energy and by the largeness of his vision, he made enemies who could not brook the methods he employed of riding roughshod over the feelings of all who had the misfortune to get in his way. And so the time came when affairs reached such a pass that it was borne in upon him that the only hope for the Court Opera to pull itself together was for him to depart and leave for his successor the possible continuation of his work. This he did.

The rest of his life was spent in a strenuous effort to amass, as swiftly as possible, a fortune large enough to ensure for himself a period of rest and for his wife, Alma Maria Schindler, whom he had married in 1902, and his children a competency against the future. With this in view he went to America as soon as his duties in Vienna were at an end in 1907. In the previous year he had visited that country, and he now returned there to obtain a great success as conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society. In 1908 he again visited America to fill this post. In that year also he conducted some memorable opera performances of Beethoven, Wagner and Mozart at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, and gave there the first American performances of Smetana's 'Bartered Bride' and of Tchaikovsky's 'Queen of Spades'. In 1910 he was once more in America. But this time he returned to Europe broken in health, and after a few concerts of his own works in Munich, Paris and Amsterdam (the last named, both then and later, the centre of a Mahler cult and the home of the most complete performances of his works under the guidance of his friend Willem Mengelberg), he returned to Austria and died in his fifty-first year.

SYMPHONIC COMPOSITIONS.—Mahler's symphonies trace descent from Beethoven through Bruckner. From Brahms he got little, from Wagner much. It is worthy of note that this man, who had been so much identified with opera and had acquired such a sound technique in its production, should never, but for such early discarded attempts as 'Die Argonauten' and 'Der Herzog von Schwaben', have made one of his own. It is probable that the looseness of structure and emotionalism which marks his works and increases with each fresh composition up to and, except for Symphony IV, including Symphony VIII may be put down to the influences which came to him from his very close connection with the operatic stage, and a reason for the excellence of his two last completed works, 'Das Lied von der Erde' and Symphony IX, may well be found in the fact that by the time he wrote them he had given up for good his activities in opera.

Mahler gradually developed from an artist mainly interested in the manifestations of nature (Symphonies I-IV), through a period when vaster problems attracted him: the soul of man, its relation to the world of nature which had held him in earlier years, its battle with circumstance (Symphonies V-VII). In the last two works he had reached a period of resignation ('Das Lied von der Erde' and Symphony IX). In each section one work may be discussed as a type.

Symphony II is a good example of all Mahler's work, being lengthy, scored nearly always heavily for a large orchestra, restless and stormy in places, monumentally exalted in others. Van Wesselikens likens the first movement to a sequence of frescoes before which we quickly pass. The second movement is a light dance, a rather sophisticated Ländler, with a contrasted middle section. The third shows Mahler's habit of using up old material in his symphonies, the song 'Des Antonius von Padua Fischpredigt' (from the anthology 'Des Knaben Wunderhorn') being incorporated. The fourth is remarkable for the use of a contralto voice which sings some lines from the 'Wunderhorn', a beautiful calm preparation for the brilliant last movement which ends with orchestra and large chorus united on the word "Auferstehen".

Symphony V may be taken as typical of Mahler's second period. The change in the composer's mental outlook which had taken place since the earlier works can here be seen in its full effect. This Symphony is disjointed in form and unsettled in matter. The orchestra used is not so large as that of Symphony II, but the demands made on it are greater. The work is in three large parts. The first is subdivided into two movements, the first of which is the exposition, the second the working-out and restatement of the various subjects. The second part is a scherzo and the third a rondo of huge proportions, preceded by a short adagietto which points the way to the slow movement of Symphony IX.

That work, for orchestra alone, is characteristic of the comparative spiritual calm Mahler reached in his later years. The orchestra used is, as ever, a large one, but the manner of its use is more personal, the individualities of each instrument receive more careful attention than hitherto. There are some moments of really delicate scoring. The thought, too, is clearer and directed with more certainty. The slow movement which ends the work, written with great breadth and a fine command of the strings, reaches a plane which is surely the highest that Mahler ever attained.

In a different category from the rest of his work, 'Das Lied von der Erde' and Symphony VIII stand apart. The latter is set for a very large orchestra, two-part chorus, eight solo voices and boys' chorus, and this huge apparatus has earned it the nickname of "the symphony of a thousand". The work is in two parts. The words of the first part are those of the Latin hymn "Veni, Creator Spiritus". Those of the second are taken from the final scene of the second part of Goethe's 'Faust'. Between the two sets of words a certain affinity exists in the longing of the soul for the "Creator Spiritus" and in Faust's yearning towards the "Höchste Herrscherin der Welt", and this linking of the two sections at certain well-chosen moments is strengthened by the use of themes in the second part which had previously served in the first. Technically there is nothing new to note in the work. Apart from a tendency to use the chorus at places in an orchestral manner, the choral writing does not add anything to the technical invention of Mahler's contemporaries.

The 'Lied von der Erde' dates from the next year to that of Symphony VIII. Six poems translated from the Chinese in the 'Chinesische Flöte' by Hans Bethge are set for voice (3 for tenor, 3 for contralto or baritone) and full orchestra with as nice a sensibility of the underlying philosophy of the lines as ever Mahler showed. The change from the over-charged Symphony VIII to the fine perceptions of this set of songs is noteworthy. The scoring has often an almost Latin delicacy. From that aspect the work is significant in German music. In it Mahler showed that the profundities of Teutonic thought could be expressed in orchestration that had the transparency of the French; in fact, that to be profound was no longer an excuse for being turgid. Mahler's position as a composer of importance will rest more certainly on this work and on Symphony IX than on all the remainder of his music. As a composer he took the symphonic form and, with a seldom restrained impetuosity, enlarged and inflated it until it had lost those features of balance and form which are generally taken to be its characteristics and became something which, though still structurally sound and self-sufficient, yet differed in feeling and idea from the classical model. s. G.

The foregoing represents one view of Mahler as a composer, and almost exclusively as a symphonic composer. But his work continues to give rise to endless disputes, so that it will be reasonable in this case to let a second contributor voice a different opinion, which happens likewise to be concerned with the symphonies alone. It should be borne in mind, however, that it is possible to feel that not they but Mahler's songs for voice and pianoforte or orchestra exhibit his genius most characteristically — the music in which he showed himself far less ambitious and more tasteful and consistent in style; that indeed he was predominantly a song composer, even in his symphonic work. E. B.

The final judgment on the fascinating personality of the last great Austrian symphonist has not even yet been passed, possibly because in Mahler, as perhaps in no other composer of his generation, are reflected the contrasts and contradictions of the age in which he lived. For Mahler, as for Berlioz, symphonic form was the natural medium for the realization of his musical conceptions; and, like Berlioz, he broke away from the customary four-movement scheme, extending it until in many of his symphonies the middle part has much in common with the suite.

In many quarters the reproach is levelled against Mahler that he did not sufficiently realize the need of establishing a connection between the several ideas employed within a single movement. To this it must be replied that Mahler was a very great master of musical design, but that to effect transitions between his themes was often incompatible with the nature of the themes themselves; it was essential that one should follow on another without a break and frequently be held together only by rhythmic figures on the percussion, as in the first movement of Symphony III (miniature score, p. 5, bars 5-9, p. 14, bars 12-17, p. 17, bars 2-8, p. 77, bars 7-17, etc.). The extreme length of many of his symphonic movements — e.g. the first movement of Symphony III and the last movement of VI — forms another barrier to the understanding of his works, and not unnaturally, since they embody a new experiment in form. The material from which the first movement of Symphony III is built is not the customary "first subject", offset by a "second subject" of the cantabile type, but consists of groups of themes. The first group, which is itself composed of five different themes and motives, contrasts with a second group consisting of two themes. There is nothing artificial about this. We know that the principle of linking up short motives into a group of themes is the essence of Mozart's symphonic technique. Mahler, as the last representative of the Viennese classical school, which leads from Haydn and Mozart, through Beethoven and Schubert, to Bruckner, embraces all the elements contained in his predecessors and integrates them in one great synthesis. So, too, stylistic features, such as the successive statement of several themes and the working up of thematic material to a climax, which are characteristic of the symphonic technique of Mozart and Beethoven, are in Mahler's work fused into a new unity. It is possible to maintain that in thematic invention Mahler falls short of his predecessors. But here too it may be shown that where a theme is banal in effect, this banality is the result of an intentional naturalism and not of lack of invention. A most interesting example of this may be seen in the second subject of Symphony VI, which on its first appearance sounds almost vulgar. But at each recurrence the character of the theme changes, gaining in expressiveness and nobility, until at last it rings out like a chorale. An analogy may be found in the transformation — in the reverse order — of the theme of the Beloved in Berlioz's 'Symphonie fantastique'. But in Mahler the process seems more closely akin to the thematic evolution found in Beethoven, whose ideas in their original form are often embryonic, but at each successive stage take on a greater richness, significance and nobility. That creative process which Beethoven's sketch-books reveal is unfolded in Mahler's symphonies in the presence of the listener, as characters are shown developing in a novel. If it be remembered that Mahler was an extraordinary personality, striving for the highest perfection both in his life and in his works, this rare union of musical and spiritual expression — of which more will be said in connection with the sketches for Symphony X — will be readily understood.

But this process of thematic development within a single movement leads us farther. It shows that both in Symphony VI, regarded as a whole, and in the entire series may be found a process of spiritual development leading from the first movement to the last. This fact was recognized by Paul Bekker, who in his exhaustive book on the symphonies expresses the view that their centre of gravity is to be found increasingly in the final movement. A principle of design inherent in the later Beethoven is thus affirmed, which makes it possible to unite organically all the movements in the symphony. The term Finalsymphonie which Bekker coins to describe this plan of construction denotes that the culmination of the work is to be found in the last movement.

The development of symphonic form in Mahler's work may be traced as follows. The first group of works comprises the first three symphonies, in which a great part is played by song melodies. The first movement of Symphony I, begun in 1885, is built up round a song written by Mahler in the previous year: "Ging heut' morgen über Feld"; this song belongs to the song cycle 'Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen', a work which, like Symphony I, is strongly autobiographical in character. In the third movement of the Symphony Mahler uses another song, the canon 'Frère Jacques', and in the middle section there appears yet a third song, taken, like the first, from the 'Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen'. All these songs, however, are reshaped and treated on symphonic lines without words or voices.

In Symphony II he breaks away from the customary four-movement plan. The third movement, a scherzo, is immediately followed by a fourth movement in the form of a folk-song for soprano voice, which passes without a break into the fifth movement, containing the chorale "Auferstehn". The first and second movements should be separated by an interval of at least five minutes, the purpose of which is to divide the Symphony into two sections.

The same formal scheme, only even more clearly evolved, is to be found in Symphony III. The first movement, which lasts nearly 45 minutes, constitutes the first section, while the second section consists of the remaining five movements. The second movement is a kind of minuet and the third a kind of scherzo, the theme of which is taken from one of Mahler's songs. The fourth movement is a setting for contralto voice of words by Nietzsche: "O Mensch! Gib acht!" The fifth movement is a song for women's voices in three parts and boys' choir, and the finale is an instrumental adagio in which the strings predominate. Although many parts of Symphonies I, II and III are polyphonic in character, the predominant style is one in which a single melodic line is accompanied by subordinate parts or harmonies.

This is no longer the case with Symphony IV, in which Mahler consciously completes the process of transition towards a contrapuntal style. The resulting trend, however, led him back, not, as might have been expected, to the polyphony of the 17th century (as in the case of Reger and, later, of Hindemith), but to the first of the Viennese symphonists, Haydn. From this originated an entirely new kind of melodic counterpoint. In this Symphony, which returns to the four-movement plan, the connection with its three predecessors is maintained only in the last movement, a very simple folk-song-like melody for soprano and small orchestra.

The second group of symphonies is formed by the three purely instrumental Symphonies V, VI and VII. In these the contrapuntal element plays an increasingly important part, as may be seen in the rondo-finale of V, the finale of VI and the first and last movements of VII. Mahler here employs a new method of linking up both the movements themselves and also the different sections within each movement — a method first used by him in the first movement of Symphony III: it consists of a short motive (as in Symphony V) or a combination of two chords, A major-A minor (as in Symphony VI), used as a connecting link, with an effect like that of a cadence or a refrain.

The last three symphonies are hard to classify into a single group; they are the product of his maturity, in which he turns to account the structural achievements of the earlier works. In Symphony VIII the style of his thematic invention harks back to II and III, but the handling of the material in many places owes much to the contrapuntal technique evolved in V, VI and VII. The first movement of VIII is Mahler's greatest architectural achievement; the second comprises the adagio, scherzo and finale of the Symphony, which follow each other without a break and are linked together by the use of the same themes. The development of the first consists of a double fugue, and at the end appears a theme for trumpets and trombones (from a position above the orchestra), which returns, transformed into a chorale, at the close of the finale. The first performance of the work took place at Munich on 12 Sept. 1910, Mahler himself conducting. Its reception, which was overwhelming, was the first unqualified success that he had ever enjoyed. Eight months later he was dead.

The posthumous Symphony IX is in four movements, but this is all it has in common with the traditional form: again the arrangement of the movements, both as to tempo and expression, is unusual. The first movement is an andante comodo, only occasionally quickening to an allegro. The movement is distinguished by its lyrical character, the disconnected treatment of the orchestra and the division of the melodic line between the first and second violins. The second movement, a Ländler, is a stylized form of peasant dance, reminiscent of its prototypes in the earlier symphonies. The third movement, allegro assai, is headed "Rondo Burleske" and shows its kinship with the rondo-finale of Symphony V. The final movement is an adagio beginning with a long exposition for strings alone, the other instruments gradually joining in; it finally dies away on the softest pianissimo, again on the strings alone.

Of Symphony X only the preliminary sketches of the definitive score are preserved. Mahler wished to have the work destroyed, but his widow could not bring herself to do it, as several of the movements were almost completely scored. A facsimile edition was published in 1924; the score of the first movement (Adagio) and second movement (Scherzo) was completed by Ernst Křenek and performed at a Mahler memorial celebration in the Vienna Opera House by the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra under Franz Schalk, at that time director of the State Opera. There is hardly another of Mahler's works so strongly autobiographical in character. The third movement bears the inscription "Purgatorio"; on the title-page of the fourth—a scherzo—are written the words: "The devil dances with me. Madness seizes me, accursed that I am—annihilates me, so that I forget that I exist, so that I cease to be, so that I . . ." (here the writing breaks off). At the end of the movement he wrote to his wife these moving words: "Du allein weisst, was es bedeutet. Ach!

Ach! Ach! Leb' wohl, mein Saitenspiel! Leb wohl, leb wohl, leb wohl. Ach wohl, Ach, Ach." And in the fifth movement (finale), in the middle of the score, is written "Für dich leben! für dich sterben!" With these words ends the last work of the last great Austrian symphonist.

E. J. W.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ABRAHAM, GERALD, 'An Outline of Mahler' (M. & L., XIII, 1932, p. 391).
 ADLER, GUIDO, 'Gustav Mahler' (Vienna, 1920).
 BEKKER, PAUL, 'Die Sinfonien Gustav Mahlers' (Berlin, 1921).
 CARDUS, NEVILLE, 'Mahler', in 'Ten Composers' (London, 1945), p. 63.
 CARNER, MOSCO, 'Mahler in his Letters: A Psychological Study', in 'Of Men and Music' (London, 1944), p. 101.
 'Mahler's Visit to London', ibid., p. 106.
 'Form and Technique of Mahler's "Song of the Earth"', ibid., p. 111.
 'Mahler's Rescoring of the Schumann Symphonies', ibid., p. 115.
 ENGEL, GABRIEL, 'Gustav Mahler, Song-Symphonist' (New York, 1933).
 HUTSCHENRUUYTER, WOUTER, 'Gustav Mahler' (The Hague, 1927).
 MAHLER, ALMA MARIA, 'Erinnerungen und Briefe' (Amsterdam, 1940).
 'Gustav Mahler: Memories and Letters', Eng. trans. of the preceding by Basil Creighton (London, 1946).
 MAHLER, GUSTAV, 'Briefe, 1880-1911' (Vienna, 1936).
 MINGELBERG, RUDOLF, 'Gustav Mahler' (Leipzig, 1923).
 NEWLIN, DIKA, 'Bruckner-Mahler-Schoenberg' (Morningside Heights, N.Y. & London, 1947).
 PAMER, F. E., 'Gustav Mahlers Lieder' (i) (S.M.W., Vols. XVI-XVII).
 ROLLER, ALFRED, 'Die Bildnisse von G. Mahler' (1922).
 SCHAEFFERS, ANTON, 'Gustav Mahlers Instrumentation' (Düsseldorf, 1935).
 SORABJI, K. S., 'Notes on the Symphonies of Mahler', in 'Around Music' (London, 1942).
 SPICHT, RICHARD, 'Gustav Mahler' (Berlin, 1913).
 STEFAN, PAUL, 'Gustav Mahler: eine Studie über Persönlichkeit und Werk' (Munich, 1921).
 'Gustav Mahler: a Study of his Personality and Work', trans. by T. E. Clark (New York, 1931).
 TISCHLER, HANS, 'Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde"' (M. Rev., X, 1949, p. 111).
 'Mahler's Impact on the Crisis of Tonality' (M. Rev., Vol. XII, 1951, p. 113).
 WALTER, BRUNO, 'Gustav Mahler' (Vienna, 1936).
 'Gustav Mahler', Eng. trans. of the preceding by James Galton (London, 1937).
 WELLEZ, EGON, 'The Symphonies of Gustav Mahler' (M. Rev., I, 1940, p. 2).
 WESSEM, VAN, 'Gustav Mahler' (Arnhem, 1920).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

OPERAS

Title	Libretto	Remarks
'Die Argonauten.'	Composer.	Early, unpublished.
'Der Herzog von Schwaben.'	Composer.	Early, unpublished.
Completion of Weber's 'Die drei Pintos'.	Theodor Hell, based on Carl Ludwig Seidel's story 'Der Brautkampf'.	1887; produced Leipzig, Municipal Theatre, 20 Jan. 1888.

SYMPHONIC WORKS

Title	Scored for	Words	Finished
'Das klagende Lied.'	Orch., soprano, contralto, tenor & chor.	Composer, after the Grimm brothers.	1880.
Symphony No. 1, D ma.	Orch.	—	1888.

Title	Scored for	Words	Finished
Symphony No. 2, C mi.	Orch., soprano, contralto & chorus.	From 'Des Knaben Wunderhorn' & incl. Klopstock's 'Auferstehung'.	1894.
Symphony No. 3, D mi.	Orch., contralto & women's & boys' chor.	Nietzsche & from 'Des Knaben Wunderhorn'.	1895.
Symphony No. 4, G ma.	Small orch. & soprano.	From 'Des Knaben Wunderhorn'.	1900.
Symphony No. 5, C mi.	Orch.	—	1902.
Symphony No. 6, A mi.	Orch.	—	1904.
Symphony No. 7, D ma.	Orch.	—	1905.
Symphony No. 8, E♭ ma.	Orch., 8 solo voices, double chor., boys' chor. & organ.	Maurus's hymn "Veni, Creator Spiritus" & portions of the final scene of Goethe's 'Faust', Part II.	1907.
'Das Lied von der Erde.'	Orch., contralto & tenor solo.	Chinese poems trans. from Hans Bethge's 'Die chinesische Flöte'.	1908.
Symphony No. 9, D♭ ma.	Orch.	—	1909.
Symphony No. 10 (unfinished).	Orch.	—	1910.

SONGS ¹

Title	Words	Date
'Lieder und Gesänge aus der Jugendzeit'		1882.
1. Frühlingsmorgen.	R. Leander.
2. Erinnerung.	Leander.
3. Hans und Grete.	Traditional.
4. Serenade aus 'Don Juan'.	Nikolaus Lenau, after Tirso de Molina.
5. Phantasie aus 'Don Juan'.	Lenau, after Molina.
6. Um schlimme Kinder artig zu machen.
7. Ich ging mit Lust durch einen grünen Wald.
8. Aus! Aus!
9. Starke Einbildungskraft.
10. Zu Strassburg auf der Schanz.	Anthology 'Des Knaben Wunderhorn'.
11. Ablosung im Sommer.
12. Scheiden und Meiden.
13. Nicht Wiedersehen!
14. Selbstgefühl.
'Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen' (with orch.)	Composer.	1883.
1. Wenn mein Schatz Hochzeit macht.
2. Ging heut' morgen übers Feld.
3. Ich hatt' ein glühend Messer.
4. Die zwei blauen Augen.
'Lieder aus "Des Knaben Wunderhorn"' (also with orch.)	'Des Knaben Wunderhorn.'	1888.
1. Der Schildwache Nachtlied.
2. Verlorene Muh'.
3. Trost im Unglück.
4. Wer hat dies Liedlein erdacht?
5. Das irdische Leben.
6. Des Antonius von Padua Fischpredigt.
7. Rheinlegendchen.
8. Lied des Verfolgten im Turme.
9. Wo die schönen Trompeten blasen.
10. Lob des hohen Verstandes.
(11. Es sangen drei Engel, from Symphony III).
(12. Urlicht, from Symphony II).
5 Songs to Poems by Rückert	Friedrich Rückert.	1902.
1. Ich atmet' einen linden Duft.
2. Liebst du um Schönheit.
3. Blicke mir nicht in die Lieder.
4. Ich bin der Welt abhanden gekommen.
5. Um Mitternacht.
'Kindertotenlieder' (also with orch.)	Rückert.	1902.
1. Nun will die Sonn' so hell aufgeh'n.
2. Nun seh' ich wohl, warum so dunkle Flammen.
3. Wenn dein Mutterlein.
4. Oft denk' ich, sie sind nur ausgegangen.
5. In diesem Wetter.
'Revelge.'	'Des Knaben Wunderhorn.'	last years.
'Der Tambour'sell.'	'Des Knaben Wunderhorn.'	last years.

See also Amsterdam (festivals). Fistoulari (son-in-law). Song, pp. 949, 951-52. Symphony, pp. 241-43. Tchaikovsky (cond. 'Eugene Onegin').

MAHLER-KALKSTEIN. See AVIDOM.

Mahlmann. See Wagner (J. K., 'Herodes vor Bethlehem', incid. m.).

MAHMUD. See 'ABD AL-QADIR.

MAHOMETAN MUSIC. See MOHAMMEDAN MUSIC.

MAHON. English family of musicians, traditionally of Irish origin. They were connected with Oxford music in the last three decades of the 18th century. The activities of the two brothers, John and William, both clarinettists, are not less difficult to disentangle than those of the sisters, all soprano singers of repute, since Christian names and even initials are seldom found in advertisements and concert programmes. Of the father nothing is known; of the mother only her name, Catherine, and that she died on 12 July 1808 at Salisbury. Mee, in 'The Oldest Music Room in Europe', suggests that the father was a player in the Oxford Music Room orchestra and that his wife was a singer, both with regular engagements.

¹ With pf. unless otherwise mentioned.

(1) John Mahon (b. ?, c. 1746; d. Dublin, 1834), clarinettist and composer. He began his career as a clarinettist at Oxford, where he played a concerto in 1772. Soon afterwards he migrated to London, where he quickly made a reputation as a concerto player. He figured in most of the provincial festivals from 1773 till 1824. For the Handel Festival of 1784 at Westminster he was engaged as violinist. Gerber's 'Lexikon' described him as one of the greatest masters of the clarinet, while Parke, the oboist, gave him high praise as a concerto player. His compositions include concertos for the clarinet (one at least published by J. Bland before 1787), 4 duets for 2 clarinets, 2 marches for the Oxford Volunteer Band and a song with clarinet obbligato, "Hope, thou cheerful ray", inserted in Shield's 'The Woodman'. He wrote 'A New and Complete Preceptor for the Clarinet', published in 1803. This substantial work gives scales of fingering for a 5-key clarinet and a 7-key Clara Voce or Corno Bassetta (sic, basset-horn).

(2) William Mahon (b. ?, ? 1750; d. Salisbury, 3 May 1816), clarinettist and violinist. He made his debut at Oxford as an oboist and was no doubt one of the players in Gossec's 'Symphony with clarinets' performed there in 1774. At the Handel Festivals of 1784 and 1786 he was among the violas, and as violinist he led the festival orchestra at Salisbury for thirty years; but it would seem that the clarinet was the instrument on which he excelled. A London directory of 1794 describes him as "clarinet and oboe" at the New Musical Fund Concerts, the Opera, the Oratorios at Covent Garden and at Ranelagh. He was clarinettist in the Philharmonic orchestra for the first three years of its existence. The 'Gentleman's Magazine' in an obituary notice described him as one of the greatest ornaments of the profession and "esteemed the first performer on the clarinet in England".

(3) James Mahon (b. ?; d. ?), bass singer. He sang frequently at Bath, the Somerset Music Meetings at Wells and at the Salisbury festivals. He was among the basses at the Handel Festivals of 1786 and 1787 at Westminster, and appeared in the first English performance of Mozart's Requiem at Covent Garden in Lent 1801.

(4) Mrs. Ambrose (born Mahon) (b. ?; d. ?), soprano singer. She was a favourite singer at Oxford, and at the Winchester, Salisbury and Birmingham festivals in the late 1770s and 1780s. She was one of the principals with Mara and Mrs. Billington at Westminster Abbey in 1786, again with Mara in the following year and with the same singer in 1788 at the Three Choirs Festival at Worcester.

(5) Mrs. Warton (born Miss M. Mahon) (b. ?; d. ?), soprano singer. She made her debut at Oxford in 1778. Often referred to as "the celebrated Miss Mahon of Oxford", she sang at the Handel Festival of 1786, and in the following year was one of the principals with Mara and with her sister, Mrs. Ambrose. She made only occasional appearances after her marriage to the Rev. John Warton, son of Dr. Warton, headmaster of Winchester College.

(6) Mrs. Second (born Sarah Mahon) (b. ?; d. London, 16 Oct. 1805), soprano singer. She was an accomplished oratorio and concert singer, pupil of Joseph Corfe of Salisbury, and began her career at Oxford about 1784. She appeared frequently at Bath, and at the Salisbury and Winchester festivals, and was one of the principals at Birmingham in 1790 and 1796, and at the Three Choirs Festival at Hereford in 1795. In 1790 she married J. Second, a well-known Bath dancing-master. She was principal in the first English performance of Haydn's 'Creation', at Covent Garden, on 28 Mar. 1800, and in that of Mozart's Requiem. Parke in his 'Musical Memoirs' describes her voice as "rich and powerful. She sang up to F in alt with ease and her style was of a superior order. Her singing was inferior only to Mrs. Billington's."

(7) Mrs. Munday (born Mahon) (b. ?; d. ?), soprano singer. She was engaged for the Oxford season of 1792 and at Ranelagh in 1793. Eliza, her daughter, afterwards Mrs. Salmon, attained considerable celebrity as a soprano in the first quarter of the 19th century.

F. G. R.

See also Salmon (Eliza).

MAHOON (Mohoon), Joseph (b. ?; d. London, ?).

Irish 18th-century harpsichord and spinet maker. He was settled in London, and his name is seen on the harpsichord figured in Hogarth's 'Rake's Progress', Plate II (1735). In Rider's 'Court Register' for 1759 he is entered as "Joseph Mohoon, harpsichord maker to the king". He continued in that capacity until about 1775.

F. K.

MAHRENHOLZ, Christhard (b. Adelshausen nr. Göttingen, 11 Aug. 1900).

German organist, cleric and musicologist. He studied at Ruhoff's Conservatory at Göttingen in 1911-15 and organ under Alfred Ahlborn in 1915-18. From 1918 to 1923 he frequented the Universities of Göttingen and Leipzig, taking the Ph.D. at the former in the last year. In 1930 he was made a councillor for church music, in 1933 president of the Association of Evangelical German Church Choirs and in 1945 hon. professor at Göttingen University, where he lectures on church music. He has also held posts as organist and pastor, and he is co-founder and part-editor of the periodical 'Musik und Kirche'. His works include:

BOOKS

- 'Samuel Scheidt: sein Leben und Werk' (Leipzig, 1924).
- 'Die Orgelregister: ihre Geschichte und ihr Bau' (Cassel, 1928 & 1944).
- 'Luther und die Kirchenmusik' (Cassel, 1937).
- 'Die Berechnung der Orgelspiefenmessungen' (Cassel, 1938).
- 'Generalbasschorale' (Cassel, 1938).

EDITIONS (BOOKS)

- Jacob Adlung's 'Musica mechanica organoedi' (Cassel, 1931).
- Dom Bedos's 'L'Art du facteur d'orgues' (Cassel, 1935-36).

EDITIONS (MUSIC)

- Johann Crüger's 'Neun geistliche Lieder' for 4-part chorus.
- Samuel Scheidt's 'Gorlitzer Tabulaturbuch' (1650) (Leipzig, 1941).
- Scheidt's complete works, Vols. IV ('Cantiones sacrae') and V (separate works for keyboard instruments).

E. B.

MAHU (Machu), Étienne (b. ?; d. ? Vienna, ?).

Flemish (?) 16th-century composer.¹ He is said to have been a singer in the chapel of the Archduke Ferdinand in Vienna, though this is only conjectured from the appearance of some of his compositions in Joaneli's 'Thesaurus' of 1568.² His works appeared only in collections. Ambrose and others speak highly of a set of Lamentations a 4-6, which appeared in Joaneli and were republished by Commer. Mahu's other works consist chiefly of a few contrapuntal settings a 4 and 5 of German songs, sacred and secular, in Ott, Rhaw and Foster's collections. Eitner and Ambros judged his secular songs very favourably. The former describes a setting of 'Ach hilf mich Leid und sehnlich Klag', a 5, as excellent both in technique and expression. He also gives in shortened notes a characteristic setting of an old Tanzlied in triple time, 'Es ging ein wolbezogner Knecht'. Ott's 'Liederbuch' of 1544, reprinted in 1872, contains four songs by Mahu, three sacred and one secular. The text of one of the sacred songs, 'Lobt Gott ihr Christen all', is a fierce diatribe against Roman abuses. Mahu also contributed a setting a 5 of Luther's 'Ein feste Burg' to Rhaw's 'Geistliche Gesänge' (1544).

Mahy, Alfred. See BRUSSELS.

MAIA (Opera). See LEONCAVALLO.

MAICHELBECK, Franz Anton (b. Reichenau nr. Constance, 6 July 1702; d. Freiburg i/B., 14 June 1750).

German composer. He was sent by some generous patrons to Rome to complete his musical training. He is afterwards described as being professor of the Italian language and praesentarius of the minster at Freiburg-im-Breisgau. By praesentarius would appear to be meant a prebendary or beneficed priest on the staff of a collegiate or cathedral church. Fétis took it to mean a "beadle" and mistakenly described Maichelbeck as "bedeau de la cathédrale de Freyberg [sic]", and unfortunately Eitner, in Q.-L., adopted Fétis's mistake, though it was corrected, and the word itself sufficiently explained, in an article by E. von Werra.³ The whole staff of a collegiate church was denominated praesentia.

Maichelbeck's works are of some importance in the history of clavier music. He cultivated the lighter Italian homophonic style, which influenced the earlier development of the clavier sonata. His Op. 1 is entitled:

Die auf dem Clavier spielende und das Gehör vernugende Cäcilie, das ist viii Sonaten, so nach der jetzigen welschen Art, Regel- und Gehör-mässig ausgearbeitet . . . [Augsburg, 1736].

These eight sonatas are partly suites, having dance movements intermingled with adagios, allegros, capriccios and toccatas. The whole work shows the study of Italian models.⁴ The only other known published work by Maichelbeck is his Op. 2 entitled 'Die auf dem Clavier lehrende Cäcilie . . .' (Augsburg, 1737). The first two parts of this work are theoretical, but the third consists of preludes, fugues and versets on the eight church tones, which, however, are treated not in any proper organ style, but in the lighter and more florid clavier style.

J. R. M.

MAID MARIAN (Opera). See BISHOP.

MAID OF ARTOIS, THE. Opera in 3 acts by Balfe. Libretto by Alfred Bunn. Produced London, Drury Lane Theatre, 27 May 1836. 1st perf. abroad, New York, 5 Nov. 1847. The opera was written for Maria Felicità Malibran.

MAID OF HONOUR, THE (Opera). See BALFE.

MAID OF ORLEANS, THE (Opera). See TCHAIKOVSKY.

¹ In Haberl's 'Kirchenmusikalisches Jahrbuch' (1897), pp. 28-30.

⁴ For some illustrative quotations see Seiffert, 'Geschichte der Claviermusik', I, 332-34.

² His compositions belong to the German rather than to the Netherlands school and indicate that he was more Lutheran in his sympathies than Roman, and he died probably in Vienna; but his name is undoubtedly Flemish. ³ See M.F.M., XXVI, 57.

MAID OF PSKOV, THE ('Pskovitskanka' ['Псковутианка'], also known as 'Ivan the Terrible'). Opera in 4 acts by Rimsky-Korsakov. Libretto by the composer, based on a play by Lev Alexandrovich Mey. Produced St. Petersburg, Maryinsky Theatre, 13 Jan. 1873. With a new prologue, 'Boyarina Vera Sheloga' ('Боярыня Вера Шелогова'), Moscow, 27 Dec. 1898. 1st perf. abroad, Paris, Théâtre du Châtelet (in Russian), 26 May 1909. 1st in England, London, Drury Lane Theatre (in Russian), 8 July 1913.

MAID OF THE MILL, THE (Opera). See ARNOLD (S.).

MAIDEN'S PRAYER, THE. See BADARZEWSKA-BARANOWSKA.

Maikov, Apollon Nikolayevich. See Balakirev (song). Elgar (3 partsongs). Rakhmaninov (song). Rimsky-Korsakov (duet & 2 songs with orch., 13 songs). Serov ('Judith', lib.). Tchaikovsky (coronation cantata, 2 songs).

Mailath, Johann. See Schubert (song).

MAILLARD, Jean (b. ?; d. ?).

French 16th-century composer. He is said to have been a pupil of Josquin des Prés. Several masses by him were published separately by Le Roy and Ballard of Paris between 1557 and 1559, one of which, entitled 'Je suis déshéritée', has a peculiar history and is of interest because of its connection with the work of Palestrina. It was republished by the same French firm, and about the same time, as being the work of another French composer, Nicholas de Marle, and there might thus have been considerable doubt as to its authorship, but it was also copied, probably at some earlier date, into the choir-books of the Sistine Chapel Rome, and there ascribed to "Maylard".

It thus became known to Palestrina, who adopted its themes for a Mass of his own, which was afterwards published as No. 3 "sine nomine", of the sixth book of his masses, 1592.¹ 'Je suis déshéritée' was in fact a popular French song, on which many musicians, including Lassus and Gombert, but especially French writers, composed masses, and this may account for the confusion between Marle and Maillard, for Marle may also have composed a Mass on it which was confused with that of Maillard. The song itself, as set for four voices by Pierre Cadéac, may be seen in Eitner's selection of chansons (1899), No. 11; and a comparison of this with Palestrina's Mass will show that the tune, as given by Cadéac partly in the tenor, but even more completely in the descant, reappears in all the leading themes of Palestrina's work, and is given complete, to start with, in the three divisions of the Kyrie. Palestrina's Mass should thus, equally with that of Maillard, be denominated 'Je suis déshéritée', though Palestrina himself left it without a name, out of deference, no doubt, to the later ecclesiastical scruples against the use of secular names and tunes for works intended for the church. But there is nothing really secular about the tune, and the opening of both song and Mass is identical with the opening strain of the oldest known German chorale tune, 'Christ ist erstanden'.

Other works by Maillard besides the three Masses for four and five voices, and a 'Patrem' for eight voices, are Magnificats, motets and chansons which appeared in the various collections of the time. Ambros describes his motets as characterized by a noble and expressive melodious elegance, and reckons him generally as one of the better masters of the French School. A chanson by Maillard, which has all this characteristic of melodious elegance, may be seen in Eitner's selection of chansons, No. 39. J. R. M.

MAILLARD, Pierre (b. Valenciennes, 1550; d. Tournai, 16 July 1622).

Flemish musical scholar. He was a choir-boy in the Flemish chapel in Madrid at the age of thirteen under the direction of Jean Bonmarché, who taught him composition. He was back in the Netherlands by 1570, in some musical post at Louvain, where he received two years' salary in 1572 which enabled him to study at the University there. Two years later he was at Antwerp and not long after he settled at Tournai as director of the music at the cathedral. He held several prebends and other church benefices in various places, but continued to live at Tournai to the end of his life. In 1598 the chapter commissioned him to have the cathedral Processional reprinted by Plantin of Antwerp and on 28 May 1606² he was given the place of Anselme Barbet as precentor. On 19 Aug. 1609 he received the privilege to print his treatise 'Les Tons, ou discours sur les modes de musique et les tons d'église et de la distinction entre iceux', which appeared at Tournai on 15 July 1610. It was dedicated to the cathedral chapter and rewarded by them with a silver cup. E. B.

MAILLART, Aimé (actually Louis) (b. Montpellier, 24 Mar. 1817; d. Moulins, Alliers, 26 May 1871).

French composer. He was a pupil at the Paris Conservatoire, where he studied composition with Halévy and Leborne, and the violin with Guérin. He won the Grand Prix de Rome with his cantata 'Lionel Foscari', but did not make his mark until some time after his return from Rome. The first of his six operas, 'Gastibelza, ou Le Fou de Tolède' (libretto by Adolphe Philippe d'Ennery and Eugène Cormon, based on the ballad 'Le Fou de Tolède'), was successfully produced in Paris, at the Opéra-National³, on 15 Nov.

¹ See Haberl's Preface to Vol. XV of Palestrina's works, complete edition of Breitkopf & Hartel, also his Catalogue of the Music of the Sistine Chapel, p. 28.

² Not 1583, as Fétis has it.

³ Renamed Théâtre-Lyrique in 1852.

1847. 'Le Moulin des tilleuls' was given at the Opéra-Comique in 1849 and 'La Croix de Marie' at the same theatre in 1852; but the work which did most to keep his name before the public was 'Les Dragons de Villars' (libretto by Joseph Philippe Lockroy and Cormon), produced at the Théâtre-Lyrique on 19 Sept. 1856. It was enormously successful and long survived its composer, being even now occasionally performed in France and Germany (translated as 'Das Glöckchen des Eremiten').¹ Two later comic operas proved less lasting. 'Les Pêcheurs de Catane' (Cormon and Michel Carré), produced at the same theatre on 19 Dec. 1860, did not long survive, although it too was brought out in Germany; 'Lara' (based on Byron by the same librettists), produced at the Opéra-Comique on 21 Mar. 1864, was given in French in Belgium and Spain and translated into Polish, German and English (London, His Majesty's Theatre; 31 Jan. 1865). Maillart also wrote some cantatas, such as 'La Voie sacrée' (1859), 'Le 15 Août' (1860), etc. C. F., adds.

MAILLOCHE. See TAMPON.

Maillot, A. F. Ève. See Fille de Madame Angot (Lec. eq. operetta).

MAINE, Basil (Stephen) (b. Norwich, 4 Mar. 1894).

English author and music critic. He was educated at the City of Norwich School and went up to Cambridge as organ scholar of Queens' College. After taking his degree he became music and mathematics master at Durnford (1917) and was for a time assistant organist at Durham Cathedral. In 1921 he joined the staff of the 'Daily Telegraph' as an assistant music critic, and for the next dozen years or so musical journalism on several daily and weekly papers was his principal occupation in London. In 1935 he was appointed Broadcasting Critic to the 'Sunday Times'.

Maine's considerable histrionic gift, first cultivated during a brief period on the stage, was declared at the Norwich Festival of 1930 when he spoke the part of the Orator in the first performance of Bliss's 'Morning Heroes'. After this he was frequently in request for performances of works in which the speaking-voice has to be combined with music. Such are Honegger's 'King David', the narrative part of which he spoke in Gloucester Cathedral at a Three Choirs Festival, Cyril Scott's 'Ode to Great Men', Walton's 'Façade' and the part of the compère in Stravinsky's 'Soldier's Tale', a selection which sufficiently attests Maine's versatility of utterance. His success seemed largely due to the fact that he is sufficiently a musician to be able to avoid in his speech the unconscious imitation of musical rhythm and cadence. He was ordained in 1939 and became Rector of Beaumont-cum-Moze, Essex.

The most important of Maine's books on music is 'Elgar: his Life and Works' (2 vols.), which contains the fullest discussion possible during the composer's life. A book on Chopin (1933) and an essay in 'Great Contemporaries' (Cassell) on Paderewski may also be named. His novels and biographies are beyond the concern of this notice. Maine lectured on musical subjects on both sides of the Atlantic and before his dedication to the Church was a successful broadcaster. He published a few vocal compositions of which two choral songs, 'O Lord our Governour' and 'Praise to God', were sung at the Norwich Festival of 1936. H. C. C., adds.

BIBL.—MAINE, BASIL, 'On Music' (London, 1945).

MAINVIELLE, Joséphine. See FODOR—MAINVIELLE.

MAINZER, Joseph (b. Trier, 1801²; d. Manchester, 10 Nov. 1851).

German priest and musical educationist. His father was a butcher at Trier. He was educated in the cathedral there, learnt to play several instruments and developed considerable musical gifts, then spent some time in the coal-mines near Saarbrücken, with the view of being an engineer, and at length embraced the ecclesiastical profession and was ordained priest in 1826. His first practical introduction to music was as singing-master to the seminary at Trier, for which he published a 'Sing-schule' (1831). His political tendencies obliged him to leave Germany, and we find him in 1833 at Brussels writing an opera ('Le Triomphe de la Pologne', never performed) and editing the musical portion of 'L'Artiste'. His next destination, at the end of 1834, was Paris, where he opened workmen's classes for music and singing, joined the staff of the 'Gazette musicale' and wrote the musical feuilletons for 'Le National'. Between 1835 and 1841 he published several educational works on music, chiefly for young beginners, as well as other works, and an opera, 'La Jacquerie', which was condemned at the Théâtre de la Renaissance on 10 Oct. 1839.*

In June 1841 Mainzer went to England, competed for the musical professorship at Edinburgh in 1844, lived there in 1842-47 and finally established himself at Manchester. In Feb. of that year Hullah had started his classes on Wilhelm's system in London, and Mainzer attempted to follow suit in the north, with considerable success. His 'Singing for the Million'³ (1842) was at that time well known and went through many editions. He overworked himself and died much esteemed ¹ This date is established by the epitaph at Manchester. Riemann used to give 7 May 1807 as the date of birth.

² Fétis amusingly infers from this title that Mainzer expected to number a million pupils.

³ For its production in London see DRAGONS DE VILLARS.

and regretted. A periodical started by him in July 1842 and entitled 'Mainzer's Musical Times' was the predecessor and basis of the present 'Musical Times'. G.

BIBL.—'Chambers's Journal', 14 Feb. 1852.
'The Musical Herald', June 1895.

MAIO (Majo), Giovanni (Gian) Francesco di (b. Naples, 24 Mar. 1732; d. Naples, Nov. 1770¹).

Italian composer. He was a pupil of his father, Giuseppe di Maio, and at the Conservatorio di Sant' Onofrio at Naples. For a time he seems also to have had lessons from Martini at Bologna. For some years he held the post of organist at the royal chapel of Naples, for which he wrote masses and other church music. But it is chiefly as a typical representative of the Neapolitan school of opera that he is remembered in history.

His first opera, 'Ricimero, re dei Goti' was produced in Rome on 7 Feb. 1759²: Goldoni was present at that performance and mentions it in his memoirs. Maio wrote six more operas for various Italian towns, 1760–63; the next two or three years he seems to have spent abroad, for new works of his appear in Vienna and Mannheim in 1764, in Madrid in 1765 and again at Mannheim in 1766. He never visited London, and none of his operas was given there in full; music by him occurs in several pasticcios produced at the King's Theatre, e.g. in 'Ezio' (1764), 'La clemenza di Tito' (1765) and 'Eumene' (advertised for 13 Mar. 1766 as "with new numbers by the celebrated Signor de Majo" [? father or son]).

"Ciccio di Majo", as he was affectionately called by his contemporaries, continued to write operas in Italy until his untimely death at the age of thirty-eight. Of his last work, 'Eumene', he finished only the first act. The other two were written by Giacomo Insanguine and Pasquale Errichelli, and the opera was produced some weeks after Maio's death, at the Teatro San Carlo, Naples, on 20 Jan. 1771; the first act only has been preserved.

Besides more than 20 operas Maio wrote several oratorios, masses, psalms, graduals, etc. Both his stage and church music are highly praised in Wilhelm Heinse's novel 'Hildegard von Hohenenthal' (1795–96). Apart from some airs published as illustrations in various books on the history of opera there are no modern editions of his works. A. L.

See also Errichelli (completion of 'Eumene'). Insanguine (do.).

¹ F. Piovano, in 'Notizie storico-bibliografiche sulle opere di Pietro Carlo Guglielmi' (Riv. Mus. It., 1909–1910), prints an extract from the 'Diario ordinario', Rome, of 8 Dec. 1770: "Con le lettere di Napoli si è ricevuta la notizia di esser passato da questa all' altra vita nello scorso mese di Novembre il celebre Maestro di Cappella Sign. Francesco di Majo. . ."

² Not at Parma in 1758, as is often wrongly stated. A MS copy of the score is in the B.M.

MAIO (Majo), Giuseppe di (de) (b. Naples, 5 Dec. 1697; d. Naples, 18 Nov. 1771).

Italian composer, father of the preceding. He entered the Conservatorio della Pietà dei Turchini at Naples in 1706 and studied there under Nicola Fago until 1718. He married the sister of the composer Gennaro Manna in 1728 and gave their son Gian Francesco his first musical instruction. The elder Maio succeeded Leo in 1744 as first master of the Neapolitan royal chapel and occupied this post until his death.

Besides much church music for the royal chapel he wrote comic operas ('Lo vecchio avaro', 1727, 'La milorda', 1728, 'La baronessa', 1729), a serenata 'Il sogno di Olimpia' (1747) and the opere serie 'Arianna e Tesco' (1747) and 'Semiramide' (1751).

F. W. (ii).

MAIORANO, Gaetano. See CAFFARELLI.

MAISON À VENDRE, LA (Opera). See DALAYRAC.

MAISON DU DOCTEUR, LA (Opera). See BIZET.

MAISON ISOLÉE, LA (Opera). See DALAYRAC.

Maistre, Xavier de. See GRISAR ('Voyage autour de ma chambre', opera).

MAITLAND, John Alexander Fuller. See FULLER-MAITLAND.

MAÎTRE DE CHAPELLE, LE (Opera). See PAER.

MAÎTRE JACQUES. See BARBIREAU.

MAÎTRE WOLFRAM (Opera). See REYER.

MAÎTRES MUSICIENS DE LA RENAISSANCE FRANÇAISE, LES. A collection of vocal and instrumental compositions by French composers of the Renaissance, based on the most authentic manuscripts and the best printed editions of the 16th century; with variants, historical and critical notes and transcriptions into modern notation. It was edited by Henry Expert and published in Paris (Alphonse Leduc) between 1894 and 1908.

Vol.

1. Lassus, O., 'Meslanges' (fasc. i).
- 2, 4, 6. Goudimel, C., '150 Psaumes de David' (fasc. i-iii).
- 3, 18, 19. Costeley, G., 'Musique' (fasc. i-iii).
5. Sermisy, C. de; Consilium; Courtoys; Deslougues; Dulot; Gascongne; Hesdin; Jacotin; Jeanquin; Lombart; Sohler; Vermont & anon.: 31 'Chansons musicales' (Attaignant).
7. Janequin, C., Chansons (Attaignant).
8. Brumel, Missa 'de beata virgine'. La Rue, Missa 'Ave Maria', 'Liber quindecim missarum'.

Vol.

9. Mouton, Missa 'Alma redemptoris'.
- Fevin, Missa 'Mente tota'.
- 'Liber quindecim missarum'.
10. Mauduit, 'Chansonnettes mesurées de I. A. de Baif'.
11. Le Jeune, C., 'Dodecacorde' (fasc. i).
- 12-14. Le Jeune, C., 'Le Printemps' (fasc. i-iii).
15. Regnard, F., 'Poésies de P. de Ronsard et autre poètes'.
16. Le Jeune, C., 'Mélanges' (fasc. i).
17. Du Caurroy, 'Mélanges'.
- 20-22. Le Jeune, C., 'Psalmes mesurés à l'antique', Vols. I-III.
23. Gervaise, C., Du Tertre, E. & anon., 'Danceries (musique instrumentale)', Vol. I.

K. D.

MAÎTRISE (Fr. = lit. "mastery"). A term formerly applied in France both to the quarters assigned in cathedrals and collegiate churches to the choristers and their master, and to the institution itself, which originally included a complete education, lay and ecclesiastical. These schools turned out many great men, several rising to be bishops and popes; among the latter Pope Urban IV, a cobbler's son, whose early years were passed in the "Psallette" at Troyes. Some centuries later, when the Maîtrises had undergone great changes, they were still the only establishments in which even secular musicians could obtain their training. From the Maîtrises the church obtained choristers, organists and maîtres de chapelle, and the world its favourite composers. Here also, although instrumental music was neglected and dramatic music positively forbidden, the regimental bands found their bassoon players and the lyric theatres their clavecinnistes-accompagnateurs, violoncellists and singers.

The Maîtrises were real schools of music, the pupils being maintained at the cost of the chapters. Indeed they much resembled the conservatori of Italy, both in their mode of administration and in the course of instruction given. They were not, however, all organized alike, but varied with local circumstances. Thus in some the boys, the master and the priests lived in common, in others separately; in some the maintenance of the children was in the hands of the master, in others there was a regular purveyor. But, in all, the main end was the study of music. Before the Revolution there were in France 400 Maîtrises and choirs, with as many maîtres de chapelle, maintained either by the chapters of cathedrals and collegiate churches, the curés or the monasteries. Each Maîtrise contained, on an average, from 25 to 30 persons, and the musicians thus diffused throughout the country numbered in all about 10,000, of whom 4000 were pupils or choristers. There was naturally much rivalry among the different establishments, which was of great benefit to music.

The Maîtrises, though suppressed in 1791, were afterwards reconstituted, on a different footing. The Paris Conservatoire de Musique is now the great nursery of French musicians, but many a church has still its Maîtrise, where the choristers — boys and men — are trained by a maître de chapelle in all things necessary to ensure a good execution of plainsong and other sacred music. Choron's school of music, still in existence as the École Niedermeyer, is referred to elsewhere. Niedermeyer and d'Ortigue also founded a periodical called 'La Maîtrise', especially devoted to sacred music. It survived only four years. Besides Gantez's work ('Entretien des musiciens', Auxerre, 1643, very scarce) another book, also published in 1643 by Jean de Bordenave, a Canon of Béarn, 'L'Estat des églises collégiales et cathédrales', contains much information, though impaired by its want of method and arrangement.

G. G.

See also Choron. Conservatoire de Musique. Song-School.

MAJD (or SHIHÁB) AL-DÍN, Abu'l-Futúh, Ahmad ibn Muḥammad al-Ghazálí (b. Tus, Khorasan, ?; d. ?, 1123 or 1125).

Islamic philosopher. He was the brother of Al-Ghazálí, whom he succeeded in 1095 as professor at the Nizámiyya College, Baghdad. He was a philosopher of probity and a keen dialectician. Seven works from his pen are known, one being a summary of his brother's great work, the 'Iḥyá' 'ulúm al-dín', entitled 'Lubáb al-iḥyá' ('The Quintessence of the Iḥyá'). Equally important is his own contribution to the question of the legality of listening to music (al-samá') in a work entitled the 'Bawáriq al-ilmá'. This work, like his brother's, is a súfi defence of music, and is even more convincing and original than that of Al-Ghazálí. The Arabic text with an English translation is to be found in 'Tracts on Listening to Music' edited by James Robson (London, 1938).

H. G. F.

BIBL.—BROCKELMANN, CARL, 'Geschichte der arabischen Litteratur', I, 426 (Weimar-Berlin, 1898-1902).

FARMER, HENRY G., 'History of Arabian Music', p. 195, but correct title of Majd al-Din's book as above (London, 1929).

'Sources of Arabian Music', p. 43 (Bearsden, 1940).

See also Al-Ghazálí.

MAJOR BASS. See ORGAN STOPS.

MAJOR, Ervin (b. Budapest, 26 Jan. 1901).

Hungarian musicologist and composer. A son of the composer Gyula J. Major, he came in contact with music early. While still at the secondary school he started regular musical studies at the Academy of Music in Budapest, studying composition under Kodály from 1917 to 1921. He also studied philosophy at the University of Sciences, Budapest (1920-24), and obtained the Ph.D. degree at the University in Szeged with the dissertation 'A népies magyar műzene és a népzene kapcsolatai', ('The Relationship between Hungarian Popular Art Music and Folk Music'), in 1930. From 1926 to 1928 he edited the periodical 'Zenei Szemle', from 1929 to 1930 he was on the editorial board of 'Muzsika' and in 1935 he launched yet another periodical, 'Magyar Muzsika'. From 1928 to 1944 he taught at the National Conservatory of Budapest, where he had been appointed successively professor of history of Hungarian music, poetics, theory of music and composition, and was also librarian; from 1925 to 1940 he gave lessons at the Academy of Music as well. In 1945 he was reappointed to the National Conservatory. He frequently lectures on the radio.

Among contemporary Hungarian musicologists Major occupies a unique position: apart from the Hungarian contacts of musicians abroad he has explored exclusively the events and personalities of his native country's music. To that considerable and as yet insufficiently investigated field he has applied his extensive scholarship, and it is due to his exhaustive researches that many gaps were filled in our knowledge of Hungarian musical history, especially one of its most important periods: the 18th and 19th centuries. Dealing with the relations with Hungary of Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms and Rubinstein, he discovered many valuable details, both biographical and stylistic. As an authority on Liszt he has determined the Hungarian elements in the rhapsodies and this musician's place in the musical life of Hungary in general. He has done invaluable service with his pioneer work in connection with the indigenous 18th-19th-century musicians: Bihari, Csermák, Fusz, Lavotta, etc., the verbunkos composers. His reviews and criticisms, like his original monographs, are always based on accurate data and documentary evidence, and frequently bring to light fresh details unknown even to the authors under review. His contributions to the Hungarian Encyclopedia of Music ('Zenei Lexikon') on the native 18th-19th-century musicians are of fundamental importance for any further research.

As a composer Major cultivates a refined neo-romantic style; his subtle harmonic language discloses Kodály's influence; his Trio-Serenade and Sonata for cello and piano-forte may be considered as his most significant works. Unfortunately a number of his compositions were destroyed during the siege of Budapest in 1944-45. From the following catalogue his reviews and numerous articles are omitted.

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

CHAMBER MUSIC

- Trio-Serenade for 2 vns. & viola (1921).
- 'Bihari Dances', for 2 vns., 2 series (1929).
- 'Lavotta Dances' for 2 vns.; also for vn., cello & pf. (1930).
- 'Hungarian Dance' for vn. & pf. (1931).
- 'Andante all' ungherese' for tárogató & pf. (1931); also for orch. (1934).
- 'Andalgó' ('Andante') for cello & pf. after Mihály Mosonyi (1931).
- Sonata for cello & pf. (1932).
- 'Three Old Hungarian Tunes' for cello & pf. (1934).
- 'Allegro appassionato' for viola & pf. (1935).
- Sonata for tárogató & pf. (1935).
- 'Two Old Hungarian Dance Tunes' for harp (1935).
- 'Elegy' for clar. & pf. (1937).
- Sonata for bassoon & pf. (1938).
- 'Ode' for cello & pf. (1939).
- Sonata for double bass & pf. (1942-43).

PIANOFORTE AND ORGAN

- 'Allegro all' ungherese' for pf. (1928).
- 'Andante religioso' for organ (1934).
- 'Evening Bells' for organ (1939).
- 'Ut a szonátához' ('The Way Leading to Sonata'), 1 (Budapest, 1945, in collaboration with István Szélenyi).

VOCAL MUSIC

- Madrigal for 3 voices & pf. (1923).
- Instrumental transcriptions of old Hungarian music, songs, arrangements, &c.

LITERARY WORKS

(also published separately)

- 'Verseyhgy Ferenc mint dal- és zeneszerző' ('Francis V. the Composer') ('Irodalomtörténeti Közlemények', XXXV, 3-4, Budapest, 1925).
- 'Fusz János és kora' ('John F. and his Times') ('A Zene', VII, 3, 4, 5, Budapest, Mar., Apr., May, 1925).
- 'A Ratio Educationis és a magyar zeneoktatás' ('The R.E. and Hungarian Music Education') ('A Zene', IX, 13, Budapest, 15 Apr. 1928).
- 'Bihari János' ('Zenei Szemle', XII, 1-2, 3-4, 5-7, Budapest, Feb. Mar., Mar.-Apr., June-Aug. 1928; 'Magyar Zenei Dolgozatok', 2 ('Hungarian Essays on Music', 2)).
- 'Liszt Ferenc magyar rapszódái' ('The Hungarian Rhapsodies of F. L.') ('Muzsika', I, 1-2, Budapest, Feb.-Mar. 1929).
- 'Mihalovich Ödön' ('Muzsika', I, 5, Budapest, June 1929).
- 'Fáy András és a magyar zenetörténet' ('Andrew F. and Hungarian History of Music') (Budapest, 1934).
- 'A cigányzene Magyarországon' ('Gypsy Music in Hungary') (Budapest, 1935).
- 'A Rákóczy-induló körüli kutatások újabb eredményei' ('New Results in the Researches Concerning the Rákóczy March') ('Az Országos Liszt Ferenc Zeneművészeti Főiskola Évkönyve az 1936/37 Tanévről', Budapest, 1937).
- 'Liszt Ferenc és a magyar zenetörténet' ('F. L. and Hungarian History of Music') ('Forrástanulmányok Liszt magyar műveire', ('Source-Studies to Liszt's Hungarian Works') ('Ethnographia-Népélet', L, 3-4, Budapest, 1939; viz. 'Magyar Zenei Dolgozatok', 4-5 ('Hungarian Essays on Music', 4-5), Budapest, 1940).
- 'Erkel Ferenc műveinek jegyzéke. Bibliografiai kísérlet' ('Catalogue of the Works of Francis E. A Bibliographical Essay') ('Zenei Szemle', II, III, Budapest, 1947).
- 'A szabadságharc muzsikája' ('The Music of the Freedom Struggle') (1948, MS).

J. S. W.

MAJOR INTERVALS. See INTERVALS.

MAJOR¹, Jakab Gyula (i.e. James Julius) (b. Kassa, Hungary [now Kosice, Czechoslovakia], 13 Dec. 1858; d. Budapest, 30 Jan. 1925).

¹ Originally Mayer, changed in 1885.

Hungarian pianist, conductor and composer, father of Ervin Major. He went to Budapest and started his musical training at the Conservatory of Buda, continuing from 1877 at the Academy of Music, where he studied composition with Robert Volkmann and pianoforte with Ferenc Erkel. He graduated in 1882, became teacher at the Conservatory of the Budapest Music-Lovers Association and also taught music at state preparatory schools. In association with Gyula Káldy and Sándor Nikolits he established the Hungarian Music School (Magyar Zenciskola) in 1889, where he was pianoforte teacher until 1895. In 1894 he founded the Hungarian Ladies' Choral Society, whose conductor he remained for about ten years.

Major first appeared before the public at a pupils' concert of the Academy of Music on 29 June 1881, when an overture of his was performed. In 1884 his first Symphony was given at a concert of the Budapest Music-Lovers Association. Among his four operas three were produced: the first to reach the stage was 'Erzsike' in 1901. In 1907 he published the periodical 'Magyar Zenetudomány' ('Hungarian Musicology') in Hungarian and German with Antal Herrmann; but only three issues appeared. An accomplished pianist, he made many concert tours abroad, chiefly in Germany, where performances of his compositions were considerably more frequent than in Hungary. His works won him a number of prizes, the first of which was that of the Kolozsvár (now Cluj) Conservatory in 1889, and the two most important the Géza Zichy Prize of the National Conservatory (1906) and the Millennial Prize of a publishing-firm (1896).

Major belonged to the generation which followed the 19th-century national revival — the Erkel-Liszt-Mosonyi romantic school — and preceded the emergence of the 20th-century folk-music orientation. His style reflects the preoccupation with western habits of expression and technique which characterizes much of the music of this transitional period. Volkmann's influence is responsible for the German inspiration which is strongly evident in his compositions. The stimulus of the national idiom remains subordinate and is discerned only in his borrowing of folksongs (i.e. popular tunes) and his utilization of some of the more obvious elements of Hungarian music. On the whole his vocabulary is academic, but the nature description of 'Balaton', for example, shows some surprisingly advanced procedures.

BIBL.—'Harmonia', No. 2 (Budapest, 1894).

MAJOR, ROBERT, 'Major J. Gyula' ('A Zenc', Vol. VII, 2, Budapest, 27 Feb. 1925).

'Zeneirodalmi Szemle', No. 7 (Budapest, 1895).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS¹

OPERAS

- Op.
19. 'Dalma', 4 acts (libretto by Composer, after Mór Jókai).
41. 'Erzsike' ('Betsy'), prologue and 1 act (lib. by Antal Radó, after Eugén Manuel La Robe), prod. Budapest, Hungarian Royal Opera, 24 Sept. 1901.
30. 'Széchy Mária', 3 acts (lib. ? by Radó), prod. Kolozsvár, 1906.
78. 'Mila', 'Bosnian Folk Opera', 3 acts (lib. by R. Batka and M. Wassermann), prod. Pozsony, 1913.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Overture (1881).
3. Symphony No. 1, A mi. (1883-84).
16. 'Suite romantique' (? 1893) (also for pf.).
17. Symphony No. 2, B mi. ('Hungarian') (? 1890) (earlier version in 3 movements with chorus; revised version in 4 movements without chorus).
24. Serenade, G ma. for stgs. (? 1892).
25. Symphony No. 3, C mi. (? 1893).
26. 'Rapsodie hongroise', D mi. (also for pf.).
36. 'Scènes millénaires' (? 1901).
40. Symphony No. 4, F# mi. (? 1904).
55. 'Balaton', symph. poem (? 1906).
79. Symphony No. 5, D ma. (1910-12).
— Symphony No. 6 (? 1918), unfinished.

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

- Pf. Concerto (1882).
12. 'Concert symphonique' for pf. (? 1888).
18. Vn. Concerto, A ma. (? 1895).
44. Cello Concerto, A mi.
49. Pf. Concerto, A mi.
63. Concert Fantasies (? 1905) (pf. version: 'Drei Konzertphantasien für Klavier').

CHAMBER MUSIC

- String Quartet, A ma. (1882), ? lost.
— Trio, Bb ma., for vn., cello & pf. (1880) (? Op. 62).
4. Trio, C mi., for vn., cello & pf. (1881).
20. Trio, D ma., for vn., cello & pf. (? 1892).
21. String Quartet, C mi.
22. String Quartet, D mi. (1896).
32. Quintet, A ma., for 2 vns., viola, cello & pf. (? 1895).
39. Sextet, Bb ma., wind insts. & pf. (? 1902).
54. String Quartet, E mi. (? 1905).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

29. 2 Sonatines (? 1897).
33. Sonata, D ma. (? 1882-83).
53. Sonata, G mi. (? 1907).
83. 'Barcarolle' (1917).
84. 'Mélancolie' (1917).

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

76. 'A kis csellista' ('The Little Cellist') (1917).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

1. 'Vándorlások' ('Wanderings'), suite of 5 pieces (1885-86).
2. 'Traumbilder' for pf. duet (1883).
8. 'Capriccio' (1886).
9. 'Deux Morceaux' (1889).
11. 'Charakterstücke', 3 pieces (1894).
29. 2 Sonatines (? 1898).
31. 3 Sonatines (? 1898).
35. 'Magyar szonáta' ('Hungarian Sonata'), A ma. (1896).
42. 'Rapsodie hongroise', F ma. (? 1900).
51. 'Grosspapas Spieluhr', 10 pieces (1904).
56. 'Utazás a Balaton körül' ('Journey round Lake Balaton'), 7 pieces (1906).
58. 'Suite galante', 5 pieces (1906).
69. 'Devant les murailles de Jérusalem' (from Op. 63; also for voice & pf.).
71. 'Bosnische Rhapsodie' (1910-11), also for orch.
77. 'Bosnisch-Herzegovinisches Jugendalbum' (1910-1911).
82. 'Gyermekvilág' ('Children's World') (1917).
— 'Falusi zeneképek' ('Village Portraits') for pf. duet (1889).

¹ Based on printed sources and on a MS list in Prof. Ervin Major's possession.

- Op.*
— 'Kocsóbeli képek' ('Pictures from Kocsó') (1887), unfinished.
— Pianoforte Tutor (Budapest, 1891-99).

SONGS

46. 'Lieder und Gesänge für eine Mittelstimme', book i.
47. 'Lieder und Gesänge für eine Mittelstimme', book ii.
48. 'Lieder und Gesänge für eine Mittelstimme', book iii.
61. 'Nach dem Strike', male voice & pf. (Friedrich Adler) (? 1907).
64. Sabbatarian Songs, collected & arr. (? 1907).
65. 12 Hungarian Songs (? Op. 68).
70. 'Boszniai dalok' ('Bosnian Songs'), collected & arr.
— 'Dalgyűjtemény' ('Song Collection'), 18 songs.
— 'Ünnepnapok' (József Kiss), Jewish religious songs in 12 vols. (1889-92).

Also other songs and various choruses, Opp. 38, 43, 45, 57, 59, 60, 66.

J. S. W.

MAJOR SCALE. See INTERVALS. SCALE.

MAJORANO, Gaetano. See CAFFARELLI.

MAKAROVA, Nina (b. Yurin o/Volga, 12 Aug. 1908).

Russian composer. She is the daughter of a village schoolmaster. From early childhood she showed a passionate love of music and keen interest in Russian and Mari folksongs; at fifteen she began to study at the School of Music at Gorky and in 1927 went to Moscow, where her training continued under Miaskovsky. She graduated in 1935 from the Conservatory.

Makarova is attracted by both instrumental and vocal music — ballads and choruses appear alongside a Sonatina and six Studies for pianoforte, pieces for oboe, and finally a tripartite first Symphony, the latter being the composer's diploma work, performed for the first time in Moscow in 1938.

That year she wrote a series of settings to words by the Georgian poet Shota Rustaveli, the author of 'The Knight in the Tiger Skin'. In 1940 she began working on the opera 'Courage', dedicated to the young builders of the Soviet far-eastern town of Komsomolsk. Her songs, in particular the 'Children's Song to Stalin', were already popular before the second world war. Her later music has an added intensity. While continuing her work on the opera, she composed several patriotic songs — 'The Sea Song', 'The Urals Song', 'The Polar Song'.

The following is a summary of Makarova's chief works:

- 'Courage', opera (1940-42).
Film music, 'The Happy Exchange' and 'The Land of Dolls'.
'Cantata to Molotov', for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1940).
'Children's Song to Stalin'.
Mass Songs.
Symphony, D mi. (1936).
Sonata for vn. & pf.
2 Melodies for vn. & pf.
2 Melodies for oboe & pf.
Sonatina for pf.
6 Preludes for pf.
Song cycle (Pushkin).
Song cycle (Shota Rustaveli).

S. C. R.

MAKLAKIEWICZ, Jan Adam (b. Chojnaty nr. Warsaw, 24 Nov. 1899).

Polish critic and composer. He studied first with Biernacki (harmony), Szopski (counterpoint) and Binental (violin) at the Chopin School of Music, and then with R. Statkowski (composition) at the Warsaw Conservatory. In 1926 he won the scholarship of the Ministry of Education and went to Paris, where he continued his studies under Dukas at the École Normale de Musique. In 1928-30 he was professor of harmony at the Warsaw Conservatory. In 1931 his 'Japanese Songs' for soprano and orchestra were performed at the I.S.C.M. Festival at Oxford. Since 1932 he has been organist at the Church of the Holy Cross in Warsaw and conductor of a choir there. In 1934 he founded a periodical, 'Chór', devoted to choral music in which choral works by Polish composers have been printed. He also acted as music critic of the Warsaw daily 'Kurier Poranny' (1934-37). In 1932 he obtained the Polish State Music Prize.

Maklakiewicz belongs to the modernists, as is shown by the harmony and polytonality of his earlier works. His compositions include the following:

BALLETS

- 'Cagliostro in Warsaw' (scenario by Julian Tuwim) (1937).
'Shirokumi.'

CHURCH MUSIC

- 'Polish Mass' for chorus & organ (1944).
3 Latin Masses.

CHORAL WORKS

- Prelude to 'Lilla Weneda' (tragedy by J. Słowacki) for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1925).
'Święty Boże' ('Holy God') (poem by Jan Kasprzowicz), symphony for baritone, chorus & orch. (1927).
'Pieśń o chlebie powszednim' ('Song of the Daily Bread') (1930).
'4 Pieśni japońskie' ('Four Japanese Songs') (Rociu Umedy, trans. M. Wodzińska) for soprano & orch. (1930).
5 Partsongs for unaccomp. chorus.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Symphonic Variations (1923).
'Lyric Poem.'
'Spanish Impressions' (1934).
'Zarebski-Maklakiewicz', suite of Polish dances.
'Ostatnie Werble' ('The Last Drum-Rolls'), poem composed in memory of Marshal Józef Piłsudski (1935).
'Grunwald', symph. poem (Warsaw, 1944) (in which the earliest Polish song, 'Bogurodzica', is introduced).
'Uwertura praska' ('The Prague Overture') (1947).

SOLO AND ORCHESTRA

- Concertino for pf. & soprano (1928).
Cello Concerto (State Prize-winner) (1932).
Vn. Concerto (Prize-winner at Kronenberg) (1933).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- 'Suita huculska' for vn. & pf. (1927).
'Triptyque' for cello & pf.
Songs for 2 mezzo-sopranos, harp & viola
1. Reflection.
2. Les Vierges aux crépuscules.

SONGS

'Pieśń o burmistrzance' (1928).

'Preludes', 7 songs.

Also many arrangements of folk music, film music and incidental music for plays.

C. R. H.

Makower, Ernest. See British Council.

Makuszyński, Kornel. See Izbicki-Maklakiewicz (choral work).

MALA VITA (Opera). See GIORDANO.

MALACHOWSKI, (b. ?; d. ?).

Polish 16th-17th-century composer. Of all his works one only remains: 'Motetto de Resurrectione Christi: Resurrexit Dominus omnipotens' (1622) written for 2 sopranos, 2 altos, 2 tenors, 2 basses, 2 violins, double bass alto and tenor trombones and continuo (organ).

C. R. H.

MALAGUEÑA. A Spanish dance originating at Málaga and spread throughout Andalusia. It also often appears as an instrumental piece. Its music begins and ends on the dominant of the prescribed key.

See also Folk Music: Spanish.

MALÁT, Jan (b. Staré Bydžov, 16 June 1843; d. Prague, 2 Dec. 1915).

Czech folksong collector, teacher and composer. He was an enthusiastic collector of the folksongs of Bohemia, Moravia and Slovakia, and the results of his life-work are published as 'Český národní poklad' ('A Treasury of Czech National Songs') in a series of popular albums. A second collection, 'Zlatá pokladnice' ('The Golden Treasury'), is less of a household possession. He also harmonized a number of individual songs and transcribed a few in various instrumental arrangements.

Malát's original works include two operas, 'Stáňa' (Prague, 30 June 1899) and 'Veselé námluvy' (Prague, 12 Jan. 1908), Czech Dances ('Furiant', 'Round' and 'Obročák') for orchestra and several good partsongs and choruses. His accompaniments to the folksongs are full and pleasing, but his treatment of the national material is popular rather than scientific.

From 1913 to his death Malát was director of the Communal School for girls at Smíchov, a suburb of Prague.

R. N., adds.

MALAWSKI, Artur (b. ?, 4 July 1904).

Polish composer. He studied first at Cracow, then at the Warsaw Conservatory under K. Sikorski (composition) and W. Bierdiajew (conducting). He belongs to the avant-garde of Polish musicians. His 'Symphonic Studies' for pianoforte and orchestra were first performed at Sopoty on 30 Apr. 1948 at the 22nd I.S.C.M. festival and also given in Amsterdam in June 1948. His compositions include the following:

CHORAL WORK

Cantata (words by T. Miciński) (1939).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

'Allegro capriccioso' for small orch. (1929).

'Sinfonietta' (1935).

Symphonic Variations and Fugue (1938).

Symphony (1943).

Toccata (1947).

PIANOFORTE AND ORCHESTRA

'Symphonic Studies.'

CHAMBER MUSIC

String Quartet No. 2 (1943).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

'Bajka' ('Fairy Tale') (1928).

'Burlesque' (1940).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Mazurka (1946).

'Miniatures' (1947).

C. R. H.

MALBECQ (Malbecque, Malebeke, Mediatoris), Guillaume (de) (b. Malbecq[ue] nr. Soignies, ?; d. Soignies, 29 Aug. 1465).

Flemish priest, singer and composer. He went to Rome some time before Nov. 1431, when he is first mentioned as a singer in the pontifical chapel. He remained there until 1436 (except May-Aug. 1433). In 1437 he appears as chaplain and canon at Soignies, in 1449 he was almoner there and in 1460 dean. Five songs of his for 3 voices are in a collective Codex (213) in the Bodl. Lib. at Oxford.

'Adieu vous di mes seigneurs.'

'Dieu vous doit bon jour.'

'Ma volonté me changera.'

'Œuvres vostre huys.'

'Quant de la belle me parti.'

E. v. d. s., adds.

MALBROOK. A French nursery song of the 17th or 18th century. Its connection with the Duke of Marlborough as the "hero" of the words is doubtful. Upon the birth of one of Marie-Antoinette's children, about 1781, a provincial girl named, or nicknamed, Madame Pointrine, sang it to the child as a lullaby. The queen was immensely taken with the song, and presently all the court were singing it. The tune, as current in England towards the end of the 18th century, is as follows, as printed in Aird's 'Selections of Scotch, English, Irish and Foreign Airs', Vol. III (1788).

¹ Malbecq or Malbecque is a hamlet between Soignies and the village of Chaussée Notre-Dame, between which it makes a "junction" — hence probably the name Mediatoris.

² Republished in modern notation by Stainer ('Dufay and his Contemporaries').

The French words are a series of couplets beginning:

Malbrook s'en va-t-en guerre;
Miron-ton, miron-ton, miron-taine,
Malbrook s'en va-t-en guerre,
Ne sait quand reviendra.

The lengthy song goes on to say "He will return at Easter" or perhaps at "Trinity". Malbrook does not return, and the lady mounts her castle and then beholds his page, who tells her that his lord is dead, etc.

The pretty and somewhat melancholy tune took Europe by storm, and numberless songs were set to it. The first English use of the tune the present writer can trace is a song on the defeat of the French and Spanish combined forces in the siege of Gibraltar on 13 Sept. 1782.

The first verse, out of many, runs:

D'Artois returns from Spain,
Oh, what a rare campaign (bis).
We thought that with a look
He would the place have took;
But the thunders of his wrath
Was not a cracker worth.

This was published by Preston of London on a half-sheet music page.

About 1790, among other songs, the air was adapted to a lyric, 'The Maid of Primrose Hill'.

There have been many foolish statements made regarding the air. The favourite came from Chateaubriand, who, having heard (or fancied he had heard) the tune sung among the Arabs, assumed it to have been carried to the East by the crusaders and sung by them before the walls of Jerusalem.

The air is now known in England, with a new turn by way of climax, solely by the convivial song 'We won't go home till morning', with the second verse 'For he's a jolly good fellow'. F. K., adds.

MALBROUGH S'EN VA-T-EN GUERRE (Opera). See BIZET.

MALCHAIR, Johann Baptist (b. Cologne, c. 1727; d. Oxford, 12 Dec. 1812).

German violinist, composer and collector of national melodies. He was the son of a watchmaker and went early to England. He had a talent for water-colour painting, and taught drawing in ladies' schools. After being employed in London as a violinist, music teacher and concert promoter, he settled by turns at Bristol, Hereford and Lewes, where he taught army officers and by his amiable qualities won many friends. Later he removed to Oxford, where he married. In 1760 he was appointed leader of the Oxford Music Room band. He painted many interesting views round about Oxford and made excursions into North Wales. Many of his drawings are in private hands at Oxford.

When William Crotch became organist at Christ Church, Oxford, in 1790, the two became great friends. In the Bodleian MS of Crotch the latter says, under the year 1792, that Malchair visited him daily and "sometimes brought a new tune for me to write down". Crotch, in his turn, visited Malchair every Sunday. Malchair took great pains in helping Crotch to gather materials for his 'Specimens of Various Styles of Music', which formed the basis of a series of lectures given by Crotch.

Crotch made handsome references to Malchair in the preface to the 'Specimens' and said: "To Mr. Malchair of Oxford (who has made national music his study), I am bound to acknowledge myself indebted for most of the national and other curious music which I am about to offer to the public in this work".

Malchair entered into the musical life of Oxford and was greatly esteemed, though he does not appear to have published any compositions. He was a violinist of considerable ability. In the Bodleian Library there are some notes made by Crotch on his friend's life in Oxford. The Folk-Song Society possesses a manuscript book of airs noted by Malchair.

F. K., rev. H. G. F.

BIBL.—CROTCH, WM., 'Airs' (Bodleian MS Mus 32). 'Specimens of Various Styles of Music' (London, n.d.).

TAPHOUSE, T. W. & WOODS, F. CUNNINGHAM, 'John Malchair' ('Mus. News', 15 Sept. 1894).

See also Crotch.

MALCK (Malek), Stanisław (b. Kleparz nr. Cracow, ?; d. ?).

Polish 15th-16th-century theorist. In 1502 he lectured on music at the University of Cracow.

C. R. H.

MALCOLM, Alexander (b. Edinburgh, 1687; d. ?).

Scottish scientist and author. He was a first-rate mathematician, his best known works being his two books on arithmetic (1713, 1730); but he also wrote an admirable book entitled 'A Treatise of Musick, Speculative, Practical and Historical', 8vo (Edinburgh, 1721); second edition, 8vo (London, 1730). An ill-made abridgment by an "eminent musician" appeared in London in 1776. In 1721 one Mitchell published 'An Ode on the Power of Musick', dedicated to Malcolm, the greater part of which is prefixed to the two editions of the treatise.

His work is the first important treatise on the theory of music issued in Scotland. Prior to it are the few pages of general instructions in the Aberdeen 'Cantus' (1662, 1666, 1682) and a thin folio volume entitled 'An Introduction to the Knowledge and Practice of Thoro' Bass', by A(lexander) B(ayne), 1717. A copy, probably unique in its state, was sold at the Taphouse sale in 1905 and had bound up with it a contemporary manuscript essay on 'The Institutions of Musick wherein are sett forth the practicall principles of Musically Composition'. Another manuscript treatise is of the 16th century and written in the Scottish dialect. It is mentioned by Hawkins and belonged to him; it is now in the B.M.

Hawkins and later writers speak in the highest terms of the merits of Malcolm's 'Treatise', the first edition of which contained 608 pages with engraved musical examples. Fuller-Maitland points out ('O.H.M.', IV, 346) that its advocacy of equal temperament precedes by a year the publication of the first part of Bach's 'Well-tempered Clavier'. The book was dedicated to the "directors of the Royal Academy of musick" (i.e. the Italian Opera in London), who are named individually. It is advertised as just issued, in the 'Edinburgh Evening Courant' of 6 Nov. 1721, and from this advertisement we learn that the author then lived "in the Cowgate, opposite Burnet's Close".

F. K., rev. H. G. F.

BIBL.—FARMER, HENRY G., 'A History of Music in Scotland' (London, 1947), pp. 322-23.

MAURER, MAUREK, 'Alexander Malcolm in America' (M. & L., XXXIII, 1952, p. 226).

MALCUŻYŃSKI, Witold (b. Warsaw, 10 Aug. 1914).

Polish pianist. He studied pianoforte with Józef Turczyński at the Warsaw Conservatory, obtaining the diploma with distinction in 1936. He was also for a short time a pupil of Paderewski at the latter's Swiss residence of Riond-Bosson near Morges. At the third Chopin International Competition for pianists in Warsaw in 1937 he won the third prize. It was then that he made the acquaintance of a young French pianist, Colette Gaveau, who also competed in this contest, obtaining one of the further places, and he married her the next year. During the second world war he left France, where he was domiciled after his marriage, and went to Portugal and later to South America, appearing on the concert platform either as recitalist or as soloist with the orchestra. In 1942 he made his first appearance at the Carnegie Hall in New York. Since then he has toured widely in the U.S.A., Canada, Mexico and all countries of Latin America, and he was one of the first pianists to cross the Atlantic towards the end of the war (Apr. 1945), appearing in London with the London Philharmonic Orchestra, in the studios of the B.B.C. and giving a series of pianoforte recitals. In 1946 a suggestion¹ was made to the B.B.C. to arrange a recording session, which took place at the Broadwood showrooms in London with Malcużyński playing Chopin's works on the very pianoforte on which Chopin had played in London in 1848. The recordings made there by Malcużyński were afterwards broadcast in the Polish and French Services of the B.B.C.

¹ The suggestion was made by the writer of this article.—Ed.

Although still a young man, Malcużyński has already obtained a position in the musical world as a pianist of the first rank, owing to his subtle interpretation, musicianship and personality. It has been said of him that "he wins the public before touching the keyboard".

C. R. H.

Malczewski, Antoni. See Opieński ('Maria', opera). Soltys (M., 'Ukrainian Tale', do.). Statkowski ('Maria', do.).

MALDEGHEM, Robert Julien van (b. Denterghem, Flanders, 1810; d. Ixelles nr. Brussels, 13 Nov. 1893).

Belgian organist and composer. He became a pupil at the Brussels Conservatoire in 1835, studied with the director, Fétis, and obtained the Belgian Prix de Rome for musical composition in 1838.

He became organist of Saint-Jacques-sur-Coudenberg, Brussels, and started research in old music. He was the editor of the musical review 'Caecilia' (Bruges), but is chiefly memorable as the editor of 'Trésor musical', a collection in 29 volumes of vocal works, sacred and secular, by Flemish composers of the 16th century. It must, however, be said that this publication is not entirely reliable. Van Maldeghem was no musical scholar, but only an enthusiastic amateur. His mistakes have been corrected, partly by Charles van den Borren ('Inventaire des manuscrits de musique polyphonique se trouvant en Belgique' in 'Acta musicologica', V-VI), and recently more completely by Gustave Reese ('Maldeghem and his Buried Treasure: a Bibliographical Study' in 'Notes', Dec. 1943, 2nd Series, Vol. VI, No. 1, Washington, D.C.).

A. L. C.

BIBL.—REESE, GUSTAVE, 'Maldeghem and his Buried Treasure: a Bibliographical Study' ('Notes', 2nd series, VI, 1, 1948).

See also Trésor musical.

MALDERE, van. Netherlands family of musicians.

(1) Guillaume van Maldere (b. Brussels, [bapt. 27 July] 1727; d. ?), violinist. He was a violinist in the royal chapel of Brussels.

(2) Pierre van Maldere (b. Brussels, 16 Oct. 1729; d. Brussels, 3 Nov. 1768), violinist and composer, brother of the preceding. In 1746 he became second violin and three years later first violin in the royal chapel of Brussels. Duke Charles of Lorraine, governor of the southern or Austrain Netherlands, discovered his talents and took him under his protection. Van Maldere was in Dublin in 1751-53, where he conducted the "Philharmonic Concerts" and published two books of 'Sonatas for two violins with thorough Bass for the Harpsichord . . . composed by P. van Maldere First Fiddle to H.R.H. Prince Charles Prussia's [!] Band of Musick at the Court of Brussels' (Mainwaring, Dublin). On 15 Aug. 1754 he conducted the Concert Spirituel in Paris and in 1757-58 he travelled to Austria and Bohemia with the Duke. On 8 May 1757 he played before the Empress Maria Theresa in Vienna. Dittersdorf, who heard him there, calls him one of the best virtuosi of the time in his Memoirs. On 5 Nov. 1758 his opéra-comique 'Les Amours champêtres' was performed in the imperial theatre at Schönbrunn.

Back in Brussels, van Maldere left the royal chapel and became valet de chambre to the duke — a purely honorary title. He was succeeded by his brother Guillaume as first violin in the chapel, and his other brother, Jean-Baptiste, became second. Pierre now followed his master wherever he went in Europe: Vienna, Paris, etc. He reached the highest peak of his career as a composer at this time. His works were published in London, Paris and Brussels, and performed all over Europe (France, Germany, Italy, Austria) and even in America (Pennsylvania). His symphonies in particular were loudly praised in France and Germany. He also wrote for the Grand Théâtre in Brussels, the Théâtre des Italiens in Paris and the imperial theatres of Vienna. He became conductor and co-director of the Brussels theatre, which he made one of the most important opera-houses of his time.

Van Maldere's works were known and admired by Mozart in Paris and by Haydn at Eisenstadt (in Prince Esterházy's chapel). Sulzer, in his 'Allgemeine Theorie der schönen Künste' (Leipzig, 1792) speaks of "... die Allegros in den Sinfonien des Niederländers Vanmaldere, die als Muster dieser Gattung der Instrumentalmusik angesehen werden können . . ." (p. 479). Burney, too, states¹ that his symphonies were well known in England. Belgian scholars consider that he was probably the first to introduce the bi-thematic technique into the first movement of the symphony.

OPERAS

- 'Le Déguisement pastoral', opéra-comique (1756) (Nat. Lib. Vienna).
- 'Les Amours champêtres' (1758).
- 'Les Précautions inutiles' (1760).
- 'La Bagarre' (1762) (B.M., Bibl. Nat. Paris, libretto & extracts).
- 'Les Sœurs rivales' (1762).
- 'Le Médecin de l'amour' (1766) (libretto Brussels Cons.).
- 'Le Soldat par amour' (1766).

PUBLISHED INSTRUMENTAL WORKS

- 'VI Sonatas for violins . . .', 2 books (Dublin, 1753).
- 'Six Quatuors pour 2 violons, alto & basse' (Brussels, 1757).

- 'VI Sonatas for 2 violins . . .' (London, 1758, Walsh in Catherine Street, Strand, 2nd ed. Paris, 1765, dedicated to Mgr de Montmorency).
- 'Six Symphonies pour 2 violons, alto, basse, 2 hautb. et 2 cors' (Brussels, 1759).
- 'VI sinfonie a più stromenti' (Paris, 1760; ded. to the Duc d'Antin).
- 'Sinfonia a più stromenti' (Paris, 1761, Col. Vernier).
- 'Symphonie' (Paris, 1764, Coll. 'Symphonies périodiques').
- 'Sei sinfonie a più stromenti' (Paris, Vernier, 1764); English ed. 'VI Select Overtures op. IV' (Longman, Luckey, London); 2nd English ed. 'Six Favorite Overtures in 8 Parts' (Longman, Luckey & Co., London).
- 'Six Symphonies', dedicated to Prince Charles of Lorraine (Brussels, 1766).
- 'Sei sinfonie a più stromenti' (Paris, Vernier, 1768).
- 'A second Set of Six Favorite Overtures in 8 Parts' (Longman, Luckey & Broderip, London, 1770).
- 'An Overture set for the Harpsichord, organ or Piano-Forte' (London, Longman, Luckey & Co., 26 Cheapside, arr. of Paris, 1764).
- 'Sonates pour le clavecin ou pianoforte, op. VII' (Brussels).

Copies of these works are in the libraries of the Brussels Cons.; Paris Cons.; B.M., King's Music Library; Bibl. Nat. Paris; Bibl. Steinfeld, Antwerp; State Lib., Berlin; City Lib., Leipzig; Bibl. Coronini at Cosice.

MANUSCRIPT INSTRUMENTAL WORKS

- 'Sonates pour violon & basse' (Brussels Cons.).
- 'Six sonates pour 2 violons & basse' (Milan Cons.).
- '6 Sonate a tre' (Ges. d. Musikfreunde, Vienna).
- 'Dieci sinfonie' (Milan Cons.).
- 4 Symphonies (Bibl. Estense, Modena).
- 4 Sinfonien' (State Lib., Berlin).
- 6 Sinfonien' (State Lib., Dresden).
- Overtures, concertos & symphonies (Collegium Musicum, Lititz, Pennsylvania, U.S.A.).

(3) Jean-Baptiste van Maldere (b. Brussels, 7 June 1737; d. ?), violinist, brother of the preceding. He also played the violin in the royal chapel of Brussels.

(4) Jean-Baptiste van Maldere (b. Brussels, 1770; d. ?), son of the preceding.

(5) Joseph-Ernest van Maldere (b. Brussels, 25 Oct. 1775; d. ?), brother of the preceding.

A. L. C.

BIBL.—CLERCX, S., 'Pierre van Maldere' (Brussels, 1948).

'Monumenta Musicae Belgicae', Vol. II (1933), Vol. III (1936).

MALEBEKE, ? (b. ?; d. ?).

French or Flemish 15th-century composer. A chanson of his is preserved at Oxford, Bodl. Can. misc. 213. The beginning of the cantus is published by Dannemann.

E. D. (ii).

BIBL.—DANNEMANN, E., 'Die spätgotische Musiktradition in Frankreich und Burgund vor dem Auftreten Dufays' (Strasbourg, 1936).

MALEBEKE, Wilhelmus. See MALBECQ.

Malecki, Antoni. See Jarecki (H., 'List żelazny', opera). Opieński ('Maria', do.).

MALEDIZIONE, LA (Verdi). See RIGOLETTO, of which this was the original title.

MALEINGREAU, Paul de (b. nr. Chimay, 23 Nov. 1887).

Belgian organist and composer. He studied at the Brussels Conservatoire in 1905-12, Gilson and Tinel being among his masters. In 1913 he became sub-professor for harmony, later taught the organ and became successfully professor of sight-reading and transposition and of organ playing. During the period of the German occupation he gave many recitals on private organs, and after the war continued his work of popularizing the best organ music and reviving forgotten masterpieces. In 1921-22 he gave, in a series of organ recitals in Brussels, the whole of Bach's works for that instrument. In 1924 he gained the Edmond Picard Prize for composition. The greater part of his work is for the organ, where, next to Bach, the influence most readily discerned is that of Franck. Though somewhat aloof from the contending currents of contemporary music, he displays some degree of modern freedom in harmony and in form, combined with personal inventiveness. In addition to his compositions he has written some theoretical works.

¹ 'Present State . . . Netherlands . . .'

His works include masses and motets; oratorio 'La Légende de Saint Augustin'; 2 symphonies, a Suite and 'Éros et Psyché' for orch.; stg. Quartet; pf. Quartet; 2 pf. Trios; Quartets for horns, for flutes and for violas; Trio for trombones; Sonatas for vn. & pf., viola & pf. (2), cello & pf. and vn. & organ; 8 Sonatas, Sonatina, 'Les Angélus du printemps' (suite), 'Nocturnes' & other works for pf.; Preludes (7 books), 3 Symphonies, 5 Triptychs, 3 Suites, 'Opus sacrum' (2 books) & other works for organ; songs, &c.

E. E., adds.

MALER, Wilhelm (b. Heidelberg, 21 June 1902).

German composer. He studied successively under Grabner at Heidelberg, Haas at Munich and Jarnach at Cologne, and only during his student days at Heidelberg did he finally decide on music as a career. He thus came into contact with Reger's world through Haas at Munich and with Busoni's classicism through the latter's pupil Jarnach at Cologne, and both these influences became the decisive factors in forming Maler's style. On completing his studies at Cologne he became for a short period Grabner's successor at Heidelberg, and in 1925 he was appointed teacher of composition and musical theory by the Rhenish High School for Music at Cologne. From 1935 he worked in the same capacity at the University of Bonn. After the 1939-45 war he took up the directorship of the North-West German Music Academy at Detmold, which under his able leadership established itself as one of the leading institutions of this kind in post-war Germany and boasts of a teaching-staff comprising some of the finest German musicians.

Maler, like many of his German contemporaries, was strongly influenced by neo-baroque tendencies and by Hindemith's linear polyphony. In his later works he has turned to the classical forms and aims at a synthesis of neo-baroque and classicism and at a simplification of harmony. Without trying to avoid the frictions caused by linear writing, he delights in a delicate beauty of sound. In the years between the wars he was closely connected with the German movement for the renewal of folk music, which is reflected in his writing. He made many arrangements of folksongs and wrote numerous works in the folksong idiom. These are largely two-part compositions in the manner of the medieval bicenia and consist of a folksong-like tune to which a counterpoint derived from the same tune is added. In his later works Maler takes a fresh interest in harmony, and without renouncing the folksong elements he experiments with the infusion of harmonic effects into linear writing. In his first group of works, which includes a Concerto for harpsichord and chamber orchestra and a 'Concerto grosso', linearity and movement are the predominant factors. A cantata based on poems by Stefan George and an oratorio, 'Der ewige Strom', which is a homage to Bach, are characterized by a vein of meditative poetry. His striving after simplicity and folksong-like melody finds its expression in his many compositions for the German Youth Movement. The underlying nature of more recent works such as the 'Rondo über eine alt-flämische Tanzballade' of 1937 and some of his chamber-music compositions is an almost classical serenity and a poetic, nature-loving dreaminess. His 'Music for String Orchestra' with a concertino of three solo instruments, written for the Donaueschingen Music Festival of 1937, marks Maler's return to the classical forms. His triple Concerto of 1940 (first performed in 1948) follows the form of the classical concerto with a marked predominance of the symphonic element over the use of the concertino (violin, cello and pianoforte).

Maler is also a teacher of outstanding repute, and this side of his personality has played at least as important a part in German musical life during the last two decades as his compositions. It is, perhaps, due to this side of his activities that during recent years comparatively little has been heard of him as a composer. His works include the following:

CHORAL WORKS

Cantata (Stefan George) for baritone, chorus & orch. (1930).
'Der ewige Strom', oratorio for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1932).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

'Rondo über eine alt-flämische Tanzballade' (1937).
'Music for String Orchestra' (1937).
'Serenade' (1941).
Prelude, Ostinato and Pastorale on Christmas Carols.

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

Concerto for harpsichord & chamber orch. (1927).
Vn. Concerto (1932).
Concerto for vn., cello & orch. (1940).

Also 2 string Quartets; sonatas for pf., 'Der Jahreskreis'; kleine Interventionen für Klavier über deutsche Volkslieder'; a quantity of 'Spiel-musiken' for lay performers.

K. W. B.

BIBL.—LAUX, KARL, 'Wilhelm Maler', in 'Musik und Musiker der Gegenwart', I, 163-72 (Essen, 1949).

MALHERBE, Charles Théodore (b. Paris, 21 Apr. 1853; d. Cormeilles, Eure, 5 Oct., 1911).

French musicologist and composer. On the completion of his literary and legal studies (having reached the grade of licencié) he took up music and studied various branches of composition with Danhauser, Wormser and Massenet. From 1881 he contributed to various musical publications: 'Revue d'art dramatique'; 'Le Ménestrel'; 'Guide musical'; 'Le Monde artiste'; 'La Revue internationale de musique', and in 1896 was appointed archiviste-adjoint to the Paris Opéra, and 1898 succeeded Nutter as archivist. His private collection of musical autographs became one of the richest in the world, after those of the public libraries of Berlin, Vienna, London and Paris. He bequeathed them to the library of the Paris Conservatoire.

The following may be mentioned among Malherbe's works on music: Notices of 'Esclarmonde' (1889) and 'Ascanio' (1890); the 'Catalogue bibliographique des œuvres de Donizetti' (1897). In collaboration with M. A. Soubies: 'L'Œuvre dramatique de R. Wagner' (1886); 'Précis de l'histoire de l'Opéra-Comique' (1887; pseudonym, B. de Lomague); 'Mélanges sur Richard Wagner' (1892); 'Histoire de la seconde Salle Favart' (two vols., 1892 and 1893, crowned by the Institut); 'P. Tchaikovsky' (1901); 'Le Galliamathias musicum de Mozart' (Riemann 'Festschrift', 1909); a biography of Auber ('Musiciens célèbres', 1911). Malherbe edited with Saint-Saëns the collected edition of Rameau's works. He composed several opéras-comiques ('L'Ordonnance', etc., not published), incidental music for 'Les Yeux clos' (Paris, Théâtre de Odéon, 1896), orchestral and chamber music, as well as numerous transcriptions. G. F., adds.

MALHEURS D'ORPHÉE, LES (Opera). See MILHAUD.

MALIBRAN, Maria Felicita (born Garcia) (b. Paris, 24 Mar. 1808; d. Manchester, 23 Sept. 1836).

Franco-Spanish mezzo-contralto singer. She was the daughter of Manuel Garcia. When three years old she was taken to Italy, and at the age of five played a child's part in Paer's 'Agnese', at the Teatro dei Fiorentini, Naples. So precocious was she that, after a few nights of this opera, she actually began to sing the title part in the duet of the second act, a piece of audacity which was applauded by the public. Two years later she studied solfeggio with Panzeron at Naples. In 1816 Garcia took her to Paris with the rest of his family, and thence to London in the autumn of 1817. At the age of fifteen she was made by her father to learn singing under his own direction. Two years had barely elapsed when (1824) Garcia allowed her to appear for the first time in Paris before a musical club which he had just established. There she produced a great sensation, and her future success was confidently predicted. Two months later Garcia returned to London, where he was engaged as principal tenor; and there he set on foot a singing-class in which the education of Maria was continued, if not completed. Fétis says that it was in consequence of a sudden indisposition of Giuditta Pasta that Maria's first public appearance was unexpectedly made; but this account is not the same as that given by Ebers or by Lord Mount-Edgcombe. The latter relates that, shortly after the repair of the King's Theatre, the great favourite Pasta arrived for a limited number of nights. About the same time . . . it became necessary to engage a young singer, the daughter of the tenor Garcia who had sung here for several seasons. She was as yet a mere girl, and had never appeared on any public stage; but from the first moment of her appearance she showed evident talents for it both as singer and actress. Her extreme youth, her prettiness, her pleasing voice, and sprightly easy action, as Rosina in 'Il barbiere di Siviglia', in which part she made her début, gained her general favour; but she was too highly extolled, and injudiciously put forward as a prima donna, when she was only a very promising débutante, who in time, by study and practice, would in all probability, under the tuition of her father, a good musician, but (to my ears at least) a most disagreeable singer, rise to eminence in her profession.

Ebers says "her voice was a contralto, and managed with great taste".

Her London début took place on 7 June 1825. She was immediately afterwards engaged for the remainder of the season (about six weeks) at £500.¹ On 23 June she sang Felicia in the first performance of Meyerbeer's 'Crociano'. At the end of the season Garcia went, with his daughter, to the provincial festivals, and then embarked for New York. In this new sphere Maria rapidly improved and acquired confidence, experience and the habit of the stage. She appeared in Mozart's 'Don Giovanni', Rossini's 'Otello', 'Tancredi' and 'Cenerentola', and in two operas written for her by her father, 'L'amante astuto', and 'La figlia dell'aria'. She had scarcely made her début when the enthusiasm of the public knew no bounds; and, in the midst of her popularity, Garcia gave her in marriage to Malibran, an elderly and seemingly wealthy French merchant, in spite of her repugnance to the union. This marriage, celebrated on 25 Mar. 1826, was as unhappy as it was ill-assorted; a year had hardly elapsed before the young wife found herself, on Malibran's bankruptcy, free to leave him, and she at once seized the opportunity. Her farewell performance in New York took place on 29 Oct. 1827, in Boieldieu's 'Jean de Paris', and she returned to France. Preceded by a bright reputation, she began by reaping a harvest of applause at private concerts, followed in Jan. 1828 by a great and genuine success, at Galli's benefit, in Rossini's 'Semiramide'. Her genius for dramatic singing was at once recognized, though her style was marred by questionable taste in her choice of ornament. This she had, in Paris, the best opportunity of correcting. Engaged for the season at the Italian Opera, she made her début there on 8 Apr. The public, at first doubting, soon welcomed her as a really great singer.

¹ Many details of Malibran's fees will be found in the 1st and 2nd editions of this Dictionary.

In the season of 1829 Malibran made her reappearance in London, where she shared the applause of the public with Sontag, and the same result followed her singing with that artist in Paris in the autumn. She was principal soprano at the Gloucester Festival of 1829 and was engaged again at the Italian Opera in Paris in Jan. 1830.

Sontag, marrying and retiring from the stage early in 1830, left Malibran mistress of the field. Henceforth she had no rival, but continued to sing each season in London and Paris with ever-increasing success. In 1830 an attachment sprang up between her and Charles de Bériot the violinist; and this ended only with her life. They built in 1831 a handsome villa at Ixelles, a suburb of Brussels, to which they returned after every operatic campaign. In the summer of 1832 a sudden inspiration took this impulsive artist to Italy in the company of Lablache, who happened to pass through Brussels; and an Italian tour was improvised, which was a sort of triumphal progress. Milan, Rome, Naples and Bologna were visited with equal success.

Malibran retired to Brussels in Dec. 1832, and her son, Charles Wilfrid, was born on 12 Feb. 1833. In the following spring she returned to London and sang, at Drury Lane, in English Opera. Having played in English versions of Bellini's 'Sonnambula' and Beethoven's 'Fidelio', she went to Naples, where she remained until May 1834, proceeding then to Bologna and thence to Milan. After a flying visit to London she was singing at Senigallia in July. On 11 Aug. she went to Lucca, where her horses were taken from her carriage, which was drawn to her hotel by enthusiastic admirers after her last appearance. She next went to Milan and thence to Naples, where she sang at the Teatro del Fondo in 'Otello' and at the San Carlo, on 31 Dec. 1834, in Rossi's 'Amelia'. Persiani's 'Ines de Castro' was produced at the San Carlo for her in the same winter. From Naples she went, in the same triumphant manner, to Venice, her arrival being announced by fanfares of trumpets.

There she was besieged with fresh enthusiasm, which followed her on her return to Paris and London. She returned in August to Lucca.

At this juncture her marriage was annulled by the courts in Paris, and on 26 Mar. 1836 she married Bériot, with whom she returned immediately to Brussels. In the following Apr., once more in London, she had a fall from her horse and received serious injuries to her head, from which she never entirely recovered. She returned to Brussels, whence she went to Aachen and gave two concerts there with Bériot. In Sept. she had gone to England again, for the Manchester Festival — at which her short, brilliant life came to an end. She sang through three days of the festival, but on Wednesday, 14 Sept., her last notes in public were heard. She died nine days later, at the Moseley Arms Hotel, Market Street. She was buried on 1 Oct. in the south aisle of the collegiate church, Manchester; but her remains were soon afterwards removed to Brussels, where they were reinterred in the cemetery of Laeken. Bériot erected a mausoleum containing a bust of the celebrated singer by the sculptor Geefs.

Malibran's charm seems to have lain chiefly in the peculiar colour and unusual extent of her voice, in her excitable temperament, which prompted her to improvise passages of strange audacity on the stage, and in her strong musical feeling, which kept those improvisations nearly but not quite always within the bounds of good taste. That her voice was not faultless, either in quality or uniformity, seems certain. It was a contralto with much of the soprano register superadded and with an interval of dead notes intervening, to conceal which she used great ingenuity with almost perfect success.

Many portraits of Malibran have appeared, none very good. A large one, after Hayter, representing her with a harp as Desdemona, is usually accounted the best; but it is only indifferent. Another, by R. J. Lane, showing her made up as Fidalma and afterwards in a stage-box in her usual dress, is much better. Among the biographies that by the Comtesse Merlin is little better than a romance.

Malibran composed and published many nocturnes, songs and chansonnettes; some of the pieces left unpublished were collected and brought out by Troupenas in Paris under the title of 'Dernières Pensées musicales de Marie-Félicité Garcia de Bériot'.
J. M.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BIELLI, DOMENICO, 'Maria Malibran' (Casalbordino, 1936).
HERON-ALLEN, E., 'Contributions towards an Accurate Biography of de Bériot and Malibran' ('De fidiculis opuscula', VI, London, 1894).
LARIONOFF, P. & PESTELLINI, F., 'Maria Malibran e i suoi tempi' (Florence, 1943).

LA TOUR, LOUIS HÉRITTE DE, 'Une Famille de grands musiciens: mémoires de Louis Hérítte Viardot' (Paris, 1923).

LEOUVÉ, E., 'Maria Malibran' ('Études et souvenirs de théâtre' (Paris, n.d.).

POUGIN, A., 'Marie Malibran: the Story of a Great Singer' (London, 1911).

See also Bellini. Bennett (R. R., opera on M.). Maid of Artois (Balle, written for M.). Rossi (Lauro, dance in 'Amelia'). Vaccai (opera written for M.; ceremonial cantatas).

MALILU (Instrument). See BABYLONIAN MUSIC.

MALINCONIA, LA. A nickname for Beethoven's string Quartet in B \flat major, Op. 18 No. 6. 'La Malinconia' was the composer's own name for the introductory part of the fourth movement.

MALINOWSKI, Stefan (b. Warsaw, 23 Jan. 1887; d. ?, 1943).

Polish composer. He was a pupil of Noskowski at the Warsaw Conservatory and later studied in Berlin. He published many pieces for pianoforte and songs, and received a prize at a competition in Paris in 1923. Besides he wrote 2 string Quartets (D minor and A major), a pianoforte Trio (A minor), a Sonata for cello and pianoforte (D minor) and variations for pianoforte. His operetta 'Kwiat paproci' ('The Fern Flower') was successfully performed in Warsaw and Cracow.

C. R. H.

MALIPIERO, Gian Francesco (b. Venice, 18 Mar. 1882).

Italian composer. He began to study the violin at the Vienna Conservatory in 1899, but, having failed at an examination, passed on to a harmony class. Returning to Venice, he continued studying counterpoint at the Liceo Musicale "B. Marcello" until 1902. In 1904 he took a diploma at the Liceo Musicale "G. B. Martini" of Bologna. He began his official career as a teacher in 1921 with an appointment as professor of composition at the Parma Conservatory, where, however, he remained for only two years. He then removed to Asolo, at the foot of Monte Grappa, where he took assiduously to composition. After a short period as director of the Istituto Musicale "C. Pollini" at Padua, he was in 1939 appointed director of the Liceo Marcello at Venice—a post he still occupies (1952)—and contributed much to the reconstitution of that school, improving its ancient domicile at the Palazzo Pisani and promoting important undertakings. His own private teaching of composition attracted students from all over the world and assumed the character and the authority of a modern artistic studio.

Malipiero's earliest compositions, most of them destroyed by him, reveal an essentially romantic nature and, to put it more exactly, a northern romanticism with its love of the supernatural and of nocturnal mystery; and this trait has remained noticeable in his later works, even where the musical expression tends towards pre-romantic modes and styles, and where the composer's whole aesthetic outlook becomes an act of rebellion against 19th-century music. In his youth he constantly frequented the Biblioteca Marciana of Venice to familiarize himself with its collections of the 17th- and 18th-century Venetian masters, from whom he learnt a great deal. Thus, slowly maturing, he gradually cultivated an idiom which, while springing from these sources, became highly individual and conditioned by his own taste, so much so as to make it impossible to mistake his music for that of any other salient creative musical personality among his contemporaries. This affirmation of his individuality occurred between the years 1914 and 1918 with some of the most significant of his works, such as the second suite of 'Impressioni dal vero', 'Pause del silenzio', 'Poemi asolani' and 'Pantea'.

Malipiero's melodic invention took its departure from a happy compromise between 16th-century song and Gregorian chant: from the former he derived nobility and austerity of procedure—that is to say a certain monumental quality—from the latter some structural and modal characteristics, including a wavering between not very definite "major" and "minor" modes and his manner of syllabic treatment; and from both together rhythmic freedom and an aversion from thematic developments. For we cannot in Malipiero's case speak of "themes" in the traditional sense any more than of contrapuntal development. His melodies follow each other without connecting links, like so many episodes bound together merely by affinity or by contrast of colour. But his imagination is always full of vitality and his invention endlessly fertile, and this usually saves his music from giving any impression of repetitive or monotonous procedures, as it might otherwise do, being deprived of contrapuntal resources, and indeed actually does in a few specimens of his very copious output.

Applied to music for the stage, these principles of composition gave rise to dramatic works designed, as it were, in "panels", as for example in his first work for the theatre, the 'Sette canzoni' (1918) or the last, 'L' allegria brigata' (1943). The reasons which prompted the composer to abandon the principles of large-scale construction in opera—to which he occasionally reverted with not altogether successful experiments in Greek or Shakespearian tragedy (1935-39)—are the following, as he himself declared: dissatisfaction with the recitative which unfolds itself like an endless ribbon on one single level and imparts to the narrative that naturalistic tone which is the enemy of lyric transfiguration, and in general a taste for the kind of musical discourse outlined above. In the operas just mentioned (to which the following with similar characteristics were added: 'Torneo notturno'—perhaps the best and most convincing,—'Il mistero di Venezia' and 'I capricci di Callot') a procedure which in psychology would be called "association by contrast" forbids dramatic dialectics, neither characters nor sentimental actions develop and there is no before and after: all the composer is concerned with is the musical fact, with sheer sound conjuring up a magical atmosphere. In the contest between reality and dream it is the latter which in the end gains the victory, even where incurable pessimism appears to point to the contrary.

Special mention must be made of Malipiero as editor of music of the past. His list of this kind of work is lengthy and includes among other things the complete edition of Monteverdi's works, to which he devoted long study and great enthusiasm. These undertakings are the more praiseworthy because he endeavoured to present works of the past in their entirety and as faithfully as possible, discreetly interpreting for the modern reader what might prove an obstacle to his comprehension, without adding, modifying or arranging anything—a rare example of editorial humility. Apart from his work on the Monteverdi edition, Malipiero is engaged (1951-54) in collaborating in the collected edition of Vivaldi's works, in his capacity of artistic director of the Istituto Italiano per la pubblicazione e diffusione delle opere di Antonio Vivaldi, founded at Venice in 1947.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- AMICO, L. D., 'Classicità di Malipiero' ('Scenario', Aug. 1932).
 BERGER, ARTHUR V., 'Gian Francesco Malipiero', in 'The Book of Modern Composers' (New York, 1942).
 BONTEMPELLI, M., 'Gian Francesco Malipiero' (Milan, 1942).
 FLEISCHER, H., 'La musica contemporanea' (Milan, 1937), pp. 210-13.
 GATTI, G. M., 'Gian Francesco Malipiero' (in the vol. 'Musicisti moderni d'Italia e di fuori' (Bologna, 1945).
 'Gian Francesco Malipiero' ('L'Esame', Milan, Oct. 1923).
 'Malipiero: Romantic and Classic' (M.M.R., Feb. 1935).
 'La Rassegna Musicale', Malipiero number for his 60th birthday, Mar. 1942, with contribution by Bontempelli, Pizzetti, d'Amico, Rossi-Doria, Casella, De Paoli, Labroca, Della Corte, Piovesan & others.
 'L'opera di Gian Francesco Malipiero: saggi di scrittori italiani e stranieri, con una introduzione di Guido M. Gatti, seguiti dal catalogo delle opere con annotazioni dell'autore e da ricordi e pensieri dello stesso' (Treviso, 1952).
 'Malipiero e le sue Sette canzoni', essays by various musicians and critics (Rome, 1929).
 PRUNIÈRES, H., 'Gian Francesco Malipiero' ('Mercure de France', 16 May 1919 & Rev. Mus., Jan. 1927).
 'Rassegna Musicale', special Malipiero number (Mar. 1942).
 ROSSI-DORIA, G., 'Il teatro musicale di Gian Francesco Malipiero' (Rass. Mus., July-Aug. 1929).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

OPERAS

Title	Libretto	Composed	Production
'Elen e Fuldano', 3 acts.	?	1907-9.	(Destroyed.)
'Canossa', 1 act.	S. Benco.	1911.	Rome, Teatro Costanzi, 24 Jan. (1914) (destroyed).
'Sogno d' un tramonto d' autunno', 1 act.	Gabriele d' Annunzio.	1913.	Unpublished and not produced.
'L' Orfeide', trilogy	Composer.	1918-22.	Dusseldorf, Municipal Theatre, 31 Oct. 1915.
1. La morte delle maschere.			Paris, Opera, 10 July 1920.
2. Sette canzoni.
3. Orfeo, ovvero l' ottava canzone.
'Tre commedie goldoniane'	Carlo Goldoni.	1919-22.	Darmstadt, Hessisches Landestheater, 24 Mar. 1926.
1. La bottega del caffè.
2. Sior Todaro Brontolon.
3. Le baruffe chiozzotte.
'Filomela e l' infatuato', 3 acts.	Composer.	1924-25.	Prague, Gernsheim Theatre, 31 Mar. 1928.
'Il mistero di Venezia', trilogy	Composer.	1925-28.	Coburg, Landestheater, 15 Dec. 1932.
1. Le aquile di Aquileia.			Mainz, Municipal Theatre, 8 Mar. 1928.
2. Il finto Arlecchino.
3. I corvi di Venezia (see Ballets).
'Merlino Mastro d' organi', 2 acts.		1927.	—
'Torneo notturno', sette notturni per la scena	Composer.	1929.	Munich, National Theatre, 15 May 1931.
1. Le serenate.
2. La tormenta.
3. La foresta.
4. La taverna del buon tempo.
5. Il focolare spento.
6. Il castello della noia.
7. La prigionie.
'La bella e il mostro', 1 act.	Composer, after Petrault.	1930.	—
'La favola del figlio cambiato', 3 acts.	Luigi Pirandello.	1933.	Brunswick, Landestheater, 13 Jan. 1934.

Title	Libretto	Composed	Production
'Giulio Cesare', 3 acts.	Composer, after Shakespeare.	1935.	Genoa, Teatro Carlo Felice, 8 Feb. 1936.
'Antonio e Cleopatra', 3 acts.	Composer, after Shakespeare.	1938.	Florence, Teatro Comunale, 4 May 1938.
'Ecuba', 3 acts.	Composer, after Euripides.	1939.	Rome, Opera, 11 Jan. 1941.
'La vita è sogno', 3 acts.	Composer, after Calderón.	1940.	Breslau, Municipal Theatre, 1943.
'I capriccio di Callot', 3 acts.	Composer, after E. T. A. Hoffmann.	1941-42.	Rome, Opera, Nov. 1942.
'L'allegra brigata', sei noelle in un dramma .	After Italian novels of the 14th-16th centuries.	1943.	Milan, Teatro alla Scala, 4 May 1950.
'Mondi celesti e infernali', tre atti con sette donne	Composer.	1948-49.
1. Sammuramaï.
2. Medea, after Euripides.
3. Poppea, after Seneca.
4. Maria, from Domenico Cavalcas's 'Vita dei santi'.
5. Romeo e Giulietta, after Shakespeare.
6. Donna Rosaura.
7. Lei.

BALETS

- 'Pantea', symph. drama (1918-19).
- 'La mascherata delle principesse prigioniere' (1919).
- 'I corvi di Venezia' (No. 3 of 'Il mistero di Venezia', see Operas) (1925-28).
- 'Stradivario' (1947-48).

CHORAL WORKS

- 'Canto di un pastore errante nell'Asia' (Giacomo Leopardi) for baritone, chorus & orch. (1909).
- 'San Francesco d'Assisi', mystery, for baritone, chorus & orch. (1920).
- 'La Principessa Ulalia' for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1924).
- 'La cena' for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1927).
- 'La Passione' for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1935).
- 'Missa pro mortuis' for baritone, chorus & orch. (1938).
- 'Santa Eufrosina', mystery, for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1942).
- 'Vergili Aeneis', sinfonia eroica (Annibale Caro) for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1944).
- 'Li sette peccati mortali' (Fazio degli Uberti) for chorus & orch. (1946).
- 'La terra' (from Virgil's 'Georgics') for chorus & small orch. (1946).
- 'La festa de la sensa' (fragment from Horace) for baritone, chorus & orch. (1949-50).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 'Sinfonia degli eroi' (1905) (destroyed).
- 'Sinfonia del mare' (1906).
- 'Sinfonie del silenzio e della morte' (1910).
- 'Impressioni dal vero', set I (1910-11)
 1. Il capinero.
 2. Il picchio.
 3. Il chiù.
- 'Danze e canzoni' (1912).
- 'Per una favola cavalleresca: illustrazioni per orchestra' (1914).
- 'Impressioni dal vero', set II (1914-15)
 1. Colloquio di campane.
 2. I cipressi e il vento.
 3. Baldoria.
- 'Armenia', symph. transcription of Armenian songs (1917).
- 'Ditrambo tragico' (1917).
- 'Pause del silenzio' (1917).
- 'Grottesco' for small orch. (1918).
- 'Oriente immaginario', 3 studies for small orch. (1920).
- 'La Cimarosiana', 3 pieces by Cimarosa (1921).
- 'Impressioni dal vero', set III (1921-22)
 1. Festa in Val d'Inferno.
 2. I Galli.
 3. Tarantella a Capri.
- 'L'esilio dell'eroe', 5 symph. impressions (1926).
- 'Concerti per orchestra' (1931).
- 'Inni' (1932).
- 'Sette invenzioni' (1932).

- 'Quattro invenzioni' (1932).
- 'Sinfonia I (in quattro tempi, come le quattro stagioni)' (1934).
- 'Sinfonia II (elegiaca)' (1936).
- 'Sinfonia III (delle campane)' (1944).
- 'Sinfonia IV (in memoriam)' (1946).
- 'Sinfonia V' (see Solo and Orchestra).
- 'Sinfonia VI (degli archi)' for stgs. (1947).
- 'Sinfonia VII (delle canzoni)' (1948).
- Symphony in one movement (1950).
- 'Sinfonia del Zodiaco (dalla primavera all'inverno)' (1951).

SOLO AND ORCHESTRA

- 'Variazioni senza tema' for pf. (1923).
- Vn. Concerto (1932).
- Pf. Concerto No. 1 (1934).
- 'Il commiato' (Leopardi) for baritone.
- Pf. Concerto No. 2 (1937).
- Cello Concerto (1937).
- 'Concerto a tre' for vn., cello & pf. (1938).
- 'Sinfonia V (concertante in eco)' for 2 pfs. (1947).
- Pf. Concerto No. 3 (1948).
- Pf. Concerto No. 4 (1950).
- 'Cinque favole' (anon., 16th cent.) for voice & small orch. (1950).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- String Quartet (1907-10) (destroyed).
- 'Rispetti e strambotti' for stg. 4tet (No. 1) (1920).
- 'Stornelli e ballate' for stg. 4tet (No. 2) (1923).
- 'Ricerari' for 11 insts. (1923).
- 'Ritrovati' for 11 insts. (1926).
- 'Sonata a tre' for vn., cello & pf. (1927).
- 'Cantari alla madrigalesca' for stg. 4tet (No. 3) (1930).
- 'Epodi e giambi' for oboe, vn., viola & bassoon (1932).
- String Quartet No. 4 (1934).
- 'Sonata a cinque' for flute, vn., viola, cello & harp (1934).
- String Quartet No. 5 ('dei capricci') (1945).
- 'L'arca di Noè' for stg. 4tet (No. 6) (1947).
- 'Mondi celesti' for voice & 10 insts. (1948).
- String Quartet No. 7 (1949-50).

VOCAL CHAMBER MUSIC

- 'De profundis' for voice, viola & pf. (1937).
- 'Quattro canzoni antiche' for voice & 7 insts. (1938).
- 'Le sette allegrezze d'amore' (L. de' Medici) for voice & 14 insts. (1945).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- 'Canto crespusco' (1914).
- 'Canto notturno' (1914).
- 'Il canto della lontananza' (1919).

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

- Sonata, D mi. (1907-8).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- 'Six Morceaux' (1905).
- 'Bizzarrie luminose dell' alba, del meriggio e della notte' (1908).
- 'Poemetti lunari' (1909-10).
- 'Preludi autunnali' (1914).
- 'Poemi asolani' (1916).
- 'Barlumi' (1917).
- 'Rizonanze' (1918).
- 'Maschere che passano' (1918).
- 'Tre omaggi' (1920).
- 'Omaggio a Claude Debussy' (1920).
- 'Cavalcate' (1921).
- 'La siesta' (1921).
- 'Il tarlo' (1922).
- 'Pasqua di Risurrezione' (1924).
- 'Preludi a una fuga' (1926).
- 'Epitaffio' (1931).
- 'Omaggio a Bach' (1932).
- 'Preludi, ritmi e canti gregoriani' (1937).
- 'Preludio e fuga' (1941).
- 'Hortus conclusus' (1946).

SONGS

- 'I sonetti delle Fate' (Gabriele d' Annunzio) (1910).
- 'Cinq Mélodies' (1914-16).
- 'Keepsake' (G. Jean-Aubry) (1918).
- 'Tre poesie di Angelo Poliziano' (1920).
- 'Quattro sonetti del Burchiello' (1921-22).
- 'Due sonetti del Berni' (1922).
- 'Le stagioni italiane' (1923).
- 'Tre vocalizzi' (wordless) (1929).

TRANSCRIPTIONS

- Concertos for organ & stgs. by A. Corbelli, A. Scarlatti, Veracini and Tartini (1926).
- Concertos for stgs. by Monteverdi ('Ritornelli e sinfonie dall' Orfeo'), Bassani ('Canzone'), Stradella ('Serenate') and Frescobaldi ('Toccata') (1926).
- Madrigals by Monteverdi for orch. (1930).

EDITIONS

- Bassani, 'Canzoni amorose' (1919).
- Cavallieri, 'Rappresentazione di anima e di corpo' (1919).
- Galuppi, 'Il filosofo di campagna' (1919).
- Jommelli, 'La Passione di Gesù Cristo' (1919).
- Marcello, Cantatas (1919).
- Tartini, Sonatas for vn. & pf. (1919).
- Monteverdi, 'Orfeo' (1920).
- Leo, 6 Solfeggi (1922).
- 10 Old Choruses (1926).
- Monteverdi, Complete Works, 16 vols. (1926-42).

BOOKS

- 'L' orchestra' (Bologna, 1920).
- 'Teatro', preface by G. M. Gatti (Bologna, 1920).
- 'I profeti di Babilonia' (Milan, 1923).
- 'Claudio Monteverdi' (Milan, 1930).
- 'Igor Stravinsky' (Venice, 1945).
- 'Antonfrancesco Doni musicista, ovvero L' armonioso labirinto' (Venice, 1946).
- 'Così va lo mondo (1922-45)', autobiography (Milan, 1946).
- 'La pietra del bando' (Venice, 1947).

G. M. G.

MALIPIERO, Riccardo (b. Milan, 24 July 1914).

Italian composer and critic, nephew of the preceding. He is the son of the violoncellist Riccardo Malipiero and devoted himself to the study of music at an early age, taking diplomas in pianoforte playing in 1932 and composition in 1937. Having made a beginning as a pianist, he devoted himself entirely to the career of a composer and critic. Since 1945 he has been a convinced adherent of and propagandist for the twelve-note technique, and he therefore repudiates all his works written before that date and not conforming to that theory. Among his twelve-note compositions the following must be mentioned: 'Minnie la candida', opera in 3 acts (libretto by M. Bontempelli), produced at Parma in Nov. 1942; 'Cantata sacra' (words by St. Catherine of Siena) for solo voices, chorus and orchestra (1947); 'Symphony for orchestra' (1949); 'Piccolo concerto' for pianoforte and orchestra (1945); 'Quatre Poésies de Paul Éluard' for voice and pianoforte (1948), as well as other works for string quartet, for pianoforte and for voices.

Malipiero is music critic of the Milan daily 'Il Popolo' and has published studies of Bach and Debussy, and musical analyses of Berlioz's 'Damnation of Faust' and Ravel's 'L'Enfant et les sortilèges'. G. M. G.

Maliser, Knud. See Halling.

MALISZEWSKI, Witold (b. Mohylev o/Dniestr, Podolia, 20 July 1873; d. Warsaw, 18 July 1939).

Polish composer. As a child he received his first pianoforte lessons from his mother, herself an accomplished pianist, and lessons in violin playing from Alfred Kunkel at Tiflis. At the age of eighteen he entered the St. Petersburg Conservatory and began regular studies in composition and orchestration under Rimsky-Korsakov. In 1908 he was appointed to the post of director of the Imperial School of Music at Odessa. In 1921 he moved to Poland and settled in Warsaw, where he became director of the Chopin School of Music (1925-27). In 1931 he was appointed head of the Music Department in the Ministry of Education and won the State Music Award; in 1932 he became professor of composition at the Warsaw Conservatory, and a year later he founded the Chopin Institute in Warsaw.

Maliszewski's music may be said to belong to the late-romantic style of the present day. It is imbued with Slavonic lyricism and melancholy and scored with masterly craftsmanship and skill. His compositions include the following:

OPERA-BALLET

- Op.*
- 24. 'Syrena' ('The Mermaid'), 4 acts, libretto by L. M. Rogowski and the composer, prod. Warsaw, 1928.
- 26. 'Boruta', lib. by Or-Ot, prod. Warsaw, 1930.

CHORAL WORKS

- 28. 'Requiem' for solo voices, chorus, & orch. (1931).
- 29. 'Missa Pontificalis Papae Pii XI', for solo voices, chorus, organ & orch. (1931).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 8. Symphony No. 1.
- 12. Symphony No. 2.
- 13. 'Merry Overture' (1908).
- 14. Symphony No. 3 (1907).
- 21. Symphony No. 4, "To the new-born and re-discovered Native Country" (1924).
- Overture on themes by Schubert (sketches of the B minor Symphony) (1927).

- Op.*
 30. 'Bajka' ('Fairy Tale'), scherzo (1932).
 31. 'Legenda o Borucie' ('The Legend of Boruta, the Devil as a Polish Nobleman'), symph. poem (1932).

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

- Suite for cello (1923).
 25. 'Kujavian Fantasy' for pf. (1929).
 27. Pf. Concerto (1932).

CHAMBER MUSIC

2. String Quartet, No. 1, F ma.
 3. String Quintet, No. 2, D mi.
 6. String Quartet, No. 3, C ma.
 15. String Quartet, No. 4, E♭ ma.

ONE INSTRUMENT AND PIANOFORTE

1. Vn. Sonata.
 22. Cello Sonata.
 Also many pieces for pianoforte solo and songs.

C. R. H.

BIBL.—WROCKI, E., 'Witold Maliszewski' (Warsaw, 1932).

MALKO, Nikolay Andreyevich (b. Brailov, 4 May 1888).

Russian conductor. He studied at the St. Petersburg Conservatory under Rimsky-Korsakov, Glazunov and N. Tcherepnin, after which, having decided to devote himself to conducting, he received lessons from Mottl at Carlsruhe. He became a professor at the Leningrad Conservatory and the conductor of the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra.

Malko has toured extensively and made known a great number of new Russian works. His visits to Great Britain have been frequent both before and after his leaving Russia for good and settling in the U.S.A. He left America for Denmark later and became conductor of the Royal Orchestra in Copenhagen.

M. D. C., adds.

MALLAPERT, Robin (b. ?; d. ?).

French 16th-century musician. He was master of the children at the Church of Santa Maria Maggiore in Rome for some time before 1538, when he was appointed maestro di capella of San Luigi dei Francesi there. He appears to have returned to Santa Maria about 1550.

E. B.

Mallarmé, Stéphane. See Arrieu ('Chansons bas', songs). Bernard (R., 3 songs with orch.). Cartan (2 songs). Debussy ('Après-midi d'un faune' for orch., 4 songs). Freitas Branco (L., 2 songs). Harsányi (song). Hindemith (symph. poem, 'Hérodiade'). Milhaud (11 songs). Ravel (3 poems, voice & chamber m.; 1 song). Salzedo (3 poems for sop., harp & pf.). Sauguet (2 songs).

Mallefille, Pierre Jean Félicien. See Smetana ('Two Widows', opera).

Mallempré (sculptor). See Balfé (bust of).

MALLERY. See MALLORIE.

Mallet (orig. Malloch), David. See Arne (1, 'Alfred' & 'Britannia'). Rule, Britannia!

MALLING, Otto (Valdemar) (b. Copenhagen, 1 June 1848; d. Copenhagen, 5 Oct. 1915).

Danish conductor, organist and composer. He studied in Copenhagen and later abroad. In 1872 he became choral conductor in Copenhagen, in 1878 organist at one of the churches there and in 1899 director of the Conservatory. His compositions include choral works, a Symphony and other orchestral works, a pianoforte Concerto, chamber music, songs, etc.

E. B.

MALLINGER, Mathilde (b. Agram [Zagreb], 17 Feb. 1847; d. Berlin, 19 Apr. 1920).

Austrian soprano singer. She was first taught at Zagreb by her father, a professor of music and by Prof. Lichtenegger, later by Gordigiani and Vogl at the Prague Conservatory in 1863–66 and finally by Richard Lewy in Vienna.

On the recommendation of Franz Lachner she was engaged at Munich, where she made her début as Norma on 4 Oct. 1866. She was the original Eva in Wagner's 'Meistersinger', 21 June 1868. She made her débuts in Berlin as Elsa, 6 Apr. and Norma, 9 Apr. 1869. She was an excellent actress and a great favourite, married Baron Schimmelpfennig von der Oye in Berlin and remained there during her whole musical career until 1882. On leave of absence she played with success in Vienna, Munich, etc., and in Italian opera in St. Petersburg and Moscow, but with indifferent success. About 1871 a certain section of the Berlin public tried to establish her claim as leading singer as against Pauline Lucca, the then reigning favourite. Endless quarrels ensued on their account, which culminated in a performance of Mozart's 'Figaro' on 27 Jan. 1872, where they were both playing. On Lucca's entry as Cherubino she was hissed—in consequence of which she broke her contract in the following autumn and left for America. In 1890 Mathilde Mallinger became professor of singing in the Prague Conservatory, and in 1895 she returned to Berlin to teach in the Eichelberg Conservatory.

A. G.

MALLINSON, (James) Albert (b. Leeds, 13 Nov. 1870; d. Helsingør, 5 Apr. 1946).

English organist and composer. He studied mainly abroad and married the German singer Anna Steinhauer, who sang his songs on her tours with him in Germany and Denmark. In 1904 he became organist of the English Church at Dresden. Some time later in his life, probably during one of the world wars, he settled in Denmark. It was perhaps because of his prolonged absence abroad that his work was very little known in his native country, though his more than 300 songs include numerous settings of English poetry and many of them are of a high quality.

E. B.

MALLORIE ¹, ? (b. ?; d. ?).

English 16th-century composer. There is a 5-part Miserere by him in Ch. Ch. partbooks (948/8), also the tenor part of an anthem, 'O consider mine adversities' by 'Mallorie'

¹ Also Mallery, Malorie or Malory.

(B.M. Add. MSS 22,597/67). Another late-16th-century manuscript (B.M. Add. MSS 31,390) contains fantasies, In Nomines and arrangements of anthems, motets, etc., for viols by 16th-century (chiefly English) composers, and includes a 5-part In Nomine by "Malory", an arrangement of a 5-part anthem by him, 'Prayse the Lord, O my sowl', as well as a 'Sol re sol my sol' for 6 viols. These various compositions (all in manuscripts of the same period) are apparently the work of the same man. J. M. (ii).

MALTEN (real name Müller), Therese (b. Insternburg, 21 June 1855; d. Neuzschieren nr. Dresden, 2 Jan. 1930).

German soprano singer. She was taught by Gustav Engel of Berlin. She made her début as Mozart's Pamina and Weber's Agathe at Dresden in 1873, where she remained for thirty years as principal soprano, retiring at last on a pension. Her parts included Armida, Iphigenia, Fidelio, Jessonda, Genoveva, Leonora ('Trovatore'), Margäret; the heroines of Wagner; the Queen of Sheba in Goldmark's opera of that name; the Princess Marie in Kretschmer's 'Folkunger' on its production in 1874; Fulvia on the production of Hofmann's 'Arminius' in 1877, etc. On leave of absence she played in London, Berlin, Vienna.

In Aug. 1882 she appeared at Bayreuth as Kundry, at the instance of Wagner, who had a very high opinion of her ability, again in 1884, and at Munich, where she played the same part in private before King Ludwig, from whom she received the gold medal of Arts and Science.

She made a great impression on her London début at Drury Lane Theatre under Richter in 'Fidelio', 24 May 1882, and during the season as Elsa, 27 May, Elizabeth, 3 June, and Eva, 7 June. She reappeared in London at the Albert Hall on the concert production of 'Parsifal', 10 and 15 Nov. 1884, at a Richter concert in 1886 and at the Bristol Festival of 1896.

She possessed a voice of extraordinary compass, with deep and powerful notes in the lower register, and was an admirable actress, being especially successful in Wagner's operas.

A. C.

MALVEZZI, Cristofano (b. Lucca, 27 July 1547; d. Florence, 25 Dec. 1597).

Italian composer and musical editor. He was, in 1571, a canon at the church of San Lorenzo at Florence and on the death of Francesco Corteccia succeeded him as maestro di cappella to the Grand Duke of Tuscany.

He is known chiefly as the editor of a collection of dramatic intermezzi which were performed on the occasion of the marriage of the Grand Duke Ferdinand with Christina of Lorraine in 1589. The work was published in fourteen partbooks for voices and instruments under the title of:

Intermedii et concerti, fatti per la commedia rappresentata in Firenze nelle nozze del . . . Ferdinando Medici e Madama Christiana di Lorena . . . [Venice, 1591].

It is remarkable as a foreshadowing of the attempts made, a few years later, towards the creation of a proper dramatic music by means of vocal monody with instrumental accompaniment. It is not more than a foreshadowing, however, for the pieces are all written in a simple madrigal style for 3, 4, 5, 6 and 8 voices with dialoghi for 6 to 15 voices. The instruments employed are chiefly lutes and viols of different kinds with trombones and organ. Only in the larger pieces are all the instruments employed with the voices.

Besides the editor himself the composers represented are Luca Marenzio, Jacopo Peri, Emilio de' Cavalieri and Giovanni Bardi, the three latter becoming afterwards the creators of the later monodic style. The piece composed by Marenzio is entitled 'Il combattimento d' Apolline col serpente'. From this a madrigal chorus for four voices, 'O valoroso Dio', is reprinted by Kiesewetter¹, who also gives three other pieces by Peri, Cavalieri and Archilei, which, though written in the simplest four-part counterpoint, were sung by one voice with one or two instruments playing the other parts.

Other works by Malvezzi are a book of madrigals for 5 voices (Venice, 1583) and one for 6 (Venice, 1584), also a book of Ricerari for 4 voices (1577). A canzona by him transcribed from Schmid's organ-tableture book (1607) is given by Ritter.²

J. R. M.
Malybrok-Stieler, Ottilie. See Dvořák (4 songs).

MÄLZEL. See MAELZEL.

Mameli, Giuseppe. See Verdi ('Suona la tromba', cantata).

MAMO-BORGHI, Erminia. See BORGHI (A.).

MANARA, Francesco (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-century composer. He was ducal musician at the court of Ferrara and (according to Fétis) singer at Sant' Antonio, Padua, between c. 1548 and 1591. He composed 4 books of madrigals for 4 voices, 1 book of madrigals for 6 voices, psalms, vespers, etc.

* E. v. d. s.

MANCHESTER. In the 15th century Manchester was a small town clustered round the Church of Saint Mary, Saint Denys and Saint George. In 1422 the Church was collegiate by Thomas, Bishop of Durham, under the gift from Thomas de la Warre, and provision was made in the foundation for singing-men. In 1578, when Elizabeth I dissolved the foundation and granted a new charter, the musicians and singing-boys were again provided for and a similar state of affairs applied when Charles I renewed the charter in

¹ In 'Schicksale und Beschaffenheit des weltlichen Gesanges' (1841).

² 'Geschichte des Orgelspiels', No. 9.

1638. Then the music of the Church deteriorated until Nicholas Stratford, afterwards Bishop of Chester, went to Manchester as warden in 1667 and resuscitated it. The point of recording these matters is that where professional musicians are to be found we may be sure that some form of organized music-making exists: there is, for example, the case of the Oldham singers who travelled to Manchester in 1696 to sing to the Father Smith organ in the Collegiate Church.

On the secular side the records are even more scanty, but the Manchester Court Lect Records of 1563 give the number of town waits as two and later mention that the band was increased to four.

The first known concerts date from 1744. It has been maintained that they were instituted as a secret meeting-place for the underground Jacobitism of the district, and certainly among the list of subscribers may be found many names that were to become historically associated with the rebellion of the following year. But for the most part the subscribers were drawn from the leisured and monied classes, whose aim was centred in culture. The subscription of five shillings had been collected from 165 persons when the concerts began on 2 Nov. 1744. Six concerts were given during the first quarter, and some of the items of expenditure are revealing in the estimation of comparative values. The performers received anything from half a guinea to one and a half guineas; tickets and advertisements for the first concerts cost 5s. 6d.; candles cost 5s. 4d.; the door-keeper's wages amounted to 3s. 6d. "Accidental disbursements" figure several times at charges of 2d. to 1s. 4d., and a "drink to porter" was 6d. The use of a harpsichord was perhaps not unduly heavy at one guinea for the quarter, but tuning could be reckoned among the more remunerative professions at 15s. The room was hired at 5s. per night.

The number of subscribers increased to 181 for the second quarter and then, for the third, was reduced by nearly one hundred — the result of the rebellion which set friend against friend and made public assemblies difficult. Fees were reduced, but in spite of this a loss of 8s. 5d. ensued, to offset the previous surplus of £6:6:11. The fourth quarter, beginning on 3 Sept. 1745, indicates returning interest and a different system: instead of a direct subscription "season" tickets were sold to the number of 131.

Some music was bought in the early days, obviously to become the property of the subscribers. Forty-eight overtures by Handel cost £2:7:0, the concertos of Corelli were 15s., with another 15s. for the binding, while from the surplus of the second quarter Geminiani's concertos and the binding thereof cost £2:17:0. As may be expected this was the music largely drawn upon for the programmes, but other eminent living composers were also included. The programme of the first concert is a fair sample of the "musick's" structure:

1st Act: Overture to 'Otto'; Song; German flute Concerto; Song; First of Tassarini; Third Sonata, first set of Corelli. 2nd Act: Second Concerto of Corelli; Lesson upon the harpsichord; Song; Second Sonata, second set of Corelli; Solo, German flute; Third of Tassarini.

Among the other composers subsequently called upon were Vivaldi, Hasse, John Humphreys (five concertos and a sonata), Arne and Felton.

The last concert of which any record survives was on 20 Aug. 1745, but a manuscript list of subscribers for Dec. of that year shows the amount of collected moneys to be 102 guineas. Although there is no account available of the subsequent course of these concerts it is possible that they continued and formed the parent body for the Gentlemen's Concerts. The orchestra would be mainly amateur — the ripieno strings of the concerto grosso? — with usually three professionals and a harpsichordist.

In 1753 the first regular theatre was erected in the town. Theatrical performances were on sufferance only and, to cover any possible legal disability, were advertised as "concerts", with the dramatic shows thrown in gratis. One from 1760 will illustrate the point: the concert, "to begin at 6. o'clock in the evening, to whatever company may happen to be in the house", was in six parts and, between, for the further amusement of the ladies and gentlemen, will be presented gratis, a tragedy called 'Theodosius, or The Force of Love', all the characters exhibited by persons without hire, gain, or reward; to which will be added a farce. . . .

In 1775 the first Theatre Royal, legalized by act of Parliament, was able to perform plays without subterfuge; but by that time music was again independent of the theatre's "vicarious" support, for the Gentlemen's Concerts were now firmly established. Musical festivals came on the Manchester scene in 1777 with a three days' affair, others following at irregular intervals; notably those of 1828 — a truly magnificent ceremony of civic dimensions — and 1836, at which Malibran died. To some degree these appear to have been backed by the Gentlemen's Concerts, which had been established in 1770 and had the unique distinction of running in unbroken succession until 1920.

The founding of the Gentlemen's Concerts was a very important event, in spite of the fact that the original orchestra consisted of twenty-four amateur flautists¹, since it eventually resulted in the formation of the Hallé Orchestra.

¹ "It is a little singular that all the original founders of the Concerts were performers on the flute! . . . and it was some months . . . before it was joined by a performer on the violin. A taste for music has since that period rapidly increased. . . . It was the first amateur Concert in the kingdom" (Aston, 'Manchester Guide', 1804).

The Gentlemen's Concerts hall merited a description in the 'Encyclopaedia Britannica', which was quoted in the preface to the Manchester Directory of 1794: "An elegant building capacious enough to accommodate twelve hundred persons". The foundation stone was laid in 1775, and when the hall was opened two years later it was the earliest place in northern England specifically devoted to concert-giving. The "season" consisted of twelve concerts, six miscellaneous and six choral, at a cost of four guineas, but the activities were greatly increased by private concerts, every Tuesday evening, one of these each month being preserved for practice and rehearsal for the public concerts. The Society flourished and migration to more commodious premises followed in 1831. This building was demolished to make room for the Midland Hotel, but provision was made in the sale of the site for a concert-room to be built inside the hotel and reserved for the use of the Society.

The musical trend of these concerts probably reflects that of England in general, with their early insistence on Handel and the Italian string composers and the swing towards the Austrian and the German composers after the turn of the century. Mozart and Haydn figure frequently in the programmes and Beethoven becomes increasingly prominent: in 1806 a 'Grand Sinfonia' by Beethoven was announced — at a time when only his first three symphonies had been composed.

It must be remembered that at the time Manchester was little more than a small town, under the dominance of the Lord of the Manor, Sir Oswald Mosley, the shadow of its inlying dusty streets that were to come not even projected on the smiling green meadows — ten minutes' walk in any direction would lead into the fields. Industrialism was just tentatively grasping for its stranglehold. The streets were ill-paved and lighted only with guttering torches and the ghostly glow of lanthorns. The leaven of the French Revolution was fermenting the spirit of tolerance that a gradual acceptance of the "new order" (a new king and a foreign dynasty) had invoked. In the circumstances it may readily be perceived that the Gentlemen's Concerts were in the nature of a meeting-place for the privileged, from which the turbulent reforming elements were rigidly excluded — many years were to elapse before the working classes had leisure, opportunity or culture enough to take kindly to the orchestra. In 1800 the country was on the verge of famine. For another fifteen years the Napoleonic wars were a constant menace and drain on the national resources. A riot in 1812 wrecked the Manchester Exchange. But through it all the concerts went serenely forward. Surely only a great love of music — apart from the quality we now call "escapism" — could have ensured this continuity. And, still more remarkable, taste and appreciation were quietly progressive.

Much has been written to the effect that it was the influx of German merchants, brought by the cotton trade, that made Manchester musical. But in these early beginnings there is no particle of evidence to support the view. The subscribers were natives of Manchester and the surrounding districts, the performers were mainly English, as was the whole foundation. The demand for tickets was sustained and denoted a wide interest: a circular letter in 1807 deals with the impossibility of increasing the number of admissions since the concert-hall could not then be enlarged. True, much of the music performed was from what is loosely called the "German school" (although there are few real Germans in it), but that was then the most flourishing and active in the whole world. Nevertheless, the whole of the then available music had its claims considered.

In 1819, the stress of the Napoleonic wars past, a more public kind of subscription concert was organized in the winter season and had at least two years of success: it seems likely that this was an offshoot of the Gentlemen's Concerts and that the same orchestra was employed for both series, but the Exchange Rooms were used and not the concert-hall.

The year 1850, after eighty flourishing years, with never a check in its prosperous onward march, appears to be a reasonable time to review the accomplishments of this remarkable "institution", as its directors were fond of calling it. Manchester had then reached the point when its population was approximately nearly one-half of its present numbers: the city had expanded but had not yet begun to sprawl. It had settled down to civic dignity; education was slowly and painfully becoming a factor in social progress. The effects of the latest French Revolution, 1848, were less apparent economically than the "hungry forties", then being relegated to the hinterland of unpleasant memories, and although London was filled with French musicians, by race and adoption, Manchester could perceive only a glimpse of the cultural blessing that had descended upon it.

Manchester was lucky to escape the full force of the all-pervading Italian opera of the eighteenth century in London, but it could not entirely get away from the vogue of Handel and the Hanoverian patronage of German music. Later, to spread the blight still farther on native creative — not executive — music, another factor was allied to court encouragement to aid the encroachment: commercial immigration — the influx of foreigners to exploit the rich markets of northern England. Manchester was again fortunate in retaining so many of its own special characteristics at first. By 1850, however, the relentless pressure was apparently breaching the wall of subconscious resistance — it would be too much to suggest that it was ever conscious. Albert, the Prince Consort, a great music-lover and a mild composer, was adding the weight of his prestige to the fairly considerable German colonies, who were forming singing-societies (the Bradford Liedertafel was founded in 1846 and for some time gave an annual concert in conjunction with the Manchester Liedertafel), although it is doubtful if they had any artistic worth at first. The Schiller-Anstalt was instituted as a centenary tribute to the poet in 1859 and furnished the Manchester Liedertafel with headquarters, but its own chamber concerts were not organized before 1886.

There were other considerations at work: music was at last being brought into the consciousness of the working classes. Vocal music had been gaining ground since the formation of classes in the Mechanics' Institute in 1835. The Lyceum, an offshoot, carried the notion farther and gave "concerts of a superior character", vocal and instrumental, as well as leading to the formation of the Popular Choral Society. Mainzer was in Manchester, developing his scheme of "Singing for the Million" from about 1842. But this activity needed room, a building capable of housing performers and a large audience. And this it did not have until the Free Trade Hall was built.

The Free Trade Hall was a wooden pavilion at first, but was replaced by a brick building after three years. Six months after the brick building was opened John Hullah led 1500 performers in a mammoth "concert" by the Lancashire and Cheshire Workmen's Singing Classes (10 June 1843). Concerts were also organized by the Lancashire and Cheshire Philharmonic Institute, with headquarters in Manchester, after 1845, while a lengthy series of "Music for the People" concerts began in 1848. The more exclusive Gentlemen's Glee Club was founded in 1830, to become a war casualty in 1939. The report of the third annual meeting of the Lancashire and Cheshire Philharmonic Institute, 7 July 1845, makes clear the idea behind its concerts: it was to rescue music from the gin-shops, the proprietors of which were using it as a bait for custom. As far as the people in general were concerned orchestral music was a dead letter — the brass band, which had made tremendous strides from 1845 onwards, was the working man's idea of instrumental music. Where orchestral instruments were practised it was almost entirely with the thought of accompaniments to oratorios.

The hopeful outlook induced by the turn of the century must have affected the directors of the concert-hall. As far as music went there was no conservatism: all the best composers were known and loved. But there was dissatisfaction with the orchestra. Hitherto the functions of leader and conductor had been combined; now it was felt that a permanent conductor should be appointed, who would also undertake the general management, in addition to the leader. Hallé was appointed in Nov. 1849 and began his duties on 1 Jan. 1850. Energetically he set about the task of reorganization. Some players were retained, some discarded, and the vacancies were filled through London auditions. By Mar. there was a new orchestra of forty, with salaries ranging from £10 to £42, Hallé himself receiving £120 per annum, which was later increased to £150 "in consideration of his playing a solo or taking part in concerted pieces". The Society at this time was predominantly Mancunian, but shortly afterwards the first German, Salis Schwabe (who entertained Chopin in Manchester in 1848), was appointed to the Committee.

A few years later one of the greatest exhibitions of art treasures the world has known was held in Manchester. That the music to accompany the ceremonies and to embellish the moments of relaxation might be worthy of the exhibition, Hallé was invited to form an orchestra and conduct it. The Gentlemen's Concerts' orchestra was the nucleus of this new band, but it was strengthened by the inclusion of international instrumentalists. Immediately recognized as a notable achievement, the orchestral playing impressed all who heard it to such an extent that Hallé was loath to relinquish the band at the termination of the Exhibition. He therefore took over the responsibility and decided to give a series of public orchestral concerts. The first was on 30 Jan. 1858, in the Free Trade Hall. This was the beginning of the Hallé Orchestra, now the oldest permanent orchestra in Britain and about the fourth oldest in the world.

The orchestra was Hallé's private property, and the concerts were run by him at his own risk — the profits of the first series of sixteen were half a crown, presented to him by his manager in the shape of ten bright new three-penny pieces. Apart from a high standard of performance and a constantly improving type of work, Hallé instituted the principle of a proportion of cheap seats (1s.) and so invited the masses, apart from the classes, to orchestral concerts. His policy was eminently successful, and when he died in 1895 the Hallé concerts had become a national institution.

After three years under the jurisdiction of three private guarantors, Gustav Behrens, Henry Simon and James Forsyth, the Hallé Concerts' Society was formed in 1898 and the following year the greatest conductor of his day, Hans Richter, came from Vienna to take control until 1911. Richter enhanced the technique of the orchestra's ensemble playing, left his fingerprints on the classical tradition, popularized Richard Strauss (then a progressive and advanced young modernist) and established Elgar's reputation — Elgar was among the first of modern English composers to receive sympathetic treatment from a continental conductor.

Richter's retirement left Michael Balling in charge, until 1914, but Balling did little more than emphasize Richter's teaching, and it was left to Sir Thomas Beecham, during the fateful years of the first world war, to guide both orchestra and audiences in a new and brilliantly successful direction — towards modern music and the Russian national school. After the war Beecham gradually retired and his place was eventually taken by Sir Hamilton Harty in 1920. Harty acknowledged that the orchestra was first-rate when he was appointed permanent conductor and proceeded to enlarge on Beecham's foundations. It was not long before Harty, emulating Hallé's example, took the orchestra to London. He retired in 1933, and from a group of guest conductors sprang (Sir) Malcolm Sargent, who carried on through those early dark days of the second world war when the Hallé lost its "home", the Free Trade Hall and had to find refuge in cinemas and theatres.

The war did not cause any decline in scope: on the contrary, a new demand arose for the consolations of good music, and vast new audiences were created. The orchestra was required to play in many places that had not hitherto heard a symphony concert. Homeless, driven from the theatre that had housed it for a space after the destruction of the Free Trade Hall, compelled to give its weekly concerts in the outskirts of the city, harassed by air-raids, hampered by the black-out regulations, depleted by the withdrawal of experienced players to serve in the forces, the orchestra still flourished and augmented its activities. It found its best venue, one capable of holding the vast new audiences, in the arena of the circus at Belle Vue, and even the restricted transport did not keep crowds from travelling miles on cold, wet, miserable days to hear the finest music.

In 1943 the demands for the services of the orchestra became even more insistent, and reorganization was inevitable and urgent. Philip Godlee, the chairman, sent a cable to (Sir) John Barbirolli, at that time conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society, inviting him to return to England and to take charge. Barbirolli's response was immediate: he had been longing to come back to the land of his birth and to do something to make the war-shattered conditions more bearable.

Barbirolli's first acquaintance with the orchestra was in 1934, when, at the age of thirty-four, he arrived in Manchester to conduct as deputy for the sick Sir Edward Elgar. The tremendous impression created by his ardent and vivid personality resulted in several more visits before he left England for New York the following year. The reorganization of the orchestra split it into two parts, one, the greater, portion going to the B.B.C. Northern, the other remaining with the Hallé. In consequence Barbirolli came to an orchestra made up to strength with many untried players. He achieved a modern miracle. Within an amazingly short space of time a perfectly co-ordinated body arose, capable of performing the most difficult works in a completely satisfying manner.

One highly important outcome of the reorganization was the issue of a yearly contract to the players, assuring them of an adequate salary and employment independent of outside engagements during the summer. After a short period on a full-time basis the first world war had caused a reversion to the old practice of guaranteeing a season of approximately seventy concerts, with a fixed fee for each individual concert and rehearsal. Now, with the prospect of something like two hundred concerts yearly, the Committee thought the time ripe for a truly permanent orchestra. Strangely enough, the first move came from without the city. Professor F. H. Shera, on behalf of the Sheffield Philharmonic Society, propounded a scheme at the end of 1942 to use the Hallé Orchestra to establish regular symphony concerts, if possible municipally supported, in Manchester, Sheffield, Bradford and Leeds. The overriding claims of a parochial patriotism almost at once ruled out Leeds, while Bradford could only take a strictly limited number of concerts with safety. And so it was left to Manchester and Sheffield to work out a scheme. Municipal support was not forthcoming at the time but, by country-wide tours and short series of concerts in other Lancashire and Yorkshire towns the Orchestra was made virtually self-supporting, at a cost, however, of considerable strain on the players. Eventually, from grants by the Arts Council, the Manchester Corporation and several other municipalities, it has been possible to reduce the excessive number of concerts; but the financial position is still, in 1953, not entirely satisfactory. In recent years the Hallé Orchestra has made several foreign tours, with a great measure of artistic success and critical acclaim.

Leonard F. Behrens, a son of Gustav Behrens, is the present chairman of the Hallé. Kenneth E. Crickmore, formerly the director of the Sheffield Philharmonic Society, was appointed general manager in 1951. There was then a deficit of some £17,000. By energetic reorganization Crickmore has reduced this to £3000 and has induced the Corporation (1952) to grant a subsidy of £9000 for the next three years. He has also organized highly successful "Industrial" concerts with over 200 firms backing the venture: the programmes which are attracting a new type of enthusiastic audiences are those of the normal symphony concert, without novelties. George Weldon, who was appointed as the Society's associate conductor in 1952 — to relieve Sir John Barbirolli in some of the heavy commitments — is the usual conductor.

Philip Godlee, the former Chairman of the Hallé, the Tuesday Midday Concerts, the Manchester Chamber Concerts' Societies and several other music-making organizations, who died in 1952, was a business man with a strange disregard for money-making. He was a string player of attainment who, with his children, could put on a very capable string quintet. His was the vision that guided the Society through its last difficulty.

Side by side with the Orchestra the Hallé Choir has also had its vicissitudes. Hallé was a great lover of vocal music — perhaps he inherited it from Manchester — and the number of choral concerts in a season would roughly balance the number of instrumental. For his earliest concerts he used the ready-made Manchester Choral Society, founded in 1830, but after a time formed his own choir and conducted it until he found it too much for him and handed it into the charge of his friend Edward Hecht. Richter reduced the number of choral concerts to six in the season, but after the first world war the interest had begun to wane and Harty was content to give only two or three annually. The second world war caused an almost total eclipse, except for the Christmas 'Messiah' performances, but through the efforts of Arthur Gregson and the new chorus master, Herbert Bardgett, by 1945 the choir had been rebuilt into a remarkably efficient force of 250 voices. Among the famous chorus masters in the past were R. H. Wilson, Harold Dawber and Dr. Herman Brearly.

The reopening of the Free Trade Hall after restoration, with an interior entirely rebuilt inside the old façade, in Nov. 1951, gave back to the Orchestra its traditional home. The hall seats approximately 2600 and is excellent acoustically. It is the property of the Manchester Corporation, an all-purpose hall, and thus available generally for concerts outside the Hallé series. The Education Authority of the city finances regular concerts there by the Hallé Orchestra conducted by Arthur Percival, the deputy leader, to children of secondary-school age.

The Royal Manchester College of Music was founded in 1893, with some eighty students who were required to take a full and co-ordinated course of study. Sir Charles Hallé was the first principal. By the second year 140 students were enrolled. In 1948 extensions with additional class-rooms were opened. In 1923 the College was incorporated by royal charter, although the title of "Royal" has dated from the inception and was conferred by Queen Victoria. When Hallé died in 1895 Adolph Brodsky was appointed principal, and he held the post until his death in 1929, when R. J. Forbes, a former student and professor, took up the reins. He retired in 1953. The College has always worked in close co-operation with the Victoria University of Manchester; the Vice-Chancellor of the University, Sir John Stopford, is Chairman of the College Council. The University has no chair of music, but the Music Department is under the control of the Reader in Music, Humphrey Procter-Gregg, one full-time and one assistant lecturer.

Manchester has three prominent amateur orchestras, one of them, the Gorton Philharmonic Society, established as long ago as 1854. It holds weekly open rehearsals on Sunday mornings which have a large public. Many professionals (theatre musicians anxious to play worth-while music) play in an amateur capacity under the direction of Oswald E. Wallis. Occasional full-scale concerts are given in the King's Hall, Belle Vue. The Beethoven Society, conductor C. J. Lockett, was founded in 1883 and goes steadily on its course, while the College of Adult Education Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Cecil H. Cohen, gives ambitious concerts with its avowed object of enabling "ordinary people in non-musical occupations to gain experience in ensemble playing, to study and appreciate great works and so be able to listen to famous orchestras with a deeper and fuller understanding". To supplement these is the professional Manchester (Ladies) String Orchestra, chairman Mrs. J. Russell Scott, conductor Clarice Dunington, which gives concerts in Manchester and anywhere within a radius of 150 miles.

Chamber music, always the preserve of the musically sophisticated, has had its intermittent periods of prosperity. Hallé, in addition to his numerous other musical activities, was early in the field. Brodsky founded his famous Quartet in 1895: its first public appearance was in the Schiller-Anstalt on 11 Nov., followed by three "informal" concerts in the Royal Manchester College of Music; but it was fully launched in Dec. 1896 and thereafter gave six successful concerts every season for many years, devoting the profits to the Sustentation Fund of the College. Brodsky's influence was apparent in his pupils, and when Arthur Catterall in turn formed his own Quartet it included two other Brodsky pupils, John Bridge and Frank Park. Leonard Hirsch, also taught by Brodsky, formed a fine Quartet after Catterall left for London, and when the B.B.C. attracted Hirsch in turn to London, Henry Holst, then professor of the violin at the College, took over the Quartet. The mantle has now fallen on the shoulders of Laurance Turner, the leader of the Hallé Orchestra, a former member of the Yorkshire String Quartet (which soon adopted his name as the title), and the re-formed Catterall Quartet (in London). The present Quartet (the third to bear his name) was re-constituted in 1940, when he was appointed leader of the Hallé and B.B.C. Northern Orchestras, and ever since has been gaining ground with its finely adjusted and sensitive playing, often augmented by Hallé principals for chamber works outside the string quartet. Teams of international repute are brought to the city by the Manchester Chamber Concerts Society (1936) and the six yearly concerts have proved so successful that they are now given in the more capacious Lesser Free Trade Hall instead of the Library Theatre because of the demand for seats.

The Tuesday Midday Concerts were started in 1916 to combat war strain by providing music during the lunch hour. Their success ensured continuance after the war and in 1922 they were put on a permanent footing, with Edward Isaacs as director. The idea now was to provide a platform for young artists of merit as well as established artists. Many first performances of important solo and chamber works have also been given. There are about thirty concerts each year.

Since the death of Brand Lane there has been no organized series of celebrity concerts in the city, but the chorus he founded in 1880, to fill in the spots on his "star" programmes, is still in existence under the name of the Manchester Philharmonic Society. For a time Lane ran his own orchestra, but this turned out to be in effect the London Queen's Hall Orchestra with Sir Henry J. Wood conducting. Later he utilized the Hallé, but still kept Wood as conductor.

The Manchester Contemporary Music Centre was formed out of the remnants of the British Music Society and still survives; it is content mainly with private meetings at which new works are performed, but, whenever funds permit, it launches into concerts. The performers are drawn from the members, many of whom are professionals.

The Town Hall organ is a fine Cavallé-Coll and there is also a very good Henry Willis in the Whitworth Hall of the Victoria University. Recitals are sporadic, but the organ in the College of Technology is frequently played to lunch-time audiences.

Particulars of the Henry Watson Music Library will be found elsewhere.¹ J. F. R.

¹ See LIBRARIES: GREAT BRITAIN (MANCHESTER).

ANCHICOURT, Pierre de (b. Béthune, Ar. Pas, c. 1510; d. Madrid, 5 Oct. 1564).

Flemish composer. He became a chorister at Arras Cathedral in 1525 and in 1539 was appointed choirmaster of the collegiate chapel at Tournai. In 1545 he filled the same post at the cathedral there and is said to have been chapel master at Antwerp Cathedral in 1557-1560. In the latter year he went to Madrid as maestro de capilla in the royal chapel, in succession to Nicolas Payen, who had died there in 1559.

Manchicourt's works were numerous and enjoyed a great reputation, beginning to appear as early as 1532 and continuing after his death until 1580. The first were two masses, 'Deus in adjutorium' and 'Surge et illumina', which appeared in Paris in the first two volumes of Attaignant's collection of 1532. The same printer published two others, 'C'est une dure départie' and 'Povre cœur', in 1546. The same year Susato of Antwerp included two masses in his 3-volume collection, 'Guidés vous que Dieu' and 'Gris et terne'. In 1556 Duchemin of Paris brought out the mass 'Quo obiti dilectus tuus'. Manchicourt wrote at least 12 other masses as well as numerous motets, published in collections by Moderne, Gardano and Attaignant. He also wrote over 50 madrigals and chansons, published in various collections between 1533 and 1555.

Some volumes contain works exclusively or almost exclusively by Manchicourt; a book of motets, nineteen in all, a 4-6, was published by Attaignant in 1539, another book of motets containing 14 a 5-6 was published by Phalèse at Louvain in 1554. This latter volume was dedicated by Manchicourt to Antoine Perrenot, Bishop of Arras, known afterwards as Cardinal Granvelle, and probably it was to him that the composer owed a canonry at Arras. In 1545 Susato of Antwerp published a book of 29 chansons by Manchicourt. One of these, 'Sortez mes pleurs', has been reprinted in Commer's 'Collectio', Vol. XII. Eitner speaks in the highest terms of a motet, 'Vidi Speciosam', a 8, taken from the 'Thesaurus' of Montanus and Neuber (1564).

J. R. M., rev.

MANCINELLI, Luigi (b. Orvieto, 5 Feb. 1848; d. Rome, 2 Feb. 1921).

Italian violoncellist, conductor and composer. At the age of twelve he went to Florence to be a pupil of Sbolci. He showed great aptitude for the cello and his progress was very rapid. His professional career began at Florence, where he was for a time one of the first cellists in the orchestra of the Teatro della Pergola. He was engaged in the same capacity at the Teatro Apollo in Rome in 1874, when this theatre, by unexpected circumstances, was left without a conductor. The impresario

Jacovacci, thought of trying the ability of his first violoncellist, of whom he had heard favourable reports; and so Mancinelli was suddenly raised from the ranks to appear as a conductor. 'Aida' was the first opera conducted by him.

In the following year Mancinelli was engaged to be the musical director at Jesi during the festivities of Spontini's centenary. On this occasion he revived Spontini's 'La Vestale', and he was re-engaged for the direction of the orchestra of the Apollo. In 1876 he had his first success as a composer with his intermezzi to 'Messalina', a drama by Pietro Cossa. The following year he wrote intermezzi to the 'Cleopatra' of the same author.

Mancinelli left Rome in 1881 for Bologna, where he was engaged to be the Principal of the Liceo Musicale and at the same time conductor of the Teatro Comunale and maestro di cappella of San Petronio. During his stay there he composed two masses and many other sacred pieces, introduced several improvements at the Liceo, organized a symphony and quartet society, and was the first to acquaint the Bolognese with vocal and instrumental music by foreign composers. On 2 Oct. 1884 he gave the first performance at the Teatro Comunale of his opera 'Isora di Provenza', which was well received. The libretto, by Angelo Zanardini, was based on Victor Hugo's 'La Légende des siècles'.

After five years Mancinelli left Bologna, attracted, perhaps, to other countries by the prospect of pecuniary improvement in his position. During the season of 1886 he visited London and gave a concert, at which he conducted classical works and some of his own compositions. The success of this concert brought him an invitation to write an oratorio for the next Norwich Festival and the engagement to conduct the Italian Opera during the Jubilee season at Drury Lane Theatre. His powers as a conductor received full recognition, and his oratorio 'Isaías', performed at Norwich in Oct. 1887, was unanimously praised. He was re-engaged by Harris as conductor for the season of 1888 at Covent Garden and revisited London annually many times. His opera 'Ero e Leandro', set to Boito's libretto first composed by Bottesini (1879), was first performed in concert form at the Norwich Festival on 8 Oct. 1896 and presented on the stage in Madrid on 30 Nov. 1897 and in London, at Covent Garden, on 11 July 1898.

From 1888 to 1895 Mancinelli held the place of musical director and conductor at the Theatre Royal of Madrid. He was conductor of the operatic enterprises carried on by Harris at the Metropolitan Opera, New York.

His third important opera was 'Paolo e Francesca' (libretto based on Dante by Arturo Colautti), produced at Bologna on 11 Nov. 1907. An earlier opera had been 'Tizianello', produced at the Teatro Nazionale in Rome on 20 June 1895, and a later one, 'Il sogno di una notte d'estate' (libretto by Fausto Salvatori, based on Shakespeare), written in 1917, was posthumously published in 1922. It was never produced, but an orchestral fragment was performed. He also wrote the symphonic poems with chorus, 'Frata Sole' (1918) and 'Giuliano l'apostata' (1920) to accompany films of the same titles. His cantata 'Saint Agnes' was given at the Norwich Festival of 1905.

F. R. (ii), adds.

BIBL.—OREFICE, G., 'Luigi Mancinelli' (Rome, 1921).

MANCINI, Francesco (b. Naples, 1679; d. Naples, 11 June 1739).

Italian composer. He was a pupil at the Conservatorio di San Loreto at Naples and afterwards a teacher there and its principal master in 1728. He composed at least twenty operas for performance at Naples, some oratorios and other works, and his reputation in Italy was very high.

Mancini has some importance in English musical history by the production of his opera 'Idaspe fedele' ('Hydaspes') at the Haymarket on 23 Mar. 1710.¹ It followed the anonymous 'Almahide', performed in the Jan. of the same year. These two were the first operas to be sung wholly in Italian in London, earlier works, in which English and Italian singers appeared, being sung in a mixture of both languages.

'Idaspe' was brought on the stage by Nicolini, and the libretto, probably by Giovanni Pietro Candi, was dedicated to the Marquis of Kent, then Lord Chamberlain. It was lavishly staged, and Valentini and some other Italians appeared in it next to Nicolini, as well as Marguerite de l'Épine, who afterwards married Pepusch.

One of the features of the piece was a combat between Nicolini and a sham lion, which is the subject of Addison's amusing satire in No. 13 of 'The Spectator', published nearly a year after the first performance, in the issue dated 15-26 Mar. 1711; but as the work was repeated until 1716 and had forty-six performances, there is no reason to suppose that Addison must have been present at the actual production.

The songs in 'Idaspe' were published in a folio volume by Walsh & Hare soon after the production of the opera. A parody, 'Harlequin-Hydaspes, or The Greshamite', "a Mock-Opera in 3 acts" by Mrs. Aubert, was given at the Lincoln's Inn Fields Theatre on 27 May 1719, with music partly from 'Idaspe' and partly from other contemporary operas heard in London.

F. K., rev. A. L.

¹ Burney's date, 23 May, is clearly a misprint.

MANCINI, Giambattista (b. Ascoli, 1716; d. Vienna, 4 Jan. 1800).

Italian singing-master. He was a pupil of Bernacchi and Martini. He became a famous teacher of singing and settled in Vienna about 1760 as singing-master to the imperial princesses. He produced a book on the art of fioritura singing called 'Pensieri e riflessioni pratiche sopra il canto figurato' (1774), which was twice translated into French. His estimate of Farinelli's art is of interest.¹

H. C. C.

MANCINUS (actually Mencken), Thomas (b. Schwerin, 1550; d. Wolfenbüttel, c. 1620?).

German composer. He was cantor of the cathedral school at Schwerin from 1572 to 1578, in 1584 became a member of the chapel of the Duke of Brunswick at Wolfenbüttel and in 1587 was appointed Kapellmeister there. He was afterwards employed as librarian to the duke.

Mancinus is the composer of two simple settings of the Passion according to St. Matthew and St. John, first published in 1620 and since reprinted in Schöberlein's 'Schatz des liturgischen Gesanges'. With the exception of a book of secular German songs for 4 and 5 voices his other works are mostly occasional compositions for weddings and funerals, in the form of motets and madrigals, with Latin or German words.

J. R. M.

BIBL.—FLECHSIG, W., 'Thomas Mancinus, der Vorgänger von Praetorius im Wolfenbütteler Kapellmeisteramt, mit neuen Beiträgen zur Geschichte der Wolfenbütteler Hofkapelle im 16. Jahrhundert' (Wolfenbüttel, 1932).

MANDIKIAN, Arda (b. Smyrna, ?).

Greek soprano singer. She studied at the Athens Conservatory under Elvira de Hidalgo and Alexandra Trianti. Since 1942 she has given many recitals in Athens, devoting particular attention to the extant fragments of ancient Greek music. She first visited England in 1948, and in a programme given at Morley College in the following year sang all six of the ancient Greek hymns which have survived in complete form. Scholarly considerations apart, these re-creations of a forgotten musical language had an unusually convincing sound; the programme aroused wide interest and was repeated in many universities and for the B.B.C. Third Programme.

Arda Mandikian has also sung for the B.B.C. in Kalomiris's 'Shadowy Waters' (a Greek opera based on Yeats's play). She gave a distinguished performance as Dido in the Oxford University Opera Club's production of Berlioz's 'Les Troyens' in 1950, and in the following year sang for the same Club the principal part in the world première of Egon Wellesz's opera 'Incognita'.

D. S.-T.

MANDOLA. See MANDORE.

¹ See FARINELLI.

² Kade gives 1621.

MANDOLINE (Ital. mandolino). A small and very beautifully formed stringed instrument of the lute kind, with deeper convexity of back than the lute. It is, as its name implies, less in size than the mandola or mandora, a much scarcer instrument.³ Mandola, or mandorla, signifies "almond", and it has been supposed that the shape of the instrument has given it the name. But this cannot be accepted, since the almost universal use of the syllable "man" unchanged, or changed by phonetic variation to "ban", "pan", "tan", etc., for the first syllable of names of lute instruments from East to West, removes it to a wider etymological field.

There are two varieties of mandoline, the Neapolitan (see PLATE 70, Vol. VIII, p. 146 v, No. 2) and the Milanese; the former having four pairs of strings, the latter usually five. The Milanese mandurina is tuned:

There is one at the Victoria and Albert Museum in London, tuned:

The Milanese variety, however, is rare in comparison with the Neapolitan, the tuning of which is like that of the violin, in fifths. The lowest pair of strings is of gut, spun over with silver or copper, like a guitar first string, the next of steel also spun over; the second and first pairs are of steel only. Mahillon⁴ says that the lowest pair is of gut, the third pair of steel, the second pair of copper and the first pair of gut. Berlioz recommends that the G strings should be of gut spun with wire, the D strings of brass, the A of steel and the E of thin gut. The mandoline is played with a plectrum of tortoiseshell, whalebone, horn or ostrich-quill, more or less flexible, which is held in the right hand, the left being employed to stop the strings, for which purpose there are seventeen frets across the finger-board. The range of the instrument is two octaves and one note, from g to a". The serenade in Mozart's 'Don Giovanni', "Deh vieni", was written to be accompanied by the mandoline, and Grétry wrote a charming accompaniment for it in the serenade in 'L'Amant jaloux'. There is a song with mandoline accompaniment in Michael Arne's 'Almena' (1764). An early English publication was '18 Divertimento's for 2 Guitars or 2 Mandelins [sic].

³ For a discussion of the two different instruments confused under these names, see Curt Sachs, 'Real-Lexikon der Musikinstrumente' (Berlin, 1913), pp. 251-252.

⁴ Catalogue of the Musical Instruments in the Brussels Conservatoire, p. 245.

Properly adapted by the best Masters' (London, Oswald, c. 1750). The mandoline was first heard in England at a concert given for the benefit of Sodi (at Hickford's Rooms, London, on 25 Mar. 1713), who was announced to play "a Concerto on the Mandoline, being an Instrument admired in Rome, but never Publick here". Handel introduced the mandoline into 'Alexander Balus' produced on 9 Mar. 1748. In 1750 Sodi played solos on the mandoline in Paris, and on 17 Mar. 1766 Leoné performed on this instrument at Hickford's Rooms, London.

The mandoline is not, of course, the correct instrument for Don Juan, who would have played a bandurria, a kind of half-guitar and truly national Spanish instrument, sometimes incorrectly called a mandoline. The back of the bandurria is flat; all it has in common with the mandoline is that it is played with a plectrum of tortoiseshell, called in Spanish pua, and that it is the practice to insert a plate of the same substance in the table below the sound-hole to prevent the plectrum from scratching. The bandurria has now twelve strings tuned in pairs, though in the 17th century it had only half that number: the higher three notes of catgut, the lower of silk overspun with metal. It is tuned much more deeply than the mandoline:

The compass is in all three octaves (G# to g#').

In Spain the bandurria is not exclusively a popular instrument. A trio of two bandurrias and a guitar is an admirable combination for the performance of serious music in the open air; pieces by Falla, Albéniz, Granados, Debussy and even Domenico Scarlatti have been arranged for it, with very happy results.

Beethoven's friend Krumpholtz was a virtuoso on the mandoline, and this probably explains the fact of Beethoven's having written a piece for the instrument (Thayer, II, 49). The autograph is to be found in the volume of manuscript sketches and fragments preserved in the B.M., Add. MSS 29,801. Though entitled 'Sonatina per il mandolina [sic]', Composta da L. v. Beethoven', it is only in one movement, and was probably printed for the first time in the first edition of this Dictionary. Together with an Adagio in E♭ major for mandoline and harpsichord it is contained in the supplementary volume (series xxv) of Beethoven's works in Breitkopf & Härtel's complete edition.

The mandoline is occasionally used as an orchestral instrument, e.g. by Verdi ('Otello'), Mahler, etc., but is effective in the orchestra only if the rest of the score is reduced to the most delicate shades of tone.

A. J. H., rev., adds. J. B. T. & W. H. G. F.

BIBL.—WOLKE, KONRAD, 'Die Geschichte der Mandoline' (Berlin, 1940).

MANDORE (mandora, mandole, mandola, lutina, testudo minor). An instrument of the lute class with a rounded-back body and a short neck; a smaller and simpler lute (see PLATE 42, Vol. V, p. 432, No. 1). The name is possibly derived from the oriental word Pandoura, but is more probably due to the almond-shaped form of the body. The instrument is found as early as the 11th century and was popular with the jongleurs during the two centuries following. It does not appear to have been so much esteemed in England as the citole and gittern. It is often depicted in the hands of angelic musicians, played held across the breast. During the period of the lute's supremacy it continued to lead a parallel but humbler existence, and may be said to survive, somewhat altered, as the mandoline.

In its earliest form the mandore had four or five strings, which, like those of the lute, became paired somewhere about the middle of the 14th century. It was usually half to three-quarters the size of the normal treble lute, but its form and relative proportions show more variation than the lute's. The peg-box was nearly always a prolongation of the neck and not bent back like that of the lute. It was originally played with a quill or plectrum, but by the end of the 16th century the finger technique was also commonly used. Praetorius in 1619 confirms that a quill, one finger or several fingers could be used to pluck the strings, and he gives tunings c' g' c'' g'', g' d' g'' d' and c a c' a' c''. These tunings point to an open string-length of half to three-quarters of that of a treble lute. In addition to these tunings, the lute tuning c' f' a' d'' is also found, from the mid-16th century onwards. The smallest size of mandore was sometimes called pandurina. Praetorius says that these, also named Bandurichen, Mandoër or Mandurinichen, were in common use in France, for playing popular airs and dances, and that they could conveniently be carried under the performer's cloak. Mersenne (1636) describes the mandore as being about 1½ ft. long, with nine frets and four courses of strings. If it had more courses it became a mandore luthée—a small lute. He gives the c' g' c'' g'' tuning, and, with cordes avallées, c' g' c'' f'' and c' g' c'' c''.

Music is found in the early 17th century for a five-course instrument tuned g c' g' c'' g'' and c' f' a' d'' g'' ("the old tune of the lute"). In the following century six- and eight-course mandores were used, tuned d g c' f' a' d'' and A d g c' f' a' d' f''. Large mandores were sometimes made from old lutes, and these must have been tuned relatively lower. The pandurina returned to popularity, particularly about 1750-80, under the name Milanese mandoline, and a number of pretty specimens survive. By the early 19th century, however, the mandore had gone out of use in western Europe.

¹ See PANDORE and TAMBURA.

It is unlikely that much music for the mandore was ever written down. The music that survives is written in the French system of tablature on four to six lines. There are a few pieces among the B.M. manuscripts (Add. 31392, ff. 39b-44; Stowe 389, f. 1). A larger collection is found in the manuscript of John Skene (d. 1644) in the National Library of Scotland (Adv. MS 5. 2. 15), written for a five-course mandore and consisting of simple popular airs and dances, played with the fingers. Mandore music manuscripts used to exist (according to Wolf) at Augsburg, Berlin, Hamburg and Leipzig. Mersenne prints an 'Alcmande' in four-line tablature as an example of music for the mandore, and a Sonata for mandore and violin was printed in Vienna in 1770 ('Der musikalische Dilettante').

A fair number of instruments of all sizes survive in instrumental collections, some much decorated and inlaid. M. W. P.

MANDRAGOLA, LA (Opera). See CASTELNUOVO-TEDESCO. WAGHALTER.

MANDYCZEWSKI, Eusebius (b. Czernowitz, 18 Aug. 1857; d. Vienna, 13 July 1929).

Austrian musical scholar. The son of a Greek Orthodox priest, he studied with Nottebohm in Vienna and there laid the foundation of his profound scholarship in the masters of the Viennese school. His publications are by no means commensurate with his learning, but we owe to him the complete edition of Schubert's works, and the plan for that of Haydn's, which unfortunately broke down, but still forms the basis of that newly planned in 1949.

In 1887 Mandyczewski was appointed keeper of the archives of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde and in 1897 began his connection with the Vienna Conservatory, where he taught the history of music and of instruments, counterpoint and composition. H. C. C.

MANELLI, Francesco (b. Tivoli, 1595; d. Parma, Sept. 1667).

Italian bass singer and composer. He was a singer at Tivoli Cathedral from 1605 until 1624 and maestro di cappella there from 1627 until Jan. 1629. In 1633 he was in Rome, where his wife Maddalena sang in several operas, and about 1636 he settled at Venice, where his wife in that year collected and edited his 'Musiche varie', the only work by Manelli which has been preserved (copy at the Breslau Library). It contains cantatas, arias, can- zonette and ciaccone (one cantata is reprinted in Hugo Riemann's 'Kantatenfrühling', 1912). About 1645 Manelli went to Parma, where he spent the last years of his life in the service of the Duke Ranuccio II.

Although none of Manelli's works for the stage has survived, it is as a composer of operas that his name will be remembered, for the first public opera-house in Italy, the Teatro Tron di San Cassiano at Venice, was inaugurated with his 'Andromeda' in Feb. 1637. The libretto was written by Benedetto Ferrari and Manelli himself sang the bass parts of Nettuno and of Astarco Mago. He wrote two more operas for Venice, 'La Maga fulminata' (1638) and 'Alcate' (1642). A third one, 'Adone', which some scholars consider to be by Monteverdi, has also been attributed to him. He also wrote several for Parma, the last of which, 'Licasta', was given there in 1664.

A. L.

BIBL.—RADICIOTTI, GIUSEPPE, 'L' arte musicale in Tivoli' (Rome, 1921), containing a biography and bibliography of Manelli.

See also Ferraro (B., 2 libs.).

MANÉN, Juan (b. Barcelona, 14 Mar. 1883).

Spanish violinist and composer. He wrote the operas 'Neron y Acte' (produced at Barcelona in 1903 and performed at Leipzig, Dresden, Cologne, Wiesbaden), 'Cami del sol', produced at Brunswick in 1926 as 'Der Weg zur Sonne'; another, 'Giovanna di Napoli', was also given at Barcelona in 1903. Others works are a Symphony, a violin Concerto, caprices for violin and orchestra, and other works and transcriptions for violin. He has edited the complete works of Paganini, and is a violinist of outstanding ability.

J. B. T.

MANENTI, Giovanni Paolo (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-century composer. He was musician to the Grand Duke of Tuscany in 1574 and was still living in 1586. He composed 3 books of madrigals for 4-6 voices, a book of songs ('Li pratolini') for 5 voices and single numbers in collective volumes. E. V. D. S.

Manet, Édouard. See Chabrier (friendship).

MANFRED. For music: works based on the dramatic poem see BYRON.

Manfredi, Eustachio. See Scarlatti (1, 'Dafni', lib.).

MANFREDINA. See MONFERRINA.

MANFREDINI, Vincenzo (b. Pistoia, 22 Oct. 1737; d. St. Petersburg, 16 Aug. 1799).

Italian composer. He was the son of a musician, Francesco Maria Manfredini (1688-1748, composer of several oratorios) and the brother of the castrato singer Giuseppe Manfredini. He studied with his father and later with Perti at Bologna and with Fioroni at Milan. Together with his brother he went to Russia in 1758, where he succeeded Raupach as court composer. Displaced by Galuppi, he returned to Italy in 1769, lived at Bologna (where he met Mozart¹) and Venice, but visited Russia once more in 1798, at the request of his former pupil, then Tsar Paul I.

Manfredini's works comprise several operas, performed at St. Petersburg ('Semiramide', 'L' Olimpiade', 'Carlo Magno' etc.), Bologna ('Armida') and Venice ('Arteserse'); several cantatas, a Requiem for the Tsaritsa Elisabeth, ballets and harpsichord sonatas; also some theoretical works, such as 'Regole armoniche . . .', 1775², and 'Difesa della musica moderna', 1788 (directed against Arteaga's 'Rivoluzioni del teatro musicale italiano').

A. L.

MANGEOT, André (Louis) (b. Paris, 25 Aug. 1883).

English (naturalized) violinist of French birth. Having settled in London, he made two important contributions to English musical life: he promoted concerts of chamber music in which the classics provide ballast for a large cargo of out-of-the-way music, both ancient and modern, and he edited for modern performance the comparatively little-known string music by English composers of the 17th century, including Purcell's Fantasies, in which he collaborated with Peter Warlock. His flair for programme-building is equalled by his discernment for outstanding instrumentalists from abroad whom he introduced to the British public.

The Music Society, which he founded in 1919, gave 89 concerts in the 16 years of its existence and provided Mangeot with his base of operations. In the crypt-like room of the St. John's Institute at Westminster he introduced many important works ranging from sonatas by Bax and Delius to Schoenberg's 'Pierrot lunaire' and Stravinsky's piano Concerto. The International String Quartet, also started by him in 1919, and led by him alternately with Boris Pecker, took a great share in these concerts. But it was also an instrument for giving effect to a policy of international exchange of British and foreign music and musicians. It made a point of playing the works of English composers, both old and modern, on its numerous foreign tours. In return foreign artists played at the concerts of the Music Society or introduced to London the corresponding productions of their fellow-countrymen.

In later years Mangeot pursued a policy designed to catch a wider public by instituting a series of monthly smoking concerts at Wigmore Hall, for which he revived the name of "Monday Pops" (1937).

As a violinist Mangeot has concentrated on chamber music, but at one time he played in the Queen's Hall Orchestra and at Covent Garden under Richter. He was a pupil of Marsick at the Paris Conservatoire and has done some teaching in England, notably at the Leys School, Cambridge, but his most important educational work has been as a coach to the ensemble classes at Oxford (O.U.M.C.), of which he is an honorary member, and at Cambridge (C.U.M.S.).

In 1948 a new team, the André Mangeot Quartet, was formed, with Antonia Booth, Maxwell Ward and Joan Dickson as his associates.

F. S. H.

MANGOLD. German family of musicians.

(1) August Daniel Mangold (b. Darmstadt, 25 July 1775; d. Darmstadt, 1842), violoncellist and composer. About the beginning of the 19th century he was solo cellist at the Frankfurt o/M. theatre. He toured for some time with his nephew (2) and in 1814 became solo cellist of the grand-ducal orchestra at Darmstadt with the title of Konzertmeister. He wrote solos, etc., for his instrument.

(2) Wilhelm Mangold (b. Darmstadt, 19 Nov. 1796; d. Darmstadt, 23 May 1875), violinist and composer, nephew of the preceding. He studied under Rinck and Vogler, and through the recommendation of Spontini and Méhul he was permitted to study at the Paris Conservatoire under Méhul and Cherubini in 1815-18. He was an excellent violinist, and after a tour with his uncle in Holland he became court Konzertmeister at Darmstadt in 1819 and court Kapellmeister in 1825. He composed several operas, overtures, chamber music, etc.

(3) Karl Ludwig Armand Mangold (b. Darmstadt, 8 Oct. 1813; d. Oberstdorf, Allgäu, 5 Aug. 1889), conductor and composer, brother of the preceding. He received his first musical education from his father and brother. In 1836-39 he studied at the Paris Conservatoire and in 1848 he became court musical director at Darmstadt. After being pensioned he conducted the Mozart Society from 1869 to 1873.

Mangold composed operas, oratorios, cantatas, orchestral works, etc., his chief claim to fame resting on his excellent part-songs for male voices. He wrote, independently of Wagner, an opera, 'Tanhäuser', which was produced at Darmstadt on 17 May 1846 and revived there, with a new libretto, as 'Der getreue Eckart', as late as 17 Jan. 1892. The change was probably made not only to avoid comparisons with Wagner, but also to reduce the absurdity of the original book, which ended happily with Tannhäuser's marriage.

J. A. F.-M., adds.

MANHATTAN SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

A school of music established in New York in 1918 by Dr. Janet D. Schenck, together with a self-perpetuating Board of Trustees. The school is empowered to grant both the Bachelor and Master of Music degrees. It attracts pupils from some 38 states and 22 foreign countries and has an enrolment of approximately 650 students, including a preparatory department. Harold Bauer, the pianist, was closely associated with the school from the first as music adviser, faculty member and trustee. Its present (1954) teaching-staff of seventy includes Hugh Ross, choral department; Friedrich Schorr, vocal department; Gustave Reese, musicology; Vittorio Giannini and Howard Murphy, composition and theory; Hugo Kortschak, violin; Diran Alexanian, cello. Woodwind and brass teachers are well-known members of the Philharmonic Symphony and the National Broadcasting Company orchestras. The school is housed in a modern building given by Mrs. John Hubbard, honorary president of the Board of Trustees.

¹ See Leopold Mozart's letter to his wife; Bologna, 4 Aug. 1770.

² Several editions under various titles; cf. A. Monici, Riv. Mus. It., XXIII.

E. B.

MANICORDE. See CLAVICHORD.

MANIER (Ger., lit. "manner"). The word is derived, like the English "manner", through the French manière, "a manner", and manier, "to handle", from the Latin manus, "hand". It has two entirely distinct meanings, one dealing with the aesthetics of music, the other with its technicalities. In the first of these connotations the word signifies "mannerism" or the faulty adherence to some peculiarity in style, bringing such peculiarity into undue prominence.

The second meaning of the word is the same as the French agrément, ornaments introduced into and built upon the melody, whether indicated by small notes or marks, or added at the will of the performer.

J. M.

See also Ornaments.

MANKELL. Swedish family of musicians of German descent whose name was originally Mangold.

(1) Johann Heinrich Mangold (b. Umstadt, 1689; d. ?, 1773), town musician at Umstadt.

(2) Johann Wilhelm Mangold (b. Umstadt, 1736; d. Darmstadt, 1806), son of the preceding. He went to Darmstadt in 1764 and became an instrumentalist in the orchestra there. Five of his sons, Georg, August Daniel, Ludwig, Paul and Carl Friedrich, were musicians at Darmstadt.

(3) Johann Hermann Mankell (b. Darmstadt, 1769; d. Karlskrona, ?), the founder of the Swedish branch of the family, possibly the son or the nephew of the preceding. He migrated to Paris and eventually settled in Sweden, at Karlskrona, in 1832. Of his seven sons six were musicians. The most notable was

(4) Carl Abraham Mankell (b. Christiansfeld, 16 Apr. 1802; d. Stockholm, 27 Oct. 1868), singer, organist, teacher and writer of many books on musical history. He was elected a member of the Academy of Music in 1837. One of his brothers, Wilhelm August, was a pianoforte maker; others were

(5) Gustaf Adolf Mankell (b. Christiansfeld, 20 May 1812; d. Stockholm, 23 Mar. 1880), organist and composer of organ music.

(6) Emil Theodor Mankell (b. Karlskrona, 31 July 1834; d. Härnösand, Jan. 1899), painter and amateur violinist.

(7) (Ivar) Henning Mankell (b. Härnösand, 3 June 1868; d. Stockholm, 8 May 1930), composer, son of the preceding. As a boy he heard much chamber music in his own home, studied pianoforte with G. Lind while still at school and had strong artistic and literary interests. From 1887 to 1895 he was a pupil at the Stockholm Conservatory, subsequently studying pianoforte with L. Lundberg, 1895-1899, and theoretical subjects with Bergenson. He was music critic of 'Svenska Morgonbladet' and 'Stockholms Tidningen', 1899-1907, and taught piano and harmony privately. Later he was appointed a member of the committee of management of the Conservatory. He first became known as a composer in 1918.

Mankell wrote principally for the pianoforte. His style was not typically Swedish and his compositions were considered as being very original and much in advance of their time. His use of form was influenced by Chopin's, his harmonic colouring by Liszt, Grieg and Sjögren, and he also had affinities with the French impressionists. His music is predominantly homophonic, the melodic and harmonic elements being closely integrated. Among his many works, few of which are published, the shorter compositions are the most successful, but though his fantasy-sonatas are loosely constructed, they are original in style and the pianoforte texture is effective. His output includes a pf. Concerto, 3 stg. Quartets, a pf. Quintet, a pf. Trio, sonatas for vn. & pf. and viola & pf., songs with orch., and for pf.: 8 Ballades, 6 Fantasy-Sonatas, many Preludes, Nocturnes, Intermezzi, Lyric Pieces, Bagatelles, Variations, etc.

K. D.

BIBL. — BENGTSSON, INGMAR, 'Henning Mankell, en biografisk studie' (S.T.M., 1941) (with full list of works, with dates of composition).

RANGSTROM, T., 'De tystlåtna — och en stridsman!' ('Musikmänniskor', Uppsala, 1943), pp. 169-81.

Manley, Mary La Rivière. See Eccles (2, 'Royal Mischief', incid. m.).

MANN, Arthur Henry (b. Norwich, 16 May 1850; d. Cambridge, 19 Nov. 1929).

English organist, teacher and composer. He was a chorister at Norwich Cathedral under Zechariah Buck. He took the B.Mus. degree at Oxford in 1874 and that of D.Mus. in 1882. He held the post of organist at St. Peter's, Wolverhampton, from 1870, at Tettenhall Parish Church from 1871 and was appointed to Beverley Minster in 1875. In the following year he was elected organist and director of the choir at King's College, Cambridge, where he remained for the rest of his life and where his work as a choir-trainer bore good fruit.

Mann's more ambitious compositions include an oratorio, 'Ecce Homo' (1882), and a 'Te Deum' (1887), besides services, anthems, etc. He wrote numerous hymn-tunes, which became widely known, and edited several successful hymn-books, as well as bringing out an edition of Tallis's famous forty-part motet 'Spem in alium' (1888). He was an earnest student of Handel and made a minute study of the sketches, etc., in the Fitzwilliam Museum, contributing an important section on them to the 'Catalogue of Music', published in 1893. In 1894 the discovery of the original wind parts of 'Messiah' in the Foundling Hospital — in which he was partly concerned — was followed by a performance of the oratorio with a reconstructed score, in King's College Chapel on 13 June 1894. Mann was appointed choirmaster of the Norwich Festival in 1902. J. A. F.-M.

MANN, Flora. See ENGLISH SINGERS.

MANN, Józef (b. Lwów, 1879; d. Dresden, 5 Sept. 1921).

Polish tenor singer. He pursued an academic course at the University of Lwów, obtaining a degree in law, and became a judge. His love of music, which at first he treated as a hobby, increased year by year, and he began singing as baritone. His teacher, Dr. Kicki at Lwów, discovered the tenor qualities in his voice and taught him accordingly. He made his début in the Opera of Lwów, discontinued his legal career and went to Italy for further studies. In 1912 he was engaged as tenor at the Volksoper in Vienna, where he remained for four seasons. Later he accepted the post of first tenor in the Imperial Opera in Berlin, where he remained until his death, which occurred after the second act of 'Aida', in which he sang the part of Rhadamès as a guest artist at Dresden.

Józef Mann was not only a fine singer, but also a superb actor, a very rare thing among operatic artists. The one gift enhanced the other and he succeeded in making a true character of every part he performed.

C. R. H.

Mann, Thomas. See Diamond ('Young Joseph', choral work). Glanville-Hicks ('Transposed Heads', opera-ballet).

MANN, Tor (b. Stockholm, 25 Feb. 1894). Swedish conductor. He studied at the Stockholm Conservatory from 1910 to 1919, became a cellist in the Stockholm Concert Society and was court conductor from 1914 to 1919. In 1935 he was elected a member of the Academy of Music. He was appointed conductor of the Göteborg Concert Society, where in 1938 he conducted no less than seventy concerts and also took the initiative in arranging an annual Scandinavian Music Festival, at which new music by Danish, Norwegian, Swedish and Finnish composers is heard for the first time. In 1939 he was appointed conductor of the Stockholm Radio Orchestra and teacher of conducting at the Academy of Music, where the professor's title was conferred on him in 1945.

Mann has had outstanding successes as guest conductor at Oslo, Helsingfors, Copenhagen, Berlin, Vienna, Dresden, Munich, Prague, Budapest and many other centres. He specializes in Berwald, Carl Nielsen, Sibelius and modern music. S. B., adds.

MANN, William (Somervell) (b. Madras, 14 Feb. 1924).

English critic. He was educated at Winchester College (1937-42) and at Magdalene College, Cambridge (1946-47), where he took the B.A. and Mus.B. degrees. Later he studied composition privately with Mátyás Seiber and the pianoforte with Ilona Kabos; but he had already gained much experience in his youth, not only from the usual teaching, but as one of a large family every member of which played an instrument and where various chamber-music teams could be formed at any moment.

In 1948 Mann joined the music staff of 'The Times', and he also contributes valuable criticism and book reviews to musical periodicals. He translated Hermann Scherchen's 'The Nature of Music' (London, 1951), and the first publication of his own was an 'Introduction to the Music of J. S. Bach' (London, 1950). This was followed in 1954 by 'Richard Strauss', contributed to the 'Master Musicians' series. To a Benjamin Britten symposium (London, 1952) he contributed a chapter on the incidental music. E. B.

MANNA, Gaetano (b. Naples, c. 1745; d. ?).

Italian composer. He studied at the Conservatory of Santa Maria di Loreto, Naples, with his uncle Gennaro Manna. He wrote music for various Neapolitan churches. An oratorio, 'Il trionfo di Maria Vergine assunta in cielo', was performed in the domestic chapel of Don Massenzio Perrotti in 1783; this work was for a long time erroneously ascribed to his uncle. About 1798 Gaetano Manna was maestro di cappella of the Oratorio dei Padri Filippini, Naples, in whose archives many of his compositions are preserved.

F. W. (ii).

MANNA, Gennaro (b. Naples, 1713; d. Naples, 1788).

Italian composer, uncle of the preceding. He studied at the Conservatory of Sant' Onofrio, Naples, under Ignazio Prota and Francesco Feo. He was Feo's nephew and succeeded him in 1745 as maestro di cappella of the SS. Annunziata Church. His operas include 'Siroe' (Venice, 1743), 'Tito Manlio' (Rome, 1743), 'Lucio Papirio' (Rome, 1745), 'Lucio Vero' (Naples, 1745), 'Didone abbandonata' (Venice, 1751) and 'Demofoonte' (Turin, 1754). From 1755 to 1761 he was maestro di cappella of the Conservatory of Santa Maria di Loreto, Naples, in succession to Durante.

In his later years Manna devoted himself entirely to religious music; his oratorios include 'Assuero' (1770) and 'Judith' (1775). The archives of the Oratorio dei Padri Filippini, Naples, include 134 of his manuscript compositions.

F. W. (ii).

See also Logroscino (collab. in festa teatrale).

MANNERS, Charles (real name Southcote Mansergh) (b. London, 27 Dec. 1857; d. Dundrum, Co. Dublin, 3 May 1935).

Irish bass singer and operatic impresario. He was the son of Colonel Mansergh, R.H.A. and J.P. for Cork and Tipperary, was taught singing at the Royal Irish Academy of Music in Dublin and the R.A.M. in London, at the latter for a short time by Shakespeare, and later in Italy. In 1881 he began his career as a chorus singer and joined D'Oyly Carte's travelling company. On 25 Nov. 1882 he made a successful début as Private Willis on the production of Sullivan's 'Iolanthe' at the Savoy Theatre in London. He next sang in the provinces with the Carl Rosa Company, and appeared in 1890 at Covent Garden as Bertram in Meyerbeer's 'Robert the Devil'. On 5 July of that year he had married the soprano Fanny Moody. On 17 Oct. 1892 he sang the part of Prince Gremin on the production in London of Tchaikovsky's 'Eugene Onegin' under Lago at the Olympic Theatre, and later as the King in 'Lohengrin'. In 1893 he sang in America. From 1894 to 1896 he was engaged by Harris both for English and Italian opera, also by Hedmond in the autumn of 1895, notably as the King in 'Maritana' and as Mephistopheles in Gounod's 'Faust'. His voice was a basso cantante of remarkably fine quality. In 1896-97 he undertook a successful English opera tour in South Africa.

On his return he established the Moody-Manners Opera Company and made extensive tours in the provinces, with three separate companies, the principal company being 115 in number, with a repertory of thirty operas. In 1902 and 1903 he gave two seasons at Covent Garden and in 1904 a longer one at Drury Lane. In the latter year and in 1906, with characteristic generosity, he gave an operatic festival, without personal profit, at Sheffield, in aid of funds for the foundation of a university in that town. By giving prizes for the best operas produced by British composers, and by giving opportunities to provincial amateurs of hearing great operas, the Moody-Manners Company exerted a good influence on contemporary music. The entire music library of the Company is now in the Mitchell Library, Glasgow.

A. C.

MANNES, David (b. New York, 16 Feb. 1866).

American conductor, teacher and violinist. He studied the violin with August Zeiss and C. R. Nicolai in the U.S.A. and with Heinrich de Ahna, Carl Halif and Ysaÿe in Europe. He received lessons in harmony from Boise. After playing in theatre orchestras he was engaged by Walter Damrosch for the first violin section of the New York Symphony Orchestra. He gave sonata recitals in America and in London with his wife, Clara Mannes (born Damrosch, daughter of Leopold Damrosch). Their son, Leopold Damrosch Mannes (b. 1899), is a talented composer.

David Mannes was director of the Music School Settlement, the Music School Settlement for Colored Children and the Music School of the East Side House, all in New York, and music supervisor of the Laurel School at Cleveland, Ohio. In 1916 he and Mrs. Mannes started the Mannes School. From 1918 he conducted symphony concerts at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. He published an autobiography, 'Music is My Faith' (1938).

N. B.

MANNHEIM SCHOOL. The group of musicians that formed the elector palatine's court orchestra at Mannheim during the reign there of the Duke Carl Theodor, i.e. from 1743 to 1778 (when the duke transferred his court to Munich). 18th-century travellers and theorists are full of praise for the brilliant achievements of the Mannheim School, but they invariably refer to the style of conducting and playing and see in it a school of virtuosi (particularly of violinists) rather than of composers. In the latter sense the term has been in general use only since Hugo Riemann's rediscovery and publication of the Mannheim composers' music.

The founder and inspired leader of the Mannheim School of violinists and conductors was Johann Wenzel (Jan Václav) Stamitz, whom Carl Theodor, himself a trained musician, brought to his court after having heard his stirring virtuoso performance at the coronation festivities in Prague in 1741 or at Frankfurt o/M. in 1742. Stamitz's pupil and successor, Christian Cannabich, enlarged and perfected the orchestra — Mozart called him in 1778 the best conductor he had ever come across. Apart from Riemann, who quoted Schubart's and Burney's high valuation of the Mannheim School to support his own discovery of Johann Stamitz as the father of the symphonic style in composition, most of the literary sources are concerned with the new symphonic style of playing only, and even so with that of the generation after Stamitz. The main features of the Mannheim School are there said to be perfect team-work, fiery and expressive execution, uniform bowing, exciting dynamic effects and accuracy in phrasing in orchestral performance; a late 18th-century critic (A.M.Z., Leipzig, Sept. 1799) thus sums up the verdict of contemporary opinion:

Cannabich and Toeschi, the concertmasters who trained this school and sent out into the world disciples like Cramer, Stamitz (the sons), Fränzl and others, deserve for their achievements all the praise, which is worth more than a hundred engraved Sonatas and Burney called the orchestra in 1772 "an army of generals". If the perfection of virtuoso playing and vivid orchestral performance was Cannabich's work, he had certainly learnt his craft from Johann Stamitz, who may have been the lesser conductor (though probably superior as a virtuoso), but had laid the foundations of the new symphonic style both in his compositions and in his way of performing them. A native of Bohemia, as were several of his colleagues at the Mannheim court, he was the first composer who made it a rule to juxtapose a vehement opening theme and a contrasting subject of more lyrical quality in a symphonic movement, who completely abandoned the contrapuntal style in instrumental composition, who firmly established the Allegro-Andante-Minuet-Presto sequence, employed dynamic devices as stirring effects and elements of surprise, replaced the thorough-bass by written-out orchestral parts, introduced the clarinet and gave conspicuous tasks to the wind instruments in general, laid stress on changing colour in orchestration and used novel features of musical expression such as are now associated in a wider sense with the Mannheim School of composition. It may thus be said that the novelties in Johann Stamitz's writing, which were not fully appreciated by his contemporaries and his own pupils and degenerated a generation after him into routine schemes and mannerisms (till the great Viennese classics brought about the towering synthesis of the early symphonic foundations), inaugurated that new style of orchestral performance which was later regarded as the extraordinary achievement of the Mannheim School of musicians.

While the claim for the unique excellence of the Mannheim School of conductors and violinists is fully supported by contemporary evidence, there has been much discussion about Riemann's assertion that priority must be conceded to the Mannheim School of composers as forerunners of the classical symphony. The early Viennese school, the Bohemian school, the Italian instrumental composers and the north German masters have done as much to establish the stylistic novelties of mid-18th-century music as the Mannheim musicians; it is now recognized that all the early symphonists had a similar educational and musical background and based their style on the same foundations, but that, thanks to the geographical position of Mannheim and the intellectual development influenced by the social changes and the rise of the middle class in near-by France, the ground was more fertile there for innovation and progress than anywhere else at the time. It is thus that Paris, with whose concert institutions and individual musicians Stamitz and his group were in constant contact, was the first to recognize the excellence and novel interest of both the symphonic music and the orchestral playing of the Mannheim School, whose compositions first appeared in print in that city and became known to the world as "melodia germanica".

The main representatives of the Mannheim School, apart from Johann Stamitz, are Franz Xaver Richter, Ignaz Holzbauer and Anton Filtz in the older group, and Christian Cannabich, Franz Beck, Johann Toeschi, Ernst Eichner, Johann Schobert, Karl and Anton Stamitz, Wilhelm and Johann Cramer, Ignaz Fränzl and Franz Danzi in the second generation. Vogler established a music school at Mannheim in 1775 and called it "Mannheimer Tonschule"; a collection of his theoretical writings under that name, published there in 1778, widely propagated the term Mannheim School, as did his monthly 'Betrachtungen der Mannheimer Tonschule' (with many music examples) which appeared from 1778 to 1781.

P. G.

BIBL.—GRADENWITZ, PETER, 'Mid-Eighteenth-Century Transformations of Style' (M. & L., XVIII, 1937, p. 265).

SONDHEIMER, ROBERT, 'Die Theorie der Sinfonie' (Leipzig, 1925).

WALDKIRCH, FRANZ, 'Die konzertanten Sinfonien der Mannheimer im 18. Jahrhundert' (Ludwigshafen, 1931).

See also Symphony, pp. 210-12.

MANNHEIMER, Frank (b. Dayton, Ohio, 28 June 1896).

American pianist. He studied pianoforte, harmony and composition at first in the U.S.A. and afterwards in Germany and France. In America he obtained the degrees of B.Mus. and Hon. D.Mus. He was a professor at the Tobias Matthay Pianoforte School in London from 1926 to 1939 and he has made several tours in Europe, including the British Isles, and in the U.S.A. He has also appeared at various musical festivals in these countries, at which he gave first performances of many works by modern composers. His transcription for pianoforte of a Suite in D major by Leonardo Vinci and a new edition of Bach's A minor Prelude and Fugue were both published in 1935.

M. K. W.

Manni, Agostino. See Cavalieri (E., 'Rappresentazione').

Manning, Edward. See Turner (W., songs for 'Generous Choice').

MANNs, (Sir) August (b. Stolzenberg nr. Stettin, 12 Mar. 1825; d. London [Norwood], 1 Mar. 1907).

German bandmaster and conductor. Born of poor parents, he had for his first teacher a village musician at Torgelow, from whom he learnt the violin, clarinet and flute. His next instruction was received from Urban, the town musician of Elbing, near which his parents had removed, and to whom he was apprenticed. There he had regular practice in an orchestra, especially that of the Danzig opera company during its annual visits to Elbing; and this led to his entering the 5th regimental band of Danzig as first clarinet, while he played among the first violins at the theatre. He now began to arrange and compose for the band and generally to take a prominent part in the music of the place. In 1848 the regiment was transferred to Posen, and there Manns was noticed by Wieprecht, through whose assistance he transferred himself from the military band to Gungl's orchestra in Berlin. There he advanced to the post of conductor and solo violinist at Kroll's Garden. He worked hard at harmony and composition, and produced much dance music and other pieces which were very popular. After the destruction of Kroll's establishment by fire in 1851 Manns was made bandmaster of the 33rd Prussian regiment at Königsberg. He arranged Beethoven's symphonies for the band, and in other ways the music of the regiment was made very prominent. It was soon afterwards moved from Königsberg to Cologne, where it enjoyed a still greater reputation.

Manns, however, longed for a wider field, and he accepted, in the spring of 1854, an engagement from London as sub-conductor in the band of the Crystal Palace, then a wind band only, under Schallehn. This post he gave up in Oct., and after following his profession at Leamington and Edinburgh (in Wood's opera band) he became conductor of the summer concerts at Amsterdam in 1855, and finally, in the autumn of that year, was engaged as conductor at the Crystal Palace, a post upon which he entered on 14 Oct. 1855. Manns's duties as conductor, both of the daily music and of the Saturday concerts, as well as of the numerous festivities and extra performances, where music had to be arranged for large combined masses of wind and strings, were naturally very arduous. In 1883 he replaced Costa as conductor of the Handel Festival, conducting the subsequent festivals until 1900. He conducted the Sheffield Festivals of 1896 and 1899. He continued to conduct the Saturday Concerts at the Crystal Palace until 1901. He was knighted in 1903.

It was said that "the German conductor makes the orchestra express all the modifications of feeling that an imaginative soloist would give 'voice to on a single instrument'".¹ To this power of wielding his players Manns accustomed his audience during the years of his conductorship. It is not too much to say that his persistent performance of the works of Schumann — to name but one composer out of several — in the early part of his career at Sydenham, made the London public acquainted with them years before they would otherwise have become so. G., rev.

BIBL. — WYNDHAM, H. S., 'August Manns and the Saturday Concerts' (London, 1909).

MANOJLOVIC, Kosta (b. Krnjevo, Serbia, 1890; d. Belgrade, 1949).

Yugoslav composer, teacher and collector of folk music. He studied in Belgrade, Moscow, Munich and Oxford, where he obtained the degree of B.Mus. Later he became professor and afterwards rector of the Belgrade Academy of Music.

Manojlovic's compositions are predominantly vocal. He frequently used the traditional music of his country for his material, and he had a particular inclination towards polyphonic treatment in his numerous choral cycles. His church music includes a 'Liturgy' for male-voice choir and a cantata, 'On the Rivers of Babylon', for baritone, chorus and orchestra.

Apart from composition Manojlovic devoted his energies chiefly to the investigation, recording and analysing of Serbian folk music. Many of his studies of musical folklore and of national customs have been published either separately or in periodicals. K. T.

MANON. Opera in 5 acts by Massenet. Libretto by Henri Meilhac and Philippe Gille, based on Prévost's novel 'Manon Lescaut'. Produced Paris, Opéra-Comique, 19 Jan. 1884. 1st perf. abroad, Brussels, Théâtre de la Monnaie, 18 Mar. 1884. 1st in England, Liverpool (trans. by Joseph Bennett), 17 Jan. 1885. 1st in U.S.A., New York (in Italian), 23 Dec. 1885.

MANON LESCAUT. Opera in 3 acts by Auber. Libretto by Eugène Scribe, based on Prévost's novel. Produced Paris, Opéra-Comique, 23 Feb. 1856. 1st perf. abroad, Liège, 12 Feb. 1875.

Opera in 4 acts by Puccini. Libretto by Marco Praga, Domenico Oliva and Luigi Illica, based on Prévost's novel. Produced Turin, Teatro Regio, 1 Feb. 1893. 1st perf. abroad, Buenos Aires (in Italian), 8 June 1893. 1st in England, London, Covent Garden Theatre (in Italian), 14 May 1894. 1st in U.S.A., Philadelphia (in Italian), 29 Aug. 1894.

For other works on the subject see PRÉVOST.

¹ 'The Times', 28 Apr. 1857.

MANRIQUE DE LARA, Manuel (b. Cartagena, 24 Oct. 1863; d. St. Blasien, Germany, 27 Feb. 1929).

Spanish composer. By profession a soldier, last holding the rank of Brigadier-General, he devoted his leisure to the serious study of music. A pupil of Chapí, he composed music to 'La Orestiada' (after Aeschylus), a Symphony, a string Quartet and a comic opera in 3 acts, 'El ciudadano Simón'. A symphonic fragment from an unfinished opera, 'El Cid', was performed under Fernández Arbós at Madrid. Gen. Manrique de Lara also did valuable research in Spanish musical folklore, having collected a large number of melodies to traditional Spanish ballads, sung by exiled Jewish communities in the Near East.

J. B. T.

Manrique, Jorge. See MUDARRA (poem set to the lute).

MANRU (Opera). See PADEREWSKI.

MANSFELDT, Edgar. See PIERSON, H. H.

MANTIUS, Eduard (b. Schwerin, 18 Jan. 1806; d. Ilmenau, Thuringia, 4 July 1874).

German tenor singer. He studied law, first in 1825, at the University of Rostock, and afterwards at Leipzig. It was at the latter place that his fine voice attracted general attention and that he began to study singing under Pohlenz. After having sung with great success at a festival at Halle, conducted by Spontini, he went to Berlin, and by his interpretation of the tenor parts in Handel's oratorios (Samson, Judas, etc.) soon became the declared favourite of the Berlin public. His talent was much appreciated by the Mendelssohn family, and it was he who sang the principal tenor part in the Liederspiel 'Die Heimkehr aus der Fremde' ('Son and Stranger') at the celebration of the silver wedding of the Mendelssohn parents.

In 1830 Mantius made his first appearance on the stage in Berlin as Tamino in the 'Zaubersföte'. In 1857 he gave his farewell performance as Florestan in 'Fidelio'. During these twenty-seven years he had appeared in no less than 152 characters. After leaving the stage he devoted himself with much success to teaching. He not only had an exceptionally fine voice, which he knew how to use in a truly artistic and musical manner, but was also a remarkably good actor.

P. D.

MANTOVANO, Alberto. See RIPA, ALBERTO DA.

MANUAL (from Lat. manus, "hand"). A clavier, or set of keys, to be played by the hands. The term is used chiefly in reference to the organ, where the keyboards for the hands and the keyboard for the feet have, for convenience, to be distinguished by some brief and suggestive name. Clavier (from clavis, "key") simply means a keyboard, without reference to the members of the body with which it is to be played.

E. J. H.

MANUALITER (Lat.). A direction of fairly frequent occurrence in the organ works of Bach and his contemporaries, indicating that the passage or piece so inscribed is to be played upon the manuals alone, the direction "pedaliter" being used at the entry of the pedal.

G.

MANUEL VENEGAS (unfinished Opera).

See WOLF, HUGO.

MANVERS. See MARSHALL, CHARLES (WARD).

MANX MUSIC. See FOLK MUSIC: MANX.

MANZIARLY, Marcelle de (b. Kharkov, Russia, 13 Oct. 1900).

French pianist and composer. She was a pupil of Nadia Boulanger for harmony, counterpoint and composition, and of Weingartner for conducting. Since the time when her youthful violin Sonata was awarded the prize of the Ligue des Femmes de Professions Libérales her talent has materialized in a comparatively small number of uncommonly felicitous works. The performance of her pianoforte Concerto was one of the notable events of the 1933 I.S.C.M. Festival held in Amsterdam. During the 1930s works by Marcelle de Manziarly—e.g. the 'Triptyque' for mezzo-soprano and chamber music, the Duos for 2 sopranos with oboe and pianoforte, the saxophone Concertino—were welcomed at concerts of the Triton and the Société Nationale in Paris, her string Quartet in New York; two orchestral works, 'Sonate pour Notre-Dame de Paris' and 'Musique pour orchestre', were performed at The Hague in 1948 as well as at Ojai (California) in 1950, and her Sonata for two pianofortes was broadcast by the Paris Radio. Other compositions, in a lighter vein, include 'Trois Fables de Lafontaine', songs to poems by Louise de Vilmorin and 'Études' for pianoforte.

Marcelle de Manziarly is one of the most intelligent and independent followers of Stravinsky's doctrine of "objective composition": her scores are devised to solve many problems of harmonic and contrapuntal syntax in their relation to form, and her solutions are often ingenious and always elegant. Yet in her style a glassy clarity of texture combines with caprice of detail and often with a genuine sense of grandeur.

F. E. G.

Manzoni, Alessandro. See FRAZZI ('Morte di Ermengarda', symph. poem). Gläser (F., 'Bryllupet ved Comosæen', opera). Petrella ('Promessi sposi', opera). Pizzetti (do., film). Ponchielli (do., opera). Promessi sposi (Ponchielli, opera). Verdi (Requiem for M.).

BIBL.—REYNOLDS, BARBARA, 'Verdi and Manzoni: an Attempted Explanation' (M. & L., XXIX, 1948, p. 31).

MANZU (Instrument). See BABYLONIAN MUSIC.

MANZUOLI, Giovanni (b. Florence, c. 1725; d. Florence, c. 1780).

Italian male soprano singer. Having acquired a reputation in Italy, he repaired, in 1763, to Madrid, where he was engaged at a high salary by Farinelli. In 1764 and 1765 he went to London, and by his performance "the serious opera acquired a degree of favour to which it had seldom mounted since its first establishment in this country".¹ His voice was the most powerful soprano that had been heard on the London stage since the time of Farinelli, and his style was full of taste and dignity. The applause he earned was hearty and unequivocal; "it was a universal thunder". Other singers had more art and feeling; none possessed a sweeter or fuller organ. As to execution, he had none; but he was a good actor, though unwieldy in figure and ill-made. Nor was he young, but the sensation he excited seems to have been irresistible. All the composers struggled to have the honour of writing for him; even T. A. Arne composed his unsuccessful 'Olimpiade' for the popular singer. Manzuoli, however, left England at the end of the season and did not return. In the same year he was in Vienna, and he shortly afterwards retired to his native place, with the title of "Singer to the Court of the Grand Duke of Tuscany".

In a letter of Mozart's², his first after starting on his Italian tour, 7 Jan. 1770, he says of a singer whom he heard, "canta un poco Manzuolisch ed una bellissima voce forte ed è già vecchio", etc. Burney heard him again, in Sept. of that year, taking part in a service in a convent near Florence, and was delighted, though the voice seemed less powerful, even in a small church, than when he was in England. His name occurs once more, in one of the elder Mozart's letters, written in the following Aug.: "Manzuoli often visits us"; and he is included among "the singers, not only celebrated in their profession, but good-hearted and sensible people". He took part in the serenata composed by the young Mozart in honour of the nuptials of the Archduke Ferdinand, at Milan, 17 Oct. 1771, and was encored in one of his songs. Mozart writes again, 24 Nov. 1771:

Herr Manzuoli, the musico, who has always been considered and esteemed as the best of his class, has in his old age given a proof of his folly and arrogance. He was engaged at the Opera for the sum of 500 gigliati [ducats], but as no mention was made of the Serenata in the contract, he demanded 500 ducats more for singing in it, making 1000. The court only sent him 700 and a gold box (and enough too, I think), but he returned the 700 ducats and the box, and went away without anything. I don't know what the result of this history will be—a bad one, I fear!

A good portrait of Manzuoli was engraved by G. B. Betti, after a design by L. Betti. Among his pupils was the celebrated Coltellini.

¹ Burney.

J. M.

² Was in the collection of the writer and sold at his death.

MAOMETTO II (Opera). See ROSSINI. WINTER.

MAPLESON, James Henry (b. London, 4 May 1830; d. London, 14 Nov. 1901).

English singer, violist and operatic impresario. He became a student at the R.A.M. in London (1844), appeared in public as a singer and for some time played among the violas in the orchestra. In Feb. 1854 he sang in opera at Verona, under the name of Enrico Mariani. Later he was assistant to F. T. Smith at Her Majesty's Theatre, and when Smith announced, in 1861, his intention of abandoning Italian Opera, Mapleson took the Lyceum Theatre and began his career as a manager. He opened there on 5 June 1861 and on 15 June produced Verdi's 'Ballo in maschera' for the first time in England.

Mapleson's first season at Her Majesty's was 1862, when Trebelli made her début in England; the burning of that theatre drove him to Drury Lane in 1868. He joined Gye at Covent Garden in 1869; the coalition lasted two seasons, and in 1871 he returned to Drury Lane. On 28 Apr. 1877 he reopened Her Majesty's Theatre, where he had a few seasons with varying success. "Colonel" Mapleson, as he was called, was in the habit of taking his company to the U.S.A. in the intervals of the London season. 'The Mapleson Memoirs', an amusing volume of reminiscences, appeared in 1888. G., adds.

See also Drury Lane Theatre. His Majesty's Theatre. Maquarie, A. See Quilter (song).

MAR DEL PLATA. See ARGENTINA.

MARA (born Schmeling), Gertrud Elisabeth (b. Cassel, 23 Feb. 1749; d. Reval, 20 Jan. 1833).

German soprano singer. Her mother died soon after her birth and her father, a poor musician named Schmeling, is said to have adopted the plan of securing his little daughter in an arm-chair while he attended to his affairs. From this cause, it appears, she fell into a rickety state, from which she took long to recover, if indeed she ever recovered entirely. Schmeling contrived to increase his income by mending musical instruments, and the child one day got hold of a violin and began to draw musical sounds from it, being then only four years old. She seized every opportunity of practising on such instruments, whenever Schmeling's back was turned; but he found her before long, to his astonishment, playing on a violin, on which she had mastered a scale. Struck with her genius, he gave her a few lessons and found her so apt a pupil that he was soon able to play duets with her before a few amateurs. But even now, in her fifth year, the child could not stand without support, and her father was obliged to carry her to the place where she was to play. By favour of an amateur Schmeling and his child were enabled to visit the fair at Frankfort o/M., where the little girl's performance excited great wonder. A subscription was set on foot, a better education was given to her, and when she had reached the age of nine her health had improved and she was able to proceed to Vienna with her father and there give some concerts. The British ambassador advised Schmeling to take the child to England, where he soon obtained the patronage of many noble and influential persons, including the queen. The little girl was, however, persuaded by them to give up the violin, which they thought an unfeminine instrument, and was encouraged to sing. Her voice was already resonant and clear, but she had, of course, had no instruction. Schmeling, by the help of her protectresses, placed her under the tuition of Paradisi. She made rapid progress, but it soon became necessary to remove her from the power of her profligate instructor.

Returning to Cassel, Schmeling found it impossible to get an engagement for his daughter at the Prussian court; the king would not hear of any but Italian singers. Hiller now received her into his music school at Leipzig, where she remained for five years. In 1771 she came out from this academy, with a voice remarkable for its extent and beauty, a great knowledge of music and a brilliant style of singing. Her education had been formed on the music of Hasse, Graun, Benda, Jommelli, Pergolesi, Porpora and Sacchini. Her voice ranged from the g to e'''. She made her debut in an opera by Hasse at Dresden and was successful. With difficulty Frederick II was persuaded to hear her in Berlin; but, though strongly prejudiced against her on account of her nationality, he was immediately converted by her singing an air of Graun's at sight and finally engaged her for life to sing at court both in Berlin and at Potsdam.

It was at this juncture that, in spite of all advice and although the king twice refused his consent, she married the violoncellist Mara. She soon discovered her folly and regretted it when too late. This part of her life was extremely unhappy; she was made miserable on the one hand by the excesses of a debauched husband and on the other by the tyranny of a king who allowed her no liberty or indulgence. She at length succeeded in escaping to Dresden, where she was detained by the Prussian ambassador. Frederick, however, who had lost some front teeth, and could no longer play the flute, cared now but little for music and gave her a tardy permission to annul her engagement. Mara, free at last, arrived in 1780 in Vienna, where Nancy Storace was playing in opera buffa. This was not Mara's line, and she was coldly received. Provided, however, with a letter to Marie-Antoinette from the empress, she passed through Germany, Holland and Belgium, singing at various places on her way. At Munich Mozart heard her, but was not favourably impressed. He wrote on 13 Nov. 1780:

Mara has not the good fortune to please me. She does too little to be compared to a Bastardella [Azuari] (yet this is her peculiar style), and too much to touch the heart like a Weber [Aloysia], or any judicious singer.

He tells a story of her and her husband a few days later (letter of 24 Nov.), which shows both of them in a very unpleasant light, as behaving with foolish effrontery and pretension. She was again in Vienna in Mar. 1781, and Mozart mentions her as giving a concert there. She reached Paris in 1782. There she found the celebrated Todi, and a rivalry immediately sprang up between these two singers, which divided society into factions. At a concert where both singers appeared, an amateur asked his neighbour: "Quelle était la meilleure"; to which the other replied: "C'est Mara". "C'est bien Todi" (bientôt dit) was the punning answer.

Two years later, in the spring of 1784, Mara made her first appearance in London, where her greatest successes awaited her. She was engaged to sing six nights at the Pantheon. Owing to a general election, she sang to small audiences, and her merits were not recognized until she sang at Westminster Abbey, in the Handel Commemoration, when she was heard with delight by nearly 3000 people. She sang in the repeated Commemoration in 1785 and in 1786 made her first appearance on the London stage in a serious pasticcio, 'Didone abbandonata', the success of which was due entirely to her singing. In Mar. 1787 Handel's opera 'Giulio Cesare' was revived, and Mara played in it the part of Cleopatra, which Cuzzoni had sung in 1724. It was so successful that it was constantly repeated during the season. Mara remained connected with the Opera in London till 1791, after which, though she sang occasionally on the stage, and even in English ballad operas, she was more frequently heard in concerts and oratorios. For these she was better suited, as her figure was not good enough for the theatre, nor was she a good actress. It is, indeed, not impossible that her stage presence was still to some extent spoiled by the disease which crippled her as a child; and there is a caricature in which she is shown, singing at a "Wapping Concert" seated (28 Feb. 1786), with the following apology below:

MADAM MARY . . . begs her Polite Audience will excuse her sitting during the Performance, as she contracted in her infancy a Disorder called Le Genoue Inflexible, or (Stiff Knee) which prevents her standing, even in the most Sacred Pieces of Music — her Enemies call it Pride, but it must appear only malice, when she could not rise before their Majesties; or at the Sacred Name of Jehovah.

In 1788 she was singing in the Carnival at Turin and the following year at Venice. She returned to London in 1790 and went to Venice again in 1791. Going once more to London in the next season, she remained for ten years. After this she found her voice losing strength, and she left England in 1802, after enjoying a splendid benefit of over £1000 at her farewell concert. She sang without effect in Paris, where she had the misfortune to come after Grassini; and then, after passing through Germany, Mara retired to Moscow, where she bought a house.

Her worthless husband and her numerous lovers had helped her to spend the immense sums she had earned, until she found herself without means and compelled to support herself by teaching. By following this occupation she acquired a small competence, which was again lost to her (1812) in the fire of Moscow. Forced to begin once more to seek a means of subsistence, when almost sixty-four years old, Mara travelled in Livonia, where she was kindly received, and settled at Reval. She now supported herself again for about four years by teaching, and then formed the strange desire to revisit London, the scene of her former glory. She arrived in 1819 and was announced in a mysterious manner by Messrs. Knvyett as "a most celebrated singer whom they are not at liberty to name", appeared at the King's Theatre, when it was discovered that not a shred of her voice remained, and was never heard again. She returned to Livonia and died at the age of nearly eighty-four, soon after receiving from Goethe a poem for her birthday, 'Sangreich war dein Ehrenweg' (Weimar, 1831).

A life of Mara, by G. C. Grosheim, was published at Cassel in 1823, and a more interesting one by Rochlitz in his 'Für Freunde der Tonkunst', Vol. I. The best portrait of her was engraved (oval) by J. Collyer, after P. Jean, 1794. J. M., abr.

BIBL.—ANWAND, O., 'Die Prima Donna Friedrichs des Grossen' (Berlin, 1931).
KAULITZ-NIEDECK, ROSA, 'Die Mara: das Leben einer berühmten Sängerin' (Heilbronn, 1929).

MARA, LA. See LA MARA.

MARACA. A percussion instrument used in jazz and swing bands. It is a rattle made of a dried gourd, which is shaken and produces its sound by a filling of dried seeds, shot or beads.

MARAGLIANO MORI, Rachele (b. Casteggio, Piacenza, 15 June 1894).

Italian mezzo-soprano singer and teacher. She studied the pianoforte at the Milan Conservatory and in Berlin, also composition under Respighi at the Liceo di Santa Cecilia in Rome, where she obtained a diploma. From 1919 she assiduously pursued a busy career as a vocal soloist, eschewing opera and devoting herself exclusively to the cultivation of ancient and modern music. She became a specialist in medieval song, transcribing laudi and publishing a collection of troubadour songs ('Canzoni trobadoriche') in collaboration with Ugo Cesini, with whom she had studied the subject. In 1930 she was appointed professor of singing at the Conservatorio di San Pietro a Maiella at Naples, and she now occupies a similar post at the Santa Cecilia in Rome. She has taken part in vocal congresses at Padua and in Paris with lectures on the teaching of singing both from the technical and the interpretative point of view. G. M. G.

Márai, Sándor. See APRILY (songs).

MARAIS, Marin (b. Paris, 31 Mar. 1656; d. Paris, 15 Aug. 1728).

French violist and composer. At an early age he entered the choir of the Sainte-Chapelle in Paris, where he was a pupil of Chaperon. He learnt the viola da gamba from Hottemann and his pupil Sainte-Colombe. After six months with the latter his master dismissed him, saying that he could teach him nothing further. In 1685 he entered the royal orchestra as a soloist; he was also a member of the orchestra of the Académie Royale de Musique, where he studied composition under Lully, sharing with Colasse the direction of the orchestra. In 1686 he published his first book of 'Pièces à son 2 violes', dedicated to Lully; he was then living in the rue du Jour, near Saint-Eustache. In the same year he produced at court, before the dauphiness, an 'Idylle dramatique'. In Apr. 1693 he brought out at the Académie de Musique a setting of Campistron's 'Alcide', in which he collaborated with Louis de Lully. The work was revived in 1705, 1716 and 1744. With the same collaborator he wrote a 'Pantomime des pages', part of the score of which is preserved in Berlin. His other writings for the stage were 'Ariane et Bacchus' (words by Saint-Jean), produced in 1696, 'Alcyone' (words by Houdar de La Motte), 18 Feb. 1706, and 'Sémélé' (words by the same poet), 1709. The most successful of his operas was 'Alcyone', in which was a musical representation of a storm, long much admired.

In 1692 he published a set of 'Pièces en trio pour les flûtes, violon et dessus de viole'. A second book of 'Pièces de viole' appeared in 1701; a third in 1711 (when he was living in the rue de La Harpe); a fourth in 1717 and a fifth in 1725. Reprints of some of these exist. In 1723 he published a set of 'Sinfonies' for violin, viol and harpsichord, entitled 'La Gamme'. His best viol solos are very fine and equalled in that school only by the best of Antoine Forqueray the elder, a less prolific composer. Marais was said to play like an angel, but Forqueray like the devil; and this contrast in their temperaments is reflected in their music. That of Marais is marked by tenderness and serenity; that of Forqueray by boldness and grandeur. With the present revival of the viola da gamba the reputation of both is once more rising and is likely to continue doing so.

About 1725 Marais retired to his house in the rue de Lourcine, where he occupied himself with horticulture. He still, however, gave lessons two or three times a week at a room in the rue du Battoir. On his death in 1728 he was buried in the church of Saint-Hippolyte in the Quartier Saint-Marcel. The parish was suppressed in 1791, and shortly afterwards the church was destroyed. No trace of it now remains, but the name is preserved in the rue Saint-Hippolyte.

Marais left in manuscript a 'Te Deum' (written and performed on the convalescence of the dauphiness) and some concertos for violin and bass viol, written for the Elector of Bavaria. At an early age Marais married Catherine Damicourt, who survived him. By her he had nineteen children, four of whom (three sons and a daughter) were also violists. On one occasion he presented his three musician sons to Louis XIV before whom the children and their father gave a concert, while a fourth boy turned over the leaves of the music. One of his daughters married a musician named Bernier.

There is a painting of "M. Marais, musician", in the museum at Blois, and there also exists a mezzotint of Marin Marais, painted and engraved by A. Bouys and published in 1704. In this he is represented seated, full length, with his bass viol across his knees. A fine portrait of Marais also appears in the group of musicians (attributed to Hyacinthe Rigaud) in the National Gallery, London. Of Marais's musician sons the name of Jean Louis Marais occurs in the imprint of the fourth and fifth books of 'Pièces de violes', together with that of Roland Marais, the only one who attained any distinction. He published (in 1711) a 'Nouvelle Méthode de musique' and in 1725 became a solo violist in the royal orchestra, probably succeeding to his father's post. Quantz heard him in 1726 and praises him as a great performer. He published (in 1735 and 1738) two books of 'Pièces de violes'. w. b. s., adds.

MAŘÁK, Jan (b. Dunakész, Hungary, 2 May 1870; d. Královské Vinohrady, Prague, 21 Oct. 1932).

Czech violinist and teacher. From 1882 to 1889 he was Bennewitz's pupil for violin at the Prague Conservatory. In 1897 he was appointed professor at that institution, a post he held until his death. Throughout his career he was also much in demand as a private teacher. Among his pupils Váňa Přihoda won an international reputation and Stanislav Novák held a very distinctive position in the Czech musical community. Mařák provided many useful revisions, editions, arrangements and selections of important works for his instrument. Besides numerous articles and studies for various periodicals, he wrote a valuable monograph entitled 'Housle' ('The Violin') (Prague, 1923; 3rd ed. by V. Nopp, Prague, 1944). G. Č.

MAŘÁK, Otakar (b. Esztergom, Hungary, 5 Jan. 1872; d. Prague, 2 July 1939).

American (naturalized) tenor singer of Czech birth, brother of the preceding. He studied painting in Prague, but soon turned to singing, being well fitted to that career by his responsive voice of large compass and engaging colour as well as by his keen musicianship. After relatively short studies he appeared for the first time with success at Brno on 1 Feb. 1899, and for the next two years he was a favourite singer of the National Theatre in Prague, where he returned as a guest-singer in 1903 after two years in Vienna under Mahler. From 1907 he won a great reputation abroad, singing in Berlin, Vienna, Hamburg, Paris, London (Covent Garden) and at the Chicago Opera. But he continued his guest appearances at home, particularly in Prague. From 1921 he concentrated his efforts on his activity at the Prague National Theatre, where he appeared for the last time on 12 Apr. 1934, and at the States Theatre (Stavovské divadlo) on 21 June 1934. Besides Destinová and Burian he was the best-known Czech opera singer of recent times. His repertory was unusually large, extending from Don José, Cavaradossi, Canio and Werther to Don Ottavio, Florestan, Lohengrin and Tannhäuser. As a singer he gave of his best in the principal parts of the standard Czech works (Smetana, Dvořák, Fibich, Foerster, Ostrčil). As an actor he was somewhat less successful. In 1935 he left Prague for the U.S.A. with his second wife, the American dramatic soprano Marie Cavan, and settled down in New York as a teacher of singing, also giving occasional recitals. When he was suddenly taken ill he was enabled to return to Prague with the aid of his American countrymen. G. Č.

BIBL.—'Symposium Otakar Mařák', ed. P. Pražák (Turnov, 1937).

MARAZZOLI (Marazzuoli), Marco (b. Parma, ?; d. Rome, 24 Jan. 1662).

Italian singer, harpist and composer. He sang in the papal chapel in Rome about 1637 and on 27 Feb. 1639 produced the first comic opera, written jointly with Virgilio Mazzocchi, 'Chi soffre, spera', at the Roman Palazzo Barberini. The libretto was by Giulio Rospigliosi, the future Pope Clement IX.¹ Both Mazarin and Milton were present at the performance.¹ He also wrote the second act of 'Dal male il bene' (first and third by Abbatini), produced at the Palazzo Barberini about July 1653, at the wedding of Maffeo Barberini, Prince of Palestrina, and Olimpia Giustiniani. The libretto was again by Giulio Rospigliosi, who was said to have also written that of 'La vita umana, overo Il trionfo della pietà', produced at the Palazzo Barberini on 31 Jan. 1656 in honour of Queen Christina of Sweden, who had by that time settled in Rome and at whose concerts Marazzoli appeared. But the book was by Jacopo Rospigliosi, Giulio's nephew.² It was dedicated to Christian and published in 1658.

¹ The MS score and libretto are in the Vatican Library, Rome, and an 'Argumento et allegoria' of the opera was printed in 1639 (copy in the Library of Congress, Washington). A. Salza (see Bibl.) conjectured that the work may have been a new version of an earlier opera, 'Il falcone', produced at the same palace in 1637.

Marazzoli composed two more operas, oratorios, cantatas and songs. A. I.

BIBL.—ROLANDI, U., 'Nuova antologia', Oct. 1927.

SALZA, A., Riv. Mus. It., XIV, 477.

See also Abbatini (collab.). Mazzocchi (V., collab. in 'Chi soffre, spera').

MARBECK (Marbecke, Merbecke), John (b. ? Windsor, c. 1510; d. ? Windsor, c. 1585).

English church musician, composer and writer. This remarkable personality is best remembered by his famous publication 'The booke of Common Praier noted' (1550). It is less generally realized that in that same year was published his 'Concordance' of the Bible in English, a compilation of immense labour, and the first thing of the kind ever produced.

The surname is variously spelt; the form found most usually in the records of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, is adopted here. His own signature in acknowledgment of his stipend in 1558 appears as "Marbek", but in his 'Book of Common Prayer Noted' it is printed as "John Merbecke".

The dates of his birth, appointments and death remain unknown; and his will has not been found. Such evidence as exists suggests that he was born and died at Windsor and spent his whole life there. The earliest known mention of his name is in an inventory of domestic plate at Windsor dated 1531, which included a "sylver spone" with his name "wrytyn thereon". His son Roger, who became provost of Oriel College, Oxford, was born in 1536. It is reasonable therefore to assume that John Marbeck was born about 1510. If so, he would have been about seventy-five in 1585, a date generally accepted as that of his death; for his name no longer appears in the Windsor records after that, and the last of his six published books is dated 1584. He had another son, Edward, to whom Oriel College granted a valuable lease in 1573.

Marbeck gave some account of his own life up to 1550 in the preface to his 'Concordance'. Details of his trial and condemnation for "heresy" in 1544, the confiscation of his "greate worke", as he described his 'Concordance', his imprisonment in the Marshalsea and his subsequent pardon by Henry VIII on the plea of Gardiner, one of his chief accusers, may be read there. A full account of the whole episode, together with a description of the 'Concordance' and of the series of difficulties encountered in its preparation and publication has been made available through the scholarly researches of Mr. Eric Hunt.³

The Windsor records of St. George's Chapel are far from complete for this period; Marbeck is first mentioned, both in the treasurer's and the precentor's rolls, in 1541-42 for receiving payment as organist. In 1531 his name is at the head of the clerks, and he was sharing the duties of playing the organ with George Thaxton. Most of the entries show payment to him for minor duties such as copying music. One item is of interest: it refers to a "Collectarium" made by Marbeck by order of one of the canons during the reign of Queen Mary. This was a book of the collects for use both at the mass and at the choir offices; examples are now of the greatest rarity.

When the chantries were dissolved by act of Parliament in 1547 those in St. George's Chapel were exempted, and during the reign of Mary the chantry priests continued to celebrate the Latin mass in the chapels there. In the reign of Elizabeth chantry priests continued to be appointed at Windsor and to receive the stipend derived from the endowments, though no duties were attached to the office. In 1571 Marbeck, though described elsewhere as "laicus", was appointed as chaplain of the Lord Hastings chantry. He still held it in 1575, the only other year during the remainder of his lifetime for which a treasurer's roll survives. The patron of this chaplaincy was George, Earl of Huntingdon, to whom Marbeck dedicated his 'Book of Notes and Common places' in 1581. In making a subsequent appointment Lord Huntingdon remarked that it was "solely for the better augmentation of the stipend" of his nominee, the divinity lecturer at St. George's.

Marbeck's work as a composer, in the ordinary sense of the term, is relatively unimportant. It consists, as far as is known, of no more than a Mass: 'Per arma justicie'; two motets: 'Ave dei patris filia' and 'Domine Jesu Christe'; and a carol: 'A Virgin and Mother'. It is probable that the three Latin works were written before English came into general use for liturgical purposes. His time must have been fully occupied from shortly after 1539, when the "Great" Bible was published in English, with the compilation of his 'Concordance', which was already in an advanced state when he was arrested in 1544; and it had to be done all over again after his release.

¹ See Milton's letter to Lucas Holstenius from Florence, 30 Mar. 1639.

² According to the 'Historia . . . di Christina . . . de Svetia' by Gualdo Priorato Conte Goleazzo (1656).

³ 'Cranmer's First Litany, 1544, and Merbecke's Book of Common Prayer noted, 1550', by J. Eric Hunt (London, 1939), p. 29.

'The booke of Common praier noted', as already stated, was published in the same year as his 'Concordance', a remarkable dual achievement. It contained the first setting to music of the English liturgy as authorized by the Act of Uniformity of 1549. Its purpose and method are set out in a short preface:

IN THIS BOOKE

is conteyned so much of the Order of Common prayer as is to be song in Churches; wherein are used only these iii sortes of notes,

The first note is a strene note, and is a breve. The second a square note, and a semy breve. The iii a pycke¹, and is a mynymme. And when there is a prycke by the square note, that prycke is half as much as the note that goeth before it. The iiii is a close, and is only vsed at ye end of a verse.

How this notation was intended to be interpreted in performance has been the subject of controversy ever since the book was brought into use again in connection with the Oxford Movement a century ago. This is not the place in which to discuss controversies, but the alternative ideas may be briefly stated. Marbeck's music is set out with black notes on staves of four red lines, and, as in every kind of music of that period, without any bars. This gave the impression to the leading musicians of the Movement, not unreasonably, that, although Marbeck's "noting" was not strictly to be regarded as plainsong, it was nevertheless of the nature of plainsong, and was to be freely interpreted solely in accordance with the natural stress of the words without exact observance of the note-values.

This view was supported by the fact that Marbeck did employ certain traditional plainsong melodies, adapting them for his own purpose. Thus, 'Venite' and Psalms are all set to an abridged form of Tone VIII. The "noting" of 'Te Deum' is a condensation of the Ambrosian melody. 'Benedictus' is set to Tones V and VIII. Marbeck chose modes I and VIII for 'Magnificat' and Tones V and VII for 'Nunc dimittis'. In the Communion service 'Gloria in excelsis' and 'Credo' are original compositions: but 'Kyrie' is a condensation of that melody in the Sarum rite with Solemn Requiems (Plainsong Society's 'Ordinary of the Mass', No. IX), while 'Sanctus' is similarly distilled from a commonly used Sunday melody² ('Ordinary', No. IV) and 'Agnus' from a peculiarly Sarum melody ('Ordinary', No. VIII). The offertories and post-communions are original compositions intended for unison singing like the rest. Music is provided also for the service of the dead, including 'Kyrie', 'Sanctus' and 'Agnus' adapted from the Sarum numbers ('Ordinary' No. VIII).

It should be added that the "noting" of the versicles and responses was adapted from Latin sources; it forms the foundation upon which most of the subsequent harmonized settings have been constructed, beginning with those of Tallis and Byrd. The Litany was not included here, having been already published with "noting" in 1544.

The subject of Marbeck's setting was fully dealt with in a treatise entitled 'The Order of Daily Service . . . with Plain tune' by Professor William Dyce of King's College, London, published in 1844. Here will be found the additions composed by Dyce for the English Responses to the Commandments, together with his setting of the Comfortable Words and the Doxology of the Lord's Prayer. Dr. John Jebb of Peterstow published a set of three lectures on the same subject at about the same time. It became the generally accepted opinion that while the melodic line of Marbeck's music was to be retained his rhythmic outline, as expressed in his exact note-values, might be disregarded.

More recently the opinion has been expressed that Marbeck's note-values should be interpreted at their face-value, but with a clear understanding that his music, like all the vocal music of his contemporaries, is designed on the principle of the irregular phrasing of duple and triple measures, as indicated by the natural stress of the words. The case for this opinion was expounded by Sir Richard Terry in a paper read before the Royal Musical Association in 1914 and reprinted in a collection of his Essays, published in 1929.

It is contended by those who support this view, that if Marbeck's 'Creed' and 'Gloria in excelsis' are sung with due recognition of the interchanging rhythms, and with just a small degree of freedom, as in the works of Byrd, Tallis, and Morley, the true stress of the words will be perfectly interpreted.

Marbeck's "noting", except for the versicles and responses, soon fell into disuse. The changes made in the Prayer Book of 1552, the growing demand for harmonized music to replace unison singing and finally the Marian reaction were fatal to it, and it remained in obscurity for three centuries.

Mr. Hunt has advanced the interesting suggestion that the music of Cranmer's Litany is by Marbeck.¹ He supports the suggestion with argument that has considerable weight. It has been stated, though without much evidence, that 'The booke of Common praier' was noted by Marbeck under the supervision of Cranmer. That they co-operated in some measure is, however, extremely probable, especially when it is remembered that for some weeks at the close of 1548 a number of bishops, together with Cranmer, were assembled in conference about the Prayer Book at Windsor. During those weeks Cranmer and Marbeck would obviously have been frequently in close association, discussing in an informal manner subjects in which both were so keenly interested. What, then, is more likely than that meetings between these two had been held when Cranmer was drawing up the words of the Litany in 1544? Mr. Hunt points to "unmistakable similarities" in the notation as well as in the character of the musical setting and says it is significant that Marbeck omitted the Litany from his book in 1550. He adds that the suggestion seems the more likely in view of the fact that Marbeck was a proved musical expert "while Cranmer's musical reputation rests entirely on his supposed musical authorship of the Litany".

¹ "Pycke" (for the minim) stands for "pike" the shape of the note being that of a pike-head. "Prycke" stands for "prick", meaning a point or dot.

² See Sir Richard Terry, Proc. Mus. Ass., 45th Session.

A word must be added here which has direct bearing upon the authorship of the music of Cranmer's Litany. A misleading error has been copied by one writer after another, without reference to the original source, when quoting Cranmer's letter to Henry VIII of 7 Oct. 1544.² Cranmer was not referring to the Litany when he used the expression "I have travailed to make the verses in English" (not version as so generally misquoted), but to his own attempt, with which he was not satisfied, to adapt English words to the Latin hymn 'Salve festa dies', to be included with other things in the English 'Processional', which he and the king were planning.

It was towards the end of his life that Marbeck wrote a number of books showing his personal attitude in the theological controversy of his time:

¹ 'The Lyves of Holy Sainctes, Prophets, Patriarches', etc. (1574).

² 'The Holie History of King David . . . drawne into English meetre for the Youth to Reade' (1579).

³ 'A Ripping up of the Pope's Fardel' (1581).

⁴ 'A Booke of Notes and Commonplaces' (1581).

⁵ 'Examples Drawen out of Holy Scriptures' (1582).

⁶ 'A Dialogue between Youth and Age' (1584).

A facsimile edition by photography of Merbecke's 'Booke of Common Praier Noted' (1550), together with a facsimile of Cranmer's first English litany (1544) with historical and critical commentary by Eric Hunt, was published by the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge in 1939. E. H. F.

¹ Op. cit., p. 22.

² 'Cranmer's Letters' (Parker Soc. Publications), Letter 276, p. 412. N.B. The date may be 1543.

³ Entered in the register of Stationer's Company anonymously. Terry says he has been unable to discover a copy.

BIBL.—STEVENSON ROBERT, 'John Marbeck's "Noted Booke" of 1550' (M.Q., XXXVIII, 1951, p. 220).

TERRY, RICHARD R., 'John Merbecke' (Proc. Mus. Ass., Vol. XLV, 1919).

See also Chant. Credo.

MARC' ANTONIO DA BOLOGNA. See CAVAZZONI, M.' A.

Marc, Gabriel. See Duparc (H., 'Sérénade', song).

MARCATO (Ital. = marked, stressed, accented).

A direction to play a passage in a marked, decisive manner or to let a melodic part predominate. Its principal use is to draw the attention to the melody or subject when it is in such a position that it might be overlooked, as, for instance, il basso ben marcato in Chopin's 'Krakowiak', Op. 11; or when there are two subjects both of which are to be brought prominently forward, as in the finale of Beethoven's ninth Symphony, where the two subjects come together in 6-4 time, the words being "Freude, schöner Götterfunken" and "Seid umschlungen", etc.; and in Schumann's 'Études symphoniques', No. 2, marcato il canto and marcato il tema. Beethoven also uses queste note ben marcato (sic) in the string Quartet Op. 18 No. 6, slow movement, and melodia marcata, in the Trio Op. 9 No. 2.

Marcatissimo is used by Chopin, Étude Op. 25 No. 11, at the end, by Schumann in the last movement of the Sonata in F# minor, Op. 11, and in No. 8 of the 'Études symphoniques'.

J. A. F.-M.

MARCELLO, Alessandro (b. Venice, c. 1684; d. Venice, c. 1750).

Italian philosopher, mathematician and composer. He was the son of Agostino Marcello and Paola Capello, and an elder brother of Benedetto Marcello. He composed under the name of Eterico Stinfalico, as member of the Academy of the Arcadians, and held weekly meetings at his house, where chiefly his own compositions were performed. His published works are solo cantatas, scnatas for violin and continuo, 6 concertos for 2 flutes or violins, 6 concertos for oboe or flute with principal violin and orchestra.

E. v. d. s.

MARCELLO, Benedetto (b. Venice, 1 Aug. 1686; d. Brescia, 24 July 1739).

Italian composer, brother of the preceding. He was highly educated, had great natural gifts for music and was a pupil of Lotti and Gasparini. The violin was his first instrument, but he soon gave his whole attention to singing and composition. His father, objecting to the time thus occupied, sent him to Rome to study law, but on his death Benedetto returned to Venice and contrived to combine the practice of music with his professional avocations. He held important government posts, was a member of the Council of Forty in 1711 and afterwards provveditore of Pola (1730). He remained there for eight years, but, his health having been ruined by the climate, he became camerlingo at Brescia, where he died. His monument in the church of San Giuseppe states his age to have been 52 years, 11 months and 23 days.¹ He was elected Cavaliere of the Filarmonici of Bologna in 1712 and was also a member of the Pastori Arcadi of Rome. In his youth he was wild, but he sobered down in middle life.

His great work, in eight volumes, folio, 'Estro poetico-armonico, parafrasi sopra i primi 50 Psalmi, poesia di Girolamo Giustiniani', appeared in two parts of twenty-five Psalms each (Venice, 1724-26).² They are for one, two, three and four voices, with figured basses, and occasionally with two violins and cello obbligati; and for expression they far surpass any other work of the kind. Burney, in his notice of Marcello³, considered that they had been over-praised, but nevertheless it is hardly too much to say that as a whole they constitute one of the finest productions of musical literature. An English edition, edited by Avison and Garth, was published in London in 1757 in 8 volumes, a second in Italian soon after (Venice) and a third by Valle (1803-8).

Marcello also composed instrumental concertos (1701) and 'Canzoni madrigaleschi' (Bologna, 1717), besides 'Calisto in Orsa', pastoral (libretto [his own] printed in 1725, music unpublished and lost), 'La fede riconosciuta', opera (Vicenza, May 1707), 'Arianna', intreccio scenico-musicale (text by Vincenzo Cassini, 1727)⁴ and 'Giuditta', oratorio, to his own words. As a poet he was above the average, and he furnished the libretto for Ruggieri's 'Arato in Sparta' (Venice, 1709). In 1720 he published a satirical pamphlet, 'Il teatro alla moda', reprinted in 1727, 1733, 1738 (Venice) and 1741 (Florence).⁵ The Library of St. Mark's at Venice contains a manuscript 'Teoria musicale', the State Library of Dresden ancient copies of two cantatas, 'Timotheus', to his own Italian translation of Dryden's poem, and 'Cassandra'; the National Library of Vienna many autographs and other works, including the cantatas 'La morte d' Adone', 'Clori e Daliso' and 'La strava-ganza'; the Royal Library of Brussels 'Il trionfo della musica nel celebrarsi la morte di Maria Vergine', an oratorio for six voices and chorus. This score was once in the possession of Fétis, who speaks highly of its expression, pathos and effective instrumentation. Rossini borrowed one of the most prominent themes in his overture to 'The Siege of Corinth' note for note from Marcello's Psalm XXI. A catalogue of Marcello's works is in M.f.M. Vol., XXIII (1891), pp. 187-97, supplemented in Q.-L.

F. G., adds.

BIBL.—D' ANGELI, A., 'Benedetto Marcello: vita e opere' (Milan, 1940).

PAULY, REINHARD C., 'Benedetto Marcello's Satire on Early 18th-Century Opera' (M.Q., XXXIV, 1948, p. 222).

See also Avison (ed. of Psalms). Lotti (for Marcello's 'Lettera famigliare'). Scarlatti (1, 'Fede riconosciuta', lib.).

MARCELLO DI CAPUA. See BERNARDINI, MARCELLO.

MARCH (Fr. marche; Ger. Marsch; Ital. marcia). A form originally associated with military movements and afterwards imported into the music of the stage, the orchestra, the chamber and the oratorio. In ancient times the sound of instruments was used as a means of stimulating the action of large numbers of people, whether in process of labour requiring consentaneous effort or as a means of exciting ardour in armies advancing to battle by the sounds of the "shrill trump", the spirit-stirring drum, the "ear-piercing fife".

At the close of the 15th and the dawn of the 16th century we read of the cadenced step of the Suabian infantry of the Emperor Maximilian, which had been ingrained by the historic drum phrase . France seems to have borrowed it in , for that is what Lully's  amounts to. In England it was a longer phrase that was preferred, i.e. .

It was possibly this characteristic which led the French Maréchal Biron to tell the English commander Sir Roger Williams, that "the English march, being beaten by the drum, was slow, heavy and sluggish", to which Williams replied: "Slow as it is, it has traversed your master's country from one end to the other". We see both the Suabian-French and the English phrase in the modern British preludial drum rolls:  and . In the famous warrant of 1632 by Charles I, confirming an earlier registration of 1610 of the English drum march, the old phrase still shows itself, since  is only another way of writing .

¹ Both Eitner and Riemann overlook this definite statement and give the date of birth, like that of death, as 24 July.

² According to a letter from William Reeves, who possessed a copy; not 1724-27, as previously stated.

³ History, IV, 543; modern ed., II, 913.

⁴ Not performed in the composer's lifetime. A concert performance of an edition by Vittore Veneziani at the Liceo Benedetto Marcello, Venice, on 27 Apr. 1913, was based on an edition by O. Chilesotti from the MS discovered in 1885.

⁵ A German translation with notes by Alfred Einstein was published in 1917.

Here is the warrant :

Whereas the ancient custome of nations hath ever bene to use one certaine and constant forme of March in the warres, whereby to be distinguished one from another. And the March of this our nation, so famous in all the honourable achievements and glorious warres of this our kingdom in forraigne parts (being by the approbation of strangers themselves confest and acknowledged the best of all marches) was through the negligence and carelessness of drummers, and by long discontinuance so altered and changed from the ancient gravity and majestie thereof, as it was in danger utterly to have been lost and forgotten. It pleased our late deare brother Prince Henry to revive and rectifie the same by ordainning an establishment of one certaine measure, which was beaten in his presence at Greenwich, anno 1610. In confirmation whereof wee are graciously pleased, at the instance and humble sute of our right trusty and right well-beloved cousin and counsellor Edward Viscount Wimbledon, to set down and ordaine this present establishment hereunder expressed. Willing and commanding all drummers within our kingdome of England and principalltie of Wales exactly and precisely to observe the same, as well in this our kingdome, as abroad in the service of any forraigne prince or state without any addition or alteration whatsoever. To the end that so ancient, famous, and commendable a custome may be preserved as a patterne and precedent to all posteritie . . . etc., etc.

The document also contains the 'Voluntary before the March' and 'The March' itself in musical notation in lozenge-shaped notes, and it is subscribed "Arundell and Surrey. This is a true copy of the original, signed by his Majestie. Ed. Norgate, Windsor."

Each country had its national drum-march which was held to be as significant an insignia as blazonry on standards, until the enticement of an accompanying melody led to its desuetude. We observe this latter in several 16th-century military marches which appear in 'My Ladye Nevells Booke' (1591) for the virginal, i.e. 'The marche of the footemen', 'The marche of the horsmen' and 'The Irish marche'. Indeed 'The marche before the battell' in this collection must have been a recognized martial step, since it appears in the 'Fitzwilliam Virginal Book' (c. 1630) as 'The Earle of Oxford's Marche', which recalls "the fighting De Veres". In the latter century the craze for distinctive marches grew apace, as a glance into contemporary collections prove. 'Sir Thomas Fairfax's Marche', 'The Scots Marche' and 'Prince Rupert's Marche' ('Elizabeth Rogers hir Virginall Booke', 1656), 'Lashley's March' ('Musick's Delight on the Cithren', 1666), 'Montrose's March' ('Musick's Hand-maide', 1663), 'The Dragoons March' ('The Dancing-Master', 1665), 'The Granadiers March' ('Apollo's Banquet', 1687), and many others. One can be fairly certain that some of these marches were used by the fifes and drums, and oboes and drums, when the first British standing army was established (1662). Here is the 'Scots Marche' which, like the contemporary 'King James's March to Ireland' and 'Lilliburlero', is of the swinging 6-8 style :

France was equally to the fore in this new allurements of the measured and graceful step, and both Lully and Philidor were busy writing marches for the troops of Louis XIV, many of which have come down to us, such as those for the 'Mousquetaires', 'Gardes de la Marine', 'Dragons du Roi', 'Grenadiers à Cheval' and the 'Fusiliers'. By the 18th century a decadence in its military music appears, in spite of the adage that "nothing is changed in France". Rousseau, in speaking of French military marches, considered them "très malfaites". In Germany the same writer found its military music much superior, and in that land the march became a feature in its high military efficiency. Among the best known of these were 'Der alte Dessauer' (c. 1705), 'Hohenfriedberger' (1745) and 'Coburger' (c. 1750). Meyerbeer made noble use of the "old Dessauer" in 'Ein Feldlager in Schlesien' and 'L'Étoile du nord'. Quite as famous were those of Austria-Hungary of the past, among them the 'March of the Musketeers of Friedland' (1613), 'Prince Eugene' (17th cent.), 'Pappenheim' (17th cent.) and the more recent 'Andreas Hofer' and 'Rakoczy' marches, the latter immortalized by Berlioz in 'The Damnation of Faust'. Some years ago Breitkopf & Hartel published some sixteen marches used by Dutch troops during the War of the Spanish Succession (1702-13).

Most continental nations are proud of their old military marches, but in Britain there is little interest in the music which cheered the flagging spirits of those who went "a-soldiering". Regimental marches were the rule and rage in the British Army during the last quarter of the 18th century, but not half a dozen survive, although many of them were composed by well-known native musicians. The use of the old traditional march declined because regimental commanding officers were all-powerful in everything which appertained to regimental music. It was out of their privately subscribed "band-fund" that instruments and music were provided, and acting on the principle that "he who pays the piper calls the tune", each colonel adopted as his regimental march whatever tickled his ear, whether an oratorio melody, an operatic air or a Vauxhall Gardens ditty. Yet there was no dearth of traditional and historic material, but the craze for the foreign commodity was just as strong in the 18th century as it had been when Henry Playford issued his 'Sprightly Companion, . . . a collection of the best foreign marches now played in all the camps' (1695). When Handel was at the height of his glory, it was the marches from his 'Scipione', 'Joseph', 'Deidamia', 'Rinaldo', 'Solomon', 'Flavio' and the rest which were blared out on parade-grounds, while excerpts from Bianchi's 'Merope', Monsigny's 'Déserteur' and other operas, long forgotten, also helped to fill the march books of the period, as may be seen from 'Musica Curiosa' (c. 1745), 'Warlike Music' (c. 1760), 'Thirty Favourite Marches which are now in Vogue' (c. 1760) and 'Collection of Airs and Marches' (Bremner, c. 1765).

In the 1780s something of a renaissance of British marches found expression, but this, strange to say, came not from the military men, but from the musical. In point of fact the War Office, in defiance of all that had been written on the military arts since Vegetius, had begun to decry the musical accompaniment to the march ('General Regulations and Orders for H.M. Forces', 1786). Still, British military music was praised in Germany, and Georg Thouret ('Musik am preussischen Hofe', 1897), gives the opinion that it had no fear of comparison with that of the Continent and, looking at the British military marches sent to Germany when Frederica of Prussia married the Duke of York, Thouret expressed the opinion that the "characteristics of English military music were, and still are, tunefulness and briskness", and that "they were a model for Europe". Besides the 4-4 slow march, there were the 2-4 and 6-8 quick marches, and for an idea of the "briskness" of the latter one may turn to the "regimental marches" given in Aird's 'Selection of Scotch, English, Irish and Foreign Airs' (Glasgow, 1778, and on). The real fillip to the regimental march was given during the Napoleonic wars, when well-known musicians composed both slow and quick marches for newly formed defence corps, and among those who contributed were Haydn, Busby, Callcott, Crotch, Dibdin, Dussek, Hook, Mahon, Reinagle, Schetky, Storace and others. Across the Channel there were Catel, Cherubini, the brothers Gebauer and others, busy composing marches to keep the French tricolour flying. Elsewhere similar music was being written by Beethoven, Spontini and Rossini, while lesser lights, such as Süssmayr, Paer and Hummel, also lent a hand.

In 19th-century Britain the regimental and other native marches had been allowed to drift out of ken, while those of alien make again found a welcome place. The main cause of this lay in the foreign bandmasters who ruled the regimental band, plus their enthusiastic patrons — the officers. In 1835 the War Office made a dilatory attempt at conservation and ordered that no regiment was to use foreign marches at reviews, parades or guard mountings; but, like other orders concerning bands in those days, the instruction was observed at the time and then pigeon-holed. After the Crimean War the regimental march once more changed with the whim of the colonel, and in 1882, when the War Office took up the question of officially registering regimental quick marches (but not the slow marches), official recognition was given, not to those which, with a little delving, could have been revived as the traditional marches, but simply to those in actual use at that time, which revealed a motley assortment. In the general clean-up it was found that many regiments were using the same march. In others, tunes which were considered inappropriate had to be dropped. After a process of elimination, some 59 marches were chosen for the various regiments, but without any provision for the Household Cavalry and Cavalry of the Line. Half of these marches were made up of traditional folk melodies, the remainder being popular 19th-century songs, two or three foreign operatic airs, a few nondescripts and one which had been specially composed by royalty. These were "approved" and published on an auspicious day — 1 Apr. 1883.

The tempo of a military march varies according to its character, i.e. whether it is a Slow March (Ger. Parademarsch; Fr. Pas ordinaire), a Quick March (Ger. Geschwindmarsch; Fr. Pas redoublé) or a Double-Quick March (Ger. Sturmarsch; Fr. Pas de charge). The following table gives a century and a half of tempos for the first two marches, all British, except for the third and fourth dates, which are Bavarian and French respectively.

	1788 MM	1804 MM	1828 MM	1831 MM	1870 MM	1935 MM
Slow March	80	75	88	76	75	70
Quick March	120	108	100	100	116	120

To-day, in British practice, the Quick March varies according to regimental demands: Highland Regiments (110), Foot Guards (116), Infantry and other "dismounted"¹ units (120), Rifle and Light Infantry Regiments (140).

As an art-form many composers have used the march for the stage and concert platform, as we have seen in Handel. We also see it in Couperin ('La Marche des gris-vêtus'), Rameau ('Les Indes galantes'), Mozart ('Figaro' and others), Cherubini ('Fani-ska'), Meyerbeer ('Le Prophète'), Wagner ('Tannhäuser'), Verdi ('Aida') and many others. Specific productions may be seen in Mendelssohn's 'Cornelius March', Wagner's 'Huldigungsmarch', Elgar's 'Imperial' and 'Coronation' Marches, Tchaikovsky's 'Marche solennelle', Mackenzie's 'Coronation March', Walton's 'Crown Imperial', etc., all of which have the stately pompous character and tempo of the military slow march. With the quick march not a few composers have been delighted, including Grétry ('Les Deux Avides'), Beethoven ('Ruins of Athens'), Schubert (Op. 51) and Elgar ('Pomp and Circumstance' Marches). It is worth noting that among the marches used for the great public funerals during the past century not one has been specially composed as such, and among these are excerpts from Spohr ('Power of Sound'), Handel ('Saul'), Beethoven (Sonata in A♭ major) and Chopin (Sonata in B♭ minor).

¹ The official word in 'King's Regulations'.

H. G. F.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- 'British Bandsman' (1890), pp. 105, 151.
 'British Musician' (1896), pp. 205, 232, 253.
 DUNDAS, DAVID, 'Principles of Military Movements' (1788).
 FARMER, HENRY G., 'Journal of the Society for Army Historical Research' (1950).
 KAPPEY, J. A., 'Military Music' (1894).
 KASNER, GEORGES, 'Manuel général de musique militaire' (Paris, 1848).
 'Manual of Ceremonial' (1935).
 'Military Mail' (6 Mar. 1908).
 PAUER, E., 'March-Album. A Collection of the most celebrated Italian, French and German Marches.' 'War Office General Orders, Memoranda' (19 Aug. 1835: 1 Apr. 1883).
 WOOD, WALTER, 'The Romance of Regimental Marches' (1932). (More romance than history.)

March, Auzias. See Brudieu (madrigals).

MARCHAL, André (b. Paris, 6 Feb. 1894).

French organist. Blind from birth, he first studied at the Institut National des Jeunes Aveugles, later on joining Gigout's organ class at the Paris Conservatoire, where in 1913 he obtained the first organ prize, the Guilmant prize and the prize for improvisation. In 1917 Marchal was also awarded the first prize for counterpoint. Previously he had been appointed assistant to Gigout at the Conservatoire organ class, and also at the latter's church, Saint-Augustin in Paris.

For thirty years, from 1915 to 1945, Marchal was organist of the Paris church of Saint-Germain-des-Prés, where he succeeded his friend, the blind organist-composer Augustin Barié. In 1945, on the death of Joseph Bonnet, he accepted an invitation to become organist of Saint-Eustache, attracted by the exceptional beauty of the organ there.

Marchal's career as a recitalist began in 1923 with a series of appearances at the Conservatoire. Recitals at Lausanne, Vevey, Geneva, Brussels, Cologne and Berlin followed. After several requests he was persuaded to visit the U.S.A., where in the spring of 1930 he accomplished the feat of playing the greater part of Bach's organ works in ten recitals at the Cleveland Museum of Art. He has since visited the U.S.A. and Canada four times: 1938, a transcontinental tour of forty recitals; 1947-48, thirty-five recitals including a cycle of ten devoted to "les grandes formes de la musique d'orgue" at Cleveland; 1949, thirty-five recitals. In the spring of 1953 he toured Australia and in the autumn the U.S.A.

His powers of improvisation are especially remarkable: on the occasion of his first appearance in London at the invitation of the Organ Music Society, on 10 Dec. 1935, in St. Alban's, Holborn, he improvised an organ symphony in four movements on themes composed for the event by four honorary members of the Society: Roussel, Sibelius, Jongen and Vaughan Williams. On his second visit (12 Nov. 1936, St. John's, Red Lion Square) the themes for a similar improvisation were furnished by Alan Bush, William Walton, Benjamin Britten and Constant Lambert. He returned to London in each of the three following summers to play on the large Willis organ at the Alexandra Palace and to broadcast. Since 1946 he has visited London annually for the B.B.C. or the Organ Music Society. He has also played at Edinburgh, York, Birmingham, Cambridge and Liverpool.

With his pupil, the musicologist Norbert Dufourcq, and the organ builder Gonzalez, Marchal has taken a leading part in the movement for a return to the classical traditions in French organ building. This is exemplified in the organ constructed in the Palais de Chaillot for the 1937 Paris Exhibition (a rebuild by Gonzalez of the Cavaillé-Coll Trocadéro organ). On this instrument Marchal has given fifty recitals in ten years, including two Bach cycles, each of eleven programmes.

Since its foundation, Marchal has been a member of the Commission des Monuments Historiques pour la Restauration des Orgues au Ministère des Beaux-Arts, and his advice on organs is sought in France and abroad. He is a noted teacher and a professor at the Institut National des Jeunes Aveugles. Among his pupils are Noëlie Pierront (Saint-Pierre du Gros-Caillo) and the blind organists Jean Langlais (at Saint-Clotilde) and Antoine Reboulot (who succeeded Marchal at Saint-Germain-des-Prés). Private pupils in Paris and at his summer home in Hendaye include many from foreign countries. F. A. (ii).

MARCHAND, Jean-Baptiste (b. Paris, c. 1670; d. ?).

French lutenist and violinist. He was a son of Jean Marchand (b. ?; d. Versailles, 19 July 1691), ordinaire of the king's music. Marchand entered the royal chapel in 1691 as player on the small lute and dessus de violon. After the death of his brother Noël he obtained (1 June 1710) the emoluments attached to his brother's post as lute player "de la chambre" which the latter had held since 1705. According to Michel Brenet he was still living in 1754; on 1 Dec. Louis Joseph Francœur obtained his post as "joueur de luth de la chambre du roi". These posts as lutenist, or theorbist, were at that time sinecures. Musicians on whom they were conferred more often played the guitar.

J. G. P.

MARCHAND, Jean-Noël (b. Paris, 1666; d. Paris, 31 May 1710).

French lutenist, brother of the preceding. He was lutenist "de la chambre" and followed his father as "ordinaire de la musique de la chambre" in 1691. He succeeded Chabanceau de La Barre in 1705.

J. G. P.

MARCHAND, Louis (b. Lyons, 2 Feb. 1669; d. Paris, 17 Feb. 1732).

French organist and composer. He was taught the organ by his father and showed such precocious skill at the instrument that he was appointed organist of Nevers Cathedral at the age of fourteen. When he was twenty-four he moved to Auxerre, and after a few more years he went to Paris, where he soon acquired an almost legendary reputation as an organ virtuoso. In 1702 he was organist of three Parisian churches and published a volume of clavecin pieces. A second volume followed in 1703, when he had replaced Nevers as organist of the royal chapel.

Like many virtuosos, Marchand seems to have had a lurid reputation on account of his dissipation and wild behaviour. Most of the stories about his private and public life are apocryphal; but the story of his banishment from Paris is well authenticated. It is said that the king, taking pity on Marchand's unfortunate wife, caused half his salary to be withheld from him and devoted to her sustenance. In reply Marchand got up in the middle of the mass he was playing and departed, remarking that if his wife had half his salary she could play half the service. As a result of this incident he was banished and travelled widely in Germany, playing in many churches. The well-known anecdote about Marchand's contest with Bach at Dresden, when he is supposed to have fled back to France rather than face Bach's challenge, is no more than supposititious. We do not know that there was not some adequate reason for his having to leave Dresden at this time. He hardly seems to have been a man likely to feel diffidence about his talents, even when opposed to the greatest.

Marchand was soon allowed to return to Paris, where he enhanced his reputation as performer and became the most fashionable (and expensive) teacher of his day. There is insufficient evidence to support the suggestion that he nevertheless died in indigent misery.

Like some other great virtuosos (for instance Bull) Marchand was celebrated almost as much for his academic skill as for his executive powers. Possibly his talent as an improviser was so great and his aural memory so good that he did not trouble to write down his most remarkable academic feats; certainly, in the organ works which were published posthumously, his powers of fugal development do not appear to be well sustained. As a composer he has much the virtues and limitations that one would expect from a man of his temperament. His best music is his most revolutionary and experimental. On the whole his harpsichord music tends to the fashionably elegant. It is brilliant and emotional, but rather superficially so, without the grave nobility of d'Anglebert or the profundity and wit of Couperin.

Much of his organ music adapts the dance forms, the metrical rhythms, the exuberant ornamentation of the percussive keyboard instrument to the organ without really justifying the transference of medium. On the other hand those pieces which are founded on the conventions of the French baroque organ school are often highly impressive in the extravagant interpretation which they give of traditional techniques. The massive piece called 'Plein jeu' with the double pedal part may be mentioned for its violent use of dissonant suspensions; while the E minor Prelude (p. 46 of the Guilmant edition) employs the chromaticisms traditionally associated with the baroque organists' Elevation movements in so extreme a form as to produce an almost Tristanesque dissolution of tonality. The passionate humanism of this music is the more intense because the tempo is so slow and the dynamic range so restricted. Such music is a much more significant example of the secularization of the organ tradition than is the adaptation to the organ of harpsichord figuration and dance rhythm.

Remarkable as is the talent revealed in such compositions, Marchand cannot be said to have achieved, as did Couperin and Nicolas de Grigny, a consistent style. The dance element does not give the chromaticism stability: the two aspects seem to pull in different directions. He did not, as did Bach and Couperin, succeed in making the best of two worlds. But his failures are always interesting and his natural musical endowment was considerable. Bach copied, and presumably admired, Marchand's work. He taught many of the most famous organ composers of the next generation, among them Du Mage and Daquin. His organ works, published in Guilmant's 'Archives des maîtres de l'orgue', comprise a 'Grand Dialogue', 'Livre d'orgue', 'Pièces choisies pour l'orgue' and 'Pièces d'orgue', from manuscripts in the library of Versailles. The two books of harpsichord music are not published in a modern edition; nor are the unperformed opera 'Piramus et Thisbe' and a few airs de cour originally appearing in Ballard's collections.

W. H. M.

See also Saint-Lambert (verses in praise of M.).

MARCHAND, Marguerite. See DANZI, FRANZ.

MARCHANT, (Sir) Stanley (Robert) (b. London, 15 May 1883; d. London, 28 Feb. 1949).

English organist and educationist. He was educated musically at the R.A.M. in London, entering it as a Goss Scholar and winning prizes both in composition (Battison Haynes prize) and in organ playing. The organ, carrying with it all that is included in the wide term "church musicianship", was to be the chief preoccupation of his personal career. His first organist's post was at Kensing parish church (1899), and he subsequently held more important London posts at Christ Church, Newgate Street (1903), and St. Peter's, Eaton Square (1913). He took his F.R.C.O. in 1902 and his degree of D.Mus. at Oxford in 1914. Meantime his association with St. Paul's Cathedral had been formed by his appointment in 1903 as second assistant to Sir George Martin. This led naturally to the post of sub-organist under Martin's successor, Charles Macpherson. When the latter died suddenly in 1927, at a time when the cathedral was partially closed for restoration, Marchant was appointed organist, and it fell to his lot to prepare the choir for the resumption of its normal function and to conduct the music of the reopening ceremony in June 1930. Most important among other occasions on which he directed special music in St. Paul's was the service of national thanksgiving for the Jubilee of King George V (6 May 1935). For these two services Marchant's two chief works were composed, a 'Te Deum' in D major for voices, brass and organ for the reopening and a 'Te Deum' in G major for choir and organ for the Jubilee. On the latter occasion he was honoured with the C.V.O. The 'Te Deum' in G was subsequently scored for orchestra and performed at the R.A.M. coronation concert at Queen's Hall.

Marchant had joined the professorial staff of the R.A.M. in 1913, and he became Warden in 1934. He had thus two years' experience of the executive details of the institution before he was called on to take command in 1936, when he followed Sir John McEwen as Principal. When he left St. Paul's in order to devote himself wholly to this new duty, the Dean and Chapter marked their high appreciation of his work and their regret at losing him by creating for him the honorary title of Organist Emeritus. In 1937 he was elected King Edward VII Professor of Music in the University of London on the retirement of Sir Percy Buck. In 1947 he succeeded Sir Walter Alcock as Chairman of the Council of the Royal School of Church Music. He was knighted in 1943.

Reliability seems to be the word which best sums up Marchant's character in his public work, but he also possessed the great personal quality of an amiability which all felt to be the expression, not of mere politeness to all and sundry, but of a true cordiality due to a genuine love and understanding of human beings. He was an exceptionally good mixer and at the R.A.M. paid the same attention to students and subordinates as to distinguished visitors. He was thus able to fill two important and very different positions with unfailing skill and competence. His organ playing was distinguished. His fine musical talent declared itself alike in his compositions, principally for the church, and in the performances both of the daily offices of the cathedral and of special works with orchestra which he conducted annually during his time at St. Paul's. Incidentally it may be mentioned that he gave the first performance under the dome of St. Paul's of Bach's B minor Mass on the occasion of the reopening. In general, however, circumstances required him to carry on what others had initiated, and in every one of his many activities he gained the confidence as a musician and both respect and affection as a man.

The following is a list of Marchant's principal works:

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

Music for stgs. & pf. for tableaux vivants illustrating Tennyson's, 'The Victim' (with Sydney H. Lovett), prod. London, Bijou Theatre, Bayswater, c. 1901.

CHURCH MUSIC

Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, C ma. (1917).
Anthem, 'Very bread, good shepherd, tend us' (St. Thomas Aquinas) (1921).
Anthem, 'Ye holy angels bright' (R. Baxter), with orch. (1925).
'Te Deum' (Solemn Thanksgiving), D ma., with brass & organ (1931).
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, D mi. (1934).
'Te Deum', G ma., for King George V's Silver Jubilee service (1935), later with orch.
Anthem, 'Judge eternal' (H. Scott Holland) (1936).
'Morning Song', 2-part anthem (J. Keble) (1936).
Anthem, 'Souls of the righteous' (1936).
Processional Hymn 'Blow the trumpets' (S. A. Alexander) (1938).
Hymn, 'Intercession' (I. Malcolm) (1939).

CHORAL WORKS

'Christmas Eve' for soprano, men's chorus & orch. (1924).
Also a number of partsongs and unison songs.

ORGAN MUSIC

Chorale Prelude (1946).

SONGS

5 'Nonsense Songs'¹ (H. Chesterman) (1922).

'This England' (S. A. Alexander) (1942).

H. C. C., adds.

BIBL.—WESTRUP, J. A., 'Stanley Robert Marchant and Ernest Walker' (M. & L., XXX, 1949, p. 201).

MARCHESE VILLANO, IL (Opera).

See GALUPPI.

MARCHESEI. Italian, later international family of singers.

(1) Salvatore Marchesi, Cavaliere de Castrone, Marchese della Raiata (b. Palermo, 15 Jan. 1822; d. Paris, 20 Feb. 1908), baritone singer and teacher. His family belonged to the nobility, and his father was four years governor-general of Sicily. In 1838 he entered the Neapolitan Guard, but for political reasons resigned his commission in 1840. While studying law and philosophy at Palermo he took lessons in singing and composition from Raimondi; and he continued his musical studies at Milan under Lamperti and Fontana. Having participated in the revolutionary movement of 1848, he was forced to seek shelter in America, where he made his début as an operatic singer in Verdi's 'Ernani'. He returned to Europe to take instruction from Garcia and settled in London, where, for several seasons, he was favourably known as a concert singer.

Marchesi married Mathilde Graumann in 1852 and with her made numerous concert tours in England, Germany and Belgium, appearing also in opera with success, both in England and on the Continent. He held posts as teacher of singing at the Conservatories of Vienna and Cologne, and was appointed chamber singer to the court of Saxe-Weimar in 1862. From the King of Italy he received the orders of the Knights of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus.

Marchesi was known also as the composer of several German and Italian songs, and as the Italian translator of many French and German librettos — 'Medea', 'La Vestale', 'Iphigenia', 'Tannhäuser', 'Lohengrin', etc. He wrote various books on singing and some exercises.

(2) Mathilde Marchesi de Castrone (born Graumann) (b. Frankfort o/M., 24 Mar. 1821; d. London, 17 Nov. 1913), mezzo-soprano singer and teacher, wife of the preceding. She was the daughter of a wealthy merchant and very highly educated, but in 1843, her father having lost his fortune, she adopted the musical profession. She studied singing in Vienna with Nicolai, but in 1845 went to Paris to learn from Garcia. There she took lessons in declamation from Samson, Rachel's master, and had the advantage of hearing all the first singers of the age — Persiani, Grisi, Alboni, Duprez, Tamburini, Lablache. Her own aptitude for teaching was already so remarkable that Garcia, while prevented by the effects of an accident from giving his lessons, handed over his whole clientèle for the time to his young pupil.

In 1849 Mathilde Graumann removed to London, where she obtained a high standing as a concert singer. She sang successfully in Britain, Germany, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland and France, married Salvatore Marchesi in 1852, and in 1854 accepted the post of professor of singing at the Vienna Conservatory, the vocal department of which was then in its infancy; but she soon won high distinction for it and herself. She resigned her appointment in 1861 and removed with her husband to Paris, where pupils came to her from far and wide. At this time appeared her 'École de chant'.

Rossini, in acknowledging the dedication of a volume of 'Vocalizzi', extols Marchesi's method as an exposition of the true art of the Italian school of singing, inclusive of the dramatic element, especially valuable when, he complains, the tendency is to treat the vocal art as though it were a question of the capture of barricades. In 1865 she accepted a professorship at the Cologne Conservatory, but resigned it in 1868 to return to Vienna to resume her post as teacher of singing at the Conservatory, which she held for ten years. She resigned her appointment at the Conservatory in 1878, but continued for some time to reside and teach in Vienna, where her services to art met with full recognition.

From the Emperor of Austria Marchesi received the Cross of Merit of the first class, and she held decorations and medals from the King of Saxony, the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, the Emperor of Germany and the King of Italy. She was a member of the St. Cecilia Society in Rome and of the Academy of Florence. In 1881 she returned to Paris, where she prepared many of the greatest singers of the younger generation for a public career, notably Melba. She published a Method of Singing, and twenty-four books of exercises. Her reminiscences, dedicated to her daughter Blanche, at whose house in London she died, appeared in 1897.

(3) Blanche Marchesi de Castrone (b. Paris, 4 Apr. 1863; d. London, 15 Dec. 1940), soprano singer and teacher, daughter of the preceding. She was at first trained as a violinist, but from 1881 devoted herself to singing and, until her marriage with Baron A. Caccamisi, assisted her mother in teaching. In 1895 she appeared in Berlin and Brussels, and on 19 June 1896 gave a vocal recital in the small Queen's Hall, London. Subsequently she lived in England and enjoyed great success as a concert singer and as the teacher of many pupils. She made an operatic début in Prague in 1900 as Brunnhilde in 'Die Walküre', and occasionally appeared on the English stage with the Moody-Manners Company. She celebrated her 75th birthday with a song recital in London.

¹ Illustrated with sketches by the composer.

Blanche Marchesi's voice was not of the very finest quality, but she carried on magnificently the great technical traditions of her parents and was unexcelled as a highly intelligent and often strikingly histrionic interpreter.

B. T. & A. C., rev.

BIBL.—SORABJI, K. S., 'Blanche Marchesi', in 'Mi contra Fa' (London, n.d.).

Marchesi, Annibale (Duke). See Carapella ('Domiziana', choruses for). Durante (F., 'Flavio Valente', choruses); Fago ('Eustachio', choruses for). Hasse ('Draomira', incid. m.). Leo ('Sofronia', chorus).

MARCHESI, Luigi (Lodovico)¹ (b. Milan, 1755; d. Milan, 18 Dec. 1829).

Italian male soprano. His father, who played the horn in the orchestra at Modena, was his first teacher; but his wonderful aptitude for music and his beautiful voice soon attracted the attention of some amateurs, who persuaded the elder Marchesi to have the boy prepared for the career of a sopranoist. This was done at Bergamo, and young Marchesi was placed under the evirato Caironi and the tenor Albuio for singing, while his musical education was completed by the maestro di cappella, Fioroni, at Milan.

Marchesi made his début on the stage at Rome in 1774, in a female character, the usual introduction of a young and promising singer with a soprano voice and handsome presence. Towards the close of 1775 the Elector of Bavaria engaged Marchesi for his chapel, but his sudden death, two years later, put an end to this engagement, and the young singer went to Milan, where he performed the part of "second man", with Pacchierotti as first, and to Venice, where he played second to Millico. He was advanced in that same year to first honours at Treviso. In the next and following years he sang as "first man" at Munich, Padua and Florence, where he created a furore.

By 1778 Marchesi had worked his way to the great theatre of San Carlo at Naples, where he continued during two seasons. One of the last of castrati, he was now looked upon as the first singer in Italy and fought for by rival managers. He was once more at Milan in 1780. His portrait was engraved at Pisa, and the impressions were quickly bought up. He now sang in turn at Turin, Rome, Lucca, Vienna and Berlin, always with renewed success; and he went in 1785 to St. Petersburg with Sarti and Luiza Rosa Todi. The rigorous climate of Russia, however, filled him with alarm for his voice, and he fled rapidly back to Vienna, where he sang in Sarti's 'Giulio Sabino'.

¹ Sometimes called Marchesini.

In 1788 Marchesi appeared in London, singing in the same opera by Sarti, having just completed an engagement at Turin. His style of singing now seemed to Burney "not only elegant and refined to an uncommon degree, but often grand and full of dignity, particularly in the recitatives and occasional low notes". From this time till 1790 he continued to delight the English, appearing meanwhile at short intervals in the various capitals and chief cities of Europe. In 1794 he sang at Milan and was described as "all' attual servizio di S.M. il Re di Sardegna". He continued to sing there down to the spring of 1806, when he left the stage. He composed some songs, published in London (Clementi), in Vienna (Cappi) and at Bonn (Simrock). An air written by him, 'In seno quest' alma', was also printed.

A beautiful portrait of Marchesi was engraved (June 1790) by L. Schiavonetti, after R. Cosway, and a curious caricature (now rare) was published under the name of 'A Bravura at the Hanover Square Concert', by J. N[ixon], 1789, in which he is represented as a conceited coxcomb, bedizened with jewels.

J. M., abr.

MARCHESINI. See LUCCHESINA. MARCHESI (LUIGI).

MARCHETTI, Filippo (b. Bolognola, Macerata, 26 Feb. 1831; d. Rome, 18 Jan. 1902).

Italian composer. At the age of twelve he began to study with a master named Bindi, and in his fifteenth year he determined to make music his profession. In 1850 his parents sent him to Naples, where he was admitted as a paying student at the Real Collegio di San Pietro a Maiella. His principal instructor there was Carlo Conti, with whom he studied counterpoint and composition.

In 1854 Marchetti left Naples and returned home, where he devoted himself to the composition of an opera, 'Gentile da Varano', the libretto of which was written by his brother Raffaele. This work was produced at the Teatro Nazionale, Turin, in Feb. 1856, with so much success that the impresario of the theatre hastened to secure the performing rights of a second opera, 'La demente', upon which Marchetti was then engaged. This was produced at the Teatro Carignano, Turin, on 27 Nov. 1856, and in the following year it was revived in Rome and at Jesi. It was well received at both places, but Marchetti found it impossible to persuade any impresario to produce his next opera, 'Il paria', which in fact was never performed or published.

Marchetti fell back upon the composition of ballads and romances, of which he wrote many at this period of his career, though even these he found much difficulty in recommending to the publishers. In the year 1862, at his brother's suggestion, he moved from Rome to Milan, then the real centre of musical life in Italy. There he made the acquaintance of a young poet named Marcelliano Marcello, who persuaded him to undertake the composition of a new version of 'Romeo and Juliet', the libretto of which he had himself arranged from Shakespeare's tragedy. Marchetti hesitated to enter into rivalry with other composers who had used this subject, but Marcello succeeded in overcoming his scruples, and the new 'Romeo e Giulietta' was produced at Trieste on 25 Oct. 1865. Its success at first was only moderate, but when it was revived two years later at the Teatro Carcano at Milan it was very favourably received, in spite of the performances of Gounod's 'Roméo et Juliette' given at the Teatro alla Scala at the same time.

With 'Ruy Blas', his next work, which was produced at the Scala, Milan, on 3 Apr. 1869, Marchetti reached the zenith of his achievement. Written to a libretto based by Carlo d'Ormeville on Victor Hugo's drama, the opera speedily became popular in Italy and soon carried the composer's fame across the Alps. It was performed in London with no little success at Her Majesty's Theatre, under the management of Mapleson, on 24 Nov. 1877.

Marchetti's two remaining works, 'Gustavo Wasa' (Milan, Scala, 7 Feb. 1875) and 'Don Giovanni d' Austria' (Turin, Teatro Regio, 11 Mar. 1880) made little impression. After 1880 he wrote no more for the stage, but devoted his energies entirely to teaching. In 1881 he was appointed President of the Reale Accademia di Santa Cecilia in Rome and in 1885 he undertook the duties of director of the Liceo Musicale in the same city, a post which he held until his death.

Marchetti's fame as a composer was short-lived. Changes in musical taste soon made 'Ruy Blas' seem old-fashioned. He may be described as a typical Italian composer of the second rank. His capacity for sheer musical invention was limited; but in 'Ruy Blas', his most careful and most meritorious work, the musicianship is often admirable, the orchestration effective without vulgarity, while the composer displays a commendable feeling for characterization.

R. A. S., abr.

MARCHETTUS OF PADUA (b. Padua, ?; d. ?).

Italian 13th–14th-century theorist. Of his life nothing is known except that he was in the service of Rainier, Prince of Monaco, and that some of his works were written at Cesena and Verona. He was the author of two treatises, the 'Lucidarium in arte musicae planae' and the 'Pomerium artis musicae mensurabilis', both of which are printed in the third volume of Gerbert's 'Scriptores'. The dedications of these two books point to their having been completed later than 1309, though the Milan manuscript of the 'Lucidarium' is said to be dated 1274 and the Vatican manuscript of the 'Pomerium' 1283.

The 'Lucidarium' is remarkable for the chromaticism employed and for the division of the whole tone either into three-fifths and two-fifths (diatonic and enharmonic semitones) or into four-fifths and one-fifth (chromatic semitone and diesis). The 'Pomerium' is of great interest as marking the transition from the Franconian system of notation, in which the shortest musical note admitted was the semibreve, equal to one-third of a breve, to the ars nova of Philippe de Vitry and his successors, in which the minim and semiminim were differentiated and brought into the scheme of perfection and imperfection. Marchettus meets the growing need for notes of smaller value by reckoning any number of semibreves from two to twelve to the breve, and distinguishes their values by the addition or omission of tails above or below.¹ He also points out the differences between Italian and French notation. An epitome of the 'Pomerium' entitled 'Brevis compilatio Magistri Marchetti musici de Padua in arte musicae mensurate pro rudibus et modernis' is printed in the third volume of Coussemaker's 'Scriptores' from a 14th-century manuscript at Saint-Dié, which also contains the 'Lucidarium', the 'Ars mensurabilis musicae' of Franco and other musical treatises. Fétis's manuscript containing the 'Lucidarium', the 'Pomerium' and the 'Brevis compilatio' is now in the Royal Library at Brussels. Other manuscripts are at Florence, at Pisa and in the monastery of Einsiedeln.

Marchettus deserves credit for his attempt to amplify the means of musical expression, but his system of notation was too complex to become of practical utility and was soon displaced by the bolder and simpler methods of the ars nova. He suffered the penalty of failure and met with much abuse at the hands of some of his successors. In 1410 Prosdocius de Beldemandis wrote an 'Opusculum contra theoricam partem sive speculativam Lucidarii Marcheti Patavini', of which there is a manuscript copy at Bologna. In it he asserts that Marchettus was altogether ignorant of theory and scoffs at his presumption in posing as a scientific musician. Joannes Carthusiensis wrote that Marchettus deserved a schoolboy's whipping; and in the 'Musices opusculum' of Nicolaus Burtius (Bologna, 1487) the worst that the author can say of his opponent, Ramos de Pareja, is that he "imitated the crass stupidity and fatuity of Marchettus".

J. F. R. S.

See also Breve (M. on). Notation.
Marchi, Antonio. See Handel ('Alcina', lib.). Vivaldi (2 libs.).

¹ See Wolf, 'Geschichte der Mensural-Notation' (1904), p. 30.

MARCHISIO, Barbara (b. Turin, 6 Dec. 1833; d. Mira, 19 Apr. 1919).

Italian contralto singer. She was taught, together with her sister Carlotta, by Luigi Fabbri at Turin. She made her début as Adalgisa in Bellini's 'Norma' in Vienna in 1856 and then appeared with her sister at Turin in 1856-58, and they made a great success there, as also on tour throughout Italy and at the Paris Opéra on the revival of Rossini's 'Semiramide', in French, on 9 July 1860. They first appeared in England with equally great success at Land's concerts in London, St. James's Hall, 2 and 4 Jan. 1862, in duets by Rossini and Gabussi, and made a concert tour through the provinces with Willert Beale. They also made a success in 'Semiramide' at Her Majesty's Theatre, 1 May 1862, on account of their excellent duet singing, though separately their voices were coarse and harsh, their appearance was insignificant and they were indifferent actresses. They sang also at the Crystal Palace, twice at the New Philharmonic, at the Monday Popular Concerts, etc. Later they sang together abroad for some time. A. C., rev.

MARCHISIO, Carlotta (b. Turin, 8 Dec. 1835; d. Turin, 28 June 1872).

Italian soprano singer, sister of the preceding. Like Barbara, she learnt singing with Luigi Fabbri at Turin, and she made her début in the same part as her sister, in Bellini's 'Norma', at Madrid in 1856. Her subsequent career, so far as it coincides with her sister's, is described above. In London Carlotta appeared also as Isabella in Meyerbeer's 'Robert' on 14 June 1862 and as Donna Anna in Mozart's 'Don Giovanni' on 9 July. She married the Viennese singer Eugen Kuhn (1835-75), who sang with her at concerts and at Her Majesty's Theatre in London the same year under the name of Coselli and afterwards became a pianoforte manufacturer at Venice.

A. C., rev.

BIBL.—GORIN-MARCHISIO, EMMA, 'Le sorelle Marchisio (Milan, 1930).

MARCO ATTILIO REGOLO (Opera). See SCARLATTI (A.).

MARCO AURELIO (Opera). See STEFFANI.

MARCO SPADA (Opera). See AUBER.

MARCO VISCONTI (Opera). See PETRELLA.

MARCOCK, T. See MERRICOCKE.

Marconi, Guglielmo. See GUERRINI (Requiem for M.).

MARCOUX, Vanni (b. Turin, 12 June 1879).

French baritone singer. He first learned singing while studying for the law, but after being admitted to the bar he relinquished the latter and went to Paris to complete his vocal training under Boyer. He had a naturally fine voice, with a dramatic quality and ringing timbre, as well as the histrionic temperament fitting him for a stage career. After a successful début at Bayonne in 1899 he made his mark at Nice the same winter as Marcel in the first performance there of Puccini's 'La Bohème'. Then for four or five years he gained experience in France and also at the Brussels Théâtre de la Monnaie.

In 1905 Vanni Marcoux was engaged for London and among other parts sang at Covent Garden Basilio in 'Il barbiere' and created that of Vim-sci in Leoni's 'L'oracolo'. Later on (1908-14) he appeared in England in many of the leading baritone parts, his best being Mephistopheles, Scarpia and Marcel. During the same period he was singing with unfailing success at the Paris Opéra, where he created (Jan. 1909) the part of Colonna in Fédier's 'Monna Vanna'; but perhaps his chief triumph was the creation, at Monte Carlo in Feb. 1910, of Don Quixote in Massenet's 'Don Quichotte', which during the next six years he sang no fewer than 150 times in Paris alone. His American career began in 1912 at the Boston Opera House, with what was considered a singularly fine impersonation of Golaud in Debussy's 'Pelléas et Mélisande'. Subsequently he joined the Chicago Opera Company and remained with it for several years. H. K.

Marcus Argentarius. See ELGAR ('Feasting I watch', partsong).

MARCZEWSKI, Lucjan (b. Warsaw, 1879; d. Warsaw, 17 Apr. 1935).

Polish composer. He studied composition under Noskowski at the Warsaw Conservatory and wrote several beautiful songs which enjoyed great popularity among his countrymen. In his incidental music for plays by the Polish poet Stanisław Wyspiański he attempted to combine the achievements of the modern French school with characteristics of the ancient Greek scales. He lived in Warsaw as proprietor and director of a music school.

C. R. H.

MARÉCHAL, Charles Henri (b. Paris, 22 Jan. 1842; d. Paris, 10 May 1924).

French composer. He worked at first at solfège with A. Chevê and E. Baïste, studied the pianoforte with Chollat and harmony with B. Laurent, and finally, at the Paris Conservatoire, he studied the organ with Benoist, counterpoint with Chauvet and composition with Victor Massé. He was chorus master at the Théâtre-Lyrique in 1867 and was appointed inspector of musical education in 1869. He relinquished these posts and in 1870 obtained the Prix de Rome with the cantata 'Le Jugement de Dieu'. After his statutory sojourn in Rome he began to make his mark as a composer.

Maréchal's first work of importance was a sacred piece, 'La Nativité', performed in 1875; but he afterwards devoted himself to the theatre, for which he wrote the following, his first opera being also his best and most successful:

- 'Les Amoureux de Catherine' (libretto by Jules Barbier, based on Erckmann-Chatrian's novel), 1 act, prod. Paris, Opéra-Comique, 8 May 1876.
- 'La Taverne des Trabans', 3 acts (Prix Monbinne, 1876), prod. Paris, Opéra-Comique, 1881.
- 'L'Étoile', 1 act (1881).
- 'Dédamie', 2 acts, prod. Paris, Opéra, 1893.
- 'Calendal', 4 acts, prod. Rouen, 1894.
- 'Ping-Sin' (comp. 1895), prod. Paris, Opéra-Comique, 25 Jan. 1918.
- 'Daphnis et Chloé', 3 acts, prod. Paris, Théâtre-Lyrique, 1899.

Maréchal also wrote incidental music for several plays, including two by Erckmann-Chatrian, 'L'Ami Fritz' and 'Les Rantzau', an adaptation of Dostoyevsky's 'Crime and Punishment', etc. For the concert-room he wrote 'Le Miracle de Maim', a sacred drama (1887); 'Esquisses vénitiennes' (1894) and 'Antar' (1897) for orchestra; 'Les Vivants et les morts' for vocal quartet and orchestra (1886); minor choral and instrumental compositions. He published 'Souvenirs d'un musicien' (1907) and 'Lettres et souvenirs' (1920). G. F., rev.

MARÉCHAL FERRANT, LE (Opera).

See PHILIDOR.

MARÉCHAL, Maurice (b. Dijon, 3 Oct. 1892).

French violoncellist. He took the first cello prize at the Paris Conservatoire in 1911. After a remarkable début his career was interrupted by the first world war, but in 1919 he again took up his musical work. He was soloist at the Concerts Lamoureux in 1919, at the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire in 1920 and at the London Royal Philharmonic Society in 1923. He became a member of the Board of examiners at the Paris Conservatoire in 1921.

Maréchal has made a success throughout Europe and in the U.S.A. He played a number of compositions for the first time, such as the Duo of Ravel (S.I.M., Apr. 1922) and the Trio of Guy-Ropartz (Société Nationale, 1921). M. P.

MAREK, Czesław (b. Przemyśl, nr. Lwów, 16 Sept. 1891).

Polish pianist, teacher and composer. He first studied under S. Niewiadomski at Lwów, then at the Academy of Music in Vienna, to which he had obtained a scholarship, and from 1909 to 1913 studied pianoforte under Leschetizky and composition under K. Weigl. Later he took a course in composition and conducting under Pfitzner at Strasbourg.

Marek gave pianoforte lessons at the Lwów Musical Institute in 1911 and at Berr's Conservatory at Zürich in 1916-19. For a year (1929-30) he was professor of composition and director of the State Conservatory of Poznań. He appeared as pianist on the concert platform in Switzerland, France, Austria and Germany between 1916 and 1928. Since 1915, with short intervals, he has been permanently residing at Zürich, becoming a naturalized Swiss citizen in 1932, teaching pianoforte and developing the famous Leschetizky method into one of his own.

As composer Marek belongs to the modernists. In 1927 his 'Sinfonia' won the first prize at the International "Schubertwettbewerb" in Vienna. In 1930 Prof. Z. Jachimecki¹, describing Marek's compositions, wrote thus: "As a composer he is rather of the cerebral than emotional type; nevertheless his works have the power of creating the atmosphere of real poetry."

Marek's works include the following:

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 'Meditations' (1911-13).
- 'Capriccio' (1914).
- 'Sinfonietta' (1914-16).
- 'Suite' (1926).
- 'Sinfonia' (1927).

VIOLIN AND ORCHESTRA

- 'Serenade' (1916-18).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- 'Petite Suite' for 3 wind insts. (1935).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- Sonata (1914).
- 'Berceuse' (1926).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- Variations (1911).
- 'Ballade' (1912).
- 'Triptych', 3 preludes and fugues (1913).
- 'Echos de la jeunesse' for 2 pfs. (1937).

SONGS

- 5 Songs (Lenau) (1915).
- 'Country Scenes' (1929).
- 'Peasant Songs' (1934).

The two last works were also scored for voice and orchestra. He has also composed many works for men's and mixed chorus a cappella and for harp.

C. R. H.

MAREK, Stanisław (b. ?; d. Szczyrzyc, 19 Apr. 1817).

Polish musician. He was a Cistercian monk and distinguished himself as conductor of the choir at the Cistercian monastery at Szczyrzyc.

C. R. H.

Marenco, Leopoldo. See Scontrino ('Matilda', lib.; 'Celeste', overture).

MARENZIO, Luca (b. Coccaglio nr. Brescia, 1553; d. Rome, 22 Aug. 1599).

Italian composer. It is uncertain where and under whom he studied, and if he was at the cathedral of Brescia under Giovanni Contino, it must have been as a choir-boy aged twelve to fourteen, during Contino's second appointment there in 1565-67.² Einstein thinks it more likely that Marenzio learnt his craft at Verona, Mantua or Rome, most probably the latter, if there is any truth in the report that he was in service there during the 1570s to Cardinal Cristoforo Madruzzo or his nephew Lodovico.¹

¹ 'Polska, jej dzieje i kultura' ('Poland, her History and Culture'), section on Music by Z. Jachimecki (Warsaw, 1930).

² Alfred Einstein, 'The Italian Madrigal', II, 609.

On 1 Aug. 1579 Marenzio, certainly in Rome by that time, entered the service there of Cardinal Luigi d' Este, younger brother of Alfonso d' Este, Duke of Ferrara, to whom he remained attached until his patron's death on 30 Dec. 1586. The composer received a mere five scudi a month as a salary, but was no doubt well kept in the luxurious household of the pleasure-loving cardinal, whom family tradition, not any vocation, had dedicated to the Church; and although Rome was the cardinal's headquarters, he spent a good deal of time at Ferrara, where he must often have taken Marenzio, who would thus have come into personal touch with the two court poets, Torquato Tasso and Giovanni Battista Guarini. He must also have been connected, however slightly, with the related ducal house of Mantua, and have known the musicians attached to both courts, including Luzzaschi, Striggio and Wert.

In Apr. 1581 Marenzio was at Venice, where he signed the dedication of his second book of madrigals to Duke Alfonso, and probably himself saw the volume through the press. In the dedication of a later volume (1585) to the Grand Duchess of Tuscany he complains of the poor salary paid him by the cardinal and, probably as a consequence of this, he entered the service of the Medici family at Florence in 1588. He had previously applied for the post of maestro di cappella at the church of Santa Barbara at Mantua, but this was withheld from him on the advice of Palestrina, who was highly regarded by the Duke of Mantua and for some reason disliked Marenzio. In May 1589, at the marriage of Ferdinando de' Medici and Christina of Lorraine, Marenzio's 'Intermedi e concerti' were performed at Florence; but his appointment came to an end in Nov. of that year, when he returned to Rome. His fame was considerable by that time and he came under the patronage of various nobles and high ecclesiastics. Virginio Orsini, Duke of Bracciano, to whom he dedicated his fifth book of madrigals (1591), placed an apartment of his villa at Marenzio's disposal. The composer also had rooms at the Vatican through the influence of Cinzio Aldobrandini, nephew of Pope Clement VIII, and there he taught John Dowland in Sept. and Oct. 1595.²

At the end of that year Marenzio made a journey to Poland, where he attended the court of Sigismund III at Cracow with some other Italian musicians. The length of his stay there is not known, but he was certainly at Venice in Oct. 1598 and probably back in Rome shortly after that. He died in the garden of the Villa Medici on Monte Pincio and was buried in the church of San Lorenzo in Lucina.

Marenzio has been said to have been at some time a singer or organist in the papal chapel, but there is no evidence of this, and he is a rare case of an Italian musician of his time who never held a church appointment. Even his work in connection with the revision of the liturgy, entrusted after Palestrina's death to Nanini, Dragoni, Valesio and himself, was insignificant, and, perhaps because he showed little or no interest in it, Giovanni Troiani was before long appointed in his place.

On the other hand Marenzio is the greatest Italian master of the madrigal, not only of his time, but of any time during its florescence. He chose his words fastidiously from the great Italian poets ranging from as early as Dante and Petrarch, by way of Sannazaro, to his contemporaries — and almost certainly familiars — Tasso and Guarini. His variety is endless, his technical skill, especially in the handling of complicated canonic writing, equal to any demands of polyphony, his declamation both apt to the words and dramatically true, his eye, as it were, for musical gesture extremely keen and his feeling for mood, situation and atmosphere extraordinarily penetrating. He is not a modernist like Monteverdi, much less an experimenter with curious harmony like Gesualdo, but he summed up and expanded the traditions of the Flemish and the earlier Italian madrigal with a surpassing mastery and by sheer superiority of genius imparted to the madrigal a vitality the like of which it had not known before and was after him to be maintained in England rather than in Italy.

That he was rated very highly in England is certain. His works were introduced there in 1588, in the collection entitled 'Musica Transalpina', and two years later a similar book was printed, in which 23 out of 28 numbers were by him, with English translations.³ His reputation was soon established, for in 1595 John Dowland, "not being able to dissemble the great content he had found in the proffered amity of the most famous Luca Marenzio", thought the mere advertisement of their correspondence would add to the chance of his own works being well received. Burney does not hesitate to say that the madrigal style was brought to the highest degree of perfection by Marenzio's superior genius, and that the publication of the 'Musica Transalpina' gave birth to that passion for

¹ Loc. cit.

² He had written to Dowland on 13 July of that year. See Dowland's 'First booke of Songs or Ayres' (1597), reprinted by Fellowes, Eng. Sch. of Lutenist Song Writers, Vol. I.

³ 'First Part of Italian Madrigals Englished . . .', published by Thomas Watson (1590).

madrigals which became so prevalent in England when English composers so happily contributed to gratify it.¹

The biography outlined above, so far as it goes, represents the latest research, especially Alfred Einstein's²; but various contradictory statements were once made which it may be worth reproducing in part from earlier editions of this Dictionary, since not all their details are as yet finally disposed of, and may even now contain a grain of truth where doubtful periods of Marenzio's career are concerned.

Donato Calvi, writing in 1664³, anxious to claim Marenzio as a native of Bergamo, traces his descent from the noble family of Marenzi and finds in their pedigree a Luca Marenzo. He adds further details to Rossi's account, how the King of Poland knighted the composer on his departure, how warmly he was welcomed by the court of Rome on his return, how Cardinal C. Aldobrandini behaved like a servant rather than a patron to him. We are also there told that he was then a singer in the papal chapel (though on this point compare later statements), and that there was a grand musical service at his funeral.

In the next account Brescia again puts in a claim, and Leonardo Cozzando⁴ asserts that Marenzio was born at Coccaglio, that his parents were poor and that the whole expense of his living and education was defrayed by Andrea Masetto, the village priest. To Cozzando we are also indebted for a special article on Marenzio's great merits as a singer, and after reading of him under the head of Brescian composers, we find him further mentioned under "Cantori".⁵

A fourth account, quite independent of these, and one of the earliest of all, is that given by Henry Peacham, published in 1622.⁶ Of the composers of his time, Byrd is his favourite, Victoria and Lassus coming next. Then of Marenzio he says:

For delicious Aire and sweete Invention in Madrigals, Luca Marenzio excelleth all other whosoever, having published more Sets than any Authour else whosoever: and to say truth, hath not an ill Song, though sometime an oversight (which might be the Printer's fault) of two eights or fifts escape him; as betweene the Tenor and Base in the last close, of I must depart all haplesse: ending according to the nature of the Dittie most artificially, with a Minim rest. His first, second, and third parts of Thyrsis, Veggio dolce mio ben che fa hoggi mio Sole Cantava, or sweete singing Amaryllys, are Songs, the Muses themselves might not have bene ashamed to have had composed. Of stature and complexion,

¹ History, III, 201, 119; modern ed., II, 165 f.

² Op. cit.

³ "Scena letteraria de gli scrittori bergamaschi" (Bergamo, 1664).

⁴ "Libreria Bresciana" (Brescia, 1685).

⁵ "Vago e curioso ristretto . . . dell' historia Bresciana" (Brescia, 1694).

⁶ "The Compleat Gentleman" (London, 1622).

⁷ The proper titles of these, which are given in the above confused manner in Peacham's book, are—"Tirsi morir, volea" (a 5); "Veggio dolce mio bene" (a 4); "Che fa hogg' il mio sole" (a 5) and "Cantava la più vaga" (a 5), the English words, "Sweete Singing Amaryllys", being adapted to the music of the last.

hee was a little and blacke man: he was Organist in the Popes Chappell at Rome a good while, afterward hee went into Poland, being in displeasure with the Pope for overmuch familiaritie with a kinswoman of his (whom the Queene of Poland, sent for by Luca Marenzio afterward, she being one of the rarest women in Europe, for her voyce and the Lute:); but returning, he found the affection of the Pope so estranged from him, that hereupon hee tooke a conceipt and died.

Einstein thinks this story doubtful, and although he does not discountenance it as impossible, his opinion is that the madrigal in the last book of 1599, 'Dura legge d' Amor', which certainly deals with the subject of unhappy love in a serious manner, not in the allegorical way so common at the time, originated rather than confirmed such a story.

Marenzio's madrigals, which number well over two hundred, were published as follows:

Book I for 5 voices (1580), dedicated to Cardinal Luigi d' Este.

Book I for 6 v. (1581), ded. to Duke Alfonso d' Este.

Book II for 5 v. (1581), ded. to Lucrezia d' Este, Duchess of Urbino.

Book III for 5 v. (1582), ded. to the Accademici Filarmonici di Verona.

Book II for 6 v. (1584), ded. to Cardinal Louis de Guise.

Book IV for 5 v. (1584), ded. to Girolamo Ruis.

Book V for 5 v. (1584), ded. to Nicola Pallavicino.

'Madrigali spirituali' for 5 v. (1584), ded. to Lodovico Bianchetti.

Book III for 6 v. (1585), ded. to Bianca Capello, Grand Duchess of Tuscany.

Madrigals for 4 v. (1585), ded. to Marc' Antonio Serlupi.

Book IV for 6 v. (1586), ded. to Marchesse di Pisani.

Madrigals for 4, 5 & 6 v. (1587), ded. to Conte Mario Bevilacqua.

Book V for 6 v. (1591), ded. to Virginio Orsini, Duke of Bracciano.

Book VI for 5 v. (1594), ded. to Cinzio Aldobrandini.

Book VI for 6 v. (1595), ded. to Margherita Gonzaga.

Book VII for 5 v. (1595), ded. to Diego de Campo.

Book VIII for 5 v. (1596), ded. to Ferrante Gonzaga di Guastalla.

Book IX for 5 v. (1599), ded. to Vincenzo Gonzaga, Duke of Mantua.

Marenzio also published 5 books of 'Villanelle ed arie alla napoletana' (containing 113 for 3 voices and one for 4); a Mass for 8 voices; 2 books of 4-part motets (1588 and 1592); one book of 12-part motets (1614); a book of 'Sacri concerti' (1616); a complete series of motets for all church festivals.

The first five books of 5-part madrigals were printed "in uno corpo ridotto" in 1593 and a similar edition of those in 6 parts appeared in 1594. They contain 78 and 76 pieces respectively.

J. R. S.-B., rev. & adds.

BIBL.—EINSTEIN, ALFRED, 'The Italian Madrigal' (Princeton & London, 1949), pp. 608-87 et passim.

ENGEL, HANS, 'Marenzios Madrigale und ihre dichterischen Grundlagen' (Acta mus., 1937).

See also Haussmann (Ger. ed. of villanelle). Madrigal. Sistine Choir. Watson (T., epistle to M.).

MAREŠ (Maresch), Jan Antonín (b. Chotěboř, 1719⁸; d. St. Petersburg, 11 June 1794).

Russian musician of Czech birth. He received his first education at the Cistercian monastery in his birthplace. At Dresden he was an excellent pupil of Hampel in horn playing and in Berlin he took cello lessons with the same success. He soon gained a considerable reputation as a teacher, and one of his pupils recommended him to a Russian grandee, Count Bestuzhev-Ryumin. In 1748 Mareš went to Russia to stay there for good. He became a prominent member and instructor of the count's orchestra. From 1752 he was employed in the imperial orchestra as a horn player and from 1774 as a cellist. After proving his abilities as an instructor of Prince Narishkin's hunting-band (1751-57) he was called to assume the same post in the imperial hunting-band. He continued to carry out all these duties until 1789, when he had to retire after a paralytic stroke. He is by no means an original inventor, but certainly the most important organizer and reformer of the Russian horn band. G. Č.

⁸ The exact date of his birth cannot be traced, all the Chotěboř registers before 1832 having been destroyed by fire.

BIBL. — HINRICHSSEN, J. C., 'Entstehung, Fortgang und jetzige Beschaffenheit der russischen Jagdmusik' (St. Petersburg, 1796).

FINDEISEN, N. F., 'Essays in the History of Music in Russia', II, iv (Moscow, 1929), in Russ. an.
YERIKOV, K. A., 'Russian Horn Music' (Leningrad & Moscow, 1948), in Russian.

MARESCALL¹, Samuel (b. Tournai, May 1554; d. Basel, c. 1640).

Flemish organist and composer. He went to Basel as a young man and became organist of the cathedral there. In 1576 he became professor at the University and the following year became a burghess of Basel. In 1606 he published Ambrosius Lobwasser's German versified translation of the Psalter with the original French tunes as in Goudimel, but with the melody in the soprano; also some additional German hymns and tunes. Ten years later appeared 'Psalmen Davids', containing hymns by Luther and others, again with the melodies transferred to the treble (Basel, 1616). In 1622 followed 'Melodiae suaves et concinnæ Psalmorum aliquot atque Hymnorum spiritualium'. Very late in his long life, when he was over eighty, he made various collections of organ arrangements of French psalm tunes and other French and German songs²: 'Psalmen Davids' (35 pieces), dated 8 Sept. 1638; 'Samuel Marescallus Tornacensis Flandricus, m. prop. scripsit aetat. sua 85' (22 pieces), dated 22 Aug. 1639; 38 pieces on French and Italian motets, dated 1640 (aged 86); 109 pieces, dated 23 Apr. 1640. He also wrote a treatise, 'Porta Musica, mit einem kurtzen Bericht und Anleitung zu den Violon' (Basel, 1589). J. R. M., adds.

MARESCOTTI, André (b. Geneva, 30 Apr. 1902).

¹ It seems likely that the name was Maréchal and that it became Germanized when the composer settled at Basel.

² Many of these may have been made earlier and only collected near the end of Marescall's life.

Swiss organist and composer. He studied at Geneva under Alexandre Mottu, Charles Chaix and Joseph Lauber, and in Paris under Roger-Ducasse. In 1924 he became organist and choirmaster at the church of the Sacré-Cœur at Geneva, where he also held a teaching post at the Conservatory. His music is highly coloured and extremely refined in sound-values. Its style is not unlike that of Chabrier in some respects. His pianoforte works have become especially well known by their brilliant and elegant qualities which yet eschew superficiality. He also wrote a treatise of modern orchestration (Paris, 1950). The following are his chief works:

Ballet 'Les Anges du Greco'.
Incidental music to 'Où l'étoile s'arrête', mystery play by Timmerman.

'Messe Saint-André' (1927).

2 Motets.

'Huit Noëls savoysiens' for chorus.

'Trois Chants savoysiens' for chorus.

Overture for full orch. (1930).

'Prélude au Grand Meaulnes' for orch.

'Aubade' for orch. (1936).

'Concert carougeois' for orch.

'La Lampe d'argile' (R. Morax), symph. legend.

'Six Esquisses' for orch. (1951).

3 Suites for pf.

'Esquisses', 'Fantasque' & 'Croquis' for pf.

'Trois Mélodies' for voice & pf.

K. V. F.

Margaret (Rose), Princess. See Elgar (ded. 'Nursery Suite').

MARGHERITA D'ANJOU (Opera). See MEYERBEER.

MARGOT (Opera). See TURINA.

MARGOT LA ROUGE (Opera). See DELIUS.

MARGUERITE (Opera). See BOIELDIEU, A. L. V.

MARIA ANTONIA WALPURGIS (b. Munich, 18 July 1724; d. Dresden, 23 Apr. 1780).

German amateur composer. She was the daughter of the Elector of Bavaria, afterwards Emperor Charles VII. She learnt music from Giovanni Ferrandini and after her marriage in 1747 to the Electoral Prince Frederick Christian of Saxony continued her studies with Porpora and later with Hasse at Dresden. She was a member of the Arcadian Academy in Rome, and the initials of her academical name, Ermelinda Talea Pastorella Arcaûa, were used by her to sign her compositions. The most important of these were two operas. The first was 'Il trionfo della fedeltà'³, set to an Italian libretto written by herself, with alterations by Metastasio, and produced at Dresden in the summer of 1754. Hasse is said to have helped her with the orchestration. The other, 'Talestri, regina delle Amazoni', again with a libretto of her own, was given at the castle of Nymphenburg near Munich on 6 Feb. 1760, and not heard at Dresden until 24 Aug. 1763.⁴

³ This is not identical with a pasticcio of the same name produced at Charlottenburg in Aug. 1753.

⁴ Mara made her début in a later Dresden performance, on 3 Dec. 1767.

The scores of both works were published by Breitkopf, and both were translated into German, the former probably and the latter certainly by Johann Christoph Gottsched.

J. A. F.-M., adds. A. L.

BIBL. — FÜRSTENAU, M., 'Maria Antonia Walpurgis, Kurfürstin von Sachsen' (M.f.M., Vol. XI, No. 10, 1879).

DREWES, HEINZ, 'Maria Antonia Walpurgis als Komponistin' (Leipzig, 1934).

See also HASSE ('Conversione di Sant' Agostino', lib.).

MARIA DI ROHAN (Opera). See DONIZETTI.

MARIA DI RUDENZ (Opera). See DONIZETTI.

MARIA EGIZIACA (Opera). See RESPIGHI.

Maria, Santa. See Moser (R., 'Gaukler unserer lieben Frau', incid. m.).

MARIA, Signora. See LINDELHEIM.

MARIA THERESA (in Ger. Theresia) SYMPHONY. The familiar name of Haydn's Symphony No. 48, in C major, composed in 1773 and so named because it was written for a visit of the Empress Maria Theresa to Prince Esterházy at Esterházy that year.

MARIAGE AUX LANTERNES, LE (Operetta). See OFFENBACH.

MARIAGE DE TÉLÉMAQUE, LE (Opera). See TERRASSE.

MARIAGES SAMNITES, LES (Opera). See GRÉTRY.

MARIANI, Angelo (b. Ravenna, 11 Oct. 1822; d. Genoa, 13 June 1873).

Italian conductor and composer. He began to study the violin when quite young, under Pietro Casolini; later on he had instruction in harmony and composition from a monk named Levrini, of Rimini, who was a celebrated contrapuntist. He was at the Liceo Filarmonico at Bologna, where he had instruction from Rossini. It was in 1844, at Messina, that he assumed the baton, and after several engagements in different Italian theatres he was appointed, in 1847, conductor of the Court Theatre in Copenhagen. While there he wrote a Requiem Mass for the funeral of Christian VIII. At the beginning of 1848 he left Denmark and went to Italy to fight in the ranks of the volunteers for the freedom of his country. At the end of the war he was called to Constantinople, where his ability won him the admiration of the sultan, who made him many valuable presents; and Mariani, as a mark of gratitude, composed a hymn which he dedicated to him. In Constantinople also he wrote two grand cantatas, 'La fidanzata del guerriero' and 'Gli esuli', both works reflecting the aspirations and attempts of the Italian movement.

Mariani returned to Italy in 1852, landing at Genoa, where he was at once invited to be the conductor of the Teatro Carlo Felice. In a short time he reorganized the orchestra so as to make it the first in Italy. His fame soon filled the country and spread abroad; he had offers of engagements from London, St. Petersburg and Paris, but he would never accept them; he had fixed his headquarters at Genoa and only absented himself for short periods at a time, to conduct at Bologna, at Venice and other important Italian towns.

Mariani exercised an extraordinary personal fascination on all those who were under his direction. No matter who was the composer, he always threw himself heart and soul into the music he conducted at the moment. Great masters as well as young composers were happy to receive his advice. At rehearsal nothing escaped him in the orchestra or on the stage. On 1 Nov. 1871 he introduced 'Lohengrin' at the Teatro comunale of Bologna and, thanks to his efforts, the opera was such a success that it was performed through the season several times a week — and he had only nine orchestral rehearsals for it! On this occasion Wagner sent him a large photograph of himself, under which he wrote "Evviva Mariani".

Besides the works already named, and other orchestral pieces, Mariani published several collections of songs, all of which are charmingly melodious: 'Rimembranze del Bosforo', 'Il Trovatore nella Liguria', 'Liete e tristi rimembranze', 'Otto pezzi vocali', 'Nuovo album vocale'.

F. R. (ii), abr.

BIBL. — MANFIOVANI, T., 'Angelo Mariani' (Rome, 1921).

ZOPPI, UMBERTO, 'Mariani, Verdi e la Stolz' (Milan, 1947).

See also Verdi (Stolz M.'s mistress).

Mariani, Tommaso. See Pergolesi ('Contadina astuta' lib.).

Marianus Scotus. See Aaron Scotus.

MARIAZELL MASS. The familiar name of Haydn's Mass in C major, composed in 1782 for the Benedictine monastery at Mariazell.

MARIĆ, Ljubica (b. Kragujevac, Serbia, 1909).

Yugoslav composer. She studied first in Belgrade and then went to Prague to complete her musical education. Her early work was much influenced by Alois Hába, whose pupil she was in Prague. Works of this period include a Suite for quarter-tone pianoforte, a wind Quintet, a string Quartet and 'Music for Orchestra'. She joined the Yugoslav partisans during the second world war and endured the hardships of their struggles against the Nazi invaders. In 1945 she was appointed junior professor at the Belgrade Academy of Music.

Ljubica Marić is regarded as Yugoslavia's leading woman composer. Her later works show much modification of her harmonic idiom and considerable individuality and originality of expression. They include some chamber music, a fine Sonata for violin and pianoforte, and studies, preludes, sketches, etc., for pianoforte. K. T.

MARIE (Opera). See HÉROLD.

MARIE-MAGDELEINE (Opera). See MASSENET.

MARIE STUART (Opera). See NIEDERMEYER.

MARIÉS DE LA TOUR D'EIFFEL, LES. Ballet by five composers belonging to the group of "Les Six", scenario by Jean Cocteau, produced Paris, Théâtre des Champs-Élysées, 18 June 1921.

See also Auric. Honegger. Milhaud. Poulenc. Tailleferre.

Mariette, François Auguste Ferdinand (Mariette Bey). See Aida (Verdi). Verdi ('Aida', scenario).

Marigliani, Ercole. See Monteverdi (C., 'Andromeda', lib.). Monteverdi (G. C., 'Rapimento di Proserpina', lib.).

MARIMBA. A curious instrument in use in the southern parts of Mexico. In its primitive form it is of the wooden harmonica species, but is much larger, of more extended range, and has a sound-box to each note. Its compass is five octaves extending upwards from A. A large table-like frame, five or six feet in length, on legs, supports a graduated series of strips of hard and well-seasoned wood. Below each of these is fixed an oblong cedar box equally graduated in size. The box, which serves as a resonator, is entirely closed except at the top, but has a small hole covered with thin bladder at the lower end. The wooden note being struck with a drumstick has its vibrations increased by the resonator with the addition of a peculiar buzzing sound. The instrument, which also bears another name, Zapotecano, is to be played by four performers, each armed with a pair of drumsticks varying in size and weight, the heads generally of soft crude indiarubber. A description, with illustrations from photographs, is to be seen in Mus. T. for May 1901.

The marimba is also known in Africa, its original home, where it is formed in a similar but rather more primitive fashion, gourds taking the place of the wooden sound-boxes.

F. K.

BIBL.—NADEL, SIEGFRIED, 'Marimba-Musik' (Vienna & Leipzig, 1931).

See also Xylophone and Marimba.

MARIMBA GONGS. A modern instrument which takes its name from the foregoing but is akin to the Glockenspiel in effect, though softer and more "woolly" in sound. It consists of a series of bell-metal plates fitted with resonators which produce a fairy-like tone.

N. C. G., adds.

Marin, B. See Dallapiccola (2 choruses; 4 songs).

MARIN DE LA GUERRE, Élisabeth. See LA GUERRE.

MARIN, José (b. Madrid, 1619; d. Madrid, 17 Mar. 1699).

Spanish tenor singer and composer. In 1644 he was engaged as tenor in the choir of the Convent of the Incarnation at Madrid. Twelve years later, however, he is mentioned by a contemporary diarist as being one of three notorious high-waymen, imprisoned for robbery with violence. Marin and one of the others are described as belonging to the clergy; and Marin is further identified by the description músico de la Encarnación. He is called the best musician in Madrid, but one who had already committed a murder and had fled to Rome and there been ordained priest. He was put to the torture, deprived of his orders and sentenced to banishment for ten years. Meanwhile he was strictly confined in chains; but he managed to escape and lived to be a celebrated musician, known in Italy as well as Spain. He died in old age, full of honour; his death was announced in the official gazette. His songs, with continuo or with accompaniment definitely written for the guitar, have something approaching the quality of Purcell. Examples are given by Pedrell in his 'Teatro lírico', Vol. IV (1897); his manuscripts are preserved in the Bibl. Nac., Madrid, and other songs by him are found in a manuscript in the Bibl. Marciana, Venice (Cod. 470, Gir. Contarini). J. B. T.

MARIN, Marie-Martin Marcel de, Vicomte (b. Saint-Jean de Luz, Bayonne, 8 Sept. 1769; d. ?).

French harpist, violinist and composer of Venetian descent. Fétis characterizes his harp compositions as truly classical. On his second visit to Italy in 1783 he was elected member of the Arcadians in Rome. At the outbreak of the French Revolution he went to London, where he met with great success, and some of his harp sonatas, etc., were published by Clementi in 1799–1800. He settled afterwards at Toulouse. He wrote compositions for harp and for violin, sonatas and chamber music, as well as an account of his varied adventures. He was still living in 1861. E. v. d. s.

MARINE TRUMPET. See TRUMPET MARINE. (This is the only correct English name for the instrument, which has nevertheless often been wrongly called "marine trumpet".)

MARINI, Biagio (b. Brescia, ?; d. Venice, 20 Mar. 1665).

Italian violinist and composer. He was born before 1597, was employed as a violinist at Venice in 1617 and was director of the music at the Church of Sant' Eufemia at Brescia in 1620. In 1622 he entered the service of Ferdinando Gonzaga at Parma and in 1626 was maestro della musica to the Duke of Bavaria at Munich. He was at Düsseldorf about 1640 and in 1653 was maestro to the Accademia della Morte at Ferrara, and in the following year to the Church of Santa Maria della Scala at Milan. At Padua he was a member of the Academy of the Occulti.

Marini is important as one of the earliest of those Italian violinists who published concerted instrumental music. The following is a list of the most important:

- Op.*
1. 'Affetti musicali . . . symfonie, canzone, sonate, balletti, arie, brandi, gagliarde e corenti, a 1, 2, 3' (for violins, cornets and other sorts of instruments). Venice, 1617.
 2. 'Madrigale et symfonie, a 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.' Venice, 1618.
 3. 'Arie, madrigali et corenti, a 1, 2, 3.' Venice, 1620. (These two books contain vocal as well as instrumental pieces.)
 5. 'Scherzi e canzonette a 1 e 2 voci.' Parma, 1622.
 6. 'Le lagrime d' Erminia in stile recitativo.' Parma, 1623.
 7. 'Canto per le musiche di camera concerti, a 4-6 voci, ed instrumenti.' Venice, 1634.
 8. 'Sonate, symphonie, canzoni pass' emezzi, balletti, corenti, gagliarde, e ritornelli a 1-6 voci, per ogni sorte d' instrumenti . . . con altre curiose e moderne inventioni.' Venice, 1626.
 9. 'Madrigaletti, a 1-4 voci.' Venice, 1635. (The only known copies of this and of 7 are in the Ch. Ch. Lib., Oxford.)
 13. 'Compositioni varie per musica di camera, a 2-5 voci.' Venice, 1641.
 15. 'Corona melodica ex diversis sacrae musices floribus connata, 2-6 voc. ac instrumentis.' Antwerp, 1644.
 16. 'Concerto terzo delle musiche da camera a 3-6 e più voci.' Milan, 1649.
 18. 'Salmi per tutti le solennità dell' anno . . . ad 1-3 voci.' Venice, 1653.
 20. 'Vespri per tutte le festività dell' anno, a 4 voci.' Venice, 1654.
 21. 'Lacrime di Davide sparse nel Miserere concertato in diversi modi a 2-4 e più voci.' Venice, 1655.
 22. 'Per ogni sorte d' istromento musicale diversi generi di sonate da chiesa e da camera, a 2-4.' Venice, 1655.

J. A. F.-M.

BIBL.—ISELIN, DORA J., 'Biagio Marini, sein Leben und seine Instrumentalwerke' (Basel, 1930).

MARINI, Fanny Goldberg. See GOLDBERG, JOSEPH.

Marini, Giovanni Battista. See Monteverdi (10 madrigals).

Marini, Girolamo Maria. See Nicolai (O., 'Templario', lib.).

MARINO, Carlo (Ambrosio) (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 17-18th-century violinist and composer. He was violinist at the church of Santa Maria Maggiore, Bergamo, in 1687. He composed solo cantatas and a large number of sonatas for two violins and bass with and without other instruments; also solo sonatas for violin and a book of 'Balletti, corenti, gighe, . . .' for 2 violins and cello or spinet.

E. V. d. S.

MARINO FALIERO (Opera). See DONIZETTI.

See also Bryon.

MARIÑO, Nibya (b. Montevideo, 23 Mar. 1920).

Uruguayan pianist. At the age of ten she broadcast a concerto in Montevideo. Three years later, while studying with Kolischer, she played the Schumann Concerto at the Colón Theatre in Buenos Aires under Ansermet. In 1935 she was sent by the Uruguayan government to Paris, where she studied with Ciampi and Cortot until the outbreak of war in 1939.

She now spends most of her time touring in the U.S.A. and South America. N. F.

MARINUZZI, Gino (i) (b. Palermo, 24 Mar. 1882; d. Milan, 17 Aug. 1945).

Italian conductor and composer. He studied at the Conservatory of Palermo, where his dramatic cantata 'Il sogno del poeta' was produced in 1899. His career as a conductor began at Catania. Subsequently he was at Palermo, Madrid and Trieste, and for many years in South America, where he conducted 'Parsifal' at Buenos Aires on 20 June 1913, before the work was released from Bayreuth's monopoly. In 1917 he went to Monte Carlo and conducted the first production of Puccini's 'La rondine'. In 1920 he succeeded Campanini at Chicago. After that he conducted in all the principal theatres of Italy. From 1915 to 1919 he was director of the Liceo Musicale of Bologna. He died by assassination.

Marinuzzi's works include two operas, 'Barberina' (Palermo, 1903) and 'Jacquerie' (libretto by Alberto Donaudy), first produced in Buenos Aires on 11 Aug. 1918, and subsequently given in Rio de Janeiro, Rome, Chicago and New York. A later opera was 'Palla de' mozza' (libretto by Giovacchino Forzano), produced at the Teatro alla Scala, Milan, on 5 Apr. 1932. He also wrote several works for orchestra: 'Andantino all' antica' for strings, flute and harp (1905); suite 'Siciliana' (1910); symphonic poem 'Sicania' (1912); 'Elegia' (1920); suite 'Romana' (1922); 'Rito nuziale' (1935). He also edited some old Italian music.

A. L., adds.

MARINUZZI, Gino (ii) (b. New York, 7 Apr. 1920).

Italian conductor and composer, son of the preceding. He studied at the Milan Conservatory under Paribeni, Renzo Bossi and Calace, and took diplomas in composition and pianoforte there in 1941. In 1946 he was appointed second conductor at the Opera in Rome. The following are among his chief compositions: 'Edward', ballad for solo voices, chorus and chamber orchestra; Concerto and 'Divertimento su un tema popolare' for orchestra; 'Concertino' for pianoforte, oboe, saxophone and strings, 'Suite concertante' for pianoforte and orchestra, 'Piccolo concerto' for violin and orchestra; also music for films and pianoforte works.

G. M. G.

MARIO (Giovanni Matteo), Cavaliere di Candia (b. Cagliari, 17 Oct. 1810¹; d. Rome, 11 Dec. 1883).

Italian tenor singer. He came of an old and noble family. His father had been a general in the Piedmontese army, and he himself, after ten years in the Turin Military Academy, was an officer in the Piedmontese Guard when he first went to Paris in 1836 and immediately became a great favourite in society. Never was youth more richly gifted for the operatic stage; beauty of voice, face and figure, with the most winning grace of manner, were all his. But he was then only an amateur and as yet unfitted for public singing, which his friends constantly suggested to him, even if he could reconcile his pride with the taking of such a step. Tempted as he was by the lavish offers made to him by Duponchel, the director of the Opéra, and pressed by the embarrassments created by expensive tastes, he still hesitated to sign his father's name to such a contract; but he was finally persuaded to do so at the house of the Comtesse de Merlin, and he compromised with his family pride by signing only the Christian name, under which he became afterwards so famous — Mario.

¹ Baptismal register, Cathedral of Santa Cecilia, Cagliari, 18 Oct. 1810.

He is said to have spent some time in study, guided by the advice of Michelet, Ponchard and the great singing-master Bordogni; but it cannot have been very long, nor the study very deep, for there is no doubt that he was a very incomplete singer when he made his first appearance. This was on 30 Nov. 1838, in the title-part of Meyerbeer's 'Robert le Diable'. Notwithstanding his lack of preparation and want of habit of the stage, his success was assured from the first moment by his delicious voice and graceful figure.

Mario remained at the Opéra during that year, but in 1840 he passed to the Italian Opera, for which his native tongue and manner better fitted him. In the meantime he had made his first appearance in London, where he continued to sing through many years of a long and brilliant career. His début there was in Donizetti's 'Lucrezia Borgia' on 6 June 1839; but, as Chorley observed:

the vocal command which he afterwards gained was unthought of; his acting did not then get beyond that of a southern man with a strong feeling for the stage. But physical beauty and geniality, such as have been bestowed on few, a certain artistic taste, a certain distinction — not exclusively belonging to gentle birth, but sometimes associated with it — made it clear, from Signor Mario's first hour of stage-life, that a course of no common order of fascination was begun.

After this Mario sang each season in Paris and London, improving steadily both in acting and singing, though in most of his parts he only followed his predecessors, it is true with a grace and charm which were peculiar to him. He showed himself undoubtedly the most perfect stage-lover ever seen, whatever may have been his other qualities or defects. But, like other tenors, including García and Nourrit, he was misguided enough to attempt the title-part of Mozart's 'Don Giovanni'.

As a singer of "romances" Mario has perhaps never been surpassed. The native elegance of his demeanour contributed not a little to his vocal success in the drawing-room. He was not often heard in oratorio, but he sang "Then shall the righteous" in 'Elijah' at the Birmingham Festival of 1849, and "If with all your hearts" in the same oratorio at Hereford in 1855. For the stage he was born, and to the stage he remained faithful during his artistic life. To the brilliance of his success in opera he brought one great helping quality, the eye for colour and all the important details of costume. Never was an actor more harmoniously and beautifully dressed for the characters he impersonated.

For five-and-twenty years Mario remained before the public of Paris, London and St. Petersburg, constantly associated with Giulia Grisi. In the earlier years (1843-46) of that brilliant quarter of a century he took the place of Rubini in the famous quartet, with Tamburini and Lablache; this, however, did not last long, and he soon remained alone with the sole remaining star of the original constellation, Grisi, to whom he was united, after the dissolution of her former marriage; and by her he had three daughters. He left the stage in 1867 and retired to Paris (his farewell appearance took place at Covent Garden in 1871), and then to Rome, where he died. About 1880 it became known that he was in reduced circumstances, and his friends got up a concert in London for his benefit.

J. M., abr.

BIBL. — PEARSE, C. M. & HIRD, F., 'The Romance of a Great Singer: a Memoir of Mario' (London, 1910).

MARION DELORME (Opera). See PONCHIELLI.

MARIONETTE THEATRE. See PUPPET THEATRE.

MARIOTTE, Antoine (b. Avignon, 22 Dec. 1875; d. Paris, 22 Dec. 1944).

French conductor and composer. He started life as a naval officer, but retired from the Navy in 1897 and, on the foundation of the Schola Cantorum in Paris, became a pupil of d'Indy there. He was conductor first of the orchestra at Saint-Étienne and afterwards at Lyons. In 1920 he was appointed director of the Conservatory at Orléans. It was during his period at Lyons that his opera 'Salomé', a setting of Oscar Wilde's play in its original French version, was produced there on 30 Oct. 1908 and involved him in difficulties with Richard Strauss, whose own opera on the subject had appeared in 1905; but Mariotte was able to prove that his work was actually written earlier. In 1910 'Salomé' was given in Paris, Geneva and Marseilles, and a Czech translation came out in Prague the following year. 'Le Vieux Roi' followed at Lyons in 1911, but after that no opera by Mariotte appeared until 'Léontine Sœurs' (Paris, 1924) and 'Esther, Princesse d'Israël', produced at the Paris Opéra on 5 May 1925. The latter was based on a play by André Dumas and Sébastien Leconte. 'Nele Dooryn' was not produced, but on 17 Feb. 1935 the Paris Opéra-Comique brought out the scènes rabelaisiennes 'Gargantua', to a libretto by Armory based on Rabelais. The following year he was appointed director of that theatre, and during his term of office there he was able to revive 'Gargantua' on 1 Dec. 1938. But he resigned in 1939.

The following are among Mariotte's non-operatic works:

- 'Avril', 'Pâques françaises' and 'Toujours' for unaccomp. chorus.
- 'Impressions urbaines' for orch.
- 'Kakemonos', suite for pf. & orch.
- 'En montagne', for woodwind trio & stg. 4tet. Sonata for pf.
- 'Sonatines d'automne' for pf.
- 50 'Canons expressifs' for pf.
- Other pf. works, songs, &c.

F. R.

MARITANA. Opera in 3 acts by Vincent Wallace. Libretto by Edward Fitzball, based on the play 'Don César de Bazan' by Adolphe Philippe d'Ennery and Philippe François Dumanoir. Produced London, Drury Lane Theatre, 15 Nov. 1845. 1st perf. in U.S.A., Philadelphia, 9 Nov. 1846. 1st on the Continent, Vienna, Theater an der Wien (trans. by A. J. Becher), 8 Jan. 1848.

Marivaux, Pierre Carlet de Chamblain de. See Poise ('Surprises de l'amour', opera).

MARKEVICH, Igor (b. Kiev, 27 July 1912).

Russian conductor and composer. His family emigrated at the 1917 Revolution and he lived in Switzerland until the age of fifteen. He then went to Paris, where he studied under Nadia Boulanger and became acquainted with Diaghilev, who took a great interest in him. He composed a 'Sinfonietta' (1928), a Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra, a 'Concerto grosso' (1929), a Cantata for soprano and male-voice chorus on a poem by Jean Cocteau (1930), a Serenade for violin, clarinet and bassoon (1930), 'Hymnes' for orchestra (1932), a 'Galop' for small orchestra (1933), a Psalm for soprano and orchestra (1934) and a Partita for pianoforte and orchestra (1936).

For the stage Markevich wrote two ballets, 'Rébus' (1931) and 'L'Envoi d'Icare' (1933). The mystical side of his nature is attested by a vast work based on Milton's 'Paradise Lost', a cantata in two parts (1935-1936), and by his 'Cantique d'Amour' (1937) and 'Le Nouvel Âge' (I.S.C.M. Festival, London, 1938).

Markovich was at one time greatly influenced by Stravinsky, but later liberated himself and found a more personal style. His music has a certain breathless energy, and he seeks to impart to it a deep humanitarian feeling. He has a high idea of his art, which should, he thinks, bear its part in the reshaping of the social order and enable us to penetrate more deeply into the world of the spirit.

A later work was 'Lorenzo il Magnifico', a cantata for soprano and orchestra, conducted by him in Rome on 20 Apr. 1941.

P. L. F., adds.

Markova, Alicia. See Ballet. Sadler's Wells (Ballet).

MARKULL, Friedrich Wilhelm (b. Reichenbach nr. Elbing, Prussia, 17 Feb. 1816; d. Danzig, 30 Apr. 1887).

German organist, pianist and composer. He studied composition and organ playing under Friedrich Schneider at Dessau. In 1836 he was appointed principal organist at St. Mary's Church, Danzig, and conductor of the Gesangverein there.

Markull enjoyed a high reputation as a pianist and gave excellent concerts of chamber music, besides acting as critic for the 'Danziger Zeitung'. His compositions include three operas, 'Maja und Alpino, oder Die bezauberte Rose' (1843), 'Der König von Zion' (1850) and 'Das Walpurgisfest' (1855); two oratorios, 'Johannes der Tauffer' and 'Das Gedachtniss der Entschlafenen', the latter produced by Spohr at Cassel in 1856, Psalm LXXXVI, several symphonies, numerous works for organ, voice and pianoforte, a 'Choralbuch' (1845) and arrangements.

H. S. O., adds.

Marlborough, Duke of. See Bononcini (2, funeral anthem, 1722).

Marlowe, Christopher. See Bowles ('Dr. Faustus', incid. m.). Busoni ('Doktor Faust', opera). Doktor Faust (Busoni). Heming (M., 'Tamburlane', symph. poem). Hopkins (A., 'Dr. Faustus', incid. m.). Mellers (opera on M.; voc. duct). Walton ('Passionate Shepherd', voice & orch.). Warlock (song).

MARMONTEL, Antoine François (b. Clermont-Ferrand, 16 July 1816; d. Paris, 15 Jan. 1898).

French pianist and teacher. He was a pupil of Zimmermann at the Paris Conservatoire, where he obtained the first pianoforte prize in 1832. Succeeding his master in 1848, he taught the instrument at the Conservatoire until 1887 and enjoyed a high reputation as a teacher. Among his pupils were Guiraud, Paladilhe, A. and E. Duvernoy, Bizet, Dubois and others. His pianoforte compositions are of an instructive character. He also wrote the following books: 'L'Art classique et moderne du piano' (1876), 'Les Pianistes célèbres' (1878), 'Symphonistes et virtuoses' (1881), 'Histoire du piano et de ses origines, influence de sa facture sur le style des compositeurs et virtuoses' (1885), etc.

M. L. P.

See also Bizet (dedcs.), list.

MARMONTEL, Antonin Émile Louis Corbaz (b. Paris, 24 Apr. 1850; d. Paris, 23 July 1907).

French pianist and teacher, son of the preceding. He obtained the first pianoforte prize in 1867 and at the Conservatoire there became teacher of a women's class in 1901, holding the post till his death. He won a mention honorable at the Rome Concourse and acted as second chorus-master at the Opéra in 1878-89.

M. L. P.

MARMONTEL, Jean François (b. Bort, Limousin, 11 July 1723; d. Abbeville¹, Eure, 31 Dec. 1799).

French dramatist, librettist and writer on music. He sided with Piccinni in the contests between the adherents to that composer and those of Gluck, and wrote an 'Essai sur la révolution de la musique en France' (1777).

M. L. P.

See also Alembert (opponent). Arnaud (F., dispute with). Benda (2 'Walder'). Céphale et Procris (Grétry). Cherubini ('Démophon', lib.). Clari (Bishop). Dibdin (1, 'Shepherdess of the Alps'). Frischmuth ('Clarissa', Singspiel). Grétry (10 lib.). Hook ('Fair Peruvian', adapt.). Kohaut ('Bergère des alpes', lib.). Linley (1, 'Selima and Azor', opera). Méhul ('Cora', opera). Naumann (1, 'Cora och Alonzo', opera). Neefe ('Zemire und Azor', opera). Palma ('Pietra simpatica', opera). Piccinni (5 lib.). Rameau (4 lib.). Rollig (K. L., 'Clarisse', Singspiel). Schulz (J. A. P., do., opera). Spohr ('Zemire und Azor', opera). Zemire et Azor (Grétry, opera).

MAROS, Rudolf (b. Stachy, 19 Jan. 1917).

Hungarian violinist, violist and composer. He studied composition with Kodály at the Academy of Music in Budapest. Having obtained his diploma in 1942, he was appointed teacher, later director, at the Conservatory of Pécs; from 1949 he taught theory at the Budapest Academy of Music. In 1948 he was awarded a scholarship which took him to Prague.

Maros's music reflects his youthfully uninhibited impatience and adventurous spirit. Prevalence of contrapuntal treatment and taut harmonic progressions characterize his idiom. His daring instrumental writing and the freshness and vigour of his orchestral colours reveal a mind of much originality. The following are his outstanding works:

CHORAL WORKS

'Nyul fark kantáta' ('Rabbit-tail Cantata') for chorus, stgs. & pf. (1948).

Also a number of partsongs.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

'Bábjáték' ('Puppet-Play'), overture for small orch. (1946).

Symphonietta No. 1, for school orch. (1947).

Symphonietta No. 2, for full orch. (1948).

'Concerto grosso' for stgs. (1948).

'Dunatáji szvit' ('Danubian Suite') for small orch. (1949).

¹ Not Abbeville, as Fétis and others have it.

CHAMBER MUSIC

String Quartet (1948).

SONGS

2 Songs for contralto (Sándor Weöres).

J. S. W.

BIBL.—MASON, COLIN, 'New Music from Hungary' (Mus. T., June 1949).

WEISSMANN, JOHN S., 'The Bartók Festival' (Mus. Rev., Feb. 1949 & 'Musica', Vol. III, No. 1, 1949).

Marot, Clément. See Binet (var. works). Bourgeois (L., trans. of Psalms). Françaix (epigram for chorus & stgs.; 6 songs). Goudimel (Psalms). Langlais (2 choruses, 1 song). Martelli (5 songs). Ravel (2 epigrams, voice & pf.). Rivier (songs). Warlock (song).

BIBL.—DOUEN, O., 'Clément Marot et le Psautier huguenot', 2 vols. (Paris, 1878-9).

ROLLIN, JEAN, 'Les Chansons de Clément Marot: étude historique et bibliographique' (Soc. Franç. Musicol., III. Études, Vol. I).

MAROTTA, Erasmo (b. Randazzo, Catania, c. 1550; d. Palermo, 6 Oct. 1641).

Italian composer. He became a Jesuit when he was no longer young (1612), was for some time a member of the Curia Romana and became director of the Collegio di Gesù at Mineo, Catania. His fame as a musician spread throughout Italy, not so much for having published a book of 'Cantus pios musicis modulis expressos', which has not come down to us, nor very particularly for the few madrigals included in various collections, as for having been among the very first to set to music considerable portions of Tasso's favola pastorale, 'Aminta', which in his own time circulated successfully all over Italy even before they were printed, for they were first performed on 31 July 1573 and not published until 1580.

A good deal of inaccurate information has been given on the music for 'Aminta' by various writers (Arteaga, Bettinelli, Mattei, Solerti, Carducci), some of whom maintained that the whole piece was set by Marotta. The fact is that he made use of certain of Tasso's lyrics for the purpose of turning them into madrigalesque compositions. The title of an edition published at Venice in 1600 is in fact 'L' Aminta musicale. Il I Libro de' Madrigali a 5 voci' (incomplete copy at the B.M.). These madrigals served as interludes for performances of Tasso's play and were also used separately at festivities such as weddings and princely entertainments.

O. T.

MÂROUF, SAVETIER DU CAIRE (Opera). See RABAUD.

MARPURG, Friedrich Wilhelm (b. Marburgshof nr. Seehausen, Brandenburg, 21 Nov. 1718; d. Berlin, 22 May 1795).

German writer on music. Little is known of his musical education, as Gerber gives no details, although Marpurg furnished him with the history of his life. Spazier² says that in 1746 he was secretary to General Rothenburg

² 'Leipziger musikalische Zeitung', II, 553.

(or Bodenberg) in Paris and there associated with Voltaire, Maupertuis, d'Alembert and Rameau. He lived later in Berlin and Hamburg, and from 1763 until his death was director of the government lottery in Berlin. Eberhard remarks that his acquaintance with good society would account for his refined manners and his tact in criticism. The absence in his works of personality and of fine writing, then so common with musical authors, is the more striking as he had great command of language and thoroughly enjoyed discussion. His active pen was exercised in almost all branches of music — composition, theory, criticism and history.

Of his theoretical works the most celebrated are: 'Handbuch bey dem Generalbasse und der Composition', founded on Rameau's system (3 parts, Berlin, 1755-62); 'Der critische Musicus an der Spree' (Berlin, 1750), containing, on p. 129, a lucid explanation of the old church modes; 'Anleitung zur Singe-composition' (Berlin, 1758) and 'Anleitung zur Musik' (Berlin, 1763), both long popular; 'Die Kunst des Clavier zu spielen' (1750); 'Versuch über die musikalische Temperatur' (Breslau, 1776), a controversial pamphlet intended to prove that Kirnberger's so-called fundamental bass was merely an interpolated bass; and 'Abhandlung von der Fuge', 62 plates (Berlin, 1753-54; 2nd ed. 1806; French, Berlin, 1756), a masterly summary of the whole science of counterpoint at that period, with the solitary defect that it is illustrated by a few short examples, instead of being treated in connection with composition. This Marpurg intended to remedy by publishing a collection of fugues by well-known authors, with analyses, but he only issued the first part (Berlin, 1758).

Of his critical works the most important is 'Historisch-kritische Beyträge', 5 vols. (Berlin, 1754-78). Among the historical may be specified a manuscript 'Entwurf einer Geschichte der Orgel', of which Gerber gives the table of contents, and the 'Kritische Anleitung in die Geschichte der . . . Musik' (Berlin, 1759). A jeu d'esprit, 'Legende einiger Musikheiligen von Simeon Metaphrastes dem Jüngeren' (Cologne, 1786), appeared under a pseudonym.

Of compositions he published '6 Sonaten für das Cembalo' (Nuremberg, 1756), 'Fughe e capricci' (Berlin, 1777) and 'Versuch in figurirten Choralen', Vols. I and II. He also edited collections of contemporary music. 'Musikalisches Archiv', an elucidation of the 'Historischkritische Beyträge', was announced, but did not appear. F. G.

See also Alembert (trans. of). Bebung.

MARQUÉS PUIG, Antonio (b. Barcelona, 1897).

Spanish pianist, critic and composer. He was a pupil of Pedrell and others at Barcelona and in 1913 he became a music critic there. His works include the opera 'Sor Beatriz' (based on Maeterlinck's drama), a string Quartet, a Sonata for cello and pianoforte, a pianoforte Sonata, songs, etc. E. B.

MARQUÉS Y GARCÍA, Pedro Miguel (b. Palma de Mallorca, 23 May 1843; d. Palma, 25 Feb. 1918).

Spanish violinist and composer. He studied at the Paris Conservatoire and with Berlioz as a private pupil, later in Madrid. He wrote many zarzuelas, of which 'El anillo de hierro' was the most popular, 4 symphonies, etc. E. B.

MARQUISE DE BRINVILLIERS, LA. Comic opera with music written jointly by Auber, Batton, Berton, Blangini, Boieldieu, Carafa, Cherubini, Hérold and Paer (libretto by Scribe and Castil-Blaze), produced Paris, Opéra-Comique, 31 Oct. 1831.

Marre, J. de. See Vivaldi ('Eeuwgetijde', lib.).

MARRIAGE OF FIGARO, THE (Mozart). See NOZZE DI FIGARO, LE.

MARRIAGE, THE ('Женитба'). Unfinished opera by Mussorgsky. Libretto taken by the composer from Gogol's comedy. Produced posthumously, in Rimsky-Korsakov's version¹, Petrograd, 26 Oct. 1917. 1st perf. abroad, Paris, in private (trans. by R. d'Harcourt, music arranged by Ravel), Apr. 1923.

MARROCCO, W. (William) Thomas (b. West New York, N.J., 5 Dec. 1909).

American musicologist and violinist. He graduated from the Royal Conservatory of Music at Naples with the Licentiate Diploma in 1928 and the Magistrate Diploma two years later. He also studied at the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N.Y., taking the Mus.Bac. in 1935 and the M.A. in 1940. He taught violin and theory at Elmira College from 1936 to 1939 and violin at the University of Iowa in 1945-46. From 1946 to 1949 he taught violin and musical history at Kansas University, and since 1949 he has been a faculty member of the music department of the University of California. He was awarded the Fulbright research lectureship at the University of Florence from 1949 to 1950.

Marrocco is associate editor of the 'Journal of Musicology' and has written two articles, 'The Fourteenth-Century Madrigal' ('Speculum', XXVI, No. 3, 1951) and 'A Supplement to the Fourteenth-Century Italian Cacce' (M.Q.). His book, 'Fourteenth-Century Italian Cacce', was published in 1942.

M. K. W.

Marryat, Frederick. See Bath ('Midshipman Easy', overture). Davies (H. W., 'Old Navy', song).

¹ There had been a private concert performance at Rimsky-Korsakov's house in 1906 and a stage performance without orchestra at the hall of the Suvorin theatre school, St. Petersburg, in Apr. 1909.

MARSCHALL, Samuel. See MARESCHELL.

MAR SCHNER, Heinrich (August) (b. Zittau, 16 Aug. 1795; d. Hanover, 14 Dec. 1861).

German composer. As a boy he began to compose sonatas, songs, dances and even orchestral music with no further help than a few hints from various musicians with whom his beautiful soprano voice and his pianoforte playing brought him into contact. As he grew up he obtained more systematic instruction from Schicht of Leipzig, whither he went in 1813 to study law. There he also made the acquaintance of Rochlitz, who induced him to adopt music as a profession. In 1816 he travelled with Count Thaddaus von Amadée, a Hungarian, to Pressburg and Vienna, where he made the acquaintance of Koželuh and of Beethoven, who is said to have advised him to compose sonatas, symphonies, etc., for practice. At Pressburg he wrote three operas, including 'Heinrich IV und Aubigné', which Weber produced at Dresden on 19 July 1820. Marschner was in consequence appointed in 1823 joint Kapellmeister with Weber and Morlacchi of the German and Italian Opera there. He was appointed Musikdirector in 1824, but resigned on Weber's death in 1826, and after travelling for some time, settled in 1827 at Leipzig as Kapellmeister of the theatre. There he produced 'Der Vampyr' (29 Mar. 1828), his first romantic opera, to a libretto by his brother-in-law Wohlbrück, the success of which was enormous in spite of its horrifying subject. In London it was given on 25 Aug. 1829 in English, at the Lyceum Theatre, and ran for sixty nights. His success there doubtless led to his dedicating his opera 'Des Falkners Braut' to King William IV, in return for which he received a gracious letter and a golden box in 1833. His attention having been turned to English literature, his next opera, 'Der Templer und die Jüdin' (produced at Leipzig on 22 Dec. 1829), was composed to a libretto constructed by himself and Wohlbrück from Scott's 'Ivanhoe'. The freshness and melody of the music ensured its success at the time, but the libretto, disjointed and overloaded with purely epic passages which merely served to hinder the action, killed the music.

In 1831 Marschner was appointed court Kapellmeister at Hanover. He produced 'Hans Heiling' in Berlin¹ on 24 May 1833, to a libretto by Eduard Devrient, which had been urged upon Mendelssohn in 1827.² This opera is Marschner's masterpiece. Its success was instantaneous and universal, and it retained for nearly a century an honourable place at the principal theatres of Germany. In 1836 it was performed under his own direction in Copenhagen with marked success, and he was offered the post of General Musical Director in Denmark, an honour which the warmth of his reception on his return to Hanover induced him to decline. After 'Hans Heiling' — owing chiefly to differences with the management of the theatre — Marschner composed little for the stage, and that little has not survived. 'Kaiser Adolf von Nassau' was produced at Dresden in 1845 under Wagner's conductorship. He was pensioned, with the title of Generalmusikdirector, in 1859. A monument was erected to his memory at Hanover in 1877.

Apart from his operas Marschner composed incidental music for Kleist's play 'Die Hermannsschlacht', and for Friedrich Kind's 'Schön Ella' (1822), and published over 180 works of all kinds and descriptions, principally songs for one and more voices, and choruses for men's voices, many of which are excellent. An overture embodying 'God save the King' is mentioned as being performed in London at a concert on the occasion of the baptism of the Prince of Wales (King Edward VII) on 25 Jan. 1842. A commission to write an English opera for London, as Weber had done with 'Oberon', was brought to naught by the burning down of Covent Garden Theatre in 1856.

As a dramatic composer of the romantic school Marschner ranks next to Weber and Spohr, but it is with the former that his name is most intimately connected, though he was never a pupil of Weber and not his equal. The strong similarity between their dispositions and gifts, the harmonious way in which they worked together and the cordial affection they felt for each other are interesting facts in the history of music. Schumann also had a great regard for Marschner. The theme of the finale of his 'Études symphoniques', dedicated to Sterndale Bennett, is a quotation of a chorus, "Du stolzes England", from 'Der Templer und die Jüdin'.

Marschner's favourite subjects were ghosts and demons, whose uncanny revels he delineated with extraordinary power; but this gloomy side of his character was relieved by a real love of nature and outdoor life, especially in its lighter and more humorous characteristics. He worked with extreme rapidity, which is the more remarkable as his scores abound in refined modulations and his orchestration is unusually brilliant and elaborate, showing a perfect mastery of the art of instrumentation.

A. M., adds.

BIBL. — FISCHER, GEORG, 'Marschner-Erinnerungen' (Hanover, 1918).

GAARTZ, H., 'Die Operas H. Marschners' (Leipzig, 1912).

HAUSSWALD, GÜNTHER, 'Heinrich Marschner, ein Meister der deutschen Oper' (Dresden, 1938).

MÜNZER, G., 'H. Marschner' (Berlin, 1901).

¹ See 'Allgemeine deutsche Biographie', also 'The Harmonicon', 1833.

² Devrient's Recollections, p. 40.

OPERAS

Title	Libretto	Production
'Der Kyffhäuserberg.'	?	Pressburg, 2.
'Saidar und Zulima.'	?	Pressburg, 22 Nov. 1818.
'Heinrich IV und Aubigné.'	Hornbostel.	Dresden, 19 July 1820.
'Der Holzdieb.'	Friedrich Kind.	Dresden, 22 Feb. 1825.
'Lucretia.'	August Eckschlager.	Danzig, 17 Jan. 1827.
'Der Vampyr.'	Wilhelm August Wohlbruck, based on John William Polidori's story attributed to Byron, and more directly on the melodrama by Charles Nodier, Francois Adrien Carmouche & Achille de Jouffroy.	Leipzig, 29 Mar. 1828.
'Der Templer und die Judin.'	Wohlbruck and composer, based on Walter Scott's 'Ivanhoe'.	Leipzig, 22 Dec. 1829.
'Des Falkners Braut.'	Wohlbruck, based on a story by Karl Spindler.	Leipzig, 10 Mar. 1832.
'Hans Heiling.'	Eduard Devrient.	Berlin, Court Opera, 24 May 1833.
'Das Schloss am Ätna' (orig. 'Adelgunde').	August Klingemann.	Leipzig, 29 Jan. 1836.
'Der Babu.'	Wohlbruck.	Hanover, 19 Feb. 1838.
'Kaiser Adolf von Nassau.'	Hierbert Rau.	Dresden, 5 Jan. 1845.
'Austin.'	Marianne Marschner.	Hanover, 26 Jan. 1852.
'Sangeskönig Hiarne und das Tyrfinngschwert.'	Wilhelm Grothe.	Frankfort o/M. (posthumously), 13 Sept. 1863.

See also Wagner (R., add. to aria in 'Vampyr').

MARSEILLAISE, LA. The words and music of this popular French hymn are the composition of Claude Joseph Rouget de Lisle, a captain of engineers, who was quartered at Strasbourg when the volunteers of the Bas-Rhin received orders to join Luckner's army. Dietrich, the Mayor of Strasbourg, having, in the course of a discussion on the war, regretted that the young soldiers had no patriotic song to sing as they marched out, Rouget de Lisle, who was of the party, returned to his lodgings¹ and in a fit of enthusiasm composed, during the night of 24 Apr. 1792, the words and music of the song which has immortalized his name. With his violin he picked out the first strains of this inspiring and truly martial melody; but being only an amateur, he unfortunately added a symphony which jars strangely with the vigorous character of the hymn itself. The copy here shown of the original edition, printed by Dannbach of Strasbourg under the title 'Chant de guerre pour l'armée du Rhin, dédié au Maréchal Lukner' (sic), will be found of interest, since it contains the symphony, which has since been suppressed, and an obvious typographical error, the quaver marked * being shown as a crotchet.

The 'Chant de guerre' was sung in Dietrich's house on 25 Apr., copied and arranged for a military band on the following day and performed by the band on the Garde Nationale at a review on Sunday the 29th. On 25 June a singer named Mircur sang it at a civic banquet at Marseilles with so much effect that it was immediately printed and distributed to the volunteers of the battalion just starting for Paris. They entered Paris on 30 July, singing their new hymn; and with it on ¹ In the Maison Böckel, No. 12 Grande Rue.

Temps de marche animé

Al-lons en-fants de la pa-tri-e Le jour de gloire est ar-ri-vé. Con-tre nous de la ty-ranni-e L'é-tén-dart sanglant est le-vé, l'é-tén-
-dart sanglant est lé-ve. En-tén-dez-vous dans ces cam-
-pa-gnes Mu-gir ces fé-ro-cés sol-dats. Ils vien-nent jus-que dans vos bras E-gor-ger vos fils, vos compa-gnes! Aux ar-mes ci-to-
-yens! for-mez vos ba-tail-lons. Mar-
-chez, mar-chez, qu'un sang im-pur A breu-ve nos sil-lons.

their lips they marched to the attack on the Tuileries on 10 Aug. 1792. From that day the 'Chant de guerre pour l'armée du Rhin' was called 'Chanson des Marseillais' or 'Chant des Marseillais' and, finally, 'La Marseillaise'. The people, shouting it in the streets, probably altered a note or two; the musicians Edelmann, Grétry and, most of all, Gossec, in their accompaniments for pianoforte or orchestra, greatly enriched the harmonies, and soon the 'Marseillaise', in the form we now have it (which need hardly be quoted)¹, was known from one end of France to the other.

The original edition contained only six couplets; the seventh was added when the song was dramatized for the Fête de la Fédération, in order to complete the characters—an old man, a soldier, a wife and a child—among whom the verses were distributed. Rouget de Lisle had been cashiered for expressing disapproval of the events of 10 Aug. and was then in prison, from which he was released only after the fall of Robespierre, on the ninth Thermidor (28 July) 1794. The following fine stanza for the child was accordingly supplied by Dubois, editor of the 'Journal de Littérature':

Nous entrerons dans la carrière,
Quand nos aînés n'y seront plus;
Nous y trouverons leur poussière
Et la trace de leurs vertus.
Bien moins jaloux de leur survivre
Que de partager leur cercueil,
Nous aurons le sublime orgueil
De les venger ou de les suivre.

Dubois also proposed to alter the concluding lines of the sixth stanza—

Que tes ennemis expirants
Voient ton triomphe et notre gloire to

Dans tes ennemis expirants
Vois ton triomphe et notre gloire.

That Rouget de Lisle was the author of the words of the 'Marseillaise' has never been doubted—indeed Louis-Philippe conferred a pension upon him; but it has been denied over and over again that he composed the music. Strange to say, Castil-Blaze², who should have recognized the vigour and dash so characteristic of the French, declared it to have been taken from a German hymn.

In F. K. Meyer's 'Versailler Briefe' (Berlin, 1872) there is an article on the origin of the 'Marseillaise' in which it is stated that the tune is the same as that to which the folksong 'Stand ich auf hohen Bergen' is sung in Upper Bavaria. The author of this article heard it sung in 1842 by an old woman of seventy, who informed him that it was a very old tune and that she had learnt it from her mother and grandmother. The tune was also said to exist in the 'Credo' of a manuscript Mass composed by Holtzmann in 1776, which is preserved in the parish church of Meersburg.³ Subsequently inquiry (Aug. 1879) on the spot from the curate of Meersburg proved that there is no truth in this story.

Fétis, in 1863, asserted that the music was the work of a composer named Navoigille, and he reinforces his statement in the second edition of his 'Biographie universelle'. Georges Kastner⁴ and several other writers, including the author of this article⁵ have clearly disproved these allegations; and the point was finally settled by a pamphlet written by A. Rouget de Lisle, nephew of the composer (see Bibl.), which contains precise information and documentary evidence, establishing Rouget de Lisle's claim beyond a doubt. The controversy is examined at length by Loquin in 'Les Mélodies populaires de la France' (Paris, 1879).

The 'Marseillaise' has been often made use of by composers. Salieri, in the opening chorus of his opera 'Palmira' (1795) and Grison, in the introduction to the oratorio 'Esther' both evidently quote it intentionally. Schumann slyly alludes to it in the 'Faschingschwank aus Wien', uses it in his song 'The Two Grenadiers' with magnificent effect, and also refers to it in his overture to 'Hermann und Dorothea'. Wagner too introduces it into his setting of 'The Two Grenadiers' (a French translation of Heine's poem), and it is evident from a letter from him to Schumann that the two composers hit upon the idea independently. Two concert overtures make use of it: Liszt's 'Robespierre' and Tchaikovsky's '1812'. Debussy has a distant fanfare, evidently quoted from the 'Marseillaise', at the close of his 'Feux d'artifice' in the second book of 'Préludes' for pianoforte.

A picture by Pils, representing Rouget de Lisle singing the 'Marseillaise', is well known from the engraving. G. C., adds.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BRANCOUR, RENÉ, 'La Marseillaise et le Chant du départ' (Paris, 1916).
FIAUX, LOUIS, 'La Marseillaise: son histoire dans l'histoire des Français depuis 1792' (Paris, 1918).
FROIDCOURT, G. DE, 'Grétry, Rouget de Lisle et la Marseillaise' (Liège, 1945).
HELPERT, VLADIMIR, 'Contributo alla storia della "Marseillaise"' (Riv. Mus. It., 1922).
LISLE, A. ROUGET DE, 'La Vérité sur la paternité de la Marseillaise' (Paris, 1865).
PIERRE, CONSTANT, 'La Marseillaise: comparaison des différentes versions, variantes, etc.' (Paris, 1887).
'Les Hymnes et chansons de la Révolution' (Paris, 1901).
TIERSOT, JULIEN, 'Histoire de la chanson populaire en France' (Paris, 1889), pp. 281-86.

¹ See the 'Gartenlaube' for 1861, p. 256.

² 'Revue et Gazette musicale', Paris, 1848.

³ See Chouquet's 'L'Art musical', 8 Sept. 1864-9 Mar. 1865.

⁴ See Mus. T., Sept. 1915, p. 551, where four versions are quoted by Tom S. Wotton, viz.: (1) The melody as given in the official military-band arrangement approved by the French Minister of War; (2) Berlioz's arrangement (see article by E. Newman, Mus. T., Aug. 1915, p. 461); (3) Gossec's version; (4) The first edition as quoted above.

⁵ See 'Molière musicien', II, 452-54.

'Histoire de la Marseillaise: nombreuses gravures documentaires, facsimilés, autographes, œuvres musicales de Rouget de Lisle' (Paris, 1915).

See also Delibes (choral setting). Litolf (quoted in 'Robespierre' overture). National Anthems. Navoigille (misattrib. to). Rouget de Lisle.

MARSH, Alphonso, senior (b. London, c. Jan. 1627¹; d. ? London, 9 Apr. 1681).

English composer. He was the son of Robert Marsh, one of the musicians in ordinary to Charles I, and was appointed a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal by Charles II on the Restoration in 1660. Songs composed by him appeared in 'The Treasury of Musick' (1669), 'Choice Ayres and Dialogues' (1676) and other publications of the time. They include several contributions to the Restoration stage, such as songs for Davenant's 'Law against Lovers' (1662) and 'The Unfortunate Lovers' (revival, 1668), Dryden's 'An Evening's Love' (1668) and 'The Conquest of Granada' (1670), and Duffett's 'The Spanish Rogue' (1673). W. H. H., adds. A. L.

MARSH, Alphonso, junior (b. London, ?; d. London, 5 Apr. 1692²).

English composer, son of the preceding. He was admitted a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal on 25 Apr. 1676. Songs by him are contained in 'The Theater of Music' (1685-1687), 'The Banquet of Musick' (1688-92) and other collections. W. H. H.

MARSH, John (b. ? Gosport, 1752; d. Chichester, 1828).

English composer. Although he was attracted to music at an early age and wished to make it his profession, it was not until 1766 that he was given any instruction, and that was only in playing the violin. His master was a Mr. Wafer, the organist of Gosport, who also gave him such formal instruction in composition as he ever had. As the whole of his musical education lasted only eighteen months, he may be regarded as mainly self-taught. In 1768 he was articled to a solicitor, and he continued as a lawyer until 1783, when he inherited the estate of Nethersole at Barham near Canterbury. He remained there until 1787, when he removed to Chichester, where he spent the remainder of his life.

Possibly owing to his amateur status Marsh evinced a lively curiosity in acoustics, which went to the unusual length of having a quarter-tone harpsichord built.³ In fact the range of his interests was remarkably wide: he was the author of a textbook of astronomy, 'The Astrarium improved and Vertical Planetarium'; while during the invasion scare of 1803 he studied tactics to the extent of securing promotion from a captaincy to the rank of major of a battalion of volunteers.

¹ Baptized at St. Margaret's, Westminster, 28 Jan. 1627.

² Buried in the west cloister of Westminster Abbey, 9 Apr. 1692.

³ This instrument has unfortunately disappeared.

His later years were occupied with plans to convert the Jews to Anglican Christianity.

Marsh's historic importance lies in the fact that he was the only English composer of the latter half of the 18th century to compose symphonies (unless his are merely the only ones to have survived). He was able to do this as an amateur because he never lived in London, but in provincial towns — Salisbury, Canterbury, Chichester — where there was sufficient talent and enthusiasm to maintain an amateur orchestra and sufficient civic pride to play the works of a fellow-citizen. He also employed another medium that all his contemporaries seem to have neglected by composing a violin Concerto, which remains unpublished.

Marsh's symphonies show him to have been well aware of the works of Abel and J. C. Bach, and also, possibly, of Haydn. Their interest lies principally in charm of melody and felicity of scoring; this latter quality was not surprising since Marsh played in the orchestra himself. His most elaborate symphony calls for an orchestra of flute, two oboes, two bassoons (but playing mainly in unison), two trumpets, two horns and strings. The two trumpets were unusual, but several other symphonies have two clarinets and in many, as was customary in England in those days, the flute would be played by the second oboist. Writing for an orchestra of enthusiastic amateurs, Marsh generally contrived to give a moment of prominence to his wind players and solos to the leaders of the strings. As a general rule his management of the orchestra is superior to that of the majority of his contemporaries on the Continent. The double bass does not play all the time an octave below the cello and in tutti passages the bassoons often reinforce the viola rather than the cello. The viola parts themselves are quite elaborate, which is not surprising, since the viola was Marsh's own instrument. (Though it should be remembered that earlier English composers had treated the viola with considerable freedom. With Mudge, for example, the viola is more important than the second violin.)

Although not masterpieces of the highest class, Marsh's symphonies have such charm that their neglect seems inexcusable. The following is a list of his known works:

CHURCH MUSIC

9 Anthems.
16 Psalm Tunes and Hymns.
Hymn of Benediction to the Bible Society.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

8 Symphonies.
1 Symphony for two orchestras.
3 Finales.⁴

MILITARY BAND

Overture and ten pieces.

⁴ Pieces to finish a concert with, not last movements of symphonic works.

CHAMBER MUSIC

3 Overtures in 5 parts for private musical parties.
String Quartet in imitation of Haydn's Op. 1.

ORGAN MUSIC

Overture and 6 pieces for Organ.
5 sets of Voluntaries for Young Practitioners.

VOCAL MUSIC

14 Glees.

SONGS

11 Songs.
Walter Scott's 'Hymn for the Dead'.
(The 'Biographical Dictionary of Musicians' of 1825 mentions as being in MS 28 overtures and symphonies, a violin Concerto, a 'Concertante', 12 'Concerti grossi', 2 Quintets, 4 string Quartets, &c.)
R. G.

BIBL. — Autobiography. (MS in the collection of the writer of this article.)

MARSHALL, Charles (Ward) (b. Oxford, 1808; d. London, 22 Feb. 1874).

English tenor singer. He was a son of William Marshall, a music-seller at Oxford, and appeared on the London stage under the assumed name of Manvers about 1835; but although successful, he quitted the theatre for concert and oratorio singing in 1842, and met with greater success there. After 1847 he withdrew from public life.

W. H. H.

MARSHALL, William (b. Fochabers, Banffshire, 27 Dec. 1748; d. Dandaleith, 29 May 1833).

Scottish violinist and composer. As a boy he entered the service of the Duke of Gordon, rising, during a thirty years' residence in the family, to the posts of butler, house-steward and factor. He taught himself the violin and became the best amateur performer of his day. His compositions, which are strathspeys and a similar class of Scottish violin music, have been held in much favour, the best-known being the strathspeys 'The Marquis of Huntly' and 'Miss Admiral Gordon', the latter the air to which Burns wrote 'Of a' the airts the wind can blow'.

Marshall married in 1773 and had a family, dying in his eighty-fifth year. A number of his compositions appear in the Gow publications, but Stewart of Edinburgh issued a couple of small collections of his strathspeys in 1781. A third and much fuller collection was published in 1822 and a later one, after his death, in 1847.

An excellent portrait of Marshall is extant, engraved by Turner; it is reproduced in 'The Glen Collection of Scottish Dance Music', book ii (1895).

F. K.

BIBL. — BULLOCH, J. M., 'William Marshall, the Scots Composer' (Inverness, 1933).

MARSHALL, William (b. Oxford, 1806; d. Birmingham, 17 Aug. 1875).

English organist. He was sent to London as a chorister in the Chapel Royal under John Stafford Smith and William Hawes. In 1825 he was appointed organist of Christ Church Cathedral and St. John's College, Oxford, and from 1839 he was also organist of All Saints' Church there. He graduated B.Mus. on 7 Dec. 1826 and D.Mus. on 14 Jan. 1840. In 1846 he resigned his Oxford appointments and afterwards became organist of St. Mary's Church at Kidderminster.

Marshall was the author of 'The Art of Reading Church Music' (1842) and editor (jointly with Alfred Bennett) of a collection of chants (1829) and of a book of words of anthems (1840, 4th ed. 1862). He composed some church music and songs.

W. H. H.

MARSICK, Martin Pierre Joseph (b. Jupille nr. Liège, 9 Mar. 1848; d. Paris, 21 Oct. 1924).

Belgian violinist. At the age of eight he entered the Liège Conservatory, studying under Désiré Heynberg, and two years later he gained the first prize in the preparatory class. In 1864 he secured the gold medal of the institution for "exceptional merit". In the following year and until 1867 he was pupil of Léonard (violin) and Kufferath (composition), and in 1868–69 of Massart at the Paris Conservatoire, the expense of his musical training being defrayed by a music-loving lady of distinction. In 1870–71 he was the recipient of a stipend from the Belgian government, which enabled him to proceed to Berlin to study under Joachim. Thus exceptionally equipped, he made a successful début, in 1873, at the Concerts populaires in Paris, travelled a good deal in various European countries, founded a quartet in Paris in 1877 with Rémy, van Wacfelghem and Delsart, and in 1892–1900 he was violin professor at the Conservatoire in succession to Massart. In 1895–96 he toured in the U.S.A., and occasionally visited England, but without achieving in either country any great popular success. His compositions include three concertos and a number of smaller pieces for the violin.

W. W. C.

Marsollier, Benoît Joseph. See Dalayrac (20 libs.). Isouard ('Léonce', lib.). Méhul (2 libs.). Pucitta ('Burla fortunata', opera). Sussmayr ('Gulnare', Singspiel).

MARSOLO, Pietro Maria (b. Messina, ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th–17th-century composer. He took a doctor's degree in jurisprudence, but became maestro di cappella at Ferrara, where we find him in 1612. He published 3 books of motets and 5 of madrigals, one apparently lost.

E. v. d. s.

MARSON, George (b. Worcester, c. 1573; d. Canterbury, 3 Feb. 1632).

English organist and composer. He entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1595 and graduated B.Mus. there in 1598.¹ In 1599 he succeeded George Juxon as organist and master of the choristers at Canterbury Cathedral, an office he held until his death, and he married there the same year. He was ordained deacon and priest in London on 10 May 1604 and appointed minor canon of Canterbury in addition to his organist's post. In 1607 he also became rector of St. Mary Magdalene, Canterbury. The cathedral registers record his burial on 5 Feb. 1632. Anthony Wood states that he was a relative of Nathaniel Giles.

¹ Venn's 'Alumni Cantab.', Pt. I, Vol. III.

Marson contributed an excellent 5-part madrigal to 'The Triumphes of Oriana' (1601, pub. 1603) — 'The nymphs and shepherds danced lavoltas'. Some church music of his is in manuscript at the R.C.M. and includes a service, preces and psalms as well as a few anthems.

E. H. F.

MARSON, Louise Aglae. See MASSART.

Marston, Philip Bourke. See Bryson (song cycle).

MARTEAU, Henri (b. Rheims, 31 Mar. 1874; d. Lichtenberg, Franconia, 3 Oct. 1934).

French violinist and composer. His father was an amateur violinist and president of the Philharmonic Society of Rheims, his mother an accomplished pianist, pupil of Clara Schumann. Sivori first discovered Henri Marteau's talent and presented him with a violin, at the same time persuading his parents to allow him to study it as a profession. His first master was Bunzl, a pupil of Molique, his second Léonard. In 1884, when only ten years of age, he appeared under Richter at the Vienna Philharmonic Society, also in Germany and Switzerland; in the year following he was chosen by Gounod to play the violin obbligato of a piece composed for the Joan of Arc Centenary celebration at Rheims. In July 1888 he appeared at a Richter concert in London. In 1892 he gained the first prize at the Paris Conservatoire, and Massenet is said to have written a Concerto for him; but if so, it was never published.

Marteau toured in America in 1893 and 1898, in Sweden in 1894 and 1896, and in Russia in 1897-99. In 1900 he was appointed violin professor at the Geneva Conservatory and in 1908-15 he held a similar post at the Berlin High School for Music in succession to Joachim. In 1921 he joined the Prague Conservatory. In the meantime his connection with Sweden was maintained. He played in Stockholm for the last time in Apr. 1934, when he celebrated the fortieth anniversary of his first appearance there and the fiftieth of his playing career. He was elected a member of the Swedish Academy of Music in 1900 and was deputy conductor at Göteborg in 1915-20. He instituted a fund for making Swedish music more widely known.

Having studied composition with Théodore Dubois in Paris, Marteau brought out a cantata, 'La Voix de Jeanne d'Arc', in 1896. His works also include a quantity of chamber music, 2 violin Concertos, one for cello, and an opera, 'Meister Schwalbe', produced at Plauen in 1921.

E. H.-A., adds.

BIBL.—Articles in 'Svensk musiktidning', 1894, 1896, 1899, 1908, and 'Sydsvenska Dagbladet', 5 Oct. 1934.

LAHEE, HENRY C., 'Famous Violinists of To-day and Yesterday' (Boston, U.S.A., 1899).

MARTELÉ (Fr.)

MARTELLATO (Ital.) } (hammered). A direction to play the notes so marked (or marked with a sign indicating the same thing) in a "hammering" manner, i.e. with especial force, leaving them before the expiration of the time due to them. Notes dashed, dotted or emphasized by > or fz. are martelées or martellate in execution.

In violin, viola and cello music this sign is used to indicate a detached, hammered style of bowing. The effect is usually produced by a series of short quick up and down strokes at the point of the bow, without allowing the bow to leave the strings. The stick is held firmly and the thumb pressed in the direction of the index finger, as each note is played. The arm should remain quite loose, and care should be taken to give a stronger pressure to the up bow than the down bow, or else the martelé will become uneven.

J. H. & O. R.

MARTELLEMENT (Fr. = mordent). See ORNAMENTS, B (iv).

MARTELLI, Henri (b. Bastia, Corsica, 25 Feb. 1895).

French composer. He was a pupil of Jules Mouquet for harmony, of Caussade for counterpoint and of Widor for composition, and also studied at the Paris Conservatoire (1913-22). In 1940-44 he was head of the symphonic and chamber-music service of the French Radio, and in the latter year obtained the Prix de Musique de Chambre of the Institut de France. He is secretary of the Société Nationale and of the French section of the I.S.C.M.

In his numerous compositions Martelli appears as a virtuoso of contrapuntal writing, with a taste, uncommon in out-and-out polyphonists, for briskness and gaiety, for every form of divertimento. A musical draughtsman, he likes to revert again and again to the same art of sprightly, tiptoeing arabesque, and frames lyricism itself into his favourite black-and-white schemes: rhythms derived from jig, bourrée or corrente are generally in charge of his allegros, and some stately saraband or passacaglia stands for contrasting gravity and meditation. This music is perfect in its somewhat restricted domain: stylized without loss of spontaneity, half puppet-show, half com-media dell' arte, it displays the pleasant stiffness of masks and is never devoid of a sort of dry Florentine charm.

The following is a summary of Martelli's works:

OPERA

- 'La Chanson de Roland' (libretto after Joseph Bédier) (1921-23).

CHORAL WORKS

- 'Noël ancien' (anon. 17th cent.) for 3-part chorus (1920).
'Chrestomathie' (texts by Boileau, Voltaire, Saint François de Sales, Brantôme, Chénier and Flaubert) for unaccomp. chorus (1949).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 'Mors et Juventa' (1927).
'Bas-reliefs assyriens' (1928).
'La Bouteille de Panurge' (after Rabelais) (1930).
'Concerto pour orchestre' (1931).
'Ouverture pour un conte de Boccace' (1942).
'Divertimento' for woodwind & brass (1945).
'Sinfonietta' (1948).
Suite No. 2 (1950).

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

- Concertino for vn. (1938).
'Suite concertante' for flute, oboe, clar., horn & bassoon (1948).
Pf. Concerto (1948).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- 'Deux Mouvements pour octuor à vent' (1941).
String Quartet No. 1 (1943).
String Quartet No. 2 (1944).
'Le Temps' (Guillevic), cantata for voice & 8 insts. (1945).
Trio No. 1 for vn., cello & pf. (1945).
Trio No. 2 for oboe, clar. & bassoon (1943).
Quintet No. 1 for flute, oboe, clar., horn & bassoon (1948).
Quintet No. 2 for flute, harp, vn., viola & cello (1950).

WORKS FOR TWO INSTRUMENTS

- Sonata for vn. & pf. (1936).
7 Duos for vn. & harp (1938).
Sonata for bassoon & pf. (1941).
Sonata for flute & pf. (1942).
Sonatina for cello & pf. (1942).
'Études-Caprices' for flute & pf. (1944).
Sonata for 2 pfs. (1946).
Sonatina for trumpet & pf. (1948).
'Thème et variations' for bassoon & pf. (1950).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- Sonatina (1934).
Suite (1939).
'Cinq Danses' (1941).

SONGS

- 'Cinq Épigrammes de Clément Marot' (1934).

F. E. G.

MARTENOT, Maurice (b. Paris, 14 Oct. 1898).

French musician and inventor. He studied composition with Gédalge, and the pianoforte and the cello at the Paris Conservatoire. He became successively a conductor in the Rhine Army, professor at the École Normale de Musique in Paris and director of his own institution, the École d'Art Martenot at Neuilly. He is the inventor of a radio-electric instrument called Ondes Musicales (now usually called Ondes Martenot by composers who score for it), which he first brought out in 1928 and which constituted a marked advance on the Theremin instruments. The fame of this instrument was spread throughout the world by means of hundreds of concerts which he gave in collaboration with his sister Ginette Martenot. At the International Exhibition of Art and Technics held in Paris in 1937 he organized concerts with a team of eight Ondes and took part in the performance of the 18 works composed for the "Fêtes de la Lumière", by Florent Schmitt, Milhaud, Ibert, Honegger and others. The instrument was awarded the Grand Prix of the Exhibition. Numerous works have been written for one or more specimens, particularly but not exclusively in France, utilizing them either as solo instruments or in chamber and orchestral scores.

Martenot published a textbook entitled 'Jeux musicaux' and a 'Méthode d'ondes musicales', with a preface by Alfred Cortot, which is the first instructional work to be published on an electrophonic instrument.

A. H. (ii).

See also Electrophonic Instruments. Levidis (works for Ondes M.).

MARTHA, ODER DER MARKT VON RICHMOND. Opera in 4 acts by Flotow. Libretto by "W. Friedrich" (Friedrich Wilhelm Riese), based on a ballet-pantomime, 'Lady Henriette, ou La Servante de Greenwich', with music by Flotow, Burgmüller and Deldevez¹. Produced Vienna, Kärntnertor Theatre, 25 Nov. 1847. 1st perf. in Germany, Weimar, Court Theatre, 16 Feb. 1848. 1st in England, London, Drury Lane Theatre (in German), 4 June 1849. 1st in U.S.A., New York (in English), 1 Nov. 1852.

MARTIN, Aleksander (b. Warsaw, 1825; d. Warsaw, 9 Nov. 1856).

Polish violinist, violoncellist and composer. He was a member of the Warsaw Opera orchestra. He wrote two overtures, many instrumental works and one 4-act opera, 'Wianki' ('Garlands'), to a libretto by Baltazar Gwozdecki, which was performed in Warsaw in 1859.

C. R. H.

MARTIN, Claude (b. Couches nr. Autun, ?; d. ? Paris. ?).

French 16th-century composer. He lived in Paris about 1540-55. A Magnificat for 4 voices, published by Attaignant in 1540, and 9 chansons a 4 in collective volumes by Claude du Chemin, are the only compositions of his still left; he also wrote two theoretical works.

E. v. d. s.

Martin, David. See Stevens (B., 'One Day', choral work).

MARTÍN, Edgardo (b. Cienfuegos, 6 Oct. 1915).

Cuban composer. He studied at the Conservatory of Havana and later became instructor in musical history there. He was one of the founders, in 1943, of the Grupo de Renovación Musical. He composed two pianoforte sonatas; 'La muerte de la bacante' for contralto, flute, English horn and bassoon; Concerto for 9 wind instruments; and several choral works. His style of writing is neo-classical, but he freely interpolates native rhythms into his music.

N. S.

¹ Produced at the Paris Opéra on 21 Feb. 1844.

MARTIN, Frank (b. Geneva, 15 Sept. 1890).

Swiss composer. He studied at Geneva under Joseph Lauber. From 1918 to 1926 he lived at Zurich, Rome and Paris. Back at Geneva, he became pianist and harpsichordist to the Société de Musique de Chambre, of which he was a foundation member. From 1928 he was for many years a teacher at the Institut Jaques-Dalcroze, instructor in chamber music at the Conservatory and director of the Technicum Moderne de Musique. In 1943-46 he was President of the Schweizerischer Tonkünstlerverein, of which he is now an honorary member. He settled in Amsterdam in 1946, where he continues to live, though in 1950 he was appointed professor of composition at the Conservatory of Cologne. He was the third Swiss musician (after Schoeck and Honegger) to receive, in 1947, the composition prize of the Schweizerischer Tonkünstlerverein. Martin is, with Burkhard, Honegger and Schoeck, among the outstanding Swiss creative musical personalities. His later works have in recent years been successfully performed all over the world.

Martin's first appearance as a composer before a general audience occurred on the occasion of the Swiss Music Festival of 1911, with a performance of his 'Trois Poèmes payens' to words by Leconte de Lisle. The works that followed confirmed his extraordinary gifts, which indeed had already manifested themselves in earlier compositions. The violin Sonata of 1913, for instance, while showing him still strongly influenced by César Franck and Gabriel Fauré, already arrests attention by an original sense of sonority and by creative vitality. Early works deserving special mention are the oratorio-like 'Les Dithyrambes' (1918), the pianoforte Quintet (1921) and particularly the 'Quatre Sonnets à Cassandre' for mezzo-soprano, flute, viola and cello (1922). Certain affinities with Ravel's highly cultivated art are discernible here.

Next came Martin's first decisive grappling with the problems of the "new music". Being closely in touch with Jaques-Dalcroze's eurhythmics, he was especially drawn to experiments with rhythm. In 1925 he produced the arresting 'Trio sur des chants populaires irlandais', in which melody, rhythm and form deployed themselves more freely in complete independence of classical models. A year later he faced the public with the orchestral pieces 'Rythmes', where he essayed constructive methods based both on ancient and on popular eastern principles. But this work is also remarkable for its wealth of colour and its forceful intensity.

Another contemporary influence that confronted Martin in 1930 was Schoenberg's twelve-note music, which he began to study at that time and to apply to his own work, without, however, subscribing to Schoenberg's aesthetics. As he himself expressed it: "I may say that, while I came under Schoenberg's influence, I opposed him with all my musical sensibility".¹ The distinction he made between technique and aesthetics, and his independent attitude towards the twelve-note system, came to be of the greatest importance to Martin and his work. A few works, such as a string Trio (1935) and a string Quartet (1936), still show a certain indecision; but he attained to a new style of his own in the pianoforte Concerto (1934), the Symphony (1937) and especially the first four 'Ballades' for various solo instruments and orchestra (1938-40) and the 'Sonata da chiesa' for viola d'amore and organ (1938), a work wonderfully rich both in content and in sound. It was during this period, too, that he began the composition of 'Le Vin herbé', of which the part entitled 'Le Philtre' was the first to be written and to be performed separately in 1941. The first performance of the complete work took place at Zurich under Robert Blum on 26 Mar. 1942.

This dramatic oratorio on the subject of Tristram not only carried Martin's name far beyond his country's frontiers, but made his new style a landmark in the history of modern music. The work, which takes up a whole evening's performance and has also been presented scenically, combines the twelve-note technique with chordal and indeed homophonic effects of a novel kind. The legendary tone of the small reciting chorus of twelve voices is contrasted with the single personages detaching themselves from that chorus as separate voices and, again, by the extraordinarily differentiated motivic and rhythmic treatment of the small orchestra of seven stringed instruments and pianoforte. Tone-colour and harmony are incomparably subtle; the musical rhythm matches the finest shades of language and sense. Three chapters of Joseph Bédier's 'Roman de Tristan et Iseut' are the basis of the libretto. The next two of his larger vocal works Martin set with great understanding to German words: 'Der Cornet' (Rilke) and the 'Sechs Monologe aus "Jedermann"' (Hofmannsthal), in which, as in 'Le Vin herbé', text and music grow into perfect artistic unity.

In 1945 Paul Sacher gave the first performance, at Zürich, of the work that was destined to have the greatest world success: the 'Petite Symphonie concertante' for harpsichord, harp, pianoforte and double string orchestra. Its twice two movements are of great importance to Martin's output, not only by the delightful sound produced in their original scoring, but above all by mastery of form, harmonic wealth and thematic significance. That the effect of the 'Petite Symphonie' is not due solely to its instrumentation is moreover proved by its transcription for full orchestra. Among the later orchestral works the following also deserve special mention: the eight Preludes for pianoforte (1948), the Concerto for 7 wind instruments, kettle-drums and string orchestra, and the 'Ballade' for cello and pianoforte (both 1949). But Martin's outstanding work of the last few years, and in a certain sense a synthesis of all his preceding works, is the Passion oratorio 'Golgotha' (1945-48), produced under Baud-Bevy at Geneva on 29 Apr. 1949.

¹ Quoted by Gagnebin (see Bibl.).

In a revealing article in the 'Schweizerische Musikzeitung', 1946, No. 7, the composer made his attitude towards the setting of sacred texts admirably clear. The problem for him is the fact that church and art represent two different worlds to-day. A composer may write music for liturgical use only in quite exceptional cases nowadays. Martin had twice approached sacred words earlier in his career, in a Mass and part of a Christmas Oratorio; but in view of this discrepancy between subjective artistic expression and objective, purely ecclesiastical use, he had refrained from publishing them and from having them performed. Then, in 1944, Radio-Geneva commissioned him to write a choral work for the armistice of the second world war. Martin regarded this as a most exacting task. Biblical words alone seemed adequate to the purpose, and thus originated the short oratorio 'In terra pax', the first part of which expresses the gloom of war-time, the second the joys of earthly peace, while the last refers to divine peace.

Shortly before completion of 'In terra pax', in the spring of 1945, Martin was profoundly impressed by Rembrandt's etching 'The Three Crosses', and it was then that his idea of the great Passion work 'Golgotha' began to take shape. Unlike Bach, he neither could nor would write liturgical Passion music requiring a congregation to take part in it with hymn-tunes and contemplation. He wished merely to depict the events of the Passion and to let the hearer draw his own conclusions from them. The settings of meditations of St. Augustine between the seven "pictures" are to give time for thought and a formal unity to the whole. The Gospel recitatives are distributed between various soloists and at particularly impressive junctures entrusted to the chorus, which, much as in 'Le Vin herbé', recites in homophonic chordal music (e.g. the Crucifixion scene). The opening and closing choruses of the two main sections are like mighty corner pillars supporting the whole structure. The Resurrection hymn ("O death, where is thy sting?") at the close is, like the other choruses, kept in a style that combines linear and harmonic writing into a perfect unity.

Information about Martin's style from 'Le Vin herbé' to 'Golgotha', and especially about his conception of the twelve-note technique, is to be found in an article by him published in the 'Schweizerische Musikzeitung', 1942, No. 3, 'A propos du "Vin herbé"', where he says, inter alia: "Toute règle n'a en vue que l'enrichissement du style . . . l'obéissance à des règles de style n'est qu'une élégance, un plaisir d'esprit, qui ne fait preuve d'aucune valeur". And his antithesis to Schoenberg's aesthetics becomes particularly clear in the sentence: "En musique la réussite est beauté". Thus in Martin's music the element of sound, and "beauty" of sound, always take pride of place. This may be the reason why in his latest works, next to twelve-note rows, major and minor triads are again and again employed like newly experienced values of sound. But where twelve-note rows do appear, they function not only in a linear but also in a harmonic sense: they exercise a functional harmonic tension (e.g. the opening of the 'Petite Symphonie concertante'). It is especially noticeable that they often appear as harmonic foundations in the bass — a conception of the system that is entirely alien to Schoenberg — as in the following instance:

'Golgotha', voc. score, p. 123.

The twelve-note series, moreover, is here broken up into harmonically related, sequential sections, a procedure that is likewise characteristic of Martin's technique. Also, the series are often built up over pedal basses:

'Vin herbé', voc. score, p. 10.

Used in this way, the twelve-note technique assumes a functional harmonic significance; and this is Martin's decisive contribution to the history of modern music.

BIBL. — FISCHER, K. VON, Article in Schweiz. Mus. Ztg., 1951, No. 3.

- GAONEBIN, H., Article in 'Festschrift des Schweizerischen Tonkünstlervereins' (1950).
 MARTIN, FRANK, 'Notes autobiographiques' ('Polyphonies', 1948, No. 2).
 SCHULI, W., in 'Schweizer Musik der Gegenwart' (Zurich, 1948).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

BALLETS

- 'Musique de ballet' ('Die blaue Blume') (1936).
 'The Fairy-Tale of Cinderella' (after Perrault) (1941).
 'Ein Totentanz zu Basel im Jahre 1943' (1950).

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

- 'Oedipus Rex', Sophocles (1923).
 'Oedipus Coloneus', Sophocles (1924).
 'Romeo and Juliet', Shakespeare (1927).
 'La Nique à Satan', A. Rudhardt (1936).
 'Athalie', Racine, for girls' double chorus & small orch. (1946).

CHORAL WORKS

- 'Les Dithyrambes' (Pierre Martin) for chorus & orch. (1918).
 Mass for unaccomp. chorus (1926).
 'Musique pour les fêtes du Rhône' (R. L. Piachaud) (1927).
 'Cantata sur la Nativité' (1928).
 'Petits Chœurs pour voix de femmes dans "un bouquet de chansons"' (Ronsard, Toulet, Ramuz) (1930).
 Canon (Ramuz) for unaccomp. women's voices (1930).
 'Le Vin herbé' (after Joseph Bédier), secular oratorio for 12 solo voices, 7 stg. insts. & pf. (1938-41).
 'In terra pax', short oratorio for 5 solo voices, double chorus & orch. (1944).
 'Golgotha', oratorio (New Testament & St. Augustine) for 5 solo voices, chorus, organ & orch. (1945-48).
 'Cinq Chansons d'Ariel' (Shakespeare) for small chorus (1950).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Suite (1913).
 'Symphonie pour orchestre burlesque' (1915).
 'Esquisse' for small orch. (1921).
 'Rythmes' (1926).
 'Guitare' (1933).
 Symphony (1937).
 'Danse de la peur', symph. movement (1937).
 'Zwischen Rhone und Rhein', official festival march for the Swiss National Exhibition (1939).
 'Petite Symphonie concertante', version for full orch. (1945).
 Concerto for 7 wind insts., kettledrums & stgs. (1949).

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

- Pf. Concerto (1934).
 'Ballade' for alto saxophone, stgs. & pf. (1938).
 'Ballade for flute & stgs. (1939) (see also One Instrument and Pianoforte).
 'Ballade' for pf. (1939).
 'Ballade for trombone' (1940) (see also One Instrument and Pianoforte).
 'Petite Symphonie concertante' for harpsichord, harp, pf. & double stg. orch. (1945).
 'Ballade' for cello & small orch. (1949) (see also One Instrument and Pianoforte).
 Vn. Concerto (1951).
 Concerto for harpsichord & small orch. (1952).

VOICE AND ORCHESTRA

- 'Trois Poèmes payens' (Leconte de Lisle) for baritone (1911).
 'Der Cornet' (from Rainer Maria Rilke's 'Die Weise von Liebe und Tod des Cornets Christoph Rilke') for contralto & small orch. (1943).
 'Sechs Monologe aus "Jedermann"' (Hugo von Hofmannsthal) for baritone (1943).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- 'Pavane couleur du temps' for 2 vns., viola & 2 cellos (1920).
 Quintet for 2 vns., viola, cello & pf. (1920).
 'Quatre Sonnets à Cassandre' (Pierre de Ronsard) for mezzo-soprano, flute, viola & cello (1922).
 'Trio sur des chants populaires irlandais' for vn., cello & pf. (1925).
 'Rapsodie' for 2 vns., 2 violas & double bass (1935).
 Trio for vn., viola & cello (1936).
 String Quartet (1936).

ONE INSTRUMENT AND PIANOFORTE
(OR ORGAN)

- Sonata No. 1 for vn. (1915).
 Sonata No. 2 for vn. (1931).
 'Sonata da chiesa' for viola d' amore (or flute) & organ (1938).
 'Ballade' for flute (1939) (see also Solo Instruments and Orchestra).
 'Ballade' for trombone (1940) (see also Solo Instruments and Orchestra).
 'Ballade' for cello (1949) (see also Solo Instruments and Orchestra).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- 'Fox-trot' for 2 pfs. (1925).
 'Huit Préludes' (1948).

ORGAN MUSIC

- 'Passacaille' (1944).

GUITAR MUSIC

- 'Guitare' (1933).

SONG

- 'Dédicace à Jaques-Dalcroze' (Ronsard) for tenor.
 K. V. F.

MARTIN, (Sir) George (Clement) (b. Lambourne, Berks, 11 Sept. 1844; d. London, 23 Feb. 1916).

English organist and composer. He received instruction in organ playing from J. Pearson and Stainer, also in composition from the latter during the time he was already parish church organist at his birthplace. He was appointed private organist to the Duke of Buccleuch, at Dalkeith, in 1871; master of the choristers at St. Paul's Cathedral in London in 1874, deputy organist at the same on the death of George Cooper in 1876 and organist on the resignation of Stainer in 1888. He received the degrees of B.Mus., Oxon, in 1868, Fellow of the College of Organists in 1875, and Mus.D. (degree conferred by the Archbishop of Canterbury) in 1883, and was appointed the same year teacher of the organ at the R.C.M., which post he later resigned. He was made D.Mus. of Oxford in 1912.

Martin's compositions include a Morning Communion Service in C major for voices and orchestra; Communion Service in A major, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A major, for the same; the same in B \flat major for voices, organ and military band; the same in G major for voices and orchestra; 7 anthems; a variety of compositions for parochial use; songs, part-songs, etc. His most important work is the 'Te Deum' sung on the steps of St. Paul's at the Diamond Jubilee of Queen Victoria in 1897, shortly after which event he was knighted.

Martin died in London and was buried in the crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral. A memorial tablet with portrait in relief was placed near the grave by public subscription. A. C.

BIBL.—Mus. T., July 1897 & Dec. 1917.

MARTIN, George William (b. London, 8 Mar. 1828; d. London, 16 Apr. 1881).

English organist, teacher and composer. He received his early musical education in the choir of St. Paul's Cathedral in London under William Hawes. He became professor of music at the Normal College for Army Schoolmasters, music master at St. John's Training-College, Battersea, (1845-53) and organist of Christ Church, Battersea, in 1849. He composed many glees, madrigals and part-songs, for some of which he was awarded prizes, and edited and published cheap arrangements of the popular oratorios and other works of Handel, Haydn and others. For some years he directed performances given under the name of the National Choral Society, which was begun in 1860. He had an aptitude for training choirs of school children and conducted many public performances by them. He edited the 'Journal of Part Music' in 1861-62 and did much to make good music popular. He died in great poverty at Bolingbroke House Hospital, Wandsworth. W. H. H.

MARTIN, Johann. See LAURENTIUS VON SCHNÜFFIS.

MARTIN, Jonathan (b. London, 1715; d. London, 4 Apr. 1737).

English organist and composer. He was a chorister of the Chapel Royal under Croft. On leaving the choir he was placed under Thomas Rosingrave for instruction on the organ and soon attained such proficiency as to be able to act as deputy for his master at St. George's, Hanover Square, and for Weldon at the Chapel Royal. On 21 June 1736 he was admitted organist of the Chapel Royal on the death of Weldon, and promised "to compose anthems or services for the use of His Majesty's Chapel, whenever required by the Subdean for the time being". Probably he was never called upon to fulfil his promise, as his only known composition is a song in Rowe's tragedy, 'Tamerlane', "To thee, O gentle sleep". He died of consumption, and was buried (9 Apr.) in the west cloister of Westminster Abbey. W. H. H.

MARTIN PEU D'ARGENT (b. ?; d. ?).

French (?) 16th-century composer. He was Kapellmeister to the Duke of Julich, Cleve and Berg in 1561, and the master of Joannes Orydrius. He composed motets and chansons, and made a collection of motets for 4-6 voices, with Orydrius and Buysius, all published at Düsseldorf (1555-61). E. v. d. s.

MARTÍN Y SOLER, Vicente¹ (b. Valencia, 18 June 1754²; d. St. Petersburg, 30 Jan. 1806).

Spanish composer. He began his musical career as an organist at Alicante, but soon turned to writing operas, the first of which was produced at Naples in 1779. Several other works followed in the course of the next years, and his reputation was well established when he went to Vienna in 1785, thanks to Nancy Storace, who had sung in one of his works at Venice. There he found in Lorenzo da Ponte the right librettist for "quelle sue dolcissime melodie, che si senton nell' anima".³ Together they wrote and produced in Vienna three successful operas: 'Il burbero di buon cuore' and 'Una cosa rara' (1786), and 'L' arbore di Diana' (1787). 'Una cosa rara' was very popular for a long time and its success overshadowed Mozart's 'Le nozze di Figaro' produced some months before. It is well known that Mozart in the second 'Don Giovanni' finale quotes a tune from that opera ("O quanto un si bel giubilo"), and Kelly tells us in his 'Reminiscences' that the duet "Pace caro mio sposo" was "completely the rage all over Ireland, England and Scotland for many years". The first London performance of 'Una cosa rara' was on 10 Jan. 1789.

In 1788 Martín left Vienna for St. Petersburg, where he succeeded Sarti as court conductor to Catherine II. The empress herself wrote the librettos for two of his Russian operas. In 1794 da Ponte, then poet to the King's Theatre, called him to London, where 'Il burbero' was given on 17 May. Two more operas were the result of their second period of collaboration, 'La scola de' maritati' and 'L' isola del piacere', both produced in 1795. 'L' arbore di Diana', then nearly ten years old, was given in London on 18 Apr. 1797. His operas were, however, not very successful there. Martín returned to Russia some time between that date and 1799. Paul I nominated him Privy Councillor. The last years of his life he spent as a singing-teacher.

Martín will be remembered chiefly as a successful rival of Mozart. The chronology of his operas has always been a puzzle to historians, and there are many misstatements in Q.-L. and elsewhere. The following is a revised list of his works:

OPERAS

Title	Libretto	Production
'Ifigenia in Aulide.' 'Ipermestra.' 'Andromaca.' 'Astartea.'	Pietro Metastasio.	Naples, 12 Jan. 1779. Naples, 30 May 1780. Turin, 26 Dec. 1780. Lucca, Mar. 1781. ⁴

¹ The Italian form, Martini, has caused much confusion with J. P. A. Martini, whose works are often attributed to Martín.

² According to the parish register as quoted by Saldoni.

His tombstone in the Vassily Island Cemetery, St. Petersburg, wrongly gives the date as 18 Jan. 1756 (Mooser).

³ Lorenzo da Ponte, 'Memorie'.

⁴ According to Fétis.

Title	Libretto	Production
'Partenope.' 'L' Amor geloso.' 'In amor ci vuol destrezza.'	Metastasio.	Naples, 1782 (in concert form). Naples, spring (?) 1782. Venice, autumn 1782; as 'L' accorta cameriera' at Turin, 1783. Turin, Feb. 1783.
'Vologeso', with prologue 'Dora festeg- giante'. 'Le burle per amore.' 'La vedova spiritosa.' 'Il burbero di buon cuore.'	Lorenzo da Ponte, based on Goldoni's French comedy, 'Le Bourru bienfaisant'. Da Ponte, based on a story by Luis Vélez de Guevara. Da Ponte. Catherine II (a satire on Gus- tavius III of Sweden). ?	Venice, Carnival, 1784. Parma, Carnival, 1785. Vienna, 4 Jan. 1786.
'Una cosa rara, o sia Bellezza ed onestà.' 'L' arbore di Diana.' 'Mock Hero Kosometovich.'	Catherine II.	Vienna, 17 Nov. 1786. (Given in Germany as 'Lilla'.) Vienna, 1 Oct. 1787. St. Petersburg, 9 Feb. 1789.
'Melomania.' 'Fedul and his Children' (with Pash- kevich). 'Il castello d' Atlante.'		St. Petersburg, 18 Jan. 1790. St. Petersburg, 27 Jan. 1791.
'La scola de' maritati.'	Da Ponte.	Desenzano, Carnival, 1791 (by amateurs). London, 27 Jan. 1791. (Else- where as 'La capricciosa cor- retta', 'Gli spesi in contrasto' & 'La moglie corretta'). London, 26 May 1795. London, 28 May 1795.
'L' isola del piacere.' 'Le nozze de' contadini spagnuoli', intermezzo. 'La festa del villaggio.'	Da Ponte. ?	St. Petersburg, 26 Jan. 1798.

BALLETS

(St. Petersburg)

- 'Didon abandonnée' (1792).
'Amour et Psyché' (1793).
'L'Oracle' (1793).
'Tancrède' (1799).
'Le Retour de Polixène' (1799-1800).

Martín y Soler also wrote some church music; a cantata, 'La deità benefica', composed in Russia, and another, 'Il sogno', published by Breitkopf of Leipzig c. 1790; canons, canzonets, etc.

A. L.

BIBL. — MOOSER, R. ALOYS, 'Un Musicien espagnol en Russie' (Riv. Mus. It., 1936).

See also Ferrari (G. G., adds to 'Burbero'). Mozart (suppl. aria for do.). Pashkevich (collab.). Storace (S., m. used in 'Siege of Belgrade'). Viotti (song for 'Una casa rara').

MARTINELLI, Caterina. See GAGLIANO (M., perf. in 'Dafne').

MARTINELLI, Giovanni (b. Montagnana, 22 Oct. 1885).

Italian tenor singer. He was the eldest of a cabinet-maker's family of fourteen children. As a boy he sang and played the clarinet, and at the age of seventeen his virile voice developed. During his term of military service his singing attracted attention by chance (performing at a window of the barracks, accompanied by a comrade's mandoline, he drew a crowd to listen to him in the street), and he was enabled to study at Milan. There he made his début at the Teatro dal Verme in 'Ernani' in Nov. 1910. In 1912 he went to London and appeared at Covent Garden (and in 1913, 1914, 1919; then not again till 1937), and in 1913 at the Metropolitan Opera in New York, where in 1938 he celebrated his 25th season. He has a large repertory of well over fifty parts.

In the early part of his career Martinelli delighted the public with his ample vocal gift, as with the charm of a sunny, frank, open-hearted nature; but he was ingenuous to a fault and uncertain in his taste. In the course of the years he developed an unimpeachable technique and scrupulous style, so that on his return to London in 1937, after a long absence, he was recognized as an artist head and shoulders above most of his compatriots of the younger generation. At Martinelli's native town the opera-house has been renamed after him.

R. C.

MARTINENGO, Gabriele (b. Verona, ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-century composer. In 1547 he was considered for the appointment of maestro to the Accademia Filarmonica of Verona, in company with Ruffo and Nasco, the last-named being successful. Martinengo's known works include two sets of madrigals for four voices (1544 and 1548), one set for five voices (1580), numbers in collections of madrigals by Antonelli (1570), Mosto (1577) and Rore, and six manuscript motets.

D. M. A.

MARTINENGO, Giulio Cesare (b. Verona, ?; d. Venice, 1613).

Italian composer. He was maestro di cappella at Udine until elected as successor to Giovanni Croce at St. Marks, Venice, on 22 Aug. 1609, with an annual salary of 200 ducats. His tenure of this office lasted until 1613, when he seems to have fallen ill, being given a present of 20 ducats during July by the procuratori of St. Marks in order to assist him to recover his health. The appointment of Monteverdi to his post during Aug. of the same year, however, indicates that he died shortly after receiving the gift. One book of madrigals for four, five and six voices (1605) is known, and two motets are to be found in Groce's 'Nove lamentioni' (1610). His monody 'Regnum mundi', included in Simonetti's 'Ghirlanda sacra' (1625), is a miniature cantata for soprano and continuo, showing the application of a secular technique to church music, although without coloratura. This has been reprinted in score by Moser in his 'Heinrich Schutz' (1936). D. M. A.

MARTINES (Martinez), Marianne (b. Vienna, 4 May 1744; d. Vienna, 13 Dec. 1812).

Austrian composer of Spanish descent. Her father was master of ceremonies to the pope's nuncio in Vienna. Metastasio, a great friend of his, lived for nearly half a century with the family and undertook Marianne's education. Haydn, then young, poor and unknown, occupied a wretched garret in the same house and taught her the harpsichord, while Porpora gave her lessons in singing and composition, her general cultivation being under Metastasio's own care. Of these advantages she made good use. Burney, who knew her in 1772¹, speaks of her in the highest terms, especially praising her singing; and she also won the admiration of both Hasse and Gerbert.

After the death of the parents, and of Metastasio, who left them well off, she and her sister gave evening parties, which were frequented by all the principal artists. On one of these occasions Kelly² heard Marianne play a 4-hand sonata by Mozart with the composer. Latterly Marianne devoted herself to teaching talented pupils. In 1773 she was made a member of the Musical Academy of Bologna. In 1782 the Tonkünstler Societat performed her oratorio 'Isacco', to Metastasio's words. She also composed another oratorio, 'Santa Elena al Calvario', a Mass and other sacred music, a Psalm, to Metastasio's Italian translation, for four and eight voices, solo motets, arias and cantatas, concertos, overtures and symphonies, and harpsichord sonatas, two of which were reprinted by E. Pauer ('Alte Meister'). The Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde possesses the autographs of many of these works. Marianne died a few days after the death of her younger sister Antonie. C. F. P.

MARTINET, Jean-Louis (b. Sainte-Bazeille, Lot-et-Garonne, 8 Nov. 1912).

French composer. He studied fugue with

¹ See 'Present State of Music in Germany', I, 311-13, 352, 354, 362.

² Kelly's mistakes of detail are innumerable. He gives the name as "Martini" and, imagining Marianne to be the sister of her father -- "a very old man" and "nearly his own age" -- speaks of her as "in the vale of years" though still "possessing the gaiety and vivacity of a girl". She was barely forty.

Charles Koechlin and composition, at the Paris Conservatoire, with Roger-Ducasse and Olivier Messiaen. He gained premiers prix for composition (1943) and for conducting (1945), a subject which he studied with Roger Désormière and Charles Münch.

Martinet's first published work, the Prelude and Fugue for two pianofortes, shows, apart from contrapuntal gifts, a harmonic opulence deriving from Messiaen. These characteristics are seen further developed in a work of much larger scope, the lavishly scored symphonic poem 'Orphée'. This remarkable score, which shows its composer's close knowledge of others of similar proportions (Stravinsky's 'Sacre', Ravel's 'Daphnis et Chloé') and his assimilation of the language of such 20th-century masters as Debussy, Bartók, Ravel and Stravinsky, was first performed in Paris in Jan. 1947. Selected for performance at the 1948 (Amsterdam) Festival by the International Jury of the I.S.C.M., it was not actually given until the 1949 (Palermo) Festival.

In common with a number of Messiaen's war-time pupils, Martinet felt the "pull" of the twelve-note school, and his next published work, the Variations for string quartet, is based on a twelve-note series which the viola presents and immediately repeats in retrograde motion at the outset.

'La Trilogie des Prométhées' (1947), a work on the same large scale as 'Orphée', was first performed in May 1949. The 'Six Chants' for chorus and orchestra (1948) were first performed in Mar. 1951 and repeated in June at the 1951 (Frankfurt o/M.) I.S.C.M. Festival.

A slow and precise worker, Martinet is among the most naturally gifted composers of his generation. The following is a chronological list of his works:

- 'Prélude et fugue en ut', for 2 pfs. (1942).
- 'Trois Mélodies' for a woman's voice & pf. (1943).
- 'Orphée', symph. poem (Nov. 1944-July 1945).
- 'Variations pour quatuor à cordes' (Mar. 1946).
- 'La Trilogie des Prométhées: esquisses symphoniques' (1947).
- 'Six Chants' for chorus & orch. (July-Dec. 1948).
- 'Épisodes-Cantate' for bass, chorus & orch. (Oct. 1949-Mar. 1950).
- 'Pièce' for pf. (Oct. 1950).
- 'Trois Poèmes de René Char' for voice & pf. (Dec. 1950).
- 'Trois Textes du XVI^e siècle' for mixed chorus (1952).

F. A. (ii).

BIBL.—DEMUTH, NORMAN, 'Musical Trends in the 20th Century' (London, 1952).

ROSTAND, CLAUDE, 'La Musique française contemporaine' (Paris, 1952).

Martínez Sierra, Gregorio. See Amor brujo (Falla, ballet). Campo ('Don Juan de España', incid. m.). Falla ('Amor brujo', ballet). Turina (2 libs.; 'Navidad', incid. m.).

MARTINI (Johann Paul Aegidius Schwartzendorf, known as Martini il Tedesco) (b. Freistadt, Upper Palatinate, 1 Sept. 1741; d. Paris, 10 Feb. 1816).

German organist, conductor and composer.

He was organist of the Jesuit seminary at Neustadt on the Danube when he was ten years old. From 1758 he studied at Freiburg i/B. and played the organ at the Franciscan monastery there. When he returned to his native place he found a stepmother installed at home and set forth to seek his fortune in France, notwithstanding his complete ignorance of the language. At Nancy he was befriended, when in a penniless condition, by the organ builder Dupont, on whose advice he adopted the name by which he is known.

From 1761 to 1766 he was in the household of King Stanislas, who was then living at Lunéville. After his patron's death Martini went to Paris and immediately obtained a certain amount of fame by successfully competing for a prize offered for the best march for the Swiss Guard. At this time he wrote much military music, as well as symphonies and other instrumental works. On 18 Apr. 1771 his first opera, 'L'Amoureux de quinze ans, ou La Double Fête', was produced with very great success, and after holding various appointments as musical director to noblemen he was appointed conductor at the Théâtre Feydeau, when that establishment was opened under the name of Théâtre de Monsieur for the performance of light French and Italian operas.

Having lost all his emoluments by the decree of 10 Aug. 1792, Martini went to live at Lyons, where he published his 'Mélopée moderne', a treatise on singing. In 1794 he returned to Paris for the production of his opera 'Sapho', and in 1798 he was made inspector of the Conservatoire, then professor of composition. From this post he was ejected in 1802 by the agency, as he suspected, of Méhul and Catel. At the restoration of 1814 he received the appointment of superintendent of the court music. He wrote a Requiem for Louis XVI, which was performed at the Church of Saint-Denis on 21 Jan. 1816.

Besides the operas mentioned above Martini wrote 'Le Fermier cru sourd' (1772), 'Le Rendez-vous nocturne' (1773), 'Henri IV' (14 Nov. 1774), 'Le Droit du seigneur' (Fontainebleau, 17 Oct. 1783), 'L'Amant sylphe' (1785), 'Annette et Lubin' (1789) and 'Ziméo' (1800). In the department of church music he wrote several masses, psalms, Requiems, etc. A cantata written for the marriage of Napoleon with Marie-Louise exists, besides much chamber music, but Martini's best-known composition is the charming song 'Plaisir d'amour'.

J. A. F.-M., rev.

See also Berlioz (arr. of 'Plaisir d'amour', list).

MARTINI, Giovanni Battista (Giam-battista) ("Padre Martini") (b. Bologna, 24 Apr. 1706; d. Bologna, 4 Oct. 1784).

Italian composer, theorist and teacher. He was first taught music by his father, Antonio

Maria Martini, member of a musical society called I Fratelli. Having become an expert violinist, he learned to sing and play the harpsichord from Predieri and counterpoint from Antonio Ricciari, a male soprano of Vicenza and a composer of merit. At the same time he studied philosophy and theology with the monks of San Filippo Neri.

Having passed his novitiate at the Franciscan monastery of Lago, he was ordained on 11 Sept. 1722 and, returning to Bologna in 1725, became maestro di cappella of the Church of San Francesco. Giacomo Perti held a similar post at San Petronio, and from him Martini received valuable advice on composing church music, at the same time laying a scientific foundation for the whole theory of music by a conscientious study of mathematics with Zanotti, a well-known physician and mathematician. He thus gradually acquired an extraordinary and comprehensive mass of knowledge, with an amount of literary information far in advance of his contemporaries. His library was unusually complete for the time¹, partly because scientific men of all countries took a pleasure in sending him books. Burney, whose own library was very extensive, expressed his astonishment at that of Martini, which he estimates to contain 17,000 volumes.² After Martini's death a portion found its way to the court library in Vienna; the rest remained at Bologna in the Liceo Filarmonico.

Martini's reputation as a teacher was European, and scholars flocked to him from all parts, among the most celebrated being Paolucci, Rutini, Sarti, Ottani and Stanislao Mattei, afterwards joint founder of the Liceo Filarmonico. These he educated in the traditions of the old Roman school, the main characteristic of which was the melodious movement of the separate parts. Martini was also frequently called upon to recommend a new maestro di cappella or to act as umpire in disputed questions. He was himself occasionally involved in musical controversy, the best-known instance being his dispute with Redi about the solution of a puzzle canon by Giovanni Animuccia, which he solved by employing two keys in the third part. This, though approved by Pitoni, was declared by Redi to be unjustifiable. To prove his point Martini, therefore, wrote a treatise maintaining that puzzle-cans had not infrequently been solved in that manner, and quoting examples. Another important controversy was that held with Eximeno. In spite of these differences of opinion his contemporaries describe him as a man of great mildness, modesty and good nature, always ready to answer questions and give explanations. It is difficult to think without emotion of the warm welcome which he, the most learned and one of the oldest musicians of his country, gave to Mozart when he visited Bologna in 1770 as a boy of fourteen. His courtesy and affability brought the Bolognese monk into friendly relations with many exalted personages, Frederick the Great and Frederick William II of Prussia, Princess Maria Antonia of Saxony and Pope Clement XIV among them.

¹ He had ten copies of Guido d' Arezzo's 'Micrologus'.

² 'Present State of Music in France and Italy', p. 195.

He suffered much towards the close of his life from asthma, a disease of the bladder and a painful wound in the leg; but his cheerfulness never deserted him, and he worked at the fourth volume of his 'Storia della musica' up to his death. His favourite pupil Mattei stayed with him to the last. Zanetti's Requiem was sung at his funeral, and on 2 Dec. the Accademia Filarmonica held a grand function, at which a funeral Mass, the joint composition of thirteen maestri di cappella, was performed, and an "Elogio" pronounced by Lionardo Volpi. All Italy mourned for him, and a medallion to his memory was struck by Tadolini. He was a member of two Academies, the Filarmonici of Bologna and the Arcadici of Rome, his assumed name in the latter being Aristoxenus Amphion.

Martini's two great works are the 'Storia della musica' (3 vols., Bologna, 1757, 1770, 1781), and the 'Esemplare ossia saggio . . . di contrappunto' (2 vols., Bologna, 1774, 1775). The first is a most learned work; each chapter begins and ends with a puzzle canon, the whole of which were solved and published by Cherubini. The three volumes all treat of ancient music; the music of the middle ages down to the 11th century was to have been the subject of the fourth volume, which he did not live to finish. A report having sprung up that the completed manuscript was in the Minorite monastery at Bologna, Fétis obtained access to the library through Rossini, but found only materials of which no use had yet been made. The 'Saggio' is a most important collection of examples from the best masters of the ancient Italian and Spanish schools, and a model of its kind. Besides a number of small treatises and controversial writings¹ Martini left masses and other church music in the style of the time. The following were printed: 'Litaniae', Op. 1 (1734); 'XII Sonate d' intavolatura', Op. 2 (Amsterdam, Le Cène, 1741), excellent and full of originality; 'VI Sonate per organo e cembalo' (Bologna, 1747); 'Duetti da camera' (Bologna, 1763). The Liceo of Bologna possesses the manuscripts of a Mass, a Requiem, etc., three oratorios, 'San Pietro' (two separate compositions), 'Il sacrificio d' Abramo' and 'L' assunzione di Salomone al trono d' Israele'; a farsetta, 'La Dirindina', and three intermezzi, 'L' impresario delle Canarie', 'Don Chisciotte' and 'Il maestro di musica'. A Requiem (103 sheets) and other church compositions are in Vienna. Choruses for Varano's tragedy 'Giovanni di Giscala' (1754) and music for a production of Plautus's 'Trinummus' at Parma on 22 July 1780 are both preserved.

F. G., adds.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BUSI, L., 'Il Padre G. B. Martini' (Bologna, 1891).
 DELLA VALLE, PIETRO, 'Memorie storiche del Padre G. Martini' (Naples, 1785).
 GANDOLFI, G., 'Elogio de G. B. Martini' (Bologna, 1913).
 PARISI, F., 'Della vita e delle opere del Padre Martini' (Bologna, 1887).
 'Lettere del Padre Martini' (Bologna, 1888).
 PAUGHARD, P. ANSELM, 'Ein italienischer Musiktheoretiker: Pater Giambattista Martini' (Lugano, 1941).
 TEBALDINI, GIOVANNI, 'La scolastica del P. Martini' (Milan, 1940).
 See also Agostini (P., 'Agnus Dei'). Bach (J. C., 38, pupil). Berezovsky (M. S., pupil). Burney (friendship). Eximeno (controversy with). Mattei (pupil & friend). Mozart (pupil). Pacchioni (M.'s dispute with Redi).
 Martini, Simone. See Bandurria (depicted).

MARTINON, Jean (b. Lyons, 10 Jan. 1910).

French violinist, conductor and composer. He studied at the Lyons and Paris Conservatoires, principally the violin, and composition with Roussel. His first important early works were the 'Symphoniette' for strings, pianoforte, harp and drums (1935) and the Symphony in C major (1934-36). While a prisoner of war in Germany he composed 'Musique d'exil', in which jazz rhythms and jazz instruments are employed; but his major work of that period is probably the setting of Psalm CXXXVI ('Chant des captifs') for solo voices, reciter, mixed chorus and orchestra, which was awarded the Grand Prix de Composition de la Ville de Paris in 1946. Another work written in captivity and first performed in the Stalag in 1940 is 'Absolve Domine' for men's chorus and an orchestra without violins. In 1944 came the 'Hymne à la vie' for orchestra with saxophones and ondes Martenot and the 'Concerto lyrique' for string quartet and orchestra, followed in 1948 by the third or "Irish" Symphony. (A second Symphony appears to have been discarded.) There is also a 'Concerto giocoso' for violin and orchestra. The chamber music includes a string Quartet which was awarded the Béla Bartók Prize in 1948. Martinon did not venture upon an opera until 1951, when he was at work on 'Hécube', with a libretto based on Euripides by Serge Moreux.

Martinon is also a conductor of repute, and in this capacity he has appeared with success in London and other capitals as well as with the leading French orchestras, frequently introducing new works by modern French composers. He was assistant conductor of the Paris Société des Concerts in 1944-46 and has appeared successfully in London (L.P.O.) and Ireland (Radio Eireann). He has also toured in Italy, Yugoslavia, Poland and Chile.

¹ A list of them is in Fétis.

R. H. M.

MARTINŮ, Bohuslav (b. Polička, E. Bohemia, 8 Dec. 1890).

Czech composer. He was born in the belfry of the church of his native town, being the son of a shoemaker who was at the same time watchman of the church tower. From the age of six he had violin lessons from an amateur, the local tailor. At eight he could play works by Bériot and Wieniawski tolerably well and at ten he wrote a string quartet. He was entered for the Prague Conservatory, which he was able to join in 1906. But he became deeply interested in literature and the theatre and did not work to the authorities' satisfaction, with the result that he was twice expelled and the second time transferred himself to the Organ School. He succeeded in joining the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra as a violinist in 1913, remaining attached to it for ten years; but he did not continually live in Prague. During the 1914-18 war he managed to evade military service in the Austrian army, his sympathies being with the western allies, and he returned home to Polička as music teacher in a school and also gave private violin lessons. In 1920 he was in Prague again, however, busy playing with the Philharmonic. In 1922 the National Theatre produced his ballet 'Istar' and the following year Talich introduced the first of his three symphonic poems, 'Vanishing Midnight'. Also in 1922, at Suk's suggestion, he re-entered the Conservatory, persuaded that he was still technically unsafe, and he became a pupil of Suk. But he remained stubbornly opposed to discipline, artistic as well as personal, feeling perhaps that he was too old by this time to become a student again.

In Sept. 1923 Martinů decided to make the first great change in his career: he settled in Paris, where he was destined to remain until 1940. He had for some time greatly admired Roussel's work, and he now became that composer's pupil. But he found it hard for a long time to live even in moderate comfort. By degrees, however, he began to make his music known, and it was taken up by various conductors (Talich at home, Sacher and Ansermet in Switzerland, Munch in France, Wood in England and Kussevitsky in America) and several publishers brought out a few of his works. In 1928 his second string Quartet was chosen for the I.C.S.M. Festival at Siena and the same year his string Quintet was given at the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Festival at Pittsfield, Mass.

In 1931 he was able to marry Charlotte Quennehen, a young woman from Picardy who was working as a dressmaker in Paris. The Coolidge Prize of $1000 was awarded him for the string Sextet in 1932, at a critical time when his wife was seriously ill. But in spite of these incidental strokes of good fortune Martinů continued to find it hard to make ends meet by composition: in 1938 he and his wife were still living in two small attics. There he wrote his 'Concerto grosso', one of his most successful orchestral works, and a more solidly musical one than 'La Bagarre' ('Tumult') of 1928, which had first made him fairly widely known. The 'Concerto grosso' was down for performance by Talich in Prague in 1938, but the Munich crisis intervened, and by the time Charles Munch was ready to give the work in Paris in 1940 Martinů had taken flight from the threat of invasion or destruction, making for the U.S.A., where Kussevitsky performed it with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on 14 Nov. 1941. Meanwhile another important work, the double Concerto for two string orchestras, pianoforte and timpani written in 1938, was given by Sacher at Basel on 9 Feb. 1940.

Martinů hurriedly left Paris with his wife on 10 June 1940, with only a small suitcase, leaving behind scores, manuscripts and other possessions, and after months of great hardship in southern France and Portugal they landed in Bermuda on 29 Mar. 1941, and on 31 Mar. they were in New York at last. They alternately lived there, at Jamaica (Long Island), Middlebury (Vermont), Lenox (Mass.) and Manomet (Mass.). Kussevitsky commissioned his first Symphony, which was produced by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on 13 Nov. 1942. The second was composed at Darien (Conn.) between 29 June and 24 July 1943, and first performed at Cleveland on 26 Oct. of that year. On 31 Dec. following the violin Concerto commissioned by Mischa Elman was produced at Boston. A short orchestral work branding the Nazi tyranny in Czechoslovakia, 'Memorial to Lidice', was written at Darien in Aug. 1943 and performed in New York on 28 Oct. The same year 'Memorial Stanzas' for violin and piano were dedicated to Albert Einstein and played by the famous scientist with Robert Casadesu at the former's house at Princeton. The third and fourth Symphonies were composed in 1944 and 1945 respectively, mainly during holidays in various places in the U.S.A.

But Martinů's American period was drawing to a close. In Sept. 1945 he was invited by the Prague Conservatory to accept a professorship there in the master school for composition, and he decided to take up his new duties the following spring. He was thus still able to hear the first performance of the new Symphonies in America (No. 3, Boston, 12 Oct.; No. 4, Philadelphia, 30 Nov. 1945), and after his arrival in Europe he heard several of his works in Paris in Feb. 1946.

Martinů's music has been pronounced outstandingly good by some and outrageously bad by others, but perhaps no critic, however indulgent or severe, has been known to praise or condemn his work as a whole. His output, perhaps owing to his curiously irregular early training and his personal intransigence, is extraordinarily unequal. To like a work of his is therefore often a matter of luck rather than of considered judgment, and indeed no safe opinion can be pronounced until a large amount of his music has been studied and heard. Even then the critic's view is likely to vacillate, for he will find a poor or repulsive work side by side with a very good or very attractive one, or come upon incidents of disconcertingly variable quality even within one and the same. But Martinů's work has vitality and a very pronounced originality that can take all sorts of different forms, and at his best he is a genuine music-maker, who writes, not for the sake of achieving a style — indeed he has no settled style — but for the sake of turning out essentially musical stuff and of giving pleasure to performers as well as, and perhaps even more than, to listeners. E. B.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- COPLAND, AARON, 'Our New Music: Leading Composers in Europe and America' (New York, 1941).
 FERROUD, PIERRE-OCTAVE, 'A Great Musician of To-day: B. Martinů' ('Chesterian', Mar.-Apr. 1937).
 NEFFL, PAUL, chapter in 'The Book of Modern Composers', ed. by David Ewen (New York, 1942).
 ŠAFRÁNEK, MILOŠ, 'Bohuslav Martinů' (M.Q., July 1943).
 'Bohuslav Martinů: the Man and his Music' (London, 1946).
 'Summing up Martinů's Output' (N.Y. Times, 18 June 1939).

MARTINŮ'S PRINCIPAL WORKS¹

OPERAS

- 'The Soldier and the Dancer' (lib. by J. L. Budín, 1926-27; perf. Brno, 1928).
 'Les Lames du couteau' (lib. by Ribemont-Dessaigues, 1928).
 'Les Vicissitudes de la vie' (lib. by Ribemont-Dessaigues, 1928 (unfinished)).
 'Journée de bonté' (lib. by composer, Ilja Ehrenburg & Ribemont-Dessaigues, 1929).
 'The Miracle of Our Lady' (lib. by composer & Henri Ghéon), 1933; perf. Brno, 1934.
 'The Suburban Theatre' (lib. by composer), 1935; perf. Brno, 1936.
 'Alexandre bis' (lib. by André Wormser), 1937.
 'Juliette, or The Key to Dreams' (lib. by Georges Neveux), 1936-37; perf. Prague, 1938.
 'Comedy on the Bridge', comic opera (c. 1950).
 'The Marriage' (lib. based on Gogol's play), perf. New York, Television, 11 Feb. 1953.

BALLETS

- 'Istar', 1921; perf. Prague, 1922.
 'Who is the most powerful in the world?' (ballet of animals), 1923; perf. Brno, 1924.
 'Revolt', 1925; perf. Brno, 1926.
 'On tourne', 1925.
 'La Revue de cuisine', 1927; perf. Prague, 1927.
 'Le Raid merveilleux' (ballet mécanique), 1927-28.
 'Échec au roi' (André Coruroy), 1928.
 'The butterfly that stam-ped' (after Kipling), 1929.
 'Spalíček' (Czech ballet with women's chorus), 1931; perf. Prague, 1932.
 'Le Jugement de Paris', 1935.

FILM MUSIC

- 'Unfaithful Marijka' (on Ivan Olbracht's novel), 1935.

RADIO MUSIC

- 'The Voice of the Forest' (lib. by V. Nezval), 1935; broadcast Prague, 1935.
 'Comedy on a Bridge', 1937; broadcast Prague, 1937.
 'Bouquet of Flowers' (cantata on Czech folk poetry), 1938; broadcast Prague, 1938.

CHORAL WORKS

- 'Czech Rhapsody' for solo voices, chorus, orch. & organ, 1918.
 'Songs of Mary' for women's chorus, 1936.
 'Madrigals' (Czech folk legends) for women's chorus, 1938.
 'Field Mass' for baritone, male chorus, wind & perc., 1939.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 3 Symphonic Poems, 1922
 1. Vanishing Midnight.
 2. The Grove of the Satyrs.
 3. Shadows.
 'Half-Time', 1925.
 'La Bagarre', 1927.
 'La Rapsodie', 1928.
 'Entr'acte' (3 pieces for chamber orch.), 1928.
 'Serenade' for chamber orch., 1930.
 'Partita' (Suite I), 1931.
 'Les Rondes' for chamber orch., 1932.
 'Sinfonia' for 2 orchs., 1932.
 'Overture for the Sokol Festival', 1932.
 'Inventions', 1934.
 'Concerto grosso', 1938.
 'Tre ricercari', 1938.
 'Double Concerto' for 2 stg. orchs., pf. & timp., 1938.
 'Military March', 1940.
 Symphony No. 1, 1942.
 Symphony No. 2, 1943.
 'Memorial to Lidice', 1943.
 Symphony No. 3, 1944.
 Symphony No. 4, 1945.
 'Thunderbolt P-47' (Scherzo), 1945.

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

- Concerto for pf., No. 1, 1925.
 Concertino for pf. (left hand) and chamber orch., 1928.
 Concerto for cello, with chamber orch., 1931, with full orch., 1939.
 String Quartet with orch., 1931.
 Concerto for vn., No. 1, 1932 (unfinished and lost).
 Concertino for pf. trio, 1933.
 Concertino for pf., No. 2, 1935.
 Concertino for harpsichord & chamber orch., 1935.
 Concerto for flute, vn. & orch., 1936.
 Concertino for pf., 1937, rev. 1942.
 'Sonata da camera' for cello & chamber orch., 1940.
 'Sinfonietta giocosa' for pf. & chamber orch., 1940-41.
 'Concerto da camera' for vn. with stgs., pf. & perc., 1941.
 Concerto for 2 pfs., 1943.
 Concerto for vn., No. 2, 1943.
 Concerto for cello, 1944-45.

VOICE AND ORCHESTRA

- 'Magic Nights', 1919.

CHAMBER MUSIC

- 'Nipponnari' for voice & 7 insts., 1908.
 String Quartet No. 1, 1921.
 String Quartet No. 2, 1926.

¹ The complete list of Martinů's works, some rejected and many unpublished and unperformed, is enormous; a selection only of those most likely to survive is given here.

- Duo for vn. & cello, 1927.
 String Quintet, 1928.
 Quintet for wind msts., 1930.
 Serenades for small chamber music combs., 1930.
 'Trio ('Cinq Pièces brèves') for vn., cello & pf., 1930.
 Sonatina for 2 vns. & pf., 1931.
 Duos for 2 vns., 1931.
 String Quartet No. 3, 1931.
 String Sextet, 1932.
 Sonata for 2 vns. & pf., 1932.
 Piano Quintet No. 1, 1932.
 String Trio, 1936.
 String Quartet No. 4, 1936.
 Sonata for flute, vn. & pf., 1936.
 'Les Madrigaux' for oboe, clar. & bassoon, 1937.
 String Quartet No. 5, 1938.
 'Promenades' for flute, vn. & harpsichord, 1940.
 'Bergerettes' for vn., cello & pf., 1940.
 Piano Quartet, 1942.
 'Madrigal Sonata' for flute, vn. & pf., 1942.
 Piano Quintet No. 2, 1944.
 Trio for flute, cello & pf., 1944.
 'Phantasy' for theremin, oboe, pf. & stg. 4tet, 1944.

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- 'Impromptu', 1927.
 5 Short Pieces, 1930.
 Sonata No. 1, 1930.
 'Études rythmiques', 1931.
 'Arietta', 1931.
 Sonata No. 2, 1933.
 Sonatina, 1938.
 'Madrigal Stanzas', 1943 (ded. to Albert Einstein).
 Sonata No. 3, 1944.
 'Czech Rhapsody', 1945 (ded. to Fritz Kreisler).

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

- 'Arabesques', 1930.
 'Nocturnes' (4 studies), 1930.
 Sonata No. 1, 1940.
 Sonata No. 2, 1941.
 Variations on a Theme by Rossini, 1942 (ded. to Grigory Piatigorsky).

FLUTE AND PIANOFORTE

- Sonata, 1945.

UNACCOMPANIED STRING INSTRUMENTS

- 'Études rythmiques' for vn., 1931.
 'Études rythmiques' for cello, 1931.

PIANOFORTE SOLO

- 'Puppets', I, 1908.
 'Puppets', II, 1909.
 'Trois Danses tchèques', 1925.
 'Film en miniature', 1926.
 'Préludes', 1930.
 'Borová' (Czech dances), 1931.
 'Esquisses de danse', 1932.
 'Pièce pour piano' (in 'Album des auteurs modernes'), 1932.
 'Les Ritournelles', 1933.
 'Dumka' (in album 'Klavir, 1937'), 1936.
 'The Window in the Garden', 1938.
 'Train hanté', 1938 (ded. to Marguerite Long).
 'Fantaisie et rondo', 1940.
 'Mazurka' (Paderewski Memorial Album), 1944.
 'Études and Polkas' (3 books), 1945.

HARPSICHORD

- 2 Preludes, 1935.

SONGS

- Children's Songs, 1916.
 2 Songs for contralto (folk poems), 1929.
 'Vocalise en forme d'ariette', 1930.
 'New Spalček' (folk poems), 1942.
 'Songs on One Page', 1943.
 'Songs on Two Pages', 1944.

MARTORETTA, Giandomenico La. See LA MARTORETTA.

MARTUCCI, Giuseppe (b. Capua, 6 Jan. 1856; d. Naples, 1 June 1909).

Italian pianist, conductor and composer.

In 1860 his family removed to Pozzuoli (Naples), where his father, a trombone player and bandmaster, gave him his first music lessons. In Dec. 1864 he gave with his sister Teresa the first pianoforte recital in public. The little pianist's first success was afterwards repeated many times, and in 1867 he won the competition for a free course at the Conservatorio di San Pietro a Maiella in Naples, where he studied the pianoforte under Beniamino Cesi and composition under Paolo Serrao. In 1871 he left that institution, published his first composition (3 'Capricci', Op. 2, for pianoforte) and resumed assiduously the activity of concert-giving. His programmes were noted for the severity of taste with which he devised them. In 1877 he began a concert tour in Italy and abroad with Piatti, the violoncellist, in 1880 he was appointed pianoforte professor at the Naples Conservatory and in Jan. 1881 he conducted his first orchestral concert, which included works by Mozart, Beethoven and Mendelssohn. In 1883 he commemorated the death of Wagner with a concert at Naples, thus beginning the work of propaganda on behalf of that master which was to culminate in the first performance in Italy of 'Tristan and Isolde' (Bologna, 2 June 1888). In that city he was director of the Liceo Musicale G. B. Martini from 1886 to 1902, and he devoted himself not only to composition but to the furtherance of musical life and culture at Bologna. From the numerous concerts of old and modern music which he conducted during that period may be singled out as an example of his enterprise the programme of British music—probably unique on the Continent at that time—given on 24 Apr. 1898, including works by Sullivan, Stanford, Parry, Mackenzie and Cowen. In 1902 he returned to his old Conservatory at Naples as its director, and there he remained till his death, keenly active as orchestral and operatic conductor.

Martucci, for his work as both an executive and a creative musician, must be placed in the front rank as a pioneer in the renaissance of instrumental music in Italy, at a time when opera alone seemed to be regarded as worthy of consideration. His devotion to German music of the second half of the 19th century, particularly that of Schumann, Wagner and Brahms, had a great influence on his own production, which reveals a strong personality, not so much of an originator as of an artist of noble ideals, elevated taste and profound knowledge of the technique of composition. All these qualities combined to make him a penetrating and sensitive interpreter of the masters of his preference. His Wagnerian performances in particular must be singled out as models of musicianly and stylistic interpretation.

Martucci's very numerous compositions include the following:

CHORAL WORK

'Samuel', oratorio (MS).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

Symphony No. 1, D mi. (Op. 75) (1888-95).

Symphony No. 2, F ma. (Op. 81) (1904).

'Quattro piccoli pezzi.'

PIANOFORTE AND ORCHESTRA

Concerto, B♭ mi. (Op. 66) (1884-85).

Concerto, D mi. (MS).

VOICE AND ORCHESTRA

'Le canzone dei ricordi: poemetto lirico.'

CHAMBER MUSIC

Quintet for 2 vns., viola, cello & pf. (Op. 45) (1878).

Trio No. 1, C ma., for vn., cello & pf. (Op. 59).

Trio No. 2, E♭ ma., for vn., cello & pf. (Op. 62).

'Momento musicale e minuetto' for stig. 4tet.

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

3 Pieces (Op. 67).

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

Sonata, F♯ mi. (Op. 52).

3 Pieces (Op. 69).

'Due romanze' (Op. 72).

PIANOFORTE SOLO

2 Pieces (Op. 73)

1. Serenata.

2. Gavotta.

'Trêfle à quatre feuilles' (Op. 74).

3 Pieces (Op. 76)

1. Novelletta.

2. Notturmo.

3. Scherzo.

2 Pieces (Op. 77)

1. Capriccio.

2. Toccata.

3 Little Pieces (Op. 78)

1. Serenata.

2. Minuetto.

3. Capriccio.

3 Little Pieces (Op. 79)

1. Preludio.

2. Canzonetta.

3. Saltarello.

Due capricci' (Op. 80).

TWO PIANOFORTES

'Fantasia' (Op. 32).

Variations.

ORGAN MUSIC

Sonata (MS).

SONGS

'Pagine sparse', cycle (Op. 68).

'Due sogni' (Op. 68a).

He also wrote, among other things, several pieces for the cello and numerous songs for voice and pianoforte, among which is 'Canzone dei ricordi' for contralto, baritone and pianoforte (also orchestrated) to words by Rocco Pagliara. His pianoforte music, collected almost completely in 6 volumes, includes the 'Notturmo' (from Op. 70) and the 'Novelletta' (from Op. 82) which in orchestral transcriptions have become part of the Italian symphonic repertory. He also made many pianoforte arrangements of old music (Bach, Handel, Corelli, Boccherini, Mozart, etc.).

G. M. G.

BIBL.—'Capua a Giuseppe Martucci', volume published on the occasion of the unveiling of the Martucci monument at Capua on 31 May 1914 (Capua, 1915).

FANO, F., 'Giuseppe Martucci: saggio biografico-critico' (Milan, 1950).

PRATI, R., 'Giuseppe Martucci' (Turin, 1914).

TORCHI, L., 'Le sinfonie di Martucci' (Riv. Mus. It., III, 1; XII, 1).

MARTUCCI, Paolo (b. Naples, 8 Oct. 1883).

Italian pianist, son of the preceding. He was his father's pupil and made his début at Bologna on 27 June 1902 with Tchaikovsky's Concerto in B♭ minor. He lived in England from 1907, toured Italy in 1909 and in 1911 settled in the U.S.A., at first as pianoforte professor at the Cincinnati Conservatory. From 1913 he was a private pianoforte teacher in New York.

H. A. W.

BIBL.—LIMONCELLI, MATTIA, 'Giuseppe Martucci' (Naples, 1939).

MARTY, (Eugène) Georges (b. Paris, 16 May 1860; d. Paris, 11 Oct. 1908).

French conductor and composer. He studied at the Paris Conservatoire, where he obtained the first prize in solfège in 1875, the first in harmony in 1878 and the Grand Prix de Rome in 1882 with his cantata 'Edith'. In 1892 he was appointed chorus master at the Eden-Théâtre and in the same year made director of the vocal ensemble classes at the Conservatoire, a post he resigned in 1904; he was chorus master at the Opéra in 1893 and conducted the Opéra-Comique in 1900. From 12 June 1901 till 1908 he was conductor of the Concerts du Conservatoire. From 1906 he conducted classical concerts at the Casino of Vichy.

Marty wrote much and was greatly influenced by his master, Massenet. The following may be mentioned: 'Lysic', a one-act pantomime (1888); 'Le Duc de Ferrare', 3-act opera, Théâtre-Lyrique (1899); 'Daria', 2-act opera (Opéra, 27 Jan. 1905); 'Ballade d'hiver' (1885), 'Balthazar' overture (1887), suite 'Les Saisons' (1888), symphonic poem 'Merlin enchanté', all for orchestra; songs and pianoforte pieces, etc.

G. F.

Marvell, Andrew. See Davies (H. W., 2 Pastorals, voc. chamber m.). White (F., 'Nymph's Complaint', do.).

MARX, Adolph Bernhard (b. Halle, 15 May 1795; d. Berlin, 17 May 1866).

German musical scholar, author and composer. He was the son of a physician and learnt harmony from Türk, studied law and held a legal post at Naumburg. His love of music led him to Berlin, where he soon gave up the law, and in 1824 he founded, with Schlesinger the publisher, the 'Berliner allgemeine musikalische Zeitung'. This periodical, which existed only seven years, did important service in creating a juster appreciation of Beethoven's works in northern Germany, a service to which Beethoven characteristically refers in a letter to Schlesinger of 25 Sept. 1825. Marx's book on the same subject, however, 'Beethovens Leben und Schaffen' (Berlin, 1859; 2nd ed. 1865; 5th 1901), is a fantastic critique, too full of mere conjecture and misty aestheticism. In 1827 he received his doctor's diploma from the University of Marburg and was lecturer in the history and theory of music at the University of Berlin. He became Professor in 1830 and in 1832 Musikdirector of the university choir. In 1850 he founded with Kullak and Stern the Berliner Musikschule, afterwards the Berlin Conservatory, and then the Stern Conservatory, but he withdrew in 1856 (Kullak having resigned in 1855) and henceforth devoted himself to his private pupils and to his work at the University.

Marx's numerous works are of unequal merit, the most important being the 'Lehre von der musikalischen Composition', 4 vols. (Leipzig, 1837, 1838, 1847). His 'Gluck und die Oper', 2 vols. (Berlin, 1863) contains many ingenious observations, but is of no historical value. The others are 'Über Malerei in der Tonkunst' (1828), 'Über die Geltung der Händelschen Sologesänge . . .' (1829), 'Allgemeine Musiklehre' (1839), 'Die alte Musiklehre' (1842), 'Die Musik des 19. Jahrhunderts . . .' (1855), 'Anleitung zum Vortrag Beethovenscher Klavierwerke' (1863), 'Erinnerungen' (1865) and a posthumous work, 'Das Ideale und die Gegenwart' (1867). Besides what he did for Beethoven's music, Marx deserves credit for bringing to light many little-known works by Bach and Handel.

His compositions are not remarkable, neither his oratorios, 'Johannes der Täufer', 'Moses' and 'Nahid und Omar', nor his instrumental music obtaining more than a succès d'estime. His opera, 'Jery und Bätely' (Goethe's libretto), was performed in Berlin in 1825, and a melodrama, 'Die Rache wartet', in 1829, but made no impression. Nevertheless some particulars given in his 'Erinnerungen' (Berlin, 1865) as to his manner of composing are well worth reading, as indeed is the whole book for its interesting picture of the state of music in Berlin between 1830 and 1860. With Mendelssohn he was at one time extremely intimate, and no doubt was in many respects useful to him; but his influence diminished as Mendelssohn grew older and more independent. F. G.

MARX, Joseph (b. Graz, 11 May 1882).

Austrian composer, critic and teacher. He studied music, the history of art and philosophy in his native town and took the Ph.D. in 1909. In the years between 1911 and 1914 he began to make a name for himself with the composition of numerous and striking songs, and his reputation secured him in 1914 a professorship in musical theory at the Imperial Musical Academy in Vienna. In 1922 he succeeded Ferdinand Löwe as director of that institution. From 1924 to 1927 Marx was the first principal of the newly founded Viennese High School for Music. In 1931-1938 he was music critic of the 'Neues Wiener Journal', and since 1946 he has been active in the same capacity on the 'Wiener Zeitung', and at the same time he was nominated honorary professor by the University of Graz.

As a composer Marx has done his best work in his songs, for the writing of which his poetic and spontaneous nature peculiarly fits him, but certain chamber works, such as the 'Quartetto in modo antico', also represent him favourably. If his early production arrested the attention of the young followers of Germanic culture, he later became, as a belated arch-romantic, the last defender of the traditional Viennese style, declining to face the problems of modern European music and thus turning himself into a figure of merely local importance. Formed of such diverse influences as Debussy and French impressionism as a whole, the Slavonic masters, Liszt, Max Reger, Hugo Wolf, Brahms and Bruckner, his music yet sounds a personal note and may be regarded as the prototype of Austrian musical impressionism. (The song 'Windräder' may be mentioned as a characteristic example.)

The following are Joseph Marx's principal compositions:

CHORUSES

- 'Morgengesang' (1910).
- 'Abendweise' (1910).
- 'Herbstchor an Pan' (1911).
- 'Ein Neujahrshymnus' (1913).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 'Herbstsymphonie' (1922).
- 'Eine symphonische Nachtmusik' (1926).
- 'Idylle' (1926).
- 'Eine Frühlingsmusik' (1926).
- 'Festliche Fanfarenmusik' (1928).
- 'Nordlandsrhapsodie' (1929).
- 'Alt-Wiener Serenaden' (1942).
- 'Feste im Herbst' (1946).
- 'Sinfonia in modo antico' for stgs. (from the Quartet) (1947).
- 'Sinfonietta in modo classico' for stgs. (arr. of the Quartet) (1944).

SOLO AND ORCHESTRA

- 'Romantisches Klavierkonzert' (1919).
- Pf. Concerto 'Castelli romani' (1931).
- 'Verklärtes Jahr', symphony for voice & orch. (1932).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- 'Quartett in Form einer Rhapsodie' for vn., viola, cello & pf. (1911).
- Scherzo for vn., viola, cello & pf. (1911).
- 'Ballade' for vn., viola, cello & pf. (1911).
- 'Trio-Phantasie' for vn., cello & pf. (1913).
- String Quartet, A ma. (1937).
- String Quartet "in modo antico" (1940).
- String Quartet "in modo classico" (1942).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- Sonata, A ma. (1913).
- 'Frühlingssonate', D ma. (1946).

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

Suite, F ma. (1914).

'Pastorale' (1914).

Also pf. pieces, about 120 songs with pf. (some also orchestrated), &c.

A number of Marx's essays and criticisms were published in book-form under the titles of 'Betrachtungen eines romantischen Realisten' (Vienna, 1947). H. R.

BIBL. — LISS, ANDREAS, 'Joseph Marx: Leben und Werk' (Graz, 1943).

See also Song, p. 952.

MARX, Karl (b. Munich, 12 Nov. 1897).

German conductor and composer. He began by studying natural science, but on meeting Carl Orff during the war of 1914-18 he became deeply interested in music and decided to make it his career. After a course of study under Orff he entered the Academy of Music at Munich as a pupil of Beer-Waldbrunn for composition and Hausegger for conducting. In 1924 he became a professor at the Academy and in 1928 conductor of the Munich Bach Society.

Marx's compositions include various choral works (some to words by Rainer Maria Rilke), a Passacaglia for orchestra, a Divertimento for wind instruments, a Concerto for 2 violins and orchestra, a string Quartet, a Sextet for flute, clarinet, bassoon, violin, viola and cello, songs (words by Rilke, Morgenstern and others), etc. E. B.

Marx, Karl. See Krein (2, choral work).

Marx-Moeller. See Foerster (J. B., 'Sleeping Beauty', incid. m.).

MARXSEN, Eduard (b. Nienstädten nr. Altona, 23 July 1806; d. Altona, 18 Nov. 1887).

German pianist, teacher and composer. His father was organist at Altona. He was intended for the church, but devoted himself to music, which he studied at home and with Clasing of Hamburg. He then assisted his father till the latter's death in 1830, when he went to Vienna and took lessons in counterpoint from Seyfried and the pianoforte from Bocklet. He also composed industriously, and on his return to Hamburg gave a concert (15 Oct. 1834) at which he played eighteen pieces of his own composition. He subsequently lived at Hamburg in great request as a teacher. Brahms was his most illustrious pupil. Of his sixty or seventy compositions one for full orchestra, called 'Beethoven's Schatten', was performed in 1844 and 1845 at concerts in Hamburg. Brahms's B♭ major pianoforte Concerto is dedicated to him.

F. G.

Mary, Queen of Scots. See Carissimi (lament of M.). Coccia (G., opera). Dallapiccola (Prayer for chorus). Loewe (song). Schumann (5 songs).

MARYLEBONE GARDENS. This once celebrated place of entertainment, one of London's pleasure gardens which played a part in concert-giving, especially in the 18th century, was situated at the back of a tavern called "The Rose of Normandy" (or "The Rose"), on the east side of High Street, Marylebone, and was erected about the middle of the 17th century. The earliest notice of it is in 'Memoirs of Samuel Sainthill', 1659, printed in 'The Gentleman's Magazine', Vol. LXXXIII, p. 524, where the garden is thus described:

The outside a square brick wall, set with fruit trees, gravel walks, 204 paces long, seven broad; the circular walk 485 paces, six broad, the centre square, a Bowling Green, 112 paces one way, 88 another; all except the first double set with quickest hedges, full grown and kept in excellent order, and indented like town walls.

It is next mentioned by Pepys, on 7 May 1668:

Then we abroad to Marrowbone and there walked in the garden, the first time I ever was there, and a pretty place it is.

Long's bowling-green at the Rose at Marylebone, "half a mile distant from London", is mentioned in 'The London Gazette' for 11 Jan. 1692. Count de Tallard, the French ambassador, gave a splendid entertainment before leaving England to the Marquis of Normanby (afterwards Duke of Buckingham) and other persons of note "at the great Bowling Green at Marylebone", in June 1699. About that time the house became noted as a gaming-house much frequented by persons of rank; Sheffield, Duke of Buckingham, was often there and, as Quin told Pennant, gave, every spring, a dinner to the chief frequenters of the place, at which his parting toast was "May as many of us as remain unchanged next spring meet here again". It was to him Lady Mary Wortley-Montagu alluded in her oft-quoted line "Some dukes at Marybone bowl time away". Gay, in his 'Beggar's Opera', 1728, makes Marylebone one of Macheath's haunts, and mentions the "deep play" there. Before 1737 admission to the gardens was free, but in that year Daniel Gough, the proprietor, charged 1s. each for admission, giving in return a ticket which was taken back in payment for refreshments to that amount.

In 1738 Gough erected an orchestra and engaged a band of music "from the opera and both theatres", which performed from 6 to 10 o'clock, during which time they played eighteen pieces. In Aug. "two Grand or Double Bassoons, made by Mr. Stanesby, junior, the greatness of whose sound surpass that of any other bass instrument whatsoever; never performed with before", were introduced. In 1740 an organ was erected by Bridge. In 1746 robberies had become so frequent and the robbers so daring that the proprietor was compelled to have a guard of soldiers to protect the visitors from and to town. In 1747 Miss Falkner appeared as principal singer (a post she retained for some years), and the admission to the concert was raised to 2s. In 1748 the number of lamps was increased, and Defesch was engaged as first violin. About the same time fireworks were introduced. In 1751 John Trusler became proprietor; "Master [Michael] Arne" appeared as a singer, balls and masquerades were occasionally given, the doors were opened at 7, the fireworks were discharged at 11, and "a guard was appointed to be in the house and gardens, and to oblige all persons misbehaving to quit the place". In 1752 the price of admission was reduced to 6d., although the expense was said to be £8 per night more than the preceding year. In 1753 the bowling-green was added to the garden, and the fireworks were on a larger scale than before.

In 1758 the first burletta performed in the gardens was given; it was an adaptation, by Trusler junior and the elder Storace, of Pergolesi's 'La serva padrona', a great favourite for years to come. The gardens were opened in the morning for breakfasting, and Miss Trusler made fruit tarts and cheese cakes which were very popular. In 1762 the gardens were opened in the morning gratis and an organ performance was given from 5 to 8 o'clock. In 1763 the place passed into the hands of Thomas (familiarily called Tommy) Lowe, the popular tenor singer, the admission was raised to 1s. and Miss Catley was among the singers engaged. In the next year the opening of the gardens on Sunday evenings for tea-drinking was prohibited; and in Oct. a morning performance, under the name of a rehearsal, was given, when a collection was made in aid of the sufferers by destructive fires at Montreal, Canada, and Honiton, Devonshire.

Lowe's management continued until 1768, when he retired, having met with heavy losses. In 1769 Arnold became proprietor and engaged Mrs. Pinto (formerly Miss Brent), Master Brown and others as vocalists, Pinto as leader, Hook as organist and music director, and Arne to compose an ode. In 1770 Barthélemon became leader, and Mrs. Barthélemon, Bannister and Reinhold were among the singers. A burletta by Barthélemon, called 'The Noble Pedlar', was very successful. In 1771 Miss Harper (afterwards Mrs. John Bannister) appeared, Miss Catley reappeared and several new burlettas were produced. In 1772 Torrè, an eminent Italian pyrotechnist, was engaged, and the fireworks became a more important feature in the entertainments, to the great alarm of the neighbouring inhabitants, who applied to the magistrates to prohibit their exhibition, fearing their houses would be set on fire. Torrè, however, continued to exhibit during that and the next two seasons. But the gardens were losing their popularity; in 1775 there appear to have been no entertainments of the usual kind, but occasional performances of Baddeley's entertainment 'The Modern Magic Lantern', deliveries of George Saville Carey's 'Lecture upon Mimicry' or exhibitions of fireworks by Signor Caillot. In 1776 entertainments of a similar description were given, among which was a representation of the Boulevards of Paris.

The gardens closed on 23 Sept. 1776 and were not afterwards regularly opened. In or about 1778 the site was let to builders. It is now occupied by Beaumont Street, Devonshire Street and part of Devonshire Place. The tavern, with a piece of ground at the back, used as a skittle alley, continued to exist in nearly its original state until 1855, when it was taken down and rebuilt on its own site and that of an adjoining house. On the ground behind it was erected the Marylebone Music Hall. A list of names of artists who appeared at Marylebone Gardens is given, with dates, in J. T. Smith's 'Book for a Rainy Day'.

W. H. H., rev.

BIBL.—Collection in St. Marylebone Public Library: songsheets; 'Gentleman's Magazine', etc.

WROTH, WARWICK, 'London Pleasure Gardens' (London, 1896).

Marzials, Theophilus Julius Henry. See Esmeralda (Goring Thomas, lib.). Thomas (A. G., do.).

MASAGNIELLO FURIOSO (Opera). See KEISER.

MASANIELLO (Auber). See MUETTE DE PORTICI.

See also Carafa. Napoli.

MASCAGNI, Pietro (b. Leghorn, 7 Dec. 1863; d. Rome, 2 Aug. 1945).

Italian opera composer. His father, who was a baker, intended him to be a lawyer and discouraged his attempts to learn the rudiments of music. Compelled to prosecute his musical studies by stealth, he entered himself surreptitiously as a pupil at the Istituto Luigi Cherubini, where his principal instructor was Alfredo Soffredini. In due course Mascagni's father found out how his son was spending his leisure time, and the musical career of the future composer of 'Cavalleria rusticana' would thereupon have come to an untimely close had it not been for the intervention of an amiable uncle, who came forward and offered to adopt the young musician. Transferred to his uncle's house, Mascagni devoted himself in earnest to music, and the first fruits of his labours appeared in the shape of a Symphony in C minor for small orchestra and a Kyrie written to celebrate the birthday of Cherubini, both of which were performed at the Istituto in 1879. These were followed after two years by 'In Filanda', a cantata for solo voices and orchestra, which was favourably mentioned in a prize competition instituted by the International Exhibition of Music at Milan. These successes reconciled Mascagni's father to the idea of making his son a musician; and at the death of his uncle in 1881 the boy returned to his father's house, where he was allowed to pursue his musical studies in peace.

His next composition was a setting of a translation of Schiller's 'Ode to Joy', which was performed at the Teatro degli Avvalorati with so much success that Count Florestano de Larderel, a wealthy amateur, offered on the spot to pay for the composer's education at the Milan Conservatory. Mascagni's career at Milan was not a success. In spite of the sympathy and encouragement of his teachers, among whom were Amilcare Ponchielli and Michele Saladino, he found the course of regular study insupportable. For some time he chafed silently under the imposition of counterpoint and fugue, and eventually took French leave of his professors, joined a travelling operatic company in the capacity of conductor and turned his back upon Milan to seek his fortune elsewhere. For many years he led a life of obscurity and privation, travelling through the length and breadth of Italy with one company after another. He had no spare time for composition, but doubtless gained much valuable experience in practical orchestration. After many wanderings Mascagni married and settled at Cerignola near Foggia, where he managed to make a meagre livelihood by giving pianoforte lessons and managing the municipal school of music.

From this obscurity he was suddenly rescued by the success of his one-act opera, 'Cavalleria rusticana', which won the first prize in a competition instituted in 1889 by the publisher Sonzogno, and was produced at the Costanzi Theatre in Rome on 17 May 1890. The libretto was founded by Guido Menasci and Giovanni Targioni-Tozzetti upon a well-known play of Sicilian village life by Giovanni Verga. The opera was received at its first performance with tumultuous applause, and the next day Mascagni awoke to find himself famous. 'Cavalleria' at once made the tour of Italy and speedily crossed the Alps. It was produced in Berlin in the summer of 1890 and in London, at the Shaftesbury Theatre, under the management of Lago in Oct. 1891. It was first performed in Paris at the Opéra-Comique on 19 Jan. 1892. Everywhere its success was unquestionable. The public, tired perhaps of imitations of Wagner, welcomed the crisp action and direct emotional appeal of the little work, and only a minority of fastidious hearers were repelled by the commonness of the music and the crude monotony of Mascagni's orchestration, as they still are, while the work remains as popular as ever it was. 'Cavalleria' became the fashion and was responsible for a mushroom crop of melodramatic one-act operas.

After 'Cavalleria rusticana' Mascagni's fame steadily declined. His next work, 'L' amico Fritz' (Teatro Costanzi, Rome, 31 Oct. 1891), an adaptation of Erckmann-Chatrian's well-known novel made by Daspuro under the anagram of P. Suardon, had more refinement than 'Cavalleria' and was more carefully written, but the composer scarcely attempted to fit his grandiloquent manner to the exigencies of an idyll. 'I Rantzau' (Teatro della Pergola, Florence, 10 Nov. 1892), another adaptation from Erckmann-Chatrian, by Menasci and Targioni-Tozzetti, was even less successful than 'L' amico Fritz'. 'Guglielmo Ratcliff' (La Scala, Milan, 16 Feb. 1895) was a work of the composer's student days, subsequently revised and rewritten. Mascagni had conceived the extraordinary notion of setting to music a literal translation of Heine's gloomy tragedy, which was alone sufficient to doom the work to failure, and his music did little to relieve the tedium of the libretto. No less decisive was the failure of 'Silvano' (La Scala, Milan, 25 Mar. 1895), a half-hearted bid for popularity in the composer's most hackneyed manner.

Meanwhile (1895) Mascagni had been appointed director of the Conservatory at Pesaro, where his next opera, 'Zanetto', was produced on 2 Mar. 1896. 'Zanetto' is slight in structure, being scored only for strings and harp, but has considerably more refinement of thought and expression than is customary in Mascagni's work. 'Iris' (Teatro Costanzi, Rome, 22 Nov. 1898), on a Japanese subject, is handicapped by a singularly unpleasant libretto, but nevertheless won more favour than any of the composer's works since 'Cavalleria'. It shows more skill in the handling of the orchestra, but its lack of original invention is conspicuous. Mascagni's idea of producing his next work, 'Le maschere' (17 Jan. 1901), simultaneously in seven different cities, was a piece of audacious impertinence; but no amount of advertisement could make 'Le maschere' a success. At Milan, Venice, Verona, Naples and Turin it was soundly hissed, while at Genoa the audience would not even allow the performance to be finished. Only in Rome was it received with any degree of favour. 'Amica' (Monte Carlo, 16 Mar. 1905), though produced in more modest fashion, shared the fate of its predecessor.

Mascagni wrote a cantata for the Leopardi centenary, which was performed at Recanati in 1898, and incidental music for Hall Caine's play, 'The Eternal City', which was produced at His Majesty's Theatre, London, in Oct. 1902. Later operas by Mascagni are: 'Isabeau' (libretto by Illica), first performed at Buenos Aires, 1911; 'Parisina' (on a text by d'Annunzio), given at Milan, 1913; 'Lodoledda' (text by G. Forzano), produced at Rome, 1917, and 'Il piccolo Marat' (text by G. Forzano and Giovanni Targioni-Tozzetti), given at Rome, 1921. Later still came 'Pinotta' (1932) and 'Nerone', founded on the tragedy by Pietro Cossa (Milan, 16 Jan. 1935). The composer also wrote an operetta in 3 acts, entitled 'Si', on a book supplied by C. Lombardo and A. Franci, which was first produced at Rome in 1919. A Requiem in memory of King Humbert was performed in the Pantheon at Rome in 1900. There exists also a 'Rapsodia satanica', a symphonic poem written for a film.

Mascagni won some fame as a conductor, chiefly owing to repeated tours with specially chosen orchestras through the cities of Europe and America. A protracted tour in the United States in 1903 cost him his place at Pesaro.

Mascagni's reputation, which earned him membership of the Royal Italian Academy on its foundation, rests almost entirely upon 'Cavalleria rusticana'. It owes much to its direct if somewhat brutal libretto, but the music undeniably shows a natural instinct for theatrical effect, and it boasts plenty of catchy, commonplace tunes. The speedy exhaustion of a shallow vein of musical invention, together with the carelessness engendered by a dangerously sudden success, is in great part responsible for the complete collapse of what at one time seemed a talent of bright promise.

R. A. S., rev.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- CELLAMARE, D., 'Mascagni e la Cavalleria visti da Cerignola' (Rome, 1941).
 COGO, G., 'Il nostro Mascagni' (Venice, 1931).
 DONNO, ALFREDO DI, 'Mascagni nel 900 musicale' (Rome, 1935).
 'Modernità di Mascagni' (Rome, 1931).
 JERI, ALFREDO, 'Mascagni: quindici opere, mille episodi' (Cernusco sul Naviglio, 1945).
 MANTOVANI, T., 'Iris di Mascagni' (Rome, 1929).
 MASCAGNI, PIETRO, 'Mascagni parla' (Rome, 1945).
 See also Bellincioni (1st Santuzza in 'Cavalleria').

MASCAUDIO. See MACHAUT.

MASCHEK (family). See MAŠEK.

MASCHERA, Florentio (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-century composer. He succeeded Merulo on 1 Aug. 1557 as organist of Brescia Cathedral. Among his compositions is a book of instrumental Canzoni for 4 voices (Brescia, 1584; republ. Venice, 1588 and 1593). Whether he was still alive at this last date is uncertain. Some of his pieces for organ (also for lute) appeared in collective volumes.

E. v. d. s.

MASCHERATA (Ital., masquerade). A type of 16th-century villanella sung at masked balls and during fancy-dress processions.

BIBL. — EINSTEIN, ALFRED, 'The Italian Madrigal' (Princeton & London, 1949), pp. 343-51.

MASCHERE, LE (Opera). See MASCAGNI.

MASCHERONI, Edoardo (b. Milan, 4 Sept. 1857; d. Ghirla, Como, 4 Mar. 1941).

Italian conductor and composer. As a boy he showed no special aptitude for music and was sent to the Liceo Beccaria, where he distinguished himself particularly in mathematics. As he grew up he developed a marked taste for the study of literature and joined the little band of enthusiasts, among whom were De Marchi, Pozza, G. Mazzucato and Borghi, who founded the journal 'La vita nuova', to which he contributed numerous articles on literary subjects. But with manhood came the consciousness that music was to be his career, and he placed himself under Boucheron, a composer and teacher well known at Milan at the time, with whom he worked assiduously for several years.

In his younger days Mascheroni composed much music of various kinds, but as time went on he became persuaded that his real vocation lay in conducting. He made his first serious essay in this branch of his art in 1883, when he was engaged as conductor at the Teatro Goldoni at Leghorn. Thence he moved to Rome, where he had been appointed conductor of the Teatro Apollo. There he remained seven years, gaining each year in experience and reputation, so that at last he could fairly claim to be considered the leading Italian conductor of his day, a claim which was recognized in 1893 by his being chosen to produce and conduct Verdi's 'Falstaff' at the Milan Teatro alla Scala.

Mascheroni, although best known as conductor, also won laurels as a composer. During his Roman period he wrote a good deal of chamber music, which was performed with much applause, and an album for piano-forte of his won a prize in a concorso at Palermo. But his masterpiece at that time was the Requiem for solo voices, chorus and orchestra, which he wrote in memory of the death of Victor Emmanuel. So profound an impression did this work create that the composer was commissioned by the royal family to write another Requiem, for voices only, for exclusive performance in the royal chapel, where it was at once performed. In spite of his success in conducting other men's music, Mascheroni did not himself tempt fortune on the stage until his 'Lorenza' was produced successfully at the Teatro Costanzi, Rome, on 13 Apr. 1901. The libretto was by Luigi Illica and the title-part was written for Gemma Bellincioni. Another opera, 'La Perugina', libretto again by Illica, was performed and favourably received at the Teatro San Carlo, Naples, on 24 Apr. 1909.

R. A. S., adds. F. B.

MASCHINIST HOPKINS (Opera). See BRAND.

MASCOTTE, LA ('The Mascot'). Ope-retta in 3 acts by Audran. Libretto by Alfred Duru and Henri Charles Chivot. Produced Paris, Théâtre des Bouffes-Parisiens, 28 Dec. 1880. 1st perf. abroad, Vienna, Theater an der Wien (in German), 12 Feb. 1881. 1st in U.S.A., New York (in English), 5 May 1881. 1st in England, Brighton (trans. by H. B. Farnie and R. Reece), 19 Sept. 1881.

Masefield, John. See Arundell ('Philip the King', broadcast m.), Berners (song), Branson (songs), Dyson ('Seekers' for chorus), Elgar (choral ode for Queen Alexandra memorial), Gardiner (H. B., 'News from Whydah', chorus & orch.), Gibbs (C. A., songs), Gurney (song), Head (song), Holst ('Coming of Christ', incid. m.), Ireland (J., 3 songs), Jacobson ('Good Friday', broadcast), Miles (do., opera), Scott (F. G., song), Shaw (M., 2 choral works), Swain (song), Walton ('Where does the uttered music go?' chorus), Warlock (song).

MAŠEK (Maschek). Czech family of musicians. Its founder was Tomáš Mašek, teacher and musician at Zvíkovec, a little village near Zbiroh, Bohemia. The following are the most important members of this family:

(1) (Václav) Vincenc Mašek (b. Zvíkovec, 5 Apr. 1755; d. Prague, 15 Nov. 1831), elder son and pupil of Tomáš. He studied pianoforte under F. X. Dušek and composition under J. F. N. Seger in Prague. With his patron, Count of Wrtba, he undertook several tours in Germany. Afterwards he became a conductor of the German Opera in Prague and in 1794 he was appointed choir-master of St. Nicholas Church. He was much in request as a teacher and from 1802 also a well-established music dealer. His compositions, particularly in the field of church music, but also two operas, several cantatas as well as many valuable orchestral, chamber works and pianoforte pieces, are a blend of spontaneous musical talent and ready technical knowledge.

(2) Pavel Lambert Mašek (b. Zvíkovec, 14 Sept. 1761; d. Vienna, 22 Nov. 1826), brother of the preceding. He was also a pupil of his father. For several years he was a village teacher and afterwards a private music tutor in the families of two Hungarian noblemen. In 1794 he settled in Vienna, where he soon gained fame as an experienced teacher and dexterous pianoforte and physarmonica player. He wrote 2 operas, several cantatas — the best-known being 'Die Schlacht bei Leipzig' — and instrumental music of all kinds.

(3) Kašpar Mašek (b. Prague, 6 Jan. 1794; d. Laibach [now Ljubljana, Yugoslavia], 13 May 1873), nephew of the preceding, son of (1). From 1812 to 1815 he was bandmaster of the 8th Russian Division and afterwards he assisted his father at St. Nicholas Church in Prague. In 1819 he became conductor of the theatre orchestra at Graz and in 1820 at Laibach (Ljubljana), where he also held a post at the school of the Philharmonische Gesellschaft up to 1854. Of his numerous compositions, including 2 operas, an operetta and church music, the Slovenian cantatas and choruses are being performed to this day.

(4) Albín Mašek (b. Prague, 10 Oct. 1804; d. Prague, 24 Mar. 1878), brother of the preceding. He was educated at the Prague Conservatory (1816–24) and in 1824 succeeded his father as choirmaster of the St. Nicholas Church there. Later he held similar posts in other Prague churches until his death. He composed a large number of church works which became very popular for many years.

(5) Kamillo Mašek (b. Laibach [now Ljubljana, Yugoslavia], 11 July 1831; d. Steinz, Styria, 29 June 1859), nephew of the preceding, son of (3). He showed a prodigious musical talent from his early youth. In 1854 he succeeded his father as teacher at the Philharmonische Gesellschaft Laibach (Ljubljana). His compositions — some of them unfinished — include several masses, an oratorio and other church music. The most popular were his Slovenian choruses.

G. Č.

MASENELLI. See MASNELLI, PAOLO.

MASETTI, Enzo (b. Bologna, 19 Aug. 1893).

Italian composer. He studied at the Bologna Conservatory under Franco Alfano. Among his compositions are the dramatic fables 'La fola delle tre ochine' and 'Mosca mora' (1930), orchestral music ('Ora di vespro', 'Il gioco del cucù', etc.) and chamber music (Trio for violin, cello and pianoforte, etc.). Masetti has for many years devoted much of his activity to the composition of film music, contributing scores to a number of important Italian films; he also holds courses in this subject at the Conservatorio di Santa Cecilia in Rome.

G. M. G.

MASINI, Angelo (b. Terra del Sole nr. Forlì, 28 Nov. 1844; d. Forlì, 26 Sept. 1926).

Italian tenor singer. He won a very high position without appearing on the operatic stage in England — a unique case for an Italian tenor of his generation. He visited London in 1875 as a member of the famous quartet, which, under the composer's own direction, sang at the Albert Hall in Verdi's Requiem, the other singers being Teresina Stoltz, Maria Waldmann and Medini. At that time Masini was the first of the younger tenors of Italy, and in 1876 he sang the part of Rhadamès when, with Verdi himself conducting, 'Aida' was performed for the first time in Paris. This performance added greatly to his reputation, and in 1879 Mapleson engaged him to sing at Her Majesty's Theatre in London. A stupid contretemps, however, for which Masini was himself solely responsible, prevented his appearance.¹ This blunder proved a bar to his future career in England, as Mapleson had an injunction against him for breach of contract.

In Madrid, Buenos Aires and elsewhere, however, Masini sang with the utmost success, and gained both fame and fortune.

¹ The story is fully set forth in the 'Mapleson Memoirs'.

He was for many seasons the leading tenor at the Italian Opera of St. Petersburg, resigning his position at last for the reason that he could no longer withstand the severe climate. Late in his career, however, he sang Lohengrin in the Russian capital to the Elsa of Sigrid Arnoldson.

That Masini at his best was a tenor of exceptional gifts cannot be doubted. Distinguished singers who appeared with him at St. Petersburg spoke of him in enthusiastic terms. It was stated at the time that before the production of 'Falstaff' at Milan Verdi offered to write a romance for Masini if he would undertake the part of Fenton. However, nothing came of the proposal.

S. H. P.

MASKARADE (Opera). See NIELSEN (C. A.).

MASŁOWSKI, Leon (b. ?; d. ?).

Polish 18th-19th-century manufacturer of musical instruments. He worked at Poznań. About 1800 he invented the "harmonic clavicord" (a kind of stringed instrument with a keyboard). It was introduced in Berlin, where it was renamed "celizon" in 1805.

C. R. H.

MASNADIERI, I ('The Robbers'). Opera in 4 acts by Verdi. Libretto by Andrea Maffei, based on Schiller's play 'Die Räuber'. Produced London, Her Majesty's Theatre, 22 July 1847. 1st perf. in Italy, Rome, 12 Feb. 1848. 1st in U.S.A., New York (in Italian), 2 June 1860.

MASNELLI (Masenelli), Paolo (b. Verona, ?; d. Verona, ?).

Italian 16th-17th-century organist and composer. He was organist at the ducal court of Mantua from 6 Feb. 1585 to 24 Mar. 1592, and afterwards (c. 1596) organist at Verona Cathedral. He died some time after 1609. His published compositions are a book of madrigals for 4 voices (1582) and 2 books for 5 voices (1586, 1596).

E. v. d. s.

MASON. American family of musicians.

(1) Lowell Mason (b. Medfield, Mass., 24 Jan. 1792; d. Orange, N.J., 11 Aug. 1872), hymnodist and educationist. He was self-taught and, in his own words, "spent twenty years of his life in doing nothing save playing on all manner of musical instruments that came within his reach". At twenty he went to Savannah in Georgia, as clerk in a bank, and there continued to practise, lead and teach. In the course of these labours he formed, with the help of F. L. Abel, a collection of psalm tunes based on Gardiner's 'Sacred Melodies' — itself adapted to tunes extracted from the works of Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven. This collection was published by the Handel and Haydn Society of Boston in 1822 under the title of 'The Handel and Haydn Society's Collection of Church Music', Mason's name being almost entirely suppressed. The book sold well; it initiated a purer and healthier taste for music in New England, and it led to Mason's removal to Boston and to his taking "a general charge of music in the churches there", in 1827. He then became president of the society; but as his object was not so much the cultivation of high-class music as the introduction of music as an essential element of education in the common schools, he soon left it and established (with G. J. Webb) the Boston Academy of Music in 1832. He founded classes on the system of Pestalozzi and at length, in 1838, obtained power to teach in all the schools of Boston. He also published a large number of manuals and collections which sold enormously and produced him a handsome fortune. He visited Europe first in 1837 with the view of examining the methods of teaching in Germany, and embodied the results in a volume entitled 'Musical Letters from Abroad' (New York, 1853). He was for long closely connected with the Public Board of Education of Massachusetts. His degree of Doctor in Music, the first of the kind conferred by an American College, was granted by New York University in 1835. The last years of his life were spent at Orange in New Jersey, the residence of two of his sons. He formed a very fine library, which he collected far and wide, regardless of expense.

BIBL. — BAKER, THEODORE, 'Biographical Dictionary of Musicians' (New York, 1900). For a list of Mason's popular collections of sacred and secular music.

MASON, H. L., 'Hymn-Tunes of Lowell Mason: a Bibliography' (Cambridge, Mass., 1944). See also Gardiner (William).

(2) William Mason (b. Boston, Mass., 24 Jan. 1829; d. New York, 14 July 1908), pianist, son of the preceding. He received a liberal education in music, and after a successful début at Boston in 1846 and a period of study at Leipzig in 1849, under Moscheles, Hauptmann and Richter, and at Weimar, under Liszt, was long recognized as a leading pianist in New York. He founded chamber-music concerts with Theodore Thomas and others in 1854 and received the degree of Mus.D. from Yale University in 1872. Special interest attaches to his 'Memories of a Musical Life' (New York, 1901), which contains a valuable account of the Weimar circle in 1853.

A. W. T.

(3) Daniel Gregory Mason (b. Brookline, Mass., 20 Nov. 1873; d. Greenwich, Conn., 4 Dec. 1953), composer, author and educationist, nephew of the preceding, grandson of (1) and son of one of the founders of the Mason & Hamlin Piano Co., who was himself an excellent pianist. D. G. Mason studied music with Paine at Harvard University and, after graduating in 1895, with Chadwick and Percy Goetschius. In 1909 he became a member of the musical faculty of Columbia University, New York, and he was for long attached to this institution (since 1929 as MacDowell Professor of Music and up to 1940 as head of department) until his retirement in 1942. A visit to France in 1913, where he studied with Vincent d'Indy, proved most significant for his artistic development. Mason was granted an honorary degree of Litt.D. by Tufts College and that of Mus.D. by Oberlin College.

As a composer Mason did not strive for a new American style: he felt that a certain eclecticism is unavoidable in American music. In his works one may discern influences of the German classic and romantic schools together with those of French composers, especially d'Indy. But these various trends inspired individual creations which may be considered among the most valuable manifestations of the American creative mind. He treated all musical forms except opera. His third Symphony deserves special mention. Its sub-title is 'A Lincoln Symphony', and it depicts, in Mason's own words, "the contrast between the young Lincoln's seriousness and the trivial good nature of the people about him [1st movement, 'The Candidate from Springfield'], the sad fate of the Negroes and his tender pity for them [2nd movement, 'Massa Linkum'], his Rabelaisian humour, his sense of rough humanity [3rd movement, 'Old Abe's Yarns'] and the tardy realization by his countrymen, sobered by his tragic death, of what his vision had meant to them [4th movement, '1865']". His other works include the orchestral compositions: Op. 11, Symphony I; Op. 22, Scherzo; Op. 27, 'Chanticleer'; Festival Overture; Op. 30, Symphony II; Op. 32, Suite after English Folksongs; Op. 37, Prelude and Fugue for strings; Op. 23, 'Songs of the Countryside' for soprano and baritone, chorus and orchestra; the following string quartets: Op. 17, Intermezzo; Op. 19, Quartet on Negro Themes; Op. 24, Variations on a theme by John Powell; Op. 31, Serenade; Op. 40, Variations on a Quiet Theme; various other chamber music including Op. 5, Sonata for vn. & pf.; Op. 7, pf. Quartet; Op. 8, 'Pastorale' for vn., clar. & pf.; Op. 13, 3 Pieces for flute, harp & stg. 4tet; Op. 14, Sonata for clar. & pf.; pf. works Opp. 1, 2, 3, 9, 16, 21, 33; songs Opp. 4, 15, 18, 29, 36, 38.

In spite of this large creative activity, his educational work at Columbia University and extensive lecturing, Mason was able to write a considerable amount of scholarly and highly readable books on musical appreciation and the history of music, among which 'The Chamber Music of Brahms' (1933) and his most recent contribution, 'The Quartets of Beethoven' (1947), are valuable guides for the student of chamber music. His other books include:

- 'From Grieg to Brahms' (1902, 2nd ed. 1927).
- 'Beethoven and his Forerunners' (1904).
- 'The Romantic Composers' (1906).
- 'The Appreciation of Music' (with T. W. Surette) (1907).
- 'The Orchestral Instruments' (1908).
- 'A Guide to Music' (1909).
- 'A Neglected Sense in Piano Playing' (1912).
- 'Great Modern Composers' (with Mary L. Mason) (1916).
- 'Short Studies of Great Masterpieces' (1918).
- 'Contemporary Composers' (1918).
- 'Music as a Humanity' (1920).
- 'From Song to Symphony' (1924).
- 'Artistic Ideals' (1925).
- 'The Dilemma of American Music' (1928).
- 'Tune In, America' (1931).
- 'Music in My Time, and Other Reminiscences' (1938).

K. G.

BIBL.—TUTHILL, BURNET C., 'Daniel Gregory Mason' (M.Q., XXXIV, 1948, p. 46).

MASON, Colin (b. Northampton, 26 Jan. 1924).

English critic and writer on music. He studied at the T.C.M. in London in 1944-45 and at the Hungarian State Academy of Music in Budapest in 1947-49 with a Hungarian State Scholarship, obtained by him for the purpose of learning Hungarian with a view to his writing a book on Béla Bartók for the "Master Musicians" series. This work was all but ready for publication early in 1953. In 1950 Mason was appointed London music critic to the 'Manchester Guardian' and the following year he was called to Manchester to take up the post of chief critic. Although he has specialized in Bartók, and through him in Hungarian music in general, he is particularly interested in all modern music, including that of the younger British composers. He has contributed, mainly on modern music, to nearly all the English musical periodicals. E. B.

MASON, George (b. ?; d. ?).

English 16th-17th-century composer. He composed and published with John Earsden in 1618:

The Ayres that were sung and played, at Brougham Castle in Westmerland, in the King's Entertainment; given by the Right Honourable the Earle of Cumberland, and his Right Noble Sonne the Lord Clifford.

The authorship of the words is attributed to Thomas Campian in Percival Vivian's edition of Campian's works. E. H. F.

MASON, John (i) (b. ?; d. ?).

English 15th-16th-century composer. He is described as "of Chichester" in the Peterhouse partbooks at Cambridge, where he left four 5-part motets, all of which lack the tenor part. This is probably the composer who graduated B.Mus. at Oxford in 1508 and is mentioned in 1597 by Morley as "Sir John Mason" among his "Practicioners". A. H.

MASON, John (ii) (b. ?; d. ? Hereford, ?).

English 15th-16th-century composer. He was admitted clerk of Magdalen College, Oxford, in 1508, graduated B.Mus. on 12 Feb. 1509 and was in the same year appointed instructor of the choristers and chaplain of Magdalen College. Wood says he was in much esteem in his profession. He was collated prebendary of Pratum Minus on 21 July and of Putston Minor on 22 July 1525, and treasurer of Hereford Cathedral on 23 May 1545. He is mentioned by Morley in his 'Introduction' as one of those whose works he had consulted. Four motets (tenor wanting) are at Peterhouse College, Cambridge.

W. H. H.

MASON, Mathias (b. ?; d. ?).

English 16th-17th-century musician. He was groom of the chamber to James I and is mentioned in Dowland's 'Varietie of Lute Lessons' (1610) as having invented three frets for the lute.

W. H. H.

MASON, William (b. Kingston-on-Hull, 12 Feb. 1724; d. Aston, Yorkshire, 5 Apr. 1797).

English clergyman, author, composer and writer on music. He was the son of a clergyman, graduated at Cambridge — B.A. 1745, M.A. 1749 — took orders in 1754, became rector of Aston in that year and afterwards prebendary (1756), canon residentiary and precentor (1763) of York Minster. He was appointed chaplain to Lord Holderness in 1754 and to the king in 1757. In 1782 he published a book of words of anthems, to which he prefixed a 'Critical and Historical Essay on Cathedral Music' (another edition, 1794). He also wrote essays 'On Instrumental Church Music', 'On Parochial Psalmody' and 'On the Causes of the Present imperfect Alliance between Music and Poetry'. He composed some church music, the best-known of which is the short anthem 'Lord of all power and might'. He was the author of two tragedies, 'Elfrida' and 'Caractacus', for both of which T. A. Arne wrote incidental music, and of 'Sapho' (music by Giardini, 1778), and was the friend and biographer of the poet Gray. He also invented an instrument called the Celestinette.

W. H. H., adds.

BIBL.—DRAFER, JOHN W., 'William Mason' (New York, 1924).

See also Arne (1, 'Elfrida' & 'Caractacus', incid. m.). Boyce (Installation Ode). Giardini ('Elfrida' & 'Sapho', incid. m.).

MASQUE (Maske, Mask). An English adaptation of the Italian trionfo and mascherata and the French ballet de cour and masquerade which, blending lyric and dramatic poetry, song, dance and instrumental music within the general framework of an allegorical subject, reached a high degree of perfection at the court of James I, where it was particularly associated with the genius of Ben Jonson and Inigo Jones. By nature the masque was aristocratic, being generally intended to honour a particular occasion — the charming 'Oberon' of New Year's Day 1611, for instance, was a gift for Prince Henry and the 'Masque of Flowers', arranged by the Gentlemen of Gray's Inn for Twelfth Night 1614, was held in honour of the wedding of the Lady Frances Howard with the Earl of Somerset — and, for the most part, performed by leading members of court and society under the direction and with the co-operation of professional advisers. There is a parallel here not only to the Italian mascherata, but also to the Renaissance opera of Florentine cultivation, for many patrons of the masque should be reckoned as among progressive lovers of art while the musical forms encouraged (on account of their dramatic propriety) illustrate the "modern" aspect of a period customarily regarded as the exclusive province of madrigalists, virginalists and church musicians. The dances, the incidental music and the songs of such composers as the Ferraboscas, Bassanos, Johnsons, Laniers and Lupos are recognizably within the terms of reference familiarized by the dramatic music of Purcell and Handel. The music of the court masque is, then, the nuova musica of the English tradition.

Though exploited by diplomatists and conventionalized by the courtiers, the masque always satisfied [a] craving for romance. The masque was a "spectacle of strangeness"; the masquers often wore an exotic disguise . . . they had travelled from far-away lands, they had dropped from the clouds, or even from another world.¹

Conscious realization of the new opportunities thus afforded to dramatic musicians gave rise to interesting experiments in melodic construction, rhythmic definiteness and orchestral effects, of which the aim was the establishment of a new "romantic" sensibility in musical style. Like most artistic innovators the responsible composers were not sufficiently foolhardy to dispense entirely with tradition and the influence of such disparate factors as madrigal and mystery play is at times apparent.

Specific examples may serve to demonstrate both the manner in which the music was performed and the direction in which it developed. In 1591 Queen Elizabeth was entertained at Elvetham by the Earl of Hertford. Among the music there performed were gratulatory settings by Edward Johnson of 'Elisa is the fayrest Queen' and 'O come again, fair Nature's treasure'. These were, in fact madrigals but had, like many other madrigals, dramatic and scenic significance. Of the first it is recorded:

. . . the Fairy Queene and her maiides daunced about the garland, singing a song of sixe parts [more correctly five], with the musicke of an exquisite consort; wherein was the lute, bandora, base-violl, citterne, treble-violl, and flute. . . . This spectacle and musicke so delighted her Majesty, that she desired to see and hear it twice [sic] over.

Of the second:

. . . as her Majestie passed through the palace gate, there was a consort of musicians hidden in a bower; to whose playing this ditty of 'Come againe' was sung, with excellent divisions, by two that were cunning.

¹ Enid Welford, 'The Court Masque' (Cambridge, 1927), p. 289.

One further diversion, more than a concert and less than a masque, though related to both and also to the wider field of musical endeavour, may be instanced. In 1607 King James was received by the Merchant Taylors' Company in its hall. Ben Jonson was appointed master of ceremonies. An abstract from the company's minute book will illustrate the fanciful utility of Jacobean music and musicians. The king was welcomed by a "very proper child [a chorister from the Chapel Royal], well spoken, being clothed like an Angel of gladness". After which:

At the upper end of the Hall there was set a chair of Estate . . . and upon either side of the Hall, in the windows near the upper end, were galleries or seats, made for music, in either of which were seven singular choice musicians playing on their lutes, and in the ship, which did hang aloft in the hall, three rare men, and very skilful [John Allen, Thomas Lupo and John Richards], who sang to his Majesty: and over the King, sonnets [i.e. sennets] and loud musique [his majesty's trumpets and drums, together with those of the Prince of Wales and other wind instruments], wherein it is to be remembered, that the multitude and noyse was so great, that the lutes and songs could hardly be heard or understood.

Dinner music was provided, on a "very rich pair of organs" by Mr. (sic) John Bull and by a choir, among which were the boys of the Chapel Royal, Nathaniel Giles, William Byrd, William Lawes, Elway Bevin and Orlando Gibbons. Dr. Bull and Giles were admitted into the company's livery, for the Company are contented to shew their favour unto them for their paynes . . . and their love and kindness in bestowing the musique which was performed by them, their associates, and children, in the King's Chamber gratis; whereas the Musicians in the Great Hall exacted unreasonable sums of the Company for the same.

Among the accounts, which exonerate the accused from driving notably hard bargains, stands this item: "for setting of the songs that were sung to his Maty. to Mr. Copiarario: £12/0/0".

Coperario had possibly participated in some of the earliest Italian operatic productions at the turn of the century, and his selection as chief composer for the Merchant Taylors' entertainment is evidence that fashion affected the selection not a little. There were, it will have been noted, other composers of eminence among the party. Between 1612 and 1614 Coperario collaborated in Beaumont's 'Masque of the Inner Temple and Gray's Inn' and/or the 'Masque of Flowers', devised by Thomas Campian (whose versatility enabled him not only to construct the librettos of some masques but also the music of others), and the 'Squires Masque'. For the 'Squires Masque' Coperario appears to have been well remunerated with a fee of £20.¹ The songs for this work² possess dramatic point, direct-ness of approach — indeed, "Come ashore, merry mates" anticipates the nautical music of Purcell's 'Dido and Aeneas' — and a simple ballad quality. Otherwise Coperario's talents lay in other directions. His songs, apart from those in this masque, writes Peter Warlock, are "all steeped in heavy gloom". Coperario instructed the children of James I and also the brothers Lawes, who were intimately connected with the masque at a later period.

Contemporary with Coperario, and associated with him in modernity of outlook, was Alphonso Ferrabosco (ii), of whose extant songs for the masques many are contained in his 'Ayres', published in 1609. Ferrabosco shared with Coperario the distinction of freedom from modal influence, while his sense of vocal expressiveness was strong. Contributing to the 'Masque of Blackness' (1605), the 'Masque of Hymen' (1606), the 'Masque of Beauty' (1608), the 'Masque at Lord Haddington's Marriage' (1608), the 'Masque of Queens' (1609), 'Love freed from Ignorance and Folly' (1610) and, probably, 'Oberon', Ferrabosco won the highest praise from his collaborator Ben Jonson, who eulogized him³ in terms similar to those employed by Milton in respect of Henry Lawes. The poet's irascibility, which later brought discord between him and Inigo Jones, led to a rupture, and after 1610 Ferrabosco appears no more as a masque composer.

One other composer of this first period claims immediate notice: Robert Johnson. In some ways he seems to have been the most talented of all, conspicuous for a fine sense of stage requirements. Johnson wrote both songs and dances, and his connection with the public theatre recalls the strong general influence of masque on drama. The most interesting examples of Johnson's songs are "Full fathom five" and "Where the bee sucks"⁴ — the 'Tempest' (1612) was, to all intents and purposes, a particularly magnificent masque — songs which preserve a natural spontaneity and picturesque charm, putting all later settings one or more degrees distant from the amalgam of poetry and music which Shakespeare had in mind. The gypsies' song⁵ ('The Gypsies Metamorphosed' [1621]) again illustrates the popular ballad element which increasingly infected the masque as it developed in comedy and buffoonery. To Johnson's dance music later reference will be made.

Nicholas Lanier(e) may be regarded as a transitional composer, living on through the years of the Commonwealth until after the Restoration of the monarchy which, like other

¹ 'Pell's Order Books', Vol. XII, f. 183.

² Appended to the printed text (B.M., C. 34, c. 7) and stated there to have been sung by John Allen and Nicholas Lanier.

³ 'Epigrams', cxxx, cxxxi.

⁴ John Wilson, 'Cheerful Ayres' (1660).

⁵ Playford, 'Musical Companion' (1672), where also is printed 'Cock-lorrel', a song from the same masque and probably also by Johnson.

royal musicians, he welcomed with ad hoc works. Lanier represents the broad culture encouraged and practised by the Stuarts. In 1613 he sang in the 'Squires' Masque' and set one of the songs. In 1617 he participated in an epochal work, from the musical standpoint. Speaking of the 'Masque presented at the House of Lord Hayes', for the entertainment of the French ambassador, Ben Jonson records: "The whole Masque was sung after the Italian manner, stylo recitativo, by Master Nicholas Lanier; who ordered and made both the scene and the music". 'The Vision of Delight' also would appear to have been his work, and the first song is marked in the text of the masque by the instruction "stylo recitativo". Lanier was particularly sensitive to all aspects of art, and among his chief friends he numbered Herrick.

The songs of the masques present interesting aesthetic speculations, and through the work of the composers already named, together with that of Henry and William Lawes, there may be traced the true dramatic descent of Purcell's stage songs. But songs in the masques were but interludes between items of greater vigour, for the masque is essentially a sequence of dances; dances which, given dramatic raison d'être, bear relation to the older practice of mummery and to the more modern ballet. The dances fell originally into two groups — those belonging to the company of masquers, contrived at some expense by such masters as Thomas Giles and Jerome Herne; and the revels, galliards, corantos, lavoltas and other popular dances which were performed simultaneously by the masquers and partners chosen from among the audience. Under the influence of Ben Jonson, and with the warm approval of James I, a third group of dances was given to the professional body of the anti-masque.

The revels may be disposed of first. Many of the dances used therein would seem to have their music preserved in the virginal collections, and the definitive titles (e.g. 'My Lo. Rich his Galliard') may refer to particular occasions in which the nominees took part. 'Thomas Lupoes Galliard' (Benjamin Cosyn's Virginal Book, No. 24) gives the name of one of the most notable of the professional masquers and composers of masque music. In passing it may be noted that the virginal books incorporated numerous of the set dances for the masquers: customarily these are simply designated 'A Maske', and the name of the arranger rather than that of the original composer is generally quoted. Melodies from the masques were, in fact, to the Jacobean what opera tunes became in later time — reminiscences of former pleasure.

Of the masque and antimasque music representative examples may be found in B.M. Add.

MSS 10444, which includes music from 'Hymenaei' (1606), the 'Masque of Queens' (1609), 'Oberon' (1611), 'Love freed from Ignorance and Folly' (1611), 'News from the New World discovered in the Moon' (1621), 'The Gipsies Metamorphosed' (1621), the 'Masque of Augurs' (1622) and 'Chloridia' (1631) — all by Jonson; from the anonymous 'Masque of Flowers' (1614); from the three masques by Campian — Lord Hay's (1607), the Lords' (1613) and the Squires' (1614); from Daniel's 'Vision of the Twelve Goddesses' (1604); from the two masques for the Templars written by Beaumont and Chapman respectively in 1613; from Marston's (?) 'Masque of Mountebanks' (1618); from Carew's 'Coelum Britannicum' (1634); from 'The Tempest' (1612); and from various private entertainments of King James. Composers who may be identified are John Adson, who issued in 1611 (2nd ed. 1621) 'Courtly Masquing Ayres' — the melodies arranged in five parts — Coperario, Thomas Lupo, Robert Johnson, Mark Bateman¹ and Edward Pearce.² The masquers' dances have a general broad dignity which may briefly be represented by the opening phrase of 'Johnsons flatt Masque':

The dances of the masquers suggested the classical whereas those of the antimasquers move more romantically and picturesquely and the music reflects accurately the intention of the text, which generally began with a classical subject and then ridiculed it through the portraiture of some antipathetic contemporary aspect of low life or common rumour. The witches of the 'Masque of Queens', first cousins to those in 'Macbeth' of some three years earlier, call for a magical dance, full of preposterous change, and gestication, but most applying to their proprietie . . . all of which were excellently imitated by the maker of the dance, Mr. Hierome Herne. . . . In the heat of their dance, on the sudden, was heard a sound of lowd musique, as if many instruments had made one blast.

Witches led the way to bears, birds, baboons, various types of drunkards, alchemists and, more genteelly, to fairies with whom naturally contrasted satyrs.

The dance of satyrs, a most popular feature

¹ A royal trumpeter, fl. 1603-25.

² Master of the children of St. Paul's Cathedral, c. 1600, and responsible for many play productions with the choristers between 1600 and 1606.

of the 'Oberon' masque, passed, in all probability, into 'The Winter's Tale' as the dance of twelve satyrs, of whom three, according to their own testimony, had danced before the king:

... the public may naturally be supposed to have been anxious to see a reproduction of a popular antimasque. It gains additional probability from the fact that actors from the theatres performed in the antimasques. . . . It is still more probable because an antimasque in Beaumont's 'Masque of the Inner Temple' is obviously made use of in a similar way in the 'Two Noble Kinsmen'. Finally, we may note that the dance is an integral part of the 'Masque of Oberon', while it is a pure addition to the play.¹

The satyrs' dance is an elaborate composition (it is ascribed to Johnson by Simpson's 'Taffel-Consort Erster Theil', Hamburg, 1621, while the accounts for 'Oberon' show that he received £20 for the dances) of more than 60 bars and a presentation of its motifs will reveal the theatrical sensibility of an adventurous dramatic composer of the period. A conventional opening:

leads to a section punctuated by effective pauses:

Thence to a jig, into which erupts a startling ♪ rhythm. There follows this extravagance:

Finally:

which ends with a triple-time coda. Other extant antimasque music shows the same sense of the grotesque, summarized by Shakespeare as "a gallimaufry of gambols", but such music as is attached to the "birds' dance" (the "volatees" of 'News from the New World' [1620]):

or the "nymphs' dance" ('Chloridia') reveals a breadth of phrase and a sense of extended melody which can achieve great beauty.

There are other dramatic features which stand out in the handling of masque music. A rubric in Beaumont's 'Inner Temple and Gray's Inn Masque' tells how, after the appearance of statues from Jupiter's altar in the place of nymphs and cupids, "... the musick changed from violins [?] viols] to hautboys, cornets, etc., and the air of the musick utterly turned into a soft time [sic], withdrawing notes, excellently expressing their natures".

The text of William Browne's Inner Temple masque of 1615 (one of the most exquisite poems in the whole range of masque literature) illuminates the attention paid to the stage-management of musical effects. The opening song was by two sirens. "The last two lines were repeated as from a grove near by a full Chorus". The second scene showed a wood and "in [a] space upon hillocks were seen eight musicians in crimson taffety robes . . . their lutes by them, which being by them touched as a warning to the nymphs of the wood, from among the trees was heard this song". Which song was performed by a chorus, sentimentalizing the "fairest isle" of England (for no masque was deficient in propaganda value). The song of Grillus — in the first antimasque — served also (as in the 'Masque of Flowers' did the Kawasha and Silenus music) as incidental music, being "played twice or thrice over, and by turns brought them from the stage". Circe's enchantment of Ulysses is accomplished by "a full music of lutes, which descending to the stage had to them sung" an echo song, "the Echoes being placed in several parts of the bosage". The second antimasque of seven nymphs "danced a most curious measure to a softer tune than the first Antimasque". At length the knights of Ulysses are aroused from their magic sleep by a touch of Ulysses' wand and by "the loud music sounding". Thus, in masque after masque, can be traced the evolution of orchestral appropriateness.

The masque depended, as did the public theatre, on the occasional participation of choir-boys and singing-men from St. Paul's and the Chapel Royal. The orchestral musicians were those in royal service and from among them were generally drawn the composers. The interplay of ideas conceivable within a small and specialized community made the unified variety of the English masque form possible. As soon as the balance was upset the masque either degenerated or was transformed into another medium. An excellent contemporary account of the Jacobean masque was written by Orazio Busino, almoner to the Venetian ambassador¹, who saw 'Pleasure Reconciled to Virtue' on Twelfth Night 1618. His observation "that spoilt as we are by the graceful and harmonious music of Italy, the composition did not strike us as very fine" emphasizes the almost accidental growth of the English masque in contradistinction to the more logical and scientific development of opera in Italy.

¹ A. H. Thorndike, 'The Influence of Beaumont and Fletcher on Shakespeare' (London, 1901), pp. 33-34.

The later Caroline masque, with music now by William and Henry Lawes, Simon Ives, Charles Hopper and Louis (Lewis) Richard — the French Master of the Queen's Music — is intrinsically less interesting than the Jacobean, and Townshend, Shirley, Carew and Davenant are, on the whole, more conscious of externals than was Ben Jonson in his prime. French influence brings scenery and machinery into greater prominence, and a feeling for realism takes the place of the earlier sense of fantasy, while proportion is destroyed by the multiplication of antimasques. Pageantry reached its climax in Shirley's 'Triumph of Peace', before which the masquers and antimasquers, preceded by mounted musicians (including keys and tongs) proceeded from Ely House, in Holborn, to Whitehall. The high revelry of this masque (fully described by Burney, 'History', III, 376) touched a new level in expenditure. Ives and Lawes were rewarded with £100 each, and the sum-total of cost was in the region of £20,000. This was borne by the law fraternity, whose collective affluence had financed many similar affairs in the previous reign. In the same year as 'The Triumph of Peace' (1634) the most famous and least typical of all masques was performed at Ludlow. Milton's 'Comus' is, as designated by Henry Lawes who set the songs, a poem, and as a poem rather than as a drama it must be considered. 'Comus' has received performances in recent times, the most notable being that celebrating its tercentenary and given at Ludlow.

The last masque before the civil war, performed on 21 Jan. 1640, was Davenant's 'Salmacidia Spolia', with settings by Inigo Jones. Inigo Jones had further importance in respect of the masque in that he had designed the Banqueting Hall in Whitehall, where the performances generally took place. The present building was erected after the fire of 1619 which destroyed its predecessor. The music for 'Salmacidia Spolia' was by Lewis Richard. It was "the last drama of this kind in which their majesties condescended to perform in person. Other scenes, more tragic and difficult to support, were preparing for these unfortunate princes." The masque itself, according to the preface, accurately reflected the state of the realm:

Discord, a malicious fury, appears in a storm, and by the invocation of malignant spirits, proper to her evil use, having already put most of the world into disorder, endeavours to disturb these parts, envying the blessings and tranquillity we have long enjoyed.

To the end the classical masque maintains with loyalty the romantic conception of the king as chevalier sans peur et sans reproche.

While 'Salmacidia Spolia' represents the last of the old masque the author is the principal connection between that and the earliest form of native opera. By means of bribing servants of the Commonwealth and through the opportunities offered privately at Holland House, Kensington, Davenant was able to keep alive dramatic activity. In 1656 'The Siege of Rhodes' was first performed at Rutland House. This, with music by Henry Lawes, Charles Coleman, Captain Cooke and George Hudson, is generally represented as the first English opera, although causes for dogmatism on this point are slight. However, the French influence to which Davenant was subject through his travels brought emphasis on plot and scenery, reduced the dramatic status of the dance and found in "recitative music" — to which Evelyn called special attention some six years later — a vehicle for continuity of statement impossible in the freer, lyric arrangement of the masque. Three years before 'The Siege of Rhodes' Shirley's 'Cupid and Death', entitled a masque and with music by Matthew Locke and Christopher Gibbons, had been performed before the Portuguese ambassador. Of this the music has survived, and its maturity and precision of judgment gives it a more practicable importance than 'The Siege of Rhodes', except that the latter was repeated several times after the reopening of the theatres in 1660.²

Although the later story of masque is essentially that of opera, it may be stated that many of Purcell's and some of Handel's finest scenes would not have been created but for the pioneer work of Jacobean and Caroline poets, painters and musicians. Purcell's 'Fairy Queen', for instance, is in form much more a sequence of masques and antimasques than an opera. Most of 'King Arthur' and the witches' and sailors' music of 'Dido and Aeneas' also maintain the same tradition. Handel, whose knowledge of early English music was gained from Thomas Britton's library, would seem also to have appreciated the English affection for an admixture of lyric and dramatic. 'Acis and Galatea' (named "Mask" by Walsh in 1730), 'Semele',

¹ It may be mentioned that performances of 'Cupid and Death', both by college musicians at Cambridge and by the B.B.C., have been given of late years.

² Venetian State Papers, XV, 110.

'Hercules' and 'Solomon' may be quoted in support of this thesis, while a more direct connection with Ben Jonson is to be found in the incidental music to 'The Alchymist'. Which music even holds a Jacobean simplicity.

In the 18th century Rich's pantomimes also preserved something of the nature of the masque, although the most notable production within this class was Arne's 'King Alfred', performed at Cliveden before Frederick, Prince of Wales, in 1740. This was chiefly conspicuous for the patriotic "Rule, Britannia".

Of later date should be mentioned 'Pelesus and Thetis' by William Pearce (music by J. P. Salomon), performed in honour of the marriage of the Prince of Wales at Covent Garden in 1795; 'Freya's Gift' by John Oxenford (music by G. A. Macfarren) also performed, in 1863, at Covent Garden and for the occasion of the marriage of another Prince of Wales (later Edward VII); and Robert Bridges's 'Demeter', a somewhat chaste work done for the ladies of Somerville College, Oxford, in 1904. The music in this case was by W. H. Hadow. The 'Masque of Flowers' was revived at Gray's Inn for the Jubilee (1887) and the Diamond Jubilee (1897) of Queen Victoria.

The musical influence of the 17th-century masque has been absorbed within the general stream of English music (the 'Wand of Youth' suites by Elgar and Vaughan Williams's 'Job' are not lacking in this particular flavour); the literary influence has, however, remained more independent, and there is a strong connection between the lyric renaissance of the early 19th and the masque poetry of the 17th century. In particular there is the poetry of Shelley and Keats, who transmuted the researches of their contemporaries into works of rare beauty. The connection between the two periods and an appreciation of the mystical value of music — common to Shakespeare and Shelley alike — may be demonstrated by a stanza assigned to the chorus in Act IV of 'Prometheus Unbound'. This also aptly summarizes the whole subject:

But now, oh weave the mystic measure
Of music, and dance, and shapes of light,
Let the Hours, and the spirits of might and pleasure,
Like the clouds and sunbeams, unite.

P. M. Y.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BOAS, FREDERICK SAMUEL (ed.), 'Songs and Lyrics from the English Masques and Light Operas' (London, 1949).
BROTANEK, R., 'Die englischen Maskenspiele' (Vienna & Leipzig, 1902).
DENT, E. J., 'Foundations of English Opera' (Cambridge, 1928).
EVANS, H. A., 'English Masques' (London, 1897).
GREG, W. W., 'A List of Masques, Pageants, etc.' (London, 1902).
LAURENCE, W. J., 'Notes on a Collection of Masque Music' (M. & L., III, 49).
MARK, JEFFREY, 'The Johnsonian Masque' (M. & L., III, 358).
REYHER, PAUL, 'Les Masques anglais: étude sur les ballets et la vie de cour en Angleterre, 1512-1640' (Paris, 1909).

WELSFORD, ENID, 'The Court Masque' (Cambridge, 1927).
YOUNG, PERCY M., 'The Royal Music' (M. & L., XVIII, 119).

MASQUES ET BERGAMASQUES (Entertainment). See FAURÉ. VERLAINE.

MASS (Lat. missa). As a musical term the word is employed for a setting of the unvarying portion of the text of the Roman liturgy called the Ordinary, and consisting normally and mainly of "Kyrie", "Gloria in excelsis", "Credo", "Sanctus" and "Agnus Dei". For the variable portions little music besides the original plainsong has ever been provided: their turn and opportunity for performance came too rarely. The main exception to this general statement is the Requiem. Because of the frequent repetition of this form of Mass, it has been worth while to provide fresh settings of the variables — the Introit Gradual, etc. — as well as of the invariable elements which make up the Ordinary of the Mass.¹

THE LITURGICAL FORM.—Many different plainsong settings of the component parts of the Ordinary were made in the period between the 9th and the 12th centuries; but they remained isolated compositions, unconnected in idea and even in tonality. Among them the "Credo" was the most stable element, for it kept to its one original setting. But of the rest, any setting of "Kyrie", "Gloria", "Sanctus" or "Agnus" might be associated with it; and these individually were freely chosen from the stock available without reference to one another, and combined at will. In time a certain allotment of the repertory took place; but the pieces were still viewed individually and allocated severally to particular occasions — Easter, Greater Saints' Days, etc. — rather than associated with one another. Such allotment as there was took place rather at haphazard and without any uniform practice. Thus the Mass as an art-form — a cantata in four or five movements — did not yet exist.

It was only at the end of the middle ages that anything like the 'Missa de Angelis', a plainsong Mass continuous in theme and tonality, came into existence. The way to it had been made, not by monody, but by polyphony. When part-singing arose, under the name of organum or diaphonia, it began to make its way into the church music, though long faced by considerable opposition. The earliest organa were probably improvisations, analogous to those which find favour with Bantu tribes, or to those to be heard in Russian churches down to the 20th century. As such they could be applied as easily to the variable items as to the invariables, and indeed the former as belonging to special days and great feasts seem at first to have had the preference. The examples given in the theorists show this, and the earliest large collection of two-part organa that we have — those in the 'Winchester Troper' (Henry Bradshaw Society) bear this out. But as the writer of organa became more scientific, he fastened upon those curious interpolations called the tropes as giving him his best field. For in the tropes only a single syllable was set to each note, and this arrangement facilitated the task of writing and singing in two parts. So while the main text was sung in unison, the intercalated tropes gave occasion for organum. Among all the tropes those of the Ordinary, recurring as they did in frequent use, supplied the best opportunities. The farced "Kyries" and the tropes of "Gloria", "Sanctus" and "Agnus" are the best examples of the earliest harmony in two parts.

¹ See GREGORIAN MUSIC, PLAINSONG and REQUIEM.

While this remained the position, so far as the Mass music was concerned, through the 12th and 13th centuries, the art of harmony was being considerably developed meanwhile, in another connection, namely by the motet. The motet in origin was a trope or prose that broke away from the host of which it had been a parasite and set up for itself an independent existence. Consisting thus of a canto fermo, drawn out of some liturgical text, with one or more added parts, it acquired a freedom such as any composition that remained embedded in its liturgical position could not secure. The development was then made with considerable rapidity. New canti fermi could soon be taken at will and modified freely as to rhythm and time-values. This freedom facilitated also the combining of a known melody with a canto fermo, or the superposing of new parts. And with this freedom came the clearer conception of measurable as distinct from plain chant, and the development of the ars nova discantus.

In course of time the contrapuntal skill, learnt in connection with the motet, became available for the Mass. Not merely the intercalated trope but the whole liturgical melody could then be made mensurable and taken as canto fermo; and there thus emerged a setting in two or three parts of a whole "Sanctus" or "Agnus". The earliest known setting in parts of the whole Ordinary comes from the first half of the 14th century. The canto fermo for each portion is drawn from the plainsong repertory. The result is a Mass in the special sense of the term: but as yet there is still no unity in it. The combination of "Kyrie", "Gloria", "Credo", "Sanctus" and "Agnus" is still fortuitous, and the Mass is a group of five distinct compositions in different modes, not a single uniform composition in five connected movements. In the "Gloria" and "Credo" the liturgical intonation, as sung by the celebrant, is preserved and the choir begins the words "Et in terra" and "Patrem omnipotentem" respectively.

A further stage of development yet remained which should bring the whole into a unity linked by common thematic material and a uniform tonality. This change was brought about only gradually in the course of the 15th century, and it was to a large extent bound up with the gradual emancipation of composers from the traditional habit of using the plainsong as canto fermo throughout. When this was gone, the component parts drew together. In this emancipation probably the motet led the way and the Mass followed. The "Credo" was the latest portion of the Ordinary to be brought into line, partly because it was that which most pertinaciously preserved its old plainsong melody and partly also, perhaps, because, like the "Gloria in excelsis", it was not always needed, not being used on ordinary week-days or in Advent and Lent. But eventually and by degrees all fell into line and the homogeneous Mass in five movements arose, more or less closely knit. While this emancipation was coming, the door was also opening for another great advance. The thematic material could be polyphonically employed, imitation and other devices of counterpoint could come increasingly into use, and there arose new rhythmical independence among the parts. Thus the composer had worked himself free to write his four or five parts unhampered, and free to choose as his theme and starting-point either a plainsong phrase in the old manner or some secular melody like 'L'Homme armé' or 'The Western Wind', or else an original phrase or motto; free also to handle his themes and develop them at will.

These are the principal stages to be noted in tracing the development of the Mass as a musical form. Incidentally there are many curious details to be observed. It is not possible to do more than mention two here: (1) In regard to the handling of the tenor — the canto fermo — it long continued to be in the lowest voice, and this arrangement remained the rule even after the experiment had been made of placing it in the highest voice, or in the middle one of the parts. It was only in the 16th century that it became commonly identified with the "tenor voice". (2) In regard to the handling of the liturgical text, in the earlier stages this was sung in due order and respectfully treated. The alternation of unisonous plainsong with occasional passages set in harmony did not alter this; though it had the result that the choir-books exhibited only some portions of the text, to the exclusion of the rest, which was sung to the plainsong. But the growing elaboration of the harmonized music brought in some disrespect for the text. A notable example is afforded by the "Sanctus" tus". The settings became so long that they were not concluded by the time the celebrant reached the Consecration. So, to overcome this difficulty, the text was cut into two portions. It was clumsily divided. The logical point of subdivision would have been before the first "Hosanna", for that begins a new section, which is both historically an addition to the primitive "Sanctus" and also logically distinct from it; but an unintelligent division into two equal halves was made at "Benedictus qui venit". This gave the composer the opportunity of dividing his work into two movements of more or less equal length, one occupying the available time up to the Consecration, the other the available time after it. But the sense suffered, and this unfortunate mishandling has its evil effects even until now. Musically it is convenient, but ritually it is indefensible. Other results of disrespect to the words may be found in the course of the history: clauses of the "Credo" are sung simultaneously by different voices, or omitted altogether, because the composer had spent too much time over the rest. And, more generally speaking, a habit of making meaningless repetitions of the words grew out of the exigencies of imitation and counterpoint; and again the sense suffered.

But in spite of these flaws, the development of the Mass as an art-form was a great achievement. It was completed by the early part of the 16th century. Since then, though music has gone through many phases, and most of them have made some contribution to the great series of masses extending down to the present day, the form itself has remained stable.

W. H. F.

INDIVIDUAL DEVELOPMENTS. — Only the briefest summary can be attempted here of the principal influences which have modified composers' treatment of the Mass from the time when the individual artist assumed complete freedom of action.

(1) The development of what is known as the polyphonic style can be most consistently traced in the several generations of composers proceeding from the Netherlands, of which the names of Dufay, Okeghem, Obrecht, Josquin des Prés and Lassus are representative. Various national groups owed their technical methods to the Netherlands; Robert Fayrfax, followed by the early Tudor composers Taverner and Tye in England, Sermisy (Claudin), Fevin and Mouton in France, are representative names. The Italian school of the 16th century, of which Palestrina is the head and forefront, drew to itself composers both from the Netherlands and Spain (Guerrero, Morales, Victoria) and formed the culmination of the style. William Byrd, whose three masses are masterpieces, is the last landmark of the contrapuntal Mass in England, after religious and political considerations had banished the Latin Office from the English Church.¹

Up to this point church music, with the Mass as its central feature, had guided secular music.² From the beginning of the 17th century onward the growth of instruments and the rise of the opera, becoming the most potent factors in the development of the art as a whole, reversed this position. Henceforward developments in the music of the Mass (as of all other Latin church music) consisted in the adoption of the devices of secular music.³

(2) The method adopted by Viadana in his 'Cento concerti ecclesiastici' introduced new principles of construction into church music.⁴ His Mass for 1-3 voices with basso continuo for organ (1605) marks the starting-point of the new style in which Banchieri, Merula and other Italians followed him. In the first half of the century the conflict between the polyphonic and monodic styles, the ecclesiastical and the secular, is traceable in composers of the Roman school. The victory of the latter, however, soon becomes decisive. The growth of instrumental accompaniment keeps pace with the operatic orchestra; the musical form accommodates itself to the aria, the dramatic chorus and ensemble of solo singers. The masses of Alessandro Scarlatti exhibit fully all the qualities of his style in opera and cantata.⁵

(3) Broadly speaking, the same is true of the Neapolitan school which followed Scarlatti in the 18th century, of which Vinci, Leo, Durante and Pergolesi are representative. They are a "school" in virtue of their operatic productions, and they wrote masses in the style cultivated by the theatre.⁶

(4) Bach's Mass in B minor stands alone as a supreme musical setting of the Mass in the middle of the 18th century. It must be remembered, however, that it was not conceived primarily as a setting of the Mass as a whole, but was begun with a view to performance of those parts of the text sung in Lutheran churches. The whole might be more fitly considered to be a series of church cantatas. The splitting up of "Gloria" and "Credo" into distinct movements (solo voices and chorus), according to the individual taste of the composer, had already become prevalent in the more elaborate settings intended for liturgical use, and was the natural outcome of the adoption of the aria form into the Mass.

(5) Later in the 18th century the Viennese school as represented by the two brothers

¹ See SERVICE.

² See MADRIGAL.

³ The 'Motu Proprio' of Pope Pius X (1903), in claiming polyphonic music together with that of the Gregorian chant as proper to the sacred offices, is historically accurate.

⁴ See THOROUGH-BASS.

⁵ See DENT, 'Alessandro Scarlatti'.

⁶ The masses of this school are amply quoted from by Alfred Orel in Adler's 'Handbuch der Musikgeschichte', p. 471 ff.

Haydn, and by Mozart, dominated the situation and lasted into the 19th century in the works of Beethoven, Schubert, Hummel and others. The style, in so far as it is anything besides purely individualistic, is governed by the conditions of patronage in which composers worked. The resources of the private chapels and the wishes of patrons determined the form of the works produced, in many cases entirely unfitting them for transference to the conditions of public worship.

(6) The rise of the public concert in the 19th century completes the list of secular influences operating on the composition of the Mass. Beethoven's 'Missa solemnis' in D major, despite its ecclesiastical origin, stands beside its companion work, the choral Symphony, as music for public performance on the scale of the festival choir and symphonic orchestra. The most conspicuous Masses and Requiems of the century are essentially works of the concert-room. To this category belong those of Spohr, Bérlioz, Schumann, Liszt, Verdi, Dvořák, Bruckner, notwithstanding the fact that some of them were undertaken for special occasions of the Church. In all, despite their different styles, the text is regarded as a libretto for dramatic and emotional treatment in music intended to be heard as a self-sufficient work of art.

(7) Meantime the tradition of strict church writing was not entirely destroyed. From Carissimi, the last composer to write a Mass on the old tune of 'L'Homme armé', it survived through the 18th century in Italy, notably by means of the teaching of Padre Martini, to find more than a reflection of its original manner in the contrapuntal masses of Cherubini. An ever-decreasing stream of what came to be known as a cappella works (in distinction from the operatic and instrumental masses) trickled through the ages, and the tradition was maintained more vigorously in the Catholic churches of southern Germany than anywhere else in Europe. It was enriched through that revival of scholarship in the latter half of the 19th century which included research into the principles of the ancient plain-song, carried on by the monks of Solesmes, the re-study of the modes, the publication of the complete works of Palestrina and of much other music of the same period. In England it has had the special stimulus of what almost amounts to a rediscovery of a national school of composition of the 16th century, ranging from Taverner to Byrd.¹

¹ The coincidence of the consecration of the London Roman Catholic Cathedral at Westminster with the issue of the 'Motu Proprio' on church music of Pope Pius X, and the fact that the new Cathedral, under the musical direction of R. R. Terry, set itself to illustrate the principles in the revival of polyphony, having special regard to the old English music, gave composers and other English musicians practical experience of the style beyond anything which pure scholarship could afford.

The realization of these achievements of the past has brought several significant works from modern composers of which the Mass by R. Vaughan Williams is an outstanding example.

H. C. C.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ADLER, GUIDO, 'Zur Geschichte der Wiener Messenkomposition in der zweiten Hälfte des 17. Jahrhunderts' (S.M.W., IV, 1916).
 FORTESCUE, ADRIAN, 'The Mass: a Study of the Roman Liturgy' (New York, 1950).
 GASSNER, JEROME, 'The Canon of the Mass: its History, Theology and Art' (St. Louis, 1949).
 LIPPHARDT, WALTHER, 'Die Geschichte des mehrstimmigen Proprium Missae' (Heidelberg, 1950).
 PIOVESAN, A., 'La messa nella musica dalle origini al nostro tempo' (Turin, 1949).
 ROCK, JOHANN, 'Handschriftliche Missalien in Steiermark' (Graz & Vienna, 1916); also review of this in Z.M.W., Oct. 1920, p. 56.
 SANDER, HANS ADOLF, 'Italienische Messenkompositionen des 17. Jahrhunderts aus der Breslauer Sammlung des Daniel Sartorius' (Birkeneck, 1934).
 SCHILD, EMILIE, 'Geschichte der protestantischen Messenkomposition des 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts' (Leipzig, 1934).
 SCHNERICH, A., 'Messe und Requiem seit Haydn und Mozart' (Vienna, 1909).
 SCHRÄDE, LEO, 'The Organ in the Mass of the 15th Century' (M.Q., XXVIII, 1942, pp. 329, 467).
 WAGNER, PETER, 'Geschichte der Messe', 2 vols. (Leipzig, 1913, &c.).
 WIDDING, S., 'Dans Messe-, Tide- og Psalmesang, 1528-1573' (Copenhagen, 1933).

MASS in C. The familiar name of Beethoven's earlier setting of the Mass, Op. 86, in C major. It was composed for the 1807 name-day of Princess Esterházy (wife of Prince Nicholas, grandson of Haydn's patron) and performed at Esterházy on 13 Sept. 1807. Of later performances the most noteworthy was that given at the Lichnowsky country seat, Grätz, in 1811. Sir George Smart introduced the Mass to England during the season of 1816-17.

W. M.

MASSAINO (Massaini), Tiburtio (b. Cremona, ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-17th-century composer. He was an Augustinian monk, maestro di cappella at Salò in 1587, Prague in 1590, Salzburg in 1591, Cremona in 1594, Piacenza in 1598 and Lodi in 1600. He composed masses, psalms, motets, madrigals, also canzoni, including one each for 8 trombones, for 4 violins and 4 lutes, and one for 16 trombones.

E. v. d. s.

MASSART, Joseph (Lambert) (b. Liège, 19 July 1811; d. Paris, 13 Feb. 1892).

Belgian violinist and teacher. He received his first instruction in violin playing from an amateur named Delavaud, who was so impressed with the talent displayed by his pupil that he persuaded the municipal authorities of Liège to grant him a scholarship which would enable him to study in Paris. On his arrival there Massart sought admission as a student to the Conservatoire, but was refused by the director, Cherubini, on account of his being a foreigner. Notwithstanding this first rebuff, Massart's gifts were soon recognized by Auguste Kreutzer, who willingly undertook the task of developing the young artist's talents. Massart became a fine executant under Kreutzer's tuition, yet, on account of his excessive shyness, he never attained much fame as a public player. An instance of his modesty, when his performance with Liszt of Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata was shouted down by an audience anxious to hear Liszt's Fantasy on 'Robert le Diable', is related by Hallé in his Autobiography.

In 1843 the Paris Conservatoire appointed Massart professor of the violin, and in this post his energy and thoroughness gained for him a world-wide renown. Among his many famous pupils were Wieniawski, Lotto, Sarasate, Mårsick and Teresina Tua. Massart was an excellent quartet player, and together with his wife, Louise Aglaé Marson — who succeeded Farrenc as professor of pianoforte at the Paris Conservatoire — gave many delightful chamber-music concerts. E. H.-A.

BIBL.—LAHEE, HENRY C., 'Famous Violinists of To-day and Yesterday' (Boston, 1899).

MASSÉ, Victor (actually Félix Marie) (b. Lorient, 7 Mar. 1822; d. Paris, 5 July 1884).

French composer. He entered the Paris Conservatoire at the age of twelve, obtained the first prizes for pianoforte, harmony and fugue, and in 1844, after some years' study with Halévy, the Grand Prix de Rome for composition. His cantata 'Le Rénégat' was given three times at the Opéra (Feb. 1845), a rare event. During his stay in Rome he composed a 'Messe solennelle', performed at the Church of San Luigi de' Francesi there (1 May 1846), a careful and clever work, though wanting in religious sentiment—never Massé's strong point. The unpublished score is in the library of the Paris Conservatoire.

After his two years in Rome Massé travelled through Italy and Germany, and returned to Paris, where he was much appreciated in society. Publishers readily accepted his mélodies and romances, and he gained access to the stage with little delay. 'La Chambre gothique' (Folies-Dramatiques, 1849) and 'La Chanteuse voilée', one act (Opéra-Comique, 26 Nov. 1850), were followed by 'Galathée', two acts (Opéra-Comique, 14 Apr. 1852) and 'Les Noces de Jeannette' (Opéra-Comique, 4 Feb. 1853), a charming lyric comedy in one act and his most lastingly successful piece. These early successes justified the hope that in Massé the French stage had found a composer as fruitful and melodious, if not as original, as Auber; but his later efforts were less fortunate. 'La Reine Topaze' (Théâtre-Lyrique, 27 Dec. 1856) indeed succeeded completely, but 'La Fiancée du Diable' (3 June 1854), 'Miss Fauvette' (13 Feb. 1855), 'Les Saisons' (22 Dec. 1855), 'Les Chaises à porteurs' (28 Apr. 1858), 'La Fée Carabosse' (28 Feb. 1859), 'Marianne la promise' (1862), 'La Mule de Pedro' (6 Mar. 1863), 'Fior d'Aliza' (5 Feb. 1866) and 'Le Fils du brigadier' (25 Feb. 1867), though fairly well received, soon disappeared. Some, however, contain good music, especially 'Les Saisons' and 'Fior d'Aliza'.

In 1860 Massé became chorus-master to the Opéra and in 1866 succeeded Leborne as professor of composition at the Conservatoire — gratifying appointments, as showing the esteem of his brother artists, although the work they entailed left him little time for composition. On 20 June 1872 he was elected to the Institut as successor to Auber.

After a long period of silence Massé produced at the Opéra 'Paul et Virginie', a serious opera in three acts, based on Bernardin of Saint-Pierre's novel by Jules Barbier and Michel Carré, who had repeatedly served him as librettists (15 Nov. 1876; given in Italian in London, at Covent Garden, 1 June 1878). In spite of its success and its evident ambition, this opera seems less original and less homogeneous in style than 'Galathée' or 'Les Noces de Jeannette', and its best parts, as in all his operas, are the short pieces and the simple songs.

To complete the list of his operas we may mention 'La favorita e la schiava' (Venice, 1855) and 'Le Cousin Marivaux' (Baden-Baden, 1857); two drawing-room operettas, 'Le Prix de famille' (1855) and 'Une Loi somptuaire' (published in 1874). Also 'Les Enfants de Perrette' (pub. 1872), 'La Petite Sœur d'Achille' and 'La Trouvaille' (both publ. 1873). He published three sets of twenty songs each, selected from his numerous romances. G. C.

A painful illness compelled Massé to resign his post at the Opéra in 1876 and rendered him totally incapable of active work. During seven years of suffering his only consolation lay in composition, and in this way his opera 'Une Nuit de Cléopâtre', intended for the Paris Opéra, was written. The libretto, by Barbier, was based on Théophile Gautier's story. After the composer's death a performance of the work took place at the Opéra-Comique in his honour (25 Apr. 1885), though the reception of 'Paul et Virginie' did not hold out much hope of success for a work evidently written in the same style and aiming too high. A. J.

BIBL.—DELABORDE, C., 'Notice sur la vie et les ouvrages de Victor Massé' (Paris, 1888).
DELIBES, LÉO, 'Notice sur Victor Massé' (Paris, 1885).

MASSENET, Jules (Émile Frédéric) (b. Montaud nr. Saint-Étienne, 12 May 1842; d. Paris, 13 Aug. 1912).

French composer. When he was six years old his father, an ironmaster and the inventor of a steel-hammer, was obliged for reasons of ill-health to leave his foundry and remove to Paris. Here his mother, who was his father's second wife and bore three other musical children besides the composer, helped to support the family by turning her musical talents to account and giving pianoforte lessons. From her he first learnt to play, and at the age of eleven he was sufficiently advanced in music to be able to pass successfully into the Conservatoire, where he became a pupil of Adolphe Laurent at the pianoforte and of Savard in solfège. When the family again, for reasons of health, left Paris for Chambéry, he went too, but returned for good after some months' absence. In 1860 he entered Reber's harmony class and shortly after took up composition with Ambroise Thomas. While still at the Conservatoire he earned a small pittance first by playing triangle at the Théâtre du Gymnase and then by acting as drummer three nights a week at the Théâtre-Lyrique, and with the knowledge of instrumentation which he thus acquired he scored for orchestra a Mass with military band by Adam. After having won successively the first prize for pianoforte and the second and first prizes for fugue, he gained the Prix de Rome in 1863 with a cantata, 'David Rizzio'. During the obligatory period of study at the Villa Medici in Rome, where he had as fellow-students Carolus Duran the painter and Chaplain the engraver, he met Liszt, at whose request he gave lessons to the daughter of Mme Sainte-Marie who, before his three years in Rome were up, became his wife.

On his return to Paris with the manuscript of an opera, 'Esméralda', which was never performed or printed, he was again driven to do hack-work, but, owing to the influence of Ambroise Thomas, had his first opera, 'La Grand' Tante', produced at the Opéra-Comique (1867), and Pasdeloup played his first orchestral Suite at one of his popular concerts the same year. Soon after this he made the acquaintance of Hartmann the publisher, who accepted his two song-cycles 'Poème d'avril' and 'Poème du souvenir'. After the Franco-Prussian war his second orchestral suite, 'Scènes hongroises', was played by Pasdeloup; and then by the production of his comic opera 'Don César de Bazan' in three acts and four scenes (1872) he found himself in the front-rank of the younger composers of the day. An opera, 'Méduse', completed two years before this, remains unpublished, and another one, 'La Coupe du roi de Thulé', to a libretto previously used by Bizet, was never performed, for though it gained a proxime accessit in a competition organized by the Ministry of Fine Arts, Massenet recognized the justice of the jury's opinion that it was unsuited to the stage and remodelled the best numbers, transferring some of them to his next opera, 'Le Roi de Lahore' (1877), and others to the incidental music which he wrote for Leconte de Lisle's drama 'Les Érinnyes' (1873). This incidental music did not make much impression, but it contained an air which, issued separately as an 'Élégie' with accompaniment for violoncello and pianoforte, became one of the most famous of all his songs.

Between the production of 'Don César de Bazan' and that of 'Le Roi de Lahore' came two small operas produced in the Cercle de l'Union Artistique — 'L'Adorable Bel-Boul', which was suppressed by the composer, and 'Bérengrère et Anatole' — together with a large harvest of miscellaneous works in the shape of two more orchestral suites, 'Scènes dramatiques' and 'Scènes pittoresques', an 'Overture de concert', an overture to Racine's 'Phèdre', a 'Sarabande espagnole' for orchestra, some choruses for four equal voices, various works for pianoforte and a number of songs and duets. The most important, however, of his compositions at this period (1872-77) was the oratorio or "sacred drama", as it was called, 'Marie Magdeleine', which was produced by Colonne in 1873 with Pauline Viardot-Garcia in the part of the Magdalen, and which at once brought him fame. In 1906 this work was rearranged as an opera and given at the Opéra-Comique, with Aino Ackté and Salignac in the parts of the Magdalen and Christ. Owing to the success of the music in its original form as an oratorio, Massenet composed two more works on much the same model, 'Ève' (1875), which was almost as great a success as 'Marie Magdeleine', and 'La Vierge' (1880), which was a failure. Soon after the production of 'Le Roi de Lahore' he wrote a cantata, 'Narcisse', for voice and orchestra, and eventually three more orchestral suites, 'Scènes napolitaines', 'Scènes alsaciennes', and 'Scènes de féerie', all of which were produced at the Concerts du Châtelet. These, with a short work, 'Biblis', for voice and orchestra, another oratorio, 'La Terre promise' (1900), a pianoforte Concerto (1903) and various songs, practically constitute, with the works already mentioned, the whole of Massenet's miscellaneous output. Everything else was written for the theatre.

In 1881 'Hérodiade' was produced at Brussels, where it enjoyed success for a season, and after being partly rewritten was given three years later in Paris at the Opéra-Italien, where it was sung in Italian with Victor Maurel, Fidès-Devriès, Trebelli and the two de Reszkes in the cast. It did not meet with favour at the time, though when revived in 1903 at the Théâtre de la Gaîté, with Emma Calvé as Salome, it soon grew in public favour, and has since then been popular in America, where Lina Cavalieri played Salome, and has even penetrated into England, having been given under the title of 'Salome', with the scene transferred to Ethiopia and certain details altered to suit the requirements of British taste, at Covent Garden in 1904. 'Manon', which came out at the Opéra-Comique in 1884, is usually considered to be Massenet's operatic masterpiece. In it he used leading themes and tried the experiment of having the dialogue not sung in the usual recitativo secco but spoken over a slightly orchestrated accompaniment. The work has been played in the leading opera houses in most countries, and the number of famous singers who have been heard in the parts of Manon and Des Grieux is legion.

Massenet's other works for the stage will be found in the catalogue at the end of this article. Besides the operas he wrote a one-act ballet, 'Le Carillon' (Vienna, 1892), and a divertissement-ballet in two acts, 'La Cigale', as well as incidental music to Sardou's plays 'Théodora' and 'Le Crocodile' (Théâtre Porte Saint-Martin, 1884, 1886) and to 'Phèdre' (Théâtre Sarah Bernhardt, 1901). He also orchestrated and completed the opera 'Kassya' left unfinished by Delibes.

In 1878 he was appointed professor of advanced composition at the Conservatoire, where Alfred Bruneau, Xavier Leroux, Gabriel Pierné and Gustave Charpentier were among his pupils, and held the post until his death. The same year he was elected a member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts in place of Bazin, whom he had succeeded at the Conservatoire, and to the exclusion, by five votes, of Saint-Saëns. He was only thirty-six at the time, and was the youngest member ever elected to the Académie des Beaux-Arts. In 1876 he was decorated by the Legion of Honour and became Grand Officer in 1899.

During his lifetime, and for a period of some forty years, Massenet, thanks to his undoubted gifts for melody of a suave, voluptuous character, ingratiated himself with that large section of the public which, in Paris and elsewhere, regards music as an agreeable after-dinner entertainment. At the same time he was a sufficiently astute musician not merely to reflect the taste of his day (which he gratified by his regular and effortless supply of what Vincent d'Indy called a "discreet and semi-religious eroticism"), but even to some extent to mould it. By grafting the idiom of Gounod on to something like the method of Wagner with a sensibility to the requirements of singers and an understanding of effective though conventional characterization that belonged essentially to the theatre, he succeeded in appealing to "the average sensual man" without alienating those who expected opera to be something more than a series of pleasant tunes. His own tunes, whilst invariably singable, were usually short-winded and, in the operas at least, had a way of reverting, after a series of mild attempts at getting under way, to a re-statement of the initial subject; the orchestration, often piquant, was unambitious and varied little from scene to scene. In fact, with all his skill as a composer Massenet was strictly confined by a temperament of narrow range, so that to have heard 'Manon' is to have heard the whole of him. His personal charm and the continued vogue during the last quarter of the 19th century of the kind of musical delicacies he enjoyed purveying account for his popularity during his lifetime. There have since been signs of reaction. But however far this reaction may go, it would be absurd to deny that within its marked limitations, of which he himself was obviously aware, 'Manon', so eminently typical both of the composer and of the public for which he wrote, is in its own way a masterpiece.

L. W. H.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BOUVET, CHARLES, 'Massenet' (Paris, 1929).
BRANCOUR, RENÉ, 'Massenet' (Paris, 1930, 2nd ed.).
BRUNEAU, ALFRED, 'Massenet' (Paris, 1935).
COLSON, PERCY, 'Massenet: "Manon"' (London, 1947).
FINCK, H. T., 'Massenet and his Operas' (London, 1910).
LOISEL, J., 'Manon, de Massenet' (Paris, 1924).
MASSNET, JULES, 'Mes Souvenirs' (Paris, 1912); English trans. (Boston, 1919).
POUGIN, ARTHUR, 'Massenet' (Paris, 1914).
SCHNEIDER, LOUIS, 'Jules Massenet' (Paris, 1908).
'Massenet' (Paris, 1926).
SOLENIÈRE, J. E. F., 'Massenet: étude critique' (Paris, 1897).

CATALOGUE OF STAGE WORKS

(excluding unfinished and unperformed operas)

OPERAS

Title	Libretto	Production
'La Grand' Tante.'	Jules Adenis & Charles Grandvallet.	Paris, Opéra-Comique, 3 Apr. 1867.
'Don César de Bazan.'	Adolphe Philippe d'Ennery and Jules Chantepie, based on d'Ennery & P. E. Pinel Dumanoir's play.	Paris, Opéra-Comique, 30 Nov. 1872.
'L'Adorable Bel-Boul.'	Louis Gallet.	Paris, Cercle des Mirlitons, 17 Apr. 1874.
'Bérengrère et Anatole.'	Henri Meilhac and Paul Poirson.	Paris, Cercle de l'Union Artistique, Feb. 1876.
'Le Roi de Lahore.'	Gallet.	Paris, Opéra, 27 Apr. 1877.

Title	Libretto	Production
'Hérodiade.'	Paul Milliet & Henri Grémont (Georges Hartmann), based on a story by Flaubert.	Brussels, Théâtre de la Monnaie, 19 Dec. 1881.
'Manon.'	Henri Meilhac & Philippe Gille, based on Prévost's novel.	Paris, Opéra-Comique, 19 Jan. 1884.
'Le Cid.'	D'Ennery, Gallet & Edouard Blau, based on Corneille's tragedy.	Paris, Opéra, 30 Nov. 1885.
'Esclarmonde.'	Gallet & Louis de Gramont.	Paris, Opéra-Comique, 15 May 1889.
'Le Mage.'	Jean Richepin.	Paris, Opéra, 16 Mar. 1891.
'Werther.'	Blau, Milliet & Hartmann, on Goethe's novel (German trans. by Max Kalbeck).	Vienna, Court Opera, 16 Feb. 1892.
'Thaïs.'	Gallet, based on Anatole France's novel.	Paris, Opéra, 16 Mar. 1894.
'Le Portrait de Manon.' ¹	Georges Boyer.	Paris, Opéra-Comique, 8 May 1894.
'Sapho.'	Henri Cain & Arthur Bernède, based on Daudet's novel.	Paris, Opéra-Comique, 27 Nov. 1897.
'Cendrillon.'	Henri Cain, based on Perrault's story.	Paris, Opéra-Comique, 24 May 1899.
'Grisélidis.'	Paul Armand Silvestre & Eugène Armand.	Paris, Opéra-Comique, 20 Nov. 1901.
'Le Jongleur de Notre-Dame.'	Maurice Léna.	Monte Carlo, 18 Feb. 1902.
'Marie-Magdeleine.' ²	Gallet.	Nice, 9 Feb. 1903.
'Chérubin.'	Francis de Croisset (F. Wiener) & Henri Cain.	Monte Carlo, 14 Feb. 1905.
'Ariane.'	Catulle Mendès.	Paris, Opéra, 31 Oct. 1906.
'Thérèse.'	Jules Claretie.	Monte Carlo, 7 Feb. 1907.
'Bacchus.'	Catulle Mendès.	Paris, Opéra, 5 May 1909.
'Don Quichotte.'	Henri Cain, based on Cervantes's 'Don Quixote' and Jacques Le Lorrain's 'Le Chevalier de la longue figure'.	Monte Carlo, 19 Feb. 1910.
'Roma.'	Henri Cain, based on Dominique Alexandre Parodi's tragedy 'Rome vaincue'.	Monte Carlo, 17 Feb. 1912.
'Panurge' (posthumous).	Georges Spitzmüller & Maurice Boukay, based on Rabelais.	Paris, Théâtre de la Gaîté, 25 Apr. 1913.
'Cléopâtre' (posthumous).	Louis Payen (Albert Liénard).	Monte Carlo, 23 Feb. 1914.
'Amadis' (posthumous, comp. 1902).	Jules Claretie.	Monte Carlo, 1 Apr. 1922.

BALLETS

Title	Scenario by	Production
('Le Carillon') 'Das Glockenspiel'.	Ernest van Dyck & Camille de Roddaz.	Vienna, Court Opera, 21 Feb. 1892.
'La Cigale.'	Henri Cain.	Paris, Opéra-Comique, 4 Feb. 1904.
'Espada.'	René Maugars.	Monte Carlo, 13 Feb. 1908.

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

Title	Play by	Production
'Les Érinnyes.'	Leconte de Lisle.	Paris, Odéon, 6 Jan. 1873.
'Un Drame sous Philippe II.'	Porto-Riche.	Paris, Odéon, 14 Apr. 1875.
'La Vie de Bohème.'	Barrière and Murger.	Paris, Odéon, 1876.
'L'Hetman.'	Déroulède.	Paris, Odéon, 2 Feb. 1877.
'Notre-Dame de Paris.'	Victor Hugo.	Paris, Théâtre des Nations, 4 June 1879.
'Michel Strogoff.'	D'Ennery and Jules Verne.	Paris, Châtelet, 17 Nov. 1880.
'Nana-Sahib.'	Richepin.	Paris, Porte Saint-Martin, 20 Dec. 1883.
'Théodora.'	Sardou.	Paris, Porte Saint-Martin, 26 Dec. 1884.
'Le Crocodile.'	Sardou.	Paris, Porte Saint-Martin, 12 Dec. 1886.
'Phédre.'	Racine.	Paris, Odéon, 8 Dec. 1900.
'Le Grillon du foyer.'	Déroulède (after Dickens).	Paris, Odéon, 1 Oct. 1904.
'Le Manteau du roi.'	Aicard.	Paris, Porte Saint-Martin, 22 Oct. 1907.
'Perce-Neige et les sept gnomes.'	Jeanne Dortzal (after the Brothers Grimm).	Paris, Théâtre Fémina, 2 Feb. 1909.
'Jérusalem.'	Rivollet.	Monte Carlo, 17 Jan. 1914.

A. L.

See also Brémond (horn part in 'Manon'). Calvé (part for). Delibes (completion of 'Kassya').

MÄSSIG (Ger., moderate). Applied to tempo it is the German equivalent of moderato, used much by Schumann, as in the sixth of the

¹ Sequel to 'Manon'.

² Originally an oratorio, performed Paris, Odéon, 11 Apr. 1873.

fugues on the name B.A.C.H. "Im mässigen Tempo" occurs in the fourth fugue of his Op. 72, "Sehr mässig" in the 'Lager-Szene', No. 3 of Op. 76. His "Mässig durchaus energisch", in the second movement of the Fantasy in G major, Op. 17, is translated Moderato con energia.
J. A. F.-M.

MASSIMILLA DONI (Opera). See SCHOECK.

Massin, Leonid Feoderovich. See Ballet. Stravinsky (2 choreogs.).

Massinger, Philip. See Parry (H., song).

MASSOL, Jean Étienne Auguste (b. Lodève, Hérault, 1802; d. Paris, 31 Oct. 1887).

French baritone singer. He was taught singing at the Paris Conservatoire in 1823-25 and gained a first prize there. He made his début at the Opéra as Licinius (Spontini's 'Vestale') on 17 Nov. 1825 and remained there until 8 Oct. 1845. He first played second tenor parts in several new operas and the baritone parts of Tell and Jolicœur (Auber's 'Le Philtre'), etc. He played for a time in Brussels, London (Drury Lane, 1846), etc., and returned as principal baritone to the Opéra in 1850, where he remained until his farewell benefit on 14 Jan. 1858. The emperor was present on that occasion, immediately after the attempt made on his life by Orsini on his arrival at the theatre. His best new parts were Reuben (Auber's 'Enfant prodigue'), 6 Dec. 1850, and Ahasuerus (Halévy's 'Juif errant'), 23 Apr. 1852. He was a good singer, admirably suited to heroic drama, having the proper figure and height, and a splendid voice. A. G.

MASSON, Elizabeth (b. ?, 1806; d. ?, 9 Jan. 1865).

English singer and composer. She was taught singing by Mrs. Henry Smart, sen., and in Italy by Giuditta Pasta. She made her first public appearance in London, at Ella's second subscription concert, in the Argyll Rooms, on 11 Mar. 1831, and sang afterwards at the Ancient Concerts, 16 Mar. 1831, and at the Philharmonic, 11 Mar. 1833. She sang frequently at those societies' concerts during a public career of about twelve years, and revived there forgotten airs by Purcell, Handel, Pergolesi, Gluck, Mozart, etc. She was in great request at private concerts, since she possessed, apart from her musical attainments, great talents and accomplishments, and was an excellent linguist. She sang occasionally in oratorio, e.g. at the festival in Westminster Abbey, 1834, and at the Sacred Harmonic Society, where she took the Handelian parts of Solomon, 22 Nov. 1839 and Storge on the revival of 'Jephtha', 7 Apr. 1841. She afterwards devoted herself to teaching and composition.

Elizabeth Masson wrote many songs to the words of Scott, Byron, Adelaide Proctor, etc., and edited a series of 'Original Jacobite Songs' (1839) and 'Songs for the Classical Vocalist' (first series of twelve songs, 1845; a second series, 1860), which enjoyed a well-deserved popularity. She founded the Royal Society of Female Musicians in 1839¹ and was its hon. treasurer until her death. A. G.

¹ See ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

MASSON, Paul Marie (b. Cetté, Hérault, 19 Sept. 1882).

French musicologist and composer. He entered the École Normale Supérieure in Paris and studied the history and aesthetics of music under Romain Rolland. In 1907 he took his degree, and from that year until 1910 was a member of the Fondation Thiers. He studied composition with d'Indy at the Schola Cantorum and later with Charles Koechlin, and lectured on the history of music at the École des Hautes Études Sociales. In 1910 he was appointed professor of the history of music at the Institut Français at Florence, and in the following year he organized the French section of the International Exhibition held in Rome. In 1919 he joined the staff of the University of Grenoble as lecturer in the history of music, and soon after went to Naples as director of the Institut Français there. In 1931 he was appointed professor of the history of music at the Sorbonne in Paris. In 1937 he was elected vice-president of the Société Française de Musicologie.

Masson has been a frequent contributor to leading musical journals since 1906, among others to the 'Mercure musical', 'Revue musicale', 'Revue de Musicologie', 'Rivista musicale italiana', etc., and collaborated in Lavignac's 'Encyclopédie de la musique'. His published books include 'Chants de carnaval florentins de l'époque de Laurent le Magnifique' (1913), 'Berlioz' (1923) and 'L'Opéra de Rameau' (1930). He also wrote a quantity of music, among which the most important works are 'Chants sans paroles' (1906), 'Le Val de Terzolle' (1917), suite 'Printemps guerrier' (1917) and 'Prélude et berceuse' (1938) for orchestra. His songs include 'Ode à Cassandre' (1916), 'La Cigale et la fourmi' (Lafontaine, 1923) and 'Chant des peuples unis' for solo, chorus and orchestra (1938). E. B. (ii).

MAŠTALÍŘ, Jaroslav (b. Karvinná, Silesia, 1 May 1906).

Czech composer. Having finished his education at the "Gymnasium" of his birthplace and the High Commercial School in Prague, he devoted himself to the special and systematic study of music, to which he had felt attracted from his boyhood. He took lessons in composition with Jiráček and in 1930-32 he was a pupil of Novák at the Master School. Since 1935 he has been employed in the archives of the Prague Conservatory. Gifted with spontaneous invention and technical assurance, he is a clever and diligent composer of the Czech generation now in middle age. His catalogue up to 1950 contains over 50 numbered compositions including works for full orchestra and for solo instruments as well as sets of songs, church music and ballet. Though his early works were influenced to some extent by Novák, he developed step by step his own forthright and modern style.

G. Č.

* Master, E. Lee. See Peragallo (scenic madrigal from 'Spoon River').

MASTER OF THE QUEEN'S MUSIC.

The title of the sole remaining officer of the once extensive musical establishment of the English royal court. The post is now exclusively one of honour, and its duties are nominal.

At least as early as the reign of Henry VII (1485-1509) the royal household included sackbuts and shawms, trumpets and tabrets, as well as minstrels. Even earlier, at the coronation of Richard III in 1483, there is a hint of an official charged with the oversight of his colleagues in the person of a "marshal of the minstrels", John Gowland by name; but there is no further reference to this functionary. The number of musicians-in-ordinary increases throughout the Tudor period, and a document of 1593 mentions:

17 trumpeters, 6 sackbuts, 8 viols, 3 drums, 2 flutes, 3 virginals (the most highly paid, at £50 per annum each), 2 instrument-makers, and 8 "players of interludes".

No officer was given direction of the royal musicians, so far as can be discovered, until the reign of Charles I, when, under the date of 13 June 1626, there is extant a warrant to prepare a bill for providing liveries for a number of musicians, at the head of whom stands Nicholas Lanier, designated "master of the music". The known history of the office of Master of the King's Music therefore is reckoned from this date. The only indications of what his duties could have been are contained in certificates which he gives for the payment of cash allowances to musicians for instruments, and in orders relating to the wind players' roster of duties, which indicate that if the orders are neglected, the master of the music must make a complaint, or suffer punishment himself.

Upon the Restoration Lanier was confirmed in his appointment, and his powers are more clearly defined in a certificate "addressed to all his Majesty's musicians":

that Nicholas Lanier is sworn master of his Majesty's musick, and hath power to order and convocate the same at fitt time of practice and service as is expressed in his privy seal given him by his late Majesty when he was Prince of Wales, and that if any of them refuse to wayte at such convenient tymes of practice and service as he shall appoint, and for such instruments, voyces and musick, as he in reason shall think fitt to serve in, upon his just complaint they are to be punished.

It will be seen that this document gives ground for dating the history of the post back to the reign of James I.

Lanier died in Feb. 1666, and the office passed to Louis Grabu, who was sworn in during Nov. 1666 "with the accustomed allowances and powers as Mr. Lanier formerly hath done, with all rights and privileges as he formerly enjoyed", dating from 25 Mar. 1666. There is evidence of resistance to this appointment on the part of John Bannister and the 24 string players under his charge, in so far as a warrant of Dec. 1666 directs them to obey the directions of Grabu "both for their tyme of meeting to practise, and also for the tyme of playing in consort"; by Mar. of the next year Grabu has taken over direct and personal charge of the string band. The Master's remuneration at this time was £200 per annum, with livery. It was part of his duty to copy, or to have copied, the music required for performance at court, and he received £165:9:6 on that account for the period Nov. 1666 to Mar. 1668.

Grabu disappears from the records in 1674, and early in 1675 Nicholas Staggins was appointed as from Sept. 1674 at the same salary. He retained the post till his death in 1700. Staggins continued to have the task of getting music copied, and, though a composer of only meagre gifts, himself wrote two or three royal birthday odes. Neither in his case nor in that of his predecessors does composition seem to have been officially required of the Master. The offices of "Composer in the Private Music" and the gifts of men like Purcell and Blow no doubt met this need sufficiently. He was succeeded on 30 June 1700 by John Eccles, who was considerably more of a composer than the first three holders of the post. It is from the period of his tenure that the duty of setting birthday and New Year's Day odes seems to have become attached to it in addition to the direction of rehearsal and performances. The long series of 43 such compositions written by Boyce during his tenure of the post is still preserved in the Bodleian Library, Oxford.

The duties and character of the position as Eccles left it remained unchanged until the accession of William IV (1830), by which time the long series of official odes apparently came to an end. In the meantime the establishment of instrumentalists became standardized at 24, to which occasionally was added the post of Conductor apart from that of Master. It has been averred, however, that by the time of William Shield (Master 1817-1829) the post of "musician" was allotted to non-musicians who employed deputies, a practice which obtained even during the early part of Queen Victoria's reign. George IV, while Prince Regent, maintained a private wind band of his own under Christian Kramer, which he continued after his accession as the "King's Household Band". On Shield's death Kramer succeeded to the post of Master of the official King's Band. After Queen Victoria's marriage the Prince Consort developed the Queen's Band into a small orchestra. After the accession of Edward VII the Master of the Music and the members of the King's Band remained nominal officers of the royal household, but only occasionally provided the music for court functions. Early in the reign of George V a military band began to be employed for the Courts and the Private Band was no longer required. However, as late as 1924 the "British Imperial Calendar" lists 24 musicians as holding court appointments along with the Master. The Master of the King's Music shared the responsibility for choosing the music at the Coronation of 1937 with the organist of Westminster Abbey; and on that occasion four surviving holders of Royal Warrants as Musicians played in the orchestra. As Master of the Queen's Music Sir Arnold Bax was again responsible for the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth II in 1953.

MASTERS OF THE KING'S (QUEEN'S) MUSIC

	Appointed	Died or retired
Nicholas Lanier	1626	1666
Louis Grabu	1666	1674
Nicholas Staggins	1674	1700
John Eccles	1700	1735
Maurice Greene	1735	1755
William Boyce	1755	1779
John Stanley	1779	1786
Sir William Parsons	1786	1817
William Shield	1817	1829
Christian Kramer	1829	1834
François (Franz) Cramer	1834	1848
George Frederick Anderson (d. 1876)	1848	1870
Sir William George Cusins	1870	1893
Sir Walter Parratt, K.C.V.O.	1893	1924
Sir Edward Elgar, Bart., G.C.V.O., O.M.	1924	1934
Sir Henry Walford Davies, K.C.V.O., O.B.E.	1934	1941
Sir Arnold Edward Trevor Bax	1941	1952
Sir Arthur Bliss	1952

H. W. S.

BIBL.—CART DE LAFONTAINE, H., 'The King's Musick' (Proc. Mus. Ass., Vol. XXXVI, 1910).

MASTER PETER'S PUPPET-SHOW

(Falla). See RETABLO DE MAESE PEDRO, EL.

MASTERSINGERS. See SONG, p. 912.

MASTERSINGERS, THE (Wagner). See MEISTERSINGER VON NÜRNBERG, DIE.

MASURE.

MASUREK. } See MAZURKA.

MASZKOWSKI, Rafał (b. Lwów, 11 July 1838; d. Breslau, 14 Mar. 1909).

Polish conductor. He was educated at the Vienna and Leipzig Conservatories. He began his career as a violinist, but after an illness which affected the nerves in his left hand, he turned his attention quite successfully towards the art of conducting. He became conductor of the Imthurneum at Schaffhausen in 1865, four years later director of music at Coblenz (1869) and in 1890 conductor of the orchestral society at Breslau.

C. R. H.

MASZYŃSKI, Piotr (b. Warsaw, 3 July 1855; d. Warsaw, 1 Aug. 1934).

Polish conductor and composer. He studied with Michałowski (pianoforte), Roguski (harmony) and Noskowski (composition) at the Warsaw Conservatory and was for a time Noskowski's deputy as conductor of the Swiss choir at Constance. In 1886 he returned to Warsaw and founded the choral society Lutnia, which became one of the most important institutions for the cultivation of Polish choral music. He was professor at the Warsaw Conservatory from 1892 onwards, director and conductor of the cathedral choir from 1905 and won the State Music Award in 1934.

Besides incidental music for dramatic scenes Maszyński wrote over 100 songs for solo voice and very effective choral compositions, such as 'Kulig' ('Carnival Drive'), 'Na stawie' ('On the Lake'), 'Dwie dole' ('Two Fates'), 'Nos i tabakiera' ('The Nose and the Snuff-Box'), and two cantatas in homage to Henryk Sienkiewicz, the famous Polish novelist, and to Chopin, both for chorus and orchestra. He also wrote some instrumental music, including a Sonata for violin and pianoforte in E minor (Op. 21), and edited collections of songs, vocal trios and vocal quartets, as well as men's choruses. He published textbooks and miscellaneous volumes for use in the music schools and also translated many opera librettos into Polish.

Maszyński was one of the most energetic pioneers for the cultivation of choral music and for musical organizations in Poland.

C. R. H.

MATACHIN (Matassins). A 16th-century sword dance, also known as les buffons. The matachin seems to have been a sophisticated version of a folk dance related to the morris dance group. From the description of the dance given in Arbeau's 'Orchésographie', ff. 97-104, it is clear that the dance was a mock combat. The tune quoted by Arbeau (and used by Peter Warlock in the 'Capriol' Suite):

seems to have been peculiar to the dance; a number of contemporary settings of it exist, both in English and French collections. The dance itself was evidently in wide use on the English stage towards the end of the 16th century, together with many other dances of popular origin. Some details may be found in Reyher's 'Les Masques anglais'.

R. T. D.

MATELART (Matelarto), Jan (Giovanni) (b. ?; d. Rome, c. 1600).

Flemish lutenist and composer. Nothing is known of his early life and musical education.

¹ Boyce carried out the duties from 1755, but was not officially sworn in until 1757.

He went to settle in Rome some time before 1559, when his 'Intavolatura de leuto' appeared there, on the title-page of which he is described as fiamengo. In 1562 a madrigal of his for 4 voices was published by Scotto and in 1570 he is mentioned as maestro di cappella of the Roman church of San Lorenzo in Damaso. In 1596 he is still named as a chapel master there, on the title page of 'Responsoria, Antiphonae et Hymni in processionibus per annum quaternis et quinis vocibus concinenda'. He also wrote other church music. E. B.

MATELOTTE. A Dutch sailors' dance somewhat similar to the English hornpipe. The dancers wore wooden shoes, and their arms were interlaced behind their backs. The music of the Matelotte consists of two parts in 2-4 time and is remarkable for its short decided rhythm. There is a sabot dance in Lortzing's 'Zar und Zimmermann', but it is not a true Matelotte, being written in waltz time. Schubert, 'Die Tanzmusik' (Leipzig, 1867) gives an example of the time.

W. B. S.

MATERNA, Amalie (b. St. Georgen, Styria, 10 July 1844; d. Vienna, 18 Jan. 1918).

Austrian soprano singer. Her father was a schoolmaster at St. Georgen. Her first stage appearance was made at the Thalia-Theater, Graz, about 1864. She married soon afterwards Karl Friedrich, a popular German actor, and together with him was engaged at the suburban Karlstheater in Vienna, where she sang for some time in operetta. But her qualifications for serious opera could not long remain undiscovered, and in 1869 she made her début at the Imperial Opera as Selika in Meyerbeer's 'Africaine', with signal success, at once winning for herself a high position among opera singers of the German school. With a soprano voice of unusual volume, compass and sustaining-power, a fine stage presence and much musical and dramatic intelligence Materna left nothing to be desired in the great Wagner parts. At the Wagner Festival at Bayreuth in 1876, on the production of the 'Ring', she first earned a world-wide reputation by her magnificent impersonation of Brünnhilde. She sang in England with great success at the Wagner concerts at the Albert Hall in 1877. She was the first exponent of the part of Kundry in 'Parsifal', on 28 July 1882, at Bayreuth, and she retired on 23 Apr. 1897. B. T.

MATHEW, Richard (b. ?; d. ?).

English 17th-century lutenist and author. He wrote a book entitled 'The Lutes Apology for her Excellency', printed by Thomas Harper for Livewell Chapman at the Crowne in Popeshead Alley, London, 1652. Oblong quarto. Introduction and music in tablature for the French lute (i.e. lute with modified tuning). The unique copy is in possession of the County Records Committee of the County Council of Bedfordshire at the Shire Hall, Bedford. G. H. (ii).

Mathews, Charles, jun. See Vestris (3, wife).

MATHIAS, Georges (Amédée Saint-Claire) (b. Paris, 14 Oct. 1826; d. Paris, 14 Oct. 1910).

French pianist and composer. He studied at the Paris Conservatoire and was also a private pupil of Kalkbrenner and Chopin. He was professor of the pianoforte at the Conservatoire for over thirty years, from 1862 to 1893. His compositions include choral works, a Symphony, 2 overtures, 2 pianoforte Concertos, 5 pieces for pianoforte and string instruments, 6 Trios for violin, cello and pianoforte, numerous pianoforte pieces and studies, songs, etc. E. B.

MATHIESON, Muir (b. Stirling, 24 Jan. 1911).

Scottish conductor. He was educated at Stirling High School, where he conducted the Stirling Boys' Orchestra at the age of thirteen, and at the R.C.M. in London, having won both the Boulton and the Leverhulme scholarships. In 1931 he became assistant Music Director to Sir Alexander Korda and for five years during the second world war, from 1940 to 1945, he was Music Director to the Government Navy, Army and Air Force Film Units. After the war he became Music Director to the J. Arthur Rank Organization and he has been responsible for the music of a number of famous films, such as 'Odd Man Out' and 'The Woman in the Hall'. He is well known as a conductor and has given concerts and broadcasts with most of the famous orchestras in Great Britain, performing in London at the Albert Hall and in the provinces. He has also conducted opera and operetta and made a successful tour of Canada conducting ballet. M. K. W.

MATHIEU, Émile (Louis Victor) (b. Lille, 16 Oct. 1844; d. Ghent, 20 Aug. 1932).

Belgian conductor, teacher and composer. He was the son of Belgian musical parents, his father having been eminent as a singer and as director of the theatre at Antwerp, while his mother was a professor of singing in the Académie des Beaux-Arts at Louvain. Mathieu was intended for medicine, but after the death of his parents he devoted himself to music and began his studies early at the Brussels Conservatoire. In 1869 he obtained the second Belgian Prix de Rome with the cantata 'La Mort du Tasse', which was performed four years later in Brussels, and in 1871 he won the same prize again. He conducted the Châtelet orchestra in Paris from 1871 to 1875 and soon afterwards was appointed to teach harmony at the Louvain Académie de Musique, of which he became director in 1881. In 1896 he removed to Ghent, being appointed director of the Conservatory there in succession to Adolphe Samuel. He held this post until 1924.

Mathieu's compositions include the comic operas 'L'Échange' (Liège, 1863), 'George Dandin' (after Molière, Brussels, 1877) and 'La Bernoise' (lib. by Lucien Solvay; Brussels, 1880); serious operas 'Richilde' (Brussels, Théâtre de la Monnaie, 1888¹) and 'L'Enfance de Roland' (1895); ballet 'Fumeurs de Kiff'; 'Te Deum' for solo voices, chorus & orch.; cantatas 'La Dernière Nuit de Faust', 'Le Songe de Colomb', 'Debout, peuple', 'Les Bois'; descriptive poems for solo voices, chorus & orch., 'Le Hoyoux', 'Freyhir' and 'Le Sorbier'; symph. poems 'Noces féodales', 'Le Lac', 'Sous bois'; vn. Concerto; songs, &c.

M. K., adds.

MATHIS DER MALER. Opera in 7 scenes by Hildemith. Libretto by the composer, based on Matthias Grunewald's altarpiece. Prod. Zürich, 28 May 1938 1st perf. in Britain, Edinburgh Festival, 29 Aug. 1952.

MATILDA OF HUNGARY (Opera). See WALLACE.

MATILDE DI SHABRAN (Opera). See ROSSINI.

MATIN, LE. The title of the first of a group of 3 symphonies by Haydn (Nos. 6-8), in D major, composed about 1761. The others are 'Le Midi', in C major, and 'Le Soir et la tempête', in G major.

MATINS (Lat. matutinae; officium matutinum). The first division of the Canonical Hours in the Roman liturgy. It contains the great responds of the Gregorian repertory and a large portion also of the antiphons of that collection. W. H. F.

See also Gregorian Music.

MATINSKY, Mikhail (b. ?; d. ?).

Russian 18th-19th-century author and composer. He was a serf whom his master liberated and sent to Italy to cultivate his innate musical gifts. He wrote the libretto of an opera, 'The Renaissance', which was set to music by Fomin (1777), and in 1787 composed the opera 'The St. Petersburg Bazaar', embodying the first attempt to create a national atmosphere in Russian opera. It was produced with great success in 1779 in St. Petersburg and in 1783 at Moscow. The score has reached us only in a shortened and revised form published in 1792; the reviser was Pashkevich. M. D. C.

MÁTRAY², Gábor (i.e. Gabriel) (b. Nágykáta, 23 Nov. 1797; d. Budapest, 17 July 1875).

Hungarian critic, musicologist and composer. His father, Joseph Rothkrepf, a schoolmaster and regens chori, was the first to give him some instruction in music. The family moved to Pest, presumably in 1804, where Mátray continued his secondary and university education. His early interest in music is attested by a contemporary memoir which speaks of his accomplishments on the keyboard at an early age. He was taught music at the Piarist Music School and in 1809 made his first attempts at composition, writing a slow and fast movement in the Hungarian style for strings. In 1812 he supplied the music to a Hungarian version of 'The Siege of Belgrade', which was followed by a number of similar works, and in 1815 composed a 'Veni, sancte Spiritus' for voices and orchestra. Yet he confessed that he did not make much progress in composition. At the same time he was studying law, was sworn notary in 1817 and became a barrister in 1832.

Meanwhile Mátray was employed as tutor to the family of Baron Prónay and later to that of Count Széchenyi in Vienna, during which time he finished his musical education and began his researches into musical history. Having relinquished his post, he returned to Pest in Nov. 1830, and in 1833 he started a literary periodical, 'Regélő', with an associate journal, 'Honművész', devoted to art, music and theatre, which he edited until 1841. In Nov. of the same year he was elected corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. On 26 July 1837 he was appointed adviser on music to the National Theatre, which had opened its doors a few months before. Although he kept this post for only five months, he produced a detailed memorandum on the organization of the musical department. It was in this year that he Magyarized his name. In 1837 he was elected principal of a newly established singing-school that was to become the National Conservatory later on. In 1846 he was appointed librarian of the Hungarian National Museum.

During these and the following years Mátray displayed tremendous activity: in addition to his duties at the museum, he devoted untiring attention to the affairs of the Pest-budai Hangászegyesület, of which he was secretary, and its Conservatory, to which he was strongly attached. He also began to publish the results of his researches and his folk-music collection. His enterprising spirit never flagged: he urged the establishment of a professorship of declamation at the National Conservatory, and after its inauguration it remained under his personal supervision until his death.

Mátray, the "father of Hungarian musicology", was one of the most important figures in the earlier 19th-century Hungarian musical life. He was the first to apply the principles of systematic historical inquiry to the development of Hungarian music and his merits are in no way diminished by the more accurate results of subsequent investigations based on modern methods. His 'General History of Music', claimed to be the first of its kind in the Hungarian language, is a compilation, but the section devoted to Hungarian music, the earliest description of the country's musical development, based partly on original research and partly on Josef Krüchten's German essay on the subject¹, will always remain a source material whose documentary value no student of Hungarian music can afford to overlook. His study on the music of the gypsies in Hungary was utilized by Liszt in his 'Des Bohémiens et de leur musique en Hongrie' (Paris, 1859). Mátray wrote many valuable essays on contemporary Hungarian and foreign musicians, among which the biography of the famous János Bihari and Beethoven's Hungarian connections deserve mention. His pioneering work in publishing some of the monumenta of Hungarian music, e.g. 'Tunes of 16th-Century Minstrels', etc., is perhaps even more important. His deciphering of their notation proved to be inaccurate in some details in the light of modern research, but this shortcoming is outweighed by his understanding of their historical value. Much the same may be said of his folk-music publications: he did not distinguish between genuine folk (i.e. peasant) music and the popularized "art" music of his time. Szabolcsi² is inclined to believe that he purposely refrained from discriminating between the two categories in order to preserve the unified physiognomy of the emerging Hungarian musical style. This would also explain his accompaniments in the prevailing "western" manner, incongruous with the musical style of the tunes. He was among the first to collect and publish the surviving material, but unfortunately only three of several projected volumes of his 'Complete Collection of Hungarian Folksongs' appeared in print: his manuscript notes and transcripts for the further volumes seem to be lost.

¹ Rose Caron sang the title-part.

² Originally Rothkrepf (also spelt Róthkrepf).

Completeness is not claimed for the catalogue given below. The music is not subdivided into categories, but an attempt is made to distinguish between original compositions and folksong publications. Four plays with music are lost. Of his writings only some of those are listed which bear on Hungarian music or musicians.

¹ 'Musikwesen in Ungarn', 'Caccilia', Vol. V, 20, Mainz, 1826.

² Article, 'Magyar zene' ('Hungarian Music') in 'Zenei Lexikon' (Budapest, 1931).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

MUSIC

- 'Lassu és friss' (Andante and Allegro) for stgs. (1809), lost.
- Chorus for 'Árpád ébredése' (Mihály Vorösmarty) for the opening of the National Theatre, Pest (1837).
- 'Veni, sancte Spiritus' for chorus and (?) orch. or pf. (1815).
- Tutor for the Guitar (after Bartolozzi) (1816).
- 'Was betrübst du dich meine Seele' (Psalm XXIV) for voice & pf. (1819).
- 'A gólya' ('The Stork') (András Fáy) for chorus & pf. (1827).
- 'Huszárdal' ('Hussar Song') (Gábor Dobrentei) for chorus & pf. (1829).
- 'A magyar dalos fortepiano mellé alkalmazott énekei' ('5 Songs for Voice & Pf. for the Hungarian Singer') (?) 1827-29).
- 'Elet ropte' ('Flight of Life') (Sándor Kisfaludy) for men's chorus & pf. (1829).
- 'A nemzeti dalnok énekes gyűjteménye . . .' ('Song Collection of the National Songster'), 2 vols. (1834-35).
- 'Dicsértessék a Jézus Krisztus' ('Laudetur Jesus Christus') for voice & pf. (1855).
- 'Laudate Dominum' for chorus & pf.
- 'Ave, verum corpus' for chorus.
- 'Altató-dal' ('Lullaby' [from a French original]) for women's chorus & pf.
- 'Ivódal' ('Drinking-Song') (Szent-miklós) for chorus & pf. (1827).
- 'A rózsá' ('The Rose') (S. Kisfaludy) for chorus (1829).
- 'Szózat' ('Appeal') (Vorösmarty) for voice & orch.
- 'Te Deum' for chorus & pf. (1842).
- 'Das Vaterland' (Károly Széchenyi) for chorus & pf.
- 21 Hungarian Songs partly for voice & pf., partly for chorus.
- Széchenyi's Verbunkos for orch.
- German Dances (1829).
- Also c. 10-15 songs (1826-30).

FOLK MUSIC PUBLICATIONS

- 'Válogatott magyar nóták gyűjteménye' ('Collection of Selected Hungarian Tunes'), 10 vols. (Vienna, 1826, 1827, 1829), folksong and dance arrangements.
- 'Magyar nóták fortepianóra' ('Hungarian Tunes for the Clavier') (1831-32), continuation of the above.
- 'Pesti tárogató: Magyar nóták gyűjteménye' ('Tárogató of Pest: Collection of Hungarian Tunes'), 3 vols. (Pest, 1834-36).
- 'Magyar népdalok egyetemes gyűjteménye' ('Complete Collection of Hungarian Folksongs'), 3 vols. (Pest, 1852, 1854, 1858).

LITERARY WORKS

- 'Magyar nóták, Csermáktól' ('Hungarian Tunes by Csermák') ('Hasznos Mulsátságok', Pest, 1824, I, 163).
- 'Magyar nóták' ('Hungarian Tunes') (ibid., p. 191).
- 'Magyar muzsikának új példái' ('New Examples of Hungarian Music') (ibid., p. 380).
- 'Magyar nóták' ('Hungarian Tunes') (ibid., II, 21).
- 'Nemzeti muzsika' ('National Music') (ibid., p. 289).
- 'A muzsikának közönséges története' ('General History of Music') ('Tudományos Gyűjtemény', Vol. XII, 6, 10; XIII, 2, 3; XIV, 4; XVI, 7, 8, Pest, 1828-32).
- 'Liszt Ferenc' ('Honművész', Pest, 1839, Vol. I).
- 'A magyar népdalok kitünőbb sajátosságairól' ('Of the More Apparent Characteristics of Hungarian Folksongs') ('Magyar Akadémiai Értesítő', Vol. XII, 6, Pest, 1852).
- 'Bihari János magyar népzeneész életrajza' ('Biography of János Bihari, Hungarian "Folk-Musician"') ('Magyar és Erdélyország Képekben', ed. Kubinyi & Vahot, Vol. II, Pest, 1854).
- 'A magyar zene és a magyar cigányok zenéje' ('Hungarian Music and the Music of the Hungarian Gypsies') (ibid., Vol. IV, Pest, 1854).
- 'Bihari János' ('Napkelet', Pest, 1858).

J. S. W.

BIBL.—BARTALUS, ISTVÁN, 'Emlékezés Mátray Gábor felett' ('Memorial Address about Gabriel Mátray') (publ. Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Vol. VI, 7, Budapest, 1877).

MAJOR, ERVIN, 'Mátray Gábor és a Nemzeti Zenedák megszervezése' ('Gabriel Mátray and the Organization of the National Conservatory') (Budapest, 1948).

MATREGIAN. See NASCO.

MATRIMONIO PER CONCORSO, IL (Opera). See JOMMELLI.

MATRIMONIO SEGRETO, IL ('The Clandestine Marriage'). Opera in 2 acts by Cimarosa. Libretto by Giovanni Bertati, based on the comedy by George Colman, sen., and David Garrick. Produced Vienna, Burg Theatre (in Italian), 7 Feb. 1792. 1st perf. abroad, Prague (in Italian), 1792, or Leipzig (in Italian), 20 June 1792. 1st in England, London (in Italian), 11 Jan. 1794. 1st in U.S.A., New York (in Italian), 4 Jan. 1834.

MATROGIAN. See NASCO.

MATSUDAIRA, Yoritsune. See JAPANESE MUSIC (MODERN).

Matsys, Quinten. See Ivory (opera on). Moratelli (do.). Wambach (do.).

MATTEL, Filippo. See AMADEI.

MATTEL, Stanislaw (b. Bologna, 10 Feb. 1750; d. Bologna, 12 May 1825).

Italian composer and teacher. Though of humble parentage (his father was a locksmith), he was sent to the Latin school. Having been present accidentally at a service in the Minorite monastery, he was so enchanted with the music that he became a constant attendant and thus attracted the notice of Padre Martini, by whose advice he entered upon his noviciate. Master and pupil became tenderly attached, and as soon as Mattei had been ordained priest he became Martini's confessor and remained with him till his death. He acted as Martini's deputy from 1770 and succeeded him as maestro di cappella at the church of San Francesco. From 1776 his compositions were produced in the service. On the suppression of the monasteries in 1798 he went to live with his aged mother and began an active career as a teacher. From this time he was known as the Abbate Mattei. Later he became maestro di cappella of San Petronio at Bologna and professor of counterpoint at the Liceo from its foundation in 1804.

Among Mattei's pupils were Rossini, Morlacchi, Donizetti, Perotti, Robuschi, Palmerini, Bertolotti, Tadolini, Tesei and Pilotti, who succeeded him at San Petronio. He lived in complete retirement, accessible only to his pupils. He was president of the Accademia Filarmonica of Bologna in 1790 and 1794, and was a member of the Académie and the Institut of France (24 Jan. 1824). He had a thorough practical acquaintance with the old traditions, as may be seen by his 'Prattica d' accompagnamento sopra bassi numerati', 3 vols. (Bologna, 1788, 1829, 1830), which consists mainly of well-chosen examples, with a few rules.

The libraries of San Giorgio and the Minorite convent in Bologna contain most of Mattei's compositions, including eight masses, much church music, and the scores of an intermezzo,

'La bottega del libraio', and of a Passion performed in 1792. A fugue, 'Amen saecula saeculorum' for 4 voices, in manuscript, is in the Euing Collection, Glasgow University.

F. G., adds.

Bibl.—CANUTI, FILIPPO, 'Vita di Stanislaw Mattei' (Bologna, 1829), with portrait.

MATTEIS, Nicholas (b. ?; d. Shrewsbury, c. 1749).

English violinist of Italian descent. He was a pupil of his father, Nicola Matteis and became an excellent player. He went to Germany and lived for some time in Vienna, being a member of the court orchestra there from 1700, but by 1737 he had returned to England. He settled at Shrewsbury as a teacher of languages as well as of the violin, where Burney learned French and the violin of him.¹

W. H. H.

MATTEIS, Nicola (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 17th-century violinist and composer, father of the preceding. He went to England about 1672. The earliest notice of him is found in Evelyn's 'Diary' under date of 19 Nov. 1674:

I heard that stupendous violin, Signor Nicholao (with other rare musicians), whom I never heard mortal man exceed on that instrument. He had a stroke so sweet, and made it speak like the voice of a man, and, when he pleased, like a concert of several instruments. He did wonders upon a note, and was an excellent composer. Here was also that rare lutanist, Dr. Wallgrave, but nothing approached the violin in Nicholao's hand. He played such ravishing things as astonished us all.

Roger North also speaks very highly of his abilities.² When he first arrived in England he exhibited many singularities of conduct which he afterwards abandoned. He published in London without date (before 1688): Arie, preludij, alemande, sarabande, etc., per il violino. Libro primo.

Altre Arie, etc., più difficili e studiose per il violino. Libro secondo.

Ayres for the Violin, to wit, Preludes, Fuges, Alemands, Sarabands, Courants, Giges, Fancies, Divisions, and likewise other Passages, Introductions, and Fuges for Single and Double stops with divisions somewhat more artificial for the Emproving of the Hand upon the Basse-Viol or Harpsichord. The Third and Fourth Books.

This last has the date 1685 concealed in the ornamentations of the title-page; other books of the series are dated 1687. The books are in oblong octavo, engraved on copper-plates by T. Greenhill. A set was sold at the Taphouse sale in 1905.

Matteis was likewise the author of

The False Consonances of Musick, or, Instructions for playing a true Base upon the Guitarre, with Choice Examples and clear Directions to enable any man in a short time to play all Muscical Ayres. A great help likewise to those that would play exactly upon the Harpsichord, Lute, or Base-Violi, shewing the delicacy of all Accords, and how to apply them in their proper places. In four parts.

Even in North's time this had become scarce, and it is now excessively rare.

¹ See Burney, History, III, 516; modern ed. II, 407.

² 'Memoirs of Musick.' See note on p. 122 of Rimbauld's edition.

In 1696 Matteis composed an Ode on St. Cecilia's Day for the then annual celebration in London, and he was also one of the stewards of a Cecilian celebration at Oxford. Another and lesser-known work by the same composer is:

A Collection of New Songs set by Mons. Nicola Matteis, made purposely for the use of his Scholars: Fairly engraven on Copper plates.

It consists of two books, 1696, folio (Walsh and Hare). A copy of this was sold at Rimbault's sale. With 'Symphonies for two flutes by a person of quality, fairly engraved on copper plates' these songs by Matteis are advertised by Walsh and Hare in the 'London Gazette' for 11 May 1696. A song by him is included in a collection of 'Twelve New Songs', published in 1699. According to North:

he fell into such credit and employment that he took a great house, and after the manner of his country lived luxuriously, which brought diseases upon him of which he died.

Matteis is said to have been the inventor of the half-shift, but this is claimed also for others.

W. H. H., rev. F. K.

BIBL.—NETTL, PAUL, 'An English Musician at the Court of Charles VI in Vienna' (M.Q., XXVIII, 1942, p. 318).

MATTERS, Arnold (b. Adelaide, 11 Apr. 1904).

Australian baritone singer. He received his musical education at the Elder Conservatory, Adelaide. In 1929 he went to England and studied at the Webber-Douglas School of Opera and Drama, and with Clive Carey. For five years he sang in the choir at Westminster Abbey. He joined the Vic-Wells Opera Company in 1932, making his first appearance as Valentine in 'Faust'. He developed into a first-rate operatic singer, combining a fine voice with an admirable histrionic art. He played with success a wide variety of parts, including Figaro, Don Juan, Hans Sachs, Wotan in 'The Valkyrie' and Falstaff (Verdi). Even where, as in 'The Mastersingers', for instance, his voice may lack the ideal richness of quality, his excellent acting has enabled him to give individual character to his impersonations. His Falstaff in particular is a very ripe and humorous study.

In 1935 Matters sang the part of the Herald in 'Lohengrin' at Covent Garden during the "grand" season, and his incisive voice and fine bearing made a memorable effect in what is usually a minor part. He has also sung in the English performances at Covent Garden, where he appeared with success as Kurwenal in 1938 and returned as Papageno in 1948. At Sadler's Wells he also reappeared after the second world war and added to his repertory the title-part of Verdi's 'Simone Boccanegra'. In 1951 he created the principal part in Vaughan Williams's 'Pilgrim's Progress' at Covent Garden. D. H. (ii).

MATTHAEI, Karl (b. Olten, 23 Apr. 1897).

Swiss organist. He studied at the Basel Conservatory under Hans Huber, Ernst Levy and Adolf Hamm, gaining the pianoforte and organ diplomas, and from 1920 for three years with Straube at Leipzig. After a short time as church organist at Wädenswil (Canton Zürich) he became in 1925 organist and harpsichordist at the College of Music at Winterthur, as well as director and organ professor at the Music School there. In 1938 followed his appointment as organist to the Winterthur City Church.

His numerous concert tours in Europe and America have earned for Matthaei an international reputation as an interpreter of Bach as well as of modern organ works. He has also done notable work as an editor of old organ music, including editions of Pachelbel, Michael Praetorius, Froberger, J. G. Walter, Buxtehude (solo cantatas) and other organ masters. He has written books and articles on organ playing, including 'Vom Orgelspiel' (Leipzig, 1936). In 1950, at the invitation of the International Bach Society, he edited the 'Bach-Gedenkschrift' published at Zurich.

K. V. F.

MATTHAY, Tobias (b. London, 19 Feb. 1858; d. High Marley nr. Haslemere, Surrey, 15 Dec. 1945).

English pianist, teacher and composer of German descent. His parents came from northern Germany; his father was a naturalized British subject. He entered the R.A.M. in London in 1871, where he won the Sterndale Bennett scholarship. In 1876 he became a sub-professor of the pianoforte there and in 1880 full professor, and he maintained his connection with the R.A.M. until 1925, when he left it to continue his work in his own school founded in 1900. There he became internationally famous as teacher of the pianoforte with a method that was largely his own and laid great stress on touch controlled by weight and relaxation. His many publications on technique and psychology in association, embodying the sum of his thinking, have become known as the "Matthay System". 'The Act of Touch' (1903), in which he made a close analysis of the pianist's touch, was the first important enunciation of his views. 'The First Principles of Pianoforte Playing', 'Relaxation Studies', 'Method in Teaching' and 'Musical Interpretation' all deal with various aspects of the application of the problem with which 'The Act of Touch' grapples.

Matthay composed a considerable amount of pianoforte music, but it is of slight importance in comparison with his educational work. In 1893 he married Jessie, youngest daughter of David Kennedy and a sister of Marjorie Kennedy-Fraser. Mrs. Tobias Matthay was well known as a reciter. She died at High Marley near Haslemere on 14 Apr. 1937.

H. C. C.

BIBL.—MATTHAY, JESSIE HENDERSON, 'The Life and Work of Tobias Matthay' (London, 1945).

See also Kennedy (David, father-in-law).

MATTHESON, Johann (b. Hamburg, 28 Sept. 1681; d. Hamburg, 17 Apr. 1764).

German organist, harpsichordist, singer and composer. He was the son of a clerk of excise. As a child he showed striking symptoms of versatility, which his parents carefully cultivated. Besides the ordinary education he studied music, and at the age of nine he could play the harpsichord and organ, sing and compose. He was a good classic and a proficient in modern languages, a student of law and political science, a fine player both on harpsichord and organ, and thoroughly skilled in theory, an elegant dancer, a master of fence and a cultivated man of the world. The first step in his changeful career was his appearance in 1696 as a singer (of female parts) in the Hamburg opera, then in its most flourishing condition. In 1699 he produced his first opera, 'Die Pleyaden'; in another, 'Cleopatra', to a libretto by Friedrich Christian Feustking¹, produced on 20 Oct. 1704, he took the part of Antony, and after singing his part on the stage would sit down at the harpsichord to conduct the orchestra. To this period belongs his acquaintance and the famous duel with Handel, who arrived at Hamburg in 1703. Mattheson tells us that he recognized Handel's genius immediately, that they became at once attached and that their friendship continued, with occasional breaks caused by Mattheson's vanity, during the whole time of Handel's stay in Hamburg (1709). Their quarrel arose from Handel's refusal to give up his place at the harpsichord to Mattheson at a performance of 'Cleopatra' on 5 Dec. 1704. Mattheson claims to have done Handel an important service by introducing him to the musical world of Hamburg, at that time very celebrated; but he acknowledges that he picked up from him many a "contrapuntal device". In 1703 he went with Handel to Lübeck in order to see whether the post of organist, which he had been offered by the town in succession to Buxtehude, were to his liking. The offer was not accepted by Mattheson, he feeling unable to comply with one clause in the agreement, which stipulated that the new organist should marry Buxtehude's daughter.

In 1704 he was invited to Holland as organist at Haarlem, but refused. Handel's 'Nero' (1705) was the last opera in which Mattheson appeared; he then retired from the stage and declined more than one organist's post which was offered to him. He became tutor to the son of the English envoy, Sir Cyrill Wych, and in 1706 was made secretary of legation. His post was one of labour and responsibility, but he still continued to teach, conduct, compose and write on musical subjects. The opera 'Henrico IV'², to a libretto by Johann Joachim Hoc, was produced on 9 Feb. 1711 and was sufficiently successful for a selection of airs from it to be published that year.

In 1712, on the death of Wych, Mattheson filled the post of English Resident in Lower Saxony until Wych's son, Mattheson's old pupil, was appointed, Mattheson continuing in the post of secretary. In 1715 he was appointed cantor and canon of Hamburg Cathedral, and he took an active part in the development of the church cantata, so soon after carried to its highest pitch by J. S. Bach. This was the result of an attempt, made more particularly by the Hamburg composers, to vary the monotony of congregational singing by the introduction of airs, duets, choruses, etc., and was considered by the orthodox an impious and sacrilegious innovation. Mattheson supported this "adapted dramatic" style, as it was called, both as a composer and as a pamphleteer; he even ventured on a further innovation by introducing female singers into church.

In 1719 he received from the Duke of Holstein the title of court Kapellmeister. In 1728 he was attacked with deafness, which obliged him to resign his post at the Cathedral. Thenceforward he occupied himself chiefly with writing. He is said to have resolved to publish a work for every year of his life, and this aim he more than accomplished, for when he died at eighty-three his printed literary works amounted to eighty-eight, besides a still larger number of completed manuscripts.

Mattheson composed twenty-four oratorios and cantatas, eight operas, sonatas for flute and violin, suites for clavier, arias and occasional pieces for weddings, funerals, etc. His vocal music is overburdened with declamatory passages—a fault easily explained by his own experience on the stage, but one which is often detrimental and must have been very incongruous in church music.

His books are of far greater value than his compositions. In these, notwithstanding a peculiar self-satisfied loquacity, he shows himself a ready and skilful champion for earnestness and dignity in art, for progress and for solidity of attainment in the practical part of music. In both branches, theoretical and practical, he attacked and demolished much that was antiquated, furnishing at the same time a great deal that was new and instructive, and bequeathing to posterity a mine of historical material. He also found time for much other literary work, especially translations (chiefly from English works on politics and jurisprudence), and even translated a small treatise on tobacco. This extraordinary versatility and his untiring industry go far to redeem the vanity which animated his character and actions and continually shows itself in his writings. His autobiography in the 'Ehrenforte' contains an amusingly egotistical description of his manifold labours. His more important books are standard sources of information on the state of music at that period, especially at Hamburg. These are 'Das neu eröffnete Orchestre' (1713), followed by 'Das beschützte Orchestre' and 'Das forschende Orchestre' (1717 and 1721), 'Critica musica' (1722-25), 'Der musikalische Patriot' (1728) and the 'Grundlage einer Ehrenforte' (1740)¹, a collection of biographies of contemporary musicians. The last two are the most important. His theoretical works are the 'Exemplarische Organisten Probe' (1719), republished in 1731 as the 'Grosse Generalbasschule', the 'Kleine Generalbasschule' (1735), the 'Kern melodischer Wissenschaft' (1737) and finally 'Der vollkommene Capellmeister' (1739), perhaps his most valuable work. As a controversial writer he was wanting in temper; his 'Ephorus Göttingensis' (1727), directed against Professor Joachim Meyer of Göttingen on the church cantata question, is the only work of that class worth specifying.

¹ The full title was 'Die betrogene Staats-Liebe, oder Die unglückselige Cleopatra, Königin von Egypten'. The score is extant.

² Full title 'Die geheimen Begebenheiten Henrico IV, Königs von Castilien und Leon, oder Die getheilte Liebe'.

A. M., rev. S. G., adds.

BIBL.—CANNON, BECKMAN G., 'Johann Mattheson: Spectator in Music' (New Haven, Conn. & London, 1947).

HABERL, F. X., 'Johann Mattheson' (Ratisbon, 1885). MEINARDUS, L., 'Mattheson und seine Verdienste um die deutsche Tonkunst' (Leipzig, 1879).

See also Accidentals. Aiguino (ref.). Bach (J. S., 32), passim. Bach (C. P. E., 34). Bronner (collab.). Criticism. Murschhauser (controversy with). Stricker (ded. of 'Beschützte Orchestre' to S.).

MATTHEWS, Appleby. See BIRMINGHAM. Matthews, Bertram P. See Elgar ('Beau Brummel', incid. m.).

MATTHEWS, Denis (b. Coventry, 27 Feb. 1919).

English pianist. He was educated at Warwick School and studied music at the R.A.M. in London from 1935 to 1940. There he held the Thalberg scholarship for two years and the Blumenthal scholarship for a further three years. He was a pupil of Harold Craxton for pianoforte and of William Alwyn for composition, and while still a student had some of his compositions published. He now, however, devotes all his time to performing. His first appearances in London were at a

¹ Modern edition by Max Schneider (Berlin, 1910).

Promenade Concert in Aug. 1939 and at the National Gallery in the following Nov. In 1940-46 he served in the R.A.F., and since then he has played with most of the leading orchestras in Britain, both in London and in the provinces, and he has frequently broadcast. In 1945 he played twice for the Royal Philharmonic Society.

Matthews has a wide repertory, but he specializes in the classics. He is a particularly stylish Mozart player and his performance of such a work as Beethoven's G major Concerto is distinguished by his sureness of touch and perfect co-operation with the orchestra. He is also an excellent chamber-music player, where again his perception of the music as a whole stands him in good stead. In 1945 he gave a recital at the National Gallery with Howard Ferguson, in which their performance of some of the Mozart four-hand works were distinguished by delicacy and grace of execution.

M. K. W.

MATTHEWS, Richard. See MATHEW.

MATTHEWS, Thomas (b. Birkenhead, 9 May 1907).

English violinist. He studied the violin with Albert Sammons in London and with Carl Flesch in Germany. When he was sixteen years old he joined the Hallé Orchestra under Sir Hamilton Harty for eight years, and in 1939 he was leader of the Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra. From 1940 to 1941 he was leader of the London Philharmonic Orchestra and in 1949 he led the Southern Philharmonic. In 1946-50 he was a professor at the Manchester R.C.M., and he is now a professor at the R.A.M. in London and leader of the Royal Opera House Orchestra, Covent Garden. His début as a soloist was in 1936 and since then he has toured in Italy, Scandinavia, Canada, Australia and elsewhere. He gave the first performance of Britten's violin Concerto in 1941 at Queen's Hall. He is married to the pianist Eileen Ralf.

M. K. W.

Matthisson, Friedrich von. See Beethoven (5 songs, incl. 'Adelaide', & canon). Schroter (1, songs). Schubert (3 partsongs, 26 songs). Weber (12, song). Wolf (H., song).

MATTINATA (Ital.). A morning song, the equivalent of the French aubade and the Spanish alborada, and the opposite of the serenata.

MATUROVÁ, Ružena (b. Prague, 2 Sept. 1869; d. Prague, 25 Feb. 1938).

Czech soprano singer. When she was seventeen she began to train her voice under experienced teachers, giving the final polish to her technique and expressive talent under M. Löwe-Destinn, the well-known teacher of Destinová. At first she sang in the German theatres at Teplice (formerly Teplitz-Schönbau) and in 1890-92 at Wiesbaden under Weingartner. She appeared for the first time in the Prague National Theatre as a guest on 19 Aug. 1892, and in the following year she became a permanent member of this theatre. She remained there until 1910, repeatedly refusing several flattering invitations from abroad, particularly from the Court Opera in Vienna.

Maturová began her splendid career as a lyrical singer, but she soon turned to dramatic parts. Her powerful voice, particularly rich in colour, refined in technique and mastered with a fine sense of style as well as a commanding dramatic gift, won for her an outstanding position in Czech operatic art. The foremost place in her extraordinarily wide repertory was held by the principal parts in the works of Smetana and Dvořák. It was particularly in the title-part of the former's 'Libuše' that she was unanimously recognized as the best of all interpreters. After her untimely retirement she concentrated on a successful teaching career.

G. Č.

BIBL.—REKTORYS, A., 'Růžena Maturová' (Prague, 1936).

MATZENAUER, Margarete (b. Temesvár, 1 June 1881).

Hungarian soprano singer. She was educated at Hanover and studied singing under various teachers in Berlin. She made her début in 1901, as Fatima in Weber's 'Oberon', at the Municipal Theatre of Strasbourg, where she remained until 1904. She was next engaged for the Court Theatre at Munich, where she sang for seven years and by degrees established her reputation as an artist of rare ability. Possessing a voice of exceptional range, richness and power (admirably trained by Fritz Emerich in the school of Manuel Garcia) and endowed with unusual dramatic intelligence and versatility, she acquired a repertory which practically covered the whole field of modern opera. She excelled alike in soprano and mezzo-soprano parts, proving herself equally at home, for example, as Aida and Amneris, Azuccena and Leonora, Amelia and Ulrica, Ortrud and Venus, Brünnhilde and Erda. No part came amiss to her, since her choice was always tempered by discretion, her command of character and tessitura correctly judged. She sang frequently at Bayreuth, but her European career practically closed from the season (1911-12) when she first appeared at the Metropolitan Opera House, won the undivided suffrages of the American public and settled down permanently in New York. She sang in London, at Covent Garden, during the summer of 1914, making her début there as Kundry and appearing also as Ortrud; but she was not again heard in England. She was the recipient of many German decorations, including the Saxe-Coburg medal for Art and Science.

H. K.

Mauclair, Camille. See Bloch (4 songs). Chausson (3 songs). Schmitt (F., song).

MAUCOTEL. French family of violin makers.

(1) Charles Maucotel (b. Mirecourt, Lorraine, 1807; d. London, 1860). He was a pupil of Bloise Mast of Mirecourt, but went to Paris in 1834 and studied further under Gand, after which, in 1850, he established himself in London.

(2) Adolphe Maucotel (b. Mirecourt, 1820; d. Paris, 1858), brother of the preceding. He worked under J. B. Vuillaume in Paris from 1839 to 1844 and then opened a workshop of his own in the Galerie Vivienne there. Later he removed to the rue Croix-des-Petits-Champs and lastly settled in the rue Princesse. His instruments are greatly esteemed for their tone, their durability and their excellent workmanship. He copied the Stradivari model very successfully, and but for his untimely end should have ranked among the foremost French makers. He committed suicide by cutting his throat while in a state of feverish delirium. The Paris Conservatoire owns a cello by this maker, which is considered to be the finest instrument he ever produced.

(3) Ernest Maucotel (b. Paris, 1867; d. ?). He was a great-nephew of (1) and (2) and also became a maker of some renown. In 1892 he entered the house of H. C. Silvestre, great-nephew of the no less celebrated Pierre and Hippolyte Silvestre, with whom he entered into partnership on 1 Apr. 1900. Left sole partner, Ernest Maucotel applied to Paul Deschamp (b. 7 Mar. 1887), a talented violinist and an expert on violin making, who became his partner in 1922. Their house, in the rue de Rome, contained, in addition to instruments of their own make, a wonderful collection of old instruments.

M. P.

BIBL.—HAWES, H. R., 'Old Violins' (London, 1898). LUTGENDORFF, WILLIBALD FRIEHR VON, 'Die Geigen- und Lautenmacher' (Frankfurt o/M., 1904).

MAUDUIT, Jacques (b. Paris, 16 Sept. 1557; d. Paris, 21 Aug. 1627).

French lutenist and composer. He succeeded his father as Greffier des requêtes (registrar in the courts of justice) in Paris, but his talent and reputation as a musician acquired for him in France the title of "Père de la Musique". In 1581 he obtained the first prize at the musical competition which took place yearly at Évreux in Normandy, for the best motets and chansons. A Requiem for 5 voices, written for the funeral of the poet Ronsard, was published by Mersenne in the seventh book of his 'Harmonie universelle' (1636). Ambros speaks slightly of this work, describing it as a simple faburden without any particular merit.

In 1570 the poet Antoine Baif received permission from Charles IX to found the Académie Française de Musique et de Poésie, the original object of which was to bring about a closer union between music and poetry by making musical rhythm entirely subordinate to the metrical rhythm of prosody. Mauduit would appear to have associated himself with the efforts which Baif made in this direction and to have taken part in the concerts held in Baif's house. Henry Expert, in his collection entitled 'Les Maîtres-musiciens de la Renaissance française', republished the 'Chansonnettes mesurées de Jean-Antoine de Baif mises en musique à quatre parties par Jacques Mauduit' (Paris, 1586), in which Mauduit endeavoured to carry out Baif's classical theories. They are slight compositions, but graceful enough. After Baif's death in 1590 the concerts continued to be carried on by Mauduit, but as Brenet¹ says, "The equilibrium jealously maintained by Baif, between poetry and music, was broken to the advantage of the latter", and more freedom was gained for the independent development of music by the greater prominence given to instrumental music.² J. R. M.

See also Ballet de Cour.

MAUGARS, André³ (b. ?; d. ?).

French 17th-century violist. He was attached to the French court as a politician-musician. Thoinan describes him as:

Célèbre Joueur de Viole, Musicien du Cardinal de Richelieu, Conseiller, Secrétaire, Interprète du Roi en langue Anglaise, Traducteur de F. Bacon, Prieur de Saint-Pierre Eynac.

About 1620 he spent four years in England playing the viol at the court of James I and the first-fruit of his sojourn was a translation of Bacon's 'Advancement of Learning', which was published in Paris in 1624 (P. Billaine), under the title 'Le Progrez et avancement aux sciences divines et humaines', dedicated to de Lomenie. Soon after this he became a creature of Cardinal Richelieu, useful to that prelate in the capacity of secretary-interpreter, in which capacity he served likewise in the court of Louis XIII and became a favourite butt of the courtier-wit Bois-Robert, whom he distinguished by a hatred which, though impotent, has passed into history. His political satires, etc., and the story of his various quarrels, may be read in the authorities referred to below. All that we know of his death is the record of Tallemant to the effect that he "returned to France and died a few years later. On his death-bed he sent to ask forgiveness of his old enemy Bois-Robert." To this period belongs his pamphlet, reprinted by Thoinan, 'Response faite à un curieux sur le sentiment de la musique d'Italie, écrite à Rome le premier Octobre 1639'.

¹ See Michel Brenet, 'Les Concerts en France sous l'ancien régime' (1900), p. 37.

² For the story of Mauduit's saving Claude Le Jeune's manuscripts from the flames see LE JEUNE.

³ Fétis has Aude, but his notice in Biog. des Mus. is unreliable.

As a violist he was classed by Mersenne⁴ with Hottman, and his eulogy is similarly expressed by Jean Rousseau in his 'Traité de la viole'. His compositions, which must have been significant, appear wholly lost to posterity, but he himself lauds their excellence with no uncertain voice. E. H.-A.

BIBL.—BORDELON, ABBÉ, 'Les Malades de belle humeur, ou Lettres divertissantes' (Paris, 1697).

SAINT-GLAS, P., 'Divers Traitez d'histoire de morale et d'éloquence' (Paris, 1672).

TALLEMANT DES RÉAUX, G., 'Les Historiettes pour servir à l'histoire du XVII^e siècle' (Paris, 1834-36).

Maugham, W. Somerset. See Goossens (3, 'East of Suez', incid. m.).

Maupassant, Guy de. See Alain ('Rosier de Mme Husson', pf. piece), Albert Herring (Britten), Britten (do.), Cui ('Mam'zelle Fifi', opera), Glière ('Rachel', opera), Milhaud ('Bel Ami', film), Senilov ('Wild Geese', symph. poem).

MAUREL, Victor (b. Marseilles, 17 June 1848; d. New York, 22 Oct. 1923).

French baritone singer. He received instruction at the Paris Conservatoire in singing from Vauthrot and in opera from Duvernoy, and gained the first prizes in both subjects, co-equal with Gailhard, in 1867. He made his début at the Opéra as Nevers ('Huguenots') and Conte di Luna ('Trovatore') in 1868. He was next in Italy, where he appeared in the production of Gomes's 'Guaraní' at Milan on 19 Mar. 1870. He made his début at the Royal Italian Opera in London, at the invitation of Augustus Harris, as Renato in Verdi's 'Ballo in maschera' on 21 Apr. 1873, made a great success, and was engaged there every year until 1879 inclusive. His parts comprised Don Juan, Tell, Almaviva, Valentine, Hamlet, etc.; in Wagner operas then new to England, Telramund, 8 May 1875, Wolfram, 6 May 1876, and the Flying Dutchman, 16 June 1877; also Domingo in Massé's 'Paul et Virginie', 1 June 1878.

Maurel reappeared at the Paris Opéra as Hamlet on 28 Nov. 1879 and also played Amonasro on the production there of 'Aida' on 22 Mar. 1880. After a tour in Spain he undertook, in 1883, the management with Corti of the Italian opera at the Paris Théâtre des Nations (afterwards Théâtre Sarah-Bernhardt), with disastrous financial results, in spite of a company including Mmes Marimon, Adler-Dévières, Nevada and Tremelli, Gayarré, the brothers de Reszke and himself, and the successful production of Massenet's 'Hérodiade' on 1 Feb. 1884. He appeared with great success at the Opéra-Comique in 1885-86 and was again in London, at Covent Garden in 1886 and at Drury Lane for the first time in 1887 in favourite parts.

Between these engagements Maurel created, with the greatest success, Iago in Verdi's 'Otello' at Milan on 5 Feb. 1887, and showed himself the best acting baritone on the Italian stage since Faure. He introduced this fine impersonation to the London public at the Lyceum Theatre on 5 July 1889, and on 9 Feb. 1893 he created the part of Falstaff in Verdi's last opera at Milan. Both these parts were sung by him for the first time in Paris in 1894, the latter first in London on 10 June 1895. In 1896 he returned to the Opéra-Comique, where he created the part of Mathias in Erlanger's 'Juif polonais' on 11 Apr. 1900.

⁴ De instr. harm., lib. i, prop. 30.

For a short time after that Maurel appeared as an actor at non-musical theatres, but he returned to the operatic stage and reappeared in London in the part of Rigoletto on 15 Nov. 1904. In 1909 he settled as a teacher in New York. His 'Dix Ans de carrière' (1897) was translated into German by Lilli Lehmann. Other publications are 'Le Chant renoué par la science' (1892), 'Un Problème d'art' (1893) and 'A propos de la mise en scène de Don Juan' (1896). A. C.

MAURER, Ludwig (Wilhelm) (b. Potsdam, 8 Feb. 1789; d. St. Petersburg, 25 Oct. 1878).

German violinist and composer. He was a pupil of Haak, Konzertmeister to Frederick the Great. At the age of thirteen he appeared with great success at a concert given in Berlin by Mara and was in consequence admitted to the royal chapel as a probationer. After the battle of Jena (1806) the chapel was dismissed, and Maurer travelled, first to Königsberg and Riga, where he made the acquaintance of Rode and Baillot, and then to Mitau and St. Petersburg, his playing being everywhere appreciated. At Moscow he again met Baillot, through whose good offices he became musical director to the Chancellor Vsovolodsky, who had a private orchestra. There he remained till 1817, when he made another successful tour, being particularly well received in Berlin and Paris. In 1832 he returned to Vsovolodsky and stayed till 1845, when after another tour he settled finally at Dresden.

Maurer's compositions include a 'Symphonie concertante' for four violins and orchestra, first played in Paris by himself, Spohr, Müller and Wich in 1838, and three Russian airs with variations (Op. 14). Of his operas four were published in vocal score: 'Der neue Paris' (Hanover, 27 Jan. 1826), 'Der entdeckte Diebstahl' (1826), 'Aloise' (Hanover, 16 Jan. 1828) and 'Alonzo' (c. 1830). He also published several concertos — one of which was often played at the Philharmonic concerts in London — and two collections of quartets (Opp. 17 and 26). Maurer's two sons, Vsevolod, a violinist, and Alexis, a cellist, were good musicians who settled in Russia. F. G., rev.

MAURICE, Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel. See MORITZ.

MAURICE, Pierre (b. Allaman, Vaud, 13 Nov. 1868; d. Allaman, 25 Dec. 1936).

Swiss composer. After preliminary studies at the Stuttgart Conservatory he went to Paris, where he worked under Fauré and Massenet from 1891 to 1898. From 1899 to 1917 he lived at Munich. He then returned to his native place by way of Geneva. He was proud of his Romanic origin, but a German influence can indisputably be detected in his compositions. He belongs to the small but distinguished group of Swiss musicians whose activities have been particularly connected with the stage. He composed several operas, one in French, 'La Fille de Jephthé' (Geneva, 1899) and the following in German: 'Kalif Storch' (after Wilhelm Hauff's tale, not performed), 'Die weisse Flagge' (Cassel, 1903), 'Misé Brun' (Stuttgart, 1908), 'Lanval' (Weimar, 1913), 'Andromeda' (Basel, 1924), 'Nachts sind alle Katzen grau' (Zurich, 1925) and 'Das Tanzlegendchen' (after Gottfried Keller, Munich, 1931). H. E., add. A. L.

Mauro, Ortesio. See Ariosti (3 lib.). Handel ('Alessandro', opera; 13 voc. duets). Steffani (8 lib.; voc. duets).

MAVRA (Opera). See STRAVINSKY.

MAXIÁN, František (b. Teplice-Šanov, 9 Nov. 1907).

Czech pianist and teacher. After a secondary school education he studied pianoforte under Roman Veselý at the Prague Conservatory from 1923 to 1927, and in 1928–31 he perfected his technique under Vilém Kurz at the Master School. He also studied conducting under M. Doležil and P. Dědeček (1932–1936). Afterwards he worked for a few years with the Prague broadcasting service. In 1939 he became professor at the Prague Conservatory and in 1946 he was appointed professor at the Academy of Musical Arts there. He is a fine artist with a particular ability for profound interpretation, and a highly appreciated teacher. G. Č.

MAXIMILIEN. Opera in 3 acts by Milhaud. Libretto by Armand Lunel, trans. from German libretto by Rudolf Hoffmann based on Franz Werfel's play 'Juarez und Maximilian'. Prod. Paris, Opéra, 4 Jan. 1932.

MAXIXE. A Brazilian dance similar to the tango, which had some vogue in Europe during the second decade of the 20th century.

MAXWELL-LYTE, Eve (b. London, 25 Apr. 1908).

English singer. She was educated privately at Battle, Sussex, and studied at the R.C.M. in London and the Central School of Dramatic Art from 1926 to 1928. She gave her first recital of folksongs from many lands at the Aeolian Hall, London, in June 1932 and has since sung with great success in all the big provincial towns of Britain and in Dublin and Belfast. In 1938 she made a coast-to-coast tour of Canada which was so warmly received that, after giving recitals in New York and Washington in Dec. 1938, she made another Canadian tour the following year. Further tours of both the U.S.A. and Canada, booked for 1940, were cancelled by the outbreak of war, and for the next three years Eve Maxwell-Lyte worked in a Government office. On her release to work for C.E.M.A. she became one of their most popular artists, giving recitals in factories, in remote villages and to the forces. She went twice to Scapa Flow to give concerts to the fleet.

Her repertory is enormous, including several hundred folksongs from all over Europe and America. Not only is her voice capable of mastering the different moods required for each type of folksong, but she is also an accomplished actress and a good linguist, since she sings in some twenty languages besides English. She sings every song in its own language, and her characterization is so complete that with each song she appears to become a different person.

M. K. W.

MAXYLEWICZ, Wincenty (b. ? , 1685; d. Cracow, 24 Jan. 1745).

Polish composer. He was cantor at the Cracow Cathedral School. In 1739 he succeeded Father Andrzej Bargiel as conductor of the Capella Cathedralis, a post at which he remained until his death. In the Cracow Chapter Library were found five 4-part compositions a cappella by Maxylewicz. They are as follows:

- 'Graduale 4 vocum: Tollite portas cum Alleluia Ave Maria gratia plena.'
- 'Rorate coeli.'
- 'Rorate coeli' (another setting).
- 'Dignare me.'
- 'Ecce sacerdos.'

Of these five works the last two were not signed by the composer, but their great similarity in style to the other three justified the assumption that all are by the same person.

C. R. H.

BIBL.—CHYBIŃSKI, A. E., 'Wincenty Maxylewicz' ('Musical Quarterly', Warsaw, 1929).

MAY, Edward (Collett) (b. Greenwich, 29 Oct. 1806; d. London, 2 Jan. 1887).

English organist and teacher. He was first taught by his brother Henry, an amateur musician and composer of considerable ability. When he was about fifteen years of age, Thomas Adams, then organist of St. Paul's, Deptford, and an intimate friend of the May family, struck by Edward's promise and intelligence, offered to take him as a pupil. He became later a pupil of Cipriani Potter for the pianoforte and of Crivelli for singing. In 1837 he was appointed organist of Greenwich Hospital, an office he held till the abolition of the institution in 1869. From 1841 to his death he devoted himself enthusiastically to the musical teaching of the masses. At one institution alone, the National Society's Central School, more than a thousand teachers and many more children were instructed by him. At Exeter Hall, the Apollonicon Rooms, and later St. Martin's Hall, several thousand adults passed through his classes, while for many years he was the sole musical instructor at a number of training-schools. In 1880 May was appointed professor of vocal music in Queen's College, London.

J. H.

MAY, Florence (b. London, 1844; d. London, 1923).

English pianist and biographer, daughter of the preceding. She was taught by her father and her uncle, Oliver May, and became known in London as a pianist of considerable cultivation and power, and a successful teacher. She went to Baden-Baden in 1871 to finish her studies under Clara Schumann, and there met Brahms, whose pupil she became soon afterwards. On her return to England she distinguished herself as a performer of Brahms's music, playing many of his pianoforte works for the first time in Britain, and she wrote 'The Life of Johannes Brahms' in 2 volumes, which, first published in 1905, became one of the standard works on the subject. Revised by her for a second edition just before the first world war, which prevented its issue, it was at last brought out again in 1948.

J. H., adds.

MAY-HORN. See WHITHORN.

MAY NIGHT (Rimsky-Korsakov). See NIGHT IN MAY, A.

Mayakovsky, V. See Bely ('V. I. Lenin', chorus). Lourie (March). Shebalin ('Lenin', symphony). Shostakovich ('Flea', incid. m.). Stanislav ('March of Harvest', cantata).

MAYER, Charles (b. Königsberg, 21 Mar. 1799; d. Dresden, 2 July 1862).

German pianist and composer. His father, a clarinet player, went soon after the boy's birth to St. Petersburg, and four years later to Moscow, where he settled with his family. Charles first learned from his mother, a good pianoforte teacher, and later became a pupil of Field. After the burning of Moscow in 1812 the family fled to St. Petersburg, where the mother became pianoforte teacher, and where the lessons with Field were resumed. The pupil played so exactly like his master that connoisseurs were unable to tell which was at the instrument if a screen was interposed.

In 1814 Mayer accompanied his father to Paris, where he was well received. He first played his concert variations on 'God save the King' in Amsterdam. In 1819 he returned to St. Petersburg, where he worked hard and successfully at teaching, and formed as many as 800 pupils. In 1845 he travelled to Stockholm, Copenhagen, Hamburg, Leipzig and Vienna, but this was his last tour. In 1850 he settled at Dresden, where he taught, gave concerts and composed up to his death. His pieces reach the astonishing number of 900. A Mazurka by him in F# major was for some time considered to be by Chopin, and as such was included in the first issue of Klindworth's edition. It was removed from later issues. F. G.

MAYER, Lady. See CHILDREN'S CONCERTS. MOULTON, DOROTHY.

MAYER, (Sir) Robert. See CHILDREN'S CONCERTS.

MAYER, Wilhelm. See RÉMY, W. A.

Maykov. See Maikov.

MAYNARD, John (b. ?; d. ?).

English 16th-17th-century lutenist and composer. From 1599 to 1601 he was in the service of Christian IV of Denmark, in Copenhagen. He left abruptly in 1601, together with his colleague, Daniel Norcombe, and fled to Venice by way of Germany and Hungary. From the title-page and dedication of his song-book it is clear that he was some time in the service of Lady Joan Thynne of Caux Castle, Shropshire, and was at that date "lutenist at the most famous Schoole of St. Julian's in Hartfordshire". Nothing more is known of him. His song-book, 'The XII Wonders of the World' (1611), contains twelve ayres for voice, lute and viol ("all three jointly and none severall") describing the characters of a courtier, a divine, a bachelor, a widow and so on — a conceit used by several 17th-century essay writers. Its full title is:

The XII Wonders of the World, Set and composed for the Violl de Gambo, the Lute and the Voyce to sing the Verse, all three jointly and none severall; also Lessons for the Lute and Base Violl to play alone; with some Lessons to play Lyra-waye alone, or if you will to fill up the parts with another Violl set Lute-way.

In addition there are twelve pavans and galliards for the lute and bass viol, and some pieces for lyra viol with optional bass viol accompaniment. A piece for organ is in the R.C.M. (MS 2093). Peter Warlock (in 'The English Ayre') considers his music to be of poor quality. R. T. D.

See also English Musicians Abroad.

MAYNOR, Dorothy (b. Norfolk, Virginia, 3 Sept. 1910).

American Negro soprano singer. She first sang in the choir of her father's Methodist church and, at the age of fourteen, entered Hampton Institute, Hampton, Virginia, where she sang in the choir, taking part in its tours in the U.S.A. and Europe, and studied with R. Nathaniel Dett. In 1936, after three years at the Westminster Choir School, Princeton, N.J., she began a three years' course of vocal study with Wilfried Klamroth and later with John Alan Houghton. In Feb. 1939 she was engaged by an important concert management and that summer her singing aroused the admiration of Kussevitky, who introduced her at a reception during the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Enthusiastic press notices drew widespread attention to her, and her first New York recital in Nov. 1939 opened a career which has included many extensive concert tours and appearances with the major orchestras of the U.S.A. In 1948 she toured South America for two months. She took the Mus.D. degree at Bennett College, Greensboro, N.C., in 1945. Although occasional unevennesses of tone are to be noticed in her singing, the essential merits of a notable voice and an appealing personality entitle her to be regarded as one of the foremost singers of her race. F. D. P.

MAYOR OF CASTERBRIDGE, THE.

Opera in 3 acts by Peter Tranchell. Libretto by the composer and Peter Bentley, based on Thomas Hardy's novel. Produced Cambridge, Arts Theatre, 30 July 1951.

MAYR, Richard (b. Salzburg, 18 Nov. 1877; d. Vienna, 1 Dec. 1935).

Austrian bass singer. After preliminary study at the local "Gymnasium" at Salzburg, where his father was a wealthy brewer, he decided to take up medicine, and for that purpose worked some time at the University of Vienna. During that period, however, his fine natural voice gradually attracted so much attention that he decided to abandon the career of a physician for that of a singer. Accordingly he entered the Conservatory and, from the age of twenty-one until he was nearly twenty-five, studied hard to master an extensive repertory of operatic parts.

Declining any tentative appearance at the smaller theatres, he imitated the unique example of the Dutch singer Anton van Rooy by obtaining his initial engagement at Bayreuth, where he sang for the first time on any stage in Sept. 1902, as Hagen in 'Gotterdammerung'. His resonant voice and splendid declamation won him an unequivocal success; but his supreme gifts as an actor were yet to be made manifest in their full maturity. The opportunity for development was immediately afforded through his engagement by Mahler for the Vienna Court Opera. Making his début as Don Gomez in Verdi's 'Ernani', he sang there for several years in succession, and, while laying in a rich store of experience, displayed amazing versatility in a round of leading parts of various schools, serious and comic alike, that extended from the Wotan of the 'Ring' to the Baron Ochs in 'Der Rosenkavalier'. The latter, a superb creation in every detail, was the character in which he made his first appearance at Covent Garden when Strauss's opera was revived in London on 23 May 1924. This success was enhanced in the following year, when he sang with no less ability in other strongly contrasted parts.

H. K.

BIBL.—KUNZ, OTTO, 'Richard Mayr' (Vienna, 1933).

MAYR, Simone (Johann Simon) (b. Mendorf, Bavaria, 14 June 1763; d. Bergamo, 2 Dec. 1845).

Italian composer of German origin. He early showed talent for music, which he first learned from his father, the village school-master and organist. When about ten he entered the Jesuit seminary at Ingolstadt, but he did not neglect his music either then or when, after the banishment of the Jesuits, he studied law at Ingolstadt. Having made the acquaintance of a nobleman of the Grisons, Thomas de Bessus, he lived in the house as music master and was afterwards sent by his patron to Bergamo to study with Lenzi, maestro di cappella there. Mayr found, however, that his master knew little more than himself, and was on the point of returning to Germany when Count Pesenti, a canon of Bergamo, provided him with the means of going to F. Bertoni at Venice. There again his expectations were deceived, but he picked up some practical hints and a few rules from Bertoni, and hard work and the study of good books did the rest.

Mayr had already published some songs at Ratisbon, and at Bergamo and Venice he composed masses and vespers. After the success of his oratorio 'Jacob a Labano fugiens', composed in 1791 for the Conservatorio dei Mendicanti at Venice and performed before a distinguished audience, he was commissioned to write three more oratorios for Venice ('David', 'Tobiae matrimonium' and 'Sisera'). For Forlì he wrote 'Jephthe' and a Passion.

Thrown on his own resources by the sudden death of his patron, Mayr was urged by Piccinni to try the stage, and his first opera, 'Saffo, ossia I riti d' Apollo Leucadio', was so well received at the Teatro La Fenice at Venice (1794) that he was immediately overwhelmed with commissions, and between that date and 1824 he composed no less than sixty-one operas. Indeed it was not till Rossini's success that his fame declined. Many of his melodies were sung about the streets, such as the pretty cavatina "O quanto l' anima" from 'Lauso e Lidia'.

In 1802 he became maestro di cappella of the church of Santa Maria Maggiore at Bergamo, and he was so much attached to his work there that he declined not only invitations to London, Paris, Lisbon and Dresden, but also the post of censor to the Milan Conservatory, his appointment to which had been signed by the Viceroy of Italy in 1807. As professor of composition in the Musical Institute of Bergamo — founded in 1805, reorganized in 1811 — he exercised great and good influence;

Donizetti was one of his pupils there. He was the founder of two institutions for decayed musicians and their widows, the Scuola Caritatevole di Musica and the Pio Istituto di Bergamo. From 1816 onwards he wrote mostly church music, such as masses, psalms and motets. He had been blind for some years before his death. The city of Bergamo erected a monument to him in 1852, and in 1875 his remains and those of Donizetti were removed with much ceremony to the church of Santa Maria Maggiore.

Mayr is said to have been the first to introduce the crescendo of the orchestra into opera, to which Rossini owes so much of his fame. He wrote a small book on Haydn (1809), a biography of Capuzzi the violinist and poems on the latter's death, also 'La dottrina degli elementi musicale', which remained in manuscript at Bergamo.

The most celebrated of Mayr's operas are the following:

- 'Lodoiska' (libretto by Francesco Gonella), prod. Venice, Teatro La Fenice, 26 Jan. 1796.
- 'Che originali' (lib. by Gaetano Rossi), prod. Venice, Teatro San Benedetto, 18 Oct. 1798.
- 'Adelaide di Guesclino' (lib. by Rossi, based on Voltaire's tragedy), prod. Venice, Teatro La Fenice, 1 May 1799.
- 'Il carretto del venditore d' aceto' (lib. by Giuseppe Maria Foppa, based on a play by Louis Sébastien Mercier), prod. Venice, Teatro Sant' Angelo, 28 June 1800.
- 'Ginevra di Scozia' (lib. by Rossi, after Ariosto), prod. Trieste, 21 Apr. 1801.
- 'I misteri eleusini' (lib. by Giuseppe Bernardoni), prod. Milan, Teatro alla Scala, 16 Jan. 1802.
- 'Alonso e Cora' (lib. by Bernardoni), prod. Milan, Teatro alla Scala, 26 Dec. 1803.
- 'Elisa' (lib. by Rossi, based on Jacques Antoine de Saint-Cyr's French libretto 'Elisa, ou Le Voyage au Mont-Bernard'), prod. Venice, Teatro San Benedetto, 5 July 1804.
- 'Adelasia e Aleramo' (lib. by Luigi Romanelli), prod. Milan, Teatro alla Scala, 26 Dec. 1806.
- 'La rosa rossa e la rosa bianca' (lib. by Felice Romani, based on Pixérécourt's French libretto), prod. Genoa, Teatro Sant' Agostino, 21 Feb. 1813.
- 'Medea in Corinto' (lib. by Romani), prod. Naples, Teatro San Carlo, 28 Nov. 1813.

F. G., rev.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- KRETZSCHMAR, H., 'Die musikgeschichtliche Bedeutung S. Mayrs' (Leipzig, 1904).
- MARINELLI, A., 'Il pio istituto musicale S. Mayr' (Bergamo, 1932).
- SCHIEDERMAIR, L., 'Simon Mayr', 2 vols. (Leipzig, 1907-10).
- SCHMIDL, C., 'Cenni biografici su G. S. Mayr' (Trieste, 1901).
- SCOTTI, C. G., 'S. Mayr' (Bergamo, 1903).
- Mayreder, Rosa. See Corregidor (Wolf, H., lib.).
- Wolf (H., 'Corregidor', opera).
- Mayrhofer, Johann. See Schubert (2 libs.; part-song; 47 songs).

MAYSEDER, Joseph (b. Vienna, 26 Oct. 1789; d. Vienna, 21 Nov. 1863).

Austrian violinist and composer. He was the son of a poor painter. Beginning at the age of eight, he learnt the violin from Suche and Wranitzky. Schuppanzigh took a great interest in the lad and entrusted him with the second violin in his quartet. In 1800 he gave his first concert in the Augarten with brilliant success. In 1816 he entered the court chapel, in 1820 became solo violin at the court theatre and in 1835 was appointed chamber violinist to the emperor. The municipality of Vienna awarded him the large gold Salvator Medal in 1811 and presented him with the freedom of the city in 1817. In 1815 he gave, with Hummel (afterwards replaced by Moscheles) and Giuliani, the so-called "Dukaten Konzerte". He also gave concerts with Merk the cellist, but after 1837 he never appeared in public. He never played in public abroad; even on his visit to Paris in 1820 he would play only before a select circle of artists, including Kreutzer, Baudiot, Cherubini, Habeneck, Lafont and Viotti. In 1862 the emperor bestowed on him the order of Francis Joseph.

¹ Set by Cherubini in 1794.

² Set by Gaveaux in 1809.

With the exception of a Mass Mayseder composed only chamber music. He published sixty-three works, including concertos, polonaises, variations, five quintets and eight quartets for strings, studies and duets for violin, four trios, sonatas, etc., for piano-forte, Trio for violin, harp and horn, etc.

C. F. P.

MAZAS, Jacques (Féréol) (b. Béziers, 23 Sept. 1782; d. ? , 1849).

French violinist and composer. He entered the Paris Conservatoire in 1802 and, having studied for three years under Baillot, obtained the first prize for violin playing. He had great success in Paris, especially with his performance of a violin Concerto written for him by Auber, at the Conservatoire. He travelled through a very large part of Europe and returned in 1829 to Paris, without, however, regaining his former success. In 1837 he left Paris again and accepted the directorship of a music school at Cambrai, remaining there till 1841.

Mazas wrote a large number of brilliant violin pieces, quartets, trios and duets for stringed instruments, an instruction book for the violin and one for the viola. Fétis also mentions two operas (one, 'Le Kiosque', performed in Paris in 1842), two violin concertos and an overture.

P. D.

MAZELLIER, Jules (b. Toulouse, 6 Apr. 1879).

French conductor and composer. He studied composition at the Paris Conservatoire under Fauré and Leneveu between 1906 and 1909. In the latter year he was awarded the Prix de Rome. From 1918 to 1922 he was conductor at the Paris Opéra-Comique, and in 1928 he was given the appointment of professor of the vocal ensemble class at the Paris Conservatoire, which he resigned twenty years later.

One of his earliest works to be performed was the "dramatic overture" 'Circenses', given under Chevillard's direction in 1907.

Mazellier's compositions further include the comic operas 'Graziella' (libretto after Lamartine) and 'Matines d'amour', performed at the Opéra-Comique in 1925 and the Opéra in 1927 respectively; the operas 'Cœur de Paris' (produced at Nancy in 1950) and 'La locandiera' (libretto after Goldoni); choral and orchestral works; a 'Poème romantique' for violin and orchestra and 'Scherzo, choral et variations' for pianoforte and orchestra; chamber music, &c.

F. E. G.

MAZEPPA (Opera). See PEDROTTI. TCHAIKOVSKY.

MAZÉR, Johan (b. Stockholm, 7 Mar. 1790; d. Stockholm, 25 Oct. 1847).

Swedish patron of chamber music. He was a merchant and amateur musician who made stringed instruments and played cello and double bass. He held informal meetings for the playing of chamber music at his summer residence at Djurgården from 1823 onwards, which led in 1841 to the founding of the Quartet Society that still bears his name. Mazér provided the funds, which were administered by the Academy of Music of which he had been elected a member in 1840 and to which he eventually left his whole collection of music and instruments. The first public performance by the Quartet took place at the Academy of Music on 13 Jan. 1849. After Mazér's death the moving spirit in the Society was Jonas Falkenholm, for which reason the foundation is sometimes referred to as the "Falkenholm Quartet".

K. D.

BIBL.—KINBERG, C., 'Från Mazérska sällskapets förhistoria' (S.T.M., 1923).

'Mazérska kvartettsällskapet. Ett femtioårsminne, 1849-1899' (Stockholm, 1899).

Mazères, E. J. Ennemond. See Auber ('Le Serment', lib.).

MAZURKA. A Polish country dance which originated in folksongs, in the plains of Mazowsze (Mazovia), in which Warsaw is situated. The people of this province have been called Mazurs, and their dance, known abroad as mazurka, comprises more than one type. There are the proper Mazur or Mazurek, secondly the Obertas or Oberek and thirdly the Kujawiak from the neighbouring district of Kujawy. They are all written either in 3-8 or 3-4 time. The obertas is usually faster than the other two. The tempo varies considerably, for instance in the obertas, with the quaver as a unit of the bar, the tempo oscillates between: ♩ = 160-180 MM; in a Kujawiak with the crotchet as a unit it would be: ♩ = 120-140 MM.

The music consists of two or four parts of eight or frequently six bars, each part being repeated. There is generally a strong accent falling on the second or third beat of the bar.

Here are some rhythmical patterns of mazurkas, all written out in 3-4 time for ease of comparison:

and one sample in 3-8 time with the phrases consisting of six and not eight bars¹:

The accompaniment to the earliest mazurkas was played on the dudy (a kind of bagpipe) which produced on its one or two drones either one bass note (tonic) or two (tonic and dominant). It should not be forgotten that the mazurka is as much a song as a dance.

Mazurkas can express all kinds of different feelings and even shades of mood, in spite of their rather square structure. Some of them, which have remained unaltered by the influence of urban music, show either no definite ending, and the repeats are made ad libitum, or their concluding bar finishes on the dominant in the third beat without the accent, leaving the impression of disappearance into the air²:

Ex.1

As a dance the mazurka is remarkable for the liberty and variety in its figures and for the particular steps required for its performance. The whole dance has the character of an improvisation which even allows the invention of new figures and steps. It is usually danced by 4, 8 or 12 couples, sometimes by an indefinite number of dancers.

¹ This is the rhythmical pattern of a very well-known folksong and dance from Mazovia entitled 'Uciekli mi przepióreczka' ('The quail escaped me').

² Quoted from the book 'Od Tatr do Bałtyku' ('From the Tatra Mountains to the Baltic Sea') by A. E. Chybiński (Cracow, 1950), p. 123, No. 164.

The mazurka was known as early as the 16th century. During the 17th century it spread all over Poland and began to penetrate into neighbouring countries. It was introduced into the courts of Germany by Augustus II, Elector of Saxony and King of Poland (1697-1733) and, after becoming fashionable among the upper classes in Paris, reached England about 1750. After the partitions of Poland, the mazurka conquered not only the drawing-rooms of the Russian aristocracy, but succeeded in reaching the masses of the Russian people.

It should be pointed out that many Polish folksongs, to which the mazurka undoubtedly belongs, are played and sung in one or other of the ecclesiastical modes: notably the Lydian which has its fourth note sharper³ and what was for many years called the "Polish mode", which consists of six notes only.⁴

Chopin was strongly influenced by the folk music of his native country. For all his mazurkas he adopted 3-4 time. But he used the national material as a basis, eliminating all vulgarities and extending its original forms, and developed them into fuller beauty, containing almost unidentifiable folk tunes, by the force and striking individuality of his genius. His example was followed by many Polish composers, such as Moniuszko, Wieniawski, Młynarski, Różycki. Szymanowski, on the other hand, pursued quite a different course when using folk airs in his music. In his works ('Songs of Kurpie', 'Harnasie', etc.) he introduced Polish folksongs in their original form, but in the accompanying part of the pianoforte or orchestra he displayed all his mastery and imaginative power as well as his own modern harmonic and contrapuntal idioms, thus emphasizing the primitive beauty of folk melodies, the modal reminiscences of the Polish folk tunes and their striking irregularities of accent and rhythm.

The following example is a simple mazurka (kujawiak) popular near Ruskowo.⁵ The first ³ The augmented fourth on F, i.e. F-B \sharp .

⁴ C. W. Pearce in his 'Modern Academic Counterpoint' (chap. iii, p. 15, No. 58) writes thus: "One of the oldest European scales is that of ancient Poland". It should be understood that this "Polish scale" is very similar to an ecclesiastical mode, namely the Dorian, but it differs from the latter by comprising six notes only: D-F-G-A-B-C.

⁵ Quoted from Kolberg's monumental work 'Lud' ('People'), Series iii, 'Kujawy', p. 256 (Cracow, 1856).

part of it, with a vocal accompaniment, is much slower than the second, played nearly twice as fast as the first :

C. R. H.

MAZZAFERRATA, Giovanni Battista

(b. Como or Pavia, ?; d. Ferrara, 26 Feb. 1691).

Italian composer. He was maestro di cappella at the Accademia della Morte at Ferrara. He composed 'Salmi concertati' for 3-4 voices (1676); cantatas (1680); madrigals, 2-3 v. (1668), canzonets and cantatas (1680); solo chamber cantatas (1677); 12 sonatas for 2 violins with a "bassetto viola" ad lib. (1674; republ. 1678). One of these was republished by Wasielewski. An oratorio by him was performed at Siena in 1684.

E. v. d. s.

MAZZINGHI. English family of musicians of Corsican origin.

(1) Thomas Mazzinghi (b. ?; d. London, 20 May 1775), violinist and (?) composer. He settled in London and was violinist at Marylebone Gardens. 'Six Solos for the Violin' published in London about 1763 may with reasonable probability be ascribed to him. He was buried in St. Pancras.

(2) Joseph Mazzinghi (b. London, 25 Dec. 1765, d. Downside nr. Bath, 15 Jan. 1844), organist, pianist and composer, son of the preceding. He was a pupil of John Christian Bach, under whom he made such progress that, on the death of his father, in 1775, he was, although but ten years of age, appointed organist of the Portuguese Chapel. He then studied under Bertolini, Sacchini and Anfossi. In 1784 he became musical director and composer at the King's Theatre, where he produced the operas 'La bella Arsena' (1795) and 'Il tesoro' (1796), besides many songs, duets, etc., for introduction into other operas, and the music for several ballets. The score of Paisiello's opera 'La locanda' having been consumed in the fire of the Opera House in June 1789, Mazzinghi rescored the work so faithfully as to admit of its continued performance. For the English theatre he set the following pieces :

- 'A Day in Turkey' (1791).
- 'The Magician no Conjuror' (1792).
- 'Ramah Droog' (1798).
- 'The Turnpike Gate' (1799).
- 'Paul and Virginia' (after Bernardin de Saint-Pierre) (1800).
- 'The Blind Girl' (1801).
- 'Chains of the Heart' (1801) (the last five in collaboration with Reeve).
- 'The Wife of Two Husbands' (1803).
- 'The Exile' (1808).
- 'The Free Knights' (1810).

The last piece contained the duet "When a little farm we keep", which for nearly half a century was highly popular and constantly introduced into other pieces.

Mazzinghi was music master to the Princess of Wales, afterwards Queen Caroline, and had an extensive practice as a teacher of the piano-forte, for which instrument he composed nearly seventy sonatas and arranged a multitude of pieces, besides writing an 'Introduction' to it. His glees, trios, harmonized airs, songs and other vocal pieces were legion. His pastoral glee, 'The Wreath' ("Tell me, shepherds"), was long in favour. He likewise composed a Mass for three voices and six hymns.

W. H. H.

(3) Thomas Mazzinghi (b. ?; d. ?), violinist, ? brother of the preceding. He was ennobled in Italy in 1834. His title of Count has been supposed to belong to Joseph, and the 'Six Solos for the Violin' named above have been attributed to him despite the obvious incompatibility of dates.

H. C. C.

See also Bishop (H., adapt. by). Paradisi (Cassandra Frederick, M.'s aunt). Reeve (4 collabs.).

MAZZOCCHI, Domenico (b. Veia nr. Civita Castellana, 2 Nov. 1592; d. Rome, 20 Jan. 1665).

Italian composer. He was a pupil of Nanini. In 1626 he published an opera, 'La catena d' Adone', as well as a book of 5-part madrigals, in 1638 a set of 'Dialoghi e sonetti' and in 1640 a volume of 'Musiche sacre'. In the dedication of this last he states that he has been for twenty years in the service of the family of Aldobrandini Borghese.

Apart from 'La catena d' Adone', Mazzocchi also composed the opera 'L' innocenza difesa', the oratorios 'Querimonia di Santa Maria Maddalena' and 'Il martirio dei Santi Abbundia ed Abbundanzio', madrigals, etc.

E. v. d. s., adds.

MAZZOCCHI, Virgilio (b. Veia nr. Civita Castellana, 22 July 1597; d. Veia, 3 Oct. 1646).

Italian composer, brother of the preceding. He was maestro di cappella at St. John Lateran in Rome from 1628 to 1629, when he was appointed to a similar place at St. Peter's, which he held until his death. He took part with Marazzoli in the composition of the first comic opera, 'Chi soffre, spera', to a libretto by Giulio Rospigliosi, the future Pope Clement IX, which was produced at the Palazzo Barberini in Rome on 27 Feb. 1639.² In 1640 he published, as Op. 1, 'Sacrae flores' for 2, 3 and 4 voices, and in 1648 a set of Psalms for double chorus was issued posthumously. A. L.

BIBL.—ROLANDI, U., 'Nuova antologia', Oct. 1927.
SALZA, A., Riv. Mus. It., XIV, 477.

Mazzola, Caterino. See Clemenza di Tito (Mozart). Mozart (do., lib.). Naumann (1, 2 libs.). Piccini ('Servo padrone', lib.). Salieri (2 libs.).

MAZZOLENI, Ettore (b. Brusio, Ticino, Switzerland, 18 June 1905).

Canadian conductor and composer of Italian-Swiss parentage. He took up the systematic study of music at Keble College, Oxford (1924-27), largely through the encouragement of Sir Hugh Allen. Subsequently he studied the pianoforte and composition at the R.C.M. in London, where he was ultimately appointed to the opera staff as coach and conductor, taking part in the preparation of the first performance of Vaughan Williams's 'Sir John in Love'.

Appointed to the staff of Upper Canada College, Toronto, in 1929, Mazzoleni immediately took an active part in musical affairs and shortly afterwards joined the staff of the Toronto Conservatory of Music as lecturer in musical history and conductor of the Conservatory Orchestra. Under his direction the latter organization has made remarkable progress, introducing many important works, including some by young Canadian composers.

Mazzoleni has made frequent appearances as a guest conductor, particularly with Concerts Symphoniques at Montreal. His compositions include songs, incidental music for plays, folksong arrangements and orchestral transcriptions. The most successful of the latter are Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor (which has received wide recognition), three Bach choral preludes and the overture to the opera 'Muzio Scevola' by Mattei, Bononcini and Handel. H. C. (ii).

MAZZONE, Marc' Antonio (b. Miglionico, Naples, ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-17th-century composer. He composed a book of madrigals for 5 voices, a book of madrigals a 4 (both Venice, 1569); a book of Magnificats to serve for choirs of limited compass (ibid., 1593). E. V. D. S.

MAZZONI, Antonio (Maria) (b. Bologna, 1718; d. Bologna, 1785).

¹ The MS score and libretto are in the Vatican Library in Rome, and an 'Argomento et allegoria' of the score was printed in 1639 (copy in the Library of Congress, Washington). A. Salza (see Bibl.) conjectured that the work may have been an enlarged version of an earlier opera, 'Il falcone', produced at the Palazzo Barberini in 1637.

² See Milton's letter to Lucas Holstenius from Florence, 30 Mar. 1639.

Italian composer. He studied with Predieri and became an associate of the Bologna Accademia Filarmonica in 1743. After some years spent at Fano and Macerata he returned to his native town about 1750 and held the post of chapel master at the church of San Giovanni in Monte from 1751 to 1767 and was subsequently employed at various other churches, ultimately at San Pietro, Bologna, until his death.

Mazzoni had his first oratorio performed at Bologna as early as 1735. His church music (of which a good deal is still extant at Bologna and elsewhere) is compared unfavourably with that of Padre Martini in the autobiography of Dittersdorf, who met Mazzoni when he accompanied Gluck to Bologna in 1763 for the inauguration of the new Teatro Pubblico there; the opening opera was Gluck's 'Il trionfo di Clelia', and Mazzoni played the second cembalo. Burney, who heard a Magnificat sung at San Giovanni in 1770, was not much impressed by it either.

Besides church music Mazzoni wrote about 15 operas between 1746 and 1769; the most successful one was a setting of Goldoni's 'Il viaggiator ridicolo' (Parma, 1757). This and 'Il re pastore' of the same year are still extant. He seems to have been at Lisbon in 1755 for the production of his 'La clemenza di Tito'. Otherwise his extensive travels to all parts of Europe (mentioned in earlier biographical accounts) do not appear to have left any trace, if indeed they took place at all. A. L.

MAZZUCATO, Alberto (b. Udine, 28 July 1813; d. Milan, 31 Dec. 1877).

Italian violinist, teacher and composer. He studied at Padua and in 1850 became leader of the orchestra at the Teatro alla Scala at Milan. He also taught the violin at the Conservatory, of which he became director in 1872. He edited the 'Gazzetta musicale'. His works include the operas 'La fidanzata di Lammermoor' (after Scott), 'Esmeralda' (after Victor Hugo) and six others.

E. B.

MAZZUCATO, Gian Andrea (b. Milan, ?; d. London, Aug. 1900).

Italian critic, son of the preceding. On the death of his father he was appointed professor of musical aesthetics at the Milan Conservatory in 1878. He contributed various articles to the 'Corriere della sera', then in its infancy. About 1880 he left Milan for London, where he earned a living by giving lessons in Italian, translating and occasional articles on musical subjects.

F. B.

Mc . . . For all names with this prefix see MAC . . .

ME. The mediant note in Tonic Sol-fa, in any key, so pronounced, but in notation represented by the symbol m.

MEANE. A term derived from the Latin medius and used in England from the 15th to the 17th centuries to denote an inner part of a polyphonic composition, either vocal or instrumental. It was popular with poets and dramatists by reason of its punning proclivity: at least three other connotations existed, besides the musical one, this latter being generally understood in its vocal sense.

Lucetta: There wanteth but a meane to fill your song.

Julia: The meane is drown'd with your unruly base.
(Shakespeare, 'Two Gentlemen of Verona').

Biron: . . . nay, he can sing
A meane most meanly.
(Shakespeare, 'Love's Labour's Lost').

In 'The Atheist's Tragedie' (1611) the following couplet occurs:

But trebles and bases make
Poor musick without means.

The prize for punning and jingling was, however, taken by John Redford almost a century before this in his poem 'Long have I been a singing man' (B.M. Add. MSS 15233 f. 43) which ends thus:

To me and myne, with all the rest,
And God grant grace with hartly voice
To sing the mene that menyth best,
All partes in the best to rejoice;
Which mene in menyng menyth well,
The mene of menes that doth excell.

Another verse of the same poem attempts to define the functions of five voice parts—treble, bass, tenor, counter (tenor) and meane—thereby showing that the meane was not synonymous with tenor, as has often been supposed. The present-day equivalent is the alto or contralto part, which was formerly sung by male altos. Thus, in the medius part-book of Day's 'Morning and Evening Prayer', a composition by Shepherd is prefaced by the remark: "This Meane part is for men", and settings of the Mass by Shepherd and Appleby for male voices only in B.M. Add. MSS 17802-5 are headed "Mass for a Meane". The word is also used by Orlando Gibbons in his 'Short Service' composed in the early years of the 17th century. In his 'Plaine and Easie Introduction' Morley uses "Meane" to imply altus or alto (pp. 17, 35, 129), but he distinguishes between "The high Meane" and "The low Meane" on p. 166, showing their respective tessituras to be a third apart. In the same music example there is also an alto part; but rather than charge Morley with inconsistency, it is safe to assume that he was thinking of a counter-tenor.

In three-voiced English descant of the 14th and 15th centuries the transposition or modification of the cantus firmus by the middle voice was called the "mene sight". This adjectival use of the word is found in treatises by Lionel Power and pseudo-Chilston, in B.M. Lansdowne MS 763.

The three-part convention also survived in early English organ music, certain examples of which (with or without the title of "Meane") contain an inner part which cannot conveniently be played by the left hand, together with the bass part, or by the right hand, together with the treble part. It is shared between the two hands, as a vagans or wandering part, and may have been given the name "Meane" by John Redford, in whose compositions it often appears. Occasionally the notes of the meane were blackened (Mulliner Book, f. 47) or placed on a large twelve-lined stave (B.M. Add. MSS 29996 f. 20v). This is consistent with Redford's poem, where we are told that

The mene in cumpas is so large,
That evry parte must joyne therto.

A general use of the word "Meane", once again used as an adjective, grew up with the consort of viols, the "mean-viall" signifying an instrument which normally played a middle part. The middle strings of the viol were often known as the small meane and the great meane.
D. W. S.

MEAN-TONE TEMPERAMENT. See TEMPERAMENT.

MEARES, Richard, sen. (b. ?; d. London, c. 1722); and MEARES, Richard, jun. (b. ?; d. London, c. 1743).

English instrument makers, music printers and publishers. Richard Meares, sen., was a skilled maker of viols, lutes and other instruments. As his labels inform us he lived "Without Bishopgate, near to Sr. Paul Pinder's, London". The earliest known of these labels is dated 1669; others 1677, etc. Hawkins, who gives an account of father and son (misspelling the name "Mears"), says that the shop was opposite the Catherine Wheel Inn, without Bishopgate, and that he was advertising in 1688 "lutes, and viols fretted according to Mr. Salmon's proposal".

Richard Meares, jun., is mentioned by Hawkins as a "whimsical man", bred up to his father's business, and "seen; the slovenly manner in which music was published by Walsh and Hare, and being desirous to participate in so gainful a trade he became their rival".

A card in the Bagford collection (B.M., undated) indicates that Richard Meares (presumably the elder) had removed from the Golden Viol in Leadenhall Street (which may have been the premises given in 1699 as the Golden Viol in Cornhill) to the Golden Viol and Hautboy on the north side of St. Paul's Churchyard, "where he sells all sorts of musical instruments, books & songs with tunes, rul'd paper, &c., and also ye best sort of cutlery wares at reasonable rates". There the firm remained until about 1727, the address being given sometimes as the Golden Ball and Hautboy. For a short period in 1722 the imprints give Richard Meares sen. and jun. together, but Meares jun. was probably in partnership with his father before then and responsible for the printing side of the business from 1717 or earlier, though evidence on the matter is incomplete and confusing. Hawkins says that Meares jun. "quitted his shop in St. Paul's church-yard, and some years after set up in Birch-lane; he continued there about two years, and then removed to London-house-yard in St. Paul's Churchyard, where he died about the year 1743".

One of the most beautifully produced works of the period, Handel's 'Radamisto', was "Printed and Sold by Richard Meares . . . & by Christopher Smith", (1720), and Handel's 'Suites de pieces [sic]' (1720) has R. Mears (sic) together with Christopher Smith in the imprint as sellers of the work. Among other items the firm printed or published Corelli's 'Sonatas', Ariosti's 'Coriolano', Keller's 'Rules to play a thorough Bass', Babel's 'Suits', Mattheson's 'Lessons' ('Pieces [sic] de clavecin'), Croft's 'Musicus Apparatus Academicus', selections from various operas and instrumental works by Geminiani, etc., some of the works being pirated from Walsh. The Meares must not be confused with a typographical music printer named H. Meere, who printed one or two works for Walsh in 1716-19, or with W. Mears, a bookseller (c. 1713-34), who published the text and music of several ballad operas and some editions of the Psalms, with music. F. K., adds. w. c. s.

MEASURE (x). The first dance in an Elizabethan or Jacobean masque; later dances would include galliards, corantos, voltas and jigs. From literary references Gombosi has deduced that the word is synonymous with the passamezzo pavan; the "new measures" correspond to the passamezzo moderno or quadro pavan, and the "old measures" to the passamezzo antico or passy-measures pavan. The term is also occasionally used to refer to pavans in general. Many settings of the passamezzo harmonic grounds survive in contemporary collections of dance music, both printed and manuscript, for all kinds of instruments; the form itself would be particularly suited to a long and complex entrée, since it consists of an indefinite number of variations on a sixteen-bar harmonic ground, each running into the next without a break. Settings by Bull and Byrd in the 'Fitzwilliam Virginal Book' are good examples. Only three pieces of music survive with the actual title 'Measure', and these are related to the grounds mentioned above.

R. T. D.

BIBL.—GOMBOSI, O., 'Some Musical Aspects of the English Court Masque' ('Journal of the American Musicological Society', Vol. I, No. 3).

See also Passamezzo.

MEASURE (z). In American musical terminology the word is used as an equivalent for the English "bar", the latter denoting "bar-line". The distinction is useful and far more reasonable than the German-derived terms now current in the U.S.A., but it has not gained currency in Britain. E. B.

MECHANICAL INSTRUMENTS. See BARREL ORGAN. MECHANICAL MUSICIANS. MECHANICAL ORCHESTRA. MECHANICAL PIANO. MECHANICAL VIRGINAL. MUSICAL BOXES. MUSICAL CLOCKS. MUSICAL WATCHES. PIANOLA. PLAYER PIANO. POLYPHON. SERNIETTE. SINGING BIRDS. VIELLE ORGANISÉE.

BIBL.—PROTZ, ALBERT, 'Mechanische Musikinstrumente' (Cassell, 1943).

MECHANICAL MUSICIANS. The fashion for musical automata during the last half of the 18th and the first half of the 19th centuries led to the construction of elaborate musical dolls in the forms of harpists, flautists, violinists, harpsichord players, etc. They were said to be extremely realistic in their movements of hands, eyes, mouths and arms, and in the qualities of the musical sounds they produced. Except for the flute players, little is known of the mechanical means by which the sounds were produced. A. H. (iv).

MECHANICAL ORCHESTRA. The fashion for musical automata reached its height towards the end of the 18th century and led to the production of complete mechanical orchestras. Although the members of these orchestras moved mechanically, it is doubtful if the claim that the figures themselves were responsible for the music can be accepted.

The best known mechanical orchestra was the Panharmonicon, made by Maelzel, which included flutes, clarinets, cymbals, triangles and strings struck by hammers.

Houdin, in his autobiography, describes the Componium, which, according to him, was made by Koppen, and was exhibited in Paris about 1829. It was "a perfect mechanical orchestra. By means of truly marvellous arrangements, this instrument improvised [sic] charming variations without ever repeating itself. It was asserted to be as difficult to hear the same variation twice as to find two similar quarternes drawn in succession at the lottery." It was said to bring the inventor one hundred thousand francs clear profit in a year. This instrument was exhibited in London, but was a failure, as the court was in mourning for George IV. On the way back to France it was delayed in the customs, damaged by damp, and Houdin took a whole year to repair it.

A. H. (iv).

MECHANICAL PIANO. A street instrument frequently miscalled barrel-organ. There are two common forms, both of which appeared in the 1880s, the first used on a barrow in the streets, played by turning a handle, the second a penny-in-the-slot instrument used in places of amusement.

In both forms pins projecting from a rotating barrel strike the tails of hammers playing on a short scale of notes. A more elaborate type is the mandolin street piano, invented about 1905, in which the hammer tails are engaged, by pins and bridges on the barrel, with rotating wheels with points which give continuing rapid repetition of the notes.

A. H. (iv).

MECHANICAL VIRGINAL. A virginal in which pins projecting from a barrel driven by clockwork are used to raise the jacks. A mechanical virginal was among the instruments left by Henry VIII. There is a specimen at Breslau made by Bidermann of Augsburg about 1600 which has 44 keys and jacks. It can be played in the ordinary way, or mechanically by a clockwork-driven barrel which plays six tunes on 26 of the jacks. There is only one mechanical virginal in England, also of about 1600, which plays four tunes on 17 jacks.

A. H. (iv).

MĚCHURA (Miechura), Leopold Eugen (b. Praguc, 2 Feb. 1804; d. Votín nr. Klatovy, 11 Feb. 1870).

Czech composer. He was born into a wealthy Prague family and lived most of the time at his estate of Votín in southern Bohemia. He studied music in Prague under D. Weber and V. J. Tomášek, and in his retirement he devoted himself to composition. He wrote over 100 works of all kinds, but came into the stream of patriotic tendencies only in the last decade of his life, although Palacký, the famous Czech leader, had been his brother-in-law. In connection with Měchura's national awakening the following three compositions should be particularly remembered:

Opera 'Marie Potocká' (libretto by Josef Kolář after Pushkin's 'The Fountain of Bakhchissarai'), 3 acts (1869), prod. (posth.) Prague, 13 Jan. 1871.
Cantata 'Pohřeb na Kaňku' ('The Burial on the Kaňk Hill') (words A. V. Šmilovský), 1866.
Cantata 'Štědrý den' ('Christmas Eve') (words K. J. Erben), 1867.

G. Č.

Meck, Nadezhda von. See Debussy. Tchaikovsky (passim).

MEDEA (Melodrama). See BENDA (2).

MEDEA (Opera). See PACINI.

MÉDECIN MALGRÉ LUI, LE (Opera). See GOUNOD.

MÉDECIN TURC, LE (Opera). See ISOARD.

MÉDÉE. Opera in 3 acts by Cherubini. Libretto by François Benoit Hoffman. Produced Paris, Théâtre Feydeau, 13 Mar. 1797. 1st perf. abroad, Berlin (trans. by Carl Alexander Herklots), 7 Feb. 1800. 1st in England, London, Her Majesty's Theatre (in Italian, trans. by S. de Castrone della Raiata), 6 June 1865.

See also Charpentier (M. A.). Milhaud.

MEDER, Johann Valentin (b. Wasungen o/Werra, [bapt. 3 May] 1649; d. Riga, July 1719).

German singer, conductor and composer. He studied theology at Leipzig and Jena, then turned to music. After various engagements as singer, and wanderings which brought him as far as Copenhagen, he became in 1674 cantor at Reval College, and in 1687 at St. Mary's, Danzig, where his attempt to introduce opera met with the opposition of the town council. His 'Nero' was given there at the end of Nov. 1695, the first German opera to be produced at Danzig; but the next, 'Coelia' (1698), had to be given at Schottland, outside the Danzig territory. He left there and became Kapellmeister at Königsberg Cathedral, but exchanged that post for a similar position at Riga Cathedral. He was greatly esteemed as a composer by Buxtehude, Mattheson, etc., his works including operas, an oratorio, motets and other church music, as well as trios for 2 violins, with organ continuo, and a manuscript Trio for 2 treble viols with bass and harpsichord.

E. v. d. s., rev.

BIBL.—BOLTE, J., article in V.M.W., 1891-92.

MEDERITSCH, Johann (Georg Anton Gallus) ¹ (b. Vienna, 26 Dec. 1752; d. Lwów, 18 Dec. 1835).

Bohemian conductor and composer. He became a theatre conductor in Prague in 1778, afterwards at Lwów and in Vienna, in 1781-82 in Pest and at Olomouc in 1794-96. He then settled in Vienna, where he remained for many years as a private music teacher and composer. Grillparzer was among his pupils for the pianoforte there. He composed the first act of an opera, 'Babylons Pyramiden' (second act set by Winter), to a libretto by Emanuel Schikaneder, similar in character to his libretto of 'Die Zauberflöte'. It was produced at the Theater auf der Wieden in Vienna on 25 Oct. 1797. Among his other operas are 'Orkator und Illiane' and 'Der redliche Verwalter'. His most successful plays with music (Singspiele) were 'Der Schlosser' (Olomouc, 1781), 'Rose', 'Die Seefahrer', 'Die Rekruten' and 'Der letzte Rausch'. He also composed incidental music for Shakespeare's 'Macbeth', masses, chamber music, etc.

A. L.

BIBL.—GUGITZ, GEORG, 'Der seltsame Herr Gallus-Mederitsch' ('Oesterreichische Musik-Zeitschrift', Jan. 1952, pp. 15-22).

See also Winter (collab. in 'Babylons Pyramiden').

MEDESIMO TEMPO (Ital. = the same time). An indication occasionally used in the same way as l'istesso tempo, to show that at a change of time signature the pace is to remain as before.

J. A. F.-M.

MEDIAL CADENCE. See CADENCE (I, 2).

¹ Also called Gallus.

MEDIANT (from Lat. medius, 'middle').

(1) For the use of this term in the modal system see MODES.

(2) In modern music the term is always applied to the third of the scale, by reason of its intermediate position between the tonic and the dominant. The note is important, inasmuch as it determines whether the tonality of the scale is major or minor. W. S. R.

MEDIATION (Lat. mediatio). The inflection which occurs half-way through a psalm-tone before the point of division marked in the words by a colon. (See also INFLECTION and GREGORIAN TONES.)

MEDIATORIS. See MALBECQ.

MEDICI, I (Opera). See LEONCAVALLO.

Medici, Lorenzo de'. See Rieti ('Trionfo di Bacco', ballet-cantata).

MEDINŠ, Janis (b. Riga, 9 Oct. 1890).

Latvian conductor and composer. He studied at Riga and joined the orchestra there. Later he spent two years in Russia and on his return to Riga became conductor at the National Opera and professor at the Conservatory. His compositions include the operas 'Fire and Night', 'Gods and Men' and 'Tom Thumb', a Symphony in E minor, symphonic poems and suites for orchestra, a cello Concerto, instrumental pieces, songs, etc. E. B.

MEDIO EVO LATINO (Opera). See PANIZZA.

MEDITERRANEAN MUSIC. Throughout the history of music the countries round the Mediterranean are seen to have been united by strong cultural bonds. In ancient history the eastern Mediterranean countries — Egypt, Palestine, Syria, Greece — formed a cultural group of strong affinities, while from the beginnings of European musical history the western European countries developed a musical style — decisively influenced by eastern Mediterranean trends (by way of Arabic Spain) — that set them apart from the rest of Europe. Wherever Oriental influences are felt in European music they can be traced to Mediterranean origin, i.e. especially in 14th-century secular polyphonic music, in the "Turkish" vogue of 18th-century classicism and in the Spanish rhythms so favoured by French composers in the later 19th century. These French composers — Félicien David, Saint-Saëns, Chabrier, Bizet, Lalo and many others — found a delightful source of inspiration in the rhythms of Spanish popular music and the tunes and dances of northern Africa; incorporation of these elements into their own music meant for them a turning away from the heavily coloured late romanticism of German composers.

It was the German philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche who first spoke of "Mediterranean music", after his break with Wagner, whom he had once hailed as the true successor of the Greek tragedians. "With 'Carmen' we take leave of the damp north, of all the mists of the Wagnerian ideal", said Nietzsche after having heard Bizet's work several times. "This music possesses the limpid, dry atmosphere of warmer climes." In one of his letters Nietzsche writes of the need to "mediterraneanize music" and in the marginal notes he entered into his copy of the opera's vocal score he often praises the "southern" character of the music. Yet the peak of "mediterraneanized" music came with impressionism; the colouring of the Mediterranean landscape first attracted the impressionist painters and then left its mark on the music of impressionist composers; Debussy's 'La Mer' and the "Spanish" works of Debussy and Ravel may be described as masterworks of Mediterranean music.

In the middle 1940s composers in Palestine began to talk of an "eastern-Mediterranean" style in music; seeking to combine European musical technique with traditional elements of Oriental music, these composers exploited the Oriental style of melodic invention, rhythmic organization and instrumental colouring. This new Mediterranean music is chiefly characterized by pastoral leanings, by stylization of Oriental dance rhythms and by lucid and polyrhythmic orchestration. Composers belonging to this school are Paul Ben-Haim, Ödön Partos, Alexander Uriah Boscovich and Menahem Avidom, though its influence is being felt in most works produced in modern Israel.

P. G. (ii).

Medolago, Antonio. See Vitale ('Tomiri', lib.).

MEDORO (Opera). See GAGLIANO. LUZZO.

MEDTNER (Метнеръ¹), Nikolay Karlovich² (b. Moscow, 5 Jan. 1880; d. London, 13 Nov. 1951).

Russian composer. His father's family was of German descent, but had been Russian for more than a century when the composer was born, his great-grandfather having been an actor and singer at the Imperial Theatre in St. Petersburg at the end of the 18th century. At the age of six he began to be given piano-forte lessons. He advanced very rapidly and in 1892 entered the Moscow Conservatory, where he studied the pianoforte successively under Pabst, Sapellnikov and Safonov, and theory under Arensky and Taneyev. In 1900 he left with the gold medal and the Rubinstein Prize, and in 1901–2 he toured Europe as a pianist. He became an exceptionally fine player, but not one who ever enjoyed performing in public as much as he cared for the exercise of his creative gift in retirement. There too he was bent on music of an intimate nature rather than on the production of works to impress the crowd or to secure a great following. Even his three pianoforte concertos were obviously written because he wished to express himself on a large scale through his own instrument, not because he was anxious to make their performance a public occasion. No opera or other stage work, no choral or symphonic music, not even a chamber work for more than two instruments came from his pen until he began a pianoforte Quintet late in the 1940s (finished in 1950).

¹ The name is here shown in Russian type because the current transliteration is not strictly in keeping with it: the Russian spelling should be represented by "Metner". But the composer himself transliterated it as above in order to use the original German spelling.

² Not "Raslovich", as in some dictionaries. This was a mistake due, probably, to some faulty transcription.

In his early years Medtner had no difficulty in bringing his work before the public. His first Sonata (Op. 5) was published by Belayev, and P. Jurgenson issued all his other works for some time, until he attracted the attention of the Russian Music Publishing Society, with which Kussevitsky was at that time associated. But he continued to give up some of his time to practice and performance, and in 1909 he took up a professorship at the Moscow Conservatory. This he relinquished the following year, however, and he spent a good deal of time before the first world war in giving recitals in Germany. From 1914 to 1917 he taught at the Conservatory again, and after the Revolution he did so at a school in Moscow. But in 1921 he set out on another European tour, and that was the occasion for his leaving Russia for good. He never saw his native land again except once, during a visit in 1926, which took him to Leningrad, Moscow, Kiev, Kharkov and Odessa.

Medtner's first refuge in 1921 was Germany, but although he stayed there for about three years, he found the atmosphere of political and artistic restlessness of those days uncongenial. After a tour of the U.S.A. in 1924-25 he next tried Paris, perhaps in order to be near his countrymen and friends Glazunov and Rakhmaninov. But fashionable Paris, which was then partly conservative and unenterprising in its tastes and partly given over to the cult of the new French school, had no use for him, and he made few friends among French musicians, though Marcel Dupré was an exception. A book, 'The Muse and the Fashion', he wrote at that time states his aesthetic point of view in no uncertain terms, and it was certainly not that of Paris. The book was written in Russian and was translated into English by Alfred J. Swan.

In 1930 Medtner undertook another concert tour in North America, which took him to Canada as well as the U.S.A. In 1936 he settled in England. In 1940 he and his wife were offered a refuge from the air-raids on London in Warwickshire, at the home of Edna Iles, a pianist who has done much to draw attention to Medtner's work and in 1946 played the three pianoforte concertos with the London Symphony Orchestra under George Weldon. Others, such as the pianist Arthur Alexander and the singers Tatiana Makushina and Oda Slobodskaya, have also helped to spread Medtner's work in Britain, by performing and teaching it; but although he lived in London again after the second world war, he cannot be said to have ever imposed himself on the English musical world in general. This was no doubt due in part to his retiring nature and his disdain of any sort of pushing and advertising, but also to the intimate character of his music. But it attracted the attention of the Maharajah of Mysore, at whose instigation and under whose patronage a Medtner Society began in 1948 to issue gramophone records manufactured by the Gramophone Company, Ltd.

Medtner's music is firmly rooted in tradition. He did not break new ground, but devoted himself to extending the fields cultivated by the classics. Although not averse to the use of new idiomatic resources, he regarded them as acquisitions destined to enrich the old system, not to destroy it. Even his curious experiments in rhythm must be considered as old devices used in a new and interesting way rather than as actual innovations.

Both on account of his neo-classicism and his predilection for cross-rhythms, Medtner has been described as the "Russian Brahms"; but, apart from the fact that this designation is in itself contradictory, the resemblances that have occasioned it are only superficial ones. The two composers have a certain earnestness of purpose and self-sufficing gravity in common, as well as what may be called the domestic nature of their art; but such a similarity of outlook may be found in artists whose creative faculties manifest themselves in totally dissimilar ways. Medtner is undoubtedly a modern descendant of the Beethoven-Brahms line of classical development, but he is not therefore more like Brahms than the latter is like Beethoven.

Medtner was a firm believer in absolute music. His pianoforte works, which are always pure music even where they bear picturesque titles, are the most significant and characteristic as well as the most numerous. The orchestra had little attraction for him, and in the only category of his work where he used it, the concertos, his handling of it is ineffective. Even in his songs, where a literary element necessarily obtrudes itself, the music remains abstract as far as possible.

The form in which Medtner expresses himself most completely is that of the sonata. He does not adhere very closely to the classical model, which he bends to his creative fancy with considerable freedom, but its fundamental principles serve him as the ideal mould for all his larger works. Perhaps the sonata form is occasionally apt to be his master rather than his servant. The Op. 11, for instance, may be suspected to have originally been planned as a sonata in three movements, and it would seem that, as the work progressed, each movement shaped itself inevitably into the first-movement form, and that the work thus became a "sonata-triad" of three separate and fully developed structures. Much the same appears to have happened in the case of Op. 25 No. 1, and of Op. 27, which may have been intended as a "fairy tale" and a "ballade" respectively, but grew imperceptibly into sonatas.

In spite of the organic structure of Medtner's music, it is by no means coldly formal. It is clear that each work sprang from a poetical conception, even when this is left to the hearer's imagination. In some cases it is indicated by a verbal motto, in others implied by a title such as "Dithyramb" or "Fairy Tale".¹ The latter has become especially typical of the romantic aspects of Medtner's work.

The difference between the early and the later works is not vast, for, in spite of some classical influences, the composer's personality is apparent from the beginning. His style of pianistic writing is invariably ideally suited to the instrument. Comparatively conventional in its first stages, it has constantly enriched itself by new devices, and its intricate and endlessly varied texture is the more interesting for being at times almost invincibly difficult. Here and there the problems are made unnecessarily hard to solve by Medtner's curious manner of making his rhythmic complexities apparent to the reader's eye; phrasing and accent are frequently not only indicated by the conventional signs, but reinforced by a method of linking together the groups of notes which is logical in theory but confusing in practice. A characteristic passage of this kind may here be shown in music type:

¹ The Russian word is skazka, of which "fairy tale" is not an exact equivalent. Skazky, though as fantastic

The most extensive works for the pianoforte are the concertos. In technical ingenuity Op. 33 is inferior to none of the earlier music, but the composer's excessive preoccupation with contrapuntal problems, which are overcome with consummate mastery, involves the sacrifice of much of the fanciful imagination and soaring poetry that characterizes his best work. The second Concerto, Op. 50, however, unites poetry with interesting workmanship and the third represents the composer's qualities in their fullest maturity.

For violin and pianoforte Medtner composed three sonatas and three 'Nocturnes', which not only represent him at his best as regards invention, but are admirably laid out for the two instruments, both individually and in combination.

In the songs the vocal line is somewhat lacking in lyrical breadth and adaptability to the varying character of the poetry. The great variety Medtner achieves in his vocal work is too much due to his interesting but unduly prominent accompaniments. An advantage, on the other hand, is the treatment of each poem from a purely musical point of view. Each song is confined to a definite range of colours that expresses the feeling of the poem without resorting to the description of details, which are made sufficiently salient by the words alone and need no strengthening by duplication.

A curious and interesting vocal work on a larger scale is Op. 41, the 'Sonata-Vocalise' and 'Suite-Vocalise' for voice and pianoforte, which, save for a "motto" culled from Goethe in the former, are sung without words.

E. B.

BIBL.—HOLT, R., 'Medtner and his Music' (London, 1948), issued with gramophone records.

SORABJI, K. S., 'Medtner', in 'Around Music' (London, 1932).

SWAN, ALFRED J., 'Medtner and the Music of our Times' (M. & L., VIII, 1927, p. 46).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS² PIANOFORTE AND ORCHESTRA

- Op.
33. Concerto No. 1, C mi. (1916-18).
50. Concerto No. 2, C mi. (1926-27).
60. Concerto No. 3, 'Ballade', E mi. (1942-43).
(See also Pf. solo, Op. 55 No. 2.)

CHAMBER MUSIC

Quintet, C ma., for 2 vns., viola & cello (1950).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- Op.
16. 3 Nocturnes (1908)
1. D mi.
2. G mi.
3. C mi.
21. Sonata No. 1, B mi. (1910).
43. 2 Canzoni with Dances (1923).
44. Sonata No. 2, G ma. (1924).
57. 'Sonata epica' (No. 3) (1936).

as western fairy tales, are more rustic and earthy, and animals with human attributes play a larger part in them. "Folk Tales" would be better titles for Medtner's pieces of that class.

² Dates are approximate, usually nearer those of publication than those of composition.

PIANOFORTE SOLO

Op.

1. 8 Mood Pictures (1902)
 1. Prologue.
 2. Allegro con impeto.
 3. Maestoso freddo.
 4. Andante con moto.
 5. Andante.
 6. Allegro con umore.
 7. Allegro con ira.
 8. Allegro con grazia.
2. 3 Improvisations (1902)
 1. Nixie.
 2. A Ball Reminiscence.
 3. Scherzo infernale.
4. 4 Pieces (1903)
 1. Étude.
 2. Caprice.
 3. Moment musical.
 4. Prélude.
5. Sonata, F mi. (1904).
7. 3 Arabesques (1905)
 1. An Idyll.
 2. Tragedy-Fragment, A ma.
 3. Tragedy-Fragment, G mi.
8. 2 Fairy Tales (1905)
 1. C mi.
 2. C mi.
9. 3 Fairy Tales (1906)
 1. F mi.
 2. C ma.
 3. G ma.
10. 3 Dithyrambs (1906)
 1. D ma.
 2. E♭ ma.
 3. E ma.
11. Sonata-Friad (1907)
 1. A♭ ma.
 2. D mi.
 3. C ma.
14. 2 Fairy Tales (1908)
 1. F mi.
 2. E mi.
17. 3 Novels (1909)
 1. G ma.
 2. C ma.
 3. E ma.
20. 2 Fairy Tales (1910)
 1. B♭ mi.
 2. B mi.
22. Sonata, G mi. (1911).
23. 4 Lyric Fragments (1912)
 1. C mi.
 2. A mi.
 3. F mi.
 4. C mi.
25. No. 1, Fairy-tale Sonata, C mi. (1912).
No. 2, Sonata, E mi. (1913).
26. 4 Fairy Tales (1913)
 1. E♭ ma.
 2. E♭ ma.
 3. F mi.
 4. F♯ mi.
27. Sonata-Ballade, F♯ mi. (1913).
30. Sonata, A mi. (1914).
— Fairy Tale, D mi. (1915).
31. 3 Pieces (1915)
 1. Improvisation.
 2. Funeral March.
 3. Fairy Tale.
34. 4 Fairy Tales (1916)
 1. B mi.
 2. E mi.
 3. A mi.
 4. D mi.
35. 4 Fairy Tales (1917)
 1. C ma.
 2. G ma.
 3. A mi.
 4. C♯ mi.
38. Forgotten Melodies, Vol. I (1919)
 1. Sonata reminiscenza.
 2. Danza graziosa.
 3. Danza festiva.
 4. Canzone fluviale.
 5. Danza rustica.

Op.

6. Canzone serenata.
7. Danza silvestra.
39. Forgotten Melodies ('Lyric Tunes'), Vol. II (1920)
 1. Meditatione.
 2. Romanza.
 3. Primavera
 4. Canzone mat'inata.
 5. Sonata tragica.
40. Forgotten Melodies ('Dance Tunes'), Vol. III (1920)
 1. Danza col canto.
 2. Danza sinfonica.
 3. Danza fiorata.
 4. Danza giubilosa.
 5. Danza ondulata.
 6. Danza ditirambica.
42. 3 Fairy Tales (1922)
 1. F mi.
 2. Phrygian.
 3. G♯ ma.
47. Improvisation (1926).
48. 2 Fairy Tales (1927)
 1. Dance Fairy Tale.
 2. Elf Fairy Tale.
49. 3 Hymns in Praise of Toil (1928)
 1. Before Labour.
 2. At the Anvil.
 3. After Labour.
51. 6 Fairy Tales (1929)
 1. D mi.
 2. A mi.
 3. A ma.
 4. F♯ mi.
 5. F♯ mi.
 6. G ma.
53. No. 1, 'Sonata romantica' (1930).
No. 2, 'Sonata minacciosa' (1931).
54. Romantic Sketches, 4 books (1933).
55. No. 1, Theme and Variations (1934).
No. 2, Cadenzas for Beethoven's Pf. Concerto No. 4 (1934).
56. 'Sonata idillica', G ma. (1935).
- 59a. 2 Elegies (1945)
 1. A mi.
 2. E♭ mi.

TWO PIANOFORTES

58. No. 1, 'Russian Round Dance' (1944).
No. 2, 'Knight-Errant' (1944).

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE

- 1a. 'The Angel' (Alexander Pushkin) (1902).
3. 3 Songs (1903)
 1. At the Cloister Gate (Lermontov).
 2. Extinguished are the heart's desires (Pushkin).
 3. Auf dem See (Johann Wolfgang von Goethe).
6. 9 Songs (Goethe) (1904)
 1. Wanderers Nachtlied, I.
 2. Mälied.
 3. Elfenliedchen.
 4. Im Vorübergehen.
 5. Aus 'Claudine von Villa Belia'.
 6. Inneres Wühlen.
 7. Siehe mich, Heiliger.
 8. Erster Verlust.
 9. Gefunden.
12. 3 Songs (Heinrich Heine) (1907)
 1. Lieb Liebchen.
 2. Lyrisches Intermezzo.
 3. Bergstimme.
13. 2 Songs (1907)
 1. Winter Evening (Pushkin).
 2. The Epitaph (A. Bely).
15. 12 Songs (Goethe) (1908)
 1. Wanderers Nachtlied, II.
 2. Aus 'Wilhelm Meister'.
 3. Selbstbetrug.
 4. Sie liebt mich.
 5. Aus 'Lila so tanzt'.
 6. Vor Gericht.
 7. Meeresstille.
 8. Glückliche Fahrt.

Op.

9. Nahe des Geliebten.
10. Der untreue Knahe.
11. Gleich und gleich.
12. Gerstesgruss.
18. 6 Songs (Goethe) (1910)
 1. Die Sprode.
 2. Die Bekehrte.
 3. Einsamkeit.
 4. Mignon.
 5. Das Veilchen.
 6. Jägers Abendlied.
19. 3 Songs (Friedrich Nietzsche) (1910)
 1. Gruss.
 2. Alt Mutterlein.
 3. Heimweh.
- 19a. 2 Songs (Nietzsche) (1910)
 1. Heimkehr.
 2. Verzweiflung.
24. 8 Songs (1912)
 1. Day and Night (Feodor Ivanovich Tutchev).
 2. Willow, why for ever bending (Tutchev).
 3. Sea-swell and Memories (Tutchev).
 4. Twilight (Tutchev).
 5. O'er thee I bend (A. Fet).
 6. When my glance (Fet).
 7. Whispering Nature (Fet).
 8. Greeting (Fet).
28. 7 Songs (1913)
 1. Unexpected Pain (Fet).
 2. I cannot bear to hear the birds (Fet).
 3. The Butterfly (Fet).
 4. Heavy is the gravestone (Valery Brussov).
 5. Spring Peace (Tutchev).
 6. I sit in thought (Tutchev).
 7. May God give (Tutchev).
29. 7 Songs (Pushkin) (1913)
 1. The Muse.
 2. The Singer.
 3. Sleepless Night.
 4. The Horse.
 5. Gone are my desires.
 6. The Rose.
 7. The Call.
32. 6 Songs (Pushkin) (1913 14)
 1. Echo.
 2. Remembrance.
 3. Funeral Song.
 4. I loved thee well.
 5. The Waltz.
 6. To a Dreamer.
36. 6 Songs (Pushkin) (1923)
 1. The Angel.
 2. The Flower.
 3. Roses alone die happy.
 4. Spanish Romance.
 5. Night.
 6. Orion.
37. 5 Songs (1921)
 1. Sleepless (Tutchev).
 2. Tears (Tutchev).
 3. Impromptu (Fet).
 4. Waltz (Fet).
 5. Autumn Storm (Tutchev).
41. No. 1, Sonata-Vocalise, with a motto by Goethe (1921).
No. 2, Suite-Vocalise.
45. 4 Songs (1926)
 1. Elegy (Pushkin).
 2. The Wagon of Life (Pushkin).
 3. Night Song (Tutchev).
 4. Our Time (Tutchev).
46. 7 Songs (1927)
 1. Praeludium (Goethe).
 2. Geweihter Platz (Goethe).
 3. Serenade (Eichendorff).
 4. Im Walde (Eichendorff).
 5. Winternacht (Eichendorff).
 6. Die Quelle (Chamisso).
 7. Frisch gesungen (Chamisso).
52. 7 Songs (Pushkin) (1929)
 1. The Window.
 2. The Ravens.
 3. Elegy.
 4. Omens.
 5. Spanish Romance.

Op.

6. Serenade.
7. The Captive.
59. 'Noon' (Tutchev) (1944).
- Album (Pushkin).

LITERARY WORK

'The Muse and the Fashion: being a Defence of the Foundations of the Art of Music', trans. by Alfred J. Swan (1951).

See also Stanchinsky (memorial ded.).

Medwall, Henry. See Murrill ('Fulgens and Lucrese', incid. m.).

MEERESSTILLE UND GLÜCKLICHE FAHRT ('Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage'¹). A pair of linked poems by Goethe, the following two musical treatments of which are important:

(1) A setting for chorus and orchestra by Beethoven, composed in 1815, first performed at the Great Assembly Hall (Redoutensaal) in Vienna on Christmas Day of that year and published on 28 Feb. 1823, by Steiner. It is dedicated "to the immortal Goethe". The reverse of the title-page contains three lines from Voss's translation of the 'Odyssey' (viii, 479), thus rendered by Lang and Butcher:

For from all men on earth minstrels get their meed of honour and worship; inasmuch as the muse teacheth them the paths of song, and loveth the tribe of minstrels.

A letter from Beethoven to the publisher, dated 12 June, and apparently belonging to the year 1824, calls it a cantata, and asks for the loan of the score, that he "might write a kind of overture to it". This intention does not appear to have been carried out.

(2) A concert overture for orchestra was, however, written by Mendelssohn in the summer of 1828, first performed in Berlin, 1 Dec. 1832, remodelled and "made thirty times as good as before", and published as Op. 27 and No. 3 of his Concert Overtures in 1834. We learn from a passage in his sister's diary² that Mendelssohn wished to avoid the form of an introduction and overture, and to throw his work into two companion pictures.³ G., rev.

MEERTS, Lambert Joseph (b. Brussels, 6 Jan. 1800; d. Brussels, 12 May 1863).

Belgian violinist and composer. He was a pupil of Lafont, Habeneck and Baillot. At the age of sixteen he became a member of the theatre orchestra at Antwerp. After completing his studies in Paris he returned to Brussels and established himself as a teacher and performer. In 1835 he was appointed professor of the violin at the Brussels Conservatoire. He wrote several instructive works for

¹ The current English translation is not really correct: it suggests a good voyage due to a calm sea. The subject of Goethe's twin poems is a becalmed ship waiting for a favourable wind to continue its course.

² Hensel, 'Die Familie Mendelssohn', I, 194.

³ Elgar, in the 'Romance' of his 'Enigma' Variations, quotes a phrase from this overture because this variation depicts a friend (not Lady Mary Lygon, as has been said) who was about to start on a voyage.

his instrument, including a series of duets for two violins, each study being founded on a particular rhythm extracted from one of Beethoven's symphonies. E. H.-A.

MEFISTOFELE. Opera in 4 acts, with an epilogue, by Boito. Libretto by the composer, based on Goethe's 'Faust'. Produced Milan, Teatro alla Scala, 5 Mar. 1868. 1st perf. abroad, London, Her Majesty's Theatre (in Italian), 6 July 1880. 1st in U.S.A., Boston (trans. by T. T. Barker), 16 Nov. 1880.

MEGLI, Domenico Maria (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-17th-century composer. His several books of monodies, etc., were published between 1602 and 1609, some in two editions. A song of his appears in Robert Dowland's 'Musical Banquet' (1610). R. T. D.

MEHLIG, Anna (b. Stuttgart, 11 July 1846; d. Berlin, 26 July 1928).

German pianist. She received her musical education at the conservatory of her native town and afterwards spent a year at Weimar, studying under Liszt. In 1866 she made her first appearance in England, at the Philharmonic concert in London on 30 Apr. She returned each year till 1869 inclusive, playing regularly at the Philharmonic and Crystal Palace and other concerts. She then took a long tour in America, where she met with great success. In 1875 she reappeared in England. She married at Antwerp, where she lived until 1914, when she went to Berlin. G., adds.

MÉHUL, Étienne (Nicolas)¹ (b. Givet nr. Mézières, 22 June 1763; d. Paris, 18 Oct. 1817).

French composer. He was the son of a cook, who was too poor to give him much education. Even in childhood he showed a passion for music and a remarkable perseverance in overcoming obstacles. At the age of ten he was appointed organist to the monastery of the Récollets at Givet. Having learned all that his master, a poor blind organist, could teach him, he was thrown on his own resources until the arrival, at the neighbouring monastery of Val Dieu, of a new organist, Wilhelm Hauser, whose playing had attracted the attention of the Abbot Lissoir on his visit to the Abbey of Scheusscnried in Suabia. The monks of Val Dieu, wishing to make music a special feature in their services, had a good organ, and the playing of Hauser, who was a sound and good musician, caused quite an excitement in that secluded corner of the Ardennes. Val Dieu was several leagues from Givet, but Méhul often walked over to hear Hauser; and at length, with the consent of his father, he was admitted into the monastery and became the most diligent, as he was the most gifted, of the eight pupils under Hauser's training. At fourteen he became deputy organist, and a distinguished amateur who heard him play was so struck by his evident power of imagination that he determined to take him to Paris.

In 1778 Méhul bade farewell to the flowers he loved to cultivate and to the instructor who had put him in the way to become a great musician. On his arrival in Paris he at once went to Edelmann for instruction in piano-forte playing and composition. To earn his bread he gave lessons and composed two sonatas (1781) which bear no traces of a master-mind; but this was not the line in which he was destined to distinction. In 1779 he was present at the first performance of Gluck's 'Iphigénie en Tauride', and the effect produced on one with his cultivated intellect, love of the beautiful and passionate though reserved nature was immense. He expressed his admiration to the composer himself, who received the young enthusiast graciously, gave him valuable advice and undertook his instruction in the philosophical and poetical parts of music. Encouraged by the success of a cantata with orchestra composed to one of Rousseau's sacred odes, and produced at the Concert Spirituel in Mar. 1782, he might have gone on writing church music, had not Gluck shown him his true vocation and directed his attention to the stage. Solely for practice he composed between 1787 and 1790 several operas (see list below), the scores of which are lost.

Méhul now felt himself in a position to appear before the public, and Valadier having furnished him with the libretto of 'Cora et Alonzo', taken from Marmontel, the score was soon ready and accepted by the Opéra. But there the matter ended, and tired of waiting, he resolved to try his fortune at another theatre. Having made the acquaintance of Hoffman, he obtained from him the libretto of 'Euphrosine' (1790). In this opéra-comique the public recognized at once a force, a sincerity of accent, a dramatic truth and a gift of accurately expressing the meaning of the words which were throughout the main characteristics of Méhul's mature genius. Its success was instantaneous; and the duet "Gardez-vous de la jalousie", the close of which contains a modulation as unexpected as it is effective, speedily became a favourite throughout France. Henceforth Méhul had ample opportunities of satisfying his productive instinct, and he brought out many operas in quick succession.

These were not the only works Méhul produced within seventeen years. He composed and published in addition many patriotic songs and cantatas, ballets, choruses for plays, etc., all unpublished except the 'Chant lyrique' for the inauguration of the statue voted to Napoleon by the Institut. A Mass, written for the coronation of Napoleon, but not then performed, was published in Paris in 1879.

¹ Not Étienne Henri.

The period at which he composed 'Uthal' and 'Joseph' was the culminating point of Méhul's career. He was already a member of the Institut (1795) and a chevalier of the Legion of Honour (1802), and had been inspector of instruction at the Conservatoire from its foundation in 1795. His pupils looked up to him and he was a favourite in the best society, but such homage did not blind him to the fact that in science his colleagues Cherubini and Catel were his superiors. This accounts for his laborious efforts to change his style and excel in more than one department of music. His symphonies cannot rank with those of Haydn and Mozart, and none of his other orchestral works rises to the level of his overtures. Méhul's last work, 'La Journée aux aventures' (16 Nov. 1816), kept the boards for some time. Its success was partly due to its being known at the time that the composer was dying of consumption. Two months after its production he was sent to Provence, but the change came too late; he returned to Paris and died there. Besides several other works he left the unfinished score of 'Valentine de Milan', a three-act opéra-comique completed by his nephew and pupil Méhul Daussoigne and produced on 28 Nov. 1822.

The most conspicuous quality of Méhul's work as a whole is its absolute passion. This is exemplified most strikingly in 'Stratonice' and 'Ariodant'. Not less obvious are the traces of the various influences under which he passed. Between 'Ariodant' and 'Joseph' must be placed all those repeated attempts to vary his style and convince his detractors that he could compose light and graceful airs as well as grand, pathetic and sustained melodies, which cannot be considered as anything but failures, although the ignorant amateurs of the day pronounced 'L' irato' to be true Italian music. 'Joseph', which dates from the midst of the Revolution, before the Empire, belongs to a different phase and to a different class of ideas. Méhul's noble character, his refined sentiment and religious tendencies, the traces of his early education, his acquaintance with the church modes and plainsong, and his power of writing excellent church music, are all apparent in this fine work, the simplicity, grandeur and dramatic truth of which will always command the admiration of impartial musicians. There is no doubt that Beethoven, who admired Méhul's best work — and only the best was, of course, exported to Vienna — was to some extent influenced by him, as he was also by Cherubini and Paer.

Méhul was not so fortunate as Grétry in finding a poet whose creative faculties harmonized thoroughly with his own; and he was fascinated by any subject — antique, chivalrous, Ossianic, Spanish, patriarchal or biblical — so long as it afforded him opportunities for local colouring, the importance of which he often exaggerated. His overtures to 'Le Jeune Henri', 'Horatius Cocles', 'Timoléon', and 'Les Deux Aveugles de Tolède' are, however, incomparably superior to anything of the kind which preceded them; and most striking are such passages as the introduction to 'Ariodant', where three cellos and a trombone hold a kind of dialogue, and that in 'Mélidore et Phrosine', where four horns, which have a complete part throughout the score, accompany the voice of a dying man with a kind of smothered rattle. 'Uthal' is scored entirely without violins in order to produce a soft and misty effect. Grétry was shocked at this innovation and so wearied by its monotony that he cried, on leaving the theatre after the first performance, "Six francs for a chanterelle [E-string]!"

Though Méhul's new and ingenious combinations, which, like Gossec's, sometimes anticipated those of Berlioz, were not always successful, and though his melodies were often wanting in that life and dash which rouse an audience, it must be acknowledged that his work bears the stamp of a very individual mind and character, and the impress of that mighty race of 1789, with whom to will was to do, but among whose many gifts that of grace was too often wanting. As it is, we cannot withhold our admiration from the man who carried on Gluck's work with more than Gluck's musical skill, regenerated opéra-comique and placed himself at the head of the composers of his own time and nation.

A portrait of Méhul exists in a remarkable print by Quenedey (1808). Quatremère de Quincy pronounced his eulogium at the Institut in Oct. 1818, and Vieillard, one of his intimate friends, published an interesting 'Notice' of him (Paris, 1859). The library of the Paris Conservatoire contains many of his autographs, several being fragments of unpublished operas. An 'Overture burlesque' for violin, woodwind and pianoforte, is interesting merely as a musical curiosity.

A statue of Méhul was unveiled at Givet on 2 Oct. 1892. G. C., rev.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BRANCOUR, RENÉ, 'Méhul' (Paris, 1912).
 POUJIN, A., 'Méhul: sa vie, son génie, son caractère' (Paris, 1893).
 RINGER, ALEXANDER L., 'A French Symphonist at the Time of Beethoven: Étienne Nicolas Méhul' (M.Q., XXXVII, 1951, p. 543).
 THIERY, M., 'Notice sur Méhul' (Paris, 1892).
 REPRINTS.—Sonatas for pf., Op. 1 (Breitkopf & Härtel, Leipzig).
 Sonata III, Op. 2, for pf. with vn. ad lib., ed. Mme M. Gallet (Paris, 1917).
 Symphony II, pf. score, ed. by P. Vidal (Senart, Paris).
 2 Symphonies (Breitkopf & Härtel).

DRAMATIC WORKS

OPERAS

UNPERFORMED

Title	Libretto	Composed	Remarks
'Hypsipile.'	Valadier.	1787.	? with Joseph Lenoble. ? with Lenoble.
'Laus et Lydie.'	Valadier.	1788.
'Psyché et l'Amour.'	Claude Henri Fusée de Voisenon.	Before 1790.
'Anacréon.'	Pierre Joseph Justin Bernard.	Before 1790.
'Arminius.'	?	1794.
'Scipion.'	?	1795.
'Tancrede et Chlorinde.'	Jacques Marie Boutet de Monvel.	1796.
'La Taupe et le papillon.'	?	1797.
'La Naissance d'Oscar Leclerc.'	?	?
'Agar au désert.'	Victor Joseph Étienne de Jouy.	1806.
'Sésostris.'	Antoine Vincent Arnault.	1811.

PERFORMED

Title	Libretto	Production ¹	Remarks
'Euphrosine, ou Le Tyran corrigé' (later 'Euphrosine et Coradin').	François Benoit Hoffman.	Comédie-Italienne, 4 Sept. 1790.	5 acts; reduced to 4 acts, 11 Sept. 1790; to 3 acts, 22 Aug. 1795.
'Cora.'	Valadier, based on Marmontel's novel 'Les Incas'. Hoffman.	Opéra, 15 Feb. 1791.
'Stratonice.'		Opéra-Comique ("Théâtre Favart"; formerly Comédie-Italienne), 3 May 1792.	With 11 other composers.
'Le Jeune Sage et le vieux fou.'	Hoffman.	Opéra-Comique, 28 Mar. 1793.
'Horatius Coclés.'	Antoine Vincent Arnault.	Opéra, 18 Feb. 1794.
'Le Congrès des rois.'	Antoine François Ève Maillot.	Opéra-Comique, 26 Feb. 1794.
'Mélidore et Phrosine.'	Arnault.	Opéra-Comique, 6 May 1794.
'Doria, ou La Tyrannie détruite.'	Gabriel Marie Jean Baptiste Legouvé & Charles Joseph Lœillard d'Arvigny.	Opéra-Comique, 12 Mar. 1795.	Produced as a counter-attraction to Lesueur's better-known opera of the same title at the rival Théâtre Feydeau.
'La Caverne.'	Nicolas Julien Forgeot.	Opéra-Comique, 4 Dec. 1795.
'Le Jeune Henri.'	Jean Nicolas Bouilly.	Opéra-Comique, 1 May 1797.	Rehearsed already 1792 and lib. printed as 'Adrien, empereur de Rome' in that year, but banned by the Commune.
'Le Pont de Lodi.'	Étienne Joseph Bernard Delrieu.	Théâtre Feydeau, 15 Dec. 1797.
'Adrien.'	Hoffman.	Opéra, 4 June 1799.
'Ariodant.'	Hoffman, based on Ariosto's 'Orlando furioso'.	Opéra-Comique, 11 Oct. 1799.	With C.* rubini.
'Épicule.'	Charles Albert Demoustier.	Opéra-Comique, 14 Mar. 1800.
'Bion.'	Hoffman.	Théâtre Feydeau, 27 Dec. 1800.
'L' Irato, ou L'Emporté.'	Benoît Joseph Marsollier des Vivétières.	Opéra-Comique, 18 Feb. 1801.
'Une Folie.'	Bouilly.	Opéra-Comique, 5 Apr. 1802.	With Boieldieu, Kreutzer & Isouard.
'Le Trésor supposé, ou Le Danger d'écouter aux portes.'	Hoffman.	Opéra-Comique, 29 July 1802.
'Joanna.'	Marsollier.	Opéra-Comique, 23 Nov. 1802.
'Hélène.'	Bouilly & Jacques Antoine Révéroni de Saint-Cyr.	Opéra-Comique, 1 Mar. 1803.
'Le Baiser et la quittance, ou Une Aventure de garnison.'	Louis Benoît Picard, Michel Dieulafoy & Charles de Longchamps.	Opéra-Comique, 18 June 1803.

¹ All in Paris.

Title	Libretto	Production ¹	Remarks
'L'Heureux malgré lui.'	Claude Godard d'Aucour de Saint-Just.	Opéra-Comique, 28 Dec. 1803.
'Les Deux Aveugles de Tolède.'	Marsollier.	Opéra-Comique, 28 Jan. 1806.
'Uthal.'	Jacques Maximilien Benjamin Bins de Saint-Victor, from "Ossian" (Macpherson).	Opéra-Comique, 17 May 1806.
'Gabrielle d'Estrées, ou Les Amours d'Henri IV.'	Saint-Just.	Opéra-Comique, 25 June 1806.
'Joseph.'	Alexandre Duval.	Opéra-Comique, 17 Feb. 1807.
'Les Amazones, ou La Fondation de Thèbes.'	Victor Joseph Étienne de Jouy.	Opéra, 17 Dec. 1811.
'Le Prince troubadour, ou Le Grand Trompeur de dames.'	Duval.	Opéra-Comique, 24 May 1813.
'L'Oriflamme.'	Charles Guillaume Étienne & Louis Pierre Baour Lormian.	Opéra, 31 Jan. 1814.	With Paer, Berton & Kreutzer.
'La Journée aux aventures.'	"M. Laurencin" (Paul Aimé Chapelle) & Louis Mézières-Miot.	Opéra-Comique, 16 Nov. 1816.
'Valentine de Milan.'	Bouilly.	Opéra-Comique, 28 Nov. 1822.	Posthumous work, completed by the composer's nephew, Daussoigne.

BALLETS

Title	Choreography	Production	Remarks
'Le Jugement de Paris.'	Pierre Gardel.	Opéra, 5 Mar. 1793.	Music partly from Haydn & Pleyel.
'La Dansomanie.'	Gardel.	Opéra, 14 June 1800.
'Daphnis et Pandrose, ou La Vengeance de l'amour.'	Gardel.	Opéra, 14 Jan. 1803.
'Pessée et Andromède.'	Gardel.	Opéra, 8 June 1810.

VARIOUS WORKS

- 'Philoctète à Lemnos', lyric scene, words by Antoine Renou, sung at a concert of the Société des Enfants d'Apollon, 12 June 1788.
- 'Le Faucon', vaudeville by Jean Baptiste Radet, Théâtre du Vaudeville, 23 Nov. 1793; contains at least one air by Méhul, the music of which is in the printed play.
- 'Timoléon', tragedy by André Chénier, with choruses by Méhul, Comédie-Française, 11 Sept. 1794; Méhul wrote choruses also for Chénier's tragedy 'Œdipe roi' (for the Comédie-Française, 1804, not performed).
- 'Les Hussites, ou Le Siège de Naumbourg', mélodrame by Alexandre Duval, music by Méhul, Théâtre de la Porte Saint-Martin, 14 June 1804; Méhul wrote music also for Duval's drama 'Marie, ou Les Remords d'une mère' (not performed; published 1822).
- Cantatas &c. sung at the Paris Opéra include one for Napoléon's second marriage in 1810, a 'Chant d'Ossian' for the birth of Napoleon's son, the King of Rome, in 1811 and a 'Chant triomphal' in the same year.

A. L.

See also Beaulieu (D., Requiem for M.). Berton (collab. in 'Oriflamme'). Boieldieu (collab.). Carbonel ('Dansomanie', ballet attrib. to). Chant du départ. Cherubini (collab. in 'Epicure'). Daussoigne-Méhul (recits. for 'Stratonice' & completion of 'Valentine de Milan'). Du Puy (Danish version of 'Une Folie'). Gossec (anticipation of M.). Hummel (J. W., Vars. on Romance for pf.). Kreutzer (R., collab. in 'Oriflamme'). Morlacchi (resetting of 'Jeunesse d'Henri IV', lib.). Paer (collab. in 'Oriflamme'). Weber (12, adds. to 'Hélène'; Vars. on 'Joseph' for pf.).

MEI LANFANG. See CHINESE MUSIC (MODERN).

¹ All in Paris.

MEIBOOM (Meibom, Meibomius), Marcus (b. Tønning, Slesvig-Holstein, ? 1626; d. Utrecht, 15 Feb. 1710).

German or Danish musical historian. His great work, 'Antiquae musicae auctores septem graece et latine' (Amsterdam, Elzevir), was published in 1652, which suggests that the date of his birth can hardly have been as late as 1626, as is commonly stated. The work was dedicated to Queen Christina of Sweden, at whose court he resided for some time. On one occasion, however, while singing at the queen's request his version of an ancient Greek melody, the whole court burst out laughing, and Meiboom, imagining that the queen's physician Bourdelot was the instigator of this unseemly mirth, gave him a box on the ear and was in consequence dismissed.

He took refuge with Frederick III of Denmark, who gave him a professorship at Uppsala, but he soon returned to Holland. Having endeavoured in vain to find a financier who would carry into execution his plan of restoring the ancient triremes, he went to England in 1674 with the view of making arrangements for a new edition of the Old Testament. This project also failed, and he returned to Holland. The book already mentioned is one of the most valuable sources of information on ancient music, and may be considered a precursor of Gerbert and Coussemaker. Meiboom wrote numerous other works on music and also some on geometry.

F. G.

MEIERHOFER, Wilhelmine. See KELLER (K., husband).

MEIFRED, Pierre-Joseph Émile (b. Colmar, 13 Nov. 1791; d. Paris, 28 Aug. 1867).

French horn player. As a child he learned music merely as a polite accomplishment, and on leaving school he entered the École des Arts et Métiers at Châlons. He was subsequently attached for a time to the secretarial staff of the Empress Joséphine, but in 1815 he decided to make music his profession and entered Dauprat's horn class at the Paris Conservatoire, gaining a premier prix in 1818. In the following year he joined the orchestra of the Théâtre-Italien, which he left three years later to enter that of the Opéra, where he remained until 1850. According to Fétis he was also "cor basse" in the private band of Charles X at the time of its suppression after the July Revolution, though he is not mentioned in Castil-Blaze's list of that orchestra in 1830.

Meifred was a founder-member of the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire, of which he was secretary for a number of years, and which owed a large part of its success to his talent for organization. Although fourth horn in the orchestra, he played a valve-horn solo of his own composition at their first concert, given on 9 Mar. 1828, this being the first occasion on which the valve-horn was played in public in France.

Mechanically and progressively minded, Meifred threw himself heart and soul into the development of the valve-horn, lately introduced from Germany, the country of its origin. In conjunction with the Paris maker Labbaye he greatly improved on the German model, adding tuning-slides to the valves and making it possible to use a choice of crooks.¹ This instrument was awarded a silver medal at the 1827 Exposition des Produits de l'Industrie Française. He and a clever mechanic named Deshays patented a very ingenious type of valve (Fr. pat. No. 4002 of 13 Aug. 1834), but it proved too expensive to make to become marketable. Meifred enthusiastically adopted Halary's ascending third valve system — he was almost certainly consulted over the design — in preference to the usual descending third valve, and the ascending third valve horn is still used to-day by almost all French players.

In 1832 a valve horn class was inaugurated at the Paris Conservatoire, with Meifred as professor, though it was suppressed in 1864 when Meifred retired and not reintroduced till 1903.²

Round about 1830 leading musical writers were complaining bitterly of the general inefficiency of French military bands, and it was Meifred who put forward the idea of forming a school for army musicians. This school duly came into being in 1836, under the name of Gymnase Musical Militaire, but Meifred's legitimate claim to be its director was passed over in favour of the clarinettist Berr, and when Berr died two years later the post was given to Carafa, who had recently been elected a member of the Institut. Meifred was bandmaster of one of the National Guards bands, a post he held until his death. He was given the cross of the Legion of Honour in 1848.

Meifred was reputed something of a wit and was the author of some light verse, besides being on the editorial staff of 'Mélanie' and of 'La Critique musicale'. He also wrote an excellent 'Méthode de cor chromatique ou à pistons' wherein Dauprat's teaching is applied to the valve instrument and much hand-horn technique is retained. His other writings include 'De l'étendue, de l'emploi et des ressources du cor en général et de ses corps de rechange en particulier' (1829), addressed particularly to young composers, and an interesting paper on the development of the valve, which appeared in the 'Annuaire de la Société des anciens Élèves des Écoles nationales des Arts-et-Métiers, année 1851'.

R. M. P.

Meikle, William. See Caledonica (invention of).

MEILAND, Jacob (b. Senftenberg, Saxony, c. 1542; d. Frankfort o/M., 31 Dec. 1577).

German composer. He was brought up as a chorister in the Saxon court chapel at Dresden. After attending the University of Leipzig and spending some time in travelling he was appointed Kapellmeister to the Margrave of Ansbach, till the dissolution of the chapel in 1574. The rest of his life, to his early death, Meiland spent chiefly as an invalid at Frankfort o/M., though busy to the last in bringing out his fairly numerous publications. He was highly thought of in his time as a composer of Latin and German motets, and considered even the equal of Lassus. His harmonies are often rugged, after that master's manner. He was one of the first to introduce the Italian villanella style into German secular song, paying more attention to the rhythmical declamation of the words than to the artifices of counterpoint. His works are:

- 'Cantiones sacrae' (1564), 17 Nos. a 5 and 6.
- 'Neue auserlesene teutsche Liedlein' (1569), 15 Nos. a 4 and 5.
- 'Selectae cantiones' (1572), 17 Nos. a 5 and 6.
- 'Sacrae aliquot cantiones latinae et germanicae' (1575), 33 Nos. a 4 and 5.
- 'Neue auserlesene teutsche Gesang' (1575), 18 Nos. a 4 and 5.
- 'Cantiones novae . . .' (1576), 19 Nos. a 5.
- 'Cygnae cantiones latinae et germanicae' (1590), 22 Nos. a 4 and 5.

Other works, including three settings of the Passion, are preserved in manuscript. Three Latin motets were republished in Commer's

¹ See HORN (History).

² See BREMOND.

'Musica sacra' and two German sacred songs a 4 are contained in Schöberlein. J. R. M.

Meilhac, Henri. See Belle Hélène (Offenbach). Bizet (lib.). Carmen (lib.). Fledermaus (Strauss, 2, operetta). Grande-Duchesse (Offenbach, operetta). Manon (Massenet, lib.). Massenet (2 libs.). Offenbach (12 libs.). Strauss (2, 'Fledermaus', operetta). Vie parisienne (Offenbach, lib.).

MEILI, Max (b. Winterthur, 11 Dec. 1899).

Swiss tenor singer. Having studied under F. Kraus at Munich, he became active in various European cities as oratorio and Lieder singer. Before long, however, he turned to the study of old music (medieval, Renaissance and early Baroque, especially Monteverdi and Schutz), in which he became a distinguished specialist. He has become internationally known by his gramophone records ('Anthologie sonore', H.M.V., etc.), on which he excels both vocally and as a stylist. He is a foundation member of the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis at Basel and a member of its concert team. K. V. F.

MEINARDUS, Ludwig Siegfried (b. Hooksiel, Oldenburg, 17 Sept. 1827; d. Bielefeld, 10 July 1896).

German conductor, composer, teacher and writer on music. He was first educated at the "Gymnasium" at Jever, where his father held an official post. He was intended to study theology, but was at length allowed to devote himself to the art, his parents imposing the condition that he was to become a public performer on some instrument. To this end he took up the cello, learning what he could from the Stadtmusikus of the place, who was a violinist. After making himself ill with excessive practice, he returned to school, and it was not till he had finished his studies there that he finally determined, on the advice of Schumann, who had seen some of his compositions, to embrace the profession of a composer.

At Christmas 1846 Meinardus entered the Leipzig Conservatory, but after half a year, finding that private instruction from Riccius would be more to his advantage, he accordingly remained with him for two years. In 1850 he went to Berlin in order to study with A. B. Marx, but for some reason or other he fell under the suspicions of the police and was not allowed to remain. He betook himself to Liszt at Weimar, where he stayed some months, after which he went to Erfurt as conductor of a small theatrical company and subsequently in a similar capacity to Nordhausen. At last he was provided with better credentials and succeeded in remaining in Berlin. In 1853, having finished his education with Marx, he was appointed conductor of the Singakademie at Glogau, where he remained until, in obedience to a call from Julius Rietz, he went to the Dresden Conservatory as a teacher in 1865. In 1874 he settled at Hamburg, where he was for many years continuously active as a composer and as critic of the 'Hamburger Korrespondent'. In 1887 he moved to Bielefeld, to take up a post as organist.

The most prominent compositions by Meinardus are the oratorios 'Simon Petrus', 'Gideon', 'König Salomo', 'Luther in Worms' and 'Odrun'; two operas, 'Bahnesa' (three acts, finished 1881) and 'Doktor Sassafras' (neither of them performed); four ballads for chorus, 'Rolands Schwanenlied', 'Frau Hitt', 'Die Nonne' and 'Jung Baldurs Sieg'; two symphonies; many chamber compositions. A memoir of Mattheson, an autobiographical sketch and collected criticisms are his most important contributions to literature. J. A. F. M.

Meisl, Carl. See Beethoven ('Weihe des Hauses', incid. m.).

Meissner, Leopold Florian. See Kienzl ('Evangelium', opera).

MEISTERARCHIV. See ARCHIV FÜR PHOTOGRAMME.

MEISTERSINGER. See SONG, p. 912.

BIBL.—BELL, CLAIR HAYDEN, 'Georg Hager: a Meistersinger of Nurnberg, 1552-1624' (Cambridge, 1947).

JONAS, R., 'Adam Puschmann, Grundlicher Bericht des deutschen Meistersanges zusamt der Tabulatur, 1571' (Halle, 1888).

MEISTERSINGER VON NÜRNBERG, DIE. Opera in 3 acts by Wagner. Libretto by the composer, based in part on Wagenseil's treatise, 'Von der Meistersinger holdseligen Kunst' and just possibly on hints from Dekker's 'The Shoemaker's Holiday'.¹ Produced Munich, 21 June 1868. 1st perf. abroad, Vienna, Court Opera, 27 Feb. 1870. 1st in England, London, Drury Lane Theatre (in German), 30 May 1882. 1st in U.S.A., New York (in German), 4 Jan. 1886.

MEKKU-PUKKU (Instrument). See BABYLONIAN MUSIC.

MEL (Mell), Gaudio. A 16th-century composer's name doubtfully connected with any person having had an individual existence. If he did exist, he may or may not have been a pupil of Palestrina in Rome about 1540. He has also been variously but uncertainly identified with Arcadelt, Firmin Le Bel and even (on account of the similarity of names) with Goudimel, who, however, was never in Rome. E. B.

MEL², Renatus (Rinaldo) del (b. Mechlin³, c. 1554; d. ?, c. 1598).

¹ See H. Laue, 'Die Operndichtung Lortzings' (1932), p. 32, for details of the sources and a 'Meistersinger' bibliography.

² He is not to be confused with Gaudio Mell, a name which Adami ('Osservazioni per ben regolare la Cappella pontificale', Rome, 1711). Liberati ('Lettera in risposta ad una del Sig. Pers.' [B.M., 556 c. 8]) and Martini ('Giudizio di Apollo', bound up with the 3rd vol. of his 'Storia della musica', B.M., 557) gave to Goudimel.

³ Eitner thought that Mel was probably born at Scheltstadt in Alsace, but G. van Doorslaer found an

Flemish composer. In 1562 his mother, then widowed, entered him as a choir-boy at the church of Saint-Rombaud at Mechlin, where he was enrolled as Renatus del Melle on 13 Mar. of that year. He learnt music there under Séverin Cornet. When Mechlin was sacked by the Duke of Alba in 1572 he was obliged to seek employment elsewhere. He went to serve King Sebastian of Portugal and his successor, Cardinal Don Henriquez, as maestro de capilla. But in 1580 he went to Rome, leaving Portugal possibly because of its annexation by Spain in that year. He entered the service of Archdeacon Carolo Valignano, and according to Baini¹ he studied under Palestrina. At any rate he must have come into contact with that master, whose work he greatly admired. He contributed to a subscription for two new bells for the church of Santa Maria in Campo Santo.²

Mel's publications began in 1581 with a first book of motets for 4-8 voices, and between that year and 1595 he published 5 books of motets and 15 of madrigals, besides contributing to various collections which carried his name from Rome to Venice, Nuremberg, Antwerp and Munich. In July 1578 he was at Liège, as is shown by the dedication of a book of 'Madrigali a 6' (Antwerp, 1588) to Ernest, Duke of Bavaria, in whose service some members of his family were at Liège and into whose employ he himself went as chapel master in 1588. But he left it in Nov. and went to Antwerp, where he published his 'Sacrae cantiones' the following year.

By 1591 Mel was back in Italy, in the service of Cardinal Gabriele Paleotto, Archbishop of Bologna, who had himself some knowledge of music.³ When the diocese of Sabina was placed under Paleotto's charge in 1591 he founded a college, improved the cathedral at Magliano and made many changes in the internal government. The appointment of a new maestro di cappella agrees well enough with these facts, and it is in the year 1591 that we hear of Mel's appointment to the cathedral and the new college. He writes from Calvi, a little town near Magliano, on 20 Mar. 1593, and from Magliano⁴ itself, in 1595. From this time his publications cease, and we have no further record of him.

Paleotto died in July 1597, and Mel may have returned to Antwerp. At any rate it was in a book entitled 'Le Rossignol musical' published there in 1598 that 8 French chansons of his appeared. But whether he died in Italy or in the Netherlands remains unknown.

Prose prints a litany of Mel's in the 'Musica divina', II, iii (Ratisbon, 1869), and Commer's 'Musica sacra' contains 7 motets and a litany. The Motet Society published an anthem with English words, 'O praise the Lord', adapted by Aldrich (III, 128). Numerous sacred and secular works by Mel are known.

J. R. S.-B., adds.

BIBL.—DOORSLAER, G. VAN, 'René del Mel, compositeur du XVI^e siècle' ('Annales de l'Académie Royale d'Archéologie de Belgique', 6th ser., IX, ev. 4), pp. 221-88.

MELANI. Italian family of musicians, eight brothers, sons of a sexton at Pistoia.

(1) Jacopo Melani (b. Pistoia, 6 July 1623; d. Pistoia, 1676), composer. He was, with Mazzocchi and others, one of the pioneers of comic opera in Rome and famous for his arias on a basso ostinato. The following operas are his most important: 'Il podestà di Colognole'⁵, produced at the opening of the Teatro della Pergola, Florence, Dec. 1656; 'Ercole in Tebe', at the same theatre, 8 July 1661; 'Girello', Florence, Teatro Cocomero, 20 Jan. 1670.⁶

See also Acciaiuoli (lib.).

(2) Atto Melani (b. Pistoia, 31 Mar. 1626; d. ?, 1714), male soprano singer, brother of the preceding. He sang the title-part in Rossi's 'Orfeo' when performed in Paris in 1647.

(3) Francesco Maria Melani (b. Pistoia, 3 Nov. 1628; d. ?), male soprano singer, brother of the preceding. He sang the part of Amastris in Cavalli's 'Serse' in Paris in 1660. Later he became a Servite monk under the name of Filippo.

(4) Bartolomeo Melani (b. Pistoia, 6 Mar. 1634; d. ?), singer, brother of the preceding. He sang in the Munich court chapel in 1657-58, but was arrested in the latter year for political intrigues.

(5) Alessandro Melani (b. Pistoia, ?; d. Rome, Oct. 1703), composer, brother of the preceding. He was maestro di cappella successively at San Petronio, Bologna (1660), Santa Maria Maggiore, Rome (from 1667) and San Luigi de' Francesi there (from 1672). He wrote operas ('Il carceriere di se medesimo' [Florence, 1681], 'Chi geloso non è, amar non sa', 'L'empio punito'), oratorios, cantatas, motets and other church music, arias, etc.

See also Acciaiuoli (lib.).

entry showing his birth at Mechlin in the archives of that town. Moreover, his description as a gentilhuomo fiammengo can hardly have been due to a printer's error, as Eitner suggested, since he is called a Fleming on more than one publication. See also footnote 4.

¹ 'Memorie di Palestrina.'

² In the subscription list he signed himself "Musicus D. Renerus alias Renatus del Mel. Mechliniensis", a further proof that his birthplace was not Schlettstadt.

³ See Fantuzzi, 'Notizie delli scrittori bolognesi' (Bologna, 1788).

⁴ See dedication of 'Liber 5us motectorum' (Venice, 1595).

⁵ Entitled 'La Tancia, ovvero Il podestà di Colognole' in a score discovered by Romain Rolland, now in the Biblioteca Chigi in Rome.

⁶ It is not quite certain that Melani was the composer, but the music is certainly not by Pistocchi, to whom it is sometimes ascribed. (See Loewenberg, 'Annals of Opera', p. 23.)

(6) Antonio Melani (b. Pistoia, ?; d. ?), composer, brother of the preceding. He was in the service of the Archduke Ferdinand Karl of Austria in 1659 and composed 'Scherzi musicali . . .' for 2 violins and viola (Innsbruck, 1689), etc.

(7) Domenico Melani (b. Pistoia, ?; d. ?), male soprano singer, brother of the preceding. He sang at the Saxon court at Dresden from 1654 and returned to Italy in 1680 as agent for the elector. He died some time before 12 Nov. 1693.

(8) Nicola Melani (b. Pistoia, ?; d. ?), male soprano singer, brother of the preceding. Like Domenico (7) he sang at the Dresden court from 1654. E. v. d. s.

MELARTIN, Erkki (Erik Gustaf) (b. Kakisalmi [Kexholm], 7 Feb. 1875; d. Pukinmäki [Boxbacka], 14 Feb. 1937).

Finnish pianist, conductor, writer on music and composer. He was a pupil of Wegelius for composition and of Ingeborg Hylander for pianoforte at the Helsingfors Conservatory from 1895 to 1898. In 1899-1901 he studied in Vienna under Robert Fuchs. In 1901 he was appointed teacher of composition at the Helsingfors Conservatory, a post he held until he became conductor of the orchestra at Viipuri (Viborg) five years later. He returned to the capital when he was appointed director of the Conservatory in 1911. He did much to bring the institution up to a high level of efficiency. In 1919 he was given the Professor's title, and he retired in 1922.

Melartin was a highly educated and intelligent personality, a painter, philosopher and traveller as well as a musician. His 'Credo' (1928), a book of aphorisms, was translated into several languages. The following works must be listed:

Opera 'Aino', "mystery play" (libretto by Jalmari Finne, based on the 'Kalevala') (1907), prod. Helsingfors, 10 Dec. 1909.

Ballet 'Sininen helmi' ('The Blue Pearl') (1930).

Symphony No. 1, C mi. (1902).

Symphony No. 2, E mi. (1904).

Symphony No. 3, F ma. (1907).

Symphony No. 4, 'Summer Symphony', E ma. (1913).

Symphony No. 5, 'Sinfonia brevis', A mi. (1924).

Symphony No. 6 (usually called 'The Four Elements').

Symphony No. 7, 'Gaia' (1936), unfinished.

Symphony No. 8, (1936-37), unfinished.

Several symph. poems and orch. suites.

Vn. Concerto.

String Quartet No. 1, E mi. (1896).

String Quartet No. 2, G mi. (1900). Op. 36.

String Quartet No. 3, E♭ ma.

String Quartet No. 4, Op. 62, F ma.

Other chamber music for stg. & wind insts.

2 Sonatas for vn. & pf.

Pf. Sonatas & c. 400 pieces.

Over 300 songs.

Also incidental music for plays, melodramas, cantatas, folksong arrangements, & c.

A. R.

MELBA, (Dame) Nellie (Helen Mitchell) (b. Burnley on the "Yarra Braes" nr. Melbourne, 19 May 1859; d. Sydney, 23 Feb. 1931).

Australian soprano singer of Scottish descent. Her father, David Mitchell, a Scottish contractor, had settled in Australia. He was proud of his child's precocious musical talent and allowed her to sing at a concert in the Richmond (Melbourne) Town Hall when only six years old. He objected, however, to her adopting music as a profession. It was only after her marriage in 1882 to Captain Charles Porter Armstrong that the young soprano finally determined to follow a musical career; nor did she go to Europe until the spring of 1886, when, after a solitary appearance at Prince's Hall, London (1 June), she went to Paris to study under Mathilde Marchesi.

Her period of tutelage was rapid and brilliant, for after twelve months' work her teacher pronounced her ready for the stage, and on 12 Oct. 1887 she made her début as Gilda in Verdi's 'Rigoletto' at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels, under the name of "Melba", obviously derived from that of her native city, Melbourne. She achieved instantaneous success and was soon afterwards engaged by Harris for his first season of Italian Opera at Covent Garden in 1888, where she appeared in the title-part of Donizetti's 'Lucia di Lammermoor' on 24 May.

From the outset the London public was rapturous in its warmth. Calmer critics readily perceived what was still lacking to the equipment of a really great and finished artist; but none could gainsay the uncommon character of her endowments — the extraordinary beauty of her silvery tone, its bright, "girlish" quality and remarkable evenness throughout a compass of two and a half octaves (b♭ to f'''), and above all the excellence of a method that plainly owed as much to nature as it did to art. In her brilliant execution of the most difficult fioriture nothing impressed more than a wonderful flexibility, unless it was the unfailing ease and perfect sense of restraint with which the singer accomplished her tours de force. This rare faculty for using her tone within rather than beyond its true limit of resonant power remained one of the most striking and beneficial features of Melba's method. Once, in America, she was so ill-advised as to attempt the part of Brünnhilde in 'Siegfried'. But it was for a single night only. Fortunately she perceived that disaster must ensue if she persisted in taking the later Wagnerian parts and took care never to repeat her error.

In the spring of 1889 Melba made her début at the Paris Opéra and sang Ophelia with great success to the Hamlet of Lassalle in Ambroise Thomas's opera. She also prepared the parts of Marguerite and Juliette under the personal instruction of Gounod, and later in the year undertook both at Covent Garden, where 'Roméo et Juliette' was then performed in French for the first time. With Jean and Édouard de Reszke she shared a memorable triumph in these operas, while her vocal and dramatic resources alike manifested a marked advance. Thenceforward she took part regularly in every Covent Garden season without missing a single summer. In 1890 Melba added to her repertory the parts of Elsa ('Lohengrin') and Esmeralda (in the French revival of Goring Thomas's opera); subsequently Violetta in 'La Traviata', Micaela in 'Carmen', Rosina in 'Il barbiere' and the Queen in 'Les Huguenots'. In 1893 she created in London the part of Nedda in 'Pagliacci' and eleven years later that of Hélène in the opera so named, written for her by Saint-Saëns.

In 1891 she accompanied the de Reszkes to St Petersburg, by special invitation of the tsar, and was welcomed there with extraordinary warmth. In 1892 she sang at La Scala, Milan, and followed up her triumphs there with a brilliant tour through Italy. Next year she fulfilled the first of many successful engagements in the U.S.A., making her début with the de Reszkes at Chicago, during the World's Fair. In 1894 she sang for the first time at the Handel Festival in London. In 1902, after an absence of sixteen years, she revisited Australia, making her reappearance at Melbourne on 27 Sept., and she subsequently gave concerts at Sydney, Brisbane, Adelaide and many other towns. During the next twenty years she continued to travel much, to work constantly and to add to her honours in different parts of the world; dividing her home life pretty equally between England and Australia. She received numerous decorations, among the more prominent being that of a Dame Commander of the Order of the British Empire.

Among her more notable tours were those in Canada and the U.S.A. in 1903. It was while travelling there that she studied the part of Hélène in Saint-Saëns's opera, which she first sang at Monte Carlo in Feb. 1904, and also in London, at Covent Garden on 20 June of the same year. During that season she organized a very successful concert at the Queen's Hall in aid of Queen Charlotte's Hospital; and, inter alia, sang for King Edward and Queen Alexandra at Buckingham Palace for the entertainment of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand of Austria. On this occasion the queen pinned on her breast the Order of Science, Art and Music. While in New York the following winter she was compelled by a long and dangerous illness to cancel most of her tour, but sang once in 'La Bohème' at the Metropolitan Opera House. She appeared regularly at Covent Garden, and in 1905 her English engagements included the Bristol Musical Festival.

In Jan. 1907 Melba's appearances at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, rescued from financial disaster Oscar Hammerstein's initial enterprise in the domain of grand opera. She then sang the parts of Lucia, Gilda, Mimi and Violetta with, if possible, greater success than ever before in America, and the houses were extraordinary. Later in the year she revisited Australia, chiefly for a holiday, but in May 1908 was back in London taking part at a gala performance at Covent Garden in honour of President Fallières. And so the record went on for year after year, until 1926, when her final farewells of the public were announced -- in opera at Covent Garden in the summer and in the concert-room at the Royal Albert Hall in the autumn. H. K.

BIBL.—COLSON, Percy, 'Melba' (London, 1931).

MELBA, NELLIE, 'Melodies and Memories' (London, 1925).

MURPHY, AGNES, 'Melba' (London, 1909).

MELCER (Melcer-Szczawiński), Henryk (b. Kalisz, 21 Sept. 1869; d. Warsaw, 18 Apr. 1928).

Polish pianist, conductor and composer. He studied at the Warsaw Conservatory with Strobl (pianoforte) and Noskowski (composition) and later with Leschetizky in Vienna. In 1895 he became professor at the Lwów Conservatory. Five years later, having failed to obtain the post of director, he left Lwów for a short time. For two years (1901–2) he conducted the Lwów Philharmonic Orchestra. In 1903 he went to Vienna to take up a post as pianoforte teacher at the Music School. In 1908, however, he returned to Poland and became director and conductor of the Warsaw Philharmonic Orchestra and in 1922 director of the State Conservatory there. He died suddenly while giving a music lesson.

Melcer was not only one of the best Polish pianists, but as a teacher he educated a whole generation of Polish musicians. His first pianoforte Concerto gained the Rubinstein Prize in Vienna in 1895 and the second the Paderewski Prize at Leipzig in 1898. His compositions include the following:

Opera 'Maria' (libretto based on a poem by Malczewski), prod. Warsaw, 16 Nov. 1904.

'Protesilaus and Leodamia' (after a play by S. Wyspiański) for soprano, women's chorus & orch.

'Pani Twardowska', choral ballad (on a poem by Mickiewicz).

Pf. Concerto No. 1, E mi.

Pf. Concerto No. 2, C mi.

Songs (Richard Delmel), for voice & orch.

Sonata, G ma., for vn. & pf., Op. 10.

'Dumka' for vn. & pf. (after a song by Moniuszko).

Variations on a folk theme and numerous other works for pf.

He also made many pianoforte arrangements of songs by Moniuszko, among which 'Prząśniczka' ('The Spinner') was widely popular. C. R. H.

MELCHERS, Henrik Melcher (b. Stockholm, 30 May 1882).

Swedish composer. He studied violin at the Stockholm Conservatory and composition with

J. Lindegren in 1896–1902, and made further studies at the Paris Conservatoire in 1908–12 and at Sondershausen (conducting) in 1921. He was appointed music critic of 'Dagens Tidning' in 1920 and teacher at the Stockholm Conservatory in 1926. In 1932 he was elected a member of the Academy of Music.

His orchestral works, which reveal French influence, comprise a Symphony in D minor; symphonic pieces including 'Näcken' (1916), two Elegies and 'Swedish Rhapsody' (1914).

He has also composed:

2 concertos for pf. & orch.

Concerto for vn. & orch.

Songs with orchestra, including 'Acht Zigeunerlieder' (1910).

String Quartet.

Sonata for vn. & pf.

Sonata for cello & pf.

Songs.

K. D.

BIBL.—Article in 'Röster i Radio' (1942, No. 32).

MELCHIOR, Lauritz (b. Copenhagen, 20 Mar. 1890).

Danish tenor singer. After studying at the Royal Opera School in Copenhagen he made his début there in 1913. A powerful physique and a robust voice marked him out as a Wagnerian Heldtenor and he has sung all the heroic parts from Lohengrin to Parsifal in the chief opera-houses of Germany, as well as at Covent Garden in London, and in many capital cities in Europe and America. He made his first appearance at Covent Garden in the summer season of 1924 as Siegmund. After that date he became one of the mainstays of Wagnerian performances in London and at the Metropolitan Theatre, New York, until the outbreak of the second world war, after the conclusion of which he sang again in the U.S.A., but not in England.

Melchior's great powers of endurance were found to enable him to sing through a 'Ring' cycle as Siegmund and Siegfried, without tiring, and his performance of Siegfried's final narration was usually remarkable for its freshness of voice. His Tristan was likewise notable for its unflagging vigour, and he must be regarded as one of the best interpreters of the part in his generation from the vocal if not always from the histrionic point of view. His singing generally was distinguished by expressiveness in the treatment of the words rather than by musical feeling for line and rhythm.

Melchior has also sung a number of Italian tenor parts, including Verdi's Othello. But his style is essentially German, and it is in Wagner that he is heard at his best. Melchior holds the appointment of singer to the Danish court and, among other honours and decorations, the titles of Knight of Dannebrog and Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. He is hon. president of the Richard Wagner Society of America.

D. H. (ii).

MELCHISSEDEC, Pierre Léon (b. Clermont-Ferrand, 7 May 1843; d. Paris, 23 Mar. 1925).

French baritone singer. Educated at the Paris Conservatoire, he won the second prize for opera and opéra-comique in 1865, and made his début the same year at the Opéra-Comique in 'Le Toréador' and 'Le Chalet' by Adolphe Adam. He created the principal part in 'Le Premier Jour de bonheur' (Auber, 1868), Ourrias in 'Mireille' (Gounod, 1874) and a part in 'L'Amour africain' (Paladilhe, 1875). He went on to the Théâtre-Lyrique, first appearing there in 1876 in Joncières's 'Dimitri'; and there he created the chief parts in 'Paul et Virginie' (Massé), 'Le Timbre d'argent' (Saint-Saëns, 1877), etc.

Melchissédec joined the Paris Opéra on 17 Nov. 1879, in 'Les Huguenots', and remained there until 1892. Among his most important parts may be mentioned those in 'Le Tribut de Zamora' (Gounod, 1881), 'Françoise de Rimini' (Ambroise Thomas, 1882), 'Le Cid' (Massenet, 1885), 'Roméo et Juliette' (Gounod, 1888), etc.

Melchissédec was professor of vocal declamation at the Conservatoire in 1894–1923; among his pupils may be mentioned Gresse, Gilly, Friant, Mmes Chenal, Courso, A. Daumas, etc. He was an excellent singer, but was generally regarded as an inferior actor. He possessed a fine baritone, well-modulated, and was a capable vocalist. He published two works of instruction: 'Pour chanter: ce qu'il faut savoir; ma méthode' (1913) and 'Le Chant, la déclamation lyrique' (1924).

J. G. P.

BIBL.—'Comoedia' (25 Apr. 1913, 25 Mar. 1925).

MELE, Giovanni Battista (b. Naples, ?; d. ? Madrid, ?).

Italian 18th-century composer. He settled in Spain about 1735 and wrote two operas to Spanish words, 'Por amor y por lealtad' and 'Amor, constanza y mujer', both translations from Metastasio and performed at Madrid in 1736–37. Between 1744 and 1751 he produced about half a dozen Italian serenatas for court festivities at the palaces of Aranjuez and Buen Retiro. Some scores have been preserved in Paris and Naples, while others may be in Spanish libraries. Librettos of his 'Il vello d'oro conquistato' (words by Pico della Mirandola, 1748) and 'Armida placata' are in the B.M. The latter served for a revival in 1751 (not for the original production in 1750) and as Mele's name is mentioned in it it disproves the assertion¹ that the music was by Conforto.

A. L.

See also Corradini (collab. in 'Polifemo').

Mélesville, Anne Honoré Joseph. See Adam (Adolphe, 2 libs.). Auber (4 libs.). Brüll ('Goldene Kreuz', lib.). Cherubini ('Ali Baba', lib.). Donizetti ('Borgomastro di Saardam', opera). Grisar (2 libs.). Hérold (2 libs.). Lortzing ('Zar und Zimmermann', opera). Moniuszko ('Bettly', opera). Offenbach (2 libs.). Rossi (Lauro, 'Borgomastro di Schiedam', opera). Zampa (Hérold, lib.). Zar und Zimmermann (Lortzing, opera).

¹ S. A. Stoudemire, 'Metastasio in Spain' ('Hispanic Review', Vol. IX, No. 1, Jan. 1941).

MELGUNOV, Julius Nikolayevich (b. Vetluga, Gvt. of Kostroma, 11 Sept. 1846; d. Moscow, 31 Mar. 1893).

Russian pianist and writer on music. In his school days he took pianoforte lessons with Dreyschöck and at the age of eighteen made his début in St. Petersburg as a pianist. He studied theory with Laroche and was for a short time a student at the Moscow Conservatory. About 1875 he became acquainted with Rudolph Westphal, then professor in the Katkov Lyceum in Moscow. Melgunov was attracted to Westphal's theories and co-operated with him in bringing out ten of Bach's fugues in a special edition, with a preface entitled 'The Rhythmic Execution of Bach's Fugues'. When, shortly afterwards, Westphal gave a series of sixty concerts in Germany in order to propagate his views upon musical rhythm, Melgunov accompanied him as pianist. He also toured in Russia with the violinist Laub and the cellist Davidov.

Melgunov's most important work was the elaboration of a more accurate method of noting down folksongs. The results of his researches in folk music are published under the following title:

Russian Songs, written down directly from the singing of the people, transcribed for pianoforte with text; Part I with the co-operation of Klenovsky (Moscow, 1879); Part II with the co-operation of Blaramberg (St. Petersburg, 1885).

His leading ideas were the following: that the folksongs are based upon two diatonic scales, the major and natural minor, and that the intervals of the latter are exactly the same as those of the major reversed $\left(\begin{array}{cccccccc} e & d & c & b & a & g & f \\ 1^{\circ}T. & 1^{\circ}T. & \frac{1}{2}T. & 1^{\circ}T. & 1^{\circ}T. & 1^{\circ}T. & \frac{1}{2}T. \end{array} \right$; that they are sung "polyphonically", not, as was once erroneously supposed, in unison; that their harmony is formed by working out the principal melody in independent contrapuntal parts (podgolosky), and unison is found only at the close of the songs, or in their rhythmic sections; that the rhythm is inseparably connected with the text and conforms to the rhythmic principles of the Greeks. Melgunov finds no chromatic or enharmonic changes in the folksongs, and the perfect fifth is of rare occurrence. By writing down all the secondary parts he revealed the entire structure of the songs. As these podgolosky are generally free improvisations, and to write them all down from ear at once is practically impossible, it often happens in Melgunov's song notations that all his secondary parts do not harmonize with the principal melody. Subsequently Evgenia Linev carried Mel-gunov's work much farther, and by the help of the phonograph obtained some very accurate records of the peasant partsongs, just as they are sung by the people.

Besides the above publication, Melgunov left the following treatises on this subject: 'On Russian National Music' ('Russian Ethnographical Review', V, VI), 'A Correct Method of Writing Down the Folksongs', 'The Rhythm of the Slavonic Folksongs', etc.

R. N.

MELII, Pietro Paolo (b. Reggio, ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-17th-century theorbo player. He was in service in Vienna. His fourth 'Intavolatura di liuto attiorbato' (1616) contains some elaborately scored music used for a ballet there in 1615. Other books of theorbo music appeared in 1612, 1614 and 1616.

R. T. D.

MELIŠ, Emanuel Antonín (b. Zminné nr. Pardubice, 15 Oct. 1831; d. Vršovice, Prague, 27 June 1916).

Czech writer on music. He studied at the "Gymnasium" of Pardubice and afterwards read law in Prague. In 1851 he began to contribute to several Czech periodicals and from 1857 devoted himself for several years entirely to writing on music. He was the founder and editor (1858-64, 1869) of 'Dalibor', the first Czech musical periodical of importance. Besides innumerable articles dealing with history, biography and criticism which appeared in 'Dalibor', he contributed valuable entries to the first Czech encyclopaedia ('Riegrův Slovník naučný', Prague, 1860-74) and to Mendel-Reissmann's 'Musikalisches Konversationslexikon' (Berlin, 1870-1883).

G. Č.

MELISMA (Gr. μέλισμα, a "song"; plur. melismata). (1) In plainsong the term is used for a group of notes set to a single syllable; hence the more elaborate plainsong style is often called melismatic.

W. H. F.

(2) Any kind of air or melody, as opposed to recitative or other music of a purely declamatory character. It is frequently used in the sense of fioritura or even cadenza.

* J. A. F.-M.

MELL, Davis (fam. Davie) (b. Wilton nr. Salisbury, 15 Nov. 1604; d. London, ?).

English violinist. He was a clockmaker settled in London by the middle of the 17th century, and was one of the signatories of the Cromwellian petition for the establishment of a national college of music. He is honourably mentioned by Aubrey and Anthony Wood. In the year 1657 he visited Oxford, where, as we learn from Wood's Diary:

Peter Pett, Will. Bull, Ken. Digby, and others of Allsoules, as also A. W. did give him a very handsome entertainment in the Taverne cal'd "The Salutation" in S. Marie's Parish. . . . The Company did look upon Mr. Mell to have a prodigious hand on the Violin, & they thought that no person, as all in London did, could go beyond him. But, when Tho. Baltzar, an Outlander, came to Oxon. in the next year, they had other thoughts of Mr. Mell, who, tho he play'd farr sweeter than Baltzar, yet Baltzar's hand was more quick, & could run it insensibly to the end of the Finger-board.

Mell succeeded Lanier as Master of the King's Band at the Restoration and was followed, at the close of 1661, by Thomas Baltzar. Pieces by him are in Christopher Simpson's 'Division Violin' (1684).

Aubrey¹ tells a curious story of a child of Mell's who was cured of a crooked back by the touch of a dead hand.

W. S. R.

MELLERS, Wilfrid (Howard) (b. Leamington, 26 Apr. 1914).

English musicologist and composer. He was educated at Leamington College and Cambridge, where he read English and music (1933-38), but he studied composition chiefly with Egon Wellesz and received much advice from Edmund Rubbra. His first appointment was at Dartington Hall (1938-40). From 1940 to 1946 he was extra-mural lecturer in music for Birmingham and Cambridge Universities. In 1945 he was appointed supervisor in English and music at Downing College, Cambridge, remaining there until 1948, when he became staff tutor in music to the extra-mural department of Birmingham University, a post he still holds (1953).

Mellers quickly built up a high reputation as a writer on music. From 1940 he was music editor of 'Scrutiny' and at the same time contributed articles on a vast range of subjects to all the principal periodicals. He is keenly interested in the social background of music, and his first published book (1946) was 'Music and Society'. He followed this with 'Studies in Contemporary Music' (1948) and 'François Couperin and the French Classical Tradition' (1950), a brilliant and extensive study which supersedes anything else on Couperin, even in France, and set the seal on his reputation in musical research.

As a composer Mellers has won recognition more slowly, partly because few of his works fit readily into an ordinary public concert. His purely orchestral and instrumental works are few, and are far exceeded in number by commissioned works for special groups of voices and instruments not often to be assembled. His preference for vocal music is an inevitable reflection of his sympathies and outlook as a student of literature as well as of music. He shares with Rubbra a deep interest in Elizabethan poetry and has sought in his treatment to re-create the spirit of contemporary musical settings, the basic diatonic structure of his music being enriched and made more supple, like Rubbra's, by a modal chromaticism and fluidity of key approximating to the technique and spirit of the Elizabethan composers. But the scope of his studies has subjected him to a considerably greater variety of musical influences, which are reflected in his own style. His work with Wellesz, for instance, inevitably aroused his interest in twelve-note technique, although he has not attempted to use it himself. Consequently his harmonic range is considerably more eclectic than Rubbra's, and his use of dissonance bolder, though some affinity of spirit remains.

It is since the end of the second world war that the process of absorption of new musical influences in Mellers's music has given way to the evolution of a distinctive personal language, and he has now discarded nearly all the works written before that (almost as many as those written since). Since that time, too, the composer has justly begun to compete with the scholar for general recognition. In 1946 the string Trio was given at Wigmore Hall, and the Serenade for oboe, clarinet and bassoon was commissioned by the Institute of Contemporary Arts. He provided music for a production of 'Prometheus' (Aeschylus) at Birmingham University in 1947 and was commissioned to write incidental music for 'Lysistrata' (Aristophanes) produced at the Highbury Little Theatre there in the following year. Also in 1948 he wrote the cantata 'The Song of Ruth' at the request of Homerton College, Cambridge, and in 1949 the W.M.A. Singers commissioned and performed in London the cantata 'News from Greece'. Several other cantatas have since been asked for, including 'Nausicaa's Welcome' (Attingham Summer School, 1952) and 'The White Island' (Stafford Women's Training-College, 1952). In 1951 the cantata 'Yggdrasil' was commissioned by and performed, with outstanding success, at Bryanston Summer School under Roger Desormière, and the 'Festival Galliard', an interlude from his opera on Marlowe, was given at the Birmingham Festival of British music. His song cycle 'Some of Gravity, Some of Mirth' was also performed at a Morley College concert. The distance that Mellers has travelled between 'The Song of Ruth' and these songs is immense, and the later work would hardly be recognized as by the same composer as the earlier. These later works distinguish Mellers as one of the most important and original composers of his generation in Britain. He considers himself an operatic composer above all. His most ambitious work so far is the opera 'The Tragical History of Christopher Marlowe'. It has a classically tragic libretto, and is deeply moving, giving an impression of great dramatic power.

The following is a list of Mellers's principal works still acknowledged by the composer:

¹ 'Miscellanies', under the article 'Miranda'.

OPERAS

- 'The Tragical History of Christopher Marlowe' (R. J. White) (1950-52).
- 'The Trial of the Jewelled Peacock' (George Moore), a masque for puppets for soprano, tenor, baritone and chamber orchestra (1952).

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

- 'Prometheus' (Aeschylus) for soprano, tenor, baritone, mixed chorus & chamber orch. (1947).
- 'Lysistrata' (Aristophanes), a play in music for soprano, baritone, speaking chorus, flute, oboe, clar., bassoon, trumpet, double bass & perc. (1948).

CHORAL WORKS

- 4 Songs (Shakespeare) for women's voices (1944).
- 4 Carols for boys' voices & celesta (1946).
- 2 'Motets in Diem Pacis' (Isaiah) for chorus & brass (1946).
- 'The Song of Ruth' (R. J. White, written and arranged from Authorized Version) for soprano, mezzo-soprano, baritone, women's chorus & orch. (1948).
- 'News from Greece' (R. F. Willetts) for mezzo-soprano, chorus, 2 pfs., 3 trumpets & perc. (1949).
- 2 'Motets in Diem Lamentationis' (Apocrypha) for chorus (1950).
- 'The White Island' (Herrick: Songs of Innocence from 'Noble Numbers') for soprano, women's chorus & stgs. (1951).

WORKS FOR SOLO VOICE(S) WITH INSTRUMENTS

- 'The Forgotten Garden' (Henry Vaughan), cantata for tenor & stg. 4tet (1945).
- 'Conversion in the Garden' (St. Augustine), cantata for baritone & stg. orch. (1947).
- 'Five Songs of Night' (from the Greek) for contralto, Eng. horn & stg. 4tet (1947, rev. 1949).
- 'Aristophanic Extravaganza' (R. F. Willetts after Aristophanes), cantata for counter-tenor, pf., harpsichord, celesta, guitar & perc. (1949).
- 'Yegdrasil' (Christopher Hassall), cantata for soprano, contralto, tenor & bass with chamber orch. (1950).
- 'Nausicaa's Welcome' (R. F. Willetts), cantata for soprano, baritone & stg. 4tet (1951).
- 'Carmina Felium' (various poets) for soprano, clarinet, bassoon, violin, viola, cello and pf. (1952).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 'Sinfonia ricercata' (1947).
- 'Festival Galliard' (1951).

Symphony (1953).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- String Trio (1945).
- Serenade for oboe, clar. & bassoon (1946).

VIOLA AND PIANOFORTE

- Sonata (1946).

SOLO VIOLONCELLO

- Sonata (1944).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- 'Epithalamium' (1944).
- 'Preludio e canzona' (1945).
- 'Mr. Whyte's Battel', 4 children's pieces (1947).

SONGS

- 4 Latin Hymns for soprano & flute (1944).
- 'Two 17th-Century Poems' for baritone & pf. (1947).
- 3 Latin Canticles for soprano & organ (1948).
- 'Three 16th-Century Poems' for counter-tenor, flute & guitar (1949).
- 'Some of Gravity, Some of Mirth' (medieval and Elizabethan poems) for soprano & pf. (1951).
- 'Three Invocations' (trans. from Greek by R. F. Willetts) for contralto & pf. (1951).
- 'Merry Margaret' (Skelton) for unacc. tenor (1952).
- 'Eclogue' (Marlowe) for soprano, tenor & pf. (1953).

C. M. (iii).

BIBL. — HUTCHINGS, ARTHUR, 'Wilfrid Mellers' ('Music Survey', Vol. II, No. 2, pp. 72-76).

MELLON, Alfred (b. London, 7 Apr. 1820; d. London, 27 Mar. 1867).

English conductor and composer. He lived first at Birmingham, became a violinist in the Opera and other orchestras in London, and afterwards leader of the ballet at the Royal Italian Opera Covent Garden. He was next director of the music at the Haymarket and Adelphi Theatres, and subsequently conductor of the Fyne and Harrison English Opera Company, which in 1859 produced his opera 'Victorine' at Covent Garden. He was also conductor of the Musical Society and of the Promenade Concerts which for several seasons were given under his name at Covent Garden, begun in the Floral Hall, in Aug. 1860. In Sept. 1865 he was chosen conductor of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society. He married Miss Woolgar (d. 8 Sept. 1909), a well-known actress.

Mellon's works include songs for farces and plays: 'The Mysterious Stranger' (1844), 'The Irish Dragon' (1845), 'Powder and Ball' (1845), 'The Phantom Dancers' (1846), 'Sea and Land' (1852), 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' (after Harriet Beecher-Stowe) (1853) and 'The Bonnie Fish Wife' (1858).

W. H. H., adds.

MELLOPHONE. See CORNOPHONE.

MELNIKOV, Ivan Alexandrovich (b. Moscow, 1831; d. St. Petersburg, 1906).

Russian baritone singer. He was a pupil of Repetto, who made him worthy of comparison with some of the most eminent contemporary masters of bel canto. Coming to the operatic stage at a period at which the art of opera was at a low ebb in Russia, he gave inspired performances in which the vocal and dramatic interpretations were mingled in due proportion. He exercised a profound influence upon the subsequent development of Russian opera as a whole. After a début in Bellini's 'Puritani' at the St. Petersburg Maryinsky Theatre in Sept. 1867 he was for two seasons exclusively engaged for Italian parts. He then became interested in native opera, and there were few works of that order in which he was not concerned on their first production. He was for a considerable period the only exponent of the title-part of Mussorgsky's 'Boris Godunov' to be seen on the Maryinsky stage. Succeeding Petrov, he was in turn succeeded by Shaliapin. He was the first Don Juan in Dargomizhsky's 'Stone Guest' and he created such parts as Tokmakov in Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Ivan the Terrible', the name-part in Rubinstein's 'The Demon' and in Borodin's 'Prince Igor'. Of that in Glinka's 'Russlan and Ludmila' he gave one hundred and fifty-six performances and thus proved himself worthy of Stasov's opinion, expressed in 1871, that he was the very greatest of Russians. He was greatly esteemed by Tchaikovsky, in all of whose operas, excepting 'Iolanta', he took part. The composer's brother Modest, writing of Melnikov's performance as Kochubey in 'Mazeppa', commended him and Feodor Stravinsky as being the best artists in the production and emphasized the fact that Melnikov was master of both the declamatory method and of cantilena. His least successful part was in 'Eugene Onegin' (produced in 1879), which he relinquished after five appearances. Age was by then taking toll of his voice. According to Cheshikhin some of his upper notes were faulty. Some other critics took a more favourable view, but the representative of the St. Petersburg 'Viedomosti' went so far as to declare that on this occasion Melnikov sang "not with his voice but with his reputation". But ten years later, in 1890, after an activity of more than twenty years, he was entirely successful when concluding his career in 'Prince Igor'.

M. M.-N.

MELODIA. See ORGAN STOPS.

MELODIC MINOR. See SCALES.

MELODICORDION. See AEOLODION.

MÉLODIE (Fr.). The current French word for a song, a rather unfortunate one since mélodie is also the word for a melody or tune not necessarily connected with the voice. The French language, however, has no better word for "song", chant being too general a term, while both chanson and romance stand for vocal compositions of a specialized type. In sheer desperation the French now often resort to the German word Lied.

E. B.

MELODINA. See FOURNEAUX.

MELODISTS' CLUB, THE (1825-56). A society founded in London in 1825 by admirers of Charles Dibdin, "for the promotion of ballad composition and melody". In 1827-28 a library was formed and prizes were offered for songs. The prize songs were afterwards published in a volume. In 1833 two prizes of ten guineas were offered for songs in the style of Arne, Shield or Dibdin, and gained by Blewitt and Hobbs. In 1837 prizes of five guineas for words and ten guineas for music of a song were gained by Wilson and Hobbs for the song 'Send round the wine'.

The entrance fee was five guineas and the subscription eight guineas. Its professional members included Sir George Smart, Braham, Balfe, T. Cooke, Hawes, Sterndale Bennett and other eminent English musicians. Among the artists who took part in the music in its earlier day were J. B. Cramer, Moscheles, Hummel, Field, Benedict, Lipinski. T. Cooke was musical director and John Parry hon. secretary.

C. M., abr.

MELODRAMA (Fr. mélodrame; Ger. Melodram). A kind of dramatic composition, or portion of a work, in which the actor recites his part while the orchestra plays a more or less elaborate commentary on the situation of the moment, as in the classic instance of the grave-digging scene in Beethoven's 'Fidelio', the dream in his 'Egmont' music, the incantation scene in 'Der Freischütz', the title part of Berlioz's 'Lélio' and scenes in Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream'.

The Berlioz work, in which a single actor appears, may also be called a "monodrama".¹ Mozart speaks with enthusiasm and at some length of "duodramas" in letters to his father from Mannheim and Kaisersheim at the end of 1778. The name would indicate a piece for two performers; and those which he heard — Benda's 'Medea' and 'Ariadne auf Naxos' — and that which he contemplated writing himself — 'Semiramis' — were pieces in which spoken dialogue was accompanied by the orchestra. "Not a note is sung", he says, "only spoken; in fact it is a recitative with instruments, only the actor speaks instead of singing." There is no trace of 'Semiramis' having been composed, but Mozart acted on the idea in 'Zaide' (1780), which contains two long monologues treated en mélodrame.

The same principle has been adopted for concert-room performance in the shape of recitations to music, for which the term declamation has often been used and of which examples are Schubert's 'Abschied von der Erde'; Schumann's 'Schön Hedwig' (Hebbel), Op. 106, 'Vom Haideknaben' (Hebbel) and Shelley's 'Fugitives', Op. 122; Liszt's 'Der traurige Monch' (Lenau) and others. Hiller's 'Vom Pagen und der Königstochter' (Geibel) is a slighter specimen. In these "ballads for declamation" the accompaniment is always for pianoforte, and as a kind of impromptu adjunct to recitations the same instrument came into use in England in connection with the recitals of Clifford Harrison. A long series of "Recitation Music", i.e. compositions for pianoforte intended to accompany the declamation of various well-known poems, was written by Stanley Hawley, and a shorter series by Mackenzie came out about the same time. A more important work was the musical accompaniment to Tennyson's 'Enoch Arden' by Richard Strauss (1902).

The melodrama has been much cultivated in Czechoslovakia, particularly by Fibich in his 'Hippodamia' trilogy for the stage and several poems with orchestra. Two sections of Bliss's 'Morning Heroes' and the part of Joan in Honegger's 'Jeanne d'Arc au bûcher' are modern examples of melodrama treatment.

G., J. A. F.-M. & N. C. G., adds.

MELODRAMMA (Ital.). A term for "opera" current in Italy from the end of the 18th century onwards. It is quite unconnected in its meaning with the German word Melodram or the English "melodrama".

MELODY. The general term vaguely used to denote successions of single notes which make musical sense. It is sometimes used as if synonymous with "tune" or "air", but in point of fact many separate portions of either tunes or airs may be accurately characterized as "melody" which could not reasonably be made to carry the name of the whole of which they form only a part.

¹ A work like Schoenberg's 'Erwartung', in which a single acting-singer appears, is also in the nature of a "monodrama", and almost of melodrama, the part being delivered in speech-song.

Tunes and airs are for the most part constructively and definitely complete, and by following certain laws in the distribution of the phrases and the balance of the groups of rhythms, convey a total impression to the hearer in a way which, in a larger sense, is discussed elsewhere.¹ But "melody" has a more indefinite signification and need not be a distinct artistic whole according to the accepted laws of art, though it is obvious that to be artistic it must conform to such laws as lie within its range. For example, the term "melody" is often with justice applied to the inner parts of fine contrapuntal writing, and examples will occur to everyone in numerous choruses, or symphonic movements and other instrumental works, where it is so perfectly woven into the substance of the work that it cannot be singled out as a complete tune or air, though it nevertheless stands out from the rest by reason of its greater beauty.

The elements of effect in melody are extremely various and complicated. In the present case it will be possible only to indicate in the slightest manner some of the outlines. In the matter of rhythm there are two things which play a part: the rhythmic qualities of language, and dance rhythms. For example, a language which presents marked contrasts of emphasis in syllables that lie close together will infallibly produce corresponding rhythms in the national music; and though these may often be considerably smoothed out by civilization and contact with other peoples, no small quantity pass into and are absorbed in the mass of general music, as characteristic Hungarian rhythms have done through the intervention of Haydn, Schubert, Brahms, Bartók and others.

Dance-rhythms play an equally important part, and those rhythms and motions of sound which represent or are the musical counterpart of the more dignified gestures and motions of the body accompanying certain states of feeling, which, with the ancients and some medieval peoples, formed a beautiful element in dancing.

In the distribution of the intervals which separate the successive sounds harmony and harmonic devices appear to have very powerful influence. Even in the times before harmony was a recognized power in music we are often surprised to meet with devices which appear to show a perception of the elements of tonal relationship, which may indicate that a sense of harmony was developing for a great length of time in the human mind before it was definitely recognized by musicians. However, in tunes of barbaric people who have no notion of harmony whatever, passages of melody also occur which, to a modern eye, look exceedingly like arpeggios or analyses of familiar harmonies; and as it is next to impossible for those who are saturated with the simpler harmonic successions to realize the feelings of people who knew of nothing beyond homophonic or single-toned music, we must conclude that the authors of these tunes had a feeling for the relations of notes to one another, pure and simple, which produced intervals similar to those which we derive from familiar harmonic combinations. Thus we are driven to express their melody in terms of harmony and to analyse it on that basis, and we are, moreover, often unavoidably deceived in this, for transcribers of national and ancient tunes, being so accustomed to harmonic music and to the scales which have been adopted for the purposes of harmony, give garbled versions of the originals without being fully aware of it, or possibly thinking that the tunes were wrong and that they were setting them right. In some cases the tunes are unmercifully twisted into forms of melody to which an harmonic accompaniment may be adjusted, and thereby their value and interest both to the philosopher and to every musician who hears with understanding ears is considerably impaired.

Modern melody is almost invariably either actually derived from or representative of harmony and is dependent on it for a great deal of its effect. In the first place it is immediately representative in one of two ways: either as the upper outline of a series of different chords, and therefore representing changing harmonies, or else by being constructed of different notes taken from the same chord, and therefore representing different phases of permanent harmony. Examples of either of these forms being kept up for any length of time are not very common; of the first the largest number will be found among hymn-tunes and other forms of simple note-against-note harmony: the first phrase of "Batti, batti" in Mozart's "Don Giovanni" approaches it very nearly, and the second subject of the first movement in Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata is an exact illustration. Of the second form the first subject of Weber's Sonata in A \flat major is a remarkable example:

¹ See FORM.

since in this no notes foreign to the chord of $A\flat$ are interposed till the penultimate one. The first subject of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony in like manner represents the chord of $E\flat$ major, and its perfectly unadorned simplicity adds force to the unexpected $C\sharp$, when it appears, and to its yet more unexpected resolution. The first subject of Brahms's violin Concerto is yet a further example to the point:

The simplest variation of these forms is arrived at by the interposition of passing-notes between notes which are part of the essential chord or chords, as in the following from Gluck's 'Orfeo':

The notes with asterisks may be all regarded as passing-notes between the notes which represent the harmonies.

This often produces successions of notes which are next to each other in the scale; in other words, progression by single degrees, of which we have magnificent examples in some of the versions of the great subject of the latter part of Beethoven's ninth Symphony, in the second subject of the first movement of his violin Concerto and in the last chorus of Bach's St. Matthew Passion. When these passing-notes fall on the strong beats of the bar they lead to a new element of melodic effect, both by deferring the essential note of the chord and by lessening the obviousness of its appearance, and by affording one of the many means, with suspensions, appoggiaturas and the like, of obtaining the slurred group of two notes which is alike characteristic of Bach, Gluck, Mozart and other great inventors of melody, as in the following example from Mozart's Quartet in D major:

The use of chromatic preparatory passing-notes pushes the harmonic substratum still farther out of sight and gives more zest and interest to the melodic outline. As an example may be taken the following from the second act of 'Tristan und Isolde':

Along with these elements of variety there are devices of turns and such embellishments, such as in the beginning of the celebrated tune in 'Der Freischütz', which Agathe sings in the first scene of the second act:

Sequences, imitations and anticipations, and all the most elaborate devices of resolution, also come into play, such as interpolation of notes between the discordant note and its resolution. Further, there are endless refinements of grouping of phrases and repetition of rhythms and groups of intervals in condensed forms and in different parts of the scale, which introduce an intellectual element even into the department of pure melody.

Lastly, it may be pointed out that the order and character of the successions of harmony which any special form of melody represents has a great deal to do with its importance. Commonplace tunes represent commonplace and trite successions of harmony in a commonplace way, while melody of a higher order usually represents successions which are in themselves more significant and more freely distributed. The giants of art have produced tunes the melody of which may represent the simplest harmonic successions, but they do it in their own way, and the result is proportionate to their powers and judgment. Unfortunately the material of the simpler order of melody tends to be exhausted, and a large proportion of new melody has to be constructed on a more complicated basis. To take simple forms is often only to make use of what the great masters rejected; and indeed the old forms by which tunes are constructively defined are growing so hackneyed that their introduction in many cases is a matter for great tact and consideration. More subtle means of defining the outlines of these forms are possible, as well as more subtle construction in the periods themselves. The result in both cases is to give melody an appearance of greater expansion and continuity, which it may perfectly have without being either diffuse or chaotic, except to those who have not sufficient musical gift or cultivation to realize it. In instrumental music there is more need for distinctness in the outline of the subjects than in the music of the drama; but even in that case it may be suggested that a thing may stand out by reason of its own proper individuality quite as well and more artistically than if it is only to be distinguished from its surroundings by having a heavy blank line round it. Melody will always be one of the most important factors in the musical art, but it has gone through different phases, and will go through more. Some insight into its direction may be gained by examination of existing examples, and comparison of average characters at different periods of the history of music, but every new great composer who comes is sure to be ahead of our calculations and, if he rings true, will tell us things that are not dreamed of in our philosophy.

C. H. H. P.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BILANCIONI, G., 'Accanto a Dioniso: la melodia della parola, fonte di melodia musicale' (Faenza, 1934).
 BLESSINGER, KARL, 'Melodielehre als Einführung in die Musiktheorie' (Stuttgart, in progress).
 DANCHEK, WERNER, 'Personale Typen des Melodie-stils' (Cassel, 1931).
 'Ursymbole melodischer Gestaltung' (Cassel, 1932).
 DUNHILL, THOMAS, 'The Evolution of Melody' (Proc. Mus. Ass., Vol. XXXIV, 1908).
 HOFFMANN, E., 'Das Wesen der Melodie' (Berlin, 1925).
 KIDSON, FRANK, 'The Vitality of Melody' (Proc. Mus. Ass., Vol. XXXV, 1908).
 KLEBS, P., 'Von der Melodie und dem Aufbau der musikalischen Formen' (Cassel, 1927).
 LACH, R., 'Studien zur Entwicklungsgeschichte der ornamentalen Melodie' (Leipzig, 1913).
 RALSTON, FRANCES M., 'Melodic Design: Practical Application of Intervals to Melodic Writing' (Los Angeles, 1930).
 ZINOERLE, H., 'Die Entwicklung der Melodik von Bach bis Mozart: die musikalische Interpunktion' (Baden nr. Vienna, 1937).

MELOGRAPH. See UNGER, JOHANN FRIEDRICH.

MELOPHONE. A free-reed instrument in the shape of the guitar or sometimes the cello, with a rudimentary keyboard for the left hand on the neck. The bellows, concealed within the body of the instrument, are worked by the right hand. It was invented by Leclerc, a Parisian clockmaker, and introduced by Halévy into one of his operas. F. W. G.

See also Harmonium.

MELOPHONIC SOCIETY, THE. An association established in London in 1837 "for the practice of the most classical specimens of choral and other music", by choir and orchestra, under the management of J. H. Griesbach, H. Westrop, J. Surman and H. J. Banister. The first performance, on 23 Nov. 1837, at Wornum's Music Hall, Store Street, was of Haydn's 'Creation'. C. M.

MELOPIANO. See SOSTINENTE PIANOFORTE.

Melosio, Francesco. See Cavalli ('Orione', lib.). Fontei ('Sidonio e Dorisbe', lib.).

MELSA, Daniel (b. Warsaw, Aug. 1892; d. London, 1 Apr. 1952).

Polish violinist. He entered the Conservatory of Łódź at the age of seven, when he already showed some proficiency as a violinist. His studies continued till 1905, when they were interrupted by the revolution and its attendant tragedies (among the victims were his father and sister), but they were resumed in Berlin in 1906 under Carl Flesch. In 1912 he gave his first recital in the Beethoven Saal there, playing three concertos with orchestra. The following year he appeared in Paris under Nikisch and he went to London for the season 1913-14 to give six recitals. He was chosen by Clara Butt as soloist during her Empire tour, and later played in every town of importance in the United Kingdom, his appearances including three recitals given in London with his wife, Joan Carr. His elegance of style ingratiated him with the public, while his remarkably sure technique commended his playing to musicians.

W. W. C.

Melville, Herman. See Billy Budd (Britten, opera). Britten ('Billy Budd', opera). Ghedini (do., opera; 'Concerto dell' Albatro', for orch.). Herrmann (B., 'Moby Dick', cantata). Křenek ('Cantata for War-time'). Moore (D. S., 'Moby Dick', orch. work).

MEMMO (Memo), Dionisio (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 15th-16th-century musician. He was a pupil of Giovanni di Maria. On 22 Sept. 1507 he was appointed first organist of St. Mark's, Venice. He went to London in 1516, where he was made a vicar choral, and stood in high esteem at the court of Henry VIII.

E. v. d. s.

MEMORIZING. Memorization is that deliberate process of learning which, in musical experience, purposes to make possible the mental, vocal or instrumental reproduction of an item of music without external aid. Neither efficient memorizing nor effortless remembering can be sensibly attributed to "the possession of a good memory", for "memory" is merely a convenient concept abstracted from a number of distinguishable processes which determine the recurrence of experience. If these various processes of recall could be shown to have some measure of interdependence, so that goodness in one implied efficiency in others, it would be possible to regard them as functions of some central or fundamental capacity, and "memory" could be described as a unitarily functioning faculty. Common experience reveals, however, and scientific investigation has established, that these processes of recall are independent, that efficiency in one does not imply efficiency in others. The problem of memorization, therefore, is that of the analysis of the processes involved in it and of the factors which control or qualify these processes.

All physical musical experience, that is, musical experience which is distinct from some form of "thinking in music", necessarily involves the hearing of music and the vocal or instrumental production of music. It follows that two forms of recall necessarily involved in the memorization of music are: (a) auditory imagery, the mental recurrence of something heard, and (b) motor or kinaesthetic imagery, the recurrence of something done. Kinaesthetic recurrence is of two kinds. As one may see something in one's "mind's eye" or recall mentally something heard, so one can recapture the sensation of action, as a pianist may feel in his fingers the sensation of replaying a passage or a chord. This kind of experience is what is meant by kinaesthetic imagery. The second kind of kinaesthetic recurrence is not restricted to sensation; it is that expressed in the general principle that an action, by occurring, tends to establish a disposition to occur again, when the situation which prompted it recurs. What is done once will probably be done again under similar conditions. It follows that a series of actions will tend to recur as a series, each recurrent action prompting the recurrence of the next until, after frequent repetition, the whole series tends to become automatic. A much greater part of human behaviour than is generally supposed is dependent on such "habit sequences". Once the series has been stimulated, the tendency to traverse the mechanized route not only without conscious direction but even in opposition to the desire may occur, as in the irritating experience known as "having a tune on the brain". The main thesis of this article is that these two forms of kinaesthetic recurrence are the most influential factors in the memorization of music.¹

INEFFECTIVENESS OF AUDITORY RECALL.—Probably the only kind of musical experience which is necessarily dependent on hearing alone is that of noticing the timbre of a particular instrument. The reader is asked to try to recall as completely as possible the tonal quality of an instrument, preferably one which he does not play, and then to recall, not on a particular instrument, a known melody. . . . In attempting to recall the kind of sound which is peculiar to an instrument, an oboe perhaps, one can feel that the effort is to recapture a sound, and only a sound, though the effort may be aided by visual imagery. In the task of recapturing a known melody, usually a much easier task, the normal procedure is to sing or play the tune to oneself. One is no longer listening to recapture sounds heard, but doing something to recapture a series of physical actions. The melody has been associated with the actions involved in producing it, and these imaged actions are available to assist the auditory recall, or even to replace it.

The normal tendency to rely on kinaesthetic imagery rather than on auditory imagery may be demonstrated in many ways. Suppose that one is asked a question about a well-known melody, as, for example, how many two-bar sections there are in the British national anthem, or how many notes at the end of it go down. If the answer is not already known the usual procedure, to discover the answer, is not to try to recapture an auditory image of the melody but to sing it to oneself. Aural dictation tests given to students reach a much higher standard of accuracy if the students are advised, on hearing the fragment, to sing it to themselves once or twice as an aid to remembering it. The auditory image of the tune lasts long enough to permit its immediate reproduction or subvocalization, but very little longer.

The relative ineffectiveness of purely auditory images is not due merely to their fleeting and unstable quality; they are rarely sufficiently precise and detailed to be useful. This is because the original sensory experience and probably most subsequent ones consisted essentially in the perception of a "whole", a complete pattern, a Gestalt, without any awareness of its constituent elements.² One hears and recalls a rhythmic figure or a tune, sufficiently long to reproduce it, without any necessary awareness of its structure. One had to recall, for example, the national anthem in order to answer questions about it. Visual experience has a similar quality. How little one knows analytically of many common objects with which one is familiar becomes evident if anyone who is not a trained artist attempts to draw them "from memory". Though the vocal or instrumental reproduction of auditory experience does not demand the analytical and exact knowledge that the draughtsman requires, the process converts what may be a vague and fleeting sensation into a more articulate, more personal and more readily recurrent form of experience.

¹ For experimental evidence in support of this view see the writer's 'Kinaesthetic Factors in the Recall of Musical Experience' ('British Journal of Psychology', Vol. XXIII, pt. iii, 1933).

² See "GESTALT" PSYCHOLOGY.

This argument may be summarized in the proposition that kinaesthetic factors are far more powerful agents in the memorization of music than are auditory images.

The behaviourists¹, who have no use for the word "memory" or its derivatives, regard all forms of recall as wholly kinaesthetic; but this invalid induction seems to the present writer to be demonstrably false. In the memorization of purely auditory experience, even if it is immediately reproduced physically or mentally, the first such reproduction must depend on the temporary retention of the auditory experience, that is, on purely auditory recall. Further, as has been previously shown, kinaesthetic factors cannot be present in the recall of an experience which was itself purely auditory, as the recall of the timbre of an instrument never played by the person recalling it. There can obviously be no recurrence of anything that has not occurred. What seems to happen is that "one is aware of the sounds which would occur if the motor impulses experienced were allowed to materialize as stimuli of the appropriate mechanism".² What reliable introspective analysis is available on this question suggests that motor imagery is employed whenever possible in order to help to build up the vague and elusive auditory image.

ASSOCIATION OF MOTOR, AUDITORY AND VISUAL IMAGES.—The form of musical recall just described is a specific application of the general principle that associated experiences tend to recur as such, so that the recurrence of one tends to evoke the recurrence of the other. Singing and the playing of an instrument are physical events necessarily and continuously associated with the sounds which these events produced or, more accurately, with the cognitive events implied in the perception of these sounds. In speech and in singing the complex motor processes involved and the sounds they are intended to produce become mechanized at so early an age that the process of establishing and mechanizing the associations is usually long forgotten. But it is obvious that any fluency of utterance would be impossible if the vocal actions involved had to be consciously recalled. The same principle applies to the playing of an instrument. Any fluency of "musical utterance" by means of an instrument is obviously impossible until the manipulative actions involved recur with the recurrence of the musical thought as spontaneously as do the actions of the tongue in speech. It will be observed that in these instances the events described in mental recall are reversed; the auditory image is now acting as the stimulus of the motor response. Two points of relevant significance may be made. One is that the effective memorization of a work, whether it be a song or a concerto, involves that these auditory and kinaesthetic associations shall already have been mechanized. The second is that in speech, or in vocal or instrumental performance, the thought and its utterance seem to occur simultaneously; there is no perceptible time-lag. As one thinks in words which may be imaged, subvocalized or uttered aloud, so one may "think in music", imaging or actually performing the actions involved in musical utterance, as, for example, in keyboard improvisation. Conversely, in the recall of music, the kinaesthetic image is accompanied by the recall of its associated sound-image.

In musical experience which includes the reading from a score, the introduction of visual experience makes possible the development and fixation of a triangular group of associations. The notation and the sounds or sound-patterns symbolized may become associated, and must be so associated if silent reading is possible. Secondly, the notation and the actions involved in bringing it to musical life may be associated, as they must be in "sight-reading". In any well-developed musicianship the notational symbols, the physical events of producing the music and the mental association of sound and symbol should be an inseparable three-fold association. Unfortunately, in the teaching of instrumental playing, particularly of the pianoforte, frequently the only association which is deliberately made is that of the symbol and the action; each musical symbol is interpreted as meaning that a key is to be depressed or some other action has to be performed. That the auditory association does not always occur "as an act of lived experience" (or in the use of silent keyboards does not occur at all) is evident from the frequency with which students who have been taught by this method find either silent reading or simple aural dictation extremely difficult.³

MEMORIZING OF INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC.—The most important form of memorization in advanced executant musicianship is that of memorizing a long instrumental work. There can be little doubt that the essential process is kinaesthetic. If the work is a complex one, as a pianoforte concerto, the simultaneous actions involved in performance are too many and too complex, the sequence of physical events is too rapid, to permit much conscious direction. The whole complex series of events has to be made as automatic as possible by their repeated performance. It is a common experience that one may continue to play, at least for a time, a work so memorized when "one's mind wanders" and performance has become completely automatic. Moreover, the exact reproduction of a complex musical work from auditory experience alone, even if immediately attempted, would, if possible at all, be an astonishing feat, while, after any lapse of time, it would be inconceivable.

¹ See J. B. Watson, 'Behaviourism', 2nd ed., pp. 234 ff.
² Mainwaring, 'Kinaesthetic Factors in the Recall of Musical Experience' (Brit. Journ. Psych., XXIII, iii).

³ For the development of this theme see (a) TEACHING and (b) the writer's 'Psychological Factors in the Teaching of Music' ('British Journal of Educational Psychology', Vol. XXI, pts. ii and iii, 1951).

The easy assumption that the process is, therefore, only kinaesthetic is again demonstrably false. The musician who has reached the stage of executant efficiency implied in the task of memorizing for performance a complex instrumental work will already have available the threefold pattern of associations of auditory, visual and motor experiences and imagery to which reference has already been made. None of the earlier performances of the work can be wholly kinaesthetic. The work is presumably being read at this stage, and considerable cognitive concentration is involved. When the fingering of a passage is being considered, even the physical actions involved are being consciously directed. The music as symbolized is mentally heard, and recognition of inaccuracy occurs when this auditory image evoked by the score does not coincide with the sounds produced. Again, the recurrence of a passage in the musical work may differ from its earlier appearance, and such differences have to be noticed and consciously remembered, so that one kinaesthetic sequence can be deliberately changed on the second appearance of the theme.

The process of memorizing a complex instrumental work is, therefore, not merely one of recurrent kinaesthetic, auditory and visual experience; it includes a fourth factor which, for want of a better term, may be called "rational remembering". If the work has any meaning for the performer, if its pattern and structure are clear to him, if the harmonic basis of a florid passage has been observed, if, in general, the process of memorization has been accompanied by the intelligent analysis of the work, it is clear that these factors will facilitate the process of memorization.

THE "WHOLE OR PART" CONTROVERSY.—A relevant question, to which contradictory answers have been given, is whether it is more effective in the memorization of a work to play repeatedly through the whole of it or to attempt to memorize it sectionally. Such relevant research as is available is restricted, so far as the writer is aware, to the memorization of passages of prose and poetry; but the essential factors are almost certainly equally applicable to the memorization of music. With certain reservations and with the recognition of considerable individual differences, the general view is that the "whole" method is more effective than the sectional. It avoids the problem of the weak links which is characteristic of sectional memorizing and, by presenting the work as a continuous unity at each rehearsal of it, helps more rapidly to make it intelligible, thereby strengthening the "rational" factor. Moreover it has been shown that the memorization of poetry and prose by the "whole" method tends generally to be more lasting than does the sectional method. Conversely, the formidable nature of the task of learning the whole of a work at once, and the longer time involved before anything is completely memorized, may be disadvantageous, and it may seem a waste of time to continue to play through the whole when certain passages, several times repeated perhaps, are already better known than passages which are merely episodic or more technically difficult.

In music memorization the "whole" method has a further disadvantage: if a work is merely played through it is possible or even probable, if it is difficult, that the performance includes inaccuracies which, in virtue of the kinaesthetic principle on which so much of the process of memorization depends, will probably be repeated in subsequent performances. An implied factor in the process is that of avoiding error in the early stages. If a difficult passage, when first played, is played slowly enough to ensure its accuracy and that it is correctly fingered, each accurate repetition will be a further step towards its fluent and mechanized rendering.

The following suggestion seems to include the advantages and to exclude the disadvantages of both processes. The first stage might consist in listening to the work with a score until both the sound and structure of the work and the score are thoroughly familiar. Passages which are technically difficult and which need fingering or, on stringed instruments, some experiment with different positions and the like, could be practised separately. After this it seems desirable that the work, or at least a complete movement, should be rehearsed as a whole.¹

MEMORIZING MUSIC BY THE BLIND.—The process by which the blind memorize music, except in the direct reproduction of music that has been heard, is similar to that by which a person with sight memorizes music directly from a score. With visible notation the task is not difficult if both the aural and kinaesthetic images symbolized are immediately and correctly evoked by the score. The process is, of course, rarely practised because it is so much simpler to proceed directly to sing or play the composition. The blind musician, however, has to depend on the process, using the Braille system of musical notation. A blind organist and choral conductor who memorizes by this process full-length oratorios before conducting them, as of course he must, has expressed to the writer that the main difficulty is that of combining mentally parts which have to be memorized independently. Whereas a person with sight can see a complete score or as much of it as is necessary, a blind musician can feel only a melodic line or a momentary cross section of a number of lines. For this reason blind musicians find it almost impossible, as far as the writer can discover, to read an orchestral score.

¹ Most text-books of cognitive psychology contain references to this problem. Early experiments were carried out by W. H. Winch (Brit. Journ. Psych., XV), E. W. Sawdon ('Forum of Education', V) and more recently by C. W. Valentine ('Introduction to Experimental Psychology'), but little has been added to modify these views.

In all forms of music memorization, therefore, auditory, visual, kinaesthetic and rational processes of recurrent experience are involved. Of these factors the most influential are the kinaesthetic ones, which, as motor images, may reinforce the less stable auditory ones or, in the form of habit sequences, help to mechanize the physical processes involved in memorized musical performance. The effectiveness of these motor processes, however, is itself dependent on the mental recurrence of the relevant musical associations they should immediately evoke. J. M. (iii).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

(see also footnotes)

- CUMBERLAND, GERALD, 'Memorizing Music' (London, 1927).
 LAMBOTTE, LUCIEN, 'L'Éducation de la mémoire musicale' (Paris, 1937).
 MACKINNON, LILLIAS, 'Music by Heart' (Oxford, 1938).
 MATTHAY, TOBIAS, 'On Memorizing and Playing from Memory' (Oxford, 1926).
 SHINN, FREDERICK G., 'The Memorizing of Piano Music for Performance' (Proc. Mus. Ass., Vol. XXV, 1898).
 STUMP, J., 'Der Weg zum musikalischen Gedächtnis für Anfänger im Klavierspiel' (Zurich & Leipzig, 1931).

MENA, ?. See GABRIEL.

MENASCE, Jacques de (b. Ischl, Austria, 19 Aug. 1905).

American pianist and composer of Austrian birth. He graduated from the Schotten-Gymnasium in Vienna in 1924. His first pianoforte teacher was Emil Friedberger, and at the age of fourteen he began work with Emil von Sauer. After some years spent in travel, he returned to work at the Vienna State Academy of Music, leaving there with diplomas for pianoforte and composition. Menasce later worked at composition with Paul Pisk, and for a time with Alban Berg. His career as concert pianist began in 1932 and has continued ever since, both in Europe and in the U.S.A. He has appeared as soloist in his own pianoforte Concerto in Holland, Belgium, Luxemburg, and also on the New York C.B.S. programme "Invitation to Music". His Divertimento on a children's song was performed by the N.Y. Philharmonic, and works of his have appeared in the I.S.C.M. programmes of 1942 and 1944.

Menasce became a naturalized American citizen and has for some years been active on the committee of the League of Composers and other groups furthering modern music. He has himself given many recitals in and near New York of new chamber music, both his own and works by other composers.

His music is not easy to classify: from the point of view of structure it is closer to impressionism than to any other species; emotionally and even idiomatically it has much of the sombreness, the vivid, crisp chromaticism that the later Bartók works displayed. It is his own personal blend of the more expressive elements of several styles of the present time, and its fastidiousness and craftsmanship win respect wherever it is heard.

The following are his outstanding works:

- 'The Fate of My People', ballet, for solo dancer with pf. (1945).
 'Status Quo', ballet (1947).
 Pf. Concerto No. 1 (1935).
 Pf. Concerto No. 2 (1939).
 'Divertimento on a Children's Song' for pf. & stgs. (1940).
 'Le Chemin d'écume', song cycle for soprano & orch. (1940).
 Sonata for vn. & pf. (1940).
 'Hebrew Melodies' for vn. & pf.
 Variations (1933).
 'Visionen' (1934).
 Sonatina No. 1 (1934).
 Toccata (1935).
 Sonata (1936).
 'Improvisations on a Chorale Theme' (1937).
 Sonatina No. 2 (1942).
 'Five Fingerprints' (1943).
 'Perpetuum mobile' (1941).
 Sonatina No. 3 (1945).
 Sonata (1947).
 'Pour une princesse' (1947).
 3 Romantic Songs (1943).
 2 Poems (Humbert Wolfe) for voice & pf. (1944).
 P. G.-H.

Menasci, Guido. See Mascagni ('Cavalleria', lib.).

MENCKEN. See MANCINUS.

MENDEL, Arthur (b. Boston, Mass., 6 June 1905).

American musicologist and conductor. He studied at the École Normale de Musique in Paris and at Harvard University, where he graduated with an A.B. degree in 1925. From 1930 to 1938 he was literary editor for Schirmer's and in 1930-33 acted as music critic of 'The Nation'. He was editor of the American Musicological Society's journal for three years from 1940, besides being editor for the Associated Music Publishers from 1941 to 1947, and in 1947-50 he was president of the Dalcroze School of Music in New York. He lectured at Columbia University in 1949 and at the University of California two years later, and since 1937 he has been conductor of the Cantata Singers of New York.

Mendel translated Einstein's 'Mozart: his Character, his Work' and Hindemith's 'The Craft of Musical Composition', besides editing Schütz's 'The Christmas Story' (1949), Bach's St. John Passion (1951) and 'The Bach Reader' (1945), the last with Hans T. David. His critical articles and essays include 'Pitch in the Sixteenth and Early Seventeenth Centuries' (M.Q., 1948), 'The Keyboard Accompaniments to Bach's Leipzig Vocal Works' (M.Q., 1950), 'More for the "Bach Reader"' (M.Q., 1950) and 'Devices for Transposition in the Organ before 1600' (Acta Musicol., 1951).

M. K. W.

MENDEL, Hermann (b. Halle, 6 Aug. 1834; d. Berlin, 26 Oct. 1876).

German music seller, writer on music and lexicographer. He studied music at Leipzig and Berlin. From 1862 to 1868 he carried on a music business in the latter city and at the same time wrote in various musical periodicals and took an active part in music generally. His lives of Meyerbeer (1868) and Otto Nicolai were published separately. In 1870 Mendel started the work by which he remains known, 'Musikalisches Conversations-Lexikon', with the help of a large and distinguished staff of writers. The Lexicon was completed after his death, in 11 volumes, under the editorship of August Reissmann, who brought out the twelfth, supplementary volume in 1883.

G.

See also Dictionaries.

MENDELSSOHN, Arnold (Ludwig) (b. Ratibor, 26 Dec. 1855; d. Darmstadt, 19 Feb. 1933).

German organist, conductor and composer. He was a collateral relative of Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, being a great grandson of the philosopher Moses Mendelssohn. He was educated at Ratibor, Berlin and Danzig, and studied law at the University of Tübingen. He then took to musical studies in Berlin from 1877 to 1880, his master for composition being Friedrich Kiel and among his subjects being the organ and pianoforte. In 1880-82 he was organist and University teacher at Bonn, in 1882-85 conductor at Bielefeld, in 1885-90 professor at the Cologne Conservatory, in 1890-1912 at that of Darmstadt, where he settled down, though after 1912 he was on the staff of the Hoch Conservatory at Frankfurt o/M. He held doctor's degrees from the Universities of Giessen (1899) and Tübingen (1917). Like his eminent namesake, Arnold Mendelssohn, although of Jewish descent, was of Protestant faith, and a very large part of his vast number of works consists of sacred choral pieces. The following of his compositions may be singled out:

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

Music for Goethe's 'Pandora'.

CHORAL WORKS

- Cantata 'Aus tiefer Not' (Op. 54).
- Cantata 'Auf meinen lieben Gott' (Op. 61).
- Motets (Opp. 59 & 81).
- Passion Music and Psalm LXIX (Op. 87).
- 'Deutsche Messe' for unaccomp. 8-part chorus (Op. 89).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 3 Symphonies (unpublished).
- Suite for woodwind & perc. (Op. 62).

VIOLIN AND ORCHESTRA

- Concerto (Op. 88).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- 2 String Quartets (Opp. 67 & 83).
- Trio, A m., for vn., cello & pf. (Op. 76).

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

- Sonata, F# m. (Op. 70).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- 2 Sonatas (Opp. 66 & 71).
- Modern Suite (Op. 79).
- Also various sets of pieces.

SONGS

- 5 Shakespeare Songs.
- Various other sets, Opp. 38, 60, &c.

E. B.

BIBL.—HERING, H., 'Arnold Mendelssohn: die Grundlagen seines Schaffens und seiner Werke' (Ratisbon, 1930).

MENDELSSOHN, Fanny (Cécile) (b. Hamburg, 14 Nov. 1805; d. Berlin, 17 May 1847).

German amateur composer, sister of Felix Mendelssohn. She was the eldest child of the Mendelssohn-Bartholdy family and more than three years older than Felix. She was regularly instructed in music, and Mendelssohn used to say that at one time she played better than he.¹ On 3 Oct. 1829 she married W. Hensel (1794-1861), a painter, of Berlin, and on 17 May 1847 she died suddenly. Her death shook her brother terribly and no doubt hastened his own, which happened only six months later. Felix's letters show how much he loved her and the value which he placed on her judgment and her musical ability. He called her "the Cantor". "Before I can receive Fanny's advice", says he, "the 'Walpurgis-night' will be packed up. . . I feel convinced she would say 'Yes', and yet I feel doubtful" (Letter, 27 Apr. 1831). "Fanny may add the second part", he says, in sending a Song without Words (11 Dec. 1830). Again, "I have just played your Caprices . . . all was unmixed delight" (4 Jan. 1840). Still, indications are not wanting of a certain over-earnestness, not to say pedantry, which was occasionally too severe for her brother.²

Six of her songs were published with his, without indication: Op. 8, Nos. 2, 3, 12; Op.

¹ See also Devrient, 'Recollections', p. 3.

² See letter of 7 Apr. 1834; 'Goethe and Mendelssohn', p. 47, &c.

9, Nos. 7, 10, 12. She also published in her own name four books of melodies and 'Lieder' for pianoforte solo; two books of songs; one book of partsongs — 'Gartenlieder' (republished by Novello, 1878); and after her death a few more songs and pianoforte pieces were printed, as well as a Trio for pianoforte and strings in D major, reaching in all to Op. 11.¹

She is buried in the Mendelssohn portion of the Halletor cemetery in Berlin, and a line of her music (the end of the song 'Bergeslust', Op. 10, No. 5) is engraved on the tombstone:

BIBL.—WERNER, JACK, 'Felix and Fanny Mendelssohn' (M. & L., XXVIII, 1947, p. 393).

MEDELSSOHN (Bartholdy), (Jakob Ludwig) Felix² (b. Hamburg, 3 Feb. 1809; d. Leipzig, 4 Nov. 1847).³

German composer, pianist, organist and conductor. He was the grandson of Moses Mendelssohn (b. 6 Sept. 1729; d. 4 Jan. 1786), son of a Jewish schoolmaster named Mendel. Moses was born at Dessau, but migrated to Berlin in 1762. There he combined mercantile with literary and philosophic interests; but it was in respect of the latter that he achieved fame. He was one of the foremost disciples of Lessing, an author whose critical standards were respected in later years by Felix Mendelssohn⁴, and the model for Lessing's hero⁵ in 'Nathan der Weise' (1779). Nathan's and, by implication, Moses Mendelssohn's character is summarized in the dramatic comment: "By God, you are a Christian; there never was a better Christian than you". It was an unconscious reflection of his philosophy which led Felix to make his only recorded utterance regarding his racial origins. Of the first performance of Bach's St. Matthew Passion he said: "It was an actor [Devrient] and a Jew who restored this great Christian work to the people".⁶

THE FAMILY.—Moses Mendelssohn married Fromet, daughter of Abraham Gugenheim, of Hamburg. Of this marriage there survived three sons and three daughters. Two of the daughters, Dorothea and Henriette, became Roman Catholics, and the former married, first Simon Veit, father of the painter Philipp and, after his death, Friedrich Schlegel. The second son, Abraham (b. 11 Dec. 1776; d. 19 Nov. 1835), followed with marked success a career in banking. He resigned his post as cashier in Fould's Bank, Paris, in 1804 to go into partnership with his elder brother Joseph at Hamburg. In the same year (26 Dec.) he married Lea Salomon (b. 26 Mar. 1777), of a flourishing Jewish family in Berlin. One other member of the Salomon family calls for notice: Jacob Salomon-Bartholdy (b. 13 May 1779; d. 27 July 1825), who embraced Protestantism in 1805 to the chagrin of his mother, campaigned against the French as a lieutenant in the Viennese Landwehr in 1809 and joined the diplomatic service in 1813 as Prussian Consul-General in Rome. His Roman villa — the Casa Zuccari or Bartholdy — was richly furnished with art treasures (it was visited in 1831 by his nephew Felix⁷), and he published two books of historical and artistic interest: 'The War of the Tyrolese Peasants' (Berlin, 1814) and 'Sketches of the Life of Hercule Consalvi' (Stuttgart, 1825). After his death Bartholdy's fortune passed to his sister Lea: it was at his suggestion that Abraham Mendelssohn added to the family name that of Bartholdy (a family property on the Spree), the intention being thus to distinguish the Christian Mendelssohns.⁸

⁴ S.G., p. 320.

⁵ See Klingemann's observation: 'Mendelssohn and his Friends in Kensington', p. 145. ⁶ Dev., p. 57.

⁷ See W. I., p. 102, letter of 1 Feb. 1831.

⁸ The hyphenated form of Mendelssohn-Bartholdy belongs to the line of Paul and not to that of Felix, who should stand, and who thus subscribed himself, Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy. See 'The Romance of the Mendelssohns' by Jacques Petitpierre (London, 1947), p. 97. For the purpose of this article the familiar abbreviated "Mendelssohn" is employed.

¹ For her letters, journals, and portrait see 'Die Familie Mendelssohn', by S. Hensel (Berlin, 1879).

² This new article replaces the very long biographical and critical study written by Sir George Grove for the first edition of this Dictionary and retained substantially in its original form for the next three editions, whose editors felt, very justifiably at the time, that the first editor's most important pieces of work (the other two being the articles on Beethoven and Schubert) should not be expelled from the work that was in the first place his own creation. But the view now taken is that he would have been the first to agree to any changes deemed necessary to bring the Dictionary into line with modern requirements and modern research. It was therefore decided to replace his three large articles by new contributions. At the same time, they have always been somewhat out of scale, and, although they are now in some respects inevitably out of date, they remain remarkably fine pieces of work, greatly esteemed by all who have done work on the three composers in question, and they could not be allowed to go out of print altogether. They have therefore been reissued separately in the form of a book entitled 'Beethoven — Schubert — Mendelssohn' by Sir George Grove (London, 1951).

³ The principal authorities quoted are designated as follows:

- (a) 'Meine Erinnerungen an Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy', Eduard Devrient — Dev.
- (b) Collection of correspondence of and about Mendelssohn, formerly in the possession of C. J. Freemantle — F.
- (c) 'Goethe and Mendelssohn', trans. M. E. von Glehn — G. & M.
- (d) 'Mendelssohn: Letters & Recollections', Ferdinand Hiller — H.
- (e) Mendelssohn Letters, ed. G. Selden-Goth — S.-G.
- (f) 'Letters from Italy and Switzerland', trans. Lady Wallace — W. I.
- (g) 'Letters 1833-1847', trans. Lady Wallace — W. II.

The children of Abraham and Lea Mendelssohn were Fanny Cécilie (b. 14 Nov. 1805), Jakob Ludwig Felix, Rebecca (b. 11 Apr. 1811) and Paul (b. 30 Oct. 1813). The three eldest children were born at Hamburg, but in 1811, during the French occupation of the city, the family removed to Berlin, where the banking-house of Mendelssohn & Co. was established. Abraham was a director from 1805 to 1821, his elder brother being the head of the company from its inception until 1848. He lived for some years in his mother's house, No. 7 Neue Promenade in the north-east sector of the city, but when the extensive interests of his children demanded more space he moved, in 1825, to No. 3 Leipzigerstrasse, which, before its demolition in 1900, served for a time as the second chamber of the Prussian Parliament.

It will be seen that Felix Mendelssohn was exceptionally fortunate in the matter of material endowments. Affluence was in no way detrimental to his artistic career — indeed opportunities which came to him were put to the best use — but the patriarchal nature of the family organization may be, in some ways, so regarded. There was a great bond of affection between parents and children, but there was also something of timidity in the relationship between the children and the father. It will be noticed that in his letters to Abraham Felix emphasizes his devotion to duty, his assiduity in study and his respect for paternal injunctions; he omits the humour which infects his other private correspondence and he advises his brother and sisters¹ to avoid arousing irascibility. Once, Felix recollected, he pressed his advocacy of Beethoven and other visionaries too far: "I was even sent out of the room". Abraham Mendelssohn had rigorous standards of discipline; he would hardly have championed women's rights; he was cautious, having his children baptized as Christians, but not accepting that faith for himself and his wife until, apparently, conversion appeared a necessary social cachet; he was conscious of obligation to society, entertained generously and served as a city councillor. It would be unjust to suppose that he was devoid of imagination, for his discernment in artistic matters was impressive, but the financial magnate's desire for material success burdened his children's careers with ambition, so that Felix, whose gifts were remarkable even in a remarkable family, was overworked almost from the day of his birth.

Lea Mendelssohn's reported character leaves an impression of calm efficiency, intellectual capacity and self-effacement. Her talents as hostess were considerable and were fully employed. She had some knowledge of music, remarked on Fanny's "Bach-fugue" fingers in her infancy, instructed Fanny and Felix in the rudiments of music and for many years sat with them, attending to her knitting, as they practised. Between Felix and his mother there was a charming intimacy which is well preserved in extant correspondence. Family pride was a trait in nineteenth-century culture: the Mendelssohns possessed it to a high degree. Hence Felix, despite his modesty, thrived on success and regarded himself as the centre of the circles in which he moved.

UPBRINGING AND EDUCATION. — During Mendelssohn's infancy there were momentous happenings, which were to leave their mark on him, in the fields of intellectual and political development in Germany. From 1809 to 1810 the Prussian minister for education was Wilhelm von Humboldt who, with his brother Alexander, was a visitor to the Mendelssohns' home. Humboldt was a Hellenist, and his conception of a liberal education comprised classics, gymnastics and music. Abraham Mendelssohn, whose anxiety to do the right thing led him to seek and often to follow the best advice, accepted this as a basis, but added also modern languages and art. In 1810 the University of Berlin was opened, and in the same year the third set of Wilhelm Schlegel's Shakespeare translations appeared. In 1812 the first volume of the 'Fairy Tales' by the Grimm brothers drew attention to one form of reaction against the classical: they were conspicuous for "their meditation on the insignificant". A few days after the Battle of Leipzig (19 Feb. 1813) Paul Mendelssohn was born. In this year patriotic poetry reached a climax, and many songs, of which the best known was Arndt's 'Was ist des Deutschen Vaterland?', intensified a new sense of racial pride, which, combined with xenophobia, led ultimately to disastrous conclusions. The effect of the poets on Mendelssohn will be seen at a later point. Attention is here drawn to his consistent exaltation of German qualities: an impulse that was implanted early.

Mendelssohn observed that he "got into music he hardly knew how". In 1816 Joseph and Abraham were in Paris on account of business. Abraham was accompanied by his family. Felix and Fanny had pianoforte lessons from a Mme Bigot, an enthusiast for Mozart and a teacher of whom Felix always spoke well in his later life. In Berlin the children's general instruction was committed to a Dr. Heyse, the philologist and father of Paul Heyse the novelist; more departmentally to Ludwig Berger, a pianoforte teacher who had himself learned from Clementi and Field; Henning, the violinist; Zelter, a great teacher of composition and in many directions a beneficial influence; Rösel, who taught the art of landscape; and, briefly, Hummel, whose great gift for extemporization stimulated Mendelssohn. The discipline of the household has already been mentioned: an example of Abraham's excessive zeal is the early hour selected for the start of his children's working day. In after life Felix expressed the opinion that 5 A.M., daily except for Sundays, was too strenuous.¹

¹ See W. I., p. 60-61.

At a concert promoted by one Gugel, and given on 25 Oct. 1818, Mendelssohn made his first public appearance. He played the pianoforte part in a trio by Woelll for two horns and piano. A year later both Mendelssohn and his father made further progress in the civic life of Berlin: the son went to the Singakademie singing-class, the father to the city council.

From 1820 Mendelssohn preserved his compositions.² His early output, as the appended list of compositions shows, was voluminous: cantatas, symphonies (for strings, to which in performance Mendelssohn followed classical precedent by adding the pianoforte), songs, partsongs, trios, motets, fugues, pieces for organ and pianoforte (the G minor Sonata [op. 105] dates from 1821), of which some of the latter impressed Hummel. There was also a domestic, mock-heroic comedy, 'Paphleis', in 3 cantos, at his brother's expense. Early in 1821 three one-act operettas — 'Die beiden Pädagogen', 'Soldatenliebschaft' and 'Die wandernden Komodianten' — were written to demonstrate the composer's affection, which he never lost, for theatre music. During that year his dramatic interests were heightened by meeting Weber, whose 'Der Freischütz' was given in Berlin on 18 June. Weber's success on this occasion illustrates the rising power of nationalist sentiment.

The virtues of patriotism were brought to Mendelssohn's notice on the occasion of his first visit to Goethe, where he heard the songs set by Eberwein to poems by Körner. Of this visit to Goethe there is ample record³, but certain points emerge to clarify biographic outline. Lea Mendelssohn welcomed a change, "for his impulsiveness sometimes makes him work harder than he ought to at his age". Abraham counselled nice behaviour, "especially at dinner", clear and direct speech, and obedience to the attendant Zelter. Mendelssohn passed all the tests, intellectual, musical and social, principally distinguishing himself by playing the fugues of Bach, to which Goethe was devoted; Mozart, with a sure sense of instrumental definition; and extemporizations which caught the ear of a houseparty wherein were a Russian grand duke and duchess. Mendelssohn, a distinctly handsome boy as contemporary portraits show⁴, was not only compared more than advantageously with the prodigy Mozart⁵ but rewarded by memorable kisses from Goethe. He also appears to have had a precocious eye: "Fraulein Ulrike also had thrown herself upon his [Goethe's] neck, and as he is making love to her, and she is very pretty, the effect of the whole was capital".⁶ And again, of Maria Szymanowska: "People set the Szymanowska above Hummel. They have confused her pretty face with her not pretty playing."⁷

The year 1822, in which appeared Rückert's 'Östliche Rosen' and Heine's first poems (Heine was, later, acquainted with Mendelssohn), marks the transition from childhood to maturity: Mendelssohn may be said almost to have omitted the stage of adolescence. Public concerts in Berlin included performances under the aegis of Schmitt (31 Mar.) and Moser (26 Apr.) and Anna Milder (5 Dec.); the two latter events called forth press notices.⁸ The summer was taken up by a glorious family holiday. The company of Mendelssohns and retainers made leisurely progress by way of Cassel, Frankfort, Darmstadt, Schaffhausen, Amsteg, Interlaken, Vevey and Chamounix. Mendelssohn described some part of the Swiss holiday in a characteristic letter to Zelter⁹; from this we learn that Heyse was in attendance. Escape from instruction seems thus to have been impossible even during vacation. At Sécheron the G minor Quartet (Op. 1) was begun, on 20 Sept. Two songs (11 Sept.) were also written there. A regard for Switzerland, shared with most of the romantic poets, led Mendelssohn to formulate the scherzos of his tenth and twelfth symphonies round Swiss melodies. In the latter more local colour was attempted by the addition to string quintet of triangles, cymbals and drums. On the return journey calls were made at Frankfort, to visit the conductor Schellble, and Weimar. On this occasion Fanny seconded her brother in regaling Goethe with excerpts from Bach.

THE YOUNG COMPOSER.—The Sunday morning concerts at the Mendelssohns' house were notable features of Berlin cultural life.

⁴ (i) by C. Bejus; (ii) by unknown artist, reproduced in S.-G., p. 60.

⁵ "... what your pupil already accomplishes bears the same relation to the Mozart of that time as the cultivated talk of the grown-up person does to the prattle of a child". G. & M., p. 19.

⁶ G. & M., p. 26.

⁷ Ibid., p. 28.

⁸ Regarding Moser's concert: "A symphony by the gifted young Mendelssohn-Bartholdy deserves notice; its invention, unity of design and attractive study of effect promises much for his future works". Regarding Milder's concert: "The young Felix Mendelssohn performed a concerto, composed by himself, on the pianoforte": 'Quarterly Musical Magazine & Mirror', quoted in M. & L., XXVIII, No. 4.

⁹ 13 Sept. 1822.

¹ Devrient sympathized: "His brain had from childhood been taxed excessively".

² In a dated series of 44 MS volumes which were evidently deposited in the State Library in Berlin. It seems probable (1949) that these volumes were lost during the second world war.

³ G. & M., p. 6 et seq.

At them were to be met celebrities from every walk of life, and for them the majority of Mendelssohn's early chamber and chamber-orchestral works were written. His mother wrote charming letters to the ablest professional musicians, offering lunch and begging that they should come and play with the children. Fanny played the pianoforte nearly as well as Felix¹, Paul the violoncello, while Rebecca sang. On 28 Nov. 1824 Moscheles recorded this programme, which may be taken as typical: C minor Quartet (Op. 1), Mendelssohn; D major Symphony (No. 8²), Mendelssohn; Concerto by Bach, played by Fanny; Duet for two pianofortes in D minor by Arnold.³ During 1824 Mendelssohn passed for violin tuition to Edward Rietz, whose influence was considerable. Not only did his pupil regard him with deep affection, but with what appears to have been a superb technique held up before him he wrote brilliant first violin parts in his earlier quartets.

The works of 1824 represent, as Zelter noted, a climax. Mendelssohn in that year emerges in his own right as a composer. Of the overture to 'Die beiden Neffen, oder Der Onkel aus Boston'⁴ Zelter writes: "[It] is a singular thing. Imagine a painter flinging a dab of colour on his canvas and then working it about with fingers and brushes till at last a group emerges, and you look at it with fresh wonder, and only see that it must be true because there it is." Of the Concerto in E major for two pianofortes and orchestra (written in 1823) he observes: "His individuality becomes more and more apparent, and blends itself so well with the spirit of the age that it seems to come out of it like a bird from the egg". Zelter's observations suggest, admirably, the peculiar nature of Mendelssohn's genius. On a larger scale this genius made itself apparent in the C minor Symphony (Op. 11).⁵

In 1824 Mendelssohn was confirmed by the Pastor Wilmsen. Of almost equal importance was his grandmother's gift of a copy by Rietz of the St. Matthew Passion, the score of which reposed under Zelter's guardianship in the Singakademie. Early in 1825 Hiller and André⁶, at Frankfort, testified to Mendelssohn's extraordinary talents as pianist. His extemporizations, then as at any other time,

¹ She played "Bach's fugues by heart and with astonishing correctness — in fact, a thorough musician". — Moscheles.

² No. 8 for strings, written 6-27 Nov. 1822 and rescored for full orchestra, in which form it became No. 9.

³ In a letter (May 1824) Lea Mendelssohn invited Wilhelm Speyer, the Frankfort violinist, to a Sunday concert, informing him that Messrs. Moscheles and Arnold would be present. [F.]

⁴ Performed on 7 Feb. 1824.

⁵ Or 'Sinfonia No. XIII in C', 3-31 Mar. 1824.

⁶ See H., chap. i: André resembled very closely (see letter of 14 July 1836, W. II., p. 110) Abraham Mendelssohn.

were remarkable and, again, his capacity to imitate details of orchestral scoring called for comment.

The spring of 1825 (13 Mar. to 19 May) was spent in Paris, where Abraham again had business commitments. Among the conspicuous members of the musical fraternity met were Hummel, Onslow, Herz, Halévy, Kalkbrenner, Moscheles, Kreutzer, Rossini, Meyerbeer and Cherubini. Mendelssohn's critical faculties expanded, with youthful impatience and arrogance, into an amusingly derogatory paragraph against Auber's 'Léocadie'. He informed Fanny⁷ that the opera, both "pitiable" and "deplorable", was "pushed together out of reminiscences, alternately of Cherubini and Rossini" while, in respect of the orchestration, it "might be excellently transcribed for two flutes and a Jew's harp ad libitum". Paris, where they "do not know a single note of 'Fidelio', and believe Bach to be nothing but a wig stuffed with learning", appeared to be peopled with Philistines, as Herz and Neukomm — who made large profits out of bad taste — agreed. On the other hand, at Mme Kiené's (the mother of Mme Bigot) Baillot assisted Mendelssohn in a performance of the B minor Quartet (Op. 3) and, at the end, embraced the young composer. Rode, who lived in semi-retirement but had been acquainted with Beethoven, was also complimentary. Cherubini, whose strictures were more familiar than his praise, also heard the Quartet: "Ce garçon est riche; il fera bien; il fait même déjà bien, mais il dépense trop d'argent, il met trop d'étoffe à son habit". Mendelssohn remembered such encouragement gratefully and took the opportunity in later years to champion the music of Cherubini.⁸ It appears to have been Cherubini's opinion which finally determined Abraham Mendelssohn to permit his son to pursue music as a career.

On the way back from Paris Mendelssohn played the B minor Quartet to Goethe, to whom it was dedicated. Goethe's delight was reflected⁹ in a laudatory letter of thanks. On returning to Berlin the Mendelssohns moved into their new home in the Leipzigerstrasse, where the Gartenhaus afforded more space for music and drama than had been available in the grandmother's house. The later works of this year included the Capriccio in F# minor (Op. 5), 'Die Hochzeit des Camacho', which was submitted to Spontini and eventually performed — once — at the Theatre Royal in 1827, the Trumpet Overture in C major (Op. 101) and the Octet (Op. 20). The last work signified two fruitful friendships: it was dedicated to Rietz and the scherzo recollected the emotions aroused by certain lines¹ from the "Walpurgisnacht" section of Goethe's 'Faust'. Of the Octet there is general agreement with the opinion that "Not even Mozart or Schubert accomplished at the age of sixteen anything quite as astonishing as this major work of chamber music . . .".² The Trumpet Overture was played on 2 Nov. at a concert organized by Maurer — at the same concert Mendelssohn played the pianoforte part in Beethoven's choral Fantasy. The superfluous bloom of deeper study was a translation of Terence's 'Andria', done into metre in honour of Dr. Heyse's birthday. The Sunday parties involved not only music but also discussions on and readings from the classics. Among them was Jean Paul on the one hand and Shakespeare on the other. The 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture was composed during the summer of 1826³ and played both as a pianoforte duet and in its orchestral form. Meanwhile the Berlin critics were disporting themselves aggressively. "They have", wrote Zelter to Goethe, "reviewed his quartets and symphonies somewhat coldly in the musical papers . . . things that are completely above the heads of these gentlemen, they cut up as coolly as possible, and fancy they can judge the whole house by one brick."⁴ Si, says Zelter, remembering the handling of Gluck and Mozart, sic semper. Mendelssohn, for his part, threw off a commentary on critics in four resilient stanzas.

⁷ S.G., pp. 31-32: letter of 20 Apr. 1825.

⁸ As, for instance, the Requiem, which he recommended to the Lower Rhine Musical Festival in 1838.

⁹ Letter of 18 June 1825. S. G., pp. 33-34.

The first public performance of the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture was at Stettin early in 1827. During this year he attended lectures at the University of Berlin. Hegel, who had succeeded Fichte in the Chair of Philosophy, amused Mendelssohn, but something of his teaching permeated Mendelssohn's outlook, if only because we discover the latter increasingly conscious of the "historical rôle of the Teutonic race". There were also lectures by Ritter in geography⁵, by Gans and by Lichtenstein. The director of music in the University was Bernhard Klein. Among acquaintances in the wider field of culture at this time were Holtei, the Silesian dialect poet; Alexander von Humboldt, the geographer; the liberal Müller, author of 'Die schöne Müllerin', who died during 1827; the Varnhagens; the von Arnims; Heine; Klingemann, a diplomat who went to London during 1827 as Secretary to the Prussian Legation. Mendelssohn was, in fact, at the most profitable age associated with some of the principals in German romantic philosophy. The Sunday morning sessions were augmented by one on Saturday evenings when a selected choir of 16 voices met to rehearse the St. Matthew Passion. In the late summer of 1827 there were visits to Heidelberg and Frankfurt. At Heidelberg Mendelssohn discussed Bach, Victoria and Lotti with the lawyer Anton Thibaut, whose philosophic views in 'Purity in Musical Art'⁶ would appear to have influenced Mendelssohn in his declarations on the necessity for nobility in music.

Mendelssohn's public affiliations were responsible for the occasional music of 1828 — the Festival of Music for the Dürer Tercentenary⁷ (performed on 12 Apr.) and for the Congress of Scientists organized by Alexander von Humboldt. Present at this function was Chopin, who also stayed in Berlin to hear Handel's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day'. Mendelssohn's Handelian studies brought forth, at this time, new scores (with additional accompaniments) of 'Acis and Galatea' and the Dettingen 'Te Deum'.⁸ More domestic music included the elegiac Prelude and Fugue in E minor (Op. 35 No. 1), the song 'Ist es wahr?' and the consequent string Quartet (Op. 13), the motet 'Tu es Petrus' for Fanny's birthday, some comic 'Kindersymphonie' — all composed during 1827 — the E♭ major Quartet (Op. 12), 'Meerestille und glückliche Fahrt' and a set of Variations (Op. 17) for cello which must have taxed Paul Mendelssohn's skill severely.

A sidelight on the acrimony which persisted between Mendelssohn and certain professional⁹ musicians is shown by a refusal to allow 'Meerestille' to be played at a concert organized by Leopold Ganz.¹⁰ It was this antagonism as much as doubt of musical success which made Zelter lukewarm towards the proposed revival of the St. Matthew Passion. Nevertheless Mendelssohn's efforts — with the help of Devrient, Bauer and Schubring — were crowned with success. The Passion was given in the hall of the Singakademie on 11 Mar. 1829 and repeated ten days later: it may well be that this was Mendelssohn's greatest single achievement. During the preparations for the March per-

¹ English translation by W. H. Gladstone (London, 1877) of 'Über Reinheit der Tonkunst' (Heidelberg, 1825): this book was known to, and read by, Mendelssohn (see letter, 20 Sept. 1827, S. G., p. 34).

² . . . a composition "in a good style, abounding with melody and expression", and, "admirably performed" ('Harmonicon', 1828, pp. 155-56).

³ Rex, the organist of the cathedral in Berlin, was also a keen Handelian scholar.

⁴ Mendelssohn's status was that of an amateur, which, in itself, tended to provoke hostility in Germany; in England the reverse was the case.

⁵ Letter of 10 Oct. formerly in the possession of W. Ganz and noted in F. collection.

¹ Wolkenzug und Nebelflor

Erhellen sich von oben;

Luft im Laub, und Wind im Rohr,

Und Alles ist zerstoßen.

² John Horton, 'The Chamber Music of Mendelssohn', p. 60.

³ Also Quintet in A minor (Op. 18), 'Es lausche das Laub' (Op. 86 No. 1), the pf. Sonata in E major (Op. 6).

⁴ G. & M., p. 57: letter of 6 Nov. 1825.

⁵ See reference to Ritter's 'Afrika' in a letter of Mendelssohn of 6 Aug. 1831, W. I., p. 220.

formance Fanny became engaged (22 Jan.) to Hensel the painter.

On 26 Mar., after a contretemps with the royal orchestra, which refused to play for him, Mendelssohn announced to Klingemann his intended visit to England, which he regarded as the gateway to Scotland, where "I am going . . . with a rake for folksongs, an ear for the lovely, fragrant countryside and a heart for the bare legs of the natives".¹

EARLY TRAVELS.—The 'Diary of a Dilettante'² notes:

Another arrival in London is the young M. Mendelssohn [sic], (Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy) son of the rich banker of Berlin, and I believe, grandson of the celebrated Jewish philosopher and elegant writer. He is one of the finest piano-forte players in Europe, and though a very young man, is supposed to be better acquainted with music than most professors of the art.

In London Mendelssohn lodged with a German ironmonger at 103 Great Portland Street, where also he stayed in 1832. "Things toss and whirl about me as if I were in a vortex, and I am whirled along with them."³ Mendelssohn visited Latour, Clementi, Cramer, Neukomm (also a tourist), the Moscheles; flirted with "two very wonderful brown eyes"; criticized the performance of Rossini's 'Otello' and Kemble's interpretation of 'Hamlet'⁴, and amused himself at phrenological séances⁵, at diplomatic and aristocratic dinner parties, balls, coffee houses and sausage shops. On the other side of activity there were concerts: on 25 May at the seventh of the Philharmonic concerts (conducted by Cramer) the C minor Symphony was performed. "Fertility of invention and novelty of effect . . . the melodiousness of its subjects . . . the gracefulness of the slow movement, the playfulness of some parts, and the energy of other" impressed a perceptive critic. The⁶ audience wished for two encores — of both the slow movement and the scherzo⁷; Mendelssohn allowed one — the latter. He was entirely delighted, as was the audience (for he was an exceedingly good-looking young man), and expressed his appreciation of the orchestra to the Secretary of the Philharmonic Society. At a concert in the Argyll Rooms five days later Mendelssohn played the 'Concertstück' by Weber, with whom there was melancholy contact through Sir George Smart, at whose house Weber had died. On 13 July a morning concert, organized by Henriette Sontag in aid of Silesian flood victims, gave opportunity for performance of the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture. The regard of contemporary audiences for cadenzas and the zest for extemporization possessed by Moscheles and Mendelssohn alike is illustrated by the entertaining details of a letter home⁸ about the rehearsal of the double Concerto in E major. During the summer Mendelssohn refused a commission from Sir Alexander Johnston to compose a festival work for the natives of Ceylon. He met Fétis — engaged in lecturing — and was somewhat disturbed when a chance remark apropos of the Purcell 'Te Deum' and 'Jubilate' was used by Fétis as a stick with which to beat the English back.⁹ Fétis was about as appreciative of English music as Mendelssohn of French.

From London Mendelssohn, with Klingemann, went to Scotland¹⁰, hard on the heels of the peripatetic Neukomm. At Abbotsford they met Sir Walter Scott (a later subject for discussion with Goethe)¹¹, whom Neukomm had already met, but found the encounter disappointing. They went up and across Scotland to the Hebrides, where the initial conception of the overture came to mind and was noted.¹² The letter of 15 Aug. — Loch Lomond in tumult is seen as through Schiller's eyes — describes Scottish scenery in detailed precision and realism. Mendelssohn travelled south by the western route, saw Liverpool, dismissed an Irish journey on account of rough weather and turned aside from Chester to Coed-du, near Holywell, to stay with the Taylor family.¹³ "I do nothing", wrote Mendelssohn, "but flirt and that in English."¹⁴ Back in London in early Sept. he resumed the E♭ major Quartet (Op. 12); an organ work for Fanny's forthcoming wedding; thought round the Scottish works and the projected "Reformation" Symphony, and a silver-wedding gift for his parents. On 17 Sept. Mendelssohn injured his knee seriously by being thrown from a cabriolet. He was incapacitated for two months, during which time Klingemann looked after him, his medical attendant being Mr. Lawrence, while there was no dearth of sympathetic visitors — the Goschens, the Möllers, Hawes and Attwood. The latter was a particular friend, and Mendelssohn spent a few days at his house at Norwood in convalescence.¹⁵

¹ S.G., pp. 36-37.

² 'Harmonicon', 1829, p. 116.

³ S.G., p. 44.

⁴ Mendelssohn's observations coincided with those of Fanny Kemble: her approval of "a most laborious minute study" was his disapproval of an exaggeration verging on caricature.

⁵ A science in which he was interested, as a letter (in the F. collection) of 21 Jan. 1832 to Dr. Haley Holme of 54 Upper Norton Street shows.

⁶ 'Harmonicon', 1829, p. 173.

⁷ That from the Octet was rescored and used on this occasion in place of the minuet and trio.

⁸ S.G., p. 53, 10 July 1829.

⁹ See Mendelssohn's letter to the 'Britannia', 8 July 1829.

¹⁰ Leaving London about 21 July.

¹¹ See G. & M., p. 71.

¹² See S.G., p. 56, letter of 7 Aug. 1829 with quotation of opening bars.

¹³ John Taylor, F.R.S., a mining engineer, had three daughters, for whom the pieces in Op. 16 were written. See F., letter to Taylor.

¹⁴ S.G., p. 58, letter of 10 Sept. 1829, in German, though he would have wished it in English.

¹⁵ Attwood's gate-bell provoked 'The Evening Bell' for pianoforte and harp.

Mendelssohn left England on 29 Nov., with regret and with the dual intention of perfecting his English and returning. The remainder of the winter was spent in Berlin. Marx was appointed Professor of Music in the University — a post which Mendelssohn had declined. The "Reformation" Symphony and the Fantasy in F# minor (Op. 28) were completed. In March both Felix and Rebecca were afflicted with measles, and plans for further travels were held up. By 13 May, however, he was again nomadic. By way of Dessau, Leipzig, Weissenfels and Naumburg he reached Weimar on 30 May for his last visit to Goethe. Goethe discussed philosophy, letters and politics, listened to "pieces by all the great composers in chronological order", commissioned a portrait of Mendelssohn, kept him supplied with female companionship and presented him with a page of the manuscript of 'Faust' thus inscribed: "To my dear young friend, Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy, the great and gentle master of the pianoforte. In memory of delightful days in May 1830."

Mendelssohn's Grand Tour, grander than most and planned with typical thoroughness by his father, lasted for three more years. The activities of these years are amply documented in a long series of letters, which may be read with relish both by those who are and those who are not musicians. It is, perhaps, to be suspected that Mendelssohn, who hardly suffered from false modesty, forsook ultimate publication for his letters. Published accounts of such tours were common¹ after the discovery, by intellectuals, of Sterne's 'Sentimental Journey', which Mendelssohn read with enjoyment on Goethe's recommendation.²

The itinerary proceeded from Weimar to Vienna, where ignorance of Mozart and Beethoven was rampant, by way of Nuremberg and Munich. During this time the July Revolution broke out in Paris and (on 30 July) the Polish insurrections in Warsaw. The Poles received sympathy from advanced liberal Prussians, and it is to be noted that in 1831 Mendelssohn showed anxiety concerning their progress. This political interest, however, was exceptional, and despite the stirring events of those years Mendelssohn personally restricted himself to observations on art, nature and human nature. On 28 Sept. he was fortunate enough to see the coronation of the Crown Prince Ferdinand as King of Hungary. From Pressburg Mendelssohn took his farewell from "Germany" and arrived at Venice on 9 Oct. There he was entranced by the works of Titian and Giorgione:

To see these alone would be worth a journey to Venice; for the fruitfulness, genius and devotion of the great men who painted these pictures seem to emanate from them afresh as often as you gaze at their works, and I do not much regret having scarcely heard any music here; for I suppose I must not venture to include the music of the angels in the 'Assumption' [Titian], encircling Mary with joyous shouts of welcome; one beating the tambourine, a couple of others blowing away on strange crooked flutes, another lovely group singing — or the music floating in the thoughts of the cittern player.

From Venice to Florence; then on to Rome. Mendelssohn's Italian interlude recalls that of Handel: social life (composition and other study was confined to the mornings) made large claims on his time. There were evenings with members of the colony of German artists, "haggard" and "with terrific beards", and with the delightful French family of Vernet, with the Chevalier Bunsen, whose influence effected many interesting introductions, with English visitors such as Lord Harrowby. The papal singers, old and "almost all unmusical", generally out of tune and rarely making their proper complement of 32, sang Palestrina for Mendelssohn's private delectation and stayed to hear, sharing astonishment with the clergy, his extemporizations. Mendelssohn was again fortunate in being in Rome at the time of the death of the pope and the subsequent election of Gregory XVI. The ceremonial and attendant festivities were minutely described, as also the Holy Week ritual of 1831. The music of St. Peter's alternately impressed and depressed his aesthetic and critical senses. The effect of music in the church was overpowering; some of the music performed was by the old masters and of great beauty; Gregorian music unintelligible; the general execution often indifferent and inartistic through irrelevance in embellishment. The whole was summarized for Zelter's benefit.³ In the meantime Mendelssohn was engaged on important works. The 'Walpurgisnacht', finished in draft (manuscript dated 15 July 1831); the 'Hebrides' overture — as 'Die einsame Insel' (16 Dec. 1830); the "Italian" and the "Scottish" Symphonies being most conspicuous. The three motets for female voices (Op. 39) recall charmingly — and with a hint of Pergolesi — the pleasure derived from the singing of the French nuns of Trinità de' Monte in Rome.⁴

Roman music in general was a disappointment: orchestral playing was neither in time nor in tune, and the best singers had left the country. For such conditions political issues bore some responsibility. Insurrections against the government followed in the wake of the Paris Revolution. Mendelssohn suggested the cause of musical incompetence:

The people are mentally enervated and apathetic. They have a religion which they do not believe; a pope and a government which they ridicule; a historical and heroic past which they disregard. It is thus no

¹ Cf. Tieck, Müller, Platen, Hazlitt, Holmes.

² See W., I, p. 156, letter of 28 May 1831.

³ See W., I, p. 164 et seq., letter of 16 June 1831.

⁴ See W., I, pp. 85-86, letter of 30 Dec. 1830.

marvel that they do not delight in art, for they are indifferent to all that is serious.¹

After Rome Mendelssohn visited Naples (where he encountered Count Platen, characteristically abusing the Germans — in German, as Mendelssohn sardonically notes), Florence (where he made memorable observation on Raphael) and Milan. Here, in July 1831, he was treated with kindness by General Ertmann and his famous wife. She had been on terms of intimate acquaintance with Beethoven. Although her playing tended to exaggeration — her rubato offended Mendelssohn's precise sense of style — she was illuminating in observation, and her guest admitted that she had taught him something. Writing to Devrient he speaks of a commission for an opera from Munich. This is the first of many references to operatic projects, all of which aborted. Another interesting Milanese contact was with W. A. Mozart, son of the composer. Mozart was the first to hear the recently completed 'Walpurgisnacht'. In Switzerland Mendelssohn sketched, played innumerable organs and read. At Engelberg he started to read Schiller's 'William Tell'. His reaction indicates his devotion to the philosophic principle of German greatness — philosophy in part inherited from Hegel, who had recently died of cholera. After half the first scene: "There is surely no genius like that of Germany! Heaven knows why, but I do think that no other nation could fully comprehend such an opening scene, far less be able to compose it."²

After Switzerland a return visit was made to Munich, a city which both for Mendelssohn and Edward Holmes³, who was there a few years previously, had greater hospitality and greater culture than Vienna (where also Holmes agreed in stricture with Mendelssohn). This was partly due to the enlightened patronage of the Bavarian court, to which Mendelssohn was summoned. His principal concert was on 17 Oct., when the G minor Concerto was first performed — in company with the C minor Symphony and the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture. He saw a good deal of Bärmann the clarinet player: for him Mendelssohn wrote a clarinet Sonata and for the Bärmanns, father and son, two concertos for clarinet and basset horn. At informal sessions Bärmann and other members of the royal music assisted Mendelssohn in investigating the scores of operas of which he was ignorant.⁴

By 19 Dec. Mendelssohn was in Paris. He had travelled by way of Düsseldorf, where he consulted Karl Immermann about a libretto for the projected opera. Abraham Mendelssohn assessed correctly that Immermann — a disciple of Goethe's 'Wilhelm Meister' style — was not competent in respect of opera, and he and Felix had some disagreement about his quality as a poet. The relationship between father and son, to which reference has already been made, is indicated by the latter's "... it would have been my duty to settle nothing without your express sanction. . . . I believed however that I was acting quite to your satisfaction in making him my offer."⁵ The subject of the opera was to be 'The Tempest', "which . . . my mother wished to see made into an opera". The same letter contained a vow, to be fulfilled:

I am resolved therefore to make the attempt [at opera] in Germany, and to live and work there so long as I can live there by my work, for this I consider my first duty. . . . I see indeed where I should be better remunerated and more honoured . . . than in Germany, where a man must press forward, and toil and take no rest — still, if I can succeed there, I prefer the latter.

Success in Paris did not change the fixed opinion that it was no city for a serious-minded musician; public discontent, religious heresies (Mendelssohn was severe on the Saint-Simoniens), meretricious dramas and salacious operas made a bad impression. The "Reformation" Symphony was rehearsed but not performed. The Parisian view — which the composer almost adopted himself in later years — was that the work was dull. On the other hand the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' overture was played at the Société des Concerts, and soirées at the Rothschilds', the Abbé Bardin's, Mme Kiené's, Léo's, Baillot's and Érard's gave to the select opportunity for hearing Mendelssohn's quartets and the Octet. The last work was, to the composer's amusement, played at a commemorative mass in memory of Beethoven. On 23 Jan. Edward Rietz had died: in his memory the intermezzo 'Nachruf' of the A major Quintet (Op. 18) appeared. To Rietz also was dedicated the Octet, performances of which under Baillot's leadership seem to have attained the dramatic ideal set out in Mendelssohn's opening injunction.⁶ Baillot was extremely kind, and Mendelssohn was appreciative of his interest and his artistry. Musicians met in Paris on the occasion of this visit included Ferdinand Hiller, Chopin, Meyerbeer, Herz, Liszt and Kalkbrenner, while Heine, "entirely absorbed in liberal ideas and in politics"⁷, was seen now and then. Mendelssohn commended but few of the recently published poems in the 'Reisebilder': the

¹ W., I, p. 70, letter of 7 Dec. 1830.

² W., I, p. 254, letter of 23 Aug. 1831.

³ See 'A Ramble among the Musicians of Germany', p. 54 et seq.

⁴ 'Lodoiska', 'Faniska', 'Medea', 'Preciosa', 'Abu Hassan'. See W., I, p. 285, letter of 6 Oct. 1831.

⁵ W., I, p. 296 et seq., letter of 19 Dec. 1831.

⁶ "This Octet must be played by all instruments in symphonic orchestral style. Pianos and fortes must be strictly observed and more strongly emphasized than is usual in pieces of this character."

⁷ W., I, p. 318, letter of 11 Jan. 1832.

few which he did admire he found splendid. He was much affected by the death of Goethe (22 Mar.) and suffered an attack of cholera, to which Hegel had succumbed in the previous year. Death had thinned the ranks of friends severely, for on 15 May Zelter also died.

By this time, however, Mendelssohn was again in London.¹ His musical successes were many. At a rehearsal of the Philharmonic one of the orchestra called out "there is Mendelssohn", on which they all began shouting, and clapping their hands to such a degree that for a time I really did not know what to do; and when this was over, another called out "Welcome to him", on which the same uproar recommenced, and I was obliged to cross the room, and to clamber into the orchestra, and return thanks.²

The 'Hebrides' was played on 14 May (the final revised version was ready five weeks later), the G minor Concerto on 22 May and 14 June. A manuscript score was presented to the Philharmonic Society, a compliment reciprocated by a gift of plate. The 'Capriccio brillant' (Op. 22) belongs to this visit and the first volume of 'Songs without Words' (published by Novello as 'Original Meiodies for the Pianoforte') appeared. Mendelssohn would seem to have met the Novello family, Thomas Alsager and the Horsleys at this time, all friends for the remainder of his life. Some days were spent at Norwood with Attwood.

During this visit Mendelssohn was exercised about the possibility of succeeding Zelter but, believing the Committee of the Singakademie to have behaved dishonourably, he did not press his candidature. Devrient, on the other hand, urged his claims, and in the end Mendelssohn, standing for election, was outvoted by Rungenhagen. The Mendelssohn family were angry and seceded, ostentatiously, from the Singakademie. Mendelssohn had returned home in July 1832 to find Rebecca married and still, with her husband Dirichlet, living in the Leipzigerstrasse house. That the house was large was as well, for Fanny and Hensel and their studio equipment demanded a good deal of space. Despite the misunderstanding on the Singakademie appointment (for a young man Mendelssohn appears to have been somewhat dictatorial in relation to prospective employers) the autumn and winter passed busily and profitably. The 'Walpurgisnacht', the "Reformation" Symphony, the 'Midsummer Night's Dream', 'Meeresstille' and 'Hebrides' overtures, as well as the Concerto and the B minor Capriccio were performed, while sonatas and concertos by Beethoven and Bach were introduced by Mendelssohn as novelties. The Philharmonic Society in London requested (5 Nov. 1832) "a symphony, an overture and a vocal piece"; thus work proceeded on the "Italian" Symphony, which was completed by 13 Mar. 1832. A Morning and Evening Service had been requested by Vincent Novello³, but its completion was delayed for years. There were also preparations for the Lower Rhine Festival, to the conductorship of which Mendelssohn was appointed — a high honour. Mendelssohn was therefore at Dusseldorf in Apr. 1833 for a brief business visit. Between this and the Festival itself (26-28 May) he again went to London. There he was drawn by private affairs: he had become godfather to the son (Felix) of the Moscheles. On 13 May the "Italian" Symphony was played at a Philharmonic concert. The Lower Rhine Festival was principally remarkable for a performance of Handel's 'Israel in Egypt', but there were other novelties, including Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony and the inauguration by the young conductor of a new régime in musical direction. From the first Mendelssohn insisted on disciplined playing and adequate rehearsal. His efficiency was respected, and a three-years contract was offered him as "director of all the public and private musical establishments of the town . . . with a salary of 600 thaler". Abraham was delighted and went, vacationally, with Felix to London; but, with the prejudices of age, bouts of ill-health and an incapacity to speak English, he would seem to have been something of a hindrance there. The best record of this visit is in the amusing and penetrating letters of Fanny and Sophia Horsley⁴, in which Mendelssohn's occasional unkemptness, his sulky moods as well as the more familiar aspects of gaiety and charm are delineated. In these letters are preserved affectionate memories of Klingemann and Rosen, the latter Professor of Oriental Studies at London University and a pioneer in that branch of research. Klingemann and Rosen, faithful in their attendance on Mendelssohn, were on occasion even pressed into service as organ-blowers when extraordinary sessions were held in St. Paul's Cathedral. The young Horsleys combined admiration for Felix with humorous and candid observation: therefore their asides correct the general run of gratifying adulation. One observation, of interest as coming from a woman, may be quoted from Fanny:

Mamma and Mary think Mendelssohn will never marry. I do, that is if he does not plague his mistress to death before the day arrives. Mr. Klingemann told us that he (Mend.) had been much struck with Delphine [de Schauroth], she however, being another's, is quite out of the question.⁵

One reference in a letter from Abraham gives

³ See S.-G., pp. 207 and 204, letters of 4 Aug. and 22 Aug. 1832.

⁴ See 'Mendelssohn and his friends in Kensington' (London, 1934).

⁵ Ibid., p. 69; cf. letter from Mendelssohn to Fanny from Munich, 11 June 1830. 'The Mendelssohn Family', I, 262 et seq.

¹ Arriving on 23 Apr.

² See W., I, p. 343, letter of 11 May 1832.

mention of the most distinguished, perhaps, among English amateurs:

... We went to a regular Sunday-quartet which takes place at a private gentleman's [Thomas Alsager], in the inmost recess of his house. We chanced upon a quartet by Onslow; two of Onslow's quartets had been played already. They wanted to perform Felix's Octet, but I begged for the Quintet, and they played it, and gave the Octet over and above.

At Vincent Novello's Mendelssohn heard Clara, lately returned from abroad, sing "With verdure clad". This was of considerable importance to Clara's future career. At Novello's Mendelssohn and his father also met Malibran, de Bériot, Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, Wilmann, Dragonetti, Charles Stokes, the Cowden Clarkes and "other people of note connected with literature and art, amongst an assembly of about forty guests".¹ The end of the visit was marred by an accident to Abraham's leg — the kindness of his London acquaintance receiving grateful notice — and signs of approaching blindness began to appear.

DÜSSELDORF.—Abraham, however, enjoyed the pleasure of witnessing his son's complete triumph in his first appointment of consequence. Felix went to Düsseldorf looking for leisure in order to compose.² He found little leisure — nevertheless his works multiplied — but much rewarding labour and, inevitably, social intercourse. He lived in Düsseldorf with Wilhelm von Schadow (-Godenhaus), an artist of some eminence and a former protégé of the Consul Bartholdy. While the one directed the Fine Arts Academy the other supervised church music (the enthusiasm of youth led Mendelssohn to tour Elberfeld and Cologne for works by the early Italians proper to the Catholic services of the city churches), directed subscription concerts and acted as musical director of the theatre.³ It is probable that disappointment in the latter capacity prevented Mendelssohn from ever executing opera. For at Düsseldorf he discovered — and already he had had some insight into theatrical politics in Berlin — that operatic projects aroused ill-feeling. Immermann's ideal was a classical theatre, directed by himself. In Mendelssohn he looked for a worthy ally. Accordingly "classical performances" were organized. The first — "Don Giovanni" — "engrossed the attention of the whole town for three long days". High charges for admission and a feeling that the combined artists were flying above the head of the public led to a demonstration. Mendelssohn made the best of a riotous situation — it is to be noted that his orchestra refused to play for the opera again unless he consented to conduct — and wrote an amusing letter home.⁴ It was the fact that Mendelssohn's interests lay outside the theatre — despite this he achieved performances of 'Egmont' with Beethoven's music and Cherubini's forgotten 'Les Deux Journées' — that bred ill-feeling between Immermann, who had both heart and soul in the scheme, and him. Mendelssohn relinquished the main part of his theatrical commitments in Mar. 1834, retaining an honorary interest in operatic performance.

At the Lower Rhine Festival (18-20 May) Mendelssohn, attending as a member of the audience, again met Chopin, with Hiller. "They have both", wrote Mendelssohn, "improved much in execution, and as a pianist Chopin is now one of the very first of all. He produces new effects, like Paganini on his violin, and accomplishes wonderful passages, such as no one could formerly have thought practicable."⁵ In the spring Mendelssohn's first official honour came in the form of election to membership of the Berlin Academy of Fine Arts. In the latter part of 1834 he met Hauptmann, at that time a member of Spohr's orchestra at Cassel, and in November appointed Julian Rietz to act as his second conductor in the theatre at Düsseldorf. Hauptmann — conspicuous as a philosopher and for applying Hegelian dialectic to music — was later appointed, through Mendelssohn, as Musikdirector of St. Thomas's School at Leipzig (1842), while Rietz succeeded to all Mendelssohn's Düsseldorf offices on his resignation in 1835. On 7-9 June 1835 Mendelssohn again conducted the Lower Rhine Festival at Cologne.⁶ By this time he was nearing the completion of 'St. Paul', on which he had been engaged (as letters to Schubring show) for the past two years.⁷ The stay in Düsseldorf had not been unprofitable: numerous songs, including 'Auf Flugeln des Gesanges' (Op. 34 No. 2) and the 'Infelice' for the Philharmonic Society of London; partsongs (a postal discussion ensued between Mendelssohn and Fanny on the propriety of setting folksongs without accompaniment⁸); the overture 'Melusina', the 'Rondo brillant' (Op. 29) and the Capriccio in A minor for pianoforte (Op. 33 No. 1) were written, while other works — particularly 'Meerestille'

¹ See 'The Musical World', 29 Mar. 1873, for a description of this evening. T. W. Goodban, who was present, is wrong in his date. He ascribed the evening to 1836; cf. Abraham Mendelssohn's letter of 3 July 1833.

² W., II, 5, letter of 1833 (undated) to Schubring.

³ An interesting venture in honour of the Crown Prince of Prussia — afterwards Frederick William IV — was a revised 'Israel in Egypt' with the addition of tableaux vivants. See W., II, p. 10 et seq., letter of 26 Oct. 1833.

⁴ See 'The Mendelssohn Family', I, 326 et seq., letter of 28 Dec. 1833.

⁵ W., II, 36, letter of 23 May 1834.

⁶ In consideration of his Handelian endeavours — 'Solomon' was the chief work that year — the Committee presented Mendelssohn with 32 volumes of Arnold's edition of Handel.

⁷ The initial suggestion had come, as early as 1831, from the Cäcilien-Verein of Frankfurt o/M.

⁸ W., II, p. 33.

-- were revised. Had it not been for 'St. Paul' — Mendelssohn selected his own text, aided by Fürst and Schubring — there would have been another oratorio, to a text by Rochlitz which was passed over to Spohr, 'Des Heilands letzte Stunden'. By Mar. 1835 Klingemann was able to report¹ to the Horsleys that "Mendelssohn is becoming quite the popular man in Germany, and that already his works sell better than those of any other composer, and that he has immeasurable offers for them".

LEIPZIG.—An invitation to conduct the Gewandhaus concerts at Leipzig came early in 1835 through Conrad Schleinitz², the lawyer (to whom Mendelssohn dedicated his last work—the song 'Nachtlied'). Mendelssohn accepted the situation after assurance that financial stability was certain, for "I shall gladly consider myself as a musician who lives by his profession".³ The move to Leipzig, with which city Mendelssohn was, thereafter, most particularly associated and in which he died, introduces the most significant period of his life. Mendelssohn added to the already famous Gewandhaus concerts (they had been established for fifty-six years) greater catholicity of outlook; he formed an excellent orchestra and discovered means — some connected with administration and economics — of improving it; he promoted active advances in musical education: in short, he made of Leipzig the musical capital of Germany. Towards this end he worked unceasingly under the shadow of the influence of Bach. The summary of Mendelssohn's practical outlook is relevantly contained in a letter to Moscheles⁴:

I declined to give anything to Pott in furtherance of his scheme; nor would you have done so, had you known all their doings and dealings in Germany with regard to monuments. They speculate with the names of the great men in order to give themselves great names; they do a deal of trumpeting in the papers, and treat us to much bad music with real trumpets. If they wish to honour Handel in Halle, Mozart in Salzburg and Beethoven in Bonn by founding good orchestras and performing their works properly and intelligently, I am their man. But I do not care for their stones and blocks as long as their orchestras are only stumbling-blocks, nor for their conservatories in which there is nothing worth conserving. My present hobby is the improvement of our poor orchestra. After no end of letter-writing, soliciting and importuning, I have succeeded in getting the salaries raised by five hundred thaler; and before I leave them I mean to get them double that amount. If this is granted, I will not mind their setting up a monument to Sebastian Bach in part of the St. Thomas School; but first, mind you, the grant!

That was after four years of unremitting toil. But at Leipzig Mendelssohn was loved by people whom he loved in return, even though here, too, there were detractors. His conditions of service were ideal — in contrast to Düsseldorf and the Prussian court in 1840—

1841. He had "despotic" powers over the musicians, and . . . such a position as would command their respect, and make him independent of everybody". The choir of the Thomas School and the theatre orchestra were subject to his direction at the Gewandhaus concerts and he exercised, naturally, supreme control over the engagement of artists. Mendelssohn reigned with a charming autocracy inherited from his father.

The entry to Leipzig was celebrated with the 'Meerestille' overture. This was on 4 Oct. The season was notable in many ways: there were performances of Beethoven's B♭ major Trio, of his choral Symphony, of Mozart's D minor Concerto — freed from the accretions of athletic philistines — and Bach's triple Concerto in D minor. Mendelssohn met Clara Wieck (16 Oct.), who played "my B minor Capriccio . . . like a witch"⁵; Schumann called the attention of the Leipzigers to the rare quality of Mendelssohn's overtures and particularly 'Melusina', heard in Dec. 1835, for the first time at Leipzig⁶ and in Germany; more was seen of Chopin and the better he became acquainted with him the more grew Mendelssohn's regard⁷; in Mar. 1836 the University of Leipzig elected Mendelssohn "Honoris causa Philosophiae Doctor et Bonarum Artium Magister". During this year also Ferdinand David came to the Gewandhaus as Konzertmeister.

But the year was overlaid with gloom, for Abraham, whose blindness had become complete and whose bouts of general ill-health had given more frequent anxiety of late, died on 19 Nov. 1835. It took much effort on the part of Fanny to save her brother from despondency. He felt his father's death most particularly because he knew that the completion of 'St. Paul' was Abraham's earnest hope. The oratorio was, in fact, finished during the winter so as to be ready for performance at the Lower Rhine Festival at Düsseldorf (22-24 May 1836). The original intention was Frankfurt in Nov. 1835, but Schellble's illness had made that impossible. The success of 'St. Paul' at Düsseldorf — Fanny, Paul and Paul's wife were among the audience — was complete, but the composer, to Schleinitz⁸, illustrated his capacity for self-criticism in suggesting that sections of the work could be improved. At Düsseldorf Mendelssohn met Sterndale Bennett, sent to the Festival by the firm of Broadwood, and the future critic of 'The Times', J. W. Davison.

From Düsseldorf Mendelssohn passed in July to Frankfurt to direct the Cäcilien-Verein

¹ 'The Mendelssohn Family', I, 334.

² Mendelssohn was slightly disconcerted at the wealth of Schumann's submarine imagery. See S.-G., p. 257, letter of 30 Jan. 1836.

³ W., II, p. 82, letter of 6 Oct. 1835.

⁴ W., II, p. 104, letter of 5 July 1836.

¹ 'Mendelssohn and His Friends in Kensington', p. 193, letter from Fanny Horsley, 12 Mar. 1835.

² See W., II, p. 39, letter of 16 Apr. 1835.

³ W., II, p. 80.

⁴ S.-G., pp. 284-86, letter of 30 Nov. 1839.

in the absence of Schelble. This was an act of generosity, for it meant relinquishing a projected holiday in Switzerland and Italy. The Frankforters appear to have been stronger in Bach than in Handel — thanks to Schelble's tenacity of purpose — and Mendelssohn remarks on their nearly faultless performance of excerpts from the Mass in B minor. Hiller, who was much with Mendelssohn at that time, comments on his electrifying personality as a choral conductor and on the results of six weeks' work which also included the Bach cantata 'Gottes Zeit'.¹ At the same time Mendelssohn was communicating to his family his opinion of Hiller², who he observed, loved Bach and Beethoven, but also esteemed Rossini, Auber and Bellini: "with this variety of tastes no man makes real progress". It is, perhaps, to be regretted that Mendelssohn did not share Hiller's broader interests. As it happened Rossini was at Frankfort, as a wedding-guest in the house of the Baroness James Rothschild. His comment on the Capriccio in F# minor was, aptly, "Ça sent la sonate de Scarlatti". "Well", said Hiller³ to the somewhat aggrieved composer, "that is nothing so very dreadful." "Ah, bah", concluded Mendelssohn, whose pride was piqued at comparisons. While at Frankfort Mendelssohn confounded the opinion of the Horsleys and gratified Fanny's intentions for his welfare: he decided on a wife in the person of Cécile Charlotte Sophia Jeanrenaud, daughter of the deceased minister of the French Reformed Church. Cécile's mother was an aristocratic Souchay, and the gossips of Frankfort were inclined to regard Mendelssohn's suit as a social indiscretion. Mendelssohn, fortunately, never heard this. However, he deferred an official engagement until the autumn (9 Sept.): prior to this he had a month of reflection and bathing at Scheveningen in Holland. A very ordinary story has been substantially magnified out of proportion. Cécile "was not a striking person in any way, neither extraordinarily clever, brilliantly witty, nor exceptionally accomplished".⁴ She was, in 1837, a pleasant girl; she matured into an efficient housewife and had five children. It cannot be said that the marriage — which took place on 28 Mar. 1837 — altered Mendelssohn either for better or for worse. He remained much as he was.

At the Gewandhaus concert of 2 Oct. 1837 Sterndale Bennett, for a time resident at Leipzig, was present. Mendelssohn "played [Beethoven's G major Concerto] wonderfully and his cadences [cadenzas] were extraordinary. I really think more than ever of him."⁵ Sterndale Bennett also met "a very nice fellow, who is named Schumann, and whom I like very much — he composes a great deal, although his music is rather too eccentric". Bennett made a favourable impression, and Mendelssohn in pursuance of his progressive policy, engaged him to play his own Concerto in C minor.

In Jan. 1837 Mendelssohn sent his Op. 35 Preludes and Fugues (for pianoforte) to the printer with doubts whether they would be much played⁶; at the same time the three Fugues for organ (Op. 37) were in production. The spirit of Bach was indeed abroad. The leisure afforded by a honeymoon tour of Freiburg and the Palatinate, which lasted until 15 May, when the Mendelssohns returned to Frankfort, left room for more composition: the Preludes for Op. 37, Psalm XLII, the second — E minor — of the Op. 44 Quartets and the second pianoforte Concerto were composed. Growing out of an earlier work which he viewed with affection, on Fanny's account, came the plan for a new oratorio on the subject of St. Peter. The theological aspect of the subject was discussed with Schubring and the work was provisionally assigned to the Düsseldorf Festival (1839). This, however, never got beyond the state of contemplation. In the autumn Mendelssohn went again to England ('St. Paul' had been performed, under Smart, at Liverpool some months earlier). In London he performed again at St. Paul's Cathedral and also at Christ Church, Newgate Street, where he met Samuel Wesley. 'St. Paul' was performed at Exeter Hall by the Sacred Harmonic Society on 12 Sept. Mendelssohn was much distressed during the time of this performance by the last illness of his friend Rosen. The next week was spent at Birmingham in preparation for the Festival in which 'St. Paul', conducted by the composer, was to be the chief attraction. Mendelssohn also played his new pianoforte Concerto, conducted the inevitable 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture and played Bach's "St. Anne" Prelude and Fugue on the new organ in the Town Hall. Mendelssohn approved the instrument, which had been designed by Neukomm and Novello. The journey back to London demonstrated the superiority of the English transport system to the German.⁷ Nevertheless it took ten and a half hours.

I arrived in London towards midnight, where I was received by Klingemann, and we went together to the Committee of the Sacred Harmonic Society, who formally presented to me a large solid silver box, with an inscription. At half-past twelve o'clock I was again in the mail, and at Dover next morning at nine, when there was no time even for breakfast, as I was obliged to go off directly to the small boat which conveyed us to the steamer. . . .

⁵ Sterndale Bennett to J. W. Davison. See 'From Mendelssohn to Wagner', pp. 35-36.

⁶ H., p. 81, letter of 10 June 1837.

⁷ W., II, p. 125, letter of 4 Oct. 1837.

¹ H., p. 53. ² W., II, p. 108, letter of 14 July 1836.

³ Ibid., p. 58.

⁴ 'The Mendelssohn Family', II, 4.

And so to Boulogne, Lille, through Belgium, where new independence was being celebrated, to Cologne, down the Rhine to Frankfurt and on to Leipzig.

In Nov. Clara Novello began her conquest of Germany. Mendelssohn had heard her at her father's house four years earlier and also at the Birmingham Festival. To Hofrat Teichmann in Berlin¹ Mendelssohn commended this young singer, "with fresh, youthful voice". To Hiller², at the end of Clara's six appearances, he wrote:

The Novello, who has made la pluie et le beau temps here, and at her farewell concert was smothered with poems and flowers, and endlessly applauded and shouted at, is gone to Berlin. . . . She has given the concerts a splendid impetus this winter, and even if it is difficult to replace her, the good effect will last for a time.

In the way of composition Mendelssohn was engaged on the third Quartet of the Op. 44 series, the cello Sonata (Op. 45) and a miscellany of part songs. On 7 Feb. Cécile had her first child — Carl Wolfgang Paul — and was desperately ill. The season proceeded with incredible variety of music at Leipzig³ and with Mendelssohn engaged on his 'Serenade and Allegro gioioso' (Op. 43) and a setting of Psalm XCV. He conducted the Lower Rhine Festival at Cologne (3-6 June), introducing more Bach and Handel.

During the summer Mendelssohn's brother-in-law Hensel was stealing some of his thunder, for while attending the coronation of Queen Victoria he was requested to prepare for the young queen an exhibition of his pictures, one of which (the picture of Miriam) was added to the royal collection. While in Berlin Mendelssohn enjoyed Spontini's presentation of Gluck's 'Armida', but when Guhr's interpretation of Haydn's 'Creation' with the bands of the Austrian and Prussian regiments added for "Let there be light" — to the delight of the newspapers — called for comment he observed that "really Germany seems to be possessed by the devil".⁴ Mendelssohn represented moderation in all his views. The summer was prodigiously busy: the Quartet in D major (Op. 44 No. 1) and the Sonata for violin and pianoforte were completed, as well as more unfamiliar works, while he informed David that the violin Concerto had had mental conception. There is reference also to a Symphony in B \flat major (possibly that which preludes the 'Lobgesang'). The great Psalm CXIV, to be completed in the spring of 1839, was also in draft. In a letter to Erard acknowledging the gift of a pianoforte he shows his appreciation wholeheartedly⁵:

Le service que vous avez rendu par la perfection de vos instruments à l'effet de mon jeu et par la beauté de leur son à mon imagination est aussi grand que c'est votre bonté et amitié pour moi dont j'ai reçu tant de preuves et dont vous me donnez encore une si grande.

In the new series of Gewandhaus concerts the most important "new" work was Schubert's C major Symphony⁶, which Mendelssohn tried, unsuccessfully, to introduce at a later date to the Philharmonic Society of London. Another English singer appeared with great success — Mrs. Shaw. In the forefront of his thoughts at this period was 'Elijah', and discussions accordingly ensued, by correspondence, with Schubring.

On 10 Sept. 1838 Mendelssohn (a day or two before succumbing to an attack of measles) sent a testimonial⁷ in favour of John Thomson's application for the Reid Chair of Music in Edinburgh University. A year later Thomson, successful, informed his sponsor. Mendelssohn immediately replied.⁸ That he did so with celerity is indication of his scrupulousness in regard to old friendships (he had met Thomson in 1829) and routine correspondence. Excerpts from this letter cover the year 1839 and suggest an Edinburgh(?) festival which never materialized:

. . . accept my thanks for all your kind intentions with respect to the intended musical festival next autumn. How very happy and proud I should be to assist it, and to have my 'St. Paul' or anything you like performed there. But your idea of my writing a new oratorio for Birmingham is a mistake, which I think is occasioned by the public statements that such was the case, and which I did not contradict, as I am very much afraid of such public affairs. . . . I am writing a new (short) oratorio⁹ for a festival which we shall have here during next summer; but it is not advanced enough to enable me to judge of its value or effect, compared to my last oratorio. I have also begun a new Symphony and just thought of a new P.F. Concerto. . . .¹⁰

My thanks for your kind enquiries after my wife and child, but I must now say children, for I have also a daughter¹¹ since October last, and thank God all continue in excellent health and spirits.

Then follows the statement that Mrs. Shaw's voice "particularly in some Handelian songs [was] one of the finest I ever heard".

During 1839 the overture and chorus for Victor Hugo's 'Ruy Blas' were completed; there was talk¹² of an opera, which came to nothing. Among outstanding memories at the Gewandhaus was the performance (9 Jan. 1841)¹³ of the four overtures to Beethoven's

"Who knows how long the Symphony . . . might have been buried in dust and darkness, had I not arranged . . . to send it to . . . the conducting artist [Mendelssohn] himself, whose discerning glance never overlooks the most modest beauty, nor the outstanding and dominant one. . . . The Symphony went to Leipzig, was heard, understood, heard again, and joyously admired by almost everyone." — Schumann, 'Gesammelte Schriften über Musik und Musiker', I, 459.

⁷ F., on 11 July 1838. Mendelssohn had written a general testimonial to George Hogarth. Thus is indicated the wider aspect of Mendelssohn's influence in Great Britain.

⁸ F., letter of 18 Dec. 1839.

⁹ 'Christus'.

¹⁰ This Concerto is never mentioned again.

¹¹ Marie, b. 2 Oct.

¹² W., II, p. 160, letter of 1 Aug. 1839.

¹³ H. says 11 Jan.

¹ F., letter of 20 Nov. 1837.

² H., p. 113, letter of 20 Jan. 1838. See also letter to Alfred Novello of 18 Nov. 1837.

³ See W., II, p. 136 et seq., for details of the Historical Concerts: letter dated 1 Feb. 1838.

⁴ H., p. 125, letter of 15 July 1838.

⁵ F., letter of 31 July 1835.

'Fidelio' ('Leonora'),¹ and Bach's Chaconne, in which Mendelssohn accompanied David with a pianoforte part of his own. Friendship rather than respect for Hiller as a composer was responsible for his 'Destruction of Jerusalem' appearing² at the last concert of the season. There was also a novelty in the shape of a symphony by Vogler. Mendelssohn's own Psalm CXIV was presented on New Year's Day 1840. Among performers should be noted Sophie Schloss, a protégée of Mendelssohn, the Belgian Élise Meerti, Ernst and Liszt.³ For Liszt the prices of admission were raised, whereat Mendelssohn offered compensation in the form of an extra soirée with food and drink. As a relaxation during the winter Mendelssohn made translations from the early Italian sonneteers for his Uncle Joseph (to whom Moses Mendelssohn had dedicated 'Morgenstunden'). In the meantime Fanny and her husband were repeating some of his Italian experiences and regaling him with letters comparable to his own of ten years before. Wherever she went Fanny encountered old friends of her brother; Mrs. Handley at Munich, excellent in interpretation of the first pianoforte Concerto⁴; in Rome Joseph Severn, the painter and friend of Keats⁵; relatives of Thorwaldsen; Vernet; the Irish Pallisers. Then there were encounters with Gounod, later to meet the Mendelssohns and Hensels in Berlin.

On 8 Apr. 1840 Mendelssohn urged, in a letter to Falkenstein, a member of the Saxon Government, the utilization of a bequest for "an institution dedicated to art and science" in favour of a "solid music academy in Leipzig". "The positive, technical and material tendencies so prevalent at the present day", urged Mendelssohn, "render the presentation of a genuine sense of art and its being further implanted of twofold importance, but also of twofold difficulty." And then, demonstrating social zeal:

Scholars desirous of enjoying fuller instruction almost invariably consist of those who propose devoting themselves to art, but who rarely possess the means of paying for good private lessons. The most admirable talent is indeed often to be found among this class. . . .

It says much for Mendelssohn's persistence and disposition to address crowned heads on equal terms that three years later the Conservatory was inaugurated. The June Festival of 1840, in commemoration of the invention of printing, brought fine weather at Leipzig and performances of the 'Festgesang' and the 'Lobgesang'.

In the autumn of 1840 Mendelssohn went

¹ Only two overtures (1 and 2) were advertised: Mendelssohn added the other two.

² "He [Mendelssohn] also admitted that the work had a very peculiar colouring . . ." H., p. 167.

³ "An amiable warm-hearted man and an admirable artist." W., II, p. 185, letter of 30 Mar. 1840.

⁴ 'The Mendelssohn Family', II, 65.

⁵ Ibid., p. 91.

again to England, as he had been engaged to conduct the 'Lobgesang' at Birmingham. Again his health gave concern to his doctors, who would have prescribed a rest cure but for his refusal to depart from his commitments. The social round was much as before — Alexanders, Horsleys, Moscheles and Klingemann. A meeting of some consequence was with William Bartholomew, who joined in the chase for a suitable opera libretto, produced a 'Christmas Night's Dream'⁶, which was turned down — gently but firmly, but managed to take on the permanent duty of putting Mendelssohn's German texts into English. Mendelssohn spent the best part of a week at Birmingham with Joseph Moore, manager of the Festival, from 20 Sept. On his way through London he played at St. Peter's, Cornhill, and signalized the occasion by inscribing in the vestry a quotation from the Bach Passacaglia. Back at Leipzig, he was congratulated on the 'Lobgesang' by the King of Saxony. An interesting part of his private reading during this autumn was the 'Nibelungenlied'. The answer to Fanny: "Who could finish an opera with all that horrible carnage?"⁷ was soon to be provided. Fanny was keeping an astute eye on politics and noticing the philistine reaction by the constitutional government envisaged since the War of Liberation and looked forward to by the new king, Frederick William IV, who, romantic and well-meaning, now assumed importance as a principal influence on Mendelssohn's affairs.

BERLIN.—In Nov. 1840 he was sounded as to the likelihood of his accepting office in Berlin. Frederick William IV, with liberal and national leanings, was anxious to establish the pre-eminence of Prussia. The presence of Mendelssohn in Berlin was, in his view, essential to cultural supremacy. Although his idealism was great his practical acumen was slight. Thus unofficial overtures made by way of Paul Mendelssohn and more formal propositions through von Massow were vague in detail. The outline was that the Academy of Arts was to be divided into four sections — Painting, Sculpture, Architecture and Music. In respect of the last a large conservatory was to be established, with Mendelssohn at its head, through which medium, with the assistance of the court theatre musicians, public concerts of sacred and secular music were to be given. The prospect of return to Berlin — where family associations were so great — was in itself attractive. But Mendelssohn was aware of the uncooperative habits of the Singakademie and of the opera. His requests for full information and for substantial guarantees in so far as his status as director was concerned were met with a sequence of friendly evasions. The affair drifted until Mendelssohn, scrupulous in informing the Saxon court of his negotiations, went to Berlin in person in May 1841. Typical of his thoroughness was the memorandum presented to the appropriate minister — Eichhorn — with concrete proposals for the reorganized Academy. As at Leipzig, there was stress on the necessity for free education for all likely to benefit from it. Here Mendelssohn appears to have been before his time. With his opinion the Prussian authorities ought to have agreed, but they took no steps to implement revolutionary suggestions. Nevertheless Mendelssohn succumbed to pressure and agreed to stay in Berlin for a trial year. His title was to be that of Kapellmeister (he was already Kapellmeister to the King of Saxony¹); his emoluments 3,000 thaler a year.

⁶ "An English opera, which the poet won't alter, and I won't compose unless he does" was mentioned to Hiller in a letter of 15 Mar. 1839. H., p. 139.

⁷ 'Mendelssohn Family', II, 129. Letter from Fanny to Felix, 5 Dec. 1840.

The end of the Leipzig season had been remarkable for a performance of the St. Matthew Passion², but the constant strain of concert direction and difficult negotiations with Berlin had precluded composition. Once the Berlin situation was clarified, however, one of the finest of his works was accomplished — the set of 'Variations sérieuses', which was followed by the Variations in E♭ and B♭.³ Then came a congenial duty from the intellectual ambitions of the king. A production of 'Antigone' was proposed. Mendelssohn, reviving experience with Greek drama, consulted "old Tieck" and Bockh, adapted Donner's translation, "deliberately disavowed all intention of writing in the antique style"⁴, and produced a score of what now would be termed "background" music in time for the first private production of the play in Oct. at Potsdam. The first public performance was in the Berlin Schauspielhaus in Apr. 1842. The pundits argued the appropriateness of the production, the vicious possibility that the composer had essayed thereby to "become a court favourite, or a court musicus, or a court jester"⁵.

The middle of 1841 had drawn possible attractions outside Germany to Mendelssohn's notice. On 3 June (from Leipzig) he replied to a letter from Henry E. Dibdin of Edinburgh that he could not either apply for or accept the Chair of Music in Edinburgh⁶, vacant through the death of John Thomson, "although I should certainly derive much pleasure from a residence in a country the short stay in which has left me so many lasting bright recollections and to which I am indebted indeed for the truest and best friends I can boast of". Dibdin responded to this refusal with his autograph album and a request for "a long measure psalm tune".⁷ Mendelssohn confessed ignorance of this style of composition, complained that such ignorance was general in Leipzig and subscribed a "little prelude for the organ".

The musical evenings of the winter of 1841 were a great delight. The lions collected in a portrait album compiled by Hensel, included Pasta, Ernst, Caroline Unger-Sabatier, Liszt — rapturously acclaimed on his first visit to Berlin — Cornelius the painter, Thorwaldsen, Lepsius the Egyptologist, Bockh the philosopher⁸, Bunsen, Prince Radziwill⁹; there was a lioness — Mrs. Austin, celebrated as a writer, sister to the same Dr. Taylor with whom Mendelssohn had stayed in North Wales in 1829.

The Leipzig concerts for 1841-42 were entrusted to David, but in Nov. Mendelssohn appeared to conduct three of the series. From 10 Jan. 1843 there was a series of concerts, by royal command, in the concert-room of the Berlin theatre. There was still a lack of sympathy between Mendelssohn and the orchestral players of Berlin, and the first performance of the "Scottish" Symphony at Leipzig was a welcome diversion. On 15-17 May there was again the Festival at Düsseldorf. A tribute to Mendelssohn as festival director belongs to this period:

He combines conflicting masses and makes them to become an organized whole, and by his winning courtesy, his brilliant wit, as well as by the conspicuous treasures of his knowledge, he inspires even the most lukewarm into eager zeal and incites the most perverse to perseverance and attention.¹⁰

A month of the summer was spent in England. In splendour, in hospitality, in appreciation, this visit outshone its predecessors. Crowds pressed uncomfortably close when Mendelssohn played the organ at Newgate Street¹¹ (some of the boys of Christ's Hospital absented themselves from their adjacent studies). At Exeter Hall a day or two later "three thousand people . . . shouted hurrahs and waved their handkerchiefs, and stamped their feet till the hall resounded with the uproar"¹². There was tea at Buckingham Palace, Queen Victoria playing some of the 'Songs without Words'. On 21 June there was a Philharmonic Society concert. Ten minutes of applause followed

⁷ On 16 June, Mendelssohn's letter not having yet arrived, the Senatus of the University of Edinburgh was still hoping for favourable information from Leipzig (minutes of the Committee of the Senatus Academicus appointed to consider the appointment).

⁸ Who was living at No. 3 Leipzigerstrasse. See 'The Mendelssohn Family', II, 166.

⁹ Son of the composer of the 'Faust' incidental music.

¹⁰ Quoted in 'Reminiscences of Mendelssohn', Elise Polko, p. 102.

¹¹ 15 June.

¹² W., II, p. 259, letter of 21 June 1842.

¹ As from Apr. 1841.

² 4 Apr. 1841.

³ W., II, p. 247, letter of 15 July 1841.

⁴ 'The Mendelssohn Family', II, 165.

⁵ W., II, p. 254, letter of 21 Oct. 1841.

⁶ F.

the D minor Concerto, and the 'Hebrides' had to be repeated. Mendelssohn gratefully noted the presence of Sir Robert Peel, who applauded with the rest. There were readings of 'Antony and Cleopatra' at Chorley's, where Mrs. Butler (born Fanny Kemble) delighted Mendelssohn, an excursion to Greenwich by invitation of the Philharmonic directorate, visits to art galleries (in the Bridgewater Collection he was pleased to find works by Hensel) and a flying visit to Manchester. Dublin invited but, as before, the journey deterred him. The headquarters for this visit, in which Mendelssohn was accompanied by his wife, were at Klingemann's, at 4 Hobart Place, Eaton Square.

By royal permission the "Scottish" Symphony was dedicated to Queen Victoria. The visit to Buckingham Palace of 9 July, at which this permission was granted, is graphically described in a letter to Berlin. From London (12 July) the Mendelssohns went to Frankfurt, thence to Switzerland for a well-earned holiday. After this there followed a fortnight at Frankfurt, where Mendelssohn befriended Charles Hallé and spent much time with Hiller.

Back in Berlin in Sept. Mendelssohn pressed for further directions from Massow. Again positive instructions were lacking. "The answer, like official utterances in general, was neither yes nor no, but a repetition of the old request that he would wait. He would soon find sufficient work and in the meantime he might enjoy his salary of 3000 thaler."¹ Mendelssohn decided, in the circumstances, to retreat from Berlin. This decision caused heart-burning in the family, and the younger members were hard put to it to explain Felix's point of view to his mother. An interview with the king, who was in his most charming disposition, prevented him from presenting formal notice of resignation and he was offered a new foundation of "a regular court chapel . . . thirty first-rate singers and a small orchestra—to execute church music on Sundays and festivals and oratorios on certain other appointed days."²

Until this body was formed Mendelssohn was to have leave to travel where he wished. At his own suggestion his salary was halved, and he returned to Leipzig with commissions from the King of Prussia to compose music for 'Athalie', the 'Midsummer Night's Dream', 'The Tempest' and 'Oedipus at Colonus'. Other creative work included revision of the 'Walpurgisnacht', the cello Sonata in D major and various Songs without Words. Mendelssohn was summoned to Berlin by the news of the death of his mother; she died, peacefully, as all the Mendelssohns did, on 12 Dec.

¹ 'The Mendelssohn Family', II, 172.

² The appointment of General Music Director was conferred on Mendelssohn on 1 Nov. 1842, when also was inaugurated the Cathedral Choir.

The concerts of the new year at Leipzig were marked by novelty in the shape of Gade's first Symphony, in C minor, for which Mendelssohn had great affection. The Hensels were present when this was played, spending a week with Felix from 21 Feb. They also met Berlioz, whose "odd manners" called for all Mendelssohn's wit, a quality which the older man appreciated, although he regretted that so gifted a musician was required to attend to so many apparently trivial details of administration.³ On leaving Leipzig Berlioz exchanged batons with Mendelssohn. 1843 was a commemorative year at Gewandhaus, for the first subscription concert had been given a century earlier. It was also an inaugural year for the Conservatory which, with Hauptmann, David and Schumann on the staff, opened on 3 Apr. On 1 May Mendelssohn's fourth child, Felix, was born, and about the same time a young Hungarian, Joachim by name, came to Leipzig. On 7 June a statue of Frederick Augustus was unveiled at Dresden, Wagner being Kapellmeister there. Pièces de circonstance were contributed both by Wagner and Mendelssohn, that by the latter erring in the direction of academic celebration.

Another commissioned work was the 'Te Deum' for the thousandth year of the empire (Frederick Williams's historic sense provided this somewhat unnecessary celebration). Massow, who instructed Mendelssohn herein, took the opportunity to send further documents regarding the Berlin appointment for signature. Mendelssohn found that bureaucratic restrictions were to be imposed, that he was to be subservient to the civil service, and he refused to accept the conditions. Such annoyances, however, did not affect his current compositions. 'Antigone' was performed on 19 Sept.⁴ and the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music on 18 Oct., with public performances at the king's theatre (the first performance of both works was at Potsdam) on the three succeeding nights. Fanny described, with fervent admiration, the reception of this music, commenting:

but we had all at different ages gone through the whole of the parts from Peasblossom to Hermia and Helena, and now it had come to such a glorious ending. But we really were brought up on the 'Midsummer Night's Dream', and Felix especially had made it his own, almost recreating the characters which had sprung from Shakespeare's exhaustless genius.

There were those in Berlin who maintained that Shakespeare had translated the play into ³ Mendelssohn's punctiliousness was of service to Berlioz; see the practical advice on concert-giving at Leipzig proffered in his letter of 25 Jan. 1843; reprinted (in abbreviated form) in Berlioz, 'Voyage musical' (1844).

⁴ After which Mendelssohn became a member of the Philologus-Versammlung of Cassel.

English, others who found the play tiresome for elegant people, while one "starred but not very enlightened gentleman" observed to Mendelssohn: "What a pity that you have wasted your beautiful music on such a stupid play".

The orchestra, according to Fanny, played superbly, and Mendelssohn appears to have forgotten some of his old prejudices regarding Berlin. His activities there were so compelling that he was obliged to direct affairs at Leipzig in absentia with Hiller installed as deputy conductor. Nevertheless Mendelssohn was at pains to keep acquainted with the Leipzig situation, to claim extra remuneration for the orchestral players, to perform the G minor Concerto and the Bach triple Concerto (with Clara Schumann and Hiller), so as to initiate the series under Hiller's control. On 18 Nov. Mendelssohn temporarily took leave of Leipzig with a "farewell concert", at which the new cello Sonata (Op. 58) was introduced, and in the Octet Mendelssohn and Gade played the violas. A week before he had moved with his family to Berlin. The winter passed agreeably, both in artistic and social affairs. Felix, Fanny, Paul (Rebecca was in Italy) and their families enjoyed each other's company. There were dinner parties given for and by the Mendelssohns. Mendelssohn relaxed somewhat and his spirits rose accordingly. His correspondence loses a feeling of strain, which negotiations at Leipzig (for there, as Elise Polko notes¹, the path was by no means always smooth) and Berlin had of late imposed. There were interesting communications to and from England. Mendelssohn recommends Sterndale Bennett for the obtrusive Chair at Edinburgh, again vacant; the Philharmonic Society invite him to accept the conductorship for the next season²: Bartholomew³ requests "one or two sacred solos with an organ accompaniment for some concerts we are about to give at Crosby Hall, a renovated Gothic structure which was once the palace of Richard the Third". Bartholomew submitted his texts; one the "Death Prayer of Samson" (Judges xvi, 23-31), the other a version of the opening of Psalm LV. This ('Hear my prayer') was accepted and the manuscript delivered in Jan. 1844.⁴ The season was one in which psalm singing was prevalent, for on 26 Dec. Mendelssohn's setting of Psalm XCVIII in rehearsal filled the cathedral so effectively that Fanny was forced to negotiate a seat through a friendly sacristan. Mendelssohn's compositions at this time were ecclesiastically biased, but songs, pianoforte pieces and duets appeared as parerga.

Two months of the summer — from 10 May to 10 July — were devoted to music in London, to conducting the Philharmonic concerts, 'St. Paul' for the Sacred Harmonic Society⁵ and performing at a miscellany of public concerts. The "capital little Joachim"⁶, whom Mendelssohn recently befriended, made his first London appearance on 27 May. Another artist with whom he became acquainted and for whom he had particular regard was Piatti.

The meeting with Dickens⁷ is of more consequence to author than composer, for thereafter Dickens esteemed Mendelssohn as his favourite composer. Klingemann pays delightful tribute to the English people's respect for Mendelssohn and had a good word for their capacity for disinterested admiration.⁸ From England Mendelssohn went for a holiday at Soden near Frankfort. This recreation among unsophisticated society, with his family, without metropolitan formalities and (for Mendelssohn had the romantic's mystical appreciation of landscape) in delicious country is charmingly detailed in a letter to Rebecca⁹, still in Italy. There was, however, still proof correction, composition and correspondence. The organ Sonatas were taking shape, the violin Concerto was nearing completion — with David's collaboration — and certain works by Bach being edited for Coventry & Hollier of London.¹⁰ The only professional engagement of the summer was direction of a Festival at Zweibrücken from 31 July to 1 Aug. Fanny had protested against her brother's removing his family from Berlin before his London visit. With the coming of autumn he returned to Berlin, but leaving Cécile and the children at Frankfort. Mendelssohn's intention was — again — to rid himself of the vexations of his appointment there. It may be noted that Mendelssohn, coming to maturity young, arrived early at that climax in life when the resilience of youth diminishes and the capacity for fight disappears. In the interests of tranquillity he proposed to the king that his salary should be reduced to 1000 thaler, that he should be relieved of routine duties, that he should engage only in separate and specific commissions, that he should be given liberty of movement with no restrictions

¹ Polko, p. 109: "Many a time his soul was wounded by narrow-mindedness, shortsightedness, ignorance and obstinacy, and above all by irritated vanity, the outbursts of which obstructed his path in the most varied forms".

² 'The Mendelssohn Family', II, 238, letter of 23 Dec.: "... I feel much inclined to accept, as the society is (speaking artistically) so very aristocratic, but I do not yet know whether it will be possible, especially on account of Cécile and the children. ..."

³ F., letter written from 2 Walcot Place, Hackney.

⁴ See Polko, p. 213, letter of 31 Jan. 1844.

⁵ 28 June and 5 July.

⁶ See Polko, pp. 157-58, letter of 10 Mar. 1844 introducing Joachim to Klingemann's notice.

⁷ 12 June (? at George Hogarth's).

⁸ 'The Mendelssohn Family', II, 280.

⁹ Ibid., p. 291, letter of 22 July 1844.

¹⁰ A sequence of letters from 29 Aug. 1844 to 20 May 1846 on this project is preserved in Polko, pp. 345-48.

on place of residence. Mendelssohn's "absolute nobility of motive" in this — Fanny's statement — is difficult to appreciate. It was a matter of convenience. The king, on the other hand, would appear to have been generous. There were a few more concerts and a performance of 'St. Paul' (25 Nov.), and then Mendelssohn retreated, unlamented by the professional musicians of the city, to Frankfurt.

THE LAST YEARS.—The winter was marked by domestic troubles. The youngest child — Felix — was dangerously ill with measles and although he was better by Christmas his health was permanently undermined and he died young, soon after his father. Rebecca, in Rome, contracted "black jaundice" and was at the same time pregnant. Paul Mendelssohn's small daughter was also very ill at the end of Oct. So that, while free from public cares (Gade was conducting at Leipzig), Felix was oppressed by private anxieties. The influence of the family on his development — a Jewish as well as a German trait — may be marked at this point, for it was very considerable and contrasts with a frequent negligence of domestic obligations on the part of artists of genius. Rebecca's baby was born, prematurely, on 13 Feb. She was christened Florentina (Flora). Thereafter Mendelssohn's interests reverted to music. He added much to the continental reputation of 'Punch' by recommending to Fanny the issue of 1 Jan. which memorialized in cartoon the Covent Garden performance (2 Jan.–1 Feb.; 8–21 Feb.) of 'Antigone'.¹ He saw the organ Sonatas through publication, completed the C minor Trio and dedicated the current 'Songs without Words' (Book VI) to Sophie Rosen — Klingemann's rather tardy selection in the matter of matrimony. On 12 Apr. there was a charity concert in aid of the flood victims of Frankfurt, and Mendelssohn played Beethoven's C major Sonata.² Again his thoughts were revolving round opera, while his obligations to the King of Prussia were responsible for the incidental music to 'Oedipus at Colonus', 'Oedipus Rex' and Racine's 'Athalie'.³ With respect to the 'Eumenides' of Aeschylus he found himself, for once, incapable of fulfilling his contract, and this brought some acrimonious correspondence from a somewhat tactless court official. It may be suspected that once again Mendelssohn had undertaken more than he should, for he was simultaneously editing Handel's 'Israel in Egypt'⁴ and thinking of 'Elijah'.

A family reunion of the Hensels, Dirichlets and Mendelssohns was effected during the early summer, and in Sept. Felix returned to Leipzig, having been urged by Falkenstein. The violin Concerto, which had been played on 13 Mar., was repeated on 23 Oct., under Mendelssohn's direction; on the same occasion Schumann's B \flat major Symphony was performed. But the sensation of the season was the Leipzig debut of Jenny Lind. Mendelssohn had previously heard her in Berlin in 1844 and played with her at the house of Professor Wichmann. This association again stimulated the idea of opera. The poet Geibel took a libretto in hand. It was, however, too late, for the 'Lorelei' exists only as a fragment.

By 23 May 1846 the first part of 'Elijah' was finished. Work on this — Mendelssohn's example is perhaps the answer to his contemporaries, not as a rule musicians, who considered business as detrimental to originality and creative effort — had proceeded steadily against a background of continual routine in the Conservatory, to the staff of which Moscheles was coaxed from London early in 1846. There had also been composed⁵ the magnificent 'Lauda Sion', unique among Mendelssohn's output as being a major work for the Catholic tradition and a fulfilment, therefore, of an earlier desire.⁷ It was performed at St. Martin's, Liège, on 11 June. The visit to Liège was part of three weeks' itinerary which embraced the Lower Rhine Festival at Aachen (31 May–2 June), a concert at Dusseldorf, "where they serenaded me twice, as the two Liedertafeln of the place hate each other to the extent that they could not be induced to combine"⁸; and a festival of the German-Flemish association (a product of common anti-French sentiment) at Cologne, for which Mendelssohn composed a setting of Schiller's 'An die Künstler'. The Lower Rhine Festival was the last he was to conduct. He parted from Jenny Lind on the understanding that they should meet again in the near future in a performance of 'Elijah' in Vienna.

Spohr was a guest on his return to Leipzig, and after his departure Mendelssohn deferred all other work until after the copying of 'Elijah', the first part of which was already in rehearsal under Moscheles's direction in England. By 28 July all but No. 37 was on its way to Bartholomew for translation, together with a present of metronomes for the director of the chorus. Mendelssohn followed in mid-Aug. and, after rehearsals at Moscheles's house, went to Birmingham, where, after full rehearsals on Monday and Tuesday, the first

¹ For a reproduction see CARICATURE.

² ? the "Waldstein".

³ At Potsdam, Mendelssohn being present, on 1 Nov. 1845.

⁴ At Charlottenburg, Mendelssohn again being present, ? on 1 Dec. 1845.

⁵ See G. & M., p. 137 et seq.

⁶ Dated 10 Feb. 1846.

⁷ See 'Mendelssohn Family', II, 331, letter of 27 June 1846.

⁸ Loc. cit.

performance was given in the Town Hall on Wednesday, 26 Aug. This so affected the composer that he wrote to his brother:

Not less than four choruses and four airs were encoed and not one single mistake occurred in the whole of the first part: there were some afterwards in the second part, but even these were but trifling. A young English tenor [Lockey] sang the last air with such wonderful sweetness that I was obliged to collect all my energies not to be affected and to continue beating time steadily.¹

Elijah was sung by Staudigl. A few days in London and Ramsgate intervened before the return to Leipzig. It was with physical difficulty, though characteristic intellectual integrity, that Mendelssohn applied himself to the corrections which he felt were necessary² before publication (Simrock, Berlin, and Ewer & Co., London, June 1847). He complained increasingly of weariness. Autumnal works, to royal command, were a setting of the German Liturgy, an anthem (Op. 79 No. 5) and a psalm-tune for the German community at Lyons. While Felix was composing with difficulty and leaving Gade to preside over the Gewandhaus, Fanny, emboldened by some slight success in the publication of her music, and by her brother's acceptance of this display of feminine forwardness³, fell to composition with zest and wrote a Trio for violin, cello and pianoforte, with which she celebrated her birthday on 11 Apr. 1847.

The remaining months of his life Mendelssohn spent in fluctuation between high spirits and deep depression. Despite the 'Lorlei', other subjects for opera were within his interest and hopeful coadjutors were not backward with suggestions. Lumley, lessee of Her Majesty's Theatre in London, came to Leipzig for conferences⁴, the upshot of which was a proposed 'Tempest'. (Mendelssohn's suggestion in memory of his mother's wish of many years before?⁵) Mrs. Grote, wife of the eminent classical historian, and one of Mendelssohn's London hostesses, also provided an outline for an opera. Mendelssohn proposed that it might be of interest to Balfe.⁶ During the season Mendelssohn took a more active part in the Gewandhaus than for some time past, and he engaged in the composition of a new oratorio, 'Christus', of which not enough exists to demonstrate its potentialities. On Good Friday (2 Apr.) 'Elijah' was given at Leipzig. Then came the last visit to England, and 'Elijah' was given four times in London, at Exeter Hall (16, 27, 28 and 30 Apr.), and on the third night the queen and prince consort were present, the latter inscribing a eulogy on his programme. On 20 Apr. Mendelssohn had visited Manchester ('Elijah'), and he went to Birmingham again on 27 Apr. The previous evening he had conducted the Philharmonic concert. The rest of the visit followed a familiar pattern: diplomatic lunches, two visits to Buckingham Palace, Jenny Lind's English début at Her Majesty's Theatre on 4 May in Meyerbeer's 'Robert le Diable', picture galleries, an afternoon party at the Bunsens's which was attended by the Gladstones, friendly evenings at hospitable houses, all under the careful watch of the faithful Klingemanns. The pace at which Mendelssohn lived is indicated by a note to Mrs. Grote:

[I shall] be most happy to join your party on Tuesday evening, and if I possibly can I shall not fail to do so. But excuse me if I should not be able to come, for I have on that day a rehearsal at 10, a concert at 2, another rehearsal at 3 and a rehearsal of my 'St. Paul' at 8 to conduct.⁷

Mendelssohn left England on 9 May, escorting Mrs. Klingemann. Klingemann, at the last moment, disturbed by Mendelssohn's condition and knowing his antipathy to sea travel, determined to accompany them as far as Ostend. Mendelssohn had hardly arrived at Frankfurt when news reached him of the sudden death, on 17 May, of Fanny. The effect on an already debilitated condition was disastrous; he collapsed completely. His family and friends persuaded him to go to Switzerland in June, and there he stayed until Sept. There was, however, "a party of not less than twenty altogether, and the quiet he needed was out of the question. He took to walking immoderately, so that his wife was frightened by his absences of many hours . . . he said it was the only thing that would calm his mind."⁸ He also engaged much in painting. At Interlaken in Sept. the Quartet in F minor, memorial to Fanny, was composed. Some less significant music belonged to this summer, the Andante and Scherzo posthumously arranged into Op. 81 and '1 Morning and Evening Service (Op. 69)⁹ for the English church.

Sometimes Mendelssohn looked optimistically to the future. To his friend Maier of Freiburg¹⁰ he expressed a hope that some proposed poems to be set as songs and partsongs should be sent as soon as possible, "for I fancy I shall soon be in a great humour for work".

¹ S.-G., p. 354, letter of 26 Aug. 1846.

² See W., II, 380, letter of Oct. 1831.

³ Mendelssohn, like his father, felt strongly that woman's place was in the home, although he departed from his convictions in respect of Fanny. (See 'Mendelssohn Family', II, 326.)

⁴ F., letter of 22 Dec. 1846.

⁵ When Lumley advertised this as for the 1847 season the Sacred Harmonic Society began to fear lest it should conflict with an 'Elijah' performance promised to them, and Mendelssohn asked, via Bartholomew (10 Mar. 1847), that such misstatements should be discontinued.

⁶ F., letter of 22 Dec. 1846.

⁷ F., letter dated May 1847.

⁸ F. A letter dated 28 Feb. 1848, from Honoria Taylor (daughter of John Taylor, F.R.S.) to Mrs. Grote, based on "information supplied by Miss Sophie" (?) Horsley, who visited Cécile Mendelssohn in Dec. 1847.

⁹ Completion of the intention expressed in the letter to Vincent Novello of 22 Aug. 1832. S.-G., pp. 284-85.

¹⁰ Letter of 30 July 1847.

He contemplated a new symphony, for the Philharmonic Society, works for the new Philharmonic Hall at Liverpool, for Frankfurt and Cologne.

On 7 Sept. he returned to Leipzig. Shortly after his return he went to Berlin to consider the details of a performance of 'Elijah' planned for 3 Nov. He was taken to the room where his sister was attacked by the fit of which she died. One of his 'Walpurgisnacht' choruses still remained at the piano, open at the page she had been playing. Nothing had been moved since her death, either in this room or the one where she died. They showed him both. He was excessively agitated, his grief burst out afresh, or more even than before. He told the king that it was impossible for him to superintend 'Elijah', and he returned to Leipzig.¹

There he had an attack similar to his sister's, from which he recovered. Sometimes still he planned for the future. A letter to John Hullah² dealt with an English version of 'Lauda Sion'. Then there were occasions, as when Benedict called, when he was in bed: "I shall not be alive next year", he said continually, "why do you speak to me of these things? All I have to do is to think of packing up."³ Most of his time he spent with his youngest child, Lili, making pictures for her and teaching her to draw. In the evenings he played cards with his wife.

He must have been considerably better when he went to spend an evening at Livia Frege's⁴, to teach her the last song⁵ which he had written. (What a history the touching words of this song tell of the tone of his thoughts in these last sad months!) It was while accompanying her that he fell from his chair; again, from this fit he recovered for some days, and after one night of quiet sleep he woke in high spirits and so much better that joy spread through the whole town; but in the afternoon⁶ came another fit and he was during the night apparently in extreme suffering. The next day his consciousness returned, he recognized the friends who were in his room, but did not speak. His wife asked him if he were in pain. "No." "Are you tired?" "Ja, ich bin muede, schrecklich muede", and these were the last words he spoke. Afterwards it was only a placid and beautiful sleep, and his countenance gradually assumed an expression which the letters I saw from those who were present called "seraphic". So it remained.⁷

Mendelssohn died at 9.24 P.M. on Thursday, 4 Nov. The effect on Leipzig in particular, on Germany and Europe in general, was as though a great statesman had died. There was a lying-in-state. On 7 Nov. there was a service in the church of St. Paul—the University church of Leipzig. The coffin was preceded by two choirs, by the Gewandhaus orchestra, by pupils of the Conservatory, one of whom carried, on a white satin cushion, a silver laurel wreath. Moscheles arranged the E minor 'Song without Words' (Book V No.

3) for wind instruments. Next to the coffin came mourners, then clergy, then representatives of civil and military authority, University, law and finally humbler friends. Inside the black-draped church chorales by Bach and Mendelssohn himself were sung. A funeral oration by Pastor Howard of the Reformed church, the Benediction, and the final chorus of the St. Matthew Passion, were other principal memories of that memorable service. The coffin was taken that night on its way to Berlin. At each station it was met by silent crowds. At Dessau Friedrich Schneider paid farewell tribute by making his choir sing a commemorative part-song. The coffin reached Berlin before 6 A.M. and it was placed on the hearse to the accompaniment of the chorale 'Jesu, meine Zuversicht'. On the way to the churchyard (Alter Dreifaltigkeits Kirchhof) Beethoven's 'Funeral March' was played. The body was placed in the family burial place.

Public tokens of regret took the form of concerts, memorials and laudatory notices. There should have been a Gewandhaus concert on the day of Mendelssohn's death. It was postponed until 11 Nov., when, except for the "Eroica" Symphony, the programme comprised works by Mendelssohn. In London the Sacred Harmonic Society gave 'Elijah', preceded by the Dead March from 'Saul'. Letters to Cécile came from Queen Victoria and the kings of Prussia and Saxony.

Cécile showed herself calm and practical in early widowhood. The problem of Mendelssohn's manuscripts was urgent, in that publishers were anxious to take them, and difficult because Mendelssohn himself was so scrupulous in revision. To de Trémont of Paris she wrote:

Neither you nor I have the right to dispose of the score in your possession. . . . The posthumous publication of my husband's works has been postponed until such time as the manuscripts have been re-read and examined by musicians who will be able to decide better than I what is worthy of standing beside the works that my late husband published during his lifetime.⁸

From 1848 to 1852 the works listed from Op. 73 to Op. 100 were published. On 25 Sept. 1853 Cécile, who had lost her son Felix two years earlier, died. It was not until 1867 that publication of Mendelssohn's remaining manuscripts was resumed, by which time they were controlled by his eldest son, Dr. Carl Mendelssohn (d. 1897), a distinguished historian and professor at Heidelberg and Freiburg. Certain works were never published. The greater part of the manuscripts, comprised principally in forty-four volumes, dated and annotated carefully by the composer, were deposited in the Imperial (now State) Library in Berlin. The Prussian government founded, in exchange for these volumes, two scholar-

¹ F., letter of Honoria Taylor, 28 Feb. 1848.

² F., letter to John Hullah, 4 Oct. 1847.

³ Honoria Taylor. Ibid.

⁴ 9 Oct.; in the morning Mendelssohn had been with Moscheles and David. Livia Frege was a prominent Leipzig hostess whose salon offered "the most refined of all musical enjoyments . . . under the aegis of the sweet vocal muse". Polko, p. 114.

⁵ 'Nachtlied.'

⁶ Wednesday, 3 Nov.

⁷ Honoria Taylor, ibid.

⁸ 'The Romance of the Mendelssohns', p. 207.

ships to which music students were elected from the German conservatories by competitive examination.

It remains to state that Paul Mendelssohn (d. 1880), the composer's second son, became a chemist of ability (a pioneer in the manufacture of aniline dye) and a soldier, receiving the Iron Cross in the Franco-Prussian War; Marie, the eldest daughter, married Victor Benecke and lived in London; Lili, the younger, Adolphe Wach, sometime Professor of Law at Leipzig.

PERSONALITY AND INFLUENCE.—The importance of Mendelssohn has been obscured since his death by the practice of segregating his life from his works and by laying romantic emphasis, which he himself would have deplored, on both. Mendelssohn was a very great man, from a practical viewpoint; the founder of the German-Austrian musical tradition of the late nineteenth century and the protector of an equally great but earlier tradition, and also a composer. It should be stressed that composition, for which he had great natural gifts, was undertaken in the interstices of a life concerned with much administrative detail on one hand and with social obligations on the other. Mendelssohn, by his example, made "respectable" the profession of music, and he never neglected an opportunity¹ to improve the status of less distinguished colleagues. That he should himself embrace music as a career was approved by his father only after long deliberation and against the advice of the influential Joseph Bartholdy. That he was trained to be a citizen before a musician, and that he had unrivalled opportunities at home for general cultural contact, gave to him a unique versatility. He may be described as a product of the Hellenist philosophy of education, promulgated officially in the year of his birth by Wilhelm von Humboldt: he was a good classical scholar; a life-long student of philosophy, poetry, literature and drama (a favourite novelist was E. T. A. Hoffmann², a fighter against Philistinism); an adept at modern languages; an artist; a brilliant conversationalist; an athlete, with swimming, riding and dancing among his accomplishments; and attracted by chess on the one hand and cards on the other.

It is probable that Mendelssohn would have achieved distinction in any occupation he might have chosen. His letters (significantly, of late years these have attracted more critical attention than his music) are masterpieces of description—he follows the German epistolary school headed by Goethe—in that he can make scenes, whether in Switzerland,

Italy or Scotland, vivid and yet precise, while enlarging, in the manner of the period, on the metaphysical attributes of natural phenomena. In allusive observation of a humorous and slightly sardonic order he owed something to Sterne, whose 'Sentimental Journey' was as a sine qua non to disciples of Goethe. An important part of Mendelssohn's writing concerns the fine arts, in which he possessed special gifts and for which he had had specialized training. His observations on the early Italians have the merit of bringing pictures to life, while an obsession with beauty for beauty's sake anticipates the approach of Pater. Mendelssohn differed from many of his contemporaries in applauding the art of antiquity—architecture less than literature, painting and music—but having no desire to see older modes of living revived. "I thank God", he wrote on one occasion, "that the so highly-prized Middle Ages are gone, never to return . . . the more I read and think on the subject the more I feel this to be true."

There must be admiration for Mendelssohn as littérateur. He could point a phrase, build a climax, vary his vocabulary with great subtlety, according to his subject; he was precise in observation, and humorous. He was, perhaps, deficient in characterization, and frequently oblivious of contemporary events, which his sister Fanny noted more seriously. The autocracy of the musician—often disliked, as in Berlin, but more often accepted because veiled with courtesy and, paradoxically, modesty—is emphasized in correspondence. For Mendelssohn himself is the focus. The letters, it might be thought, were written to posterity as well as to the members of the family. If this was intended, their author has achieved considerable success.

In the graphic arts Mendelssohn revealed the gifts also displayed in his music. Indeed, his works in this medium, particularly his water-colours, may be said to stand midway between letters and music. There is poise, deliberation, consummate technique, economy and frequently a fine feeling for spariöusness. The slighter sketches, often of family groups, are spontaneous and quick with humour. It is to be regretted that for the most part this quality was excluded from his music, for, as in 'Die Heimkehr aus der Fremde', given free rein, it would have led to comic opera. Mendelssohn had not the faculty for serious opera because he regarded tragedy as distasteful.

In avoidance of introspection, so far as his work was concerned, Mendelssohn followed the precepts of the society to which he belonged. Thus he epitomizes good manners and hedonism. Music was a part of his life, and obviously an important part; but it was not the whole.

¹ Cf. his negotiations at Leipzig.

² F., letter (undated) from Marie Benecke to George Grove.

Even within his music there is a remarkable versatility which again tends to obscure later judgment of his significance. As a pianist he was conspicuous for clarity, for lack of mannerism, for fidelity to text. Of his age he was the greatest exponent of Mozart and Beethoven — he reflected bitterly on the ignorance, even in Vienna, of the keyboard music of Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven. He combined with his classical sense of propriety a wonderful control of nuance (for which he had to thank a miraculously sensitive ear), so that critics could commend his “fire” on the one hand and his capacity for making the pianoforte speak orchestrally on the other. Although he rarely touched a stringed instrument from one year to the next, he could, as Hiller comments, play extremely well. His organ playing was unique because he added to great technical accomplishment — his pedalling calling for especial notice — a feeling for registration which he gained from a wider musical experience than is attainable in the organ-loft. Conducting was an art which Mendelssohn understood to perfection. His view embraced the welfare of his players — he expected a sense of loyalty to music on their part — an adequacy of rehearsal and attention to detail. He did not “court notice by his behaviour at the desk. His movements were short and decided, and generally hardly visible, for he turned his right side to the orchestra. A mere glance at the first fiddle, a slight look one way or the other, was sufficient.”¹ He also conveyed his pleasure to his performers at their excellence: “he nods his head and pushes out his under lip just as if there were nobody in the room at all.”²

Mendelssohn may not always have approved new works, but his criticisms were never illogical, and usually based on a dislike of noise (for which he condemned Cherubini's ‘Ali Baba’³), of formlessness⁴, of irrelevant display, of inconsistency.⁵ Frequently, he buried his prejudices, and the number of composers he helped was large. Berlioz, Chopin, Hiller, Sterndale Bennett, Gade, Schumann owed much to his interest, while Wagner gained qualified approval.⁶ He revived the dead as well as assisting the living, and his performance of Leo, Lotti, Durante, Palestrina, Lassus was notable. With regard to Bach and Handel we may say that the fundamental position in 20th-century tradition occupied by these composers is largely due to Mendelssohn.

The teaching of Fichte and Hegel had some effect in this connection. For Mendelssohn was a German patriot and, while not unaware of the shortcomings of German Philistinism, convinced of German supremacy in most fields of endeavour. He thus gained the high approval of Treitschke. Mendelssohn was not only the consummate artist and scholar: he was, at Leipzig, a brilliant administrator, attentive to routine detail, perceptive in the appointment of subordinates and keenly interested (if not in teaching as such) in progress reports on his students. His memoranda are clear and succinct, and his negotiations with high authority were as diplomatic as might be expected from one whose family had both legal and diplomatic connections.

It is generally noticed that Mendelssohn possessed charm of manner to a high degree. For this and his business acumen, his appreciation of domestic propriety (with women subordinate to male direction), his punctuality, his sense of religious duty and a somewhat moralizing attitude, he was indebted to his upbringing and to ancient traditions of his Jewish race. He had a markedly Jewish appearance, although he referred to his ancestry only once; but, while being a great Jew, he was equally a great German, and may be regarded, therefore, by his efforts and example as a notable figure in European humanistic culture. Among great musicians Mendelssohn must be regarded as the most completely integrated in character. His personal greatness lies in an abhorrence of a confined mind⁷; herein, perhaps, lies also the explanation of his vacillating reputation as a composer.

THE COMPOSER.—Mendelssohn's works are complementary to his outlook on life, and standing as exemplification of a particular social (as opposed to philosophical) creed, suffer in some ways from following precepts which later generations have rejected. The universality of Mendelssohn's appeal in his own day indicates how fully he understood the new music-conscious communities created by liberal tendencies towards diffused cultural opportunity and by middle-class affluence. He is unique in having achieved enormous popularity during his lifetime, while at the same time exerting a powerful influence on purely musical development. Mendelssohn saw music from a hedonistic standpoint; thus,

¹ H., pp. 157-58.

² Rebecca to Cécile, 11 Mar. 1837. ‘The Mendelssohn Family’, II, 30.

³ W., II, p. 25.

⁴ Cf. observation on Berlioz, letter of Apr. 1834. S.-G., pp. 228-31.

⁵ Letter of 24 Jan. 1837 to Hiller (H., pp. 82-86) makes interesting reading, for the very points which Mendelssohn takes exception to in the Hiller overture under review are those for which he himself may, with justice, be taken to task.

⁶ S.-G., p. 324, letter of 3 Mar. 1843.

⁷ “He could be very irritable when people thought they were bound to converse with him exclusively about music; . . . ‘as if I were incapable of talking on any other subject than my profession’, said he sometimes with amusing indignation.” Polko, p. 121. See also letter to Naumann on the necessity for a general education, S.-G., pp. 283-84, letter of 19 Sept. 1839.

one of his principal objectives was, simply, to give pleasure. Therefore his melodic invention is frequently limited by a desire to exact the minimum of intellectual effort on the part of his audience. Almost without exception his slow movements fail because of an incapacity for avoidance of the commonplace. Those of the concertos and the organ sonatas typify the fault, which sentimental interpretation merely magnifies. In choral writing banality, usually born of rhythmic squareness, appears when opulence is intended. The 'Hymn of Praise', the chorus of the Baalites in 'Elijah', the 'Oedipus at Colonus' music, "O great is the depth" from 'St. Paul', variously illustrate this point. Easy rhetoric came naturally to Mendelssohn, and his self-critical faculty — exercised rigorously in detailed revision — stopped short at this juncture. The facile type of accompaniment shown in the opening of Psalm XLII, in the second movement of the violin Concerto, in many of the 'Songs without Words', comes from appreciation of what is effective; but too frequently repetition impairs the effectiveness. The same may be said of the harmonic climaxes which depend on the inevitability of diminished sevenths and higher dominant discords in general. On the credit side should be set the fact that all Mendelssohn's music was a protest against the empty complexity of much that was current in his day. Mendelssohn had too many idiosyncrasies of style to be reckoned among the greatest of composers, but his supremacy in certain departments ensures his high rank among the great.

He was a great master of orchestral effect, with a laudable predilection for economy of means and a continual aspiration towards clarity. Both the "Italian" and "Scottish" Symphonies remain conspicuous among symphonies by deftness in orchestral handling, and each of the overtures stands out in brilliance and poetic refinement. Passing by the 'Hebrides', of which the felicities are familiar, attention may be drawn to the exquisite opening of 'Melusina' — the ne plus ultra of musical liquescence — and the deep tranquillity of 'Meeresstille'. The latter demonstrates a capacity shown many times in the chamber music, and especially in the Octet, to extract a maximum of effect with a minimum of effort from the string ensemble. In the bars which precede the "Glückliche Fahrt" interest is concentrated in the flute, an instrument which called forth (cf. Scherzo of 'Midsummer Night's Dream') all Mendelssohn's poetic sensibility. 'Melusina' demonstrates a complete understanding of woodwind colour. In his handling of this department of the orchestra Mendelssohn owned his kinship with Weber, but his dislike of exaggeration of colour added an individuality which was commendable to the French.¹ When chorus was added to orchestra Mendelssohn often achieved a new synthesis, so that both bodies were firmly intertwined. The symphony-cantata 'Walpurgisnacht', the finest choruses of 'Elijah' and the whole of 'Lauda Sion' are remarkable in this unity, and anticipation is felt of Wagner and Elgar.

On occasion Mendelssohn consciously promoted respect through his own works for those of his great predecessors whom he felt to be neglected. Bach is echoed clearly in the fugues of Op. 35 (the first, in E minor, is a remarkable synthesis of 18th-century method with 19th-century thought and, with its climactic and elegiac chorale, foreshadows Franck), in the contrapuntal movements of the organ sonatas and the string quartets, in the overture to 'Elijah' and in the psalms. The centripetal force of the chorale (cf. organ sonatas and 'St. Paul') is also in honour of Bach. Many choruses are in Handelian outline. Mozart is reflected in immaculate craftsmanship and in elegant modulation (particularly marked in such early works as Op. 1). Mendelssohn never achieved the spaciousness of Mozart in slow movements, but in zest for speed and a predilection for minor tonality — which, however, was not necessarily indicative of melancholy — and in linear clarity, the two composers formed a spiritual alliance. Mendelssohn's devotion to Beethoven again appears in the chamber music.² The listener may observe affinities with Cherubini and Weber. A much older influence may be detected in the modal flavour of parts of 'Lauda Sion',³ in such songs as 'Erntelied', in the somewhat mutilated motif of 'Lobgesang', and in the motets written for the nuns of Santa Trinità de' Monte. All these influences, however, were assimilated, so that Mendelssohn gives the impression of having passed through technique to spiritual absolutes and of achieving an identity of outlook with the great through constant habituation to the highest excellence. Wagner misinterpreted Mendelssohn (although he understood the technical advances made by Mendelssohn sufficiently to allow these a place within his own orchestral technique) when he referred to his excellence as a painter in music. Mendelssohn himself misleads by definition of title. He rebelled, however, against the positivist interpretation of music and observed that music needed no words for its elucidation, nor was it in itself delineatory, but that a musical thought was an absolute per se. Frequently he wrote music as a response to particular stimulation (his memory captured vividly moments of great and significant beauty) and as a reminiscence. Points of realism (as in the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' overture) are rare and, therefore, effective. The "Reformation" Symphony is a historic document in two senses. It contains ancient tunes with ancient associations and it preludes 'Parsifal'. As for the "Italian" and "Scottish" Symphonies, they reflect nothing more topical than an idealized saltarello and a transient suspicion of pentatonic humour.

¹ Berlioz and Camille Bellaigue.

² See Quartet in F minor (Op. 80).

³ A work much appreciated by Bellaigue.

As a composer of chamber music Mendelssohn claims greatness almost without qualification. Here he wrote for the eclectic (and for himself). He had a complete mastery of his medium — that his first violin dominates and that his string writing is pianistic is possibly and occasionally true, but neither fact would appear to detract from the musicality of the whole — and an intensity of interest in pure music that renders his quartets, in particular, works of integrity in thought and statement. Attention may be drawn to a variety of scherzo treatment, to the intermezzo innovation of Op. 18, to the fugal byplay (as in the scherzo of Op. 44 No. 3), to the premonitory lightness of the Quintet in A major (Op. 18), which key Mendelssohn had a marked tendency to associate with sentiments of freshness and delight. The incorporation of song both as introduction and coda in Op. 13 betokens two ideas: on the one hand Mendelssohn emphasizes domesticity, for sometimes, in friendly circles, the performance of this quartet was preluded with the song; on the other, Mendelssohn called attention to a new method of formal unity finding favour in romantic circles.

The keyboard music suffers — and this includes much of the chamber music which employs the pianoforte — by reticence or fragility. Hiller pointed out in what manner the pianoforte part of the D minor Trio might be improved, having regard to the example of Chopin and Liszt. It does not need emphasizing that the 'Songs without Words' have no further merit than as affectionate contributions to autograph albums. This being precisely their intention, there is nothing more to be said. In his variations, however, as in his fugues, Mendelssohn's stature is more remarkable, and the 'Variations sérieuses' must rank high among works of this nature. The organ sonatas vary in quality, though, Mendelssohn possessing a keen instinct for the effectiveness of his music in its proper environment, they sound impressive as adjuncts to cathedral services. As is often the case in his longer works, the first movements invariably start courageously, but lose point by garrulous divagation. Curiously, the fugues for this medium are among his least effective, containing too much harmony and too little genuine counterpoint.

Mendelssohn has lost prestige as a song writer, because he does not reiterate the obvious romantic aspirations of Schubert and Schumann, nor is able to vie with the dramatic intensity of Wolf. In fact he carries classical idiom one degree farther, concentrating attention on musical exposition and caring rather less for verbal or dramatic elucidation. The best of his songs — 'Neue Liebe', 'Frühlingsglaube', 'Wartend' and 'Auf Flügeln des Gesanges', are of exquisite proportion and impregnated with sensibility. They suffer from inadequate translations when transferred to English. It appears in the songs as in the stage works that personal tragedy found little response in his music. Mendelssohn was, on the whole, unwilling to speak of his own emotional life: to exhibit naked feeling appeared as a breach of etiquette, according to the principles of his social education. This is why opera eluded him. Isolated movements, as in 'Walpurgisnacht' or the aria 'Infelice', may be histrionically purposeful, but in treating dramatic material (even in the oratorios) Mendelssohn was episodic. His inclination to finished detail defeated him. In the light of the wholly charming 'Heimkehr aus der Fremde' it may be suggested that in thereafter avoiding comedy Mendelssohn by-passed his own talents.

In a brief summary may be detailed Mendelssohn's contributions to the technique of music as they affected his successors. The scherzo, with its blend of mystic allusion and plain joie de vivre, destroyed some of the portentousness of the romantic philosophy of his time. His abolition of the opening tutti in concerto form, his functional cadenzas, his interlinked movements, set a pattern for future emulation. His success in accommodating classical architecture to romantic thought—as in the "Scottish" Symphony, where the possibilities of the idée fixe are gently explored—was not unnoticed by Brahms. His orchestration remains to this day as a complete textbook in procedure. More important than these facets, however, is the deduction which stands pre-eminent: Mendelssohn, by his standards in execution, scholarship and composition, brought great music within the general appreciation more than any other single musician. If his music is optimistic, it is not because his life was easy; on the contrary, he carried many responsibilities, both public and private, so that composition called for sternness of vision and concentration of effort. The optimism of 'Elijah' may lead to musical deficiencies, but the cause lies not in ease of circumstance, but in a belief—shared with notable English contemporaries, which gives some clue to his vogue in England—in an inevitable process of human melioration.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. LETTERS

(1) Two volumes have been published by authority. The first, edited by his brother Paul, is entitled 'Reisebriefe . . . aus den Jahren 1830 bis 1832' (Leipzig, 1861); the second, edited by his brother and his eldest son, 'Briefe aus den Jahren 1833 bis 1847' (Leipzig, 1863), with an Appendix purporting to be a list of all Mendelssohn's compositions, compiled by Julius Rietz, which is, however, both vague and incomplete.

These were translated (not adequately) by Lady Wallace and published with the titles, 'Letters from Italy and Switzerland . . .' and 'Letters from 1833 to 1847' (Longmans, 1862 and 1863). At a later date some important letters were added to the German edition of Vol. II, among others one containing Mendelssohn's translations of Dante, Boccaccio, etc., and Indices were appended; but no change was made in the contents of the English translation. There is reason to believe that the letters of Vol. I were in many ways altered by the editor.

(2) Eight letters published for the benefit of the Deutsche Invaliden-Stiftung—'Acht Briefe und ein Facsimile' (Leipzig, 1871). English translation in 'Macmillan's Magazine', June 1871.

The name of the lady to whom they were written is suppressed, but it is understood that she was Mrs. Voigt, a musical amateur of Leipzig. The last of the eight contains a facsimile of a sketch by Mendelssohn.

(3) 'Musiker Briefe', by C. F. Ludwig Nohl (Leipzig, 1867), contains thirty letters dating from 1826 to 26 Aug. 1847. They are included by Lady Wallace in her translation of the entire work entitled 'Letters of Distinguished Musicians' (London: Longmans, 1867).

(4) 'Briefe von Felix Mendelssohn an Ignaz und Charlotte Moscheles', ed. by Felix Moscheles (Leipzig, 1888); Eng. trans. (London, 1888).

(5) Letters ed. by Gisela Seldon-Goth (New York, 1945).

II. WORKS ON MENDELSSOHN

ARMSTRONG, THOMAS, 'Mendelssohn's "Elijah"' ('Musical Pilgrim' series, Oxford, 1931).

BARTELS, BERNHARD, 'Mendelssohn-Bartholdy: Mensch und Werk' (Bremen & Hannover, 1947).

BENEDICT, JULIUS, 'A Sketch of the Life and Works of the late Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy' (London, 1850; 2nd ed. 1853).

DAHMS, WALTER, 'Mendelssohn' (Berlin & Leipzig, 1919).

DEVRIENT, EDUARD, 'Meine Erinnerungen an Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy' (Leipzig, 1869); Eng. trans. by Lady Macfarren (London, 1869).

ECKARDT, JULIUS, 'Ferdinand David und die Familie Mendelssohn-Bartholdy' (Leipzig, 1888).

EDWARDS, F. G., 'The History of Mendelssohn's "Elijah"' (London, 1896).

'Mendelssohn's Organ Sonatas' (Proc. Mus. Ass., Vol. XXI, 1894).

Foss, HUBERT, 'Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy' in 'The Heritage of Music', Vol. II (Oxford, 1934).

GOTCH, ROSAMUND BRUNEL, 'Mendelssohn and his Friends in Kensington' (Oxford, 1934).

HENSEL, SEBASTIAN, 'Die Familie Mendelssohn', 3 vols. (Berlin, 1879); Eng. trans., 2 vols. (London, 1881).

HILLER, FERDINAND, 'Mendelssohn: Letters and Recollections . . .' (Cologne, 1874); Eng. trans. by M. E. von Glehn (London, 1874).

HORSLEY, CHARLES EDWARD, 'Reminiscences of Mendelssohn' in 'Dwight's Journal of Music' (Boston, Mass., 1872) and 'The Choir' (London, 1873).

HORTON, JOHN, 'The Chamber Music of Mendelssohn' ('Musical Pilgrim' series, Oxford, 1946).

KAHL, WILLI, 'Zu Mendelssohn's Liedern ohne Worte' (Z.M.W., May 1921).

KAUFMANN, S., 'Mendelssohn, "a Second Elijah"' (New York, 1934).

LAMPADIUS, WILHELM ADOLF, 'Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy: ein Denkmal für seine Freunde' (Leipzig, 1849); Eng. trans. by W. L. Gage, with supplementary sketches by various authors (New York, 1866; London, 1876).

MARIOTTI, GIOVANNI, 'Mendelssohn' (Rome, 1937).

MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY, CARL, 'Goethe und Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy' (Leipzig, 1871).

PETITPIERRE, JACQUES, 'The Romance of the Mendelssohns' (London, 1948).

POLKO, ELISE, 'Erinnerungen an Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy' (Leipzig, 1868); English trans. by Lady Wallace (London, 1869).

RADCLIFFE, PHILIP, 'Mendelssohn' ('Master Musicians' series) (London, 1954).

SCHUBRING, JULIUS, 'Erinnerungen an Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy' in 'Daheim' (Leipzig, 1866); Eng. trans. in 'The Musical World' (London, 1866).

SCHÜNEMANN, GEORG, 'Mendelssohn's Jugendopern' (Z.M.W., June-July 1923).

STRATTON, STEPHEN, 'Mendelssohn' ('Master Musicians' series, London, 1901 & [rev.] 1934).

TISCHLER, LOUISE H. & HANS, 'Mendelssohn's Style' (M. Rev., VIII, 1947, p. 256).

WALKER, ERNEST, 'Concerning an Oxford Collection of Mendelssohniana' (M. & L., XIX, 1938, p. 391).

WERNER, JACK, 'Felix and Fanny Mendelssohn' (M. & L., XXVIII, 1947, p. 303).

WERNER, RUDOLF, 'Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy als Kirchenmusiker' (Frankfurt o/M., 1930).

WILCKE, GERHARD, 'Tonalität und Modulation im Streichquartett Mendelssohns und Schumanns' (Leipzig, 1933).

YOUNG, PERCY M., 'Introduction to the Music of Mendelssohn' (London, 1949).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

OPERAS

Op. ¹	Title	Libretto	Finished	Production
10	'Die Hochzeit des Camacho' (properly Gamacho).	Carl August Ludwig von Lichtenstein, based on an episode from Cervantes's 'Don Quixote'.	10 Aug. 1825.	Berlin, Schauspielhaus, 29 Apr. 1827.
89	'Die Heimkehr aus der Fremde' ('Son and Stranger').	Karl Klingemann.	1829.	(Privately performed, Berlin, 26 Dec. 1829.) Leipzig, 10 Apr. 1851 (posth.).
98	'Loreley' (unfinished).	Emanuel Geibel.	Finale of Act I, 'Ave Maria' for soprano & female chorus, and Vintage Chorus for male voices only, 1847.	—

¹ Opp. 1-72 only are Mendelssohn's own numbers; Opp. 73-121 are works published posthumously.

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

Op.	Title	Play by	Finished	Production
55	'Antigone' (ded. to Frederick William IV of Prussia).	Sophocles.	10 Oct. 1841.	Potsdam, New Palace, 28 Oct. 1841.
61	'A Midsummer Night's Dream' (for Overture see Orchestral Works, Op. 21) (ded. to Heinrich Conrad Schleinitz).	Shakespeare.	1842.	Potsdam, New Palace, 14 Oct. 1843.
74	'Athalie.'	Racine.	Choruses 4 July 1843, Overture 12 Nov. 1845.	Berlin (Charlottenburg), 1 Dec. 1845.
93	'Oedipus at Colonus.'	Sophocles.	25 Feb. 1845.	Potsdam, New Palace, 1 Nov. 1845.

CHURCH MUSIC

Op.	Title	Scored for	Finished
23	3 Pieces of Church Music 1. Aus tiefer Not. 2. Ave Maria. 3. Mitten wir.	Solo voice, chorus & organ.
31	Psalm 115.	Solo voice, chorus & orch.	15 Nov. 1830.
39	3 Motets 1. Hear my prayer, O Lord (Veni, Domine). 2. O praise the Lord (Laudate pueri). 3. O Lord, Thou hast searched me out (Surrexit Pastor).	Female chorus & organ.	31 Dec. 1830.
—	Prayer 'Verleih' uns Frieden' (ded. to President Verkenius).	Chorus & orch.	10 Feb. 1831.
42	Psalm 42.	Solo voices, chorus & orch.
—	'Lord have mercy upon us' for the Anglican Evening Service (ded. to Thomas Attwood).	Unaccompanied chorus.	24 Mar. 1833.
—	Hymn-tune 'Defend me, Lord, from shame'.	Mixed voices.	27 Feb. 1839.
46	Psalm 95.	Tenor, chorus & orch.	11 Apr. 1839.
51	Psalm 114 (ded. to the painter, J. W. Schirmer)	8-part chorus & orch.	9 Aug. 1839.
69	3 English Church Pieces 1. Nunc dimittis. 2. Jubilate. 3. Magnificat.	Solo voices & chorus.	12 June 1847. 5 Apr. 1847.
78	Psalms 2, 43 & 22.	Solo voices & chorus.	12 June 1847.
—	Hymn 'Hear my prayer' (ded. to Wilhelm Taubert).	Soprano, chorus & organ.	17 Jan. 1844. 25 Jan. 1844.
79	6 Anthems 1. Rejoice, O ye people (Christmas). 2. Thou, Lord, our refuge hast been (New Year's Day). 3. Above all praises (Ascension Day). 4. Lord, on our offences (Passion Week). 5. Let our hearts be joyful (Advent). 6. For our offences (Good Friday).	8-part chorus.	25 Dec. 1843.
91	Psalm 98.	8-part chorus & orch.	14 Feb. 1844.
96	Hymn with 3 choruses added.	Alto, chorus & orch.	5 Oct. 1846.
111	'Tu es Petrus.'	Mixed voices.	18 Feb. 1844.
—	'Kyrie eleison' ('Deutsche Liturgie').	Chorus & orch.	27 Dec. 1843.
115	2 Sacred Choruses.	Double chorus.	14 Dec. 1840.
121	'Responsorium et Hymnus.'	Male voices.	5 Jan. 1843.
—	3 Sacred Pieces 1. Ehre sei Gott. 2. Heilig. 3. Psalm 100.	Male voices, cello & organ.	Nov. 1827.
—	'Te Deum' in A ma. for the Anglican Service.	Double chorus. Double chorus. Mixed voices.	28 Oct. 1846.

ACCOMPANIED CHORAL WORKS

Op.	Title	Finished	First Performance
36	'St. Paul', oratorio.	18 Apr. 1836.	Düsseldorf, Lower Rhine Festival, 22 May 1836; in England, Liverpool, 7 Oct. 1836.
50	No. 2 'Der Jäger Abschied' (Eichendorff), for male chorus with 4 horns and bass trombone.	6 Jan. 1840.
52	'Lobgesang' ('Hymn of Praise'), symphony-cantata (ded. to Frederick Augustus, King of Saxony).	27 Nov. 1840.	Leipzig, St. Thomas Church, 25 June 1840; in England, Birmingham Festival, 23 Sept. 1840.
—	'Festgesang' for the Gutenberg Festival, for male chorus & orch. ¹	1840.	Leipzig, 1840.

¹ No. 2 was adapted by W. H. Cummings to Charles Wesley's Christmas hymn, 'Hark! the herald angels sing'.

Op.	Title	Finished	First Performance
60	'Die erste Walpurgisnacht' (Goethe), for chorus & orch.	1st version, 13 Feb. 1832; 2nd version, 1843.	Berlin, Jan. 1833; Leipzig, 2 Feb. 1843.
68	'An die Künstler: Festgesang' (Schiller), for male chorus and brass.	1846.	Cologne, June 1846.
70	'Elijah', oratorio.	11 Aug. 1846.	Birmingham Festival, 26 Aug. 1846.
73	'Lauda Sion', cantata for chorus & orch.	10 Feb. 1846.	Liège, St. Martin's Church, 11 June 1846.
97	'Christus', oratorio (unfinished).		—

UNACCOMPANIED CHORAL WORKS

Op.	Title	Words	Finished	Dedication
41	6 Partsongs for mixed voices 1. Im Walde. 2. Entflich' mit mir 3. Es fiel ein Reif 4. Auf ihrem Grab 5. Mailed. 6. Auf dem See.	Platen. Heine. Heine. Heine. Hölty. Goethe.	22 Jan. 1834.	—
48	6 Partsongs for mixed voices ('Der erste Frühlingstag') 1. Frühlingsahnung. 2. Die Primel. 3. Frühlingsfeier. 4. Lerchengesang (Canon). 5. Morgengebet. 6. Herbstlied.	Uhland. Lenau. Uhland. ? Eichendorff. Lenau. Ruckert.	5 July 1839. ? 1839. 28 Dec. 1839. 15 June 1839. 18 Nov. 1839. 26 Dec. 1839. 22 Nov. 1839.	Dr. Martin and Dr. Spiess.
—	'Ersatz für Unbestand', for male voices.			—
50	6 Partsongs for male voices 1. Türkisches Schenkenlied. 2. (See Accompanied Choral Works) 3. Sommerlied. 4. Wasserfahrt. 5. Liebe und Wein. 6. Wanderlied.	Goethe. Goethe. Heine. ? Eichendorff. ? ?	? 1839-40. 1839-40. ? 1839-40. 7 Dec. 1839. 6 Jan. 1840. 15 Jan. 1842. Jan. 1842.	Liedertafeln of Leipzig.
—	'Nachtgesang' for male voices.			—
—	'Die Stiftungsfeier' for male voices.			Gesellschaft der Freunde, Berlin. Henriette Benecke.
59	6 Partsongs for mixed voices ('Im Grünen') 1. Im Grünen. 2. Frühzeitiger Frühling. 3. Abschied vom Wald. 4. Die Nachtigall. 5. Ruhetal. 6. Jagdlied.	Helmina von Chézy. Goethe. Eichendorff. Goethe. Uhland. Eichendorff.	23 Nov. 1837. 17 Jan. 1843. 4 Mar. 1843. 19 June 1843. 4 Mar. 1843. 5 Mar. 1843.	—
75	4 Partsongs for male voices ('Wandersmann') 1. Der frohe Wandersmann. 2. Abendständchen. 3. Trinklied. 4. Abschiedstafel.	Eichendorff. Eichendorff. Goethe. Eichendorff.	8 Feb. 1844. 14 Nov. 1839.	—
76	4 Partsongs for male voices 1. Das Lied vom braven Mann. 2. Rheinweinlied. 3. Lied für die Deutschen in Lyon. 4. Comitatz.	Heine. Herwegh. Stoltze. Hoffmann von Fallersleben.	9 Feb. 1844. 8 Oct. 1846.	—
88	6 Partsongs for mixed voices 1. Neujahrslied. 2. Der Glückliche. 3. Hirtenlied. 4. Die Waldvögelein. 5. Deutschland. 6. Der wandernde Musikant.	Hebel. Eichendorff. Uhland. Schütz. Geibel. Eichendorff.	8 Aug. 1844. 20 June 1843. 20 Apr. 1839. 19 June 1843. ? 1839-43. 10 Mar. 1840.	—
100	4 Partsongs for mixed voices 1. Andenken. 2. Lob des Frühlings. 3. Frühlingslied. 4. Im Wald.	? Uhland. ? ?	8 Aug. 1844. 20 June 1843. ? 1843-44. 14 June 1839.	—
116	'Funeral Song' for mixed voices.		8 July 1843.	—
120	4 Partsongs for male voices 1. Jagdlied. 2. Morgengruss des Thüringischen Sängerbundes. 3. Im Süden. 4. Zigeunerlied.	Walter Scott. ? ? Goethe.	20 Feb. 1847.	—

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC

Op.	Title	Finished	Dedication
11	Symphony No. 1, C mi. ('Symphony xiii' ¹).	31 Mar. 1824.	Philharmonic Society, London.
21	Overture to Shakespeare's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' (see also Incidental Music).	6 Aug. 1826.	Crown Prince of Prussia.
24	'Ouverture für Harmoniemusik.' ²	—	—
26	'The Hebrides' (or 'Fingal's Cave'), concert overture.	1st version 16 Dec. 1830; 2nd version 20 June 1832.	Crown Prince of Prussia.
27	'Meeresstille und glückliche Fahrt', concert overture on Goethe's pair of poems.	1832.	—
32	'Die schöne Melusine', concert overture on Grillparzer's opera libretto.	14 Nov. 1833.	Crown Prince of Prussia.
56	Symphony No. 3 ³ , A mi.-ma. ('Scottish').	20 Jan. 1842.	Queen Victoria.
90	Symphony No. 4, A ma.-mi. ('Italian').	13 Mar. 1833.	—
95	Overture to Victor Hugo's 'Ruy Blas'.	8 Mar. 1839.	—
101	Overture in C ma. ('Trumpet Overture').	—	—
103	'Trauer-Marsch', A mi.	c. 8 May 1836.	Memory of Norbert Burgmüller (written for his funeral).
107	Symphony No. 5, D ma. ('Reformation').	—	—
108	March, D ma.	Apr. 1841.	Peter Cornelius (the painter, written for a festivity in his honour).

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

22	'Capriccio brillant', B mi., for pf.	—	—
25	Pf. Concerto No. 1, G mi.	1831.	Delphine von Schaueroth.
29	'Rondo brillant', E♭ ma., for pf.	29 Jan. 1834.	Ignaz Moscheles.
40	Pf. Concerto No. 2, D mi.	5 Aug. 1837.	—
43	'Serenade and Allegro gioioso', B mi., for pf.	11 Apr. 1838.	—
64	Vn. Concerto, E mi.-ma.	16 Sept. 1844.	—

VOICE AND ORCHESTRA

Op.	Title	Finished
94	Concert aria for soprano, 'Infelice!'	1st version 3 Apr. 1834; 2nd version 15 Jan. 1843.
—	Lied aus 'Ruy Blas' (Victor Hugo) for soprano & stgs.	?

CHAMBER MUSIC

Op.	Title	Finished	Dedication
1	Pf. Quartet No. 1, C mi.	18 Oct. 1822.	Count Anton Radziwill.
—	Stg. Quartet, E♭ ma.	30 Mar. 1823.	—
2	Pf. Quartet No. 2, F mi.	3 Dec. 1823.	Carl Friedrich Zelter.
3	Pf. Quartet No. 3, B mi.	18 Jan. 1825.	Johann Wolfgang von Goethe.
12	Stg. Quartet No. 1, E♭ ma.	14 Sept. 1829.	—
13	Stg. Quartet No. 2, A ma.	26 Oct. 1827.	—
18	Stg. Quintet, A ma.	1st version 1826; 2nd version 1832.	—
20	Octet, E♭ ma., for stgs.	1825.	Eduard Rietz.
44	3 Stg. Quartets, Nos. 3-5	—	Crown Prince of Sweden.
—	D ma.	24 July 1838.	—
—	E mi.	18 June 1837.	—
—	E♭ ma.	6 Feb. 1838.	—
49	Pf. Trio No. 1, D mi.	23 Sept. 1839.	—
66	Pf. Trio No. 2, C mi.	1845.	Louis Spohr.
80	Stg. Quartet No. 6, F mi.	Sept. 1847.	—
81	4 Pieces for stg. 4tet	—	—
—	1. Andante, E ma.	1847.	—
—	2. Scherzo, A mi.	1847.	—
—	3. Capriccio, E mi.	1843.	—
—	4. Fugue, E♭ ma.	1 Nov. 1827.	—
87	Stg. Quintet, B♭ ma.	8 July 1845.	—
110	Sextet, D ma., for vn., 2 violas, cello, d. bass & pf.	May 1824.	—
113	2 Concerted Pieces for clarinet, basset	19 Jan. 1833.	Heinrich Bärmann.
114	horn & pf.	Jan. 1833.	Carl Bärmann.

¹ For the first 12 symphonies see list of MS works at the end.

² Wind band.

³ For the 2nd Symphony see 'Lobgesang', Op. 52 (Accompanied Choral Works).

ONE INSTRUMENT AND PIANOFORTE

Op.	Title	Finished	Dedication
4	Vn. Sonata, F mi.	1825.	Eduard Rietz.
17	'Variations concertantes' for cello.	30 Jan. 1829.	Paul Mendelssohn-Bartholdy.
—	'The Evening Bell' ¹ for harp & pf.	Nov. 1829.	Thomas Attwood.
45	Cello Sonata, B♭ ma.	13 Oct. 1838.	—
58	Cello Sonata, D ma.		Count Mathias Vielhorsky.
109	'Song without Words', D ma., for cello.		Lisa Cristiani.

PIANOFORTE SOLO

5	'Capriccio', F♯ mi.	23 July 1825.	—
6	Sonata, E ma.	22 Mar. 1826.	—
7	'Seven Characteristic Pieces'	Var. dates.	Ludwig Berger.
	1. Sanft und mit Empfindung, E mi.
	2. Mit heftiger Bewegung, B mi.
	3. Kräftig und feurig, D ma.
	4. Schnell und beweglich, A ma.
	5. Fuga: Ernst und mit steigender Lebhaftigkeit, A ma.
	6. Sehnsüchtig, E mi.
	7. Leicht und luftig, E ma.
14	'Rondo capriccioso', E ma.		—
15	Fantasy on 'The Last Rose of Summer'.		—
16	3 Fantasies
	1. A mi.	4 Sept. 1829.	Ann Taylor.
	2. E mi.	13 Nov. 1829.	Honoria Taylor.
	3. E ma.	5 Sept. 1829.	Susan Taylor.
19	'Songs without Words', Book I		—
	1. E ma.
	2. A mi.
	3. A ma. ('Jägerlied').
	4. A ma.
	5. F♯ mi.	14 Sept. 1829.	Sophia Louisa Dance.
	6. G mi. ('Venezianisches Gondellied').	16 Oct. 1830.
28	Fantasy in F♯ mi. ('Sonate écossaise').	29 Jan. 1833.	Ignaz Moscheles.
30	'Songs without Words', Book II		Elisa von Woringen.
	7. E♭ ma.
	8. B♭ mi.
	9. E ma.
	10. B mi.	30 Jan. 1834.
	11. D ma.	12 Dec. 1833.
	12. F♯ mi. ('Venezianisches Gondellied').
33	3 Caprices		Karl Klingemann.
	1. A mi.	9 Apr. 1834.
	2. E ma.
	3. B♭ mi.	25 July 1833.
—	Étude, F mi. (for the 'Méthodes des méthodes').	13 Mar. 1836.	—
35	6 Preludes and Fugues		—
	1. E mi.-ma.
	2. D ma.	P. 8 Dec. 1836.
	3. B mi.	F. 21 Sept. 1832.
	4. A♭ ma.	F. 6 Jan. 1835.
	5. F mi.	P. 19 Nov. 1836;
		F. 3 Dec. 1834.
	6. B♭ ma.	P. 3 Jan. 1837;
		F. 27 Nov. 1836.
		5 Feb. 1837.
—	'Gondellied', A ma.		—
38	'Songs without Words', Book III		Rosa von Woringen.
	13. E♭ ma.
	14. C mi.
	15. E ma.
	16. A ma.
	17. A mi.
	18. A♭ ma. ('Duetto').	6 Apr. 1837.
—	'Andante cantabile and Presto agitato', B ma.	27 June 1836.	—
53	'Songs without Words', Book IV	22 June 1838.	Sophy Horsley.
	19. A♭ ma.
	20. E♭ ma.
	21. G mi.
	22. F ma.
	23. A mi. ('Volkslied').	30 Apr. 1841.
	24. A ma.	1 May 1841.
54	'Variations sérieuses', D mi.	4 June 1841.	—
—	Prelude and Fugue, E mi.	P. 13 July 1841;
		F. 16 June 1827.
62	'Songs without Words', Book V		Clara Schumann.
	25. G ma.	12 Jan. 1844.
	26. B♭ ma.	29 July 1843.
	27. E mi ('Trauermarsch').

¹ The bell was that of Attwood's gate.

Op.	Title	Finished	Dedication
67	28. G ma.
	29. A mi. ('Venezianisches Gondellied').
	30. A ma. ('Frühlingslied').	1 June 1842.
	'Songs without Words', Book VI		Sophie Rosen.
	31. E♭ ma.	29 June 1843.
	32. F♯ mi.	3 May 1845.
72	33. B♭ ma.
	34. C ma. ('Spinnerlied'). ¹
	35. B mi.	12 Jan. 1844.
	36. E ma.
	'6 Kinderstücke.' ²
	1. G ma.	24 June 1842.	Lilli Benecke.
82	2. E♭ ma.
	3. G ma.	21 June 1842.	Eduard Benecke.
	4. D ma.
	5. G mi.
	6. F ma.
	Variations, E♭ ma.	25 July 1841.	—
83	Variations, B♭ ma.		—
85	'Songs without Words', Book VII		—
102	37. F ma.
	38. A mi.	9 June 1834.
	39. E♭ ma.
	40. D ma.	6 May 1845.
	41. A ma.	7 May 1845.
	42. B♭ ma.	1 May 1841.
104	'Songs without Words', Book VIII		—
	43. E mi.	1 June 1842.
	44. D ma.	11 May 1845.
	45. C ma.	12 Dec. 1845.
	46. G mi.
	47. A ma. ('Kinderstück').	12 Dec. 1845.
105	48. C ma.
	Book I, 3 Preludes		—
	1. B♭ ma.	8 Dec. 1836.
	2. B mi.	12 Oct. 1836.
	3. D ma.	27 Nov. 1836.
	Book II, 3 Studies		—
106	1. B♭ mi.	9 June 1836.
	2. F ma.	21 Apr. 1834.
	3. A mi.
	Sonata, G mi.	18 Aug. 1821.
	Sonata, B♭ ma.	31 May 1827.	—
	'Album-Blatt', Song without Words, E mi.		—
117	'Capriccio', E ma.		—
118	'Perpetuum mobile', C ma.	11 July 1837.	—
119	Scherzo, B mi.		—
—	'Scherzo a capriccio', F♯ mi. (for the 'Pianist's Album').		—
—	'2 Clavierstücke'		—
—	1. B♭ ma.
	2. G mi.

PIANOFORTE DUET

83a	Variations in B♭ ma. (arranged from pf. solo).		—
92	'Allegro brillante', A ma.	23 Mar. 1841.	—
—	'Duo concertant', Variations on the March in Weber's 'Preciosa'. ³		Baroness O. von Goethe.

ORGAN MUSIC

37	3 Preludes and Fugues		Thomas Attwood.
—	1. C mi.	P. 2 Apr. 1837.
	2. G ma.	P. 4 Apr. 1837;
		F. 1 Dec. 1837.
—	3. D mi.	P. 6 Apr. 1837.
—	Fugue, F mi.	18 July 1839.
—	'Praeludium', C mi.	9 July 1841.	Henry E. Dibdin.
65	2 Pieces		—
	1. Andante with Variations, D ma.	23 July 1844.
	2. Allegro, B♭ ma.	31 Dec. 1844.
65	6 Sonatas		F. Schlemmer.
	1. F mi.-ma.	28 Dec. 1844.
	2. C mi.-ma.	21 Dec. 1844.
	3. A ma.	17 Aug. 1844.
	4. B♭ ma.	2 Jan. 1845.
	5. D ma.	9 Sept. 1844.
—	6. D mi.-ma.	27 Jan. 1845.

¹ In England 'The Bee's Wedding'.² In England 'Christmas Pieces'.³ Written jointly with Moscheles.

SONGS

Op.	Title	Words	Finished	Dedication
8	12 Songs ¹ 1. Minnelied. 2. Das Heimweh. 3. Italien. 4. Erntelied. 5. Pilgerspruch. 6. Frühlingslied. 7. Maïenlied. 8. Hexenlied. 9. Abendlied. 10. Romanze. 11. Im Grünen. 12. Sulcika und Hatem (duet).	Holty. Friederike Robert. Franz Grillparzer. Traditional. Paul Flemming. F. Robert. Jakob von der Warte. Holty. J. H. Voss. From the Spanish. Voss. Goethe.		—
9	12 Songs ¹ 1. Frage. 2. Geständnis. 3. Wartend (Romanze). 4. Im Frühling. 5. Im Herbst. 6. Scheidend. 7. Sehnsucht. 8. Frühlingsglaube. 9. Ferne. 10. Verlust. 11. Entsagung. 12. Die Nonne. — 'The Garland.' — 'Seemanns Scheideliel.'	Voss. ? ? ? Karl Klingemann. Voss. J. G. Droysen. Uhland. Droysen. Heine. Droysen. Uhland. Thomas Moore. Hoffmann von Fallersleben.		—
19a	6 Songs 1. Frühlingslied. 2. Das erste Veilchen. 3. Winterlied. 4. Neue Liebe. 5. Gruss. 6. Reiselied.	Ulrich von Lichtenstein. Egon Ebert. From the Swedish. Heine. Heine. Ebert.	23 May 1829. 1831.	—
31	6 Songs 1. Minnelied. 2. Auf Flügeln des Gesanges. 3. Frühlingslied. 4. Suleika. 5. Sonntagslid. 6. Reiselied.	Old German. Heine. Klingemann. Goethe. Klingemann. Heine. Byron.	11 May 1834. 28 Dec. 1834.	Julie Jeanrenaud.
—	2 Romances 1. There be none of beauty's daughters. 2. Sun of the sleepless.		31 Dec. 1834.
—	2 Songs 1. Das Waldschloss. 2. Pagenlied.	Eichendorff. Eichendorff.	17 Aug. 1835.
47	6 Songs 1. Minnelied. 2. Morgengruss. 3. Frühlingslied. 4. Volkslied. 5. Der Blumenstrauß. 6. Bei der Wiege.	Ludwig Tieck. Heine. Lenau. E. von Feuchtersleben. Klingemann. Klingemann.	17 Apr. 1839. 18 Apr. 1839. May 1832.	Constanze Schleinitz.
57	6 Songs 1. Altdeutsches Lied. 2. Hirtenlied. 3. Suleika. 4. O Jugend. 5. Venetianisches Gondellid. 6. Wanderlied.	Heinrich Schreiber. Uhland. Goethe. Rhenish Folksong. Thomas Moore. Eichendorff.	20 Apr. 1839. 17 Oct. 1842. 29 Apr. 1841.	Livia Frege. Charlotte Dolby (English ed.).
—	2 Songs 1. Ich hör' ein Vöglein. 2. Todeslied der Bojaren.	A. Böttger. Karl Immermann.	20 Apr. 1841.	—
71	6 Songs 1. Tröstung. 2. Frühlingslied. 3. An die Entfernte. 4. Schilflied. 5. Auf der Wanderschaft. 6. Nachtlid.	Hoffmann von Fallersleben. Klingemann. Lenau. Lenau. Lenau. Eichendorff.	22 Dec. 1845. 3 Apr. 1845. 22 Sept. 1847. 3 Nov. 1842. 27 July 1847. 1 Oct. 1847.	—
84	3 Songs for a low voice 1. Da lieg' ich unter den Bäumen. 2. Herbstlied. 3. Jagdlied.	? Klingemann. From 'Des Knaben Wunderhorn'.	5 Dec. 1831. 26 Feb. 1839. 25 May 1834.	—

¹ Nos. 2, 3 and 12 are by Fanny Mendelssohn.

² Nos. 7, 10 and 12 are by Fanny Mendelssohn.

Op.	Title	Words	Finished	Dedication
86	6 Songs 1. Es lausche das Laub. 2. Morgenlied. 3. Die Liebende schreibt. 4. Allnächtlich im Traume. 5. Der Mond. 6. Altdeutsches Frühlingslied.	Klingemann. Goethe. Heine. Geibel. Spec.	10 Aug. 1831. 7 Oct. 1847.	—
99	6 Songs 1. Erster Verlust. 2. Die Sterne schau'n. 3. Lieblingsplätzchen. 4. Das Schiffelein. 5. Wenn sich zwei Herzen scheiden. 6. Es weiss und rät es doch Keiner.	Goethe. A. Count von Schlippenbach. From 'Des Knaben Wunderhorn'. Uhland. Geibel. Eichendorff.	9 Aug. 1841. 6 June 1841. 22 Dec. 1845.	—
112	2 Sacred Songs 1. Doch der Herr, er leitet die Irrenden recht. 2. Der du die Menschen lässt sterben. ¹
—	'Des Mädchens Klage.'	Schiller.	?
—	'Warnung vor dem Rhein.'	C. Simrock.	?

VOCAL DUETS

Op.	Title	Words	Finished
8	No. 12 (see Songs).
63	6 Duets with pf. 1. Ich wollt' meine Lieb'. 2. Abschiedslied der Zugvögel. 3. Gruss. 4. Herbstlied. 5. Volkslied. 6. Maiglöckchen und die Blümelein.	Heine. Hoffmann von Fallersleben. Eichendorff. Klingemann. Burns. Hoffmann von Fallersleben.	Dec. 1836. 17 Oct. 1842. 23 Jan. 1844.
77	3 Duets with pf. 1. Sonntagsmorgen. 2. Das Aehrenfeld. 3. Lied aus 'Ruy Blas'.	Uhland. Hoffmann von Fallersleben. Victor Hugo, trans. Dräxler-Manfred.	3 Dec. 1836. 18 Jan. 1847. 14 Feb. 1839.
—	'3 Volkslieder' with pf. 1. Wie kann ich froh und lustig sein? 2. Abendlied. 3. Wasserfahrt.	P. Kaufmann. Heine. Heine.

The autograph MSS which were preserved in the State Library in Berlin contain the following unpublished works:

- 5 Operas.
- Music for Calderón's 'The Steadfast Prince'.
- 3 Sacred Cantatas.
- 1 Secular Cantata.
- 1 Symphony for full orch.
- 11 Symphonies for stg. orch.
- Many Fugues for stg. orch.
- Concertos for pf., vn. and vn. & pf. with stg. accompaniment.
- 2 Concertos for 2 pfs. & orch.
- Trio for vn., viola & pf.
- 2 Sonatas for vn. & pf. (one dated 1838).
- Sonata for viola & pf.
- Sonata for clar. & pf.
- 2 Sonatas and many studies, fantasies, fugues &c. for pf.
- Fantasy for pf. duet.
- Many fugues for organ.

EDITIONS BY MENDELSSOHN

Bach

- Chaconne for vn. with pf. accompaniment.
- Preludes and other works for organ.
- Variations on the chorale 'Sei gegrüßet. Jesu gütig' (from the original MS).

Handel

- 'Acis and Galatea', with additional accompaniments.
- 'Dettingen Te Deum', with additional accompaniments.

- 'Israel in Egypt', edition for the London Handel Society, with a special organ part.
- 'Solomon', organ part.

See also Additional Accompaniments. Arrangement (passim). Attwood (friendship). Bärmann (1, friendship). Benjamin (2 orch. arrs.). Bennett (W. S., friendship). Bigot (Marie, teacher). Bourget (J. M., Fr. trans. of 'Elijah'). Cummings ('Hark, the herald angels sing'). Dance (ded. to daughter). David (Ferd., influence on vn. Concerto). Franchomme (friendship). Halévy ('Tempesta', orig. lib. for M.). Harmonie (overture for wind). Hebrides (overture). Horsley (C. E., friendship). Jacob (G., 'Lord of Burleigh', ballet). Liszt (No. 257, concert pieces for 2 pfs. on 'Songs without Words'). Marx (A., influence of). Meeresstille (overture). Moscheles (friendship). Mouncey (A., 'Hear my Prayer', comp. for). Neumark (use of hymn-tune). Non nobis Domine (use of). Queisser (playing turn in 'Hymn of Praise'). Rietz (F., memorial andante in Quintet Op. 18). Saltarello (use in 'Italian' Symphony). Santini (letters on). Scherzo. Schneider (2, influence of). Schumann (ded. of stg. 4tets). Smart (6, setting of 'Surrender of Calais', lib.). Sonata (organ sonatas). Song, pp. 942-43. Song Form ('Songs without Words'). Song without Words. Spohr (ded. of pf. Sonata). Symphony, pp. 229-30. Variations, p. 684. Walpurgisnacht. Zelter (collab. in Bach revival).

Mendelssohn, Moses. See Schubaur ('Psalm', M.'s trans.). Schubert (Psalm for chorus & pf.). Sulzer (Schubert's Psalm).

MENDELSSOHN SCHOLARSHIP. This is the most valuable musical prize in Great Britain. It originated in a movement among the friends of Mendelssohn at Leipzig, who, shortly after his death, resolved to found scholarships in his memory, to be competed for and held in that Conservatory in the foundation of which, not long before, he had greatly assisted. They appealed for help in this undertaking to English admirers of the departed composer, and were met with ready sympathy and co-operation. A committee was formed in London, with Sir George Smart as chairman, Carl Klingemann, Mendelssohn's intimate friend, as secretary, and E. Buxton (Ewer & Co.) as treasurer.

¹ Originally intended for 'St. Paul'.

The first effort towards raising money was made by a performance of 'Elijah' on a large scale, to which Jenny Lind gave her willing and inestimable services. This took place on 15 Dec. 1848, under the direction of Julius Benedict, at Exeter Hall, the Sacred Harmonic Society and John Hullah's Upper Schools contributing to the efficiency of the choral force. A large profit was derived from the performance; and this, with a few donations, was invested in the purchase of £1050 Bank 3 per cent annuities — the nucleus of the present Scholarship Fund.

The original plan of amalgamating the London and Leipzig projects fell through, and the money was allowed to accumulate till 1856, when the first scholar was elected — Arthur Sullivan.

J. M.

The funds of the trust were increased in later years by subscriptions and donations, now enabling a grant of £100 a year to be made to the successful candidate. At first the candidates, natives of Great Britain and Ireland, of either sex, were required to be between the ages of 14 and 20. In 1871 the limit was between 14 and 24; in 1885, 16 and 21; in 1890, 16 and 22; in 1923, below the age of 30.

The original qualification was a decided talent for music in composition, or instrumental or vocal performance. In 1890 it was changed to composition only. The scholars are elected for one year, subject to renewal, but no scholarship is held for more than four years. The education is in Britain or abroad.

The committee has usually included among its members the principals of the R.A.M., R.C.M. and G.S.M., together with a few other prominent musical educationists.

The scholars have been:

A. S. Sullivan	1856
C. S. Heap	1865
W. Shakespeare	1871
F. Corder	1875
Maude V. White	1879
E. d'Albert	1881
Marie Wurm	1884
S. P. Waddington	1891
H. C. Wilson	1895
P. H. Miles	1899
G. Dyson	1904
E. W. Gritton	1909
J. A. Taffs	1912
P. Lévi	1916
A. L. Sandford	1921

P. P. Turnbull	1923
Godfray Sampson	1927
David Moule Evans	1929
Clifton Ivor Walsworth	1932
Daniel Jenkyn Jones	1935
Patrick Edward Smerdon Piggott	1938
(No awards during the 1939-45 war.)
Jocelyn Roy Lubbock	1946
Malcolm Henry Arnold	1948

In addition, short scholarships at the R.A.M. were granted to Mary Crawford, 1872, E. Fanning, 1873, and G. J. Bennett, 1884.

G., adds.

Mendès, Catulle. See Bizet (3 songs). Bruneau ('Amoureuse Leçon', ballet; songs). Chabrier (2 libs., 1 song). Fauré (2 songs). Goldschmidt (A., 'Gaea', French trans.). Hahn (R., 'Carmélite', lib.). 'Indy' ('Médée', incid. m.). Leroux (X., 'Reine Flammette', lib.). Massenet (2 libs.). Paderewski (6 songs). Pierné (3 ballet scenes.). Roussel (song). Saint-Saëns (song). Vidal (Paul, 'Reine Flammette', incid. m.).

MENDÈS, Manuel (b. Evora, ?; d. Evora, 16 Dec. 1605).

Portuguese composer. He was the master of Duarte Lobo, Filipe de Magalhães and other distinguished composers. He was for a time choirmaster at Portalegre and then occupied that post in his native town of Evora. His pupil, Lobo, endeavoured to get some of his master's work printed; in 1610 he wrote to the manager of Plantin's printing-house at Antwerp on the subject, but without success. A Mass (4 v.) by him is to be found in a 17th-century manuscript choir-book at Evora (Bibl. Pub.); the catalogue of the library of John IV mentions four motets and a theoretical treatise.

J. B. T.

Mendez, Moses. See Boyce ('Chaplet' & 'Shepherd's Lottery', libs.). Burney ('Robin Hood', incid. m.). Robin Hood (do.). Wesely (B., mourning cantata).

MENDOZA, Vicente (b. Cholula, 27 Jan. 1894).

Mexican theorist and composer. He studied pianoforte and composition at the National Conservatory of Mexico, while engaged as a topographer in the Department of Forestry. He has written several instrumental and choral works of native inspiration; his main activity, however, is collecting and editing Mexican folksongs. He is the president of the Sociedad Folklórica de México. His most important books are 'Instrumental Pre-Cortesiano' (Mexico, 1937) and 'El romance español y el corrido mexicano' (Mexico, 1939).

N. S.

MENEGHINI CALLÀS, Maria. See CALLÀS.

MENESSION, Émile (b. Mirecourt, ?; d. ?).

French 19th-century violin maker. He was trained at Mirecourt, but working at Rheims from about 1870. His instruments were considered worthy of a special rapport in the 'Travaux de l'Académie Nationale de Reims' (1875-76, No. 1, p. 44), by L. S. Fanart, which was afterwards printed separately as a pamphlet. The peculiarity which he introduced as an improvement was the covering of the outer periphery of his violins with a single coat of tender varnish, the central portions only, of the back and table, being covered with hard varnish. By this means Menesson claimed that the elasticity of the sound-box was increased. E. H.-A.

MÉNÉTRANDISE (Fr., formerly ménestrandise). A term derived from ménestrier (formerly ménéstrier) and ultimately from ménestrel (minstrel). It was the name of a Paris corporation of players of dance music (ménétriers) of the 17th and 18th centuries, protected by an official privilege against the encroachment of other musicians on their exclusive right to play for dancing. Couperin wrote a satirical harpsichord suite with the transparently cryptic title of 'Les Fastes de la Grande Mxnstrxndxsx'. E. B.

MENGELBERG, Karel Willem Joseph (b. Utrecht, 18 July 1902).

Dutch composer and conductor. He studied first with Willem Pijper and later at the Staatliche Akademische Hochschule für Musik in Berlin, his subjects there being composition and conducting. From 1927 to 1930 he was conductor at the theatre at Greifswald in Pomerania, when he became musical adviser to the Reichs-Rundfunk-Gesellschaft and musical director of the Deutschlandsender in Berlin. Later he was conductor of the Banda Municipal at Barcelona and composer and musical director of the Ukrainefilm at Kiev. In 1938 he returned to Holland and settled in Amsterdam as a teacher and conductor. In 1947 he was elected Secretary to the Genootschap van Nederlandse Componisten. He has also devoted much time to the study of musicology and to composition. He is an ardent promoter of modern music and especially of the modern Russians. H. A.

MENGELBERG, (Kurt) Rudolf (b. Crefeld, 1 Feb. 1892).

Dutch musicologist and composer of German birth. He was intended for the law, but turned his attention to music, studying at Leipzig under Hugo Riemann, Ludwig Lürman and Otto Neitzel. In 1915 he took his doctorate with a thesis on the Italian composer G. A. Ristori, after which he went to Amsterdam in order to complete his studies with his cousin Willem Mengelberg. In 1917 he was attached to the Concertgebouw Orchestra as editor of its programmes, becoming later artistic adviser and, in 1925, artistic director. Under his editorship the programmes became serious studies, by various writers, of the works performed. He himself wrote many of them and showed a wide knowledge of music and musical history. In 1920 he was largely responsible for the great Mahler Festival held in Amsterdam and wrote an extensive biography of that composer. He has also written a biography of Willem Mengelberg and a study of 'Holland als kulturelle Einheit', and has edited a collection of articles by Alexander Schmuller.

As a composer Mengelberg possesses a graceful talent, which is supported by his extensive practical knowledge of the orchestra, and although it is not always powerful enough to support the big ideas for which it is employed, there are in all his works passages of beauty and originality. Probably the most successful in this respect, as it is also the most popular, is his 'Missa pro Pace', which is frequently heard in Amsterdam. He has also written a cantata, 'Weinlese', to words by Count Kalckreuth after Verlaine, which won a prize in a competition organized by the Maatschappij tot bevordering der Toonkunst on the occasion of the centenary of this organization in 1929, a 'Symphonische Elegie' and a 'Scherzo sinfonico', both for orchestra, which have been played under many conductors in Holland and America, 'Symphonische Variaties' for cello and orchestra, a Requiem for baritone solo and orchestra, and a hymn, 'Op Amstelredam', to words by Joost van der Vondel. H. A.

MENGELBERG, (Josef) Willem (b. Utrecht, 28 Mar. 1871; d. Zuort, Switzerland, 21 Mar. 1951).

Dutch conductor of German descent. He came of an old Rhineland family distinguished for its artistic tastes and activities. His first teachers, at the Utrecht Music School, were Richard Hol and M. W. Petri, and when he was 17 his father sent him to the Conservatory at Cologne, where his teachers were Ludwig Wüllner, Isidor Seiss, Gustav Jensen and Stockhausen. Leaving there in 1891 he was for four years municipal musical director at Lucerne, after which, on the retirement of Willem Kes, he was appointed conductor of the Concertgebouw Orchestra in Amsterdam, remaining until 1941. There he made much propaganda for the music of Mahler and specialized in great performances of Bach's St. Matthew Passion. He was at his best, however, in works in which brilliance was called for, so that he made a great impression with Tchaikovsky's works. He undertook many tours with the Concertgebouw Orchestra and also acted as guest conductor in America, England, Italy, Norway, Germany, etc. He was for long conductor of the choral section of the Toonkunst Vereniging in Amsterdam, and, until too busy with conducting, appeared from time to time as a soloist, his virtuosity being considerable. In 1928 he was made an honorary doctor of music of Columbia University, New York, and in 1933 professor of music at Utrecht University. In 1941 his health broke down, and as he openly expressed his political sympathies with the National Socialists he lost favour in Holland. H. A.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BOER, A. VAN DEN, 'De psychologische beteekenis van Willem Mengelberg als Dirigent' (Amsterdam, 1925).
 MENGELBERG, RUDOLF, 'Das Mahlerfest in Amsterdam' (Amsterdam, 1920).
 NOLTHENIUS, HUGO, 'Willem Mengelberg' (Amsterdam, 1920).
 SOLLITT, E. R., 'Mengelberg' (The Hague, 1931).
 'Mengelberg and the Symphonic Epoch' (New York, 1930).
 'Willem Mengelberg Gedenkboek', by various authors on the 25th anniversary of his Concertgebouw appointment (Amsterdam, 1920).
See also Amsterdam.

MENGES, (Siegfried Frederick) Herbert (b. Hove, 27 Aug. 1902).

English conductor and composer. His father was of German birth and his mother British. He made his first public appearance as a violinist at the age of four. Three years later he abandoned the violin for the piano-forte, and in 1921 he became a student at the R.C.M. in London, where he studied composition under Vaughan Williams and Holst.

In 1931 Menges was appointed musical director of the Old Vic Theatre, and since that date he has written and arranged music for practically all the Shakespeare plays. He has also been responsible for the musical side of all John Gielgud's productions since 'Richard of Bordeaux' in 1933. During the second world war, when the Old Vic. company was transferred to the New Theatre, he followed them there.

Although Menges is best known to the public through his work in connection with the theatre, he is primarily a conductor, in which capacity he has shown himself to be possessed of great gifts of rhythm and expression. In 1925 he founded the Brighton Symphony Players, which he still conducts himself, and he has conducted the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, the Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra and the B.B.C. Orchestra; also opera at Sadler's Wells. In the winter of 1937-38 he gave a series of four Serenade Concerts at Sadler's Wells, which were well received. Among the most successful Shakespeare incidental music composed by him was that for the exquisite Old Vic production of 'Love's Labour's Lost' in 1949.

P. H.

MENGES, Isolde (b. Hove, 16 May 1893).

English violinist, sister of the preceding. She studied at first in Brighton where her parents, both violinists, had a music school. Later she had some lessons with Émile Sauret. In 1910 she went to St. Petersburg to work with Leopold Auer, whom she followed to Dresden, remaining with him till 1912. In Feb. 1913 she gave her first London concerts, playing Tchaikovsky, Beethoven and Wieniawski concertos with orchestra as well as Lalo's 'Symphonie espagnole' and shorter compositions. In May of the same year she played the Brahms and Glazunov concertos at Queen's Hall, the conductor being Mengelberg, who at once offered her an engagement in Holland. The same year she played in Berlin, Safonov conducting.

War caused the cancellation of important engagements in Russia and Holland, and in 1916 Isolde Menges went to the U.S.A., returning to London in 1919. The following year she married Harold Tod Boyd. In 1921 another very successful American tour was undertaken. Since 1927 she has lived in London, accepting an appointment as professor at the R.C.M. in 1931.

Isolde Menges's style is remarkable for technical finish but, above all, for beauty of tone. Gifted with wide sympathies, her playing is as telling in Tchaikovsky as in Beethoven or Bach, and her tone as fascinating when the need is for vigorous expression as when the mood is tender and gracious. Entirely free from temperamental eccentricities, she excels equally in classical and romantic music.

F. B.

MENGES QUARTET. A string-quartet team formed by Isolde Menges in 1931, with herself as leader, Beatrice Carrelle (b. London, 6 Mar. 1910) as second violin, John Yewe Dyer (b. Croydon, Surrey, 2 Apr. 1908) as viola and Ivor James as cello.

The quartet won a very high reputation for soundness of interpretation and general excellence of performance. This ensemble had special features in that the tone of the two violinists blended to an exceptional degree, while the cellist's warm style provided a most sympathetic basis to the tonal structure. The quartet gave numerous recitals in London, playing a vast repertory of classical and modern music, and appeared also with considerable success in Germany and Holland. The Menges Quartet contributed to the Haydn Festival at Oxford (1933) and to the Brahms Festival of 1933, which included the whole of Brahms's chamber music.

F. B.

MENGOZZI, Bernardo (b. Florence, 1758; d. Paris, Mar. 1800).

Italian tenor singer and composer. He studied music at Florence and at Venice under Pasquale Potenza, cantor of St. Mark's. In Lent of 1785 Lord Mount Edgumbe found him singing in oratorio at Naples, with Signora Benini, whom he soon afterwards married. After singing together at several Italian theatres, the two went to London in 1786, but the English climate was very ill-suited to Mengozzi, whose voice, a good tenor, but wanting in power, suffered much and permanently from its rigour. He played, however, the principal part in 'Il tutor burlato' by Paisiello and showed himself "a good musician, with a good style of singing".¹ In Mar. Handel's 'Giulio Cesare' was revived, with additions from others of his works, and in this pasticcio (1787) Mengozzi took part.

¹ Burney.

From London Mengozzi went to Paris (about 1787), where he was heard to advantage at the concerts given by Marie-Antoinette, and among the Italian company of the Théâtre de Monsieur, with Mandini and Viganoni. He remained in Paris after the Revolution and supported himself by giving lessons and writing operettas for the Feydeau and Montansier theatres. When the Conservatoire was established he was appointed professor of singing.

Mengozzi had, during many years, compiled the materials for a 'Méthode de chant' for the Conservatoire; but he died before he had completed it. The work was edited by Langlé. He composed 14 operas. J. M.

Mennechet, Édouard. See Auber ('Vendôme', lib.).

MENNIN, Peter (b. Erie, Pennsylvania, 17 May 1923).

American composer. He has been studying music, and writing it, since the age of seven; he wrote a Symphony, a string Quartet and numerous songs while still a student in his teens at Oberlin College, where he worked with Normand Lockwood. In 1942 he entered the Air Force, thus causing a slight interruption in his musical career. After his discharge he went to the Eastman School at Rochester, N.Y., where he worked with Howard Hanson and Bernard Rogers, and where he heard a number of his orchestral works. While there he wrote the second Symphony, a Concerto for orchestra and Concertino for flute, strings and percussion. He received his bachelor's and master's degrees in composition in 1945, and the same year won the first Annual Gershwin Memorial Award, the winning work being part of Symphony No. 2. This piece was performed under Leonard Bernstein's direction with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and subsequently won the Bearn's Prize of Columbia University.

Mennin is one of the youngest, newest and most promising composers on the American scene; his work is not aggressively "modern" in the sense of either of the two well-known schools of modernism. It is neo-romantic in feeling, somewhat impressionist in approach, rather than having any apparent connection with neo-classicism or atonalism. It is diatonic, often dissonant, flowing, built on a large scale and shows a good melodic sense. Rhythmically, too, it is full of interest, the rhythmic drive being integrated and structural rather than decorative. Sometimes there is monotony, both tonal and rhythmic, but the composer is clearly aware of his responsibilities and the possibilities inherent in the kind of material he uses, and should quite soon emerge with an idiomatic maturity that will match his technical one.

Mennin's outstanding works are:

- Symphony No. 1 (1942).
- Symphony No. 2 (1944).
- Concerto for orchestra (1944).
- Symphonic Allegro (1944).
- 'Folk Overture' (1945).
- Symphony No. 3 (1946).
- 'Sinfonia' for chamber orch. (1946).
- Fantasia for stgs. (1947).
- Concertino for flute, stgs. & perc. (1945).
- String Quartet No. 1 (1941).
- Pf. pieces, songs, &c.

P. G.-H.

MENO MOSSO (Ital., lit. "with less motion" = rather slower). A direction, which, like più lento, generally occurs in the middle of a movement, the latter term properly being used where the whole movement is already a slow one, and the former in a quick movement.

J. A. F.-M.

MENOTTI, Gian Carlo (b. Cadegliano, 7 July 1911).

American composer of Italian birth. Taking his first lessons from his mother, he was already composing at the age of six, and he wrote his first opera at the age of eleven. He himself said of this work that it was notable chiefly for the fact that all the characters killed themselves in the final act.

Going to the U.S.A. in 1928, Menotti won a scholarship to the Curtis Institute at Philadelphia, where he studied with Rosario Scalero, then head of the composition department. When he was twenty-three years of age Menotti composed his first opera, 'Amelia Goes to the Ball', first performed at Philadelphia in the Curtis Institute on 1 Apr. 1937, Fritz Reiner conducting, and later at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, as well as in Europe.

Menotti's next operatic experiment was a radio opera, 'The Old Maid and the Thief', written for the N.B.C. and produced by them on the air in 1939. A much more dramatic piece came next, 'The Island God', a work that was introduced at the Metropolitan Opera in 1942. Four years later appeared from his pen 'The Medium', a chamber opera commissioned by the Ditson Fund of Columbia University and produced there in the spring of 1946. This piece, to use the composer's own description, is "the tragedy of a woman caught between two worlds, a world of reality which she cannot wholly comprehend and the supernatural world in which she cannot believe". The story deals with a crystal gazer whose faked spiritualistic transports evoke a wraith she cannot account for, an event that completely unnerves her so that she gives up her profession and ends by committing murder. Owing to his own well-knit libretto, an acute sense of theatre and some atmospheric music, the piece was an instant success. 'The Medium' was followed in 1947 by 'The Telephone', a satirical piece, the plot of which is enacted mainly over the telephone.

These two pieces were so successfully produced in New York that they became a Broadway "hit", thereby confusing the rather fixed minds of the Broadway world of entertainment. They were, however, found less acceptable in London, although well performed by the original New York cast. A later opera is 'The Consul' (1950). This too was taken to London under the auspices of Sir Laurence Olivier, and after a first night on 7 Feb. 1951 which created a sensation chiefly by the vitality and suitability of an American cast and the striking libretto rather than the quality of the music, had a run of several weeks at the Cambridge Theatre.

A new short opera, 'Amahl and the Night Visitors', was televised in the U.S.A. on 24 Dec. 1951 and produced at the Music School of Indiana University, Bloomington, on 21 Feb. 1952.

Menotti teaches at the Curtis Institute of Music, taking courses in composition and in dramatic forms. Among his awards during recent years have been the $1000 grant of the American Academy and the National Institute of Arts and Letters in 1945, and a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1946.

Menotti's non-operatic works are few; they include two ballets, 'Sebastian' (1944) and 'Errand in the Maze' (1946); a pianoforte Concerto (1945); 4 pieces for string quartet (1936), a 'Trio for a House-warming Party' for flute, cello and pianoforte (1938); children's pianoforte pieces, 'Poemetti' (1937) and 6 compositions for carillon (1934).

P. G.-H.

BIBL.—BENJAMIN, ARTHUR, 'The Consul' (M. & L., XXXII, 1951, p. 247).

MENOU, Tuttovalle (Tutualle) (b. ?; d. ?).

French or Italian 16th-century composer. Fétis says he was a Frenchman who lived in Italy, mostly at Correggio. He was the teacher of Claudio Merulo and composed a book of 'Madrigali d'amore' for 4 voices (Ferrara, 1548) which appeared in several editions, and 4 canzoni in P. Bozzi's 'Giarinetto' (1588).

E. v. d. s.

MENSURAL MUSIC. See MUSICA MENSURATA. NOTATION.

MENSURALIST SCHOOL. See PLAIN-SONG.

MENTER, Joseph (b. Deutenkofen, Bavaria, 19 Jan. 1808; d. Munich, 18 Apr. 1856).

German violoncellist. His first instrument was the violin, but before long he transferred his attention to the cello, which he studied under P. Moralt at Munich. In 1829 he took an engagement in the orchestra of the Prince of Hohenzollern-Hechingen, but in 1833 he became a member of the Royal Opera orchestra at Munich. With the exception of various artistic tours in Germany, Austria, Holland, Belgium and England he remained at Munich till his death.

T. P. P.

MENTER, Sophie (b. Munich, 29 July 1846; d. Stackdorf nr. Munich, 23 Feb. 1918).

German pianist, daughter of the preceding. After a childhood of great precocity she entered the Munich Conservatory under Leonhard. At the age of thirteen she left that establishment for private tuition under Niest, and in her fifteenth year she made her first artistic tour. In 1867 she appeared at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig, and studied with Tausig; in 1869 she became a pupil of Liszt and in 1872 married the cellist David Popper, from whom she was divorced in 1886. In 1883–87 she was pianoforte professor in St. Petersburg. She first appeared in England in 1881. o.

MENU, Pierre (b. Paris, 1896; d. Paris, 16 Oct. 1919).

French composer. He was a pupil of Roger-Ducasse at the Paris Conservatoire and showed great promise, but his career was cut short by an early death. Among his few works are a 'Sonatine' for string quartet, a Quartet for violin, viola, cello and pianoforte, a piece for chromatic harp entitled 'Dans l'ambiance espagnole' and some songs.

E. B.

MENUETTO. A hybrid word for the minuet, neither Italian (minuetto), German (Menuett) nor French (menuet), but frequently met with in scores of non-Italian, especially German works.

E. B.

MENUHIN, Yehudi (b. New York, 22 Apr. 1916).

American violinist. When four years of age he was already receiving lessons in violin playing from Sigmund Anker of San Francisco, where the Menuhin family had settled shortly after Yehudi's birth. His studies were continued with Louis Persinger, and his progress was so rapid that in 1924 he made a public appearance which aroused much interest, as did the concert he gave in New York the following year. After another year of study in the U.S.A. Menuhin went to Europe to seek the advice of Adolf Busch and Georges Enesco, of whom the latter had the more lasting influence on his style. He returned to New York after making a début in Paris, and in Nov. 1927 the eleven-year-old violinist played Beethoven's Concerto, astounding the American public by the ease and sincerity of his execution and tone.

Menuhin first visited London in 1929, his fame having preceded him, and played to full houses in the Albert Hall, arousing great enthusiasm. He returned each year until 1936, when it was given out that he would retire for a period of eighteen months. He returned to the platform in 1937, playing in the U.S.A. and in London the following year, his programme including Schumann's violin Concerto, then a topic of general interest owing to the circumstances accompanying its "discovery".

Probably no other violinist has made so deep an impression on the public so early in life as Menuhin, and certainly no other violinist has succeeded in amassing so large a fortune before reaching manhood. No doubt modern means of legitimate propaganda — the machinery for reproducing and broadcasting musical performances and the rapidity of news distribution — as well as the public's partiality for the unusual contributed to that result. But it is also true that when the child violinist first came to London, his playing was of a very exceptional order. Elgar took a great fancy to him and made a special point in coaching him in his violin Concerto, which Menuhin revived in Paris and elsewhere and recorded for the gramophone.

Later appearances have never failed to arouse admiration even when the delightful ease and charm of the first years had gone — as it was bound to go — without producing evidence of a strong personality to take its place. Before his retirement Menuhin's style was slightly influenced by Kreisler's; afterwards the Kreisler influence was no longer evident, but experts still saw traces of Georges Enesco's teaching. His sister Hephzibah (b. 20 May 1920), a clever young pianist, has appeared with him in sonata programmes.

Menuhin was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour at the age of thirty-two.

F. B., adds.

MEO, Ascanio (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th–17th-century composer. In 1608 he was maestro di cappella of the church of San Giacomo degli Spagnuoli at Naples. He composed 5 books of madrigals, only the third and fifth of which are still known to exist.

E. v. d. s.

MÉPRISES ESPAGNOLES, LES (Opera).

See BOIELDIEU.

MÉPRISES PAR RESEMBLANCE, LES (Opera). See GRÉTRY.

MERBECKE, John. See MARBECK.

MERCADANTE, (Giuseppe) Saverio (Raffaele) (b. Altamura nr. Bari, [bapt. 17 Sept.] 1795; d. Naples, 17 Dec. 1870).

Italian composer. He was an illegitimate child, and when in 1808 he was brought to Naples to enter the Collegio di San Sebastiano his first Christian name and the date and place of his birth were falsified. He himself told Florimo that he was a Neapolitan and his statue at Naples, erected in 1876, gives his name wrongly as Francesco Saverio Mercadante. Florimo maintained to the last that he was born at Naples on 26 June 1797.

Mercadante early revealed exceptional ability as performer and composer. He studied solfeggio, the violin, flute and other instruments, and wrote marches and other pieces for a little orchestra organized by himself among his fellow-students. After lessons in composition from Furno and Tritto he became the favourite pupil of Zingarelli, director of the Collegio. It is untrue, as stated by Fétis and others, that he was dismissed by Zingarelli. In 1818 he wrote music for three ballets and composed a cantata in honour of the ex-King Charles IV of Spain. His first opera was 'L' apoteosi d' Ercole', produced with great success at the Naples Teatro San Carlo on 19 Aug. 1819. After this, with a facility rivalled only by Rossini and Donizetti, he poured out a steady stream of operas at the rate of three or four a year. They were performed in various Italian cities with varying success, but in 1821 his first work for the Teatro alla Scala at Milan, the opera buffa 'Elisa e Claudio', won him a European reputation. In 1824 three new operas were produced in Vienna. The years 1827–29 were passed in Spain and Portugal, seven new operas being heard at Lisbon, Madrid and Cadiz. He was back at Naples in 1831 and in the following year was married at Genoa. In 1833 he became Generali's successor as maestro di cappella at the cathedral of Novara. This appointment occasioned the composition of much church music, but did not hinder Mercadante's operatic career. Through Rossini's interest he was called to Paris to produce his 'I briganti' in 1836. Acquaintance with the music of Meyerbeer was probably responsible for changes of style observable in his next few operas — 'Il giuramento' (Milan, 1837), 'Le due illustri rivali' (Venice, 1838), 'Elena da Feltre' (Naples, 1838), 'Il bravo' (Milan, 1839) and 'La vestale' (Naples, 1840).

While writing 'Elena da Feltre' Mercadante outlined a remarkable programme of operatic reform in a letter to Florimo:

I have continued the revolution begun with 'Il giuramento' — varied the forms, abolished trivial cabalettas, exiled the crescendos; concision, less repetition, some novelty in the cadences; due regard paid to the dramatic side; the orchestration rich, without swamping the voices; long solos in the concerted numbers avoided, as they obliged the other parts to stand coldly by, to the harm of the dramatic action; not much big drum, and very little brass band.

These "reform-operas" are of great interest and importance in the history of music in Italy in the 19th century. In range of modulation, in harmonic interest and in his treatment of the orchestra Mercadante surpasses all his Italian contemporaries. But it must be added that he lapses often into empty rhetoric and that his style is a patch-work of old and new. 'La vestale' is certainly his masterpiece. The claims of Biagio Notarnicola (see Bibl.) that Verdi stole his ideas from Mercadante and brought pressure to bear on Florimo to denigrate him are demonstrably false and wholly unacceptable. Nevertheless, Verdi was influenced by Mercadante, as he was influenced by Bellini, Rossini and Donizetti, and when he came to write 'Aida' the general style of 'La vestale' and even some individual phrases, e.g.:

recurred to his subconscious mind. He had witnessed the triumph of 'La vestale' at Genoa in 1841. Both operas end with the chief character being solemnly entombed alive.

In 1840 Mercadante became director of the Conservatory at Naples, a post which he held until his death. The best of the operas composed during this period is 'Gli Orazi ed i Curiazi' (1846) — another Roman subject. But the programme of reform tends to be more and more forgotten in the later works, which are seldom concise, often repetitive, include arias and cabalettas in conventional forms, with showy instrumental and vocal cadenzas, and are noisily scored, with plenty of big drum and a great deal of brass band.

At Novara Mercadante had lost his sight in one eye; at Naples in 1862 he became totally blind, but continued to compose by dictation. In the latter part of his life he was a revered figurehead rather than an active force in the musical life of Italy. F. W. (ii).

Of Mercadante's sixty operas the following are the twelve most representative:

- COLUCCI, RAFFAEL, 'Biografia di Saverio Mercadante' (Venice, 1867).
 COMITATO "PRO MERCADANTE" DI ALTAMURA, 'Saverio Mercadante: note e documenti' (Bari, 1945).
 DE NAPOLI, GIUSEPPE, 'La triade melodrammatica altamurana' (Milan, 1934).
 FLORIMO, FRANCESCO, 'Cenno storico sulla scuola musicale di Napoli' (Naples, 1869-71).
 'La scuola musicale di Napoli' (Naples, 1880-84).
 NOTARNICOLA, BIAGIO, 'Saverio Mercadante: biografia critica' (Rome, 1945).
 'Saverio Mercadante nella gloria e nella luce' (Rome, 1949).
 PANNAIN, GUIDO, 'Saggio su la musica a Napoli nel sec. XIX' (Riv. Mus. It., 1928, pp. 198-208, 331-42).
 POMÈ, ALESSANDRO, 'Saggio critico su l'opera musicale di Saverio Mercadante' (Turin, 1925).
 SOLIMENE, GIUSEPPE, 'La patria ed i genitori di Mercadante' (Naples, 1940).
 WALKER, FRANK, 'Mercadante and Verdi' (M. & L., XXXIII & XXXIV, 1952-53).
 See also Conti (C., deputizing for M.).

MERCATO DI MALMANTILE, IL (Opera). See GOLDONI.

MERCATOR, Michael (Michele) (b. Venice, 1491; d. ?, 1544).

Italian instrument maker. He worked in England and made virginals for Henry VIII and Cardinal Wolsey between 1529 and 1532. He was included in the list of the musical establishment of Henry VIII in 1526. There is a medallion portrait of him in the British Museum. E. J. H. (ii).

MERCI, Louis. See MERCY.

Mercier-Dupaty, Émanuel. See Auber (2 libs.). Boieldieu (2 libs.). Isouard (3 libs.).

Mercier, Louis Sébastien. See Mayr (S., 'Carretto del venditore d' aceto', opera).

MERCKER (Merkher), Mathias (b. ?; d. ?).

Dutch 16th-17th-century instrumentalist and composer. He was a skilful performer on the organ, trombone, cornett, flute and viols.

Title	Libretto	Production
'Elisa e Claudio, ossia L' amore protetto dall' amicizia.'	Luigi Romanelli, based on F. Casari's play 'Rosella'.	Milan, Teatro alla Scala, 30 Oct. 1821.
'Caritea, regina di Spagna.'	Paolo Pola.	Venice, Teatro La Fenice, 21 Feb. 1826.
'Gabriella di Vergy.'	Antonio Profumo, after Andrea Tottola's libretto.	Lisbon, Teatro San Carlos, 8 Aug. 1828.
'I Normanni a Parigi.'	Felice Romani.	Turin, Teatro Regio, 7 Feb. 1832.
'I briganti.'	Jacopo Crescini, based on Schiller's tragedy 'Die Räuber'.	Paris, Théâtre-Italien, 22 Mar. 1836.
'Il giuramento.'	Gaetano Rossi, based on Victor Hugo's 'Angelo'.	Milan, Teatro alla Scala, 10 Mar. 1837.
'Elena da Feltre.'	Salvatore Cammarano.	Naples, Teatro San Carlo, 26 Dec. 1838.
'Il bravo.'	Rossi & Marco Marcelllo.	Milan, Teatro alla Scala, 9 Mar. 1839.
'La vestale.'	Cammarano.	Naples, Teatro San Carlo, 10 Mar. 1840.
'Leonora.'	Marco d' Arienzo.	Naples, Teatro Nuovo, 5 Dec. 1844.
'Gli Orazi ed i Curiazi.'	Cammarano.	Naples, Teatro San Carlo, 10 Nov. 1846.
'Virginia.'	Cammarano, based on Alfieri's tragedy.	Naples, Teatro San Carlo, 7 Apr. 1866.

A. L.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BUSTICO, G., 'Saverio Mercadante a Novara' (Riv. Mus. It., 1921, pp. 361-96).

¹ Set by Carafa in 1816.

² Composed in 1851, but not then allowed to be performed.

From before 1599 till after 1622 he was organist of St. Nicholas Church at Strasbourg. He composed a book of pavans, galliards, etc., in 5 parts (1609), and 'Odae spirituales' (1619); there is also a manuscript (copied in 1599) of 'Christ Gottes und Mariae Sohn' for 5 voices. E. v. d. s.

"MERCURY" SYMPHONY ('Der Merkur'). The distinguishing name of Haydn's Symphony No. 43, in E♭ major, composed about 1771.

MERCY (Merci), Louis (b. ?; d. ?).

English 18th-century recorder player and composer of French extraction. He was an eminent performer on the recorder, for which he composed several sets of solos. But he lived at a time when his favourite instrument was gradually becoming superseded by the transverse or German flute, and in the hope of averting the change he allied himself about 1735 with Stanesby the instrument-maker, in an endeavour to promote the use of the modified form of recorder manufactured by the latter, and published 12 solos, six of which were said to be adapted to the transverse flute, violin or Stanesby's new English flute, with a preface strongly insisting on the merits of Stanesby's invention. Mercy's solos, two sets for the flute and bassoon (or cello), are in the B.M. W. H. H.

MEREAUX. French family of musicians.

(1) Nicolas Jean (Le Froid de) Mereaux (b. Paris, 1745; d. Paris, 1797), organist and composer. He was organist at the Paris church of Saint-Sauveur¹ (1767) and at that of the Petits Augustins and the royal chapel. His oratorios 'Samson' and 'Esther' were given at the Concert Spirituel in 1774 and 1775 respectively. These, and an Ode on the birth of the Dauphin, performed at the same concerts in Dec. 1781, are his only works of importance besides his operas, of which the following are on record:

- 'La Ressource comique' (1772).
- 'Le Retour de tendresse' (1774).
- 'Le Duel comique' (1776), partly arranged from Paisiello.
- 'Laurette' (1777).
- 'Alexandre aux Indes' (1783).
- 'Édipe et Jocaste', after Sophocles (1791).
- 'Fabius' (1793).
- 'Les Thermopyles'.
- Scipion à Carthage.

(2) Jean Nicolas Mereaux (b. Paris, 22 June 1767; d. Paris, Feb. 1838), organist, pianist and composer, son of the preceding. He composed sonatas, fantasies, etc., for the pianoforte.

(3) Jean Amédée Mereaux (b. Paris, 1803; d. Rouen, 25 Apr. 1874), pianist and composer, son of the preceding. He became a remarkable pianist and a very successful teacher. He studied under Reicha from the age of ten and appeared with great success in Paris and London before 1835, when he settled in Rouen as a teacher. Of his original compositions his studies are the most important, but his fame rests chiefly upon his excellent collection published in 1867 under the title of 'Les Clavecinistes de 1637 à 1790'. He was also in great repute as a musical journalist.

J. A. F.-M., adds. M. L. P.

Meredith, George. See Bantock (partsongs). Maconchy (song). Parry (H., 2 songs). Vaughan Thomas (overture & song cycle). Vaughan Williams ('Lark Ascending', vn. & orch.). Walker (E., part-song).

Merelli, Bartolomeo. See Donizetti (4 libs.). Oberto (Verdi, lib.). Verdi (do., alterations).

MEREST, Mrs. See HAWES, MARIA.

Merezhkovsky, Dimitry Sergeyevich. See Rakhmaninov (3 songs). Tchaikovsky (2 songs).

MERIAN, Wilhelm (b. Basel, 18 Sept. 1889; d. Basel, Nov. 1952).

Swiss musical historian. He studied at the Universities of Basel and Berlin, taking the Ph.D. at that of Basel in 1916. He became music critic and, in 1920, musical editor of the 'Basler Nachrichten'. In 1921 he was appointed lecturer at Basel University, and in 1931 he became Professor-extraordinary, with teaching duties added in 1935, his special subject being early instrumental music. He was secretary to the International Society for Musicology from 1927 to 1948 and president of the Schweizerische Musikforschende Gesellschaft from 1935 to 1946, being later an honorary member of both societies. In 1933 he founded, with Paul Sacher, the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis.

The following are Merian's most important publications:

- 'Die Tabulaturen des Organisten Hans Kötter' (1916).
- 'Bonifazius Amerbach und Hans Kötter' (1917).
- 'Drei Handschriften aus der Frühzeit des Klavierspiels' (A.M.W., 1920).
- 'Basels Musikleben im 19. Jahrhundert' (1920).
- 'Der Tanz in den deutschen Tabulaturen' (1927).
- 'Geistliche Werke schweizerischer Komponisten des 16. Jahrhunderts' (1927).
- 'Mozarts Klaviersonaten und die Sonatenform' (1932).
- 'Hermann Suter' (1933-36).

K. V. F.

BIBL.—GEERING, A., 'M. Merian zum 60. Geburtstag' (Schweiz. Mus. Ztg., 1949, No. 8-9).

MÉRIC, ? de (b. ?; d. ?).

French 19th-century soprano singer. She appeared in London in 1832 and was very successful in an unsuccessful season. She was a clever actress, with a good voice and considerable versatility of talent, rendering her very useful, as she sang in serious or comic operas, first parts or second, and in any operatic language. While in England she performed in Italian, German, French and English, and could have done so equally well in Spanish, had it been required.

She appeared in Weber's 'Freischütz' on its first production in London with the original German words (9 May 1832), at a time when German opera, temporarily at least, drove Italian from the London boards. Madame de Méric also played Donna Elvira in Mozart's 'Don Giovanni' to the Donna Anna of Schröder-Devrient, who rather eclipsed her; but in Chelard's 'Macbeth' (4 July 1832) she distinguished herself.

J. M.

¹ Not Saint-Jacques du Haut-Pas as stated by Fétis.

MÉRIC-LALANDE, Henriette (Clémentine) (b. Dunkirk, 1798; d. Chantilly nr. Paris, 7 Sept. 1867).

French soprano singer. She was the daughter of Lamiroux-Lalande, the chief of a provincial operatic company. She made her début with success in 1814 at Naples. Fétis heard her, and admired her as an actress of opéra-comique, at Douai in the following year. She continued to sing till 1822, with equal success, in the principal towns of France, and was then engaged at the Théâtre du Gymnase-Dramatique in Paris, Ebers having made an unsuccessful attempt to engage her for London. Clever enough to perceive, however, after hearing the singers at the Italian Opera, how utterly she was without the knowledge of the proper manner of producing her voice, she took lessons from Garcia and made her first appearance on 3 Apr. 1823 in 'Les Folies Amoureuses', a pasticcio arranged by Castil-Blaze. About this time she became the wife of Méric, a horn player at the Opéra-Comique. Rejecting the offer of an engagement at the latter theatre, on Garcia's advice she went to Italy and received additional teaching from Bonfichi and Banderali at Milan. After singing with increased success at Venice, Munich, Brescia, Cremona, Venice (again) and other Italian cities, she at length appeared in London during the season of 1830.

She arrived in England too late, and her place, moreover, had been filled by women of greater genius. She was a good musician, and sang with taste; but her voice, a soprano, ere she came had contracted a habit of trembling, in those days a novelty (would it had always remained so!), to which English ears were then averse. She gave little satisfaction.¹

Méric-Lalande sang again in London in 1831. In Paris she pleased no better in these latter years, and at length she retired in 1833, it is said to Spain. A biography, with a portrait, was published in the musical journal 'Teatro della Fenice' (Venice, 1826).

J. M.

MERIDE E SELINUNTE (Opera). See ZENO.

MERIGHI, Antonia (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian contralto singer. She was first engaged for the London stage by Handel, as announced in the 'Daily Courant' of 2 July 1729. The first part she undertook was that of Matilda in Handel's 'Lotario' on 2 Dec. 1729, in which she created a favourable impression; but her songs, when printed in the published opera, were transposed into much higher keys. This opera was followed by a revival of 'Tolomeo', in which she sang soprano music transposed for her, and next by 'Partenope', in which Merighi appeared as Rosmira with equal success in 1730 and 1731. In the latter year she sang the part of Armida in the revival of 'Rinaldo'.

¹ Chorley.

After the close of that season, however, her name was not again found in the bills until 1736. The 'Daily Post' of 18 Nov. in that year informs us that Signora Merighi, Signora Chimenti, and the Francesca had the honour to sing before her Majesty, the duke and princesses, at Kensington, on Monday night last, and met with a most gracious reception.

In Jan. 1738 Merighi appeared in the new opera, 'Faramondo', just finished by Handel after his return from Aachen, and again in Pescetti's 'La conquista del vello d'oro'. In Apr. of the same season she took the part of Amastre in 'Serse' — the last she sang in England.

J. M.

MERIKANTO, Aarre (b. Helsingfors, 29 July 1893).

Finnish composer. He is the son of Oskar Merikanto and studied at Leipzig with Reger and Stephan Krehl from 1912 to 1914, and later in Moscow with Vassilenko in 1916-17. He was a teacher of theory and composition at the Helsingfors Conservatory (Sibelius Academy) from 1937 and was nominated Professor of Composition there in May 1951 in succession to Palmgren.

Merikanto's numerous compositions include an opera, 'Juha', a ballet, 'The Abduction of Killikki' (from the 'Kalevala'), several cantatas (e.g. one for the Four Centuries Jubilee of Helsingfors, 1950), 3 symphonies, 5 symphonic poems, several suites and 'Variations and Fugue' for orchestra (a masterpiece of counterpoint), 2 pianoforte concertos, 3 violin concertos, 2 cello concertos, a Concerto for 9 instruments (Schott prize, 1925), a Partita for woodwind and harp, etc.

Except for the ballet, which has a subject from Finnish legend, Aarre Merikanto has not followed the predominant tendency among the younger Finnish composers to write nationalist music. At first he owed much to the last phase of the German romantic period, but latterly he has become interested in the twelve-note principles of Schoenberg, to which he adheres to a certain extent in his Concerto for 9 instruments. In 1952 he composed a Fanfare for the Olympic Games of Helsingfors.

A. R.

MERIKANTO, (Frans) Oskar (b. Helsingfors, 5 Aug. 1868; d. Hausjärvi-Oiti, 17 Feb. 1924).

Finnish organist, pianist, conductor, musicologist and composer, father of the preceding. He studied in Helsingfors, Leipzig and Berlin, later becoming conductor of the Finnish Opera in Helsingfors. He composed a great many popular pieces and songs, widely known in his country. Many of them have become almost folk tunes. He was a connoisseur of the true resources of the human voice and of the different instruments — the chief reason for the popularity of his songs and some of his other works. He also wrote the first opera to be set to Finnish words and two other operas:

- 'Pohjan neito' ('The Maid of Bothnia') (libretto by Antti Rytönen, from the 'Kalevala'), 1898, prod. Viipuri (Viborg), 18 June 1908.
- 'Elinan surma' ('Elina's Death') (lib. by Jalmari Finne, based on a play by Gustaf Adolf von Numers), prod. Helsingfors, 17 Nov. 1910.
- 'Regina von Emmeritz' (lib. by Väinö Sola, based on a play by Zachris Topelius), prod. Helsingfors, 30 Jan. 1920.

Merikanto, moreover, wrote a Passacaglia and several other works for organ and books on organ playing, etc. A. R.

BIBL.—SUOMALAINEN, YRJÖ, 'Oskar Merikanto Suomen kotien saveltaja' ('O. M., the Finnish "home composer"') (Helsingfors, 1950).

MÉRIMÉE, Prosper. See Alfonso el Sabio. Berners ('Carosse du Saint-Sacrement'). Bizet ('Carmen', passim). Busser ('Colomba' & 'Carosse du S.-S.', operas). Carmen (opera). Guzla (name of inst. adopted). Mackenzie ('Colomba', opera). Pacini ('Fidanzata corsa', opera). Schoeck ('Venus', opera). Wetzler ('Baskische Venus', opera).

MERITIS, Felix. See FELIX MERITIS SOCIETY.

MERK, Joseph (b. Vienna, 18 Jan. 1795; d. Vienna, 16 June 1852).

Austrian cellist and composer. His first musical studies were directed to singing, the guitar, and especially to the violin, which last instrument, it was said, he was obliged to abandon in consequence of an accident to his arm. He then took to the cello, and under the tuition of an excellent master named Schindlöcker speedily acquired great facility on the instrument. After a few years of desultory engagements he settled in Vienna as principal cellist at the Opera (1818), professor at the newly founded Conservatory (1823) and Kammervirtuos to the emperor (1834). He was much associated with Mayseder and was often called the Mayseder of the cello. His compositions for his instrument are numerous.

T. P. P.

See also Chopin (ded. of Polonaise for cello).

MERKEL, Gustav (b. Oberoderwitz, Saxony, 12 Nov. 1827; d. Dresden, 30 Oct. 1885).

German organist and composer. He studied music under Julius Otto and under Johann Schneider of Dresden, and also received some instruction from Reissiger and Schumann. In 1858 he was appointed organist of the Waisenkirche, Dresden, in 1860 of the Kreuzkirche and in 1864 he became court organist.

From 1867 to 1873 Merkel was director of the Dresden Singakademie and from 1861 was a professor at the Conservatory there. His printed compositions reach the number of 180. Of these a large proportion is for his instrument. He also published many solos and ducts for pianoforte, motets (Op. 106) and songs with pianoforte accompaniment. Many of his fugues are alla cappella, and in five parts, and all are well constructed.

His organ works include preludes and fugues, variations, 9 organ sonatas, an 'Organ School', 30 studies for pedal technique, 3 fantasies and many chorale preludes, also pieces for violin or cello and organ. H. S. O.

MERKER (Ger., lit. "marker" = judge, adjudicator). A member of a company of mastersingers who was elected to judge the competitions for mastership and to award prizes to outstanding composer-performers. Beckmesser in Wagner's 'Meistersinger' is a caricature of a Merker. E. B.

MERKHER, Mathias. See MERCKER.

MERKLIN, SCHÜTZE & CIE. See DAUBLAINE & CALLINET.

MERKUR, DER. See "MERCURY" SYMPHONY.

MERLIN (Opera). See ALBÉNIZ. GOLD-MARK.

MERLIN, Joseph (b. ?; d. London, ?).

English 18th-century instrument maker. He was established in London in the latter part of the century, at a place in Oxford Street described as "Merlin's Cave". A pianoforte of his, No. 91 of 1782, gives him precedence over Broadwood in making grands, and perhaps even over Kirkman, but not over Stodart. His only patent is for a combined harpsichord and pianoforte with a pedal for the two unisons and octave, replacing the stops: No. 1081 (1774). A single-keyboard Kirkman harpsichord of 1758 came to light in 1924 with an adapted pianoforte movement by Merlin (1779). A. J. Hipkins notes:

He may have been one of Burney's harpsichord makers who followed Backer's lead in making grand pianos, before Kirkman and Shudi took them up.

Broadwood has a square piano by him with an organ beneath.

The square piano in the portrait by Gainsborough of his son-in-law Fischer, the oboe player, is by Merlin.

E. J. H.

MERLO, Alessandro (b. Rome, c. 1530; d. ?).

Italian singer, violist and composer (known also as Alessandro della Viola and Alessandro Romano). He was a pupil of Willaert and Rore, and in about 1575 came into prominence through his exceptional bass-tenor voice with a compass of three octaves. In 1594 he was a singer in the Papal Chapel. His compositions, so far as they are known, are 2 books of 'Canzoni alla napoletana' for 5 voices (1572, 1575), 2 books of madrigals, 5 v. (1565, 1577), a book of villanelle (1579), a book of madrigals, 4 v., 'Le vergini' (1554, reprints 1562, 1585, 1587), a book of motets (1579) and a piece in 'Delle Muse libri III' (1555-1561). E. v. d. s.

See also Sistine Choir.

MERMET, Auguste (b. Brussels, 5 Jan. 1810; d. Paris, 4 July 1889).

French composer. He was a pupil of Lesueur and Halévy in Paris. Among his operas were 'La Bannière du roi' (Versailles, 1835), 'Le Roi David' (Paris, Opéra, 1846), 'Roland à Roncevaux' (Paris, Opéra, 3 Oct. 1864) and 'Jeanne d'Arc' (Paris, Opéra, 5 Apr. 1876). The last named is memorable as the first new work to be produced in the present Paris opera-house, which had been opened on 5 Jan. 1875.

J. A. F.-M.
Mérodé, W. de. See Schouman (choral work, song with stg. 4tet).

MEROPE (Opera). See ZENO.

MERRICK, Frank (b. Clifton, Bristol, 30 Apr. 1886).

English pianist, composer and teacher. He came of musical parents (his father of the same name was a Doctor of Music), both of whom taught him music until in 1898 he went to study the pianoforte with Leschetizky. He made his first appearance in London as a pianist in 1903 in a recital and subsequently toured with Clara Butt. He settled as professor of the pianoforte at the Royal Manchester College of Music (1911). In 1929 he transferred to the staff of the R.C.M. in London.

Merrick was the winner of one of the prizes offered by the Columbia Graphophone Co. for two movements to complete Schubert's "unfinished Symphony" in the year of the Schubert Centenary (1928). Gramophone records of these movements were published, and their simple melodies and straightforward orchestration show that in writing them the composer's genuine desire was to produce music in consonance with Schubert's own outlook. More than that, the music is a successful imitation of the Schubertian style. Other of his larger compositions are two pianoforte concertos, a Symphony and a pianoforte Sonata (performed in public but not published). He is editor of the Students' Edition of Chopin's works and as an interpreter, while showing a fine grasp of the classics and a far-ranging taste, he has made a special and sympathetic study of Prokofiev's pianoforte sonatas.

H. C. C., adds.

MERRICOCKE (Merricock, Marcock), T.¹ (b. ?; d. ?).

English 16th-17th-century composer. He is among the composers of the 40 In Nomines included in partbooks at Oxford (Bodl. Mus. Sch.). The name is an unusual one, and he is probably the "Merricock" the altus part of whose 'Te Deum' and Evening Service is in an early 17th-century manuscript², and whose 3-part motet 'Gloria laus et honor' is in the Commonplace Book of John Baldwin (written between 1581 and 1606).

J. M. (ii).

See also Baldwin (John). In Nomine.

MERRIE ENGLAND (Operetta). See GERMAN.

MERRILL, Robert (b. Brooklyn, N.Y., 4 June 1919).

American baritone singer. He was educated at the New Utrecht High School, Brooklyn; his mother, Lillian Miller Merrill, a former concert singer, was his first music teacher. In 1936 he began to study with Samuel Margolies, helping to pay for his lessons by small singing engagements and various non-musical jobs. In 1943, after he had been singing at the Radio City Music Hall in New York, he received his first major radio contract and made his opera début, as Amonasro in 'Aida', in 1944 at Trenton, N.J. In 1945, a few years after he had reached the semi-finals in an earlier attempt, he was one of the winners in the Metropolitan Opera's auditions of the air. He made his début at the Metropolitan on 15 Dec. 1945, as Germont in 'La Traviata', and became one of the company's leading baritones in the Italian and French repertory. His concert, radio and recording activities constantly widened, and he has also appeared in television in recent years. In Apr. 1951 the making of his first motion picture, 'Aaron Slick from Punkin Crick', conflicted with his Metropolitan Opera engagement and he was dismissed from the company which, under Rudolf Bing's management, had adopted a stricter policy in regard to its artists' outside engagements; but he was reinstated in Dec. With a well-produced voice of pleasing quality and interpretative sympathy, he is one of the most promising young American baritones. It is possible, however, that his current popularity and resulting diversity of activities may limit his ultimate development as an operatic artist of the first order.

F. D. P.

MERRITT, Arthur (Tillman) (b. Calhoun, Missouri, 15 Feb. 1902).

American musicologist. He studied at the University of Missouri, where he obtained the A.B. degree in 1924 and the B.F.A. two years later, and at Harvard University he became an A.M. in 1927. He held the John Knowles Paine Travelling Scholarship from Harvard for the next two years, which he spent in Paris studying under Nadia Boulanger, and from 1928 to 1929 he also took lessons with Paul Dukas at the École Normale de Musique. In 1930 he became Assistant Professor of Music at Trinity College, Hartford (Conn.), for two years and from 1932 to 1936 acted as instructor of music at Harvard. In 1936 he was appointed Assistant Professor there and three years later Associate Professor until 1946. Since 1942 he has been chairman of the Department of Music at Harvard and since 1946 Professor and Tutor in Music. He also acted as Senior Tutor at Eliot House, Harvard, for three years, from 1946 to 1949. His book, 'Sixteenth-Century Polyphony' was published in 1939.

M. K. W.

MERRY WIDOW, THE (Operetta by Lehár). See LUSTIGE WITWE, DIE.

¹ The full Christian name is unknown.

² B.M., Add. MSS 29,289/806.

MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, THE (Opera by Nicolai). See LUSTIGEN WEIBER VON WINDSOR, DIE.

MERSEBURGER, Carl. German publishing-house at Leipzig, whose activities include the issue of music, books on music and musical periodicals. It was founded on 21 Sept. 1849 by Carl Wilhelm Merseburger (b. 1816) by the purchase of the small publishing firm of Carl Friedrich Meusel, a schoolmaster of Weissenfels. Merseburger himself wrote books on various subjects, including two on music: 'Geschichte der Tonkunst' (6 eds.) and 'Taschenbüchlein der Musiker' (31 eds.). In 1885 Carl's brother, Otto Merseburger (1822-98), took over the firm, and he was followed by his son Max (1852-1935) and his nephew Georg (b. 1872), Carl's son.

The firm's publications are mainly educational, and Otto's were largely devoted to the graphic arts, but the periodical 'Anregungen für Kunst, Leben und Wissenschaft', issued between 1856 and 1861, was edited by two musicians, Franz Brendel and Richard Pohl. From about this time the firm brought out a good deal of music, mainly for home use and for teaching. In 1851-94 the firm also published the educational musical periodical 'Euterpe', edited by Ernst Hentschel and Ludwig Erk. Song-books, a treatise on harmony and various instrumental tutors were also among the musical publications.

In 1918 Max Merseburger retired and left the firm in the hands of Georg as sole proprietor. He continued to bring out educational works, with Adolf Strube (b. 1894) as musical editor and sometimes author. In 1945 the business, with all its stocks, was destroyed in the air-raids on Leipzig, but means were found to continue, and new outlets were sought in modern editions of works by old church composers and in the publication of new music by a number of living German composers.

E. B.

MERSENNE (Mersennus), Marin (b. Oizé, Maine, 8 Sept. 1588; d. Paris, 1 Sept. 1648).

French theorist. Educated at Le Mans and La Flèche, he became a Minorite, entering upon his novitiate on 17 July 1611 and receiving full orders (after a course of theology and Hebrew in Paris) in 1613. He taught philosophy at Nevers, but soon returned to Paris, where, with other kindred spirits such as Descartes, Pascal (père), Roberval and Peiresc, he studied deeply both mathematics and music. He corresponded with Doni, Huygens and other learned men in Italy, England and Holland, and visited Italy three times (1640, 1641 and 1645).

Mersenne's most important work is his 'Harmonie universelle' (1636), which had been preceded by a smaller work, 'Traité de l'harmonie universelle' (1627), of which he published an epitome in Latin. 'Harmonie universelle', two folio volumes, with numerous illustrations, includes full descriptions of contemporary instruments. These are more important even than Cerone's great work as sources of information on music in the early 17th century, especially French music and musicians. His other musical treatises are 'Questions harmoniques' (1634), 'Les Préludes de l'harmonie universelle' (1634), 'Harmonicorum libri XII' (1635, enlarged edition 1648, with the names of three publishers, Baudry, Cramoisy and Robert Ballard) and 'De la nature des sons' (1635). F. G.

BIBL.—HELLMUT, LUDWIG, 'Marin Mersenne und seine Musiklehre' (Berlin, 1935).

LENOBLE, ROBERT, 'Mersenne, ou la naissance du mécanisme' (Paris, 1943).

MERSMANN, Hans (b. Potsdam, 6 Oct. 1891).

German musicologist, conductor and author. He studied philosophy and musical science at the Universities of Munich, Leipzig and Berlin, also received instruction in composition and conducting at the Stern Conservatory in Berlin. In 1914 he graduated Ph.D. with a thesis on early German opera ('Christian Ludwig Boxberg und seine Oper "Sardanapalus"'). Two years later his teacher, Hermann Kretzschmar, head of the Berlin Music-Historic Institute, made him his assistant. In 1917 Mersmann was commissioned to organize and take over the direction of the Archives for German folksong. In 1921 he was appointed a lecturer in musical science and in 1927 professor at the Technical University of Berlin. At the same time he joined the staff of the German Broadcasting Corporation and became head of the music department of the Deutschlandsender in 1932. After 1933 Mersmann lost all his posts, being unacceptable to the Nazis; but in 1946 he was appointed professor at the State High School for Music at Munich and in 1947 director of that of Cologne. He is a member of the committee of the I.S.C.M.

From 1924 to 1933 Mersmann was the editor of the musical magazine 'Melos', in which capacity he took a very active interest in the progress of the more advanced contemporary music. While in the service of the German Broadcasting Corporation he had an opportunity of furthering this aim. It is also revealed in some of his books, which include the following:

'Kulturgeschichte der Musik in Einzeldarstellungen' (Berlin, 1923-25).

1. Das deutsche Volkslied.

2. Beethoven.

3. Mozart.

4. Musik der Gegenwart.

'Grundlagen einer musikalischen Volksliedforschung' (Leipzig, 1923).

'Angewandte Musikästhetik' (Berlin, 1926).

'Musiklehre' (Berlin, 1929).

- 'Die moderne Musik seit der Romantik' (Potsdam, 1929).
 'Die Tonsprache der neuen Musik' (Mainz, 1930).
 'Das Musikseminar' (Leipzig, 1931).
 'Kammermusik' (Leipzig, 1932-34).

1. Die Kammermusik des 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts.
2. Beethoven.
3. Deutsche Romantik.
4. Europäische Kammermusik des 19. und 20. Jahrhunderts.

'Eine deutsche Musikgeschichte' (Berlin, 1934).

'Volklied und Gegenwart' (Potsdam, 1936).

'Musikhören' (Berlin, 1938).

(He has also written numerous articles in musical periodicals and some other literary works, as well as 'Die moderne Musik seit der Romantik' in Bücken's 'Handbuch der Musikwissenschaft'.)

K. G., adds.

MERULA, Tarquinio (b. ? Cremona, ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-17th-century composer. The facts of his life are to be gathered only from the title-pages of his compositions. His birth-place is never definitely given in these, but it is supposed to have been Cremona. He was maestro di cappella at the Church of Santa Maria at Bergamo in 1623, court and church organist in Warsaw in 1624, and in 1628 he was organist at Sant' Agata and maestro of the Cathedral at Cremona. In 1639 he resumed the office at Bergamo and in 1640 was maestro and organist of the Cathedral there. He belonged to the Bolognese academy of the Filomusi, and in 1652 was once more maestro and organist of the Cathedral at Cremona. At one time, before 1680, he held a court appointment at Florence.

Merula's works are interesting as early specimens of the use of voices and instruments in combination. They are:

- 'Canzoni a 4 per stromenti, lib. 1' (Venice, 1615).
 'Madrigali et altre musiche concertate a 1-5' (Venice, 1623).
 'Madrigaletti a 3, lib. 1', Op. 4 (Venice, 1624).
 'Madrigali a 4-8 voci, lib. 1', Op. 5 (Venice, 1624).
 'Motetti e sonate concertati, a 2-5 voci, lib. 1', Op. 6 (Venice, 1624).
 'Satiro, e Corsica, dialogo' (Venice, 1626).
 'Concerti spirituali . . . , a 2-5 voci, lib. 2' (Venice, 1628).
 'Canzoni, overe Sonate concertate per chiesa, lib. 2', Op. 12 (Venice, 1637).
 'Curtio precipitato et altri capricij, . . . , lib. 2', Op. 13 (Venice, 1638).
 'Canzoni da suonare a tre', Op. 9 (Venice, 1639).
 'Concerto decimo quinto . . . Messi, salmi, . . . concertati, a 2-12' (Venice, 1639).
 'Pegaso, salmi, motetti, . . . , a 2-5, lib. 3', Op. 11 (Venice, 1640).
 'Arpa Davidica . . . salmi et messa . . .', Op. 16 (Venice, 1640).
 'Canzoni da suonare a 2-3, lib. 4', Op. 17 (Venice, 1651).
 'Salmi et messa concertati a 3-4, lib. 3', Op. 18 (Venice, 1652).

Other works are in manuscript. The Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge and the R.C.M. contain a comic madrigal for three voices, 'Nominativo, hic, haec, hoc'.

J. A. F.-M.

MERULO (Merlotti¹), Claudio² (b. Correggio, [bapt. 8 Apr.] 1533; d. Parma, 4 May 1604).

¹ Entered in baptismal register of S. Quirino on 8 Apr. as son of Antonio and Giovanna Merlotti, which was the true form of his name.

² Also known as Claudio da Correggio.

Italian organist, teacher and composer. At the age of twenty-four, after competition with nine other candidates, he took his place at the second organ of St. Mark's, Venice. He had been appointed organist at Brescia in the previous year (17 Sept. 1556). Zarlino³ carries us back to a May evening four centuries ago, when we find him waiting on the Piazza of St. Mark till Vespers are over, that he may present "M. Claudio Merulo soavissimo organista del detto tempio" to Francesco della Viola⁴, who was visiting Venice, and then take them all to the house of old Adriaen Willaert, kept at home by the gout, yet holding a grand reception and ready to discuss with them the subjects of Zarlino's famous book. Merulo's salary was increased from time to time⁵, and he became first organist of St. Mark's in 1566. On 21 July 1574 the new French king, Henry III, was received at Venice with a play by Cornelio Frangipane, set to music by Merulo.

He set up as a publisher the same year⁶, and twelve years later (between 1578 and 1581) as a composer of motets and madrigals. Gardano printed in 1578 two books of 'Sacrae cantiones' (a 5) and in 1579 and 1580 respectively two books of madrigals (a 4 and a 3). The first and second books of motets (a 6) were not printed till 1583 and 1593 respectively. The third book of motets was not published till 1605, after the composer's death. A first book of four masses appeared in 1573 and 'Sacrorum concentuum 8-16, lib. 1' in 1594. Two masses (a 8 and a 12) and litanies (a 8) were published some years after his death.

After twenty-seven years' service Merulo left Venice, went first to Mantua and thence to Parma in 1584, as organist of the Steccata, or ducal chapel. There he lived sixteen years, was knighted by the duke and died at the age of seventy-one. The following letter was written at the time by one of his pupils to Ferrante Carli⁷:

According to your wish I send you some particulars of Sig. Claudio's death. On Sunday the 25th of April, St. Mark's Day, after playing the organ at Vespers in the Steccata, he enjoyed an evening walk before going home. In the night he was aroused by a pain in his right side, succeeded by great fever and violent sickness. The fever continued from day to day, giving him no rest even for a few minutes. The doctors, Sig. Cernidore and Cerati, his son-in-law, after using many remedies with little or no success, determined at last to give him a medicine with strong ingredients — rhubarb, etc.

³ 'Dimostrazioni harmoniche' (Venice, 1571). See Introduction.

⁴ Maestro di cappella to the Duke of Ferrara and an old pupil of Willaert.

⁵ Catelani (see Bibl.).
⁶ Editing madrigals by Verdelot and, as a partner with Betanio, a set of the same by Porta. Betanio joined him for only a short time, perhaps owing to an unexpected pressure of work at St. Mark's by the resignation of the other organist and delay in appointing another. Merulo published one set of madrigals (a 5) of his own.

⁷ G. Tiraboschi, 'Biblioteca Modenese', VI, i (Modena, 1786).

This was on Sunday, May 2nd. When the poor old man had taken the draught he cried out, "Alas! how cruelly these doctors have treated me"; for they had given him to understand it was merely a syrup. The effect was so severe that he died just as the clock struck 12 on the 4th of May. The Duke arranged the funeral, and had him crowned with laurel and ivy, these marks of respect giving great consolation to all. He was dressed as a Capuchin monk, music books were placed on his coffin, at each corner of which one of his scholars, clothed in black, held a lighted candle. They were D. Chris. Bora, M. Ant. Bertanelli, M. And. Salati, the fourth scarcely venturing to add his name, for he had only been under the good old man's care for a month, thanks first to his own gentleness and kindness, and next to that of our Sig. Christophero, who introduced me and entered me at S. Claudio's great school. . . . The Monday following, May 10th, the service took place in the Cathedral, when he was buried next to Cipriano [Rore], near the altar of St. Agatha. . . . We sang the Mass with double choir, one placed near the organ, the other on the opposite side. . . .

Your affectionate servant,

ALESSANDRO VOLPIUS.

PARMA, 14 May 1604.

Merulo's organ toccatas and ricercari¹, given to the world late in life, many published posthumously, cannot bring back to us the wonderful power of his playing, which could fascinate the most orthodox musicians and attract students from all parts of Italy, Germany and northern Europe. They compare favourably with other works of the period. Six vocal pieces are in Torchi's 'L' arte musicale in Italia', Vol. I, and four toccatas in Vol. III.

J. R. S.-B., adds.

BIBL.—CATELANI, A., 'Memoria della vita e delle opere di Claudio Merulo' (Milan, 1931).

EINSTEIN, ALFRED, 'The Italian Madrigal' (Princeton & Oxford, 1949), passim.

See also Caccini (G., collab.).

MERULO, Giacinto (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th–17th-century organist and composer, nephew of the preceding. He succeeded his uncle as court organist at Parma. One book of madrigals for 4 voices with one instrumental Canzone (Venice, 1623) is known to exist.

E. v. d. s.

MERULO, Giovanni Antonio (b. ?; d. ?)

Italian singer and composer. He was appointed a singer in the papal chapel in Rome on 12 Sept. 1551. In 1587 he was elected maestro di cappella for one year by the college of singers by order of Pope Sixtus V, being the first musician to hold this post, which before that time had been held by a prelate of the papal court, chosen by the pope.²

Méry, François Joseph. See Auber (lib.). Bizet (pf. pieces). Don Carlos (Verdi, lib.). Franck (C., 2 songs). Reyher ('Maitre Wolfram', opera). Verdi ('Don Carlos', lib.).

MÉSANGEAU (Mezangeau, Meschanson), René (b. Paris, ?; d. Paris, c. 1639).

French lutenist and composer. He was attached to the French court as ordinaire to the king's music. Some pieces by him are in the Bibliothèque Nationale de Paris, the library of Copenhagen (under the name of Meschanson), in a manuscript at Rostock, etc. "Gautier le vieux" composed the 'Tombeau' de Mésangeau in 1653 or later.

J. G. P.

BIBL.—LA LAURENCIE, L. DE, 'Les Luthistes' (Paris, 1928).

Article in 'Revue de Musicologie', Nov. 1923.

MESCHANSON. See MÉSANGEAU.

MESDAMES DE LA HALLE (Operetta).

See OFFENBACH.

Mesmer, Anton. See Bastien und Bastienne (Mozart).

MESOPOTAMIAN MUSIC. See IRAQIAN MUSIC.

MESSA DI VOCE (Ital.). The art of swelling out and diminishing the tone on a long-held note in singing.

MESSAGER, André (Charles Prosper) (b. Montluçon, 30 Dec. 1853; d. Paris, 24 Feb. 1929).

French conductor and composer. He studied at the École Niedermeyer in Paris and subsequently worked at harmony and composition under Saint-Saëns. In 1876 he won the gold medal of the Société des Compositeurs for a Symphony, which was performed the same year at the Châtelet concerts under the direction of Édouard Colonne. He also carried off the second Premier Prix at the Concours de la Ville de Paris with a cantata for chorus and orchestra entitled 'Prométhée enchaîné'.

Messenger's first effort as a writer for the stage was in connection with an unfinished comic opera by Firmin Bernicat, 'François les Bas-bleus', which he completed after the composer's death for production at the Théâtre des Folies-Dramatiques on 8 Nov. 1883. Two years later, at the same theatre, was brought out his 3-act operetta 'La Fauvette du temple', which was favourably received. His first real success, however, was 'La Béarnaise', a 3-act operetta given at the Bouffes-Parisiens in Dec. 1885, and in the following Oct. mounted at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, London, where, with Florence St. John and Marie Tempest in the principal parts, it achieved a lengthy run. To tunefulness was added a refinement and musicianship quite unusual in works of this class. It was followed by several works (see list below), but the next great success was 'La Basoche', a comic opera in 3 acts, produced at the Opéra-Comique on 30 May 1890.³ This marked a turning-point in Messenger's career. It was recognized as aiming at a higher standard; and, despite a certain lack of originality (which the Parisian critics invariably pointed out in Messenger's music), it was warmly welcomed as a pleasant contrast to the serious and often heavy works that had too long monopolized the repertory of the Opéra-Comique. An English version of 'La Basoche', written by Sir Augustus Harris and Eugène Oudin, was brought out in London at the Royal English Opera (now the Palace Theatre) on 3 Nov. 1891, with Esther Palliser, Ben Davies and David Bispham in the principal parts. It met with considerable success, and established its composer's reputation in London as a musician of ability, imagination and resource.

³ One of the intervening works, the ballet 'Les Deux Pigeons', was given in London, at Covent Garden, on 21 June 1906.

¹ 'Canzoni d' intavolatura, . . . lib. 1' (1592); lib. 2 (1606); lib. 3 (1611). 'Ricercari d' intavolatura . . . lib. 1' (1567); lib. 2 (1607); lib. 3 (1608). 'Messe d' intavolatura d' organo, lib. iv' (1568). 'Toccate d' intavolatura: . . . lib. 1' (1598); lib. 2 (1604).

² Haberl, 'Jahrbuch', 1891, p. 84.

His next important work was a comédie-lyrique on a Japanese subject, 'Madame Chrysanthème', founded upon Pierre Loti's novel of the same name, and performed at the inauguration of the Théâtre-Lyrique de la Renaissance on 30 Jan. 1893. This ambitious score was greatly admired for its "tasteful and elegant orchestration, the limpid clearness of its ensemble and the rare delicacy of its harmonies". At the same time it left to be desired, "even at the cost of less perfection of form, a higher degree of solidity, a little more individuality; in a word, greater freshness, novelty and individuality of melodic inspiration". 'Mirette' was specially written for the Savoy Theatre, London, and brought out there with fair success in 1894. 'Les P'tites Michu' (Bouffes-Parisiens, 1897) and 'Véronique' (Bouffes-Parisiens, 1898) were both received with much favour by the public, both in Paris and London, and the latter was also given in America during the winter of 1905. 'Véronique' is, in fact, with 'La Basoche', the best work ever produced by Messager and one of the best of French operettas.

Messager was for several years one of the conductors of the Paris Opéra-Comique. He was appointed joint Directeur de la Musique with Albert Carré, and Directeur Général in 1898. He filled the post of "Artistic Director" at the London Royal Opera, Covent Garden (1901-6). He then became associated with Bronsart as director of the Paris Opéra and occupied that position until his resignation in 1913. During his connection with Covent Garden many novelties were produced, some of which he himself conducted. These included Bunting's 'La Princesse Osra' (1902), Saint-Saëns's poème-lyrique 'Hélène' (1904), Leoni's 'L'Oracolo' (1905) and Gluck's 'Armide' (1906). He was succeeded there as musical director in 1907 by Percy Pitt. 'Monsieur Beaucaire', an English light opera based on Newton Booth Tarkington's novel, was produced at Birmingham and put on for a run at the Palace Theatre, London, on 19 Apr. 1919. 'Fortunio', the operetta of 1907, was based on Alfred de Musset's 'Le Chandelier'.

The following is a list of Messager's operettas, produced in Paris unless otherwise mentioned:

- 'La Fauvette du temple', Théâtre des Folies-Dramatiques, 1885.
- 'La Béarnaise', Théâtre des Bouffes-Parisiens, 12 Dec. 1885.
- 'Le Bourgeois de Calais', Folies-Dramatiques.
- 'Le Mari de la reine', Bouffes-Parisiens.
- 'La Basoche', Opéra Comique, 30 May 1890.
- 'Madame Chrysanthème', Théâtre-Lyrique de la Renaissance, 30 Jan. 1893.
- 'Miss Dollar', Nouveau Théâtre, 1893.
- 'Mirette', London, Savoy Theatre, 3 July 1894.
- 'Le Chevalier d'Harmental', Opéra-Comique, 1895.
- 'Les P'tites Michu', Bouffes-Parisiens, 16 Nov. 1897.
- 'Véronique', Bouffes-Parisiens, 10 Dec. 1898.
- 'Les Dragons de l'impératrice', Théâtre des Variétés, 1905.
- 'Fortunio', Opéra-Comique, 5 June 1907.
- 'Béatrice', Monte Carlo, 21 Mar. 1914.
- 'Monsieur Beaucaire', Birmingham, 7 Apr. 1919.
- 'La Petite Fonctionnaire', 1921.
- 'L'Amour masqué', 1923.
- 'Passionnement', 1926.
- 'Coup de roulis' (posth. publ. 1930).

He also produced the following ballets:

- 'Les Deux Pigeons', Opéra, 1886.
- 'Scaramouche', 1893.
- 'Le Chevalier aux fleurs', Théâtre Marigny, 1896.

The fairy spectacle 'Isoline' (Théâtre de la Renaissance, 1887) completes the list of his stage works.

Messager's wife, Dotie Davies (1859-1938), an Irishwoman, was also a composer, writing under the name of Hope Temple.

H. K., adds.

- BIBL.—AUGE-LARIBE, MICHEL, 'Messager, musicien de théâtre' (Paris, 1951).
- FÉVRIER, HENRY, 'André Messager: mon maître, mon ami' (Paris, 1948).

See Leroux (X., collab. in 'Montagne enchantée', incid. m.). Pugno (collab. in 'Chevalier aux fleurs', ballet).

MESSALINE (Opera). See LARA.

MESSCHAERT, Johannes (Martinus) (b. Hoorn, Holland, 22 Aug. 1857; d. Zürich, 9 Sept. 1922).

Dutch baritone singer. Beginning as an orchestral violinist, he made his first appearance as a singer when, literally at a moment's notice, he deputized for a man who had been suddenly taken ill as principal baritone in an operetta. This decided the course of his career, and he became a pupil of Stockhausen. In 1881 he returned to Holland and became professor at the Amsterdam Conservatory. Some years later he was so successful that Daniel de Lange started an a cappella choir consisting exclusively of Messchaert's pupils. With Julius Röntgen he then toured Germany and Holland, incidentally visiting London, giving many recitals.

In 1890, on account of his health, he settled at Wiesbaden, teaching at Dr. Hoch's Conservatory at Frankfurt o/M. Later he was attached to the High School for Music in Berlin and eventually went to Zürich, where he was professor at the Conservatory.

Messchaert's wide reputation as an artist of the first rank possessed of a voice of extensive range and exceptional beauty caused him to be invited to take leading parts in oratorio, and he was generally regarded as an unequalled interpreter of the part of Christ in Bach's St. Matthew Passion. When Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius' was performed at Düsseldorf in 1902 he took the bass part.

His pupil, Franziska Martienssen, published in 1914 a book on his methods with the simple of title 'Johan Messchaert', of which a second edition entitled 'Ein Beitrag zum Verständnis echter Gesangkunst' appeared in 1920.

H. A.

Messel, Oliver. See Sadler's Wells (Ballet).

MESSIAEN, Olivier (Eugène Prosper Charles) (b. Avignon, 10 Dec. 1908).

French organist and composer of half-Flemish, half-Provençal origin. He is the son of Pierre Messiaen, a professor of literature (one of the many French translators of Shakespeare), and Cécile Sauvage, the poetess who at his birth wrote 'L'Âme en bourgeon'. Most of Messiaen's childhood was spent at Grenoble, where his father was a teacher. There, in 1916 at the age of eight, Messiaen taught himself the pianoforte and began to compose. Later the family moved to Nantes, where Louis Vuillemin and Robert Lortat advised him to study at the Paris Conservatoire. This he entered as a child of eleven in 1919. His scholastic career lasted until 1930. His professors were Jean and Noël Gallon, Caussade, Esty, Marcel Dupré, Maurice Emmanuel and Paul Dukas. After winning the deuxième prix for harmony in 1924 he gained five premiers prix between 1926 and 1930: counterpoint and fugue (1926), accompaniment (1928), organ and improvisation (1929), history of music (1929), composition (1930). Privately he made a study of plain-song, Hindu rhythms, microtonal music and bird song.

In 1931 Messiaen was appointed organist at the Trinité in Paris, a post which he still holds (1954). The same year his first orchestral work, 'Les Offrandes oubliées', was included in the programme of the Straram concerts. In 1936 he was a co-founder (with Jolivet, Lesur and Baudrier) of the Jeune-France group which represented the vanguard musical tendencies in Paris at the time. The same year he was appointed professor both at the École Normale and the Schola Cantorum, posts which he held until the outbreak of war in 1939. In 1938 he was invited to play two movements from his 'La Nativité du Seigneur' for organ (1935) at the London I.S.C.M. Festival. On this visit he also played the complete work at St. Alban's Church, Holborn (25 June).

Messiaen passed the summer of 1939 in the Dauphiné, where he completed 'Les Corps glorieux' for organ. A few days later he was called to the French forces. He was captured by the Germans and held prisoner in Stalag VIII-A at Görlitz. During his captivity he composed the 'Quatuor pour la fin du temps' for violin, clarinet, cello and pianoforte. He gave the first performance of this with three of his compatriots in the prison camp on 15 Jan. 1941. Soon after he was repatriated and appointed professor of harmony at the Paris Conservatoire in 1942. On the liberation of Paris towards the end of 1944 he was found to be a paramount influence on the younger French composers and the cause of much critical argument. In Dec. 1945 he revisited London, playing his 'Visions de l'amen' for two pianofortes (1943) with his pupil Yvonne Loriod twice before invited audiences and repeating 'La Nativité du Seigneur' (St. Mark's, North Audley Street, 20 Dec.). He returned to England in the following summer to play in the 'Quatuor', included in the 1946 London I.S.C.M. Festival (10 July), and again in 1947 when he repeated the 'Visions de l'amen' with Yvonne Loriod at Cambridge (14 May) and attended the two London performances (18 May) of his 'Trois Petites Liturgies de la Présence Divine' (1944). In 1947, also, Messiaen was appointed professor of a new class at the Paris Conservatoire, for analysis, aesthetics and rhythm.

At the invitation of Kussevisky Messiaen visited the U.S.A. in the summer of 1949 as guest on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Centre at Tanglewood, joining Aaron Copland as teacher of composition. He returned there in 1950 to attend the first performance of his 'Turangalila-Symphonie' (1948) commissioned by Kussevisky (Boston, 2 Dec., conducted by Leonard Bernstein). Since the second world war he has travelled extensively in Europe for performances of his works. Outside England and France he has played the 'Visions de l'amen' (with Yvonne Loriod) in Brussels, Antwerp, Turin, Milan, Rome, Florence, Amsterdam, Hilversum, Prague, Vienna, Innsbruck, Budapest, Frankfurt o/M., Darmstadt, Barcelona and Madrid.

THE THEORIES.—Messiaen has never been reticent on the subject of his music. In addition to descriptive titles and emotional and picturesque explanations, he has written extensively on his technique of composition. In 1938 he issued a sort of manifesto, a small printed slip on which he outlined not only his mystical musical ends but also the technical means by which they were to be achieved:

The emotion and sincerity of musical work
Which shall be at the service of the dogmas of Catholic theology.

Which shall be expressed by melodic and harmonic means: the gradual augmentation of intervals, the chord of the dominant, pedal points, expanded ornaments and appoggiaturas.

Still more by rhythmic means: rhythms immediately preceded by their augmentation and sometimes increased by a short value (the addition of a half-unit).

Above all by modes of limited transpositions: chromatic modes for harmonic use, their strange colour deriving from the limited number of possible transpositions (2, 3, 4 and 6 according to the mode).

The subject theological? the best, for it comprises all subjects.

And the abundance of technical means allows the heart to expand freely.

The two-page author's note to 'La Nativité du Seigneur' expands this manifesto, showing the practical application of its technical part to the work it prefaces. The note preceding the 'Quatuor pour la fin du temps' contains a "Petite Théorie de mon langage rythmique" which codifies Messiaen's rhythmic ideas.

His technical theories are found developed and expounded in greater detail in 'Technique de mon langage musical' (1944), a treatise in two volumes, the second containing the musical examples — drawn almost entirely from Messiaen's own works. An introductory chapter extols melody as the musical element to which the others, rhythm and harmony, must remain subservient. The old rules governing harmony and form are not to be rejected: they must always be remembered, so as to be observed, expanded or increased by the addition of still older rules (those of plainsong and Hindu rhythms) or more recent ones (those deriving from Debussy and all contemporary music). There follow six chapters on rhythmic theory (ii: Hindu Rhythms. iii: Rhythms with added units. iv: Augmented and Diminished Rhythms. v: Non-Retrograde Rhythms. vi: Polyrhythmics and Rhythmic Pedals. vii: Rhythmic Notation). Chapter viii deals with Melody and Melodic Contours. This, the least scientific portion of the work, resembles more a book of musical recipes than theories. Here Messiaen turns a searchlight on his own melodic predilections. Somewhat arbitrarily he selects two descending intervals — the augmented fourth and the major sixth — as those of his choice. He quotes melodic formulae from Grieg, Debussy, Bartók, Mussorgsky, plainsong and Hindu music, and shows how they engender some of his own melodies. Chapter ix deals with Bird Song and Chapter x with Melodic Development. Chapters xi and xii deal with Musical Form. Chapter xiii with Debussy and added notes. Chapters xiv and xv with further harmonic and acoustic refinements and extended appoggiaturas. The next four chapters (xvi-xix) deal with various aspects of what Messiaen has termed "modes of limited transposition" (Mode 1, the whole-tone scale with its two possible transpositions; Mode 2 has, like the diminished-seventh chord, three possible transpositions; Mode 3 has, like the augmented-fifth chord, four possible transpositions; Modes 4, 5, 6 and 7, like augmented fourths, can be transposed six times). Chapter xx deals with Polymodality.

Since the appearance of this treatise Messiaen has been engaged on another, a 'Traité de rythme', as yet (1953) unfinished. An excerpt printed in a catalogue of his work, issued in 1949, which described him as "compositeur de musique et rythmicien", insists that the element separating his style from that of all other contemporary music is its rhythmic novelty.

In brief, his rhythm uses unequal time-values, augments the "movement-repose" principle to a group "anacrusis-accent-termination", uses added time-values and non-retrograde rhythmic groups; it also uses true rhythmic counterpoints, pedals, canons and asymmetric augmentations with several rhythmic identities (personnages) and an entire series of rhythmic augmentations and diminutions very different from classical augmentations and diminutions. Here is a new conception in regard to note-values, movement, dynamic and timbre.

THE MUSIC.—Messiaen's earliest published works already contain the shoots rather than the seeds from which the later luxurious musical growths have sprung. The eight 'Préludes' for pianoforte (1929) were published in 1930 at the instigation of Paul Dukas, who, so critical in regard to his own music, approved of these pieces to the extent of insisting that his own publishers should issue not one or two, but the complete set. They show, apart from an impressionism deriving from Debussy and a harmonic richness dear to Dukas himself, compositional processes which the composer has since developed and codified in his theoretical writings. The even earlier organ piece 'Le Banquet céleste' (1928, published 1934), twenty-five bars in all, is again typical of Messiaen in its religious subject, extremely slow tempo and novel registration. If Messiaen's first published orchestral piece, 'Les Offrandes oubliées' (1930), shows in its central portion rhythmic as well as harmonic indebtedness to Dukas's 'La Péri', it speaks, as a whole, a highly personal language. Similarly, the organ 'Diptyque' (1930) shows in its spacing and organ writing the influence of his other master, Marcel Dupré, yet the quiet final section is typical Messiaen and the prototype of a number of his finales ('Les Offrandes oubliées', 'L'Ascension', 'Quatuor pour la fin du temps'). In the organ 'Apparition de l'Église éternelle' (1932) an immense crescendo-diminuendo, Messiaen exploits ostinato with almost hypnotic effect. It offers an early example of the obsessional, quasi-oriental ostinati found throughout his music, inducing in some a state bordering on raptus and in others intense irritation. Messiaen's organ music culminates in 'La Nativité du Seigneur' (1935), a series of nine Christmas meditations, and 'Les Corps glorieux' (1939), in which several aspects of Messiaen's style are combined: in addition to striking melodic, harmonic and rhythmic innovations these pieces show a highly developed sense of tone-colour, yet remain organ music in conception and execution. The 'Messe de la Pentecôte' (1950) treats the instrument in a more bizarre manner.

Although it was as a composer of organ music that in pre-war years Messiaen's name first attracted attention, he had already composed a quantity of vocal music, of which the 'Poèmes pour Mi' (1936) and the 'Chants de terre et de ciel' (1938) are the most important. In his 'Technique' (1942) the composer draws attention to the fact that vocal music constitutes a good third of his output and that the two song cycles mentioned are particularly "true" in sentiment and typical of his musical manner.

Messiaen's captivity in Silesia in 1940-42 produced his one large-scale chamber work, the 'Quatuor pour la fin du temps', which lasts one hour and contains musical phrases derived from bird song. These are also to be found in the two succeeding pianoforte works, composed in Paris during the German occupation, the 'Visions de l'amen' (1943), for two pianofortes, also lasting one hour, and the 'Vingt Regards sur l'Enfant-Jésus' (1944) for pianoforte solo, a work which in its entirety lasts two and a half hours. Both these works are based on motto themes, the theological significance and musical treatment of which the composer propounds in prefaces.

Messiaen's strong feeling for timbre, already apparent in the registration of the organ pieces and in the scoring of the early orchestral pieces, is given full rein in the curious orchestration of the 'Trois Petites Liturgies de la Présence Divine' (1944), in which a unison soprano choir is accompanied by celesta, vibraphone, maracas, Chinese cymbals, gong, pianoforte, Ondes Martenot and strings. First performed in Paris after the occupation, but before the end of the war (21 Apr. 1945), this work caused a considerable stir, and other performances in Paris and abroad followed.

The composer has further exploited instrumental colour in his 'Turangalila-Symphony' (1948). This enormous work incorporates, as three of its ten movements, the 'Trois Tâlas' for pianoforte and orchestra which received one Paris performance early in 1948. Over and above the traditional wind and strings the work calls for a huge percussion section. In a note the composer says:

The three keyboard instruments, glockenspiel, celesta and vibraphone, have a special part similar to that of an East Indian gamelan as used in the islands of the Sonde (Java and Bali). The percussion, amply furnished, performs true rhythmic counterpoints. It comprises temple blocks, wood block, small cymbal, suspended cymbal, Chinese cymbal, gong, tambourine, triangle, maracas, side drum, suave drum, bass drum and eight tubular bells. In addition an Onde Martenot dominates the orchestra with its expressive voice. Finally, a part for pianoforte solo, which is extremely difficult, is designed to point up [diamanter] the orchestra with brilliance, with chord clusters and bird songs, thus making the 'Turangalila-Symphony' almost a concerto for pianoforte and orchestra.

In the works following the 'Turangalila-Symphony' Messiaen exercised a greater economy of means, but the a cappella 'Cinq Rechants' (1949) for twelve voices and the four pianoforte pieces (1949-50), although simpler in texture, contain bolder experiments in rhythm and dynamics than any of his previous music.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- APRAHAMIAN, FELIX, 'Radio Times' (27 May 1938).
 'Tempo' No. 9 (Dec. 1944).
 'The Listener' (20 July 1950).
 'World Review' (Sept. 1950, Oct. 1950).
 BURK, JOHN, Boston Symphony Orchestra Programme (Season 69, No. 7, 3 Dec. 1949), 'Turangalila-Symphony'.
 BURKAT, LEONARD, M.Q. (Apr. 1950).
 DENIS, PIERRE, 'L'Orgue', Nos. 56 & 57.
 DUFOURCOQ, NORBERT, 'La Musique d'orgue française de Jehan Titelouze à Jehan Alain' (Paris, 1941 & 1949).
 GAVOTY, BERNARD, 'Le Cas Messiaen' ('Les Études', Oct. 1945).
 'Le Silence d'Olivier Messiaen' ('Revue de Paris', June 1950).
 'Musique et mystique: le "cas" Messiaen' (Paris, 1945).
 GUTH, PAUL ('Le Figaro Littéraire', 14 Feb. 1953).
 JACOB, DOM CLÉMENT, 'Messiaen' ('Témoignages', No. 10, Aug. 1946).
 MESSIAEN, OLIVIER, Author's notes to all the major works.
 Preface to 'Maïna' by André Jolivet (Paris, 1946).
 'Technique de mon langage musical', 2 vols. (Paris, 1944).
 MESSIAEN, PIERRE, 'Images' (Paris, 1944).
 ROSTAND, CLAUDE, 'La Musique française contemporaine' (Paris, 1952).
 THOMSON, VIRGIL, 'New York Herald Tribune' (23 Sept. 1945).
 ZINKE-BIANCHINI, VIRGINIE, 'Olivier Messiaen: notice biographique; catalogue détaillé des œuvres éditées' (Paris, 1950).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

- 'Musique de scène pour Œdipe' (Sophocles) for Ondes Martenot (1942).

CHORAL WORKS

- Mass for 8 sopranos and 4 vns. (1933).
 'O sacrum convivium' for S.A.T.B. or soprano & organ (1937).
 'Chœurs pour une Jeanne d'Arc' for unaccomp. chorus (1941).
 'Trois Petites Liturgies de la Présence Divine' for women's voices & orch. (1944).
 'Cinq Rechants' for 3 S. 3 A. 3 T. 3 B. (1949).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Fugue, D mi. (1928).
 'Le Banquet eucharistique' (1928).
 'Simple Chant d'une âme' (1930).
 'Les Offrandes oubliées' (1930).
 'Le Tombeau resplendissant' (1931).
 'Hymne au Saint Sacrement' (1932).
 'L'Ascension' (1934).
 'Trois Petites Liturgies de la Présence Divine' (1944).
 'Turangalila-Symphonic' (1948).¹

VOICE AND ORCHESTRA

- 'Poèmes pour Mi' for soprano (1937).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- 'Quatuor pour la fin du temps' for vn., clar., cello & pf. (1941).
 'Le Mort du nombre' for soprano, tenor, vn. & pf. (1930).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- 'Thème et variations' (1932).
 'Fantaisie' (1933).

ONDES MARTENOT

- 'Fête des belles eaux' for 6 Ondes Martenot (1937).
 'Deux Monodies en quarts de ton' (1938).
 (See also Incidental Music.)

¹ Incorporating 'Trois Tâlas' (1947).

PIANOFORTE SOLO

- ' La Dame de Shalott ', after Tennyson (1917).
- ' La Tristesse d'un grand ciel bleu ' (1925).
- 8 Preludes (1929).
- ' Fantaisie burlesque ' (1932).
- ' Pièce pour le tombeau de Paul Dukas ' (1935).
- ' Rondeau ' (1949).
- ' Vingt Regards sur l'Enfant Jésus ' (1944).
- ' Mode de valeurs et d'intensité ' (1949).
- ' Neumes rythmiques ' (1949).
- ' Île de feu ', I (1950).
- ' Île de feu ', II (1950).

TWO PIANOFORTES

- ' Visions de l'amen ' (1943).

ORGAN MUSIC

- ' Esquisse modale ' (1927).
- ' Variations écossaises ' (1928).
- ' Le Banquet céleste ' (1928).
- ' L'Hôte aimable des âmes ' (1928).
- ' Diptyque ' (1930).
- ' Apparition de l'Église éternelle ' (1932).
- ' L'Ascension ' (1933).
- ' La Nativité du Seigneur ' (1935).
- ' Les Corps glorieux ' (1939).
- ' Messe de la Pentecôte ' (1950).
- ' Le Livre d'orgue ' (1951).

SONGS

- ' Deux Ballades de Villon ' (1921).
- ' Trois Mélodies ' (1930).
- ' Vocalise ' (1935).
- ' Poèmes pour Mi ' (1936) (see also Voice and Orchestra [scored 1937]).
- ' Chants de terre et de ciel ' (1938).
- ' Harawi, chant d'amour et de mort ' (1945).

DIDACTIC WORKS

- ' Vingt Leçons de solfèges modernes ' (1933).
- ' Vingt Leçons d'harmonie ' (1939).
- ' Technique de mon langage musical ' (1944).
- ' Traité de rythme '.

F. A. (ii).

MESSIAH.¹ Oratorio by Handel; words selected from Holy Scripture by Charles Jennens.² Composition begun 22 Aug. 1741; first part completed 28 Aug.; second part, 6 Sept.; third part, 12 Sept.; instrumentation, etc., filled in, 14 Sept.; in all twenty-four days only. First performed (during Handel's sojourn in Ireland) in the Music Hall, Fishamble Street, Dublin, for the benefit of the Society for relieving Prisoners, the Charitable Infirmary and Mercer's Hospital, 13 Apr. 1742. First performed in England at Covent Garden Theatre, 23 Mar. 1743. After the original performance Handel revised and rewrote much of the work, which was published in 1767.

G.

¹ See also Arne (4, 1st perf. in Germany).

MESSIDOR. Opera in 3 acts, with a prologue, by Bruneau. Libretto by Émile Zola. Produced Paris, Opéra, 19 Feb. 1897. 1st perf. abroad, Brussels, 10 Feb. 1898.

MESSING, Frederick. See HORN, p. 372.

MESSIRSMID (Messerschmied), Wallyenty (b. Cieszyn, ?; d. ?).

Polish 15th-century organist. He was famous at Cracow for his "wonderful playing" (c. 1481).

C. R. H.

¹ Not 'The Messiah'.

² The story that the compilation was really made by Jennens's chaplain, one Pooley, is now discredited.

MESSNER, Joseph (b. Schwaz, Tyrol, 27 Feb. 1893).

Austrian organist, musicologist and composer. He studied first at Innsbruck University and later at the Musical Academy of Munich, where he devoted himself particularly to the organ, conducting and composition, the last under Friedrich Klose. In 1922 he was appointed cathedral organist at Salzburg, where he advanced in 1926 to the dignity of archiepiscopal Domkapellmeister. In 1931 he was made an officer of the French Académie des Beaux-Arts and in 1932 an Austrian hon. professor. He has conducted the cathedral performances at Salzburg at each festival there since 1926, and has thus performed an international repertory of some 100 sacred choral works, including his revival of the Mass by Orazio Benevoli written for the consecration of the cathedral in 1628. He is director of the church music seminary attached to the Salzburg Mozarteum. Among his compositions, which comprise some 60 works, secular music predominates, but as a scholar he has brought forward much old church music, and he edited two early works by Bruckner, the "Windschaag" and "Kronstorf" Masses dating from 1842 and 1844 respectively, as well as a collection entitled 'Alte Salzburger Meister' (Bernardi, Caldara, Bonamico, Michael Haydn, Leopold Mozart, etc.).

Among Messner's chief works are the following:

- Biblical opera 'Hadassa' (Aachen, 1925).
- Opera 'Ines' (after Theodor Körner), Op. 35.
- Opera 'Agnes Bernauer' (after Hebbel), Op. 39.
- 5 Masses.
- 'Te Deum' (Salzburg, 1935).
- Motets for the whole church year.
- 'Das Leben' for chorus & orch. (Duisburg, 1925).
- 'Symphonische Gesänge' for chorus & orch. (Mulheim, 1927).
- 'Die vier letzten Dinge' for chorus & orch. (after Angelus Silesius), Op. 27.
- Symphony No. 1, C mi. (Bochum, 1925).
- Symphony No. 2, F mi. (Duisburg, 1926).
- Symphony No. 3 (MS), Op. 58.
- 'Symphonische Festmusik' (Salzburg, 1937).
- 'Rondo giocoso' for orch. (Essen, 1942).
- 'Sinfonietta' for pf. & orch. (Duisburg, 1924).
- Vn. Concerto, Op. 61.

H. R.

MESTO (Ital. = "sadly"). A term used twice by Beethoven, in the pianoforte Sonata Op. 10 No. 3 and in the slow movement of the string Quartet Op. 59 No. 1. The slow movement of the first of these is inscribed Largo e mesto and of the second Adagio molto e mesto.

J. A. F.-M.

Mestre, Apelles. See Granados (5 libs.; 'Miel de Alcarria', incid. m.; 'Ellsende' for pf. & orch.).

MESTRINO, Niccolò (b. Milan, 1748; d. Paris, Sept. 1790).

Italian violinist and composer. Having begun life as a street player, he entered the service of Prince Esterházy and later that of Count Erdődy in Hungary. Undergoing imprisonment for some foolish prank, he occupied the period of his confinement by perfecting his technique. He went to Paris in 1786 and performed with marked success at the Concert Spirituel. Becoming an established teacher in Paris, he was appointed leader of the Italian Opera orchestra in 1789. His known compositions are twelve concertos for violin and orchestra, duos for two violins, sonatas for violin and bass, and studies for the violin alone.¹

E. H.-A.

METAL XYLOPHONE. See VIBRA-PHONE.

METALLO, Grammatio (b. Bisacca, Naples, 1541; d. ? Venice, ?).

Italian composer. He appears to have been living at his birthplace in 1577. In 1602 he was at Cairo, after a journey to the Holy Land, where he finished his book of 'Ricerari' in 2 parts (note on title-page), published in 1603 at Venice, where he was maestro di cappella at the church of San Marcuola, still holding that post in 1610. He was still living at Venice in 1615.²

Metallo composed masses, motets, madrigals and other church music, 'Villanelle alla napoletana', and one 'Moresca' (1592), 'Canzoni alla francese' for instruments, Book iv (1594), and the above-mentioned 'Ricerari', "to play and sing", which appeared in many editions until 1685. The dedication mentioned by Eitner as signed at Alexandria, 15 Sept. 1601, the writer has been unable to trace.

E. v. d. s.

METAMORPHOSIS. See TRANSFORMATION.

MÉTAPHONE. See MUSTEL.

METAPHOR ARIA (or Parable Aria).

A useful term for a type of aria, mainly operatic, cultivated in the 18th century, especially in the librettos of Zeno and Metastasio, where certain abstract conceptions are illustrated by concrete images resembling them. The music accompanying such words usually illustrated the poet's verbal image. Thus in the air "As when the dove" in Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' the expression of love is not only compared to the cooing of a turtle-dove, but the music is actually made to produce a cooing sound. This kind of aria, of course, lent itself admirably to parody once it had fallen in conventionality and exaggeration. The classic example of such a parody is Fiordiligi's aria "Come scoglio" in "Così fan tutte", where unwavering fidelity in love is likened to the firmness of a rock in a raging sea. Da Ponte and Mozart here satirize what Metastasio would have done in all seriousness.

E. B.

Metastasio (actually Trapassi'), Pietro (Antonio Domenico Bonaventura) (b. Rome, 3 Jan. 1698; d. Vienna, 12 Apr. 1782).

Italian poet and librettist. He studied the classics, philosophy and law, and took minor orders in the Church. His 'Poesie', including 'Giustino', a tragedy written at the age of fourteen, were published at Naples in 1717. He enjoyed the favour and protection of the singer Marianna Benti-Bulgarelli, known as "La Romanina", who was rich, married and considerably older than he. She released him from legal studies and had him taught music by Porpora, and it was for her that in 1723 he wrote his first full-length opera, 'Didone abbandonata', set by Sarro and performed at Naples in 1724. Within a few years his fame had reached Vienna and, at the instigation of Apostolo Zeno, the late court poet, the Emperor Charles VI offered him that post. This caused a breach in the relationship with "La Romanina", who wished to accompany him, which he forbade. When she died she left her fortune to him, but he renounced it in favour of her husband. He arrived in Vienna in 1730 and remained there till his death, living with his friend Martines, master of ceremonies to the papal nuncio.³ His verses, to be sung by the young archduchesses, were set to music by the court composers, Reutter, Predieri, Caldara or Bonno. He was himself very musical, played, sang and composed (Cappi publishing his 36 'Canzoni' for 3 voices). The charm, grace and sweetness of the verse in his librettos induced composers to overlook the absence of contrast and strong passion, and some of them were set as many as sixty or seventy times. His dramatic output consists of 7 oratorios, about 40 smaller pièces de circonstance and 27 drammi per musica.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BURNEY, C., 'Life and Letters of Metastasio', 3 vols. (1796).
 CALLEGARI, M., 'Il melodramma e P. Metastasio' (Riv. Mus. It., 1919-20).
 DELLA CORTE, A., 'Appunti sull' estetica musicale di P. Metastasio' (ibid., 1921).
 GABRICI, E., 'Metastasio a Napoli' (Naples, 1918).
 HILLER, J. A., 'Über Metastasio und seine Werke' (1786).
 MATTEI, CAV., 'Memorie per servire alla vita di Metastasio e di Jomelli' (1785).
 ROLLAND, ROMAIN, 'Metastasio, the Forerunner of Gluck', in 'A Musical Tour through the Land of the Past' (London, 1922).
 RUSSO, LUIGI, 'Metastasio' (1921).
 STENDHAL, 'Vie de Haydn, Mozart et Métastase', new ed. by D. Müller (Paris, 1914).
 WOTQUENNE, A., 'Alphabetisches Verzeichnis der Stücke in Versen aus den dramatischen Werken von Zeno, Metastasio und Goldoni' (Leipzig, 1905).
 ZITO, M., 'Studio su Pietro Metastasio' (1904).

Settings of Metastasio's librettos:

- 'Achille in Sciro' (1736), 1st setting by Caldara. See also Chiarini. Corselli. Gassmann. Hasse. Jommelli (2 settings). Leo. Naumann (1). Paisiello. Pugnani. Sarro.
 'Adriano in Siria' (1731), 1st setting by Caldara. See also Bach (J. C., 38). Cherubini. Ciampi (V. L.). Colla. Duni (E. G.). Galuppi. Giacomelli. Giai. Graun (3). Hasse. Holzbauer. Insaugine. Lampugnani. Pergolesi. Sarti. Scarlatti (6).
 'Alcide al bivio' (1760), 1st setting by Hasse. See also Paisiello. Righini.
 'Alessandro nell' Indie' (1729), 1st setting by Vinci. See also Bach (J. C., 38). Bertoni. Brivio. Cherubini. Cimarosa. Corri (1). Corselli. Duni (E. G.). Galuppi. Gatti (L.). Gluck ('Poro'). Handel (do.). Hasse ('Cleofide'). Holzbauer. Jommelli. Koželuh. Naumann (1). Neukomm (?). Pérez (D.). Piccinni (2 settings). Porpora ('Poro'). Sacchini. Scarlatti (6). Traetta. Vivaldi (?). Wagenseil (G. C.).
 'Amor prigioniero, L' (1741), 1st setting by Reutter.
 'Antigono' (1744), 1st setting by Hasse. See also Cafaro. Conforto. Durán. Galuppi. Gluck. Jommelli. Lampugnani. Paisiello. Piccinni. Traetta. Zingarelli.

¹ A. M. Clarke's 'Biographical Dictionary of Fiddlers' (London, 1896).

² According to Romano Micheli ('Musica vaga . . .') who gives his age at that time as seventy-four.

³ "Metastasio" = trapassamento, or transition, is a play on Trapassi.

⁴ For further details see MARTINES (MARIANNE).

- 'Artaserse' (1730), 1st setting by Vinci. See also Arne (1). Bach (J. C., 38). Bertoni. Brivio. Cherubini. Cimarosa. Duni (E. G.). Galuppi. Gasparini (Q.). Giordani (T.). Gluck. Graun (3). Handel ('Arsace', ?). Hasse. Isouard. Jommelli. Lampugnani. Manfredini. Piccinni. Scarlatti (6). Terradellas. Vinci (L.).
- 'Asile d'amore'. See Hasse. Schicht.
- 'Astraea placata' (1739), 1st setting by Predieri. See also Breunich.
- 'Ateneide, L' (1762), 1st setting by Bonno.
- 'Attilio Regolo' (1740), 1st setting by Hasse.
- 'Augurio di felicità, L' (cantata) (1749), 1st setting by Reutter.
- 'Betulia liberata, La' (cantata) (1734), 1st setting by Reutter. See also Bernasconi (Andrea). Mozart.
- 'Catone in Utica' (1727), 1st setting by Vinci. See also Bach (J. C., 38). Ciampi (V. L.). Duni (E. G.). Gassmann. Graun (3). Handel. Hasse. Hopken. Jommelli. Leo. Paisiello. Piccinni. Vivaldi. Winter.
- 'Cinesi, Le' (1735), 1st setting by Reutter. See also Conforto. Gluck. Holzbauer.
- 'Ciro riconosciuto' (1736), 1st setting by Caldara. See also Cocchi (G.). Duni (E. G.). Galuppi. Hasse. Jommelli. Leo. Piccinni. Rinaldo di Capua.
- 'Clemenza di Tito, La' (1734), 1st setting by Caldara. See also Adolphi. Ciampi (V. L.). Clemenza di Tito (Mozart). Cocchi (G.). Galuppi. Gluck. Grua (C. P.). Hasse ('Tito Vespasiano'). Holzbauer. Jommelli. Leo. Mozart (altered by Mazzola). Naumann (1). Ottani. Pérez (D.). Sarti. Scarlatti (6). Veracini (F. M.). Wagenseil (G. C.).
- 'Cleofide'. See Agricola (J. F.).
- 'Contesa de' numi, La' (1729), 1st setting by Vinci. See also Gluck.
- 'Corona, La' (1765), 1st setting by Gluck.
- 'Danza, La' (cantata) (1744), 1st setting by Bonno. See also Gluck. Hasse.
- 'Demetrio' (1732), 1st setting by Caldara. See also Cherubini. Galuppi. Gai. Gluck. Guglielmi (P. A.). Hasse (later 'Cleonice'). Jommelli. Leo (2 settings). Paisiello. Pérez (D.). Pescetti. Piccinni. Scarlatti (6). Vivaldi (?). Wagenseil (G. C.).
- 'Démofonte' (1733), 1st setting by Caldara. See also Bertoni. Boroni. Brivio. Cherubini ('Démophon'). Ciampi (F.). Duni (E. G.). Federici ('L' usurpatore innocente'). Galuppi. Gatti (L.). Gluck. Graun (3). Hasse. Horn (C. E.). 'Dirce' (Eng.). Jommelli (2 versions). Kozeluh. Lampugnani. Leo. Manna. Paisiello. Pérez (D.). Piccinni. Portugal. Pugnani. Traetta. Vahhal. Vento (M.). Vogel (J. G.). 'Démophon'.
- 'Didone abbandonata' (1724), 1st setting by Sarro. See also Brunetti (Giuseppe). Cherubini. Duni (E. G.). Fiorini. Galuppi. Hasse. Holzbauer (in Ger.). Insanguine. Jommelli (3 versions). Lampugnani. Manna. Paer. Paisiello. Piccinni. Porpora. Reissiger. Sacchini. Sarro. Terradellas. Traetta. Zoppis.
- 'Egeria'. See Hasse.
- 'Endimione'. See Hasse. Jommelli.
- 'Enea ne gli Elisi'. See Fux.
- 'Eroe cinese, L' (1752), 1st setting by Bonno. See also Cimarosa. Galuppi. Giordani (T.). Hasse. Rauzzini (V.). Sacchini.
- 'Ezio' (1728), 1st setting by Auletta. See also Bertoni. Broschi. Galuppi. Gluck. Graun (3). Guglielmi (P. A.). Handel. Hasse. Jommelli (4 versions). Lampugnani. Leo. Porpora. Scarlatti (6). Traetta.
- 'Festa cinese' (see 'Cinesi').
- 'Gara, La' (1755). 1st setting by Reutter.
- 'Gioas, re di Giuda' (oratorio) (1735). 1st setting by Reutter. See also Bach (J. C., 38, opera).
- 'Giuseppe riconosciuto' (oratorio) (1733). 1st setting by Porcile. See also Bonno. Hasse.
- 'Grazie vendicate, Le' (1735). 1st setting by Caldara.
- 'Inverno, L' (cantata). 1st setting by Wagenseil.
- 'Ipemestra' (1744). 1st setting by Hasse. See also Cafaro. Duni (E. G.). Feo. Fortunati. Galuppi. Giacomelli. Gluck. Jommelli. Martin y Soler. Morlacchi (altered by Stefano Scattizi). Naumann (1). Paisiello. Piccinni. Sarti.
- 'Isacco' (oratorio) (1740). 1st setting by Predieri. See also Dittersdorf. Martines.
- 'Isola disabitata, L' (1752). 1st setting by Bonno. See also Arne (1, adapt. Murphy). Beck (F., ? opera).
- Benda (3). Haydn. Holzbauer. Jommelli. Ouseley. Pérez (D.). Rota (aria). Spontini. Traetta.
- 'Issipile' (1731). 1st setting by Conti. See also Bioni. Cocchi (G.). Ellerton. Errichelli. Feo. Galuppi. Gassmann. Gluck. Hasse. Holzbauer. Porpora. Scarlatti (6).
- 'Lucio Silla' (altered by M.). See Mozart.
- 'Morte d'Abel, La' (oratorio). 1st setting by Reutter. See also Arne (1).
- 'Natale di Giove, Il' (1740). 1st setting by Bonno. See also Hasse.
- 'Nitteti' (1756). 1st setting by Conforto. See also Bertoni. Gatti (L.). Hasse. Holzbauer. Jommelli. Piccinni. Poissl (Ger. opera). Traetta.
- 'Olimpiade, L' (1733). 1st setting by Caldara. See also Arne (1). Brivio. Brusa. Cafaro. Cimarosa. Donizetti. Duni (E. G.). Federici. Galuppi. Gassmann. Gatti (L.). Giardini (pasticcio). Guglielmi (P. A.). Hasse. Jommelli. Lampugnani. Leo. Logroscino. Manfredini. Minoia. Mozart (canzonetta for 3 voices & 3 basset horns). Mysliveček. Paisiello. Pergolesi. Piccinni (2 settings). Poissl (Ger. opera). Reichardt (J. F.). Sacchini. Sarti. Scarlatti (6). Traetta. Vivaldi. Wagenseil (G. C.).
- 'Orti esperidi, Gli' (1721). See Porpora.
- 'Pace fra la virtù e la bellezza, La' (1738). 1st setting by Predieri. See also Adolphi. Bioni.
- 'Palladio conservato, Il' (1735). 1st setting by Reutter.
- 'Parnaso accusato e difeso, Il' (1738). 1st setting by Reutter. See also Breunich.
- 'Parnaso confuso, Il' (1765). 1st setting by Gluck.
- 'Partenope' (1767). 1st setting by Hasse. See also Handel. Martin y Soler.
- 'Partenza, La' (canzonetta) (1749). Music by M. himself.
- 'Passione di Gesù Cristo, La' (1730). 1st setting by Caldara. See also Morlacchi. Salieri.
- 'Re pastore, Il' (1751). 1st setting by Bonno. See also Agnesi (M. T.). Galuppi. Giardini. Giordani (T.). Gluck. Hasse. Hopken. Jommelli. Lampugnani. Mozart. Nichelmann. Piccinni. Rush ('Royal Shepherd'). Sarti. Uttini.
- 'Rispettosa tenerezza, La' (1750). 1st setting by Reutter.
- 'Ritrosia disarmata'. See Schicht.
- 'Romolo ed Ersilia' (1765). 1st setting by Hasse.
- 'Ruggiero' (1771). 1st setting by Hasse.
- 'Sant' Elena al Calvario' (oratorio). See Hasse. Martines.
- 'Semiramide riconosciuta' (1729). 1st setting by Vinci. See also Araia. Cocchi (G.). Galuppi. Gluck. Graun (3). Hasse. Jommelli. Lampugnani. Meyerbeer. Pérez (D.). Porpora. Sacchini. Salieri. Terradellas.
- 'Siface, re di Numidia' (1723). 1st setting by Feo. See also Galuppi. Hasse ('Viriate'). Leo. Porpora.
- 'Siroe' (1726). 1st setting by Sarro. See also Conforto. Errichelli. Galuppi. Giardini. Handel. Hasse. Lampugnani. Manna. Piccinni. Porpora. Raupach (H. F.). Sarti. Scarlatti (6). Starzer (ballet m., with Raupach). Traetta. Vivaldi.
- 'Sogno, Il' (1756). 1st setting by Reutter.
- 'Sogno di Scipione, Il' (1735). 1st setting by Predieri. See also Hasse. Mozart.
- 'Temistocle' (1736). 1st setting by Caldara. See also Bach (J. C., 38). Durán. Jommelli. Leo. Porpora.
- 'Tributo di rispetto e d'amore, Il' (1754). 1st setting by Reutter.
- 'Trionfo d'Amore, Il' (1765). 1st setting by Caldara & Gassmann.
- 'Trionfo di Clelia, Il' (1762). 1st setting by Hasse. See also Gluck. Vahhal. Jommelli. Portugal.
- 'Vero omaggio, Il' (1743). 1st setting by Reutter. See also Hertel (J. W.).
- 'Virtuosa emulazione, La' (cantata) (1751). 1st setting by Reutter.
- 'Zenobia' (1740). 1st setting by Predieri. See also Albinoni. Cocchi (G.). Dieren (extract). Hasse. Piccinni. Porpora.
- See also* Angiolini (friend). Apell (canzonets). Beethoven (5 songs & canon). Davies (sisters, ode for). Glover (J. W., 2 operas). Gluck (arias in 'Innocenza giustificata'). 'Porc' [see 'Alessandro']. Gounod (song). Libretto. Lucas (Chas., 'Regicide', opera). Maria Antonia Walpurgis (lib. altered for). Mele (2 Spanish operas). Mozart (17 concert arias, 4 voc. trios). Rossini (2 songs). Schubert (10 songs). Wellesz (cantata for voice & orch.).

METCALFE, Susan. See CASALS.

METHESSEL, Albert (Gottlieb) (b. Stadt Ilm, Thuringia, 6 Oct. 1785; d. Heckenbeck, 22 Mar. 1869).

German composer. He became Kammermusik at Rudolstadt in 1810 and was Hofkapellmeister at Brunswick in 1832-42, where he had succeeded Wiedebein. He published a large number of songs of a popular type, and partsongs for male voices; some of his productions, as for instance 'Kriegers Abschied', 'Rheinweilied' and 'Deutscher Ehrenpreis', were popular. He wrote an oratorio, 'Das befreite Jerusalem'. Of an opera, 'Der Prinz von Basra', attributed to him, no contemporary records are to be traced. J. A. F.-M., rev.

MÉTHODE DE CHANTER. See GOÛT DU CHANT.

METNER. See MEDTNER.

METRE. See ACCENT. RHYTHM. TIME, sub-section METRE.

METREIANO.

METRIGRANO. } See NASCO.

METRONOME (Fr. métronome; Ger. Metronom, Taktmesser; from the Gr. μέτρον, "a measure" and νόμος, "a law"). An instrument for determining the pace at which a musical work is, or is to be, performed.

The earliest method of measuring small intervals of time was by using the beat of the human pulse, but by the end of the 16th century Galileo had established the laws of vibration of pendulums and realized the possibilities of some form of pendulum as a time-keeper. There is indeed the famous story of his timing the swinging of a hanging lamp, disturbed by the draught, in the Cathedral of Pisa, using his pulse and demonstrating to himself the isochronism of the pendulum, as it is called, i.e. that if the arc of swing is not too great, a pendulum of invariable length accomplishes equal swings in equal times until its motion is reduced to rest by friction with the air. He also established the important law that the times of vibration of different simple pendulums are proportional to the square roots of their lengths. After his death his scheme for a pendulum time-marker was discovered among his papers.

The possibilities of the pendulum as a time-marker in music seem first to have been envisaged by Thomas Mace who, in 'Musick's Monument' (1676) suggested that one could keep time by means of a "bullet or any round piece" attached to a thread; but it was left to Étienne Loulié in 'Éléments ou principes de musique, mis dans un nouvel ordre' (Paris, 1696) to improve on the bullet attached to a cord by giving instructions how to shorten or lengthen the cord at pleasure to get different degrees of velocity. His work did not attract much attention, and in the next fifty years we find a number of similar suggestions by, among others, the French physicist Joseph Sauveur and the Englishman Joseph Tans'ur, whose treatise entitled 'A New Musical Grammar' contains a section on "the doctrine of pendulums applied to music" (1746).

The brothers Weber were two famous scientists whose book 'Die Akustik' long remained the standard treatise on the subject. One of them (Gottfried) advocated the carrying of a simple pendulum upon the cord of which different tempos were indicated by knots, the whole being sufficiently small when coiled up to go in the pocket. Nevertheless, a simple pendulum is inconveniently long for this purpose, when extended; for example, one to beat seconds has to be nearly 40 ins. long. This led inventors to consider some form of compound pendulum as an alternative.

We have noted that the simple pendulum — to which the law deduced by Galileo applies — consists of a mass, which can be of any value, suspended by a thin cord, i.e. one which exerts no constraint upon the pendulum and is without mass. Theory requires in fact that all the mass of the system shall be concentrated in the bob. In the compound pendulum this is not so. It commonly takes the form of a steel bar near one end of which a sphere of metal is attached. The time of swing about any point along the bar suitably supported of such a pendulum depends on a number of factors of which the principal one is the distance of the point of suspension from the centre of gravity of the system. At the beginning of the 19th century Captain Kater performed some experiments, famous in science, on such a pendulum, which had two masses attached to the beam on opposite sides of the centre of gravity, one fixed and one which could be set over a range of positions by a fastening screw. Whether this inspired the form which the metronome finally took is uncertain, but the physical form of Kater's pendulum and Maelzel's metronome are remarkably similar though different in size.

Before we pass on to Maelzel, however, the effort of Winkel must be mentioned. His compound pendulum for musical time-marking was in existence in Amsterdam in 1815, where Johann Maelzel saw it on a visit. The latter had been considering the idea of a chronometer for music for some time and was struck by the ingenuity of Winkel's device. Returning to Paris, he made a copy of the instrument he had seen, merely adding a scale of divisions, and under the name of Metronome he patented the device. A law-suit ensued which finally gave the credit to Winkel, but too late, as Maelzel had already set up a factory and sold many instruments under his name. In fact, to this day, though the patent must long have lapsed, the apparatus still bears the latter's name.

The metronome, as originally and even yet manufactured, is a pendulum formed of a flat steel reed about 7 ins. long with a pivot about $1\frac{1}{2}$ ins. from its lower end, which also carries a fixed mass of lead. The pivot and lead mass are inside the lower portion of a pyramidal case, which also contains the clockwork and escapement by which the pendulum, set in motion, is maintained against friction without its natural time of swing being interfered with, in the same fashion as in a pendulum clock. The escapement also provides the tick, the noise by which one can count the beats of the pendulum. The adjustable weight is at the upper end, is of brass with a spring which grips the reed and comes to rest on it at places determined by notches on the reed. The position of these is fixed empirically by comparison with a chronometer; timing the beats and the number of these to each minute is indicated on the case behind the corresponding notch. The range covered is from 40 to about 200 per minute. The composer indicates by the formula "M.M. — a number" the tempo which he desires; for example, he may write M.M. (which stands for Maelzel's Metronome) $\text{♩} = 60$, which means that he wants 60 minims in a minute.

Modifications of the original metronome are patented from time to time. Now that we have electric clocks driven at a standard rate by electric mains of controlled frequency, there seems to be no reason why an instrument ticking at a controlled frequency, without a pendulum, should not be constructed. At present, however, the string pendulum or the original form of metronome persists. Perhaps, indeed, it is unnecessary to look for anything more precise for musical purposes, seeing that individual performers and conductors often interpret the composer's intentions as to tempo in an unfettered spirit.

E. G. R.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BORREL, E., 'Les Indications métronomiques laissées par les auteurs français du 18^e siècle' (Revue de Musicologie, IX, Paris, 1928).
 'Encyclopédie de la musique et dictionnaire du Conservatoire' (Paris, 1925), II, 1, pp. 323-32. (For detailed account of the use of the metronome.)
 HARDING, R. E. M., 'Origins of Musical Time and Expression' (Oxford, 1938), chap. i (General history, original sources & bibliography).
 HARRISON, J. T., 'A New Metronome' (Proc. Mus. Ass., Vol. XX, 1893).
 THAYER, ALEXANDER WHELOCK, 'The Life of Ludwig van Beethoven', ed. H. E. Krehbiel (New York, 1921), II, 232-35; III, 291-92. (History relating to Maelzel.)
 See also Afflard (early device). Davaux (invention). Loulié (do.). Maelzel. Winkler. Wright (Thomas).

METROPOLITAN OPERA HOUSE.

See NEW YORK.

METZLER. English firm of instrument dealers and music publishers established in London. The founder was Valentin Metzler, a native of Bingen o/Rhine, who opened a shop in Wardour Street for the sale of flutes and other instruments about the year 1788. He married an Englishwoman, and his only child was George Richard Metzler (1797-1867).

The name Metzler first appears in the London directories in 1812, and the style Metzler & Son was adopted about 1816; V. Metzler probably died in 1833, as the name then became G. Metzler & Co. The firm is said to have entered upon music publishing in 1816 and removed in 1842 to 37 Great Marlborough Street, where it remained until 1920, with premises extended to Nos. 40-43 from 1895 to 1911. In 1920-29 the address was 142 Charing Cross Road and in 1929-30 14 Rathbone Place.

The only surviving child of George Richard was George Thomas Metzler (1835-79). He gained a practical knowledge of the pianoforte in Germany and had a distinct literary bias, which he followed as far as opportunity permitted. He became known as a writer of words for songs, Mrs. George March (Virginia Gabriel), Charlotte Sainton-Dolby, Henry Smart and J. L. Hatton having set his graceful lyrics to music.

In 1867 Frank Chappell, who had acquired his knowledge of business in the Bond Street firm of that name, joined G. T. Metzler in partnership, and from his suggestion the important agency of Mason & Hamlin, which practically introduced the American organ into Britain, became a speciality of the Metzler business. This firm was early in the field with the precursors of the harmonium; their 'improved Seraphines' are advertised in 'The Musical World' in 1838. Frank Chappell died in 1886, and from that date the business was carried on by the trustees of his estate until 1893, when it became a limited company.

About 1810-12 a certain "Mr. Metzler" of 9 Newman Street issued a small oblong book of airs for the flageolet, called 'The Magic Flageolet'. This came out in numbers, many being issued by James Power, and others by Metzler himself, whose name was affixed to many of the pieces.

A. J. H., adds. F. K. & W. C. S.

MEULEMANS, Arthur (b. Aerschot, 19 May 1884).

Belgian conductor and composer. He studied under Tinel at the Institut Lemmens at Mechlin, where later on he became a professor. From 1916 to 1930 he was director of the organ and song school of Limburg, at Hasselt. On resigning that post he became conductor of the Belgian broadcasting service. His works include the operas 'Vikings', 'Adriaen Brouwer', 'Egmont'; the ballets 'Josaphat-Park' and 'De Vogels'; incidental music; 9 Masses, 3 'Te Deum'; oratorios 'Sacrum Mysterium', 'De Zeven Weeën' and 'De Dochter van Jairus', 4 cantatas and many other choral works; 12 symphonies, 'Plinius Fontein', 'Heideschetzen', 'Praeludiën', 'Stadspark', 'Serenata', 'Vlaamse Rhapsodie', 'Andante symphonique', 'Twee Danssuites', 'Overture allegra' and other orch. works; concertos for pf., vn., viola, cello, flute, oboe, trumpet, horn & organ; 4 string Quartets, 2 pf. Quartets, 2 wind Quartets, 2 string Trios, 2 wind Trios, pf. Quintet and other chamber music; numerous pf. pieces; songs, &c. E. B.

Meurice, Paul. See Saint-Saëns ('Ascanio', opera).

MEWTON-WOOD, Noel (b. Melbourne, 20 Nov. 1922; d. London, 5 Dec. 1953).

Australian pianist. He studied the piano-forte under Seidel at the Melbourne Conservatory and went to England when he was fourteen to study at the R.A.M. in London. Later he went to Italy and also took lessons with Artur Schnabel. He made his London début in 1940, when he played Beethoven's first Concerto with great distinction at a Queen's Hall concert conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham. He played this work again during the Jubilee of the Promenade Concerts, when Sir Henry Wood wrote: "His pianissimo is as beautiful as his fortissimo, and he reminds me of all the greatest pianists of the past, including Rubinstein, Liszt and Busoni".

Mewton-Wood won very great admiration for his performance of both classical and modern works and for his grasp of the widely differing styles of such composers as Schumann, Brahms, Stravinsky and Tippett. His performance of Bliss's Concerto at a Promenade Concert in 1949 was warmly applauded by the critics and he several times played Busoni's immensely difficult Concerto to enthusiastic audiences. He was a staunch supporter of the modern British school of composers and on a tour of Europe for the British Council he included many works by such composers as Bliss, Britten, Tippett and Lambert.

M. K. W.

Mey, Lev Alexandrovich. See Balakirev (2 songs). Borodin ('Tsar's Bride', opera). Maid of Pskov (Rimsky-Korsakov, opera). Mussorgsky (3 songs). Rimsky-Korsakov (4 operas based on M.; 'Maid of Pskov', incid. m.; Cantata [trans. from Mickiewicz]; duet with orch.; 4 songs, 1 voc. duet). Rubinstein ('Ivan the Terrible', mus. portrait for orch.). Tchaikovsky (10 songs). Tsar's Bride (Rimsky-Korsakov, lib.).

MEYER-BAER, Kathi (b. Berlin, 27 July 1892).

German musicologist. She studied at Leipzig University and obtained the Ph.D. in musicology in 1916. From 1922 to 1936 she worked in the Paul Hirsch Music Library at Frankfurt o/M., in 1928 she was for a year research librarian at the Berlin State Library and in 1927-29 she worked on the organization of the Music Department in the City Library at Frankfurt. From 1923 she was music critic for thirteen years for the 'Frankfurter Zeitung' and the 'Neue Musik Zeitung' of Stuttgart, and in 1926-30 she acted as lecturer in musicology at the Frankfurt School of Music. She has supervised a number of exhibitions, among them the International Music Exhibition at Frankfurt, of which she was director, in 1927, the Goethe and Music Exhibition of 1932 and the Wagner Memorial of 1933.

About that time Kathi Meyer-Baer emigrated to the U.S.A., where she joined the editorial board of the publishing-house of Schirmer for a year in 1941. From 1942 to 1943 she worked in the Music Department of the New York Public Library. She has written a large number of articles and critical essays for musical papers and journals, mainly on the music in medieval monastic establishments and the problems of aesthetics in music. She has compiled three catalogues, one of the Paul Hirsch Library, published in four volumes between 1928 and 1947, the catalogue of the International Exhibition "Music in Folk Life" held at Frankfurt in 1927 and a catalogue of liturgical music incunabula for the London Bibliographical Society. Her other publications include new editions of Ercole Bottrigari's 'Il desiderio' of 1594 (1924) and Caspar Stieler's 'Die geharnischte Venus' of 1660 (1925) as well as the following:

ARTICLES

- 'Die Musikdrucke von Wenssler-Kilchen' ('Gutenberg Jahrbuch', 1935).
- 'Music Printing 1473-1934' ('Dolphin Yearbook', New York, 1935).
- 'Musikalische Erstausgaben' and 'Illustrierte Musikbücher des 16. und 17. Jahrhunderts' ('Philobiblon', 1937 & 1939).
- 'Liturgical Music Incunabula in the British Museum' ('The Library', 1939).
- 'Artaria Plate Numbers' ('Notes', 1942).
- 'Early Breitkopf and Härtel Catalogues' (M.Q., 1944).
- 'Michel de Toulouse' (M. Rev., 1946).
- 'Nicolas de Cusa on the Meaning of Music' ('Journal of Aesthetics', 1947).
- 'Musical Iconology in Raphael's Parnassus' (ibid., 1949).

BOOKS

- 'Der chorische Gesang der Frauen' (Leipzig, 1917).
- 'Das Konzert' (Stuttgart, 1925).
- 'Bedeutung und Wesen der Musik' (Strasbourg, 1932).

M. K. W.

MEYER, Bernhard van den Sigtenhorst. See SIGTENHORST MEYER.

Meyer, Conrad Ferdinand. See Aeschbacher (W., songs). Burkhard (P., 'Schuss von der Kanzel'). Burkhard (W., 2 choruses). Kaminski ('Jürg Jenatsch', opera). Klughardt ('Hochzeit des Monchs', opera). Kunz (Ernst, 'Huttens letzte Tage', choral work). Lemacher (choruses). Pfützer (1 chorus; 1 song with orch.; 4 songs). Schoeck (29 songs). Schoenberg ('Friede auf Erden', chorus). Strauss (R., song). Sutermeister (2 radio operas). Vrieslander (songs).

MEYER, Gregor (b. ?; d. ?).

Swiss 16th-century organist and composer. He was organist of the cathedral church at Solothurn in the earlier part of the 16th century. Our whole knowledge of him is derived from Glareanus, who in his 'Dodecachordon' (1547) frequently mentions him in terms of the highest respect for his musical abilities, and who obtained from him for the purposes of his work various compositions as examples of the proper use of the ecclesiastical modes in polyphonic music, inattention to which Glareanus is disposed to censure in the works of Josquin des Prés and others. So, for instance, he communicates of Meyer eleven somewhat elaborate 3- and 4-part settings of the "Kyrie" and "Christe Eleison" as illustrations of the proper use in conjunction of the Aeolian and Hypoaeolian modes, also a motet, 'Confitebor Domino', as an example of the Lydian and Hypolydian united, and two settings of the antiphon 'Qui mihi ministrat', one as an example of what Glareanus describes as the genuine form of the Lydian mode without B \flat , and the other in the more commonly used form of the Lydian with the flat. J. R. M.

MEYER-HELMUND, Erik (b. St. Petersburg, 25 Apr. 1861; d. Berlin, 4 Apr. 1932).

German singer and composer. After learning from his father he went to Berlin to study composition with Kiel and singing with Stockhausen. He had a successful career as a concert singer, but his fame rested chiefly upon his many graceful songs, all of which are of a kind to appeal at once to a large number of hearers, and many of which are written to his own words. But the operas 'Margitta' (Magdeburg, 1889) and 'Der Liebeskampf' (Dresden, 1892) were successful in their time; his ballet 'Rübezahl, oder Der Berggeist' was given at Leipzig with great success; a 1-act burlesque opera, 'Trischka', was given at Riga in 1894. It was followed by 'Lucullus' (Riga, 1905), 'Münchener Bilderbogen' (Munich, 1910), 'Heines Traumbilder', a light opera, 'Taglioni' (both Berlin, 1912) and 'Die schone Frau Marlies' (Altenburg, 1916). J. A. F.-M., adds.

MEYER LUTZ, Wilhelm. See LUTZ.

MEYER VON SCHAUENSEE, Franz Joseph Leonti (b. Lucerne, 10 Aug. 1720; d. Lucerne, 2 Jan. 1789).

Swiss composer and organist. He received his earliest instruction in organ playing from Jost Wilhelm Müller, organist at the collegiate church of St. Leodegar im Hof, at Lucerne; later, in 1740-42, he studied the violin with Galimberti at Milan. As scion of an old and aristocratic Lucerne family, he complied with the military laws by serving for two years as an officer in a regiment of King Emanuel III of Sardinia. Thereafter he took part in the campaign of the Austrian War of Succession, without, however, neglecting any opportunity to participate in concerts or to compose music. In 1745 he returned to Lucerne and divided his time between his art and the career of a civil servant. On the death of his first music teacher, J. W. Müller, in 1752, he resigned his various positions in the civil service and took holy orders, becoming Müller's successor as organist and Kapellmeister at the collegiate church, which position he held with great distinction till his death. In 1760 he founded the public musical college of Lucerne. His keenness of mind manifested itself in the creation, among other things, of the Helvetic Society of the Concordat (1768), which pursued cultural and patriotic aims. Of this he remained president till 1784.

Both as an artist and as a man Meyer enjoyed the esteem of his contemporaries. As a composer he not only held first place among the Swiss musicians of his time, but was also the first important musician of that country who was not forced to reside abroad, either permanently or temporarily, but on whom work and honours were showered in his own country. He was a many-sided composer: his work ranges from sacred music to comic opera. In the matter of style he occupies a position midway between the German and the Italian schools.

Among Meyer's works, both printed and in manuscript, the following may be noted:

Op.

1. 'De semine bono flos vernans' (40 arias, 1748).
2. 'Obeliscus musicus' (16 offertories).
3. 'Ecclesia triumphans in campo et in choro' (various sacred works).
4. 'Pontificale Romano-Constantiense Musicum' (7 masses).
5. 'Cantica Doctoris Melliflui Mariano dulcisona' (various sacred compositions).
6. 'Omne trinum perfectum' (various sacred compositions).
7. 'Par nobile fratrum' (various sacred compositions, 1764).

Manuscripts:

- Festival Mass for 3 choirs composed for Beromünster (1749).
- 'Hans Hüttenstock' (opera buffa, 1769).
- 'Engelberg Valley Wedding' (opera buffa, 1781), and others.

Among his lost works were further sacred compositions, symphonies, concertos, etc.

H. E.

BIBL.—KOLLER, EUGEN, 'Franz Joseph Leonti Meyer von Schauensee: his Life and Works' (Frauenfeld & Leipzig, 1928).

REFARDT, EDGAR, 'Historio-biographical Lexicon of Swiss Musicians' (1928).

MEYERBEER, Giacomo (Jakob Liebmann Beer) (b. Berlin, 5 Sept. 1791; d. Paris, 2 May 1864).

German composer. His father, Herz Beer, a native of Frankfort o/M., was a wealthy Jewish banker in Berlin; his mother (born Amalie Wulf) was a woman of rare mental and intellectual gifts and high cultivation. He was their eldest son, and a legacy from a rich relation named Meyer caused his name to take the form in which it became known. He seems to have been the sole member of his family remarkable for musical gifts; but two of his brothers achieved distinction in other lines—Wilhelm as an astronomer and Michael, who died young, as a poet.

His genius showed itself early. His first instructor was Lauska, an eminent pianoforte player and pupil of Clementi; and old Clementi himself, although he had long given up teaching, was so much struck, during a visit to Berlin, with the promise displayed in the boy's performance as to consent to give him lessons. As early as seven years old he played in public Mozart's D minor Concerto, and two years later he was reckoned one of the best pianists in Berlin. It was as a pianist that he was expected to win his laurels, but as he had also, from an early age, shown much talent for composition, he was placed under Zelter for instruction in theory, and subsequently (for Zelter's rigid severity was insupportable to the young prodigy) under Bernard Anselm Weber, director of the Berlin Opera and a pupil of the then celebrated Abbé Vogler. In 1810 Meyerbeer became an inmate of Vogler's house. He had for companions Gänsbacher and Carl Maria von Weber, who had studied with Vogler some years before, and was now attracted to Darmstadt by his presence there, and between whom and Meyerbeer, five years his junior, there sprang up a warm and lasting friendship. Each morning after early mass, when the young men took it in turns to preside at the organ, they assembled for a lesson in counterpoint from the abbé. Organ fugues were improvised in the cathedral, on subjects contributed by all in turn. In this way Meyerbeer's education was carried on for two years. His great powers of execution on the pianoforte enabled him to play at sight the most intricate orchestral scores, with a full command of every part. His 4-part 'Geistliche Oden von Klopstock' were published at this time, and an oratorio of his, entitled 'Gott und die Natur', was performed in the presence of the grand duke, who appointed him composer to the court. His first opera, 'Jephthas Gelübde', was also written during this period and produced at Munich in 1812. Biblical in subject, dry and scholastic in treatment, it resembled an oratorio rather than an opera, and although connoisseurs thought it promising, it failed to please the public. A comic opera, 'Alimelek, oder Die beiden Kalifen', met with a better fate at Stuttgart in 1813. It was bespoken and put in rehearsal by the manager of the Kärntnertor theatre in Vienna.

To Vienna, in consequence, Meyerbeer now repaired, with the intention of making his appearance there as a pianist. But on the very evening of his arrival he chanced to hear Hummel and was so much impressed that he became dissatisfied with all he had hitherto aimed at or accomplished, and went into a kind of voluntary retirement for several months, during which time he subjected his technique to a complete reform, besides writing a quantity of pianoforte music, which, however, was never published. He made a great sensation on his first appearance, and Moscheles, who heard him at this time, was wont to say that, had he chosen a pianist's career, few virtuosi could have rivalled him. But to be a composer was the only aim worthy of his ambition, although at this moment it seemed to recede as he pursued it. 'Alimelek', performed in Vienna in 1814, had been an utter failure. Salieri, however, assured him that he wanted nothing in order to succeed but freedom from scholastic trammels and, above all, knowledge of the human voice and how to write for it, a knowledge, Salieri added, to be acquired only in Italy.

Accordingly, in 1815, Meyerbeer went to Venice. It was Carnival time. Rossini's 'Tancredi' was then at the height of its popularity, and all Venice resounded with "Di tanti palpiti". To Meyerbeer this was a revelation, and he surrendered spellbound to the genial charm. Hope awoke, emulation was kindled. He had no style of his own to abandon, but he abandoned Vogler's without regret and set to work to write Italian operas. His success was easy and complete. 'Romilda e Costanza' (produced at Padua in 1817), 'Semiramide riconosciuta' (Turin, 1819) and 'Emma di Resburgo' (Venice, 1819) were all received with enthusiasm by the Italian people, and this at a time when it was difficult for anyone but Rossini to obtain a hearing. The last-named opera was played in Germany under the title of 'Emma von Leicester', and not unsuccessfully. 'Margherita d' Anjou', the best of these operas, was written for La Scala at Milan and given there in 1820. 'L' esule di Granata' (1822) made but little impression. Its original title was 'Almansor'.

The following year, 1823, while engaged in writing 'Il crociato in Egitto', the composer went to Berlin, where he tried, but failed, to get a performance of a 3-act German opera, 'Das Brandenburger Tor'. This was a time of transition in his life. He was wearying of the Italian manner and he could not be insensible to the murmurs of dissatisfaction which everywhere in Germany made themselves heard at the degradation of his talent by his change of style. Foremost among the malcontents was Weber, who had looked on his friend as the hope of that German opera in which his own ardent aspirations were centred, and who in 1815 at Prague, and subsequently at Dresden, had mounted 'Alimelek' with extraordinary care and labour, hoping perhaps to induce him to return to his old path. In spite of all this the friendship of the two men remained unshaken; but Weber did not live to see the fulfilment of his wish that Meyerbeer should give up the imitation of foreign models and write a German opera.

'Il crociato' was produced at Venice in 1824 and created a furore. In this opera, written in Germany, old associations seem to have asserted themselves. More ambitious in scope than its predecessors, it shows an attempt, timid indeed, at dramatic combination which constitutes it a kind of link between his "wild oats" (as in after years he designated these Italian works) and his later operas.¹

In 1826 he was invited to witness its first performance in Paris, and this proved to be the turning-point of his career. He eventually took up his residence in Paris, and lived most of his subsequent life there. From 1824 to 1831 no opera appeared from his pen. A sojourn in Berlin, during which his father died, his marriage and the loss of two children were among the causes which kept him from public life. But in these years he undertook that profound study of French character, French history and French art which resulted in the final metamorphosis of his dramatic and musical style and in the works by which his name is remembered.

Paris was the headquarters of the unsettled, restless, tentative spirit which at that time pervaded Europe. The prevailing spirit of eclecticism found its perfect musical counterpart in the works of Meyerbeer. The assimilative power that, guided by tenacity of purpose, enabled him to identify himself with any style he chose, found in this intellectual ferment, as yet unrepresented in music, a well-nigh inexhaustible field, while these influences in return proved the key to unlock all that was original and forcible in his nature. And he found a fresh stimulus in the works of French operatic composers. In his librettist, Eugène Scribe, he found an invaluable collaborator.

Many vicissitudes preceded the first performance, on 21 Nov. 1831, of 'Robert le Diable', the opera in which the new Meyerbeer first revealed himself, and of which the unparalleled success extended in a very few years over the whole civilized world. It made the fortune of the Paris Opéra. Scenic effect, striking contrast, novel and brilliant instrumentation, vigorous declamatory recitative, melody which pleased none the less for the strong admixture of Italian-opera conventionalities, yet here and there (as in the scena "Robert! toi que j'aime") attaining an unlooked-for dramatic force, a story part heroic, part legendary, part allegorical — with this strange picturesque medley all were pleased, for in it each found something to suit his taste.

The popularity of the opera was so great that 'Les Huguenots', produced 29 Feb. 1836, suffered at first by contrast. The public, looking for a repetition, with a difference, of 'Robert', was disappointed at finding the new opera quite unlike its predecessor, but was soon forced to acknowledge that it was the superior of the two.

¹ It is significant that, with the exception of the 'Crocato', not one of these early works, so enthusiastically received, held the stage after their composer had left Italy.

In 1838 the book of 'L'Africaine' was given to Meyerbeer by Scribe. He became deeply interested in it, and the composition and re-composition, casting and recasting of this work occupied him at intervals to the end of his life. His excessive anxiety about his operas extended to the libretti, with which he was never satisfied, but would have modified to suit his successive fancies over and over again, until the final form retained little likeness to the original. This was especially the case with 'L'Africaine', subsequently for a time called 'Vasco de Gama' (who, although the hero, was an afterthought!), and many were his altercations with Scribe, who got tired of the endless changes demanded by the composer and withdrew his book altogether, but who was finally pacified by Meyerbeer's taking another libretto of his, 'Le Prophète', which so forcibly excited the composer's imagination that, putting 'L'Africaine' aside, he at once set to work on it and finished it within a year (1843).

A good deal of his time was now passed in Berlin², where the king had appointed him Generalmusikdirector in 1842. Here he wrote several occasional pieces, cantatas, marches and dance music, besides the 3-act German opera 'Ein Feldlager in Schlesien'. The success of this work was magically increased, a few weeks after its first performance, 7 Dec. 1844, by the appearance of Jenny Lind in the part of the heroine.

He at this time discharged some of the debt he owed his dead friend Weber by producing 'Euryanthe' in Berlin. His duties at the Opera were heavy, and he had neither the personal presence nor the requisite nerve and decision to make a good conductor. From 1845 he only conducted — possibly not to their advantage — his own operas and those in which Jenny Lind sang.

The year 1846 was marked by the production of the overture and incidental music to his brother Michael Beer's drama of 'Struensee'. This work is its composer's only one in that style and shows him in some of his best aspects. The overture is his most successful achievement in sustained instrumental composition. A visit to Vienna (where Jenny Lind achieved a brilliant success in the part of Vielka in the 'Feldlager in Schlesien') and a subsequent sojourn in London occurred in 1847. In the autumn he was back in Berlin, where, on the occasion of the king's birthday, he produced, after long and careful preparation, his future rival and bitter enemy's early opera, 'Rienzi'. The two composers had seen something of each other in Paris, and there is no doubt that Meyerbeer's French operas influenced Wagner's early style, together with the works of Spontini and Marschner. The younger composer was then in necessitous circumstances, and Meyerbeer to all appearances endeavoured to get employment for him and to make him known to influential people in the musical world; but either his influence was not all it was supposed to be or he did not exert himself as assiduously as he led Wagner to believe. Wagner, on the other hand, was perhaps unduly suspicious of a rival who was known to spend large sums in bribing the press; certainly his later attacks on Meyerbeer in 'Das Judentum in der Musik' were excessive. Meyerbeer at any rate did him a good turn in securing the Berlin Opera's acceptance of 'The Flying Dutchman', which had not only suffered extraordinary indignities in Paris, but had been rejected by Leipzig and Munich.

² On the conditions of his life in Berlin, see S.M.G., IV, 519.

'Le Prophète', produced in Paris on 16 Apr. 1849, after long and careful preparation, materially added to its composer's fame. Thirteen years had elapsed since the production of its predecessor. Once again the public, looking for something like 'Les Huguenots', was disappointed. Once again it was forced, after a time, to do justice to Meyerbeer's power of transferring himself, as it were, according to the dramatic requirements of his theme. But there are fewer elements of popularity in the 'Prophète' than in the 'Huguenots'.

Meyerbeer's health was beginning to fail, and after this time he spent a part of every autumn at Spa, where he found a temporary refuge from his toils and cares. Probably no composer as famous as he ever suffered such a degree of nervous anxiety about his own works as he did. During their composition, and for long after their first completion, he altered and retouched continually, never satisfied and never sure of himself. During the correcting of the parts, the casting of the characters, the coaching of the singers, he never knew, nor allowed any one concerned to know, a moment's peace of mind. Then came endless rehearsals, when he would give the orchestra passages scored in two ways, written in different coloured inks, and try their alternate effect; then the final performance, the ordeal of public opinion and of possible adverse criticism, to which he was so painfully susceptible that, as Heine says of him, he fulfilled the true Christian ideal, for he could not rest while there remained one unconverted soul, "and when that lost sheep was brought back to the fold he rejoiced more over him than over all the rest of the flock that had never gone astray".

Faithful to change, he now challenged his adopted countrymen on their own especial ground by the production at the Opéra-Comique in 1854 of 'L'Étoile du nord'. To this book he had intended to adapt the music of 'Ein Feldlager in Schlesien', but, his own ideas transforming themselves gradually while he worked on them, there remained at last only six numbers of the earlier work. 'L'Étoile' achieved considerable popularity, although it aroused much animosity among French musicians, jealous of this invasion of their own domain, which they also thought unsuited to Meyerbeer's melodramatic style. The same may be said of 'Le Pardon de Ploërmel' ('Dinorah'), founded on a Breton idyll, and produced at the Opéra-Comique in 1859. Meyerbeer's special powers found no scope in this comparatively circumscribed field. His development since 1824 was too great not to be apparent in any style of composition, but these French operas, although containing much that is charming, were, like his Italian "wild oats", the result of an effort of will — the will to be whomsoever he chose.

After 1859 he wrote, in Berlin, two cantatas and a grand march for the Schiller Centenary Festival, and began incidental music for a comedy by Blaze de Bury — never finished — called 'La Jeunesse de Goethe', introducing several French translations of Goethe's lyrical poems, set to music. His life was overshadowed by the death of many friends and contemporaries, among them his old coadjutor Scribe, to whom he owed so much.

In 1862 the choice fell on him — of all people — to represent German music at the opening of the London International Exhibition, for which he wrote an 'Overture in the Form of a March'. (He had already visited England in 1832.) The next winter he was again in Berlin, still working at 'L'Africaine', to which the public looked forward with impatience and curiosity. For years the difficulty of getting a satisfactory cast had stood in the way of the production of this opera. His excessive anxiety and fastidiousness resulted in its being never performed at all during his lifetime. In Oct. 1863 he returned, for the last time, to Paris. The opera was now finished and in rehearsal. Still he corrected, polished, touched and retouched: it occupied his thoughts night and day. But he had delayed too long. On 23 Apr. he was attacked by illness and on 2 May 1864 he died.

'L'Africaine' was performed after his death at the Opéra in Paris on 28 Apr. 1865. When it appeared in London (in Italian) on 22 July following, the creation by Pauline Lucca of the part of Selika was long remembered by those who saw it. The work itself had suffered somewhat from the composer's incessant changes of intention, having occupied him from 1838 to 1843. Laid aside at that time for many years, and the book then undergoing a complete alteration, a second story being engrafted on to the first, the composition, when resumed, was carried on intermittently to the end of his life. The chorus of bishops and Nelusko's two airs, for instance, were written in 1858, the first duet between Vasco and Selika in 1857, while the second great duet took its final form as late as the end of 1862. The excessive length of the opera on its first production (when the performance occupied more than six hours) necessitated considerable curtailments detrimental to coherence of plot. But in spite of all this the music has a special charm, a kind of exotic fragrance of its own, which will always make it to some minds the most appealing of Meyerbeer's works. It is, in fact, the most purely musical of them all. F. A. M., rev.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ALTMANN, WILHELM, 'Meyerbeer im Dienste des preussischen Königshauses' (Z.M.W., Nov. 1919).
 BLAZE DE BURY, H. 'Meyerbeer' (Paris, 1863).
 BRENT SMITH, A. E., 'The Tragedy of Meyerbeer' (M. & L., VI, 1925, p. 248).
 CURZON, HENRI DE, 'Meyerbeer' (Paris, 1910).
 DAURIAC, L., 'Meyerbeer' (Paris, 1930).
 DIEREN, BERNARD VAN, 'Meyerbeer', in 'Down among the Dead Men' (Oxford, 1935), pp. 142-74.
 HERVEY, ARTHUR, 'Giacomo Meyerbeer' (London, 1913).
 KAPP, JULIUS, 'Giacomo Meyerbeer: eine Biographie' (Berlin, 1932).
 'Wagner-Meyerbeer: ein Stück Operngeschichte' ('Die Musik', Oct. 1923).
 KOHUT, A., 'Meyerbeer' (Leipzig, 1890).
 KRUSP, G. R., 'Meyerbeer's Jugendopern' (Z.M.W., Apr. 1919).
 LASSALLE, A. DE, 'Meyerbeer' (Paris, 1864) (with a catalogue of works).
 MUÑOZ, PÉREZ, 'Meyerbeer: su vida y sus obras' (Paris, 1929).
 POUJIN, ARTHUR, 'Meyerbeer' (Paris, 1864).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS
OPERAS

Title	Libretto	Production
'Jephthas Gelubde.'	Alois Schreiber.	Munich, 23 Dec. 1812.
'Wirt und Gast, oder Aus Scherz Ernst' (later 'Die beiden Kalifen' [1814] and 'Alimelek' [1820]).	Johann Gottfried Wohlbrück.	Stuttgart, 6 Jan. 1813.
'Das Brandenburger Tor.'	Emanuel Veith.	(Written for Berlin, 1814, not performed.)
'Romilda e Costanza.'	Giacomo Rossi.	Padua, 19 July 1817.
'Semiramide riconosciuta.'	Metastasio.	Turin, Teatro Regio, Jan. 1819.
'Emma di Resburgo' (later 'Emma von Leicester' [1820]).	Gaetano Rossi.	Venice, Teatro San Benedetto, 26 June 1819.
'Margherita d' Anjou.'	Felice Romani, based on a play by René Charles Guilbert de Pixérécourt.	Milan, Teatro alla Scala, 14 Nov. 1820.
'L' esule di Granata.' ¹	Romani.	Milan, Teatro alla Scala, 12 Mar. 1822.
'Il crociato in Egitto.'	Giacomo Rossi.	Venice, Teatro La Fenice, 7 Mar. 1824.
'Robert le Diable.'	Eugène Scribe.	Paris, Opéra, 21 Nov. 1831.
'Les Huguenots.'	Scribe & Émile Deschamps.	Paris, Opéra, 29 Feb. 1836.
'Ein Feldlager in Schlesien.'	Ludwig Relstab.	Berlin, Court Opera, 7 Dec. 1844.
'Le Prophète.'	Scribe.	Paris, Opéra, 16 Apr. 1849.
'L'Étoile du nord' (partly based on 'Ein Feldlager').	Scribe.	Paris, Opéra-Comique, 16 Feb. 1854.
'Le Pardon de Ploërmel' ('Dinorah').	Jules Barbier & Michel Carré.	Paris, Opéra-Comique, 4 Apr. 1859.
'L'Africaine' ('Vasco de Gama').	Scribe.	Paris, Opéra, 28 Apr. 1865 (posth.).

OTHER DRAMATIC WORKS

Title	Description	Libretto or Choreography	Production
'Der Fischer und das Milchmädchen.'	Ballet.	Lauchery.	Berlin, Court Opera, 26 Mar. 1810.
'Gott und die Natur.'	Cantata.	Schreiber.	Berlin, Singakademie, 8 May 1811.
'Thevelindens Liebe.'	Monodrama.	?	Munich, 9 Nov. 1817.
'Das Hoffest von Ferrara.'	Masque.	?	Berlin, at court, Carnival 1843.
Aeschylus's 'Eumenides'.	Choruses.		(MS).

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

Title	Author of Play	Production
'Struensee.'	Michael Beer (composer's brother).	Berlin, Schauspielhaus, 19 Sept. 1846.
'Murillo, ou La Corde du pendu.'	Aylic - Langlé (Marie Ange Ferdinand Langlois).	Paris, Comédie-Française, 18 Oct. 1853.
'La Jeunesse de Goethe.'	Henri Blaze de Bury.	1859 (not used for performance).
'Der Goldbauer' (2 songs).	Charlotte Birch-Pfeiffer.	1861 (not used for performance).

¹ An "unfinished opera 'Almanzor'", mentioned in all the biographies of Meyerbeer, is identical with this work.

OPERATIC FRAGMENTS (MS)

- 'Le Bachelier de Salamanque' (1815).
 'L'Étudiant de Strasbourg' (1815).
 'Cinq-Mars' (1837).
 'Judith' (1864).

CHORAL WORKS

- 7 'Geistliche Oden' (Klopstock), for four voices, unaccompanied (c. 1810).
 Oratorio, 'Gott und die Natur' (1811).
 'An Gott.' Hymn, by Gubitz. For four voices.
 'Le Génie de la musique à la tombe de Beethoven.' For solos & chorus.
 Cantata for four voices. Written for the inauguration of Gutenberg's statue at Mainz.
 Cantata, 'Maria und ihr Genius'. Composed for the silver wedding of Prince and Princess Charles of Prussia. For solos & chorus.
 Serenade, 'Braut geleite aus der Heimat'. Composed for the wedding of Princess Louise of Prussia. For eight voices, unaccompanied.
 'March of the Bavarian Archers.' Cantata for four voices & men's chorus, with accompaniment of brass instruments.
 Ode to Rauch, the sculptor. Solos, chorus & orch.
 Festal Hymn. Composed for the silver wedding of the King of Prussia. Four voices & chorus.
 The 91st Psalm, for eight voices. Composed for the choir of Berlin Cathedral.
 'Pater Noster', for four voices, with organ accompaniment.
 Twelve Psalms, for double chorus unaccompanied (MS).
 'Stabat Mater.' (MS).
 'Miserere' (MS).
 'Te Deum' (MS).

SONGS

- A large number of songs with pf. accompaniment, among which the best known are perhaps 'Le Moine' (for bass) and 'Das Fischermadchen'. The whole of them were published, together with 'Le Génie de la musique à la tombe de Beethoven', in one volume, entitled 'Quarante Mélodies à une et plusieurs voix'.
 'Neben dir', song for tenor voice, with cello obbligato.
 'Des Jagers Lied', for bass voice, with horns obligati.
 'Dichters Wahlspruch', canon for three voices.
 'Freundschaft', quartet for men's voices.
 'A Venezia', barcarolle.
 'Des Schafers Lied', for tenor voice, with clarinet obbligato.
 Many others of less importance.

INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

- First 'Torch' Dance (Fackeltanz), for brass orchestra. Composed for the King of Bavaria's wedding, 1846.
 Second do., for the wedding of Princess Charlotte of Prussia, 1850.
 Third do., for the wedding of Princess Anne of Prussia, 1853.
 Grand March for the Schiller Centenary Festival, 1859.
 Overture in the Form of a March, for the opening of the International Exhibition in London, 1862.
 Coronation March, 1863.
 A quantity of pf. music, written in youth, all unpublished.

See also Antoni (friendship). Audran (Funeral March). Barmann (1, friendship). Barnett (J., cousin). Bishop (adapt.). Blaze of Bury ('Jeunesse de Goethe', incid. m.). Borodin (Trio, on theme by M.). Ernst (H. W., vn. fantasy on 'Prophète'). Fackeltanz. Franckenstein (Vars. for orch.). Glaser (F., lib. intended for M.). Grand Opéra. Lacy (M. R., adapt. of 'Robert de Diable'). Lambert (C., 'Patineurs', ballet, arr.). Liszt (No. 259, organ fantasy & fugue on 'Ad nos'). Suppé (parody of 'Dinorah').

Meynell, Alice. See Davies (H. W., 'Christ in the Universe', cantata). Hart (F., 2 songs). Ireland (J., 2 songs). Milhaud (song).

Meyrink, Gustav. See Albert (E. d', 'Sklavin von Rhodos', incid. m.).

MEYROWITZ, Selmar (b. Bartenstein, East Prussia, 18 Apr. 1875; d. Toulouse, May 1941).

German conductor. He received his musical education at the Leipzig Conservatory from Reinecke and Jadassohn (1892-95) and later was a pupil of Max Bruch at the Akademische Meisterschule for composition in Berlin (1895-97). In 1897 Felix Mottl appointed him Kapellmeister at the Carlsruhe court theatre and in 1900 took him to New York, where Meyrowitz worked at the Metropolitan Opera House until 1903.

After he had been Kapellmeister at the German opera-house in Prague (1903-6), at the Komische Oper in Berlin (1907-11) and finally at the court theatre in Munich (1912-1914), he became a leading conductor at the Hamburg Opera (1914-18).

More and more interested in active concert work, Meyrowitz gave regular series of symphony concerts with the Berlin Philharmonic throughout 1918-23, and similar concerts at Hamburg, Vienna and Rome. He was appointed Kapellmeister to the Berlin State Opera in 1924; but he left Germany in 1933 on the establishment of the Nazi régime and emigrated to Paris.

His gramophone records attracted considerable attention and he won the Grand Prix du Disque in 1935 with Berlioz's 'Symphonie fantastique', and the same award in 1936 and 1938 with Liszt's 'Faust' Symphony and Saint-Saëns's 'Danse macabre' respectively.

A. H. (ii).

MEZANGEAU. See MÉSANGEAU, RENÉ.

MEZARI, Maddalena (called La Casulana) (b. Vicenza, ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-century composer. She apparently went to live at Venice. She was a madrigal composer of distinction to whom A. Gardano dedicated a book of madrigals by Philippe de Monte. She composed a book of madrigals for 4 voices (1568; 2nd ed. 1583), another book of madrigals (1570) and a third book of madrigals for 5 voices (1583). Various numbers are in collective volumes.

E. v. d. s.

MEZZA (fem.) } (Ital. = "half" or MEZZO (masc.) } "medium"). The word is used of voices as a qualification as regards both (a) tone and (b) range. Hence (a) mezza voce means singing at half-power, a quiet, unforced utterance; (b) mezzo-soprano and mezzo-contralto are voices whose range lies half-way between the highest and the lowest womens' voices, the latter rather lower than the former.

E. B.

MEZZOGORRI, Giovanni Nicolo (b. ? ; d. ?).

Italian 16th-17th-century composer. He was vicar and maestro di cappella of Comacchio Cathedral in 1612. He composed a large amount of sacri concerti, masses, madrigals, motets, etc., published between 1611 and 1623.

E. v. d. s.

MEZZO-SOPRANO. The name given to the woman's voice which combines some of the rich quality of the true contralto with the bright ring of the true soprano, and with a compass generally of about two octaves, from a to a". The tessitura lies in a most effective register between those of the contralto and the soprano, and the voice in consequence is greatly used for music of a dramatic character.

It is also perhaps the most intimate and sympathetic voice for the performance of songs.

H. C. C., rev.

MI. The third note of the major scale in the nomenclature of France and Italy G.

See also E. Hexachord. Solmization.

MI CONTRA FA. See TRITONE.

MIARKA (Opera). See GEORGEFS.

MIASKOVSKY, Nikolay Yakovlevich (b. Novogeorgievsk, 20 Apr. 1881; d. Moscow, 9 Aug. 1950).

Russian composer. His father was an engineer in the Russian army, stationed at Novogeorgievsk near Warsaw, which at that time belonged to Russian Poland. In 1888 the family removed to Orenburg and later to Kazan. Miaskovsky had his first lesson from his mother, who died during the time at Kazan, and later from an aunt, his father's sister, who had been a singer at the St. Petersburg Opera. But although he proved exceptionally gifted, he was intended by his father, who had advanced to the rank of general, for a military career and sent to the cadet school at Nizhny-Novgorod. When the family again moved, this time to St. Petersburg, Nikolay rejoined them and was transferred to the cadet school there. He took up the violin in addition to the pianoforte taught him by his aunt and joined the cadets' orchestra. In 1896 Nikisch conducted in St. Petersburg, and Miaskovsky was so impressed with the performances that he decided to devote himself to a musical career. But he was not allowed to study systematically and had to enter the Academy of Military Engineering in 1899 for a three years' course, at the end of which he was posted to Moscow. There at last, at Rimsky-Korsakov's recommendation, he was able to undertake a course of musical study, not under Taneyev, as Rimsky-Korsakov had advised, but under Glière, who had only just left the Conservatory. He remained with Glière from 1902 to 1904, by which time he had composed some songs, which however he destroyed later. He was then moved back to St. Petersburg, where at Glière's suggestion he continued studying with Kryzhanovsky until, in 1905, he was ready to enter the Conservatory as a pupil of Liadov. He was still under military orders and could thus not enlist as a full-time student. In 1907, however, his term of service came to an end, and he decided to abandon a military career altogether for a musical one. He now found it difficult to continue his Conservatory course owing to lack of money; but Liadov recommended him to some pupils and he was fortunate enough to obtain half the Glazunov scholarship with his first Symphony (Op. 3), composed in 1908, which helped to pay the fees. In 1907-8 he also wrote four sonatas and several dozen pieces for pianoforte, as well as the first string Quartet.

Miaskovsky left the St. Petersburg Conservatory in 1911. By this time he had written not only the first Symphony (which he revised in 1922), but also the second (Op. 11), two more string Quartets (later Op. 33 Nos. 3 & 4), a song-cycle, 'Madrigal', to words by Balmont and the symphonic poems 'Nevermore' (after Poe) and 'Alastor' (after Shelley). In 1911 he completed his Conservatory course of study under Liadov. He became a contributor to the magazine 'Muzika' and a teacher of harmony at one of the minor music schools in St. Petersburg. In 1914 he joined the army as a sapper and he served on the frontier until 1917. Later he was wounded while working on the naval fortifications at Talinn (Reval). He was then transferred to the Admiralty, where he did staff work in Moscow until he was demobilized in 1921, when he was appointed to a professorship at the Moscow Conservatory. He soon became the foremost teacher of composition in Russia, and he has trained many of the younger Russian composers.

Victor Belayev sees in Miaskovsky's music some superficial influences, such as that of Glazunov as regards symphonic structure and that of Scriabin in respect of harmonic idiom, while he attributes the composer's care to relate his music as much to human experience as to artistic principles to a certain affinity with Mussorgsky; but he maintains that such derivations confine themselves to generalities and that Miaskovsky's work reveals above all a strongly original creative personality. The composer himself says in his autobiography (published in 1936) that his first five symphonies express a subjective pessimism which he later abjured. No doubt his early admiration for Tchaikovsky had a good deal to do with this first tendency. In his later works he turned to optimistic expression more in line with the kind of music Soviet Russian composers are officially required to produce, and this no doubt helped to establish his reputation, which stands higher than that of any 20th-century composer in his country, with the possible exception of Prokofiev and Shostakovich, who have, however, both occasionally laid themselves open to censure from those who, if not better qualified to judge the public demand, are at any rate empowered to assess and voice it.

Miaskovsky is remarkable chiefly as the most prolific modern composer of symphonies, a list of which is appended.

- No. 1 (Op. 3), C mi. (1908, rev. 1922), prod. Povlovsk nr. St. Petersburg, 2 June 1914).
 No. 2 (Op. 11), C# mi. (1910-11), prod. Moscow, 24 July 1912.
 No. 3 (Op. 15), A mi. (1914), prod. Moscow, 27 Feb. 1915.
 No. 4 (Op. 17), E mi. (1918), prod. Moscow, 8 Feb. 1925.
 No. 5 (Op. 18), D ma. (1918), prod. Moscow, 18 July 1920.
 No. 6 (Op. 23), E♭ mi. (1921-23), prod. Moscow, 4 May 1924.
 No. 7 (Op. 24), B mi. (1922), prod. Moscow, 8 Feb. 1925.
 No. 8 (Op. 26), A ma. (1924-25), prod. Moscow, 23 May 1926.
 No. 9 (Op. 28), E mi. (1926-27), prod. Moscow, 29 Apr. 1928.
 No. 10 (Op. 30), F mi. (1927), prod. Moscow, 7 Apr. 1928.
 No. 11 (Op. 34), B♭ mi. (1931-32), prod. Moscow, 16 Jan. 1933.
 No. 12 (Op. 35), G mi. (1931-32), prod. Moscow, 1 June 1932, for the 15th anniversary of the October Revolution. (The work is based on Victor Gusev's 'Proletarians'.)
 No. 13 (Op. 36), B mi. (1933), prod. Chicago, 15 Nov. 1934.
 No. 14 (Op. 37), C ma. (1933), prod. Moscow, 24 Feb. 1935.
 No. 15 (Op. 38), D mi. (1933-34), prod. Moscow, 28 Oct. 1935.
 No. 16 (Op. 39), F ma. (1935-36), prod. Moscow, 24 Oct. 1936.
 No. 17 (Op. 41), C# mi. (1937), prod. Moscow, 17 Dec. 1937.
 No. 18 (Op. 42), C ma. (1937), prod. Moscow, 1 Oct. 1937.
 No. 19 (Op. 46), E♭ ma. (1939), for wind insts. prod. Moscow, 15 Feb. 1939.
 No. 20 (Op. 50), F ma. (1940), prod. Moscow, 28 Nov. 1940.
 No. 21 (Op. 51), F# mi. (1940, Stalin Prize), prod. Moscow, 16 Nov. 1940.
 No. 22 (Op. 54) (1941).
 No. 23 (Op. 56) (1941) (Symphony Suite on Caucasian Themes), prod. Moscow, 20 July 1942.
 No. 24 (Op. 57) (1943), prod. Moscow, 8 Feb. 1943.
 No. 25 (Op. 69) (1946), prod. Moscow, 15 Mar. 1947.
 No. 26 ?
 No. 27 (Op. 87).

The Artist of Merit title was conferred on Miaskovsky in 1926 and the honorary degree of Doctor of Arts in 1940.

The following is a list of other works of Miaskovsky:

CHORAL WORKS

- Op.
 61. Cantata 'Kirov is with us' for mezzo-soprano, baritone, chorus & orch. (1942).
 Also various mass choruses in unison, 2 parts or 4 parts, some unaccompanied, some with pf. (1909-41).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

(Symphonies see above)

- Op.
 — 'Preludio e fughetta' on the name of "Saradgef" (1907, rev. 1934).
 — 'Petite Overture', G ma. (1909).
 9. Symph. poem 'Nevermore' (after Edgar Allan Poe) (1909).
 10. 'Sinfonietta', A ma., for small orch. (1910).
 14. Symph. poem 'Alastor' (after Shelley) (1912).
 32. No. 1, 'Serenade', E♭ ma., for small orch. (1928).
 No. 2, 'Sinfonietta', B mi., for stgs. (1928-29).
 No. 3, 'Lyrical Concertino', G ma., for woodwind, stgs. & harp (1929).
 48. 'Greetings Overture', C ma. (1939).

VIOLIN AND ORCHESTRA

44. Concerto, D mi. (1938).

MILITARY BAND MUSIC

- 2 Marches (1930)
 1. Solemn March, B♭ ma.
 2. Dramatic March, F ma.
 53. 2 Marches (1941)
 1. F mi.
 2. F ma.
 60. Overture, G mi. (1942).

STRING QUARTETS

- Quartet, F ma. (not numbered) (1907).
 33. No. 1, Quartet No. 1, A mi. (1929-30).
 No. 2, Quartet No. 2, C mi. (1930).
 No. 3, Quartet No. 3, D mi. (1910, rev. 1931).
 No. 4, Quartet No. 4, F mi. (1909-19, rev. 1936).
 47. Quartet No. 5, E mi. (1939).
 49. Quartet No. 6, G mi. (1939-40).
 55. Quartet No. 7, F ma. (1941).
 59. Quartet No. 8, F# mi. (1942).
 62. Quartet No. 9, E mi. (1943).

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

12. Sonata, D ma. (1911).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- 7 Preludes (1899-1901).
 — 'Espiegleries', Set I, 6 pieces (1906).
 — 'Espiegleries', Set II, 6 pieces (1906-7).
 — 'Espiegleries', Set III, 12 pieces (1907).
 — 25 Fugues (1907-8).
 — Sonata, B ma. (not numbered) (1907-8).
 — 'Espiegleries', Set IV, 12 pieces (1907-8).
 6. Sonata No. 1, D ma. (1907-9).
 — Sonata, A♭ ma. (not numbered) (1908).
 — 'Espiegleries', Set V, 3 pieces (1908).
 — 'Espiegleries', Set VI, 3 pieces (1909-12).
 13. Sonata No. 2, F# mi. (1912).
 — 'Espiegleries', Set VII, 19 pieces (1917-19).
 19. Sonata No. 3, C mi. (1920).
 25. 'Whimsies', 6 sketches (1922).
 27. Sonata No. 4, C mi. (1924).
 29. 'Reminiscences', 6 pieces (1927).
 31. 'Yellowed Leaves', 7 bagatelles (1928).
 43. Children's Pieces (1938)
 1. 10 Very Easy Pieces (comp. 1908, 1917, 1938).
 2. 4 Little Polyphonic Pieces (comp. 1907).
 3. Simple Variations (comp. 1908).
 57. Sonatina, E mi. (1942).
 58. Rhapsody, B♭ mi. (1942).

SONGS

- 6 Songs (Konstantin Balmont) (1904).
 — 5 Songs (Zinaida Gippius) (1904-5).
 — 5 Songs (Balmont) (1906).
 1. 'Meditations', 7 songs (Baratinsky) (1907).
 2. 'On the Threshold', 9 songs (Gippius) (1904-6).
 4. 3 Songs (Gippius) (1905-8).
 5. 'Unseen', 4 songs (Gippius) (1904-8).
 7. 'Madrigal', 5 songs (Balmont) (1908-9).
 86. Sonnet (Michelangelo, trans. Tucheve) (1909).
 16. 'Premonitions', 6 songs (Gippius) (1913-14).
 20. 6 Songs (Alexander Blok) (1921).
 21. 'At Close of Day', 3 songs (Tucheve) (1922).
 22. 'Faded Garland', 8 songs (Delvig) (1925).
 — 'Four Songs of the Arctic Explorers' (anon., Svetlov & Zelvensky) (1934).
 40. 12 Songs (Lermontov) (1935-36).

Op.

43. 3 Songs (1938)

1. Flowerlet (Shchipachev).
2. The Birch (Shchipachev).
3. Conversation (Kvitko, trans. Mikhalkov).

52. 12 Songs (Shchipachev) (1940).

Also a number of separate songs without opus numbers.

E. B.

BIBL. — BOELZA, IGOR, 'Nikolai Miaskovsky's New Orchestral Works' (Mus.T., Apr. 1943).

IKONNIKOV, A., 'Myaskovsky: his Life and Work' (New York, 1946).

MIČA, František Václav¹ (b. Třebíč, Moravia, 5 Sept. 1694; d. ?, 15 Feb. 1744).

Moravian composer and tenor singer. He studied with his father and at the age of seventeen joined the household of Count Jan Questenberk at Jaroměřice. He conducted the orchestra there, produced operas and sang leading tenor parts. His first opera was written in 1729, and the following year he brought out an Italian opera, 'L' origine di Jaromeritz in Moravia'. Three more operas followed in 1730–37, two of them with Czech librettos. A number of oratorios are attributed to him, including 'Innocence Accused' (1729) and 'Oesterer Anstoss' (1730), also 'The Short Meditations' (1729) and 'The Sung Meditations' (1739) — probably liturgical works of some kind; and cantatas, 'Bellezza decoro' (1729), 'Nel giorno natalizio' (1732) and 'Operosa temi Colossi Moles' (1735), which are said to be in the Italian style.

Two symphonic compositions, also somewhat Italianate, a Symphony in D major and a 'Concertino notturno' in E♭ major, are now attributed to a cousin of the next generation. The Symphony, which was discovered in the parish church of Pelhřimov in 1936 by Dr. Jan Lauschmann, was taken up by Rafael Kubelik in 1946 and conducted by him at the Prague Festival that summer, as well as in London the following autumn. Its antecedents were at once questioned, for both its formal structure and its lay-out for an orchestra of 2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums and strings belong to the second, not the first half of the 18th century. A facsimile of the title-page of the bass part printed in the score merely says "Del signore Mitscha", and subsequent research in Czechoslovakia advanced the date to the period indicated by the internal stylistic evidence of the music. The same title-page prescribes a violetta in addition to two violins and bass: this violetta part was missing and had to be reconstructed for viola. The 'Concertino notturno' was found by Dr. Jan Raček of Brno in the library of Pernštejn castle in Moravia in 1944.

The general significance of the discovery of these two Slav composers bearing the name of Miča is not that there was a flourishing school of symphonic composition before the time of Haydn, but that besides the Czech musicians who spread out over central Europe, the members of the Stamiec family, for instance, to Mannheim (where the name was changed to Stamitz), the Benda family to Prussia and Thuringia, or Gluck to Vienna and Paris, there were others who remained at home cultivating the same international language of music — which is to say the Italian. Bohemia had a European reputation for its musicians in the 18th century, but nationalism at that time produced no more than the Doric of the universal classical tongue.

F. S. H.

BIBL. — HEFLERT, VLADIMÍR, 'Music at Old Czech Manors' (in Czech, Prague, 1916).

'Music at the Jaroměřice Manor' (do., Prague, 1924).

'Zur Entwicklungsgeschichte der Sonatenform' (A.M.W., 1915).

See also BIVIO (ballet in. for 'Demofonte').

MICHAEL (Michel), Roger (Rogier) (b. Mons, c. 1550; d. Dresden, prob. 1619).

Flemish singer and composer. He was the son of a certain Simon Michael, who is described as Mechanicus and Musicus to the Emperor Ferdinand I and seems to have taken his son to the imperial court in Vienna. Roger is first mentioned as being, before 1574, in the service of the Margrave Georg Friedrich of Ansbach as tenor singer. In 1575 he became tenor singer at the Saxon electoral chapel at Dresden. Under Scandello he gradually rose as a player as well as a singer until, on 12 Dec. 1587, he became Kapellmeister in succession to Georg Forster. He served four electors until 1619 and received substantial gratuities in land and money; but for some years before his death, owing to his age and growing infirmities, the elector was obliged to send for Michael Praetorius, and afterwards Heinrich Schütz, to take his place on all important occasions. Schütz definitely succeeded Michael in 1619. He was twice married and of his first wife had five sons, who all became musicians.

The second part of the Dresden 'Gesangbuch' of 1593 contains fifty-two Choralbearbeitungen by Michael, which Otto Kade describes as simple four-part settings, nota contra notam, with the chorale melody in the descant; but, judging from the specimen Kade himself gives in his supplements to Ambros's 'History', a setting of 'Ein feste Burg', we cannot call them simple harmonic settings in the modern sense, for they have something of the freedom of the motet style. Another work, not preserved complete, is a book of Introits for Sundays and Festivals, set as motets for five voices (1603).

The list of Michael's known works (including the above) is as follows:

'Der ander Theil der gebräuchlichsten und vornembsten Gesenge D. Mart. Luth. und anderer frommen Christen' (Dresden, 1593).

'Te Deum laudamus . . . sex vocibus compositum' (MS, 1595).

¹ The Polish and German spellings, Micza and Mitscha, are sometimes found.

- 'Hochzeitsgesang', 6 voices (MS, 1602).
 'Introitus dominicorum', 4 & 5 v. (Leipzig, 1603).
 'Carmen nuptiale' for Johann Georg of Saxony and Sybilla Elisabeth of Württemberg, 12 v. (MS, 1604).
 'Hochzeittied' for the same, 2 choirs of 4 v. (MS, 1604).
 Wedding music for Johann Georg and Magdalena Sybille, 8 v. (MS, 1607).
 Music for the birth of Prince Johann Georg of Saxony, son of Elector Johann Georg (Dresden, 1613).
 Psalm CXVI for 3-5 v. (Jena, 1623, posth., containing contributions by 15 composers, incl. music left by Michael and pieces by his sons Christian, Daniel and Tobias).
 'Kirchweihlied' (Psalm CXXII), 6 v. (MS).
 'Kirchweihlied' ("Visita qua sumus Dominae"), 8 v. (in a collection dated 1593-96).
 Libraries at Dresden, Berlin and Freiberg contain MSS of 2 Passions, a German Mass, sacred histories, 'Cantiones' published in 1593, &c.

J. R. M., adds.

- BIBL. - FRANK, JOHANNES, 'Die Introitus-Kompositionen von Rogier Michael' (Buckeburg, 1937).
 OSTHOFF, HELMUTH, 'Die Historien Rogier Michaels' ('Festschrift Arnold Schering', Berlin, 1937).

MICHAEL, Tobias (b. Dresden, 13 June 1592; d. Leipzig, 26 June 1657).

German composer of Flemish descent, son of the preceding. He was at first a soprano singer at the Dresden court chapel under his father and received his further education at Schulpforta and Wittenberg. In 1619 he became Kapellmeister at Sondershausen and in 1631 he succeeded Schein as cantor and musical director of St. Thomas's church at Leipzig. His chief work is 'Musikalische Seelenlust', of which Part I (1634-35) contains 30 sacred pieces for 5 voices in the madrigal style, and Part II (1637) 50 pieces in 1-6 parts in the concerto style for voices and instruments.

J. R. M.

MICHAELIDES, Solon (b. Nicosia, Cyprus, 12 Nov. 1905).

Greek composer and musicologist. He studied first at the T.C.M. in London and afterwards in Paris with Nadia Boulanger (harmony, counterpoint and fugue) at the École Normale and with Guy de Lioncourt, d'Indy's successor (composition) and Marcel Labey (conducting) at the Schola Cantorum. In 1934 he founded the Conservatory at Limassol, Cyprus, of which he is the director, and a concert association which for some years (1935-40) gave performances at Limassol and other towns in the island. He is a member of the Executive Board of the International Folk Music Council.

Michaelides joined the Executive Board of the International Musical Eisteddfod of Llangollen in 1948 and was re-elected in 1951. He is also a member of the Examiners' Board at the Paris École César Franck. He gave several lectures on Greek music in London and other cities of Great Britain (1946-48) and took an active part in the international congresses of folk music held at Basel (Sept. 1948) and Venice (Sept. 1949).

As a scholar Michaelides has contributed to various literary and musical magazines and published the following studies and books (all in Greek, except the last, which is in English):

- 'Modern British Music' (Nicosia, 1939).
 'Cyprus Folk Music' (Nicosia, 1944).
 'Modern Greek Music' (Nicosia, 1945).
 'Modern Harmony', 2 vols. (Limassol, 1946).
 'Hellenic Music' (1952).
 'The Neo-Hellenic Folk Music' (Limassol, 1948).

His compositions include the following:

- Opera 'Ulysses', in 3 acts, libretto by composer, based on Homer's 'Odyssey' (1950-51).
 Incidental music for Greek tragedies ('Electra', 'Medea', 'Iphigenia in Tauris').
 'The Tomb', cantata for solo voices, chorus & orch.
 Symphonic poem 'De profundis' for orch.
 2 'Greek Symphonic Pictures' for orch.
 2 'Byzantine Sketches' for stg. orch.
 'Symphonic Sketch' for flute & stgs.
 'Archaic Suite' for flute, harp & stgs.
 String Quartet.
 Pf. Trio.
 Pf. pieces.
 Songs.

E. B.

Michaelis, Sophus. See Albert (E. d'), 'Revolutionshochzeit'.

MICHALOWICZ, Mieczysław (b. Miłotopól, 17 June 1872).

Polish violinist. He was a pupil of Barcewicz at the Warsaw and of Auer at the St. Petersburg Conservatories. In 1906 he began a pedagogic career at the Warsaw Conservatory, where he educated many Polish violinists. His most famous pupils were Bronislaw Huberman and Joseph Akhron.

C. R. H.

MICHAŁOWSKI, Aleksander (b. Kamieniec Podolski, 17 May 1851; d. Warsaw, 1938).

Polish pianist, teacher and composer. He studied under Moscheles, Coccia and Reinecke at the Leipzig Conservatory (1867-69) and later continued his studies under Tausig in Berlin. In 1870 he returned to Poland and settled in Warsaw. He appeared frequently on the concert platform and was considered one of the best exponents of Chopin's music. He had a "tremendous technique" which was highly appreciated and admired. In 1891 he became professor of the concert pianists' class at the Warsaw Conservatory. He was celebrated both as pianist and teacher.

Michałowski composed numerous pieces of a brilliant character for the pianoforte, now completely forgotten, and edited an instructive edition of Chopin's works.

C. R. H.

MICHEAU, Janine (b. Toulouse, 17 Apr. 1914).

French soprano singer. She was educated at Toulouse Secondary School and studied music in her native town and at the Paris Conservatoire. She has sung in opera and concerts in many countries, including Paris, the Teatro alla Scala at Milan, the Colón Theatre in Buenos Aires and at Chicago. She has made a number of recordings and has broadcast from Geneva, Brussels, Rome, Paris and other capital cities.

M. K. W.

MICHEL. See YOST, MICHEL.

MICHEL-ANGE (Opera). See ISOUARD.

MICHEL ANGELO. See CANCEINO.

MICHELANGELO, Arturo Benedetti (b. Brescia, 5 Jan. 1920).

Italian pianist. He studied at Brescia at the Istituto Musicale Venturi and at the Milan Conservatory; in 1939 he won the first prize at the International Musical Competition of Geneva. He is perhaps (after the late Dinu Lipatti) the most brilliant and the most musical of those pianists who have become internationally famous since the second world war. England first heard him in 1946, when he made a great impression both by his technical powers and by the freshness of his approach to familiar music. He is a master of fine tonal gradations, and, thanks to a very light use of the sustaining pedal, his part-playing is exceptionally distinct. D. S.-T.

Michelangelo (Michelagnolo Buonarroti). See Arcadelt (2 poems). Britten (7 songs). Dallapiccola (7 choruses). Frottola (poems set). Gade (N. V., overture). Harris (W. H., 'Confession of Faith', choral work). Haug (oratorio on M.). Liszt (No. 112, 'Ode funèbre' for orch.). Miaskovsky (sonnet for voice & pf.). Pfitzner (chorus with orch.). Pizzetti (song). Schmid (E., songs). Schoeck (2 songs). Strauss (R., song). Streicher (T., 12 songs). Taneyev (S. I., voc. trio). Trunk (choral work). Valen ('Sonetto' for orch.). Vycpálek (partsong). Wolf (H., 3 songs).

Michelangelo (jun.). See Buonarroti.

MICHELANGELO DEL VIOLINO. See VEROVIO, M. A.

MICHELI, Domenico (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-century composer. He lived at Bologna in 1564 and at Ravenna in 1581. He composed a book of masses for 5 voices and 5 books of madrigals a 5 and 6, with some 'Dialoghi' of 8 and 10 parts. E. v. d. s.

MICHELI, Romano (b. Rome, c. 1575¹; d. Rome, ?).

Italian composer. He studied music in Rome under Francesco Soriano and acquired fame among his contemporaries as a learned contrapuntist. Doni² describes him as a "peritissimo contrapuntista, ed allievo in questa professione del Soriani". Printz³ also praises Micheli's work "in dem stylo canonico". Micheli made a tour of all the more important towns in Italy—Milan, Ferrara, Bologna, Venice, Florence and Naples; he met many celebrated musicians, with whom there was much friendly rivalry in the pastime of composing music on given themes. In the preface to 'Musica vaga' (1615) he gives an account of his travels; he was warmly received at Venice, and adds:

non solo darmi occasione di comporre diverse opere ecclesiastiche a mio benepiacito, ma anche alcuni motetti con obblighi, e canoni diversi, datomi da ciascuno il soggetto, come in essi motetti e canoni è annotato.

In 1616 he was maestro di cappella at the Church of Concordia at Modena. He became a priest; in 1610 he was already a clerico and in 1621 he was placed for a time at Aquileia. He returned to Rome in 1625 as maestro di cappella at the Church of San Luigi de' Francesi. One of Banchieri's 'Lettere armoniche'⁴ (Bologna, 1628), p. 50, is addressed to "Sig. D. Romano Micheli, Roma". In 1659 he was still alive at the age of eighty-four.

Micheli took part in an amusing squabble as to the relative merits of German and Italian composers, between the Italian organist Marco Scacchi and Paul Syfert, organist at Danzig. The latter asserted that Italian compositions were of a trivial character, and that their authors should go to Danzig and study genuine music. Micheli promptly sent copies of his musical works to both Syfert and Forster of Danzig, with a request that they should test Italian work before they condemned it. The effect was immediate, a polite reply was received in Feb. 1647 and the matter then dropped. Scacchi himself was not so ready to acknowledge Micheli's pre-eminence. The work entitled 'Canoni musicali composti sopra le vocali di più parole da Romano Micheli romano, del qual modo di comporre egli è inventore' (Rome, 1645) roused him to publish a protest (Warsaw, 16 Mar. 1647) against the assumption that Micheli was the originator of this type of canon, which could be traced to a much earlier date. Micheli replied by the publication of a collection of canons, full of the most ingenious devices, entitled 'La potestà pontificia diretta dalla santissima Trinità'. The manuscript inscribed 'Canoni musicali di Romano Micheli romano' was preserved in the library of Sant' Agostino.⁵

LIST OF WORKS

- ¹ Psalms ad officium vesperarum musicis notis expressi et ternis vocibus decantandi. Una cum parte organica. Romano Michaeli clerico romano auctore. Liber primus. Romae. J. B. Robblectum (1610), 4to.
- ² Musica vaga et artificiosa continente motetti con obblighi, e canoni diversi, etc. Di D.R.M. rom. Venetia. Giacomo Vincenti (1615), folio. In the B.M.; the music, writes Burney (History, III, 319), shows nothing but "toil and pedantry".
- ³ Salmi per i vesperi a tre voci in concerto da cantarsi in diversi modi . . . con il basso continuo per l'organo. Libro secondo. Opera terza. Venetia. Magni (1615), 4to.
- ⁴ Completa a sei voci con tre tenori concertata all'uso moderno con il basso continuo per l'organo di D.R.M. rom. maestro di cappella nella cattedrale di Concordia. Venetia (1616). Fétis gives an edition of 1618.
- ⁵ Lettera di R.M. rom. alli . . . sig. eccellentissimi musici della cappella di N.S. ed altri musici romani miei Patroni osservandissimi. Venetia. G. Vincenti (1618). Contains a canon in twelve parts.
- ⁶ Madrigali a sei voci in canone, con la resolutione delle parti, nel quale per mezzo de gli accidenti l'armonia discende un' tuono e di poi ascende il tuono già disceso, potendosi anco cantare per i suoi riversi, come li musici periti sanno; studio curioso non più veduto. Con un avviso a tutti li

¹ The 'Avviso inviato' of 1650 gives the approximate date, saying that it was written "nella sua riguardevole età di anni 75" (Parisini, I, 89).

² Annotazioni (1640), p. 395.

³ Sing- und Klinkkunst (1690) chap. xii.

⁴ Parisini, I, 4.

⁵ Baini, 'Memorie storico-critiche', II, 34, n. 473.

- Sig. musici di Roma. Dato in luce da R.M. rom. Beneficiato nella metropoli d'Aquileia. Roma. Soldi' (1621). Contains the madrigal 'O voi che sospirate', which was afterwards printed by Angelo Berardi both in his 'Miscellanea musicale' (Bologna, 1689), p. 60, and in his 'Arcani musicali' (1690), p. 14; he describes it as written "con nobilissimo artificio".
- * Certezza d'artificii musicali, non più fatti, contenuti nelli dieci obblighi della messa a dieci voci; con la risposta all'opposizione, fatta dal Sig. A. Antonelli, musico in Roma, sopra la quantità di essi obblighi. Dato in luce da R.M. rom. Beneficiato nella metropoli di Aquileia. Venetia. Bonfadino' (1621), 4to.
- * Copia di lettera con manoscritta mandata dal Sig. A. Antonelli musico in Roma a me R.M., ecc., con la risposta fattagli nelle presente stampe, ... Venetia. Bonfadino' (1621), 4to.
- * Vivit Deus. Canones super plurium verborum vocalibus: quod artificium componendi, neque in Italia, nec alibi hactenus visum est nonnullaque curioso artificio ad musices peritissimos pertinentia. Auctore R.M. rom. Opus sextum. Romae. L. Grignani' (1649), folio.
- * Avviso inviato da me R.M. insieme col foglio reale del canone musicale Fons Signatus, alli famosi e peritissimi sig. musici d'Italia e di tutti gl'altri Regni, ... Roma. Grignani' (1650), 4to.
- * Canone musicale a quattro voci, ad honore della concezione della B.V.M., composto sopra le vocali di nuovo, e curioso artificio, ... Opera et inventione pellegrina di R.M. rom. Romia, L. Grignani' (1650).
- Baini also mentions the following three works:
- 'Li salmi a quattro voci' (Venice, 1638).
- 'Le messe a quattro voci' (Rome, 1650).
- 'Li responsori a cinque voci' (Rome, 1658).
- Kircher, 'Musurgia universalis' (Rome, 1650), I, 583-84, prints a canon in thirty-six parts, distributed among nine choirs, composed by Micheli, "one of those who had revived the forgotten art of writing canons".
- MSS. In the Dresden Library, MS 375b, an aria scored for voice and instruments. (Eitner.)
- In the B.M. Add. MSS 11,588, ff. 148, 149, 'Canon di Romano Micheli', 1615, and 'Canone del Metallo, dal Romano Micheli'; both from Micheli's 'Musica vaga et artificiosa' (1615).

C. S.

MICHNA, Adam Václav (b. Jindřichův Hradec, Bohemia, c. 1600; d. Jindřichův Hradec, 1676).

Czech composer and poet. He came of an old armigerous family and in his later years signed himself Adamus Wenceslaus Michna de Ottradowitz. He was probably a son of the organist Michael Michna. In 1611-17 he studied, with a short interruption, at the Jesuit College of his birthplace and in 1633 he already worked as an organist there. Being a well-educated and esteemed man, he did much to raise the local musical standards. He also showed his sincere devotion to music by instituting a benevolent endowment for student-musicians. It is noteworthy that at the same time he was a wine merchant. He died between 30 June and 22 Sept. 1676.

Recent research has thrown light upon Michna's importance as a composer. With P. Vejvanovský he was, indeed, the leading personality of the Czech music of his time. He composed and published three collections of simple sacred hymns and tunes to his own words in a suitable polyphonic arrangement, i.e. 'Česká Maryánská Muzyka' ('Czech Music for the Virgin Mary') (Prague, 1647), 'Lautna Česká' ('The Czech Lute')

(Prague, 1653) and 'Swato-Ročníj Muzyka . . .' ('The Music of the Holy Year') (Prague, 1661). His skilled art may be better appreciated in 'Sacra et Litaniae a 5, 6, 7, 8 vocom cum instrumentis' (Prague, 1654), containing 5 masses (of particular interest is Mass No. 2 in G major, with a Czech folksong as cantus firmus), a Requiem, 2 litanies and a 'Te Deum'. From the printed 'Officium vespertinum' (Prague, 1648) only cantus i is preserved; 'Cantiones sacrae' for 1-6 voices and 1-5 instruments were probably lost altogether.

There are two manuscript compositions which admirably manifest Michna's creative power, i.e. 'Missa S. Venceslai' for solo voices, 6-part chorus, 2 violins, 4 violas, 2 clarini and organ, preserved in the archives of Kroměříž (Moravia), revived there by the choral society 'Moravan' on 29 June 1930 and since broadcast repeatedly, as well as 'Magnificat I' toni' for 16 voices and 10 instruments, preserved in the Municipal Library at Breslau (now Wrocław, Poland). Both of them may justly be ranked with the finest musical products of the baroque era. Some other manuscript compositions are missing, probably lost (particularly a 'Te Deum 10 vocom' listed in the inventory at Třebenice). A modern edition of 'Lautna Česká' has been published by E. Trola (Prague, 1943). G. Č.

BIBL. — MUK, J., 'A Michna z Ottradovic' (Jindřichův Hradec, n.d.).

TROLA, E., 'Neznámé skladby A. Michny' ('A. Michna's Unknown Compositions') in 'Sborník prací k 50. narozeninám Z. Nejedlého' ('Symposium for Z. Nejedlý's 50th birthday', Prague, 1928).

MICHO, Richard. See MICO.

Miciński, Tadeusz. See Róžicki (L., songs). Szymanowski ('Prince Potemkin', incid. m.; 10 songs).

Mickiewicz, Adam. See Chopin (acquaintance with). Dobrzyński ('Konrad Wallenrod', incid. m.). Duniecki (songs). Glinka (2 songs). Jarecki (II., 'Father's Return', opera). Melcer ('Pan Twardowski', choral ballad). Moniuszko (3 choral works). Moor (K., 'Polonia', symph. poem). Morawski ('Pan Tadeusz', opera). Niewiadomski (7 songs). Opiński (cantata in honour of M.). Paderewski (6 songs). Ponchielli ('Lituanii', opera). Rimsky-Korsakov ('Switezianka', cantata, 2 songs). Róžicki (L., choral hymn). Szopski ('Lilie', opera). Szymanowska (mother-in-law; songs). Tchaikovsky ('Voyevoda', symph. ballad; 3 songs). Troschel (songs). Wiechowicz (cantata). Zelenki ('Konrad Wallenrod', opera).

MICO (Micho), Richard (b. ?; d. ?, before 1665).

English composer. He is described as "deceas'd" in Simpson's 'Compendium' of 1665¹, where he is mentioned in a short list of good composers of fantasies. Roger North also mentions him in a similar list in his 'Memoires of Musick' (1728).² Mico wrote both fantasies and pavans for viols. The fantasies are of only moderate interest, but he composed at least one small masterpiece of quiet beauty, a pavan for four viols. R. D.

See also Fantasy.

¹ Ed. of 1732, p. 115. ² Ed. Rimbault, 1846, p. 84.

MICROLOGUS (from the Gr. adj. μικρο-λόγος, "having regard to small things" — from μικρός, "little", and λόγος, "a word"; Lat. sermo brevis, an "epitome" or "compendium"). A name given by two celebrated authors to works containing an epitome of all that was known of music at the time they were written.

(1) The 'Micrologus' of Guido d' Arezzo is believed to have been compiled about the year 1025. Valuable manuscript copies of this curious work are preserved in the Vatican Library in Rome as well as in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, the B.M. and other European collections. The treatise was printed in 1784 by Gerbert, Prince Abbot of St. Blasien, in his great work entitled 'Scriptores ecclesiastici de musica'; and in 1876 Hermesdorff published a copy of the original text at Trier, side by side with a German translation. Considerable variations occur in the ancient manuscripts. An admirable edition of Guido's 'Micrologus' was prepared by Dom Ambrogio Amelli, O.S.B., Prior of Monte Cassino, and published in 1904.

(2) A less celebrated but scarcely less valuable treatise entitled 'Musice active micrologus' was printed at Leipzig in 1517, by Andreas Ornithoparcus (or Ornithoparchus).

The following are the various editions through which it passed:

1. Leipzig, Jan. 1517. The colophon runs as follows:

Excussum est hoc opus Lipsiae in aedibus Valentini — Schuman. Mense Januario, Anni virginei partus De | cimiseptimi supra sesquimillesimū Leone de | cimo pont. max. ac Maximiliano | gloriosissimo Impatore orbi terrar | praesidentibus. |

This is the first edition, and only one copy is known to exist, in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, the whole of sheet A of which is wanting. It was described by Fétis, who, however, confuses it with the second edition.

2. Leipzig, Nov. 1517. Described in Panzer (IX, 496). The colophon is:

Excussum est hoc opus, ab ipso autore denuo castigatum, | recognitumq: Lipsie in edibus Valentini Schumannii, calco- | graphi solertissimi: Mense Nouēbr: Anni virginei partus de- | cimi septimi supra sesquimillesimū. Leone decimo Pont. Max. | ac Maximiliano inuictissimo impatore orbi terrar | psidētibus. |

This edition, though the colophon clearly proves the contrary, is generally described as the first. Copies of it are in the B.M., State Library, Berlin, Darmstadt Library, Library of St. Mark's, Venice, University of Bonn, and one was in the "Rosenthal Antiquariat", Munich, May 1888.

3. Leipzig, 1519. The colophon runs:

Excussum est hoc opus: denuo castigatum recognitumq: | Lipsie in edibus Valentini Schumannii: calco- graphi solertissi | mi: Mense Aprili; Anni virginei partus vndeigesimi supra | sesquimillesimum. |

There are copies of this in Berlin (State Library), Munich (State Library), Königsberg (see M.f.M., 1870, p. 47), Göttingen (University Library) and Brussels (see 'Catalogue de la Bibliothèque de F. J. Fétis', p. 621). A copy is said (M.f.M., VIII, 22) to be in the Ratsschulbibliothek of Zwickau. Fétis says there is an edition of 1521 in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, though on inquiry the only copy found there was that of Jan. 1517. The colophon he quotes is that of the 1519 edition, but he seems to have imagined that "undeigesimi" meant twenty-one, instead of nineteen. His statement was copied by Mendel.

4. Cologne, 1533. The title-page runs:

Andræ Ornithoparchi Meyningensis, De arte cantandi micrologus, libris quatuor digestus, omnibus musicæ studiosis non tam utilis quam necessarius, diligenter recognitus. Colonia apud Joannem Gymnicum, anno 1533.

A copy of this edition is in the Bibliothèque du Conservatoire National de Musique, Paris (see Weckerlin's Catalogue, p. 209).

5. Cologne, 1535. An edition without colophon, similar to the preceding. A copy is in the State Library at Munich.

6. Gerber ('Lexicon', ed. 1813, III, 618) quotes Schacht's Bibl. Music. (1687) to the effect that there exists an edition in oblong 8vo, printed by Johannes Gymnicus at Cologne in 1540, but no copy of this is known to exist.

This work, written in the quaint Latin peculiar to the 16th century, contains the substance of a series of lectures delivered by the author at the Universities of Heidelberg, Mainz and Tübingen, and is divided into four separate books.

In 1609 John Dowland printed a correct though deliciously quaint English translation in London, and it is through the medium of this that the work is best known in Britain. Hawkins, indeed, though he mentions the Latin original, gives all his quotations from Dowland's version. W. S. R. & W. B. S.

MICROTONES. Fractional notes of less than quarter-tones, not a normal element in western composition, but used by the Mexican composer Julián Carrillo, who wrote music on a microtone system of his own and invented special instruments to produce the notes.

MICZA. See MIČA.

MIDAS. A famous work of the second period of English ballad opera by Kane O'Hara. It is a classical extravaganza and a parody of Italian opera. It was produced in London, at Covent Garden, on 22 Feb. 1764.¹

The music was selected from popular melodies, and the piece held the stage for many years. It was revised and acted at Drury Lane Theatre in London on 25 Oct. 1802, when Michael Kelly took the part of Apollo, previously filled by Vernon and by Mattocks.

¹ It was played privately at Lurgan in 1760, and was brought out at the Crow Street Theatre, Dublin, on 22 Jan. 1762.

Another revival took place at Covent Garden on 17 Sept. 1812, Sinclair taking Apollo. The pretty song "Pray Goody please to moderate the rancour of your Tongue", appears in the opera, the air of which has been variously ascribed to Rousseau, Oswald and Burney. The music of the opera was first published by Walsh; the revised edition of 1802 by Birchall.

F. K.

MIDDLE C. The conventional name for the note C roughly in the centre of the pianoforte keyboard (c' in the pitch notation used in this Dictionary) and noted on the middle line of the stave in the alto clef:

E. B.

MIDDLETON, Hubert Stanley (b. Windsor, 11 May 1890).

English organist and composer. He received his musical education at the R.A.M. in London (F.R.A.M. 1928) and went thence to Cambridge (M.A., Mus.B. 1920). He held two cathedral organist's posts, at Truro (1920-26) and Ely (1926-31). While at the latter he joined the teaching-staff of the R.A.M. (1928) and in the same year was given an external Fellowship at his old College, Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he also became Director of Music in 1933. By that time he had been appointed (1931) organist of Trinity College there, where he also became Director of Studies in Music.

An able organist, well versed in the best traditions of cathedral music, and a man of liberal views and strong character, Middleton has taken an important place in the music life of Cambridge and in the education of the R.A.M. In 1938 he was appointed University lecturer in music. His few compositions are mainly for the church. They include 'Let my prayer', a motet in canon for double choir, and 'Praise to the Holiest', an anthem for double choir and organ, works which exhibit a high standard of scholarship and fine musical discrimination. He took his degree of Mus.D. in 1937.

H. C. C.

Middleton, Thomas. See Johnson (R. 2, ? 'Witch', ncid. m.). Locke (do. choruses introd. into 'Macbeth').

MIDGLEY, Samuel. See BRADFORD.

MIDGLEY-WALKER ORGAN. See ELECTROPHONIC INSTRUMENTS.

MIDGLEY, Walter (b. Bramley, Yorkshire, ?).

English tenor singer. He was educated at Rotherham and at Sheffield University, and during the second world war did a good deal of work for E.N.S.A. In 1947 he made his London debut at Covent Garden, when he sang Prince Calaf in 'Turandot'. Since then he has sung in 'La Bohème' and 'Il Trova-tore' with the Carl Rosa Company and in 'Cavalleria rusticana', 'La Bohème' and 'The Barber of Seville' at Sadler's Wells. In 1948 he sang in Verdi's 'Macbeth' at the Edinburgh Festival and in 1949 made an extensive tour of Australia and New Zealand, also singing in Honolulu and San Francisco. He returned as guest artist to Covent Garden in 1950 and has appeared in several operas, including 'Rigoletto', 'Madam Butterfly' and other Italian operas, in which he specializes, as well as in 'Manon'.

Midgley attracted attention at once at his first appearance in opera, in spite of indifferent acting, by singing "Nessun dorma" in 'Turandot' not only with great beauty of tone and subtlety of phrasing, but also with fine artistic restraint.

M. K. W.

MIDI, LE. The title of the second of a group of 3 symphonies by Haydn (Nos. 6-8), in C major, composed about 1761. The others are 'Le Matin', in D major, and 'Le Soir et la tempête', in G major.

MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC. See BIRMINGHAM.

MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, A. The music by Mendelssohn for Shakespeare's play consists of two parts:

(1) The overture was written between 7 July and 6 Aug. 1826, and was first performed in public at Stettin in Feb. 1827, and in London, Argyll Rooms, 24 June 1829, Mendelssohn conducting.

(2) The incidental music was composed in 1843 in obedience to the desire of the King of Prussia, and was produced on the stage at the New Palace at Potsdam on 14 Oct. of that year. The first performance in London, at the Philharmonic, was under the composer's direction on 27 May 1844.

G.

For other musical works based on the play see SHAKESPEARE.

MIECHURA. See MĚCHURA.

MIEG, Peter (b. Lenzburg, Canton Aargau, 5 Sept. 1906).

Swiss pianist, critic and composer. He studied the histories of art, literature and music at the Universities of Zürich, Basel and Paris, and took the Ph.D. at Zürich in 1933, where he also studied the pianoforte under Emil Frey. As a composer he is a pupil of Frank Martin. He returned to live at his birthplace in 1938 and devotes himself to a varied career of pianist, composer and contributor to various Swiss and foreign newspapers and periodicals as art and music critic. In 1946 he obtained a gramophone prize from the 'Weltwoche' for the recording of his Concertos for two pianofortes.

It is by his music for the pianoforte, alone or in combination, that Mieg has particularly made his mark as a composer. His clear, often playful and brilliant style, which owes something to Stravinsky and Bartók, is decidedly linear and polyphonic. He favours hard, bright sounds and chromatic progressions. Diminished octaves and minor ninths are characteristic of his chord formations, which frequently produce an abstract and stylized effect. The following works are the most important:

- Ballet 'Daphne' (1943).
- Concerto No. 1 for 2 pls. (1930).
- Concerto No. 2 for 2 pls. (1934).
- Pf. Concerto (1947).
- Vn. Concerto (1949).
- 2 String Quartets.
- String Trio.
- Divertimento for oboe, vn., viola & cello (1950).
- 4 pf. Sonatas (1934-44).
- Pf. works for 2 and 4 hands.
- Songs.

Among Mieg's articles the following may be mentioned:

- 'Zu Stravinsky's Klavier-Werk' (Schweiz. Mus. Ztg., 1947, No. 6).
- 'Tschairowskys Klaviermusik' (ibid., 1948, No. 10).
- 'Blick auf das neuere kompositorische Schaffen in Zurich' (ibid., 1950, No. 5).

K. V. F.

BIBL. — GATTIKER, H., Article in Schweiz. Mus. Ztg., 1948, No. 10.

MIELCK, Ernest (Leopold Christian) (b. Viborg [Viipuri], 24 Oct. 1877; d. Locarno, 22 Oct. 1899).

Finnish composer. He was a pupil of Max Bruch in Berlin from 1891 to 1894. During his very short life he composed several works of lasting value: a 'Finnish Symphony', a 'Dramatic Overture' and other pieces for orchestra, a string Quartet, a string Quintet, choruses, etc.

A. R.

MIŁCZEWSKI, Marcin (b. ?; d. Warsaw, Sept. 1651).

Polish composer. As early as 1638 he was a member of the court band in Warsaw, where he remained until 1644. From 1645 he acted as conductor of the band of the Prince Karol Ferdinand, Bishop of Płock. The last years of his life he spent in Warsaw. In 1643 M. Scacchi published at Venice, in the collection entitled 'Cribrum musicum', a double canon in 4 parts by Miłczewski. This was the only work by this master to be published during his lifetime. Soon after his death J. Havemann published in Berlin, in the collection 'Jesu hilf' (1659), a concerto by Miłczewski entitled 'Deus in nomine tuo', for bass solo and 2 violins, bassoon and organ.

Miłczewski's compositions (manuscripts) are preserved in seven libraries. In Poland: (1) in the Archives of the Cracow Chapter, (2) at the Cistercian Monastery of Odra, (3) in the National Library, Warsaw, (4) in the Town Library at Gdańsk; in Germany: (5) at the Joachimstaler Gymnasium, Templin,

¹ Both in Polish and foreign manuscripts and publications he is mentioned under different spellings of his name: Miłcowski, Miłczewski, Miłszewski, Myłczewski or Miłchevsky, and some of his manuscripts are marked only "M. M." with an addition of "Polon." or "Polonus".

(6) in the Prussian National Library, Berlin; in France: (7) in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris.

His most important works are as follows:

- 'Gaude Dei Genetrax', 5 parts a cappella (complete), bearing the date 1650.
- 'Missa 4 vocum pro Nativitate D. N. Jesu Chr.' (complete) initialled "M. M." only.
- 'Pro natiuitate D. Jesu Christi.'
- 'Adoramus Te Christe', 4 parts a cappella (incomplete).
- 'Exaudi Domine J. Chr.', 4 parts a cappella (incomplete).
- 'Missa Rorate de Beata Virgine Maria', 4 parts and continuo, dated 1681.
- 'Missa Salve Sancta', 2 A, 2 T & B.
- 'Missa cibavit eos.'
- 'Missa Requiem.'
- 'Anima mea in aeterna.'
- 'Audite et admiramini a 14: 8 voc. et 6 instrum.; 2 S, 2 A, 2 T, 2 B, 2 vns., 4 other insts. & organ (this copy was made by the Cantor Craton Buettner).
- 'Magnificat anima mea a 9 vel 13 voc. (4 voc. et 5 instr. cum Ripieno et cum Basso Cont. pro organo, auctum et reparatum per G. Nauwerck pro tunc cantore)', complete and dated 1688.
- 'Missa super O gloriosa Domina', 6 parts, dated 1651.
- 'Benedictio et claritas, motetto concertato a 2 violini, 4 tromboni et 6 voc.'
- 'Veni Domine et noli tardare, concerto a 3', complete.

All his compositions, amounting to just over forty, may be classified as belonging to two different styles: an older, traditional church style based on a cantus firmus and the more "modern" one freed from any dependence on plainsong and thus seeking new means of expression. Miłczewski was, to a certain extent, influenced by Italian masters such as Neri, Frescobaldi, Chiese, Cazzati and Gabrieli, but was nevertheless a distinguished composer whose music has been revived in Poland and elsewhere since 1910. C. R. H.

BIBL. — CHYBIŃSKI, 'A. E.', 'Miłczewski's Concerto' ('Musical Quarterly', Warsaw, 1929).

'The Instrumental Canzona by Miłczewski' (Lwów, 1928).

JACHIMECKI, Z., 'Catalogue of Works by Miłczewski' (Cracow, 1913).

MIŁECKI (Miłecensis), Marcin (b. Miłec, ?; d. ?).

Polish 17th-century musician. He was the son of Wawrzyniec Miłeczki. After completing his musical education and taking holy orders he became a Roratist and five years later Praepositus of the Capella Rorantistarum (1624-28). In this post he was succeeded by the Italian ecclesiastic Annibal Orgas. C. R. H.

MIERCZYŃSKI, Stanisław (¹Warsaw, 1894; d. Kielce, 25 Mar. 1952).

Polish folk-music collector, publisher and composer. He studied with S. Barcewicz (violin) and Guzewski and Mellerowicz (theory) at the Warsaw Conservatory. In 1930 he published a collection, 'Muzyka Podhala' ('Music of Podhalia', the northern part of the Polish Tatra mountains), consisting of 101 tunes and airs arranged for the peasant band which customarily comprises two violins and a small string bass.² The preface to this collection was written by Karol Szymanowski. Five years later Mierczyński published yet another collection of 101 songs from Podhale, this time arranged for three equal voices and with the words as sung by the Góral's (Polish highlanders).

² The small bass resembles the cello in shape and has either four or three strings. It is played like the double bass. The four-stringed instrument is tuned D, d, a, A and the three-stringed one D, d, A.

In 1939 there appeared a new series of folk music, 'Muzyka huculszczyny' ('Music of the Hutsuls', the inhabitants of eastern Polish Carpathian mountains), which comprised 163 airs with their original texts as well as tunes for solo instruments such as recorder, trombita (a kind of alpine horn), dudy (a kind of bagpipe¹) and for different ensembles composed of four players (recorder, violin, dulcimer and drum). To this volume an introduction was written by S. Vincenz and illustrations were drawn by Edward Bartłomiejczyk.

Mierczyński also wrote partsongs for 4 voices and instrumental compositions in popular style.

C. R. H.

MIERZEJEWSKI, Mieczysław (b. Poznań, 10 Nov. 1905).

Polish conductor and composer. He studied first at the State Conservatory of Poznań and then in Warsaw under Gregor Fitelberg and Emil Młynarski (conducting). He continued his studies at the State Academy for Music in Berlin (1930–31).

His career as conductor began at the Poznań Opera (1927–28). After his return from Berlin he became the conductor of the Warsaw Philharmonic Orchestra and of the Warsaw Opera, and for two years permanent conductor of the Polskie Radio Symphony Orchestra (1935–37). With the Polish National Ballet he visited France, England, Germany, the Baltic States and the U.S.A. During the Paris Exhibition of 1937 he received a Diplôme d'honneur. In 1937–38 he appeared as guest conductor with the London Philharmonic Orchestra, the Orchestre Symphonique de Paris and the Berlin Rundfunk orchestra. His compositions include 'Dożynki' ('Harvest Home') for solo voices, chorus and orchestra, an overture and many songs for solo voice and for chorus.

C. R. H.

MIERZWIŃSKI, Władysław (b. Warsaw, 21 Oct. 1850; d. Paris, 15 July 1909).

Polish tenor singer. He studied singing first in Poland and then for nearly eight years in Paris. He toured widely in Europe and America. The enormous range of his powerful voice up to d', produced in a natural way, was applauded equally by enthusiastic audiences and by the conductors and orchestral players. He was acclaimed one of the best tenors of the time. In the late 1890s he lost his voice and he died in misery as a pauper.

C. R. H.

MIES, Otto Heinrich (b. Hamburg, 23 Sept. 1913).

German musicologist. He studied at the

¹ See FOLK MUSIC: POLISH.

Universities of Hamburg, Würzburg, Paris and Kiel, and took a Ph.D. degree. In 1945 he was appointed teacher at a school at Husum, Schleswig-Holstein, where he is also a choral conductor. He is at work assisting Friedrich Blume in his new encyclopedia, 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart', and his own works include:

'John Dowland, Leben und Werke' (Kiel Dissertation, 1939, as yet unpublished).

'Max Reger und die katholische Kirchenmusik' ('Schönere Zukunft', Vienna, 1939).

'Die Komponisten der Gregorianik' (ibid., 1940).

E. B.

MIES, Paul (b. Cologne, 22 Oct. 1889).

German musicologist. He studied musical science with Leonhard Wolff at Bonn, where he took the Ph.D. in 1912 with a study 'Über die Tonmalerei'. He settled at Cologne, teaching mathematics at a secondary school and at the same time working as a music historian. His studies at Bonn as a matter of course brought him into contact with Beethoven research. In 1925 he re-edited Nottebohm's 'Zwei Skizzenbücher von Beethoven' and in the same year wrote 'Die Bedeutung der Skizzen Beethovens zur Erkenntnis seines Stiles' (English trans. by Doris L. Mackinnon, Oxford, 1929). In 1946 he became Director of the Institute for School Music of the State High School for Music at Cologne. Mies is also the author of several studies on the romantic song, such as 'Stilmomente und Ausdrucksformen im Brahms'schen Lied' (1923), 'Das romantische Lied und Gesänge aus Wilhelm Meister' (1926), 'Schubert, der Meister des Liedes' (1928). His other works include:

'Beethoven, Collin, Shakespeare' ('Zeitschrift für Musik', 1938).

'Aus Brahms Werkstatt' ('Simrock-Jahrbuch', 1928).

'Der kritische Rat der Freunde und die Veröffentlichung der Werke bei Brahms' ('Simrock-Jahrbuch', 1929).

'Johannes Brahms: Werk' (Zeit. Mensch., 1930).

'Die Chaconne (Passacaglia) bei Handel' ('Handeljahrbuch', 1929).

'Karl Leibl, der Musiker und Vater des grossen Malers' (1938).

'Der Charakter der Tonarten' (1948).

K. G.

MIGHTY HANDFUL, THE. See FIVE, THE.

Migliavacca, Gianambrogio. See Gluck ('Tetide', lib.). Hasse (2 libs.). Haydn ('Acide', lib.). Traetta (2 libs.).

MIGNON. Opera in 3 acts by Ambroise Thomas. Libretto by Jules Barbier and Michel Carré, based on Goethe's 'Wilhelm Meister'. Produced Paris, Opéra-Comique, 17 Nov. 1866. 1st perf. abroad, Antwerp (in French), 7 Mar. 1867. 1st in England, London, Drury Lane Theatre (in Italian), 5 July 1870. 1st in U.S.A., New York (in Italian), 22 Nov. 1871.

MIGNONE, Francisco (b. São Paulo, 3 Sept. 1897).

Brazilian composer, pianist and conductor.

He studied at the São Paulo Conservatory and then spent 1920-29 in Europe, studying at Milan with Ferroni. In 1929-32 he was a professor at the São Paulo Conservatory, and then, from 1934, at the Escola Nacional de Musica at Rio de Janeiro.

Mignone is a prolific composer. In 1923 Richard Strauss conducted his 'Congada' in Brazil. The following year (20 Sept.) his first opera, 'O contratador dos diamantes', was produced at the Rio Teatro Municipal. On 8 Sept. 1928 his second opera 'El jayón (L'innocente)' was given at the same theatre under Serafin. The ballet 'Batucagé' was given in 1936. Other ballets are 'Babaloxá' (1937), 'Maracatú de Chico-Rei' (1939), 'O espantalho' (1941), 'Leilão' and 'Mindinho' (1941), and 'Yara', played at the Metropolitan Opera, New York, by the Col. de Basil Russian Ballet in 1946. Orchestral works: 'Sinfonia de Trabalho'; 'Festa das igrejas'; 'Momus'; 'Seguida - Mirim'; 'Suite brasileira'; 'Sonho de um menino travesso'; four 'Fantasias brasileiras' for pianoforte and orchestra; 'Seresta' for cello and orchestra. There are also a Sextet for pianoforte, flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn; a string Quartet; violin Sonata; pianoforte Sonata; many pianoforte pieces and songs.

N. F.

BIBL.—Article in 'Weco', Rio de Janeiro, II, Dec. 1930, p. 8.

MIGOT, George (Elbert) (b. Paris, 27 Feb. 1891).

French composer. He was a pupil of Bouval, Ganaye and Widor, and between 1913 and 1921 he was awarded four prizes for composition. He first came before the public with two concerts entirely devoted to his works in 1917 and 1919. He then came forward with numerous works for orchestra, pianoforte, chamber and vocal music; and his reputation was perhaps most firmly established at first by a small stage work, 'Le Paravent de laque aux cinq images', produced at the Exposition Internationale des Arts Décoratifs in 1925. By the end of the 1940s he was so highly thought of in official circles that in 1948 the City of Paris invited him to write a symphony for the Chopin centenary (Symphony No. 1), and this was followed by his second Symphony in 1949, when the State commissioned the oratorio 'Saint Germain d'Auxerre', which is scored for four solo voices and two mixed choirs a cappella.

In many respects Migot seems to stand aloof from the main stream of contemporary music, and it is with good reason that he has been dubbed by a modern critic (Maurice Henrion) "the spiritual brother of Guillaume de Machaut", with whose contrapuntal style, especially, his music has great affinities. Thinking polyphonically, he is chiefly concerned with weaving arabesques of several independent parts moving at different levels which engender their own harmony — hence his predilection for chamber and, above all, vocal combinations, especially a cappella. His religious music, a very important part of his output, is an expression of his profoundly mystical temperament, and the big oratorios, like 'La Passion' and 'Le Sermon sur la montagne', are deeply felt.

Migot has a great liking for unusual vocal and instrumental combinations, as is shown, for example, in one of his later works, a Suite in 4 parts for pianoforte solo and a wordless mixed chorus, or by his 'Mystère orphique' (1947) on a poem of his own, described as a "polyphonie chorégraphique" and scored for mezzo-soprano, string quintet, wind quintet and pianoforte.

Among Migot's important literary works on subjects connected with musicology and aesthetics may be cited 'J. Ph. Rameau et le génie français dans la musique', 'Essai pour une esthétique générale', 'Appogiatures résolues et non résolues' (3 vols.) and a remarkable 'Lexique de quelques termes utilisés en musique avec des commentaires pouvant servir à la compréhension de cet art'.

"Prix de Guerre" and "Grand blessé" of the 1914-18 war, Migot is a member of the Academies of Florence and Bologna, Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, and has held musical posts in France, where he was, among other things, a member of the Conseil Supérieur de l'Enseignement au Conservatoire National and Conservateur du Musée Instrumental du Conservatoire National — a post formerly held by Berlioz. He is also Président-Inspecteur of the Musical Academy of Geneva and President of the international Academy of Genoa.

A complete catalogue of Migot's enormous output, which by 1950 comprised nearly 200 works, cannot be given here, but the following is a list of his outstanding works, excluding those already mentioned above:

OPERAS

- 'Le Rossignol en amour', chamber opera, prod. Geneva, c. 1924.
- 'Contes de fées', opéra-chorégraphique.

BALLETS

- 'La Fête de la bergère', prod. Paris, Théâtre Bériza, 1925¹.
- 'Hagoromo', symphonie lyrique et chorégraphique (scenario by Composer & Louis Laloy), prod. Monte Carlo, 1922.
- 'Les Aveux et les promesses.'

CHORAL WORKS

- Psalm XIX for chorus & orch.
- Oratorio 'L'Annonciation' for mezzo-soprano, baritone, women's chorus & stgs.
- Oratorio 'La Mise au tombeau' for small mixed chorus & wind 5tet.
- Concerto for pf. & unaccomp. chorus (1952).

¹ The same work.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 'Les Agrestides: trois fresques symphoniques.'
- 'Trois Epigrammes.'
- 'Trois Guirlandes sonores' for stgs.
- 'Le Livre de danceries', 4 pieces.
- 'Prélude pour un poète.'
- 'Prélude, salut et danse: trois gestes plastiques sonores.'
- 'Le Tombeau de Du Fault, joueur de luth.'
- 'La Victoire de J. Ph. Rameau entendue à l'orchestre.'

SOLO AND ORCHESTRA

- 'La Jungle' for organ.
- 'Suite en trois parties' for pf.
- 'Suite en cinq parties' for vn.
- 'Suite en concert' for harp.
- 'Deux Pièces' for pf., with voices.
- 'Trois Chants suivis d'un "air à vocalise"' (André Spire) for voice & stgs.
- 'Sept Petits Images du Japon' for voice.
- 'Trois Berceuses chantées' (Marie Gevers) for voice.

CHAMBER MUSIC

- 'Six Petits Préludes' for 2 vns. (or flute & vn. or 2 flutes).
- 'Suite en trois mouvements' for vn. & cello.
- 'Concert' for flute (or vn.), cello & harp (or pf.).
- 'Le Premier Livre de divertissements français'
 1. Prélude.
 2. Estampie for flute & harp.
 3. Prélude.
 4. Estampie for clar. & harp.
 5. Conclusion en double estampie for flute, clar. & harp.
- Trio for vn., viola & pf.
- 'Trio ou suite à trois' for vn., cello & pf.
- Trio for oboe, clar. & bassoon.
- Trio for vn., viola & cello.
- 'Cinq Mouvements d'eau' for stg. 4tet.
- Quartet for flute (or vn.), vn., clar. (or viola) & harp.
- Quintet 'Les Agrestides' for 2 vns., viola, cello & pf.
- Serenade for oboe, clar., horn, bassoon & stg. 5tet.
- 'Thrène' for oboe, clar. & bassoon.

VOCAL CHAMBER MUSIC

- 'Six Poèmes de "La Retraite ardente"' (Composer) for mezzo-soprano, flute, vn. & cello.
- 'Vini vinoque amor: cantate profane' for contralto, tenor, flute, cello & pf.
- 'Reposoir grave, noble et pur' (Charles de Saint-Cyr) for voice, flute & harp.
- Deux Stèles' (Victor Segalen) for voice, harp, celesta, double bass & perc.

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- Dialogue en quatre parties.'
- 'Second Dialogue', 3 pieces.
- 'Suite pour violon récitant et piano.'

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

- 'Dialogue en quatre parties.'
- 'Second Dialogue', 4 pieces.
- 'Trois Pièces.'

FLUTE AND PIANOFORTE

Sonata.

HORN AND PIANOFORTE

Sonata.

PIANOFORTE SOLO

- 'Ad usum Delphini', 5 pieces & 3 studies.
- 'Le Calendrier du petit berger', 12 easy pieces.
- 'Trois Epigrammes.'
- 'Trois Nocturnes dantesques.'
- 'Le Petit Fablier', 8 teaching-pieces for children.
- 8 Preludes.
- 'Le Zodiaque', 12 concert studies.
- 'Cinq Études en forme de suite' for the left hand.
- Sonata 'Polonia'.
- 'Trois Nocturnes en forme de suite.'
- 'Le Livre d'Anne-Marie', 2-part inventions for children.
- Nocturne No. 4.
- 12 Preludes.

HARPSICHORD MUSIC

- 'Prélude à un' for 1 harpsichord.
- 'Prélude à deux' for 2 harpsichords.

ORGAN MUSIC

- 'Six Petits Préludes à deux parties.'
- 'Le Tombeau de Nicolas de Grigny.'
- 'Le Premier Livre d'orgue', 12 pieces.

HARP MUSIC

- 'Sonate luthée en cinq mouvements.'

SONGS

- 2 Songs (Georges Ville)
 1. Si quelquefois tu pleures.
 2. Il me l'a dit qu'à moisson.
- 'Trois Chants pour trois poètes'
 1. Ne demandons à l'avenir.
 2. Renouveau.
 3. Printemps.
- 'Hommage à Thibaut de Champagne' (Tristan Klingsor), 5 unaccomp. monodies.
- 'Trois Monodies' (Klingsor), unaccomp.
- 'Les Poèmes de Bruggnon' (Klingsor), 17 songs.
- 'Trois Poèmes de Gilles Normand'
 1. Printemps maussade.
 2. Larmes d'aube.
 3. Le Petit Coq.
- 2 Songs (J. Pourtal de Ladevèze)
 1. Fées.
 2. Rose d'automne.
- 'Poème vocal: Amore' (wordless).

VOCAL DUETS

- 'Trois Chansons de Margot' (Philéas Lebègue), with pf.
 1. Cygne blanc.
 2. Douceur.
 3. Nenni da.

R. H. M.

- BIBL.—AIGRAIN, R., 'Georges Migot et la musique religieuse' (Paris, 1944).
- HENRION, H., 'Georges Migot' (Riv. Mus. It., 1939).
- VALLAS, L., 'Georges Migot, musicien français' (Paris, 1917).
- WOLFF, P. B., 'La Route d'un musicien: Georges Migot' (Paris, 1933).

MIHALOVICH, Ödön (i.e. Edmund Péter József de (b. Feričance, Province of Slovenia [Hungary, now Yugoslavia], 13 Sept. 1842; d. Budapest, 22 Apr. 1929).

Hungarian composer. Coming of a family of landed gentry, he began studying music privately and under Mihály Mosonyi. Wagner's visit to Hungary exercised a decisive influence on his life and artistic career. In 1864 he enrolled himself in the Budapest University's Faculty of Philosophy. His first published composition, a 'Faust' Overture for pianoforte duet, appeared in the same year. His earliest attempts at composition date from only a few years earlier, among which an overture to 'Timon of Athens' may be mentioned. In 1865 he went to Leipzig, where he studied with Moritz Hauptmann. At the end of this year (17 Dec.) a March for orchestra of his was performed by the Philharmonic Society. In 1866 he was at Munich studying with Peter Cornelius. At a performance there of 'Tristan und Isolde' he was introduced to Wagner and Bülow, and from that time he belonged to the inner circle of their friends, often accompanying them on their various travels. In 1867 a second version of his 'Timon of Athens' overture was performed at the Meiningen Festival of the Allgemeiner Deutscher Musikverein, and in the same year he began the drafts of his opera 'Hagbart und Signe'. The first concert of his own orchestral works took place in Budapest on 6 Apr. 1870; this year also saw the appearance of his first literary contribution in the 'Zenészeti Lapok'. He took part in the foundation of the Budapest Wagner Society, and in 1875 organized Wagner's second visit to Hungary. The same year he also took a share in the negotiations which led to Liszt's acceptance of the presidency of the newly established Academy of Music in Budapest.

In 1879 Mihalovich finished his first Symphony, which had to wait seven years for performance. 12 Mar. 1882 was an important event in his life: his opera 'Hagbart und Signe' had its first night at the Court Opera of Dresden. Of hardly less importance was his appointment as principal of the National Hungarian Royal Academy of Music in 1887, which he retained until he was pensioned in 1919. He at once put into effect plans for a thorough-going reform of musical education, and under him the Academy of Music attained international recognition.

Mihalovich's music, influenced entirely by the new German school and especially by Wagner, with all the advantages and disadvantages of a derivative style, is distinguished by technical competence and aristocratic sensibility. Although the titles and sometimes also of the subject-matter of a number of his compositions are due to the Hungarian poets, there is little trace of a national idiom in his work, but if his music is negligible as regards the main stream of indigenous development, his personality dominated the musical life of Hungary for more than a quarter of a century. He condemned both the new music and the national style (Bartók, Kodály, Lajtha, Weiner), yet he respected the individual talents and convictions of their adherents. His pronounced partiality for foreign (especially German) tendencies had a certain detrimental effect on the newly won musical independence of the country — he was publicly accused of being "bent on excluding from the Academy those students who favoured Hungarian music" — but there was no denying the importance of Mahler's engagement by the Budapest Opera, for instance, which he is said to have insisted upon.

BIBL. — HARASZTI, EMIL, 'Richard Wagner és Magyarokzág' ('R. W. and Hungary') (Budapest, 1916).
 ISOZ, KÁLMÁN, 'Liszt Cosima levelei Mihalovich odonhoz' ('Cosima Liszt's Letters to Edmund M.') ('Éneksoz', XVII, 5 [95], Budapest, Mar. 1950).
 MAJOR, ERVIN, 'Mihalovich Odon: Tanulmány' ('E. M.: a Study') (Budapest, 1929). With a Catalogue & further Bibl.
 Mihalovich number of 'Zenei Szemle', I. 10 (Temesvár, 1917).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS¹

OPERAS

- * 'Hagbart und Signe' (libretto by Adolf Stern, after Adam Oehlenschläger) (1867-74), prod. Dresden, 12 Mar. 1882.
- * 'Wieland der Schmied' (Adolf Stern, after R. Wagner's sketch) (1876-78).
- * 'König Fjalar' (Oskar Schlemm) (1880-84), incomplete.
- * 'Eliane' [sic] (Hans Herrig after Tennyson) (1885-87), prod. Budapest, Royal Opera, 16 Feb. 1908.
- * 'Toldi szerelme' ('Toldi's Love') (Gergely Csiky & Emil Ábrányi, after the epic by Janos Arany) (1880-90, rev. 1893-94) prod. Budapest, Royal Opera, 18 Mar. 1893; rev. version, 26 Feb. 1895.
- * 'A tihanyi visszhang' ('The Echo of Tihany') (Géza Moravcsik) (1903), incomplete.

CHORAL WORKS

- * 'An den Sturmwind' for men's chorus & orch. (Lenau). Also choruses for unaccomp., mixed & men's voices.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- March (? 1865).
- Overture to Shakespeare's 'Timon of Athens' (2nd version, 1867).
- * 'Marche héroïque' (1869).
- * 'Das Geisterschiff', symph. poem, after Count Strachwitz's ballad (1871).
- Overture and Funeral Music to Shakespeare's 'Romeo and Juliet' (? 1872).
- * 'Ünnepi előjáték' ('Festival Prologue') (? 1873).
- * 'A sellő' ('The Naiad'), symph. poem after Pál Gyulai's ballad (1874).
- * 'Hero and Leander', symph. poem (1875).
- * 'Trauerklänge: dem Andenken Franz Deak' (1876). Symphony No. 1, D mi. (1879).
- * 'Ronde de sabbat', symph. poem (? 1879).
- * 'Faust' Fantasy (1880).
- Symphony No. 2, B mi. (1892).
- * 'Pan halála' ('Death of Pan'), symph. poem after Gyula Reviczky (1897).
- Symphony No. 3 ('Pathetic'), A mi. (1899-1900).
- Symphony No. 4, G mi. (1901-2).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- Sonata, E♭ ma. (1861).

PIANOFORTE SOLO

- * 'Sonate pour le piano', Op. IV (1861).
- Pieces (1861-63).
- * 'Fantasiestück' (1866).
- * 'Fantaisie pour piano' (1870).
- * 'Nocturne', E ma. (? 1872).

PIANOFORTE DUET

- Overture 'Timon of Athens' (1st version) (1860).
- * 'Faust' Overture (1864).
- * 'Épithalame pour la nocce de la Princesse Borghese' (1899).

SONGS

- 6 Songs (Lenau, Kerner, Hoffmann von Fallersleben, O. Sternau, Uhland) (? 1872).
- 8 Poems (? 1872).
- 6 Songs (? 1874).
- * 'Drei Wunder' (Halm) (1875).
- 6 Poems (Mathilde Wesendonk) (? 1891).
- * 'Hat kuruc dal' ('Six Kuruc Songs') (Sándor Endrődy) (1897-98).

J. S. W.

MIHALOVICI, Marcel (b. Bucharest, 22 Oct. 1898).

Rumanian composer. He studied in Paris under Vincent d'Indy and after the first world war joined a group of advanced composers formed there, mainly by Frenchmen and ¹ The list is as complete as circumstances permit; most of his manuscripts, preserved in the Library of the Academy of Music, still await examination. His MSS, Diary and Reminiscences as well as his Correspondence, all valuable documents of the period, are unpublished.

Russians, but not excluding those of other nationalities.

Mihalovici's works include the opera 'L'Intransigent Pluton'; the ballets 'Kara-guez' and 'Divertissement'; 'Introduction au mouvement', 'Notturmo' and 'Fantaisie' for orchestra; a Trio for violin, viola and cello; a Sonata for violin and pianoforte, a Sonatina for oboe and pianoforte, etc. 'Cortège des divinités infernales' is an orchestral extract from his opera.

E. R.

MIHTOU, Maître. See DANIEL, JEAN.

MIKADO, THE, OR THE TOWN OF TITIPU. Operetta in 2 acts by Sullivan. Libretto by William Schwenck Gilbert. Produced London, Savoy Theatre, 14 Mar. 1885. 1st perf. abroad, Chicago, 6 July 1885. 1st on the Continent, Berlin, Wallner Theatre (in English), 2 June 1886.

MIKEŠ, Adolf (b. Hradec Králové, 23 Dec. 1864; d. Prague, 26 May 1929).

Czech pianoforte teacher. Turning to music as a profession relatively late, he studied the pianoforte under J. Káan and afterwards worked for several years as his assistant at the Prague Conservatory. Being dissatisfied with Káan's and his own method of playing and with the general education in music, he founded a private institution in Prague in 1903 and directed it until 1920. There he developed and propagated his own system of music-teaching, based on that of Deppe and Battke, and educated several excellent pupils, particularly Jan Heřman and Roman Veselý. This establishment became an important centre of the new tendencies in music, as is shown by the fact that Novák was the leading personality of its circle. In 1920 Mikeš was appointed professor at the Master School in Prague, a post he held until his death.

G. Č.

Mikhailov, M. See Balakirev (2 songs). Rimsky-Korsakov (3 songs).

MIKKILÄ, Timo (b. Lahti, 16 Oct. 1912).

Finnish pianist. He studied at the Helsingfors Conservatory with Paavola (1930-32) and in Paris for some years with Jean Batalla, and with Nadia Boulanger and Suzanne Guébel between the years 1933 and 1947. In 1938 he joined the teaching-staff of the Sibelius Academy in Helsingfors. He twice obtained the scholarship of the Academy of Finland (1948-50 and 1951-53). He has toured Finland and several other countries and is regarded as Finland's outstanding pianist.

A. R.

MIKOLAJ Z KRAKOWA (Nicolaus Cracoviensis, de Cracovia, Cracovita, Krakowczyk, Krakowszczyk) (b. ?; d. ?).

Polish 15th-16th-century composer. In the organ tablature of Jan de Lublin, as well as in the tablature discovered in the library of the Monastery of the Holy Ghost at Cracow, were found works by this distinguished composer written to Latin, Polish and German words. In both these tablatures all his vocal works are marked with initials "N. C." (Nicolaus Cracoviensis) and transcribed for organ. There are religious compositions such as masses and offertories, as well as preludes and dances. The contents are as follows:

A. WORKS WITH LATIN WORDS

- 'Officium de Corpore Christi', 1540 (4 parts).
- 'De Sancto Johanne Baptista', 1541 (4 parts).
- 'Patrem per Octavas', 1540.
- 'Introitus de Resurrectione Domini.'
- 'Gaudemus omnes.'
- 'Quem preces.'
- 'Introitus de Sancta Trinitate Benedicta.'
- 'Salve Regina.'
- 'Ave Hierarchia.'
- 'Nunc rogemus, 1541.'
- 'Kyrie Paschale.'
- 'Muteta Philippe qui videt me, resolutum per N. C.'
- Without title, but inscribed "Resolutum", 1540.
- 'Date sinceram maerentibus', 1542.

B. WORKS WITH POLISH WORDS

- 'Wesel się polska Korona' ('Rejoice thou Polish Crown').
- 'Aleć nade mną Wenus' ('Above me Venus').
- 'Nasz Zbawiciel' ('Our Saviour').

C. WORK WITH GERMAN WORDS

- 'Ach hilf mich leid.'

D. TWO PRELUDES

- 'Praecambulum', D ma. (4 parts).
- 'Praecambulum' (4 parts).

E. DANCES AND DANCE TUNES

1. Without title.
2. 'Alia.'
3. 'Alia super duos saltos.'
4. 'Zakłółam się tarniem.'
5. 'Alia ad unum poznanie.'
6. 'Alia poznanie.'
7. 'Conradus.'
8. Without title.
9. 'Paur Thancz' ('Peasant Dance').
10. 'Bona Cat.'
11. 'Czayner Thancz' (probably 'Zauner Tanz', a German dance popular in the 15th-17th centuries).
12. 'Ad novem saltus.'
13. 'Hayducki.'
14. 'Italica.'
15. 'Szewczyk idzie po ulicy szydelka niosąc.'
16. 'Hispaniarum.'
17. 'Alia Italica.'
18. 'Proportio Ferdinandii.'

Of all the dances mentioned in Group E, the most important, as far as Polish music of the 16th century is concerned, are Nos. 4, 13 and 15, the first of which is a country dance, simple, original and most charming, the second urban in character; in the last most of the accents fall on the second beat of the bar: a forerunner of the irregular accents so typical of Polish folk music.

The fourteen church compositions (Group A), in 4 and 5 parts, belong, from the technical point of view, to the polyphonic school of Josquin des Prés and his adherents.

C. R. H.

- BIBL.—CHYBIŃSKI, A. E., 'Tabulatura Jana z Lublina' (Lwów, 1911-14).
 JACHIMECKI, Z., 'The Italian Influence on Polish Music' (Cracow, 1911).
 SIMON, A., 'Die polnischen Elemente in der deutschen Musik bis auf die Zeit der Wiener Klassiker' (1916).

MIKULECKI (Mykuletzky), ? (b. ?; d. ?).

Polish 18th-century composer. At the Cistercian Monastery of Obra a Requiem in E major for chorus, 2 violins, 2 horns and organ by him has been found, but nothing else is known of him.

C. R. H.

MIKULI, Karol (b. Černauti, 20 Oct. 1821; d. Lwów, 21 May 1897).

Polish pianist and teacher of Rumanian origin. He was a pupil of Chopin for pianoforte and of Reicha for composition in Paris in 1844. He toured widely in Russia, Rumania, Austria, Germany and France and he became director of the Lwów Conservatory in 1858. Later he founded his own school of music there (1888). He published an edition of Chopin's works which contained many amendments obtained from the composer himself and was for quite a long time considered the standard edition. For many years Mikuli was recognized as an authority on Chopin, and his remarks about his master's playing were quoted by many musicologists and Chopin biographers.

Mikuli wrote many pieces for the pianoforte, also a 'Scherzino' for 3 violins, a 'Serenade' for clarinet and pianoforte, 'Die Reue' for baritone and string orchestra, and '43 Airs nationaux roumains' for orchestra, also arranged for pianoforte.

C. R. H.

MILA, Massimo (b. Turin, 14 Aug. 1910).

Italian critic. He studied the pianoforte and harmony privately and obtained a laureate in letters at the University of Turin in 1931 with the dissertation 'Il melodramma di Verdi', which was published two years later. It was then that he began his career as critic with contributions to various cultural periodicals, although he had already been an assiduous and regular contributor to 'La Rassegna Musicale' since 1929, for which he has continued ever since to write frequently (with a single interruption between 1935 and 1940, when he was forced to go into retirement on account of anti-Fascist activities).

Mila gives to his work the twofold advantage of a knowledge of music as a medium and a career, and of aesthetics, in which particular he may be regarded as a follower of Benedetto Croce, although one with a good deal of personal independence. The aesthetic problems he discusses above all, in the 'Rassegna' and elsewhere, are those of musical performance and interpretation. The best of these profound discourses of his were published in book-form in 1950 under the title of 'L'esperienza musicale e l'estetica'. He there poses and examines from an original point of view the fundamental problem of intelligent musical expression, the essential musical fact and the related problem of listening—the most important chapter is entitled 'Capire la musica'. His aims at clarifying the concept of expression led him to formulate the key-notion of the "unknowable nature of musical expression", which he also applies to criticism of musical events in a Turin daily paper and in other Italian and foreign periodicals. Characteristic of Mila's criticism is the extreme lucidity with which he expounds his problems; it eschews philosophical terminology and always keeps musical 'acts in view'.

Other books published by Mila include a 'Breve storia della musica' (1948), a clever attempt at compressing the whole of musical history into 1300 pages; a collection of essays, 'Cent'anni di musica moderna' (1944); a short monograph on 'W. A. Mozart' (1945) completing his 'Saggi Mozartiani' (1945). Mila is also the author of many translations into Italian from the German, including Goethe's 'Elective Affinities', Schiller and, among the moderns, Wiechert and Hermann Hesse. He is at present (1954) engaged on a large work on Béla Bartók.

G. M. G.

BIBL.—GIANIERCO, ELIO, 'Massimo Mila and Present Italian Aesthetics' ('Journal of Aesthetic and Art Criticism', Baltimore, Sept. 1952).

MILADOWSKI, Floryan Stanisław (b. Minsk, 4 May 1819; d. ?).

Polish pianist and composer. He studied under Thiebe (pianoforte) at Wilno and later in Vienna with Fischhof (counterpoint) and Hölzl (composition), as well as Joseph Hauser (singing). He then moved to France and settled at Nancy. He wrote very many compositions, chiefly for the pianoforte, the majority of which was published in France during his lifetime.

C. R. H.

MILAN. The Ambrosian liturgical chant testifies to a long-standing musical civilization at Milan. Tradition, which in such cases is to be accepted as authority, tells us that the custom of singing hymns "in the Oriental manner" became the fashion through the incentive of St. Ambrose (4th century), and that it was he, too, who composed the music for these hymns, as well as for the Psalms. When in the spring of 386 Ambrose saw himself under the necessity of defending his people against the assaults of the imperial troops, he heartened the faithful assembled under the roof of the basilica by making them intone his hymns; and he himself affirmed that he succeeded in this way in appeasing the crowd. As he himself wrote:

It is true that my hymns subdued the people: they exercised a potent spell. What, indeed, could be more fascinating than the invocation of the Trinity by the voices of a multitude? The most humble learnt to celebrate in verse the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost. And thus the dignity of masters was attained by those hardly fit to be as much as disciples.

It is certain that it was chiefly through the example of the Milanese Church that Christian chant acquired its lustre in the western world; and it has been shown how it was here that a decisive orientation took place towards both definite tonality and a rhythmic structure derived from the adaptation of folk tunes to the strophic and metrical texts of the hymns.

With the passing of years it became necessary to consolidate Ambrosian chant by careful teaching, and thus arose what may be called the first musical institution of Milan, the Schola Cantorum, the foundation of which tradition assigns to the bishop who succeeded St. Ambrose, San Simpliciano. The liturgist Beroldo mentions the existence of another such school at the time of Ariberto da Intimiano (11th century). It is possible, at any rate, to assert that institutions of this kind, attached to the Cathedral, always functioned with notable efficiency. At the end of the 14th century and early in the 15th the Cathedral of Milan had for its organist Antonio Monti of Prato and as composer Matteo of Perugia, a master of rare ability. In 1491 a new organ, built by Antegnati of Brescia, was inaugurated in the Cathedral.

The rise of a progressive musical institution on modern lines coincided with the conquest of the Milanese dukedom by Galeazzo Maria Sforza, who in 1470 established a court chapel boasting 40 singers: 18 for the chamber under the direction of the Fleming van Weerbeke and 22 for the chapel under the Abbate Guinati. Among the visitors to the chapel were celebrated masters like Josquin des Prés, Compère and Jacotin (Jacques Godebrie). When Ludovico il Moro became Duke of Milan he wished to attach to the chapel a "chair of musical science", which he entrusted to Franchino Gaffurio (Gafori) of Lodi, who in 1484 was succeeded by Giovanni de Mollis as "magister biscantandi et docendi biscantare pueris" in the Campo Santo behind the Cathedral. Gafori, apart from being the author of remarkable theoretical works ('Theoricum opus musicae disciplinae', 'Practica musicae', etc.), was also a composer of keen sensibility and great worth, as is testified by works of his preserved in the Cathedral archives and recently scrutinized (18 masses, 12 Magnificats, a 'Stabat Mater', 2 litanies, a 'Sanctus' and numerous motets collected in three codices at the end of the 15th century). During this period music played a great part at annual festivities, to the glorification of which celebrated artists like the great Leonardo himself contributed. But after the fall of the house of Sforza only the musical establishment of the Cathedral remained alive, which in the course of the 16th century was endowed with new organs and could pride itself on such maestri di cappella as the Fleming Vercore and the Veronese Vincenzo Ruffo.

OPERA.—The rise and development of opera, which occurred at Florence in the first years of the 17th century, was hindered at Milan by the rigid moral code of San Carlo Borromeo, who on the other hand infused new life into the liturgical chant by facilitating, among other things, the introduction of Gregorian plain-song into the churches of Milan. Nevertheless, at a theatre opened in the ducal palace the new 17th-century operatic activities had some repercussions, and although the local composers made no contribution to them, the operatic masters of Venice were welcomed. Even in the 18th century there was no native Milanese opera to speak of, although musical life in the city was then full of vitality and there was an orchestra which was judged the equal of that of Mannheim. The musical taste of the Lombard capital thus favoured the instrumental forms of the symphony and the sonata together with the vocal and instrumental ones of oratorio and cantata; and this explains the importance of such a figure as G. B. Sammartini and the preference shown for Milan by J. C. Bach, Gluck and Mozart.

On 25 Feb. 1776 a raging fire for the second time destroyed the court theatre, the reconstruction of which had been hardly finished by the architect Piermarini; and the growing passion for stage spectacles persuaded the civic authorities to build two new theatres. By the consent of the Empress Maria Theresa the choice of sites fell on the areas occupied by two historical buildings: the church of Santa Maria della Scala and the edifice of the Scuole Carnobiane. The church was demolished in Aug. 1776, and Piermarini submitted the designs for the two theatres which took their names from the places on which they arose: the larger one "alla Scala" and the smaller one "della Cannobiana". Leased to the brothers Del Re, the Scala theatre was completed within two years, so that in Aug. 1778 it was ready to be opened with Salieri's opera 'L' Europa riconosciuta'.

The auditorium of the Scala has the classical horseshoe form and at its greatest width measures 24 m. in diameter; there are six tiers with 36 boxes in the three lower and 39 in the three upper ones. The two highest are now transformed into galleries. The interior structure of the theatre has remained as planned by Piermarini, but the same cannot be said of the interior decoration which, formerly in the 18th-century taste, was later transformed into a neo-classical style designed by the painter Sanquirico (1830). For lighting, a first trial was made with Argand's lamps in 1788; in 1860 gas was introduced; in 1883 the Scala was the first theatre in the world to instal electric light.

As a centre of operatic art the Scala was not long in securing for itself an undisputed world reputation; and, ever since Stendhal, authors and critics have been unable to dispute the fact that no opera, no singer and no conductor can be sure of an international reputation without having passed the test of a success at the Scala. Rossini, Bellini and Donizetti consolidated their fame there, and it was only natural that Verdi himself, who had once launched his 'Oberto' and 'Nabucco' there, should have chosen this theatre for the productions of his last masterpieces, 'Otello' and 'Falstaff'. It may be asserted that the operatic activities of the 19th century revolved round the Scala, and the schools of scenic design, of dance and of singing which developed in association with the theatre also came to enjoy artistic fame.

The Teatro alla Scala became, moreover, a centre of Italian social and political history. In 1793 it was the scene of festivities for the coronation of the Emperor Joseph II with free admittance; and in 1797 the end of the Austrian imperial domination was celebrated with a tragedy-ballet, 'Bruto', of republican tendencies, and the royal box was divided into six smaller boxes reserved "for the liberated people". Impressive performances marked the coronation of Napoleon, while the Austrian restoration had the effect of filling the theatre with the patricians and upper-class citizens of Milan and turning it into a forum for liberal and irredentist ideas. From 1848 onwards revolutionary tendencies found ardent response among the frequenters of the Scala, who during the songs in 'Norma' and 'Nabucco' improvised patriotic demonstrations.

During the night of 16 Aug. 1943 an air-raid which devastated Milan did not spare the famous theatre, whose foyers were burnt and whose auditorium, receiving a direct hit, was reduced to a heap of rubble. The stage alone was saved. But no sooner had the war come to an end than the interest of the Milanese in the theatre proved to be such that in less than a year it was carefully restored to its original state, and on 11 May 1946 Toscanini reconsecrated the foremost operatic temple of our age.

As an annex to the opera-house a theatrical museum was opened to the public in 1911 which testifies to a century and a half of operatic history by means of an array of very important exhibits.

THE CONSERVATORY.—Musical education at Milan gravitates round the state Conservatory "G. Verdi". The origin of this institution dates from a time, at the opening of the 19th century, when the city's music was at its height; from a time, that is, when the wealthy centre of industry in Lombardy was proclaimed the capital of Italy (1802), with Napoleon as President and Count Melzi as Vice-President. In order to supply the continual need of a good reserve of singers and instrumentalists Carlo Brentano de Grianty, a member of the Commission for the Improvement of Stage Performances, impressed the Ministry of the Interior in 1803 with the necessity for a residential Conservatory on traditional Italian lines, providing for board and lodging for needy students to allow them to pursue their musical studies free from care. The project envisaged a staff of eleven professors for composition, singing and instrumental playing, divided the scholarships between 24 male and 12 female students and estimated the maintenance of the pupils and the salaries of two priests and eight servants at the sum of 29,491 lire, while the teachers' salaries were to amount to 15,150 lire per annum. In addition, fees for a bursar, an accountant, a physician and a surgeon were provided for.

In May 1805 Napoleon had himself crowned King of Italy in Milan Cathedral and elected his stepson Eugène de Beauharnais as viceroy. The latter confirmed the decree for the establishment of the Conservatory on 18 Sept. 1807, the institution to be housed in the convent attached to the Church of Santa Maria della Passione, where it has ever since remained. The teaching was at first divided into three grades: (1) the study of the rudiments of music and of solfeggio, and preparatory instruction in singing and playing; (2) the study of singing, dancing, declamation and instruments; (3) the study of operatic singing with orchestral accompaniment, of vocal and instrumental concert pieces, and of composition. It was desired that the famous Simone Mayr should be asked to accept the directorship; but as he was unwilling to leave Bergamo, the choice fell on Bonifazio Asioli. On the staff of professors figured such celebrities as the violinist Rolla, who had already taught Paganini; Luigi Belloli, considered the best horn player in Europe, who often played with Paganini; the bassoon virtuoso Buccinelli; Adami, the most acclaimed clarinettist in Italy. Besides these there were the contrapuntist Federici, the pianists Piantanida and Negri, the cellist Sturioni, the double-bass player Andreoli and the singers Ray and Secchi. In 1809 the ballet school was entrusted to the Coralli couple.

With the fall of Napoleon and the return of Lombardy under the rule of Austria the Conservatory underwent some changes in its regulations, which on the one hand aimed at the addition of literary and historical studies to the teaching of music and on the other the opening of the institution to non-resident pupils. After the unification of Italy the Conservatory came under state control, and in 1901 it was given the name of Verdi. The directors who followed Asioli were Ambrogio Minoia, Vincenzo Federici, Francesco Basili, Nicola Vaccai, Felice Frasi, Lauro Rossi, Alberto Mazzucato, Stefano Ronchetti, Antonio Bazzini, Giuseppe Gallinani, Ildebrando Pizzetti, Riccardo Pick-Mangiagalli and Giorgio Federico Ghedini. Among the most illustrious students of the Conservatory were the cellist Alfredo Piatti, the double-bass player Giovanni Bottesini, the clarinetist Ernesto Cavallini, the singers Giuditta Grisi, the sisters Brambilla, Giuseppina Strepponi (who became Verdi's second wife) and many others. Composers who studied there were Ponchielli, Boito, Catalani, M. E. Bossi, Puccini and Mascagni, and conductors Franco Faccio, Tullio Serafin and Victor de Sabata.

The Conservatory is equipped with a library of over 200,000 volumes and collections of rare manuscripts and early editions, also with a museum of instruments. The buildings were almost entirely destroyed during the bombardments of Aug. 1943, but were reconstructed.

CONCERTS AND PUBLISHERS.—Apart from its operatic seasons the Teatro alla Scala organizes two important annual series of symphony concerts, in the spring and autumn respectively; but the orchestral activities of Milan are largely in the hands of the other two great orchestral organizations, that of the Radio and the permanent orchestra of the Teatro Nuovo. This last has for its major task the dissemination of modern music. In the domain of chamber music, apart from the Radio and some small societies, the Società del Quartetto, founded by Boito in 1864, and the Teatro del Popolo must be mentioned.

Milanese music publishing, already flourishing in the 16th century, was chiefly represented from the early 19th century onwards by the house of Ricordi, founded by Giovanni Ricordi. Other publishers are Carisch, Sonzogno, Curci and Savini-Zerboni. G. B.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ADAMI, G., 'Un secolo di scenografia alla Scala' (Milan, 1945).
 ARMANI, FRANCO & BASCAPÈ, GIACOMO, 'La Scala: breve biografia (1778-1950)' (Milan, 1951).
 CAMBIASI, P., 'La Scala' (Milan, 1906).
 'La Scala e la Canobbiana 1778-1906' (Milan, 1906).
 'Rappresentazioni date nei teatri di Milano dal 1778 al 1872' (Milan, 1872).
 CESARI, G., art. "Milano" in 'Enciclopedia Italiana'.
 'La corte di Ludovico il Moro' (Milan, 1923).
 'Musica e musicisti alla corte sforzesca' (Turin, 1922).
 FILIPPI, F., 'Il Teatro alla Scala' (Milan, 1881).
 GUARINONI, E. DE, 'I conservatorio di musica e il Conservatorio di Milano' (Milan, 1899).
 GUTIÉRREZ, B., 'Il Teatro Carcano 1823-1914' (Milan, 1914).
 MARANGONI, G. & VANBIANCHI, E., 'La Scala' (Bergamo, 1922).
 MELZI, L., 'Cenni storici sul R. Conservatorio di Musica' (Milan, 1873-78).
 MOMPPELLI, F., 'Il R. Conservatorio di Musica "G. Verdi"' (Florence, 1941).
 MOTTA, E., 'Musici alla Corte degli Sforza' (Milan, 1887).
 MUONI, D., 'Serie dei maestri di cappella nel Duomo di Milano' (Milan, 1883).
 PAOLICCI-BROZZI, A., 'Il R. Ducal Teatro di Milano nel sec. XVIII' (Milan, 1894).

- ROMANI, L., 'Teatro alla Scala' (Milan, 1862).
 TEGANI, ULDERICO, 'La Scala nella sua storia e nella sua grandezza' (Milan, 1946).
 VITTADINI, S., 'Catalogo del Museo Teatrale' (Milan, 1940).

MILAN, Luis (b. Valencia, c. 1500; d. Valencia, ?).

Spanish lutenist and composer. He was the third son of Don Luis del Milan (d. before 1516) and Violante Eixarch. His first book, 'Libro de motes' (a book of parlour games), was published in 1535; 'El maestro' (lute tablature) in 1536; 'El cortesano' (a manual of polite conversation and descriptions of life and music at the court of Germaine de Foix at Valencia) in 1561. He died some time after that year. 'El maestro' is dedicated to Prince John, afterwards John III of Portugal (1521-57), from whom the author received a pension of 7000 crúzados. His visit to Portugal (if he ever visited it) must have taken place after 1538, or he would certainly have mentioned the fact in the dedication. He describes Portugal as being "a sea of music", so much was the art appreciated and understood there. He may have been in Italy, though the fact that he set six Italian sonnets to music proves no more than the Portuguese villancicos also included in 'El maestro'. He was certainly familiar with contemporary Italian music and systems of lute tablature, and it has been conjectured that 'El maestro' was printed from type brought from Venice. The printer describes himself as a Roman (Francisco Diaz Romano), but the book was printed at Valencia. No lute music is known to have been printed in Rome as early as this; the only Italian lute books in existence at the time were three printed by Petrucci at Venice.

The instrument for which Luis Milan wrote was not, strictly speaking, a lute at all, but the vihuela. His tablature is in principle Italian, the frets being designated by numbers (not by letters, as in England and France); but the top line of his "stave" is the top string and not, as is usually the case, the bottom one.¹ In vocal music the voice part is distinguished by the figures being printed in red. The book consists of Spanish and Portuguese villancicos, Spanish ballads and Italian sonnets. The purely instrumental pieces include fantasias and pavans. Milan has a real instrumental style and shows considerable variety in his methods of accompaniment: simple chords, passages in imitation of the voice part and, above all, rapid brilliant passages, especially at the end of a verse. His settings are real solo songs, not mere transcriptions of polyphonic music. Copies of his 'Libro de música de vihuela de mano, intitulado El Maestro' (1536) are in the B.M., Bibl. Nat., Paris,

¹ See TABLATURE.

Bibl. Nac. and Bibl. Real, Madrid, Bibl. de la Diputació, Barcelona. J. B. T.

BIBL.—TREND, J. B., 'Luis Milan and the Vihuelists' (Oxford, 1925).

MILANOLLO, Maria (b. Savigliano nr. Turin, 19 July 1832; d. Paris, 21 Oct. 1848).

MILANOLLO, (Domenica Maria) Teresa (b. Savigliano, 28 Aug. 1827; d. Paris, 25 Oct. 1904).

Italian violinists, sisters. Their father, according to Fétis, was a poor carpenter, and his musical daughters were two out of thirteen children. Teresa's talent was so precocious that her father migrated to Turin, where the little girl—scarcely six—received instruction from Gebbaro and Mora, two violinists attached to the Cappella Carlo Alberto. After a year of struggle and trial at Turin Milanollo resolved to tempt fortune by taking Teresa to Paris. Armed with an introduction to Lafont, they finally arrived in Paris in 1837. Lafont at once recognized Teresa's gifts, made her one of his pupils, allowed her to play five times at the Opéra-Comique concerts and took her on tour with him through Holland and Belgium. After a severe illness in Amsterdam, which prevented her from finishing the tour, she reappeared at The Hague and played to the Prince of Orange, who presented her with a handsome diamond ornament. From Holland she went to England, played at Covent Garden Theatre in London at five concerts, received some tuition from Mori and then toured in the English provinces and Wales, playing at forty concerts in less than a month.

Before this, Teresa had started giving her sister Maria violin lessons. Maria's gifts were also of a high order, though her style was quite different. Teresa's playing was full of warmth and feeling, while Maria's was brilliant and sparkling, characteristics which caused them to be nicknamed Mademoiselle Adagio and Mademoiselle Staccato. After Maria's début at Boulogne at the age of six the two sisters were inseparable and travelled together everywhere, playing in France, Holland and Belgium. In 1839 they returned to Paris. A year later they appeared again in public at Rennes, Nantes and Bordeaux, where they gave twelve concerts with great success. In Paris they played before Louis-Philippe at Neuilly and at Habeneck's special request made a most successful appearance at the Paris Conservatoire. Making the acquaintance of Bériot at Boulogne, Teresa received some lessons from him and then the sisters travelled in Belgium and Germany, played before the King of Prussia, gave twelve concerts at Frankfort o/M. and in 1843 arrived in Vienna, where they created a furore at twenty-five concerts. In the same year they returned to their native country and on 9 June 1845 appeared in London at the Philharmonic concert.

In 1848 Maria, who had been ailing for some months, suddenly died of rapid consumption and was buried in the Paris cemetery of Père Lachaise. Teresa was so overcome with grief at the loss of her companion that she retired from public life for some time, remaining mostly on an estate which her father had bought near Malezeville in Lorraine. Gradually she resumed her concert appearances, which she continued with remarkable success in Germany and Italy, until 1857, when she married, on 16 Apr., an eminent French military engineer, Charles Joseph Théodore Parmentier. After her marriage she abandoned the concert platform.

During the lifetime of Maria the sisters were greatly interested in the poor of Lyons, and as soon as Teresa had roused herself from the grief which her sister's death caused her, she exerted herself in establishing her Concerts des Pauvres, which she carried out in a systematic manner in almost every town in France. Teresa's compositions include:

'Ave Maria' for unaccomp. men's chorus.

'Fantaisie élégiaque' for vn.

2 Romances for vns.

Variations and transcriptions for vn. & pf.

E. H.-A.

MILANUZII, Carlo (b. Sant' Esanatolia nr. Camerino, c. 1590; d. prob. Lombardy, c. 1645).

Italian composer. He was an Augustinian monk and successively organist to his order at Perugia (c. 1619), at Sant' Eufemia, Verona (1622), Santo Stefano, Venice (1623–Dec. 1629) and at Finale di Modena (Dec. 1629–before 1635). In 1636 he was appointed maestro di cappella of the cathedral of Camerino. By 1642 he had returned to Sant' Eufemia, Verona, with a similar appointment, and from 1643 until his death was maestro di cappella and organist at San Mauro, Noventa di Piave (Lombardy). He was a prolific composer and accompanied many of his publications with loquacious comments on himself and his music. This sententious mixture of fulsome flattery and blatant self-advertisement unfortunately tells us little of importance. The celebrated Venetian publisher Alessandro Vincenti, issuing Ignatio Donati's 'Fanfalughe' (madrigals a 2-5) in 1630, dedicated them to Milanuzii as one of the worthiest musicians of the time. Milanuzii seems also to have been a poet, and some of his songs are probably settings of his own texts. He wrote a poem in praise of Giovanni Ghizzolo for the latter's 'Frutti d' amore' (1623).

He is best remembered as the composer of a large number of secular strophic airs, mainly for solo voice and continuo, which, together with a few cantatas, etc., he published in nine books called 'Ariose vaghezze'. The following survive: (i) 1622, (ii) probably 1622 (only a reprint of 1625 survives), (iii) 1623, (iv) 1623 or 1624 (only a reprint of 1624 survives), (vi) 1628, (vii) 1630 and (viii) 1635. Many of these songs are very charming, especially those in the later books, and deserved the popularity which they enjoyed in their day. Books ii and iii contain a number of pieces for the Spanish guitar, including one of the earliest examples of the famous 'Folia' melody, and book iv also includes songs by Monteverdi and his son Francesco, G. P. Berti and Guglielmo Miniscalchi. Giacomo Benvenuti published an edition of '22 arie' by Milanuzzi from books ii, vi and vii (Milan, 1922), and a song from vi also appears in Torchi's 'Eleganti canzoni ed arie italiane'. Milanuzzi also added a continuo part to Pomponio Nenna's first book of madrigals a 4 for an edition published at Venice in 1621. His other publications were all sacred and included the following: 'Messe concertate' a 4 (1618) and a 3 (1629; reprinted 1636), 'Messe e canzoni' a 5 (1622; reprinted 1632), motets, litanies and a Mass a 1-3 ('Hortus Sacer Deliciarum', 1636), 'Litanie della Madonna' a 4 and 8 (1622; reprinted 1642), 'Sacra cetra: affetti ecclesiastici' a 2-5, with some solo motets for bass voice (1625: 2 books), 'Antifoni e litanie' a 1-4 (1629), Psalms a 2 (1619), a 2-3 (1627; reprinted 1628, 1636) and a 2-3 (1643), and 'Salmi e vesperi' a 2-3 (1628). A motet for solo voice and continuo is included in Leonardo Simonetti's 'Ghirlanda sacra' (1625), and some antiphons and litanies a 1-4 were issued posthumously in 1647. All these works are provided with continuo for the organ. His music was all published at Venice. (N. F. ii).

BIBL.—ASLENGIO, S. L., 'Musici agostiniani' (Florence, 1929), pp. 32-36.

MILDENBURG, Anna von. See BAHR-MILDENBURG.

MILDER-HAUPTMANN, (Pauline) Anna (b. Constantinople, 13 Dec. 1785; d. Berlin, 29 May 1838).

Austrian soprano singer and tragic actress. She was the daughter of Milder, a courier in the Austrian service. In Vienna her fine voice and handsome person attracted the notice of Schikaneder, who urged her to enter the profession, offering to be responsible for her musical education and to superintend her début on the stage. The offer was accepted, and she became the pupil of an Italian singing-master named Tomaselli and subsequently of Salieri. She made her first public appearance in Vienna on 9 Apr. 1803, as Juno in Süssmayr's opera 'Der Spiegel von Arkadien'. That the part of Leonora in 'Fidelio' should have been written for her by Beethoven is sufficient testimony to the capabilities of the voice which caused Haydn to say to her, "Dear child, you have a voice like a house!"

Her fame spread rapidly, and in 1808 she made a brilliantly successful professional tour, obtaining, on her return to Vienna, a fresh engagement at court as prima donna assoluta. In 1810 Anna Milder married a rich jeweller named Hauptmann. Her greatest series of triumphs was achieved in Berlin, where she appeared in Gluck's 'Iphigenia in Tauris' in 1812. After singing with equal success in other great German towns she contracted, in 1816, a permanent engagement with the royal theatre of Berlin. Her great parts were those of the classical heroines of Gluck — Iphigenia, Alceste, Armida — for which she was pre-eminently fitted, both by her imposing presence and by her magnificent soprano voice, full, rich and flawless, which both in volume and quality seems to have left nothing to desire. At times, especially in her later years, she attempted Mozartian parts like Donna Elvira and Susanna, but her lack of execution prevented her from succeeding in these as she did in Weigl's opera 'Die Schweizerfamilie' (made celebrated by her impersonation of Emmeline) or in the broad declamatory style of Gluck. Although Leonora became one of her principal parts, her performance in 'Fidelio' was never, either vocally or dramatically, irreproachable. Thayer¹ relates a conversation with her, in 1836, when she told him what "hard fights" she used to have with the master about some passages in the adagio of the great scena in E major, described by her as "ugly", "unvocal" and "inimical [widerstrebend] to her voice".

In 1829 she left Berlin owing to misunderstandings and differences with Spontini. She then visited Russia, Sweden and Denmark, but her voice was failing fast. Her last public appearance was in Vienna in 1836, two years before her death. F. A. M.

MILDMAY, Audrey. See GLYNDEBOURNE.

MILES, Philip Napier (b. Shirehampton, Gloucestershire, 21 Jan. 1865; d. King's Weston, 19 July 1935).

English patron of music and amateur composer. The heir to a large landed property in the west of England (King's Weston), he studied music seriously both at Dresden and at home under Parry and Dannreuther. He constantly devoted himself to the encouragement of music in the neighbourhood of Bristol. He formed and conducted the Shirehampton Choral Society on his own estate and brought its performances to a high degree of proficiency, performing a wide repertory of music which ranged from the Elizabethan madrigals to the works of such modern composers as Vaughan Williams and Holst. He was president of the Bristol Madrigal Society and furthered in many ways Rutland Boughton's Glastonbury Festival scheme. He organized the performances of opera at Clifton in 1924 at which Falla's puppet opera 'El retablo de Maese Pedro' received its first English performance. Other works of interest, including some of his own, were there heard. A similar season was undertaken at Bristol in 1926. The University of Bristol gave Napier Miles the honorary degree of LL.D. in 1925.

¹ Thayer, 'Beethoven', II, 290; Krehbiel ed., II, 64.

The greater part of Napier Miles's own composition is for the stage. 'Westward Ho!', an opera in three acts, the book by E. F. Benson after Charles Kingsley's novel, was heard in London (Lyceum Theatre) in 1913, and portions of another grand opera, 'Queen Rosamond', were given at Shirehampton. But later works of less ambitious scope show surer handling, and among them the one-act opera 'Markheim' (after R. L. Stevenson's story) is a subtle piece of musical characterization. It was given at Bristol and afterwards in London, and it received an award from the Carnegie Trust. 'Music Comes', a choral dance (poem by John Freeman), was written for Glastonbury, produced there and subsequently given by the Glastonbury Players in London (Old Vic. Theatre). Its skilful treatment of combined rhythms and the delicate scoring for tenor voice, women's chorus and small orchestra are typical of the composer's refined talent. Similar in imaginative quality, though without the stage, is his setting of Keats's 'Ode to Autumn' (baritone, oboe, clarinet and string quartet), heard in London in 1926. He wrote many other songs (some published, others still in manuscript) which deserve attention.

Miles completed an opera, 'Good Friday' (on the play of that name by John Masefield), which was published (1933). It is intended for performance in a church in the manner of a Passion play. He left in manuscript another opera, 'Demeter', on a text specially written for him by T. Sturge Moore. H. C. C.

BIBL.—COLLES, H. C., 'Philip Napier Miles—Composer' (M. & L., XVII, 1936, p. 357).

MILFORD, Robin (Humphrey) (b. Oxford, 22 Jan. 1903).

English composer. He is a son of Sir Humphrey Milford, formerly head of the Oxford University Press, and was educated at Rugby and the R.C.M. in London, where he studied under Holst, Vaughan Williams and R. O. Morris. The influence of Balfour Gardiner has also been an important factor in his development as a composer. His works have been performed at the Three Choirs Festival (Gloucester 1931, 'A Prophet in the Land'), by the Bach Choir and the Concert Club (Courtauld-Sargent), as well as being broadcast (the violin Concerto, 1938). His Double Fugue for orchestra received the Carnegie Award in 1927.

Milford is one of the most prolific writers of his generation, and even the extensive list below excludes many early works now discarded by him. His fluency, when considered in conjunction with the serious character of his work and the high standard of quality it has reached, is notable, and his work has steadily strengthened. For a time (up to Op. 17) it appeared as though the first freshness were in danger of disappearing without any corresponding maturity coming in its place. This period, which is now seen to have been characterized by hesitant, tentative work, was, however, valuable, since it led to the production of those compositions (from Op. 28 onwards) that show the emergence of a more personal way of thought and style of utterance. 'The Concerto grosso' in A minor (Op. 46) and the violin Concerto in G minor (Op. 47) are the first works showing the composer's individuality in its most complete state. It is in 'The Darkling Thrush' that Milford's earliest work is at its best. This is a lyrical movement for solo violin and small orchestra, prefaced by a poem by Thomas Hardy, inevitably bringing Vaughan Williams's 'Lark Ascending' to mind. That comparison is, nevertheless, superficial and valueless. The matter is as much one of coincidence as of deliberate intention. What is important, as regards Milford's achievement in general, is that this work shows a particularly successful fusion of material, the free song of the bird becoming, without any appreciable sense of strain or incongruity, a significant part of the thematic texture of the music. Country life seems always to have interested Milford, and it was in such things that his gifts first found suitable means of expression, either in this sustained lyricism or in the smaller musical forms that have a country-dance ancestry. In a work built on a generous plan, such as the dramatic oratorio 'A Prophet in the Land' (Op. 21), the presence of these smaller forms (pipe tunes, arias that have the character of country songs) jeopardizes the unity of the work; but in such a work as the 'Evening Cantata' for baritone, chorus and organ a return is made to a shorter form and once again manner and matter are fused adequately, producing an effect of balanced construction, while at the same time there is increased individuality in the writing. The five 'Songs of Escape' for unaccompanied four-part chorus show great versatility in the use of choral technique and in the variety of styles employed, the first (words taken from Psalm LV) and the fourth (words from Psalm XXXIX) being in a free dramatic style, the fifth (words by Edmund Spenser) a hymn in simple strophic form, the third (words by Allan Cunningham) a glee, the second, 'Helen of Kirkconnell', a beautiful example of straightforward part-song workmanship. This last is a particularly fine song, worthy to be set beside the best work in that style of Parry and Stanford. The 'Concerto grosso' (1936) and the violin Concerto (1937) have all the fluency that might be expected as the result of such intense application. With that there is evidence that in these latest works the composer's command over the musical material has become at once easier and stronger, that the process of his thought is clarifying, and that his manipulation of the formal constituents of a given movement has gained in assurance.

Milford appears to have come under the lively influence of Holst's forthright reaction against post-war looseness and untidy sentimentalizing, a reaction which sent people to the simpler aspects of folklore and a return to nature. As those who were young with Milford began to grow into manhood they were faced with the problem of sublimating what was inessential in this attitude in order to meet the demands of a bewildered, uneasy, rapidly changing world where such a creed was no longer sufficient. Milford has been more successful in this difficult feat than have most of his contemporaries.

s. G.

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

STAGE WORKS

- Children's opera 'The Shoemaker' (1923-24).
Ballet 'The Jackdaw of Rheims' (after Richard Barham) (1945).
Ballet 'The Snow Queen' (after Hans Andersen) (1946).

CHORAL WORKS

- Oratorio 'A Prophet in the Land' (from the Bible, &c.) (1929-30).
'Evening Cantata' (George Herbert) for baritone, chorus & organ (1930).
Children's cantata 'Rain, Wind and Sunshine' (var. sources) (1930).
Oratorio 'The Pilgrim's Progress' (after John Bunyan) (1931-32).
'Four Heavenly Songs' (Watts, Donne, Herrick, anon.) for tenor, chorus & orch. (1932).
2 Short Cantatas for women's voices & pf. (1932)
1. Easter Morning (after George Herbert).
2. May in the Greenwood (var. sources).
'Songs of Escape' (Psalms), 5 partsongs (1934).
'Autumn and Spring' (Robert Bridges), 4 partsongs (1934-44).
'Drake's Chair' (Abraham Cowley) for baritone, chorus & orch. (1935).
'Triptych' for orch. with 2 narrators & small chorus (1938-49).
'The Forsaken Merman' (Matthew Arnold) for tenor, women's chorus, stgs. & pf. (1938-50).
Children's cantata 'Joy and Memory' (Hood, Wordsworth, Bridges, &c.) (1940-43).
2 Anthems for men's chorus & organ
1. By the Waters of Babylon (1940).
2. Up to those bright and glad some hills (Henry Vaughan) (1944).
Mass for children's voices, with soprano, baritone & organ (1941-42).
Children's cantata 'This Year, Next Year' (Walter de la Mare) (1943-46).
'Te Deum' for children's voices & organ (1944).
Psalm CXXI for 4 solo voices and unaccomp. chorus (1945).
'A Litany to the Holy Spirit' (Robert Herrick) for unaccomp. chorus (1947).
'A Mass for Christmas Morning' for unaccomp. 5-part chorus (1945-47).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Suite for chamber orch. (1924).
Double Fugue (1926).

- 'Sir Walter's Overture' (1930, rev. later).
Miniature Concerto, G ma., for stgs. (1933).
'Concerto grosso' for small orch. (1936).
'Elegy for the Duke of Monmouth' for stgs. (1939).
'Ariel' for small orch. (1940).

SOLO INSTRUMENT AND ORCHESTRA

- Suite, D mi., for oboe & stgs. (1925).
'The Darkling Thrush' for vn. & small orch. (1928).
'Go, little book' for flute & stgs. (1928).
Miniature Concerto for harpsichord & small orch. (1929).
Vn. Concerto, G mi. (1937).
'Elegiac Meditation' for viola & stgs. (1946-47).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- Fantasy, B mi., for stg. 4tet (1945).
Trio, F ma., for clar., cello & pf. (1948).
Trio, C mi., for vn., cello & pf. (1948).
Trio, E mi., for 2 vns. & pf. (1948-49).

ONE INSTRUMENT AND PIANOFORTE

- Idyll: 'Under the Greenwood Tree' for vn. (1941).
Sonata, C ma., for flute (1944).
Sonata, D ma., for vn. (1945).
'Threne' for cello (1946-47).
'Lyrical Movement' for clar. (1948).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- 'Prelude, Air and Finale on a Well-known Mordent' (1936).
'Diversions' (1938).
'Lullaby' for pf. duet (1940) and for 2 pfs. (1947).
Saraband and Fugato for 2 pfs. (1948).
'Night-Piece' for 2 harpsichords or pfs. (1949).

ORGAN MUSIC

- 'Three Pastorals' (1941-42).
'Easter Meditations'
Nos. 1 & 2 (1943-44).
Nos. 3 & 4 (1945).
Nos. 5 & 6 (1946).
'Two Harvest Meditations' (1947).

SONGS

- 2 Songs (Oliver Goldsmith) with a pf. Interlude (1927).
4 Songs (Bridges) for soprano (1933).
'Four Seasonable Songs' (Blake, W. Cornish, Landor, anon.) for soprano (1935).
'A Book of Songs' (collected) (1939).
3 Songs (Hardy and Wordsworth) for bass-baritone (1940 & 1944).

MILHAUD, Darius (b. Aix-en-Provence, 4 Sept. 1892).

French composer. He came of a well-to-do commercial Jewish family long settled at Aix and the neighbourhood, and although delicate and nervous, he spent a happy childhood there, the family moving to a country house just outside the town each summer. When he was three years old his mother discovered him at the piano, playing a tune he had heard, but on account of his weak constitution he was not given regular music lessons until he was seven, when he began to learn the violin. He was kept in touch with such musical and generally cultivated society as his environment contained, and in 1904 his violin master drew him into his string quartet. During adolescence he made close friends of Léo Latil and Armand Lunel, both of whom were to furnish him with words for some of his early works. He went to Paris with the latter in 1909, intending at first to satisfy his parents' wish that he should become a professional violinist; but as his studies at the Conservatoire progressed, he became more and more certain that composition was his true vocation. The musical life of Paris quickly formed his taste, which in musical matters was already decided enough to save him from taking his impressions ready-made from his surroundings. He passionately admired Debussy and Mussorgsky, for instance, but took a great dislike to Wagner and was left cold by Ravel. He wrote a great deal, especially during the summer holidays at home, but destroyed nearly all his early works, including an opera, declaring later that the violin and pianoforte Sonata of 1911 was the first of his compositions worthy of being preserved.

The outbreak of the first world war in 1914 interrupted Milhaud's studies before he was able to compete for the Prix de Rome at the Conservatoire. Not that he was the sort of student who could have profited greatly by this conventional aid to musical education, and he had indeed found both the harmony lessons of Xavier Leroux and the fugue class of Widor somewhat unprofitable, though he enjoyed the counterpoint studies under Gédalge. He moved much among artists and literary people as well as among musicians even during his first four or five years in Paris, and was stimulated by several of them, especially by his two most distinguished literary collaborators, whose acquaintance he made at this time, Francis Jammes and Paul Claudel. The latter, who was then more famous as a diplomat than as a man of letters, induced Milhaud in 1916, when he was appointed French Minister to Brazil, to accompany him to Rio de Janeiro as his secretary. Milhaud was there only from Feb. 1917 to Nov. 1918, but became very fond of the country and was to some extent influenced by its folk and popular music.

On his return to Paris he found new musical movements in full swing: Erik Satie was followed by the young composers on the musical and Jean Cocteau on the literary side, and Milhaud found himself drawn, with Auric, Durey, Honegger, Poulenc and Germaine Tailleferre, into the group of "Les Six", formed almost before the composers concerned knew what was happening, neither altogether to their satisfaction nor always to their advantage. Satie was an eccentric, not interested in "movements" and wholly unconcerned with expedients for getting on; Cocteau, on the other hand, was found to have rather too much of his own way with the composers, more particularly for the strong-minded Milhaud, who knew very well what he wanted and was quite capable of thinking out his aesthetic principles for himself. Like his five associates he was, in fact, described as a member of "Les Six" long after the group had ceased to exist. When, after the production in Feb. 1920 of the Cocteau ballet 'Le Bœuf sur le toit' (given in London as 'The Nothing-doing Bar'), in which Milhaud had indulged his pleasure in music in the Brazilian manner, he discovered that he was in danger of being regarded by the public as nothing but a frivolous exploiter of fashionable oddities, it became clear to him that the time had come to shake off outside influences and to set seriously to work on his own lines. Not, indeed, on traditional lines, for he was an inveterate experimenter; but he decided that the experiments should be his own and that they should lie in his musical technique itself, not be imposed on him from outside. He had already in 1915 made a daring attempt at a new kind of stage music in the score he provided for Claudel's translation of the 'Choephori' of Aeschylus, where he tried out an "orchestration of stage noises" employing a number of percussion instruments in combination with such things as whistling winds, human groans and cries of despair. At the same time he proved in this work, as in the others comprised in Claudel's Greek trilogy¹, that he was capable of lifting dark and sinister themes to a high level. But he was equally well versed in the lighter and humorous side of his art, while his chamber music and some of his song cycles show that delicate tints and lyrical emotions were by no means outside his wide range of expression. He was in fact, even in the 1920s, by far the most powerfully creative and versatile composer among his contemporaries in France, as well as technically the most resourceful and accomplished, while in the extraordinary rapidity of his output he was approached only by Honegger.

In 1920 Milhaud formed a second orchestral suite from the incidental music to Paul Claudel's satiric drama 'Protée', which had a very stormy reception when Pierné conducted it on 24 Oct., and in 1922 he completed his music for the Aeschylus-Claudel trilogy with a score for 'The Eumenides'. In both these works he showed his growing interest in polytonal and metrical experiments, which sometimes seem to be exploited merely for their own sake, because the composer was driven to making them by an insatiable intellectual curiosity; but in strong and convincing works such as these he succeeds in making them sound like new artistic resources that came naturally to him.

At the I.S.C.M. Festivals held at Salzburg in 1922 and 1924 Milhaud was represented, respectively, by a Sonata for flute, oboe, clarinet and pianoforte, an attractive essay in chamber music, and by the 'Catalogue des fleurs' for voice and chamber orchestra, a work not unlike the 'Machines agricoles', a similar setting of a trade catalogue that was thought to be verging on mere eccentric trifling. The little opera called a "musical novel" based on Francis Jammes's 'La Brebis égarée' was produced at the Opéra-Comique on 12 Dec. 1923. The ballets 'Salade' and 'Le

¹ See Catalogue of Works: Incidental Music.

'Train bleu' came out in Paris in May and June 1924, and the latter was given at the London Coliseum very soon afterwards as part of the repertory of Diaghilev's Russian Ballet. About this time Milhaud travelled much and often far afield. He visited Sardinia with his Belgian friend and later biographer Paul Collaer, and in 1925, when he married his cousin Madeleine, he took her for a honeymoon trip to Syria. Later he went to Russia, the U.S.A., Vienna (where he met Schoenberg), Holland, Italy, Spain, Portugal and so on. In 1930 his most ambitious work, the opera 'Christophe Colomb', in which he was once more associated with Claudel, took him to Berlin, where it was produced at the State Opera on 5 May. Here again he was intent — perhaps only too intent — on setting himself a new task; in fact he attempted nothing less than the creation of an entirely novel operatic technique that drew on ways and means as widely divergent as the Greek chorus and the cinematograph, and he also drew upon such different things as the medieval mystery play, the Wagnerian Leitmotiv and modern symbolism and expressionism. The next opera, 'Maximilien', on the subject of the ill-fated Emperor of Mexico, was first heard at the Paris Opéra on 1 May 1932. It made use of some of the technical experience gained with 'Christophe Colomb', but was on the whole a less impressive work.

About the same time, perhaps by way of reacting against the complexity and sophistication of these stage works, Milhaud became interested in the kind of "utility music" that is associated chiefly with contemporary German composers, and particularly with Hindemith. He wrote a stage play for children entitled 'A propos de bottes', consisting of music easy to sing and play, and contributed to a series called 'La Musique en famille et à l'école', followed by two similar pieces. It was completed in 1932, and in his preface the composer expressed a wish that this kind of work should put him into touch with the people at large, which neither his essays in polytonality nor his curious operatic ventures had been able to do. He reverted, however, to a style that could not claim and certainly never intended to claim popularity in the pianoforte Concerto produced in Paris on 25 Nov. 1934, the first movement of which, for instance, is an essay in bitonality. But the contribution he made with seven other distinguished French composers to the incidental music for Romain Rolland's 'Le 14 Juillet', produced at the Paris Arena in July 1936, showed him quite capable of turning out music suited to an occasion where the exploitation of new problems would have been out of place.

The disastrous turn which the second world war took in France in 1940 drove Milhaud to the U.S.A. with his wife and his young son Daniel. He parted very unwillingly from his old home at Aix and keenly felt the loss of his mother, who died tragically during his absence. But he was glad to be spared separation from his wife and child, the more so because he had found an ideal partner in Madeleine Milhaud, not only an admirable wife, but also a literary collaborator. His stay in the U.S.A. made new contacts for him, and he was offered congenial work as professor at Mills College, Oakland, California, where he remained until Aug 1947, when he returned to France. But although he was appointed professor of composition at the Paris Conservatoire, he continues to return to Oakland annually, thus dividing his time between France and the U.S.A.

The appended catalogue of works will give an insight into Milhaud's enormous capacity for hard and rapid work, and at least an idea of his extraordinary versatility. There are hardly any categories of music and few vocal and instrumental combinations for which he has not written at one time or another; but only a study of the music itself can reveal the astonishing diversity of his treatment and the closeness of his workmanship. Not all his music, of course, is solid or satisfactory, so that the criticism often levelled against him that he has written far too much is by no means unjustified. Many things in his catalogue, too, are light or extremely short, and a number of concert works of various sorts were rescued from incidental or film music likely to be forgotten after it had served its immediate purpose. Even so, much remains that is either valuable or at the very least profoundly interesting and shows Milhaud, for all his alarming readiness to write at all times, in any vein and for any medium, as a scrupulously painstaking craftsman. What is more, it is evident that he never relies for any new work on technical devices acquired for the purposes of an earlier one, which he will not allow to harden into tricks and mannerisms. Each composition is based on a technique suited to it alone or at worst to similar works — and Milhaud has rarely produced works that show marked similarities. While his choice of medium is astonishingly diversified — the incidental music for almost every play is differently scored (sometimes for quite a small chamber combination) — his resources of composition may draw upon anything from jazz, folksong or exotic popular music to involved polyphonic complexities. He is particularly skilled in the handling of polytonal counterpoint¹ and knows how to interweave melodic strands in different keys in such a way that the result strikes the ear as perfectly reasonable as well as invariably lucid.

E. B.

¹ For a specimen see COUNTERPOINT, Ex. 15.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- AUGSBOURG, GÉA, 'La Vie de Darius Milhaud en images' (Paris, 1935).
 BAUER, MARION, 'Darius Milhaud' (M.Q., XXVIII, 1942, p. 139).
 BECK, GÉORGES, 'Darius Milhaud: étude suivie du catalogue chronologique complet' (Paris, 1949).

- COLLAER, PAUL, 'Darius Milhaud' (Antwerp & Paris, 1947).
 KRENEK, ERNST, 'Darius Milhaud', in 'The Book of Modern Composers' (New York, 1942).
 MILHAUD, DARIUS, 'Notes sans musique' (Paris, 1949).
 'Notes without Music' (autobiography). Trans. by Donald Evans (London, 1952).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

OPERAS

Title	Libretto	Composed	Production
'La Brebis égarée', 3 acts (roman musical).	Francis Jammes.	1910-15.	Paris, Opéra-Comique, 10 Dec. 1923.
'Les Malheurs d'Orphée', 3 acts.	Armand Lunel.	1924.	Brussels, Théâtre de la Monnaie, 7 May 1926.
'Esther de Carpentras', 2 acts (opéra bouffe).	Lunel.	1924-25.	Paris, Opéra-Comique, 1 Feb. 1938.
'Le Pauvre Matelot' (complainte en trois actes).	Jean Cocteau.	1926.	Paris, Opéra-Comique, 12 Dec. 1927.
'Trois Opéra-Minutes' 1. L'Enlèvement d'Europe, 1 act. 2. L'Abandon d'Ariane, 1 act. 3. La Délivrance de Thésée, 1 act. }	Henri Hoppenot.	1927.	Baden-Baden, 17 July 1927.
'Christophe Colomb', 2 acts (2 scenes).	Paul Claudel.	1928.	Wiesbaden, 20 Apr. 1928.
'Maximilien', 3 acts.	Lunel.	1930.	Berlin, State Opera, 5 May 1930.
'L'Opéra du gueux' (arr. of 'The Beggar's Opera'), 3 acts.	John Gay, trans. by Louis Ducreux.	1937.	Paris, Opéra, 4 Jan. 1932.
'Médée', 1 act.	Madeleine Milhaud, after Euripides.	1938.	Marseilles (broadcast), 1937.
'Bolivar.'	Jules Supervielle & Madeleine Milhaud.	1943.	Antwerp, Flemish Opera, 7 Oct. 1939.
'David.'	Lunel.	1953.	Jerusalem (King David Festival), 1954.

CHILDREN'S OPERAS

'A propos de bottes.'	René Chalupt.	1932.	Paris, May 1933.
'Un Petit Peu de musique.'	Armand Lunel.	1932.	Paris, Feb. 1933.
'Un Petit Peu d'exercice.'	Lunel.	1934.	Paris, 2 Feb. 1937.

BALLETs

Title	Scenario	Composed	Production
'L'Homme et son désir.'	Paul Claudel.	1918.	Paris, 6 June 1921.
'Le Bœuf sur le toit.'	Jean Cocteau.	1919.	Paris, 21 Feb. 1920.
'Les Mariés de la Tour Eiffel.'	Cocteau.	1921.	Paris, June 1921.
'La Création du monde.'	Blaise Cendrars.	1923.	Paris, Oct. 1923.
'Le Train bleu.'	Cocteau.	1924.	Paris, May 1924.
'Salade.'	Albert Flament.	1924.	Paris, May 1924.
'L'Éventail de Jeanne.'	Alice Bourgat.	1927.	Paris, in private, 16 June 1927; Opéra, Feb. 1929.
'La Bien-Aimée' (music arr. from Schubert and Liszt).	Bronislava Nizhinska.	1928 (rescored 1941).	Paris, 22 Nov. 1928; New York, Nov. 1941.
'Les Songes.'	André Derain.	1933.	Paris, 1933.
'The Bells' (after Edgar Allan Poe).	Ruth Page.	1945.	Chicago, 26 Apr. 1946.
'Jeux de Printemps.'	Martha Graham.	1944.	Washington, 1944.
'Madame Miroir.'	Jean Genet.	1948.	Paris, 31 May 1948.
'Les Rêves de Jacob.'		1949.	U.S.A., 19 Aug. 1949.

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

Title	Play by	Composed	Production
'Protée.'	Paul Claudel.	1913-19.	Groningen, June 1929.
'L'Orestie', trilogy 1. Agamemnon. 2. Les Choéphores. 3. Les Euménides.	Aeschylus, trans. Claudel.	1913. 1915.	Paris, Apr. 1927.
'L'Annonce faite à Marie' (1st version).	Claudel.	1917-22. 1932.	Brussels, Théâtre de la Monnaie, 27 Mar. 1935.
'Le Châteaude des papes.'	André de Richaud.	1932.	Brussels, I.N.R., 18 Nov. 1949.
			Brussels, Palais des Beaux-Arts, 21 Jan. 1934.
			Paris, Théâtre de l'Atelier, 13 Oct. 1932.

¹ Not identical with the play (see Incidental Music).

² 'Marche nuptiale' and 'Fugue du massacre'; written in collaboration with Auric, Honegger, Poulenc and Tailleferre.

³ Polka only by Milhaud; other contributions by Auric, Delannoy, Ferroud, Ibort, Poulenc, Ravel, Roland-Manuel, Roussel and Schmitt.

Title	Play by	Composed	Production
'Le Cycle de la création.'	Luigi Sturzo.	1934.
'Se plaisir sur la même fleur.'	Moreno, trans. Casa	1934.
'La Sagease.'	Fuerte.
	Claudel.	1935.	Paris, Radio Française, 8 Nov. 1945.
'Le Faiseur.'	After Balzac.	1935.	Paris, Théâtre de l'Atelier, 30 Nov. 1935.
'Bolivar.' ¹	Jules Supervielle.	1935-36.	Paris, Comédie-Française, 28 Feb. 1936.
'La Folle du ciel.'	René Lenormand.	1936.	Paris, Théâtre des Mathurins, 17 Feb. 1936.
'Escape me never.'	Trans. from Margaret Kennedy.	1936.	Brussels, Théâtre des Galeries, Apr. 1936.
'Le Quatorze Juillet.' ²	Romain Rolland.	1936.	Paris, Théâtre de l'Alhambra, 14 July 1936.
'Bertrand de Born.'	Valmy-Baisse.	1936.	Orange, Théâtre Antique, 2 Aug. 1936.
'Le Conquérant.'	Jean Mistler.	1936.	Paris, Théâtre de l'Odéon, 13 Nov. 1936.
'Amal, ou Le Lettre du roi.'	Rabindranath Tagore, trans. André Gide.	1936.	Paris, Théâtre des Mathurins, 1936.
'Le Voyageur sans bagages.' ³	Jean Anouilh.	1936.	Paris, Théâtre des Mathurins, 1936.
'Julius Caesar.'	Shakespeare, trans. Jollivet.	1936.	Paris, Théâtre de l'Atelier, 14 Jan. 1937.
'Le Trompeur de Séville.'	André Obey.	1937.	Paris, Théâtre de la Porte Saint-Martin, 25 Jan. 1937.
'Liberté', spectacle.	Charles Vildrac, Lenormand & others.	1937.	Paris, Théâtres des Champs-Élysées, 2 May 1937.
'The Duchess of Malfi.'	Webster, trans. Henri Fluchère.	1937.	Marseilles, Théâtre du Rideau Gris, 5 May 1937.
'Le Médecin volant', children's play.	Vildrac, after Molière.	1937.	Paris, Théâtre Scaramouche, 23 May 1937.
'Romeo and Juliet.'	Shakespeare, trans. Jouve & Pitoyev.	1937.	Paris, Théâtre des Mathurins, 7 June 1937.
'Hécube.'	Euripides, trans. Richaud.	1937.	Paris, Théâtre Scaramouche, 6 Sept. 1937.
'Macbeth.'	Shakespeare.	1937.	London, New (Old Vic.) Theatre, 23 Nov. 1937.
'Plutus.'	Aristophanes, trans. Jollivet.	1938.	Paris, Théâtre de l'Atelier, 1 Feb. 1938.
'Le Bal des voleurs.'	Anouilh.	1938.	Paris, Théâtre des Arts, 15 Sept. 1938.
'La Première Famille.'	Supervielle.	1938.	Paris, Théâtre des Mathurins, Sept. 1938.
'Tricolore.'	Lestringuez.	1938.	Paris, Comédie-Française, 14 Oct. 1938.
'Hamlet.'	Shakespeare, trans. Jules Laforgue.	1939.	Paris, Théâtre de l'Atelier, Apr. 1939.
'Murder in the Cathedral.'	T. S. Eliot, trans. Fluchère.	1939.
'Un Petit Ange de rien du tout.'	C. A. Puget.	1940.	Paris, Théâtre Michel, 29 Apr. 1940.
'L'Annonce faite à Marie' (2nd version).	Claudel.	1942.	Mills College, U.S.A., 8 Dec. 1943 (fragments).
'The House of Bernarda Alba.'	Federico García Lorca.	1947.	Hollywood, Coronet Theatre, Sept. 1947.
'Shéhérazade.'	Supervielle.	1948.	Avignon, Festival, July 1948.
'Le Jeu de Robin et de Marion', arr. from Adam de La Halle.		1948.

SPECTACLE WITH FIREWORKS

'Fête de la musique' (words by Paul Claudel) for the Paris Exhibition (1937).

FILM MUSIC

'Actualités', news film (1928).
 'La Petite Lilie', by Cavalcanti (1929).
 'Hallo Everybody', by Hans Richter (1933).
 'Madame Bovary', by Jean Renoir, after Flaubert (1933).
 'L'Hippocampe', by Jean Painlevé (1934).
 'Tartarin de Tarascon', by Raymond Bernard, after Alphonse Daudet (1934).
 'Voix d'enfants', documentary of 'La Manécanterie' (1935).
 'The Beloved Vagabond', by Kurt Bernhard, after W. J. Locke (1936).
 'Grands Feux', dessin animé (1937).

¹ Not identical with the opera of the same title (see Operas).

² Funeral March only; other music by Auric, Honegger, Ibert, Koechlin, Lazarus and Roussel.

³ See also Chamber Music.

'La Citadelle du silence', by L'Herbier (1937).
 'La Conquête du ciel', by Richter, with Honegger (1937).
 'Mollenard', after Gilbert (1937).
 'Rasputin', by L'Herbier (1938).
 'Cavalcade d'amour', by Bernard, with Honegger (1939).
 'Les Otages', by Bernard (1938).
 'Islands', by Cavalcanti (1939).
 'Espoir', after André Malraux (1939).
 'Gulf Stream', by Alexeyev (1939).
 'The Private Affairs of Bel Ami', by A. Lewin, after Maupassant (1946).
 'Dreams that Money can Buy', by Richter (1947).

RADIO MUSIC

'Voyage au pays du rêve', by Jean Ravenne (1939).
 'Le Grand Testament', film radiophonique, by Nino Franck (1948).
 'La Fin du monde', by Blaise Cendrars (1949).

CHORAL WORKS

Psalms CXXXVI for baritone, chorus & orch., trans. Paul Claudel (1918).
 Psalm CXXVI for unaccompanied men's voices (1921).

- 'Deux Élégies romaines' (trans. from Goethe) for women's voices (1922).
 'Cantate pour louer le Seigneur' (Biblical words) for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1928).
 'Deux Poèmes de Cendrars' for 4-part chorus (1932)
 1. La Danse des animaux.
 2. Chant de la mort.
 'La Mort d'un tyran', cantata (Lampridius, trans. Diderot), for chorus & insts. (1932).
 'Devant sa main nue' (Marcel Ravel) for women's voices (1933).
 'Pan et Syrinx', cantata (Claudel & others) for soprano, baritone, chorus & 5 insts. (1934).
 'Les Amours de Ronsard' (Ronsard) for chorus & small orch. (1934)
 1. La Rose.
 2. La Tourterelle.
 3. L'Aubépin.
 4. Le Rossignol.
 'Trois Chansons de négresse', from 'Bolivar' (see Incidental Music) for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1935-36).
 'Moyen-âge fleuri', from 'Bertrand de Born' (see Incidental Music) for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1936).
 'Cantique du Rhône' (Claudel) for unaccomp. chorus (1936).
 'Cantate de la paix' (Claudel) for Aristide Briand's 75th birthday, for children's & men's voices (1937).
 'Main tendue à tous' (Charles Vildrac) for unaccomp. chorus (1937).
 'Les Deux Cités' (Claudel) for unaccomp. chorus (1937).
 'Cantate pour l'inauguration du Musée de l'Homme' (Robert Desnos) for the Paris Exhibition (1937).
 'Incantations', 3 choruses (Aztec words, French trans. Alejo Carpentier) for unaccomp. men's voices (1939).
 'Quatrains valaisans, 5 choruses' (Rainer Maria Rilke) for unaccomp. chorus (1939).
 'Cantate de la guerre' (Claudel) for unaccomp. chorus (1940).
 Cantata for the centenary of the Synagogue at Aix (Armand Lunel) (1940).
 'Borechou-Shema' (Hebrew & English words) for chorus & organ (1944).
 'Prière pour les morts (Kaddish)' (Hebrew & French words) for chorus & organ (1945).
 'Pledge to Mills' (George Hedley) for women's voices (1946).
 'Six Sonnets composés au secret' (Jean Cassou) for unaccomp. chorus (1946).
 'Hymnus ambrosianus' (liturgical), 3rd Symphony, with chorus (1946).
 'Sabbath Morning Service' (liturgical) for baritone, chorus & organ or orch. (1947).
 'L'Choh Dodi' (liturgical) for soloist, chorus & organ (1948).
 'Naissance de Vénus' (Jules Supervielle) for unaccomp. chorus (1949).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 'Suite symphonique' No. 1 (1913-14).
 Symphony No. 1, 'Le Printemps', for small orch. (1917).
 Symphony No. 2, 'Pastorale', for small orch. (1918).
 'Suite symphonique' No. 2 (from 'Protée', see Incidental Music) (1919).
 'Sérénade' (1920-21).
 'Saudades do Brazil', suite of dances (1920-21) (see also Pianoforte Works).
 Symphony No. 3, 'Sérénade', for small orch. (1921).
 Symphony No. 4, 'Ouverture, Choral, Étude', for stgs. (1922).
 Symphony No. 5 for small wind orch. (1922).
 'Deux Hymnes' (1923).
 'Fragments symphoniques' from 'Le Conquérant' (1936) (see Incidental Music).
 'Suite provençale' from 'Le Trompeur de Séville' and 'Bertrand de Born' (1936) (see Incidental Music).
 'Le Carnaval de Londres', from 'The Beggar's Opera' (1937) (see Operas).
 Dance 'L'Oiseau' (1937).
 'Cortège funèbre', from 'Espoir' (1939) (see Film Music).
 Fanfare (1939).
 Symphony No. 1 for full orch. (1939).
 'Opus Americanum No. 2', ballet suite (1940).
 'Introduction et allégo', from Couperin's 'La Sultana' (1940).
 'Mills Fanfare' for stgs. (1941).

- 'Four Sketches' (1941)
 1. Élogue.
 2. Madrigal.
 3. Sobre la loma
 4. Alameda.
 'Fanfare de la liberté' (1942).
 'Jeux de printemps' (1944)
 1. Alerie.
 2. Cai.
 3. Tranquille.
 4. Robuste.
 5. Nonchalant.
 6. Joyeux.
 'Suite française' (1944) (see also Military Band).
 Symphony No. 2 for full orch. (1944).
 Symphony No. 3 (see Choral Works).
 'Sept Danses sur des airs palestiniens' (1946-47).
 Symphony (1848) (1947).

MILITARY BAND MUSIC

- 'Indication et Marche pour les bons d'armements' for brass (1940).
 'Suite française' (1944)
 1. Normandie.
 2. Bretagne.
 3. Ile-de-France.
 4. Alsace-Lorraine.
 5. Provence.
 2 Marches (1945)
 1. In Memoriam (Pearl Harbour).
 2. Gloria victoribus.

MUSIC FOR JAZZ BAND

- 'Le Tango des Fratellini' (1919).
 'Fantaisie sur "Le Bœuf sur le toit"' (1919).
 'Caramel mou' (Jean Cocteau), vocal shimmy (1920).
 'Trois Rag Caprices' (1927) (see also Pianoforte Music).

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

- 'Poème sur un cantique de Camargue' for pf. (1913).
 'Cinéma-Fantaisie sur "Le Bœuf sur le toit"' for vn. (1919) (see also Ballets).
 'Cinq Études' for pf. (1920).
 'Ballade' for pf. (1920).
 'Le Carnaval d'Aix' for pf. after 'Salade' (1926) (see also Ballets).
 Vn. Concerto No. 1 (1927).
 Viola Concerto (1929).
 Concerto for perc. & small orch. (1929-30).
 Pf. Concerto No. 1 (1933).
 'Concertino de printemps' for vn. (1934).
 Cello Concerto No. 1 (1935).
 'Fantaisie pastorale' for pf. (1938).
 Concerto for flute & vn. (1938).
 Pf. Concerto No. 2 (1941).
 Concerto for 2 pls. (1941).
 Clar. Concerto (1941).
 'Concerto for armonica' (1942) (later transcribed for vn.).
 'Air de la sonata' for viola (1944).
 Cello Concerto No. 2 (1945).
 Pf. Concerto No. 3 (1946).
 Vn. Concerto No. 2 (1946).
 Concerto for marimba & vibraphone (1947).
 'L'Apothéose de Molière: suite d'après Baptiste Anet', for harpsichord & stgs. (1948).
 Pf. Concerto No. 4 (1949).

VOICE AND ORCHESTRA

(See also Songs for works written for voice and pf. and afterwards orchestrated)

- 'Le Retour de l'enfant prodigue' (André Gide) for 5 voices & 21 insts. (1917).
 Psalm CXXIX, trans. Paul Claudel, for baritone (1919).
 'Trois Chansons de troubadour' (Valmy-Baisse) from 'Bertrand de Born' (1936) (see also Incidental Music).
 'Cantate nuptiale' (words from the Song of Songs) for his parents' golden wedding (1937).
 'Prends cette rose' (Ronsard) for soprano & tenor (1937).
 'Les Quatre Éléments' (Robert Desnos) for soprano & tenor (1938).
 Chants populaires provençaux' (traditional) (1938)
 1. Magali.
 2. Se canto.
 3. L'Antoni.
 4. Le Mal d'amour.

- 'Trois Élégies' (Francis Jammes) for soprano, tenor & stg. (1938).
 'Quatre Chansons de Ronsard' (1941)
 1. A une fontaine.
 2. A Cupidon.
 3. Tais-toi, babillarde.
 4. Dieu vous gard'.
 'Cain et Abel' (words from the Bible) for reciter (1944).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- String Quartet No. 1 (1912).
 Sonata for 2 vns. & pf. (1914).
 String Quartet No. 2 (1914-15).
 String Quartet No. 3 (1916).¹
 String Quartet No. 4 (1918).
 Sonata for flute, oboe, clar. & pf. (1918).
 String Quartet No. 5 (1920).
 String Quartet No. 6 (1922).
 String Quartet No. 7 (1925).
 'Suite de concert' from 'La Création du Monde' for stg. 4tet & pf. (1926) (see also Ballets).
 String Quartet No. 8 (1932).
 'Pastorale' for oboe, clar. & bassoon (1935).
 String Quartet No. 9 (1935).
 Suite for vn., clar. & pf. from the music for 'Le Voyageur sans bagages' (1936) (see also Incidental Music).
 Suite on Themes by Michel Corrette for oboe, clar. & bassoon, from the music for 'Romeo and Juliet' (1937) (see also Incidental Music).
 'La Cheminée du roi René', suite for flute, oboe, clar., horn & bassoon (1939).
 'La Reine de Saba', Palestinian air arr. for stg. 4tet (1939).
 Sonatina for 2 vns. (1940).
 'Sonatine à trois' for vn., viola & cello (1940).
 String Quartet No. 10 ('Birthday Quartet'*) (1940).
 Sonatina for vn. & viola (1941).
 String Quartet No. 11 (1942).
 Duo for 2 vns. (1945).
 String Quartet No. 12 ('in memory of Fauré'*) (1945).
 String Quartet No. 13 (1946).
 'Prélude et Postlude pour "Lidoire"' for accordion, 4 wind insts. & double bass (1946).
 Trio for vn., viola & cello (1947).
 String Quartet No. 14 (1948) [playable separately or String Quartet No. 15 (1949)] together.

VOCAL CHAMBER MUSIC

- 'Machines agricoles' (from a catalogue) for voice & 7 insts. (1919).
 'Catalogue de fleurs' (Lucien Daudet) for voice & 7 insts. (1920).
 'Cocktail' (Larsen) for voice & 3 clars. (1921).
 Symphony "No. 6" for vocal 4tet, oboe & cello (1923).
 'Adages' (André Richaud) for vocal 4tet & 7 insts. from 'Le Château des papes' (1932) (see also Incidental Music).
 'Cantate de l'enfant et de la mère' (Maurice Carême) for reciter, stg. 4tet & pf. (1938).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- Sonata No. 1 (1911).
 'Le Printemps' (1914).
 Sonata No. 2 (1917).
 'Impromptu' (1926).
 'Trois Caprices de Paganini: duo concertant' (1927).
 '10e Sonate de Baptiste Anet', transcription (1935).
 'Danses de Jacaremirim' (1945).
 Sonata with harpsichord (1945).
 'Farandoleurs' (1946).

VIOLA AND PIANOFORTE

- Suite 'Quatre Visages' (1943).
 Sonata No. 1 (1944).
 Sonata No. 2 (1944).

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

Élégie (1945).

WIND INSTRUMENT AND PIANOFORTE

- Sonatina for flute (1922).
 Sonatina for clar. (1927).
 'Exercice musical' for pipe (1934).

ONDES MARTENOT AND PIANOFORTE

Suite from 'Le Château des papes' (1932) (see also Incidental Music).

PIANOFORTE SOLO

- Suite (1913).
 'Variations sur un thème de Cliquet' (1915).
 'Le Printemps', Nos. 1-3 (1915-19).
 Sonata No. 1 (1916).
 'Le Printemps', Nos. 4-6 (1919-20).
 'Saudades do Brasil' (1920-21)
 Book I
 1. Sorocaba.
 2. Botafogo.
 3. Leme.
 4. Copacabana.
 5. Ipanema.
 6. Gavea.
 Book II
 7. Corcovado.
 8. Tijuca.
 9. Paineras.
 10. Sumaré.
 11. Laranjeiras.
 12. Paysandu.
 'Trois Rag Caprices' (1922) (also for small orch.).
 'Choral' (1930).
 'L'Automne' (1932)
 1. Septembre.
 2. Alfama.
 3. Adieu.
 'L'Album de Madame Bovary' (1933), (see also Film
 'Trois Valses' from 'Madame Bovary' (1933) Music).
 'Quatre Romances sans paroles' (1933).
 'Promenade' (1933; revised as 'Le Tour de l'Exposition', 1937).
 Children's Pieces (1941)
 Set I: Touches noires.
 Set II: Touches blanches.
 'La Libertadora' (1943).
 'La Muse ménagère' (1944)
 1. La Mienne (Dédicace).
 2. Le Réveil.
 3. Les Soins du ménage.
 4. La Poésie.
 5. La Cuisine.
 6. Les Fleurs dans la maison.
 7. La Lessive.
 8. Musique ensemble.
 9. Le Fils peintre.
 10. Le Chat.
 11. Cartomancie.
 12. Les Soins au malade.
 13. La Douceur des soirées.
 14. Lectures nocturnes.
 15. Reconnaissance à la Muse.
 'Une Journée' (1946)
 1. L'Aube.
 2. La Matinée.
 3. Midi.
 4. L'Après-midi.
 5. Le Crépuscule.
 'Méditation' (1947).
 'L'Enfant aime' (1948)
 1. Les Fleurs.
 2. Les Bonbons.
 3. Les Jouets.
 4. Sa Mère.
 5. La Vie.
 Sonata No. 2 (1949).

TWO PIANOFORTES

- 'Scaramouche' from 'Le Médecin volant' (1939) (see also Incidental Music)
 1. Vif.
 2. Modéré.
 3. Brasileira.

¹ Written in memory of Léo Latil, who was killed in the war in Sept. 1915. Milhaud desired that the work should not be published until six months after his own death.

* For the 80th birthday of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge.

* For the centenary of Fauré's birth.

Dance Suite 'La Libertadora' (1943).

Suite 'Songes' (1943).

'Le Bal martiniquais' (1944)

1. Chanson créole.

2. Biguine.

'Carnaval à la Nouvelle-Orléans' (1947).

'Kentuckiana: Divertissement sur 20 airs de Kentucky' (1948).

FOUR PIANOFORTES

'Paris' (1948)

1. Montmartre.

2. L'Île Saint-Louis.

3. Montparnasse.

4. Bateaux-mouches.

5. Longchamps.

6. La Tour Eiffel.

ORGAN MUSIC

Sonata (1931).

'Pastorale' (1941).

9 Preludes (1942).

SONGS

(Songs marked * orchestrated by the composer)

'Poèmes de Francis Jammes' (1910-12)

Book I

1. Avec ton parapluie.

2. J'ai vu revenir les choses.

3. Au bord de l'eau verte.

4. Les Processions des campagnes.

5. Au beau soleil.

6. C'était affreux.

7. J'aime l'âne.

8. Je crève de pitié.

9. Pourquoi les bœufs.

Book II

1. Prière pour être simple.

2. Prière pour aller au Paradis.

3. Prière pour qu'un enfant ne meure pas.

4. Prière pour demander une étoile.

5. Tristesse.

6. Si tu pouvais.

7. Ne me console pas.

'Trois Poèmes de Léo Latil' (1910-16)

1. Prière à mon poète.

2. Clair de lune.

3. Il pleut doucement.

'Poèmes de Francis Jammes' (1912)

Book III

1. Clara d'Ellebeuse.

2. Almaïde d'Étremont.

3. Pomme d'anis.

4. Bernadette.

'Sept Poèmes de la Connaissance de l'Est' (Paul Claudel) (1912-13)

1. La Nuit à la véranda.

2. Décembre.

3. Dissolution.

4. Ardeur.

5. Tristesse de l'eau.

6. La Descente.

*7. Le Point.

'Alissa' (André Gide) (1913, rev. 1931).

'Trois Poèmes en prose de Lucile de Chateaubriand' (1913)

1. L'Aurore.

2. À la lune.

3. L'Innocence.

'Trois Poèmes romantiques' Set I (1913-14)

1. Les Siècles ont creusé (Maurice de Guérin).

2. L'Isolément (Lamartine).

3. Sonnet (Hippolyte de La Morvonnais).

'Trois Poèmes romantiques', Set II (1914)

1. Plainte (A. Tastu).

2. Élégie (Mme Dufrenoy).

3. Lassitude (Louise Collet).

'Quatre Poèmes de Léo Latil' (1914)

1. L'Abandon.

2. Ma Douleur est sa compagne.

3. Le Rossignol.

4. La Tourterelle.

'Le Château' (Armand Lunel) (1914)

1. Les Enfants.

2. Le Sifflet.

3. Les Châtelaines.

4. Le Cavalier.

5. Les Libellules.

6. L'Agriculteur.

7. L'Octobre.

8. L'Adieu.

'Poème du "Gitanjali"' (Rabindranath Tagore, trans. Gide) (1914).

'Quatre Poèmes pour parvton' (Claudel) (1915-17)

1. Chanson d'automne.

2. Ténèbres.

3. Le Sombre Mai.

4. Obsession.

'D'un cahier inedit du journal d'Eugénie de Guérin' (1915)

1. Cette Promenade avec toi.

2. Nous voilà donc exiles.

3. A mesure qu'on avance.

'L'Arbre exotique' (Chevalier Gosse) (1915).

'N.-D. de Sarrance', cantique (Jammes), unaccompanied (1915).

'Deux Poèmes d'amour' (Tagore, trans. Sainte-Marie Perrin) (1915).

'Deux Poèmes de Coventry Patmore' (trans. Claudel) (1915)

1. Le Départ.

2. L'Azalée.

'Poèmes juifs' (anon., from the Hebrew) (1916)

1. Chant de nourrice.

2. Chant de Sion.

3. Chant de laboureur.

4. Chant de la pitié.

5. Chant de résignation.

6. Chant d'amour.

7. Chant de forgeron.

8. Lamentation.

'Deux Poèmes du "Gardener"' (Tagore, trans. Perrin) (1916-17)

1. Ne gardez pas.

2. Ayez pitié de votre serviteur.

'Child Poems' (Tagore) (1916)

1. When and why.

2. Defamation.

3. Paper Boats.

4. Sympathy.

5. The Gift.

*'Trois Poèmes' (1916)

1. Song (Christina Rossetti).

2. A Birthday (C. Rossetti).

3. The Roaring Frost (Alice Meynell).

'Chansons bas' (Stéphane Mallarmé) (1917)

1. Le Savetier.

2. La Marchande d'herbes aromatiques.

3. Le Cantonnier.

4. Le Marchand d'ail et d'oignons.

5. La Femme de l'ouvrier.

6. Le Vitrier.

7. Le Crieur d'imprimeries.

8. La Marchande d'habits.

'Deux Poèmes de Rimbaud' (Arthur Rimbaud) (1917)

1. Marine.

2. Aube.

'Poèmes de Francis Jammes' (1918)

Book IV

1. La Gomme coule.

2. Viens, je te mettrai.

4. Je le trouvais.

'Deux Petits Airs' (Mallarmé) (1918)

1. Indomptablement à dû.

2. Quelconque une solitude.

'Poèmes de Francis Thompson' (trans. Claudel) (1919).

'Soirées de Pétrograd' (René Chalupt) (1919)

1. L'Ancien Régime (6 short songs).

2. La Révolution (6 short songs).

'Trois Poèmes de Jean Cocteau' (1920)

1. Fumée.

2. Fête de Bordeaux.

3. Fête de Montmartre.

'Feuilles de température' (Paul Morand) (1920)

1. Don Juan.

2. Révérence.

3. Étrennes.

'Deux Poèmes d'amour' (Tagore) (1920)

1. Love, my heart longs day and night.

2. Peace, my heart.

'Poème du journal intime de Léo Latil' (1921).

'Quatre Poèmes de Catulle' (Catullus), with vn. (1923).

- * 'Six Chants populaires hébraïques' (traditional) (1923)
 1. La Séparation.
 2. Le Chant du veilleur.
 3. Chant de délivrance.
 4. Berceuse.
 5. Gloire à Dieu.
 6. Chant hassidique.
 'Hymne de Sion', "Israël est vivant" (Albert Cohen) (1923).
 'Pièce de circonstance' (Cocteau) (1926).
 'Prières journalières à l'usage des Juifs du Comtat Venaissin' (liturgical) (1927)
 1. Prière du matin.
 2. Prière de l'après-dîner.
 3. Prière du soir.
 'Vocalise' (wordless) (1928).
 'Quatrain' (Jammes) (1929).
 'Le Funeste Retour: chanson de marin' (17th-cent. Canadian) (1933).
 'Liturgie comtadine: cinq chants de Rosch Hasch-anah' (liturgical) (1933).
 'Deux Chansons du film "Mme Bovary"' (Gustave Flaubert) (1933) (see also Film Music).
 'Le Cygne', I & II (Claudel) (1935).
 'Quatrain' (Albert Flament) (1935).
 'Chansons' (Charles Vildrac) (1936-37)
 1. Les Quatre Petits Lions.
 2. La Pomme et l'escargot.
 3. Le Malpropre.
 4. Poupette et Patata.
 5. Le Jardinier impatient.
 'Chanson du capitaine' (Jean-Richard Bloch) (1937).
 'Poème de Corneille' (1937).
 2 Palestinian folksongs harmonized (traditional) (1937)
 1. Holem Tsaudi.
 2. Gam Hayom.
 'Quatrain' (Mallarmé) (1937).
 'Recréation', children's songs (Jacqueline Krieger) (1938)
 1. Pas bien grand.
 2. Haut comme trois pommes.
 3. La Tortue naine.
 4. Il faut obéir.
 * 'Couronne de gloire: cantate pour le centenaire de la synagogue d'Aix-en-Provence' (trans. from the Hebrew, Armand Lunel) (1940).
 'Le Voyage d'été' (Camille Paliard) (1940)
 1. Modestes vacances.
 2. Les Deux Hôtels.
 3. Le Boulanger.
 4. La Maison inachevée.
 5. Monsieur le curé.
 6. Les Trois Peupliers.
 7. Paresse.
 8. Les Conscrits.
 9. Le Château.
 10. L'Horizon.
 11. Le Pêcheur.
 12. Le Ruisseau.
 13. La Petite Bergère.
 14. Les Champignons.
 15. Le Retour.
 'Cours de solfège: Papillon, Papillonnette' (Henri Fluchère) (1940).
 'Cinq Prières' (Latin words), with organ or pf. (1942).
 'Rêves' (anon. 20th cent.) (1942)
 1. Les Maronniers.
 2. Toi.
 3. Confiance.
 4. Le Mistral.
 5. Long Distance.
 6. Jeunesse.
 'La Libération des Antilles' (Popular Creole words, trans. Alice Joyau-Dormoy) (1944)
 1. Bonjour, messieurs les libérateurs.
 2. Trois ans de souffrance.
 'Printemps lointain' (Jammes) (1945).
 'Quatre Chants de misère' (Paliard) (1946).
 'Trois Poèmes' (Jules Supervielle) (1947)
 1. Ce Peu.
 2. Compagnon du silence.
 3. Ce bruit de la mer.
 'Ballade-Nocturne' (Louise de Vilmorin) (1949).

VOCAL DUET

- 'Sornettes' (Provençal folk poems, trans. F. Mistral) for 2 children's voices (1940).

MILITARY BAND

VOCAL QUARTETS

- 'No. 34 de l'Eglise habillée de feuilles' (Jammes) (1916).
 'Deux Poèmes'
 1. Éloge (Saint-Léger Léger) (1916).
 2. Le Brick (René Chalupt) (1919).
 'Deux Poèmes tups' (trans. from Indian texts) for 4 women's voices & handclapping (1918).
 See also Film Music. Saudades (definition).

MILICIEN (Opera). See DUNI.

Mililotti, P. See Cimarosa (4 libs.).

MILITARY BAND. The military band is a band of wind instruments differing in its constitution from other wind bands, such as the waits and the brass band. The term "military band" is applied primarily to bands associated with the armed forces, but also to civilian bands of similar instrumentation. (At times bands consisting entirely of brass instruments have been formed by regiments in Britain and abroad, but they are considered elsewhere¹, the generally accepted connotation of the term "military band" being the combination of woodwind and brass instruments.)

The history of the military band in Britain, being similar to that of its evolution in other countries, will here be outlined as typical; but reference will frequently be made to conditions elsewhere. The first British army band appeared in 1678, but it is necessary to look farther back to discern the influences which contributed to this musical entity. These were two in number, the waits and the royal band (King's Musick). Both these groups grew from a common origin: the minstrels of the towns and cities became the waits, and the minstrels of the court became the royal band. An allusion to the former is seen in a record of 1442 mentioning payment to the "town minstrels" of Hull and, twenty-eight years later, an instance of the latter is found in the thirteen court minstrels of Edward IV, "some with the shalmes and small pipes". The Lord Chamberlain's records of 1503 give five names as those of players on "Sakbushes and Shalmoyes", and six years later are found four players on the "Sakbudds and Shalmes of the Privee Chamber". The Earl of Northumberland's household book (c. 1512) alludes to the visit of the king's "Shames". The shawm, with its modern counterpart, the oboe, formed the basis of the wind band for four centuries until ousted from principal place by the clarinet.

By the beginning of the 17th century the waits and the royal band each had similar instruments. In the treble register were recorders, flutes, shawms and cornetts; the middle register comprised tenor shawms, curtalls (early bassoons) and sackbuts (trombones), together with cornetts, and recorders of lower pitch than the normal instruments; and the lowest register consisted of double curtalls and double sackbuts with, occasionally, a large cornett. There is no record of all of these being found in any single band, the constitution of each differing according to the size of the group and to the musicians available. But such combinations formed the foundation of the modern band, flutes, sackbuts, together with the modern counterparts of shawms and curtalls, still taking an important part in the present military ensemble. The recorders, owing to their weak tone, have disappeared and the cornetts are now represented by their "descendants", the valved brass.

¹ See BRASS BAND.

In 1663 the fifes and trumpets which had provided the martial music of the "Companies des mousquetaires" in the French army were replaced by hautbois, and shortly afterwards the number was fixed as four for each company. French composers of the time, including Lully and members of the Hotteterre and Philidor families, wrote special music or arranged traditional tunes for these groups. The following march for hautbois is by Lully:

This practice was copied by the British army, and the year 1678 may be considered momentous, for it is the year of the institution of the military band in England by the first official recognition in the army of instruments (other than fifes, trumpets or drums), the Lord Chamberlain's records containing references to the appointment of "hautboys" to the strength of the troops of Horse Grenadier Guards; and it is interesting to notice that a few years later, according to the records of the Grenadier Guards, twelve hautboys were authorized as part of the establishment of the companies of the King's Regiment of Foot Guards in London, a fictitious name being included on the roll of each of the other companies of the regiment with the object of securing higher pay for these musicians.

It is noticeable that cornetts and sackbuts were not introduced into army bands of the period despite their popularity, the next addition being the bassoon (in its curtall form). This acceptance of the natural bass of the group, replacing the lowest-pitched oboe, was no doubt a further imitation of the wind groups of the French army, a picture of "Les Douze Grands Hautbois" of Louis XV showing twelve players, ten with oboes and two with bassoons. In this picture are several members of the Hotteterre family, and its date (1722) is also that of an order issued in England to the Honourable Artillery Company when "one hautboy and one courtall" were added to the strength of the company.

There is no definite evidence regarding the exact time of the addition of horns to the military band, but it was probably during the early part of the 18th century. About the same time there appeared one or two trumpets as occasional (and later regular) members of the group, these martial instruments having hitherto been used only in their own separate entity of trumpets and drums. As was the practice in the orchestra, they were crooked in keys suitable to that of the music played, and the simple harmonic structure employed enabled their use throughout the military tunes of the time.

Between 1760 and 1770 the clarinet became an integral part of the instrumentation of army bands. A clause in the Articles of Agreement for the "Band of Musick" of the Royal Regiment of Artillery (1762) provided for ten wind instruments, this number conflicting with a previous clause fixing the number of players as eight, who, incidentally, were also required to be capable of playing stringed instruments—the beginning of almost two centuries of history of this band both as a wind combination and as an orchestra. There were two trumpets, two horns, two bassoons and "four hautbois or clarinets". General Monckton's March for the 17th Regiment of Foot (1762) includes clarinets, and in the same year the King of France granted to the Swiss Guards a band of four oboes, four clarinets, four horns and four bassoons. A military march in the Fitzwilliam Museum, by William Beckford, dated 1770, is scored for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and bassoon, but probably two players were used on the bassoon part.

The influence of continental wind bands on those of Britain was still considerable. In 1763 Frederick the Great fixed the strength of Prussian army bands at two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons, a combination accepted by several composers of the classic period for works for wind octet. The influence was carried across the Atlantic by the British troops engaged in the American war, and the result is seen in the constitution of an American Marine Band of 1799, which had the usual two oboes, two clarinets and two horns, but only one bassoon. It will be observed that trumpets do not appear in any of these combinations.

General Monckton's March, of which the final section is here shown, has really only five parts, for the pairs of oboes and clarinets are each playing in unison and the general tendency is for these two parts to proceed in parallel motion, all built upon a simple harmonic structure. When the oboes and clarinets were each divided into first and second it was often the custom for the oboes and clarinets to duplicate each other, probably to ensure that the absence of oboes, which were not found in all bands, should not affect the balance of parts.

The opening bars from the second of two marches written by Haydn in 1795 for the Derbyshire Yeomanry (see top of p. 769) show that the band for which it was composed had no oboes. The two marches in question may not have been actually arranged by the composer, whose contribution may have been only the pianoforte version, but it is interesting to note the same prevailing tendency, that of parallel movements in thirds and sixths. The inclusion of a single trumpet was another custom of the time, as will be seen in the march written by John Parry about five years later (see below). Another instance of the use of one trumpet is found in the list of a band of Hanoverians sent to replace the bandsmen of the Coldstream Guards in 1785, the latter (who were not attested men) refusing to attend a water party arranged by a newly appointed lieutenant-colonel. The Hanoverian band consisted of two oboes, four clarinets, one trumpet, two horns, two bassoons and one serpent.¹ The addition of the serpent to strengthen the bass line will be noticed in the case of Haydn's march (though another version of the same march has no part for that instrument) and of this Hanoverian band. A serpent part also appears in a military march by Samuel Wesley, supposed to have been written for one of the Guards' bands in 1777. This was the natural outcome of the gradual increase in the size of bands due to the popularity of the clarinet as the principal member of the wood-wind family in the military band. Altenburg in 'Die Klarinette' (1904) alluded to the great increase in the number of clarinets in French bands over a period of fifty years, from two in 1762 to nineteen in 1810.

This increase was to some extent the outcome of a desire to rectify the balance of wind and percussion instruments which had been disturbed by the introduction of "Turkish Music", a fashion which had travelled from Turkey, via Prussia, to England. Towards the middle of the 18th century black drummers had been introduced into military bands and there followed black players on other drums, cymbals, tambourines and (in the 19th cen-

¹ Parke, in his 'Musical Memoirs', specifies twenty-four musicians, but this is contradicted by regimental records.

Trumpet in C

Horns in C

1st Clarinet in C

2nd Clarinet in C

1st Bassoon

2nd Bassoon

Serpent

ture) a "Jingling Johnny", which consisted of a number of small bells on a pole (a predecessor of the upright glockenspiel which succeeded it for parade purposes). For nearly a century these exotic players remained in some bands, but others had the good sense to relegate these noise-makers to their drum-and-life-bands, where their gymnastic antics with drumsticks have left a heritage in the showmanship (i.e. "stick-wagging") adopted, often quite justifiably, by the players in the regimental "drums". Perhaps another survival of this influence is the practice of mace-throwing by drum majors, the result of similar drumstick throwing by the Negro drummers.

Their dress was frequently very ornate, the leopard skin apron worn by present-day bass drummers being a survival of this fashion. Small wind combinations were often out-balanced by the noisy percussion players, with the ultimate result that additional wind players were employed to rectify the fault.

Before the turn of the century the flute had been added to the military band, the Grenadier Guards in 1794 having one flute, six clarinets, three bassoons, two horns, one trumpet, serpent and drums. The following march is one of a series written in the early part of the 19th century by John Parry for the Royal Denbighshire Militia :

1st Flute in Bb

2nd Flute in Bb

Horns in F

Trumpet in F

1st Clarinet in Bb

2nd Clarinet in Bb

Bassoons

Serpent

each march bearing (as title) the name of one of the regiment's officers. The same instruments are employed in each march, except that the flutes are sometimes in B \flat and at other times in A \flat (though they are misnamed as "flutes in C" or "flutes in B" respectively. Expression marks are sparsely used, being merely f or p, and these usually appear only between the clarinet staves.

This addition of the flute towards the end of the century is also evidenced by a number of military marches (in the printed music of the B.M.) written by Guest during the period 1795-1810. Parts for flutes and clarinets were included, but no oboe parts.

It will be seen that greater progress was made during the 18th century than at any other time, a hundred years having seen the band grow from a group of oboes and bassoon(s) into a complete musical entity of flutes, oboes, clarinets, bassoons, horns, trumpets and serpent. There is no reliable evidence as to the date of the return of the trombone since its discontinuance after the days of the "hautboys and sackbuts", but it probably occurred about the close of the century. Parke's 'Musical Memoirs' allude to trombones in the Coldstream Guards band of 1783, but regimental records disagree. A work for military band in the Royal Music Library (dated 1805) by Henry Pick has a part for "serpent or trombone", and the marches by Henry Dibdin, also of this period, have trombone parts. Continental bands were also using the trombone, French line regiments in 1802 having one flute, one clarinet in high F, sixteen clarinets in C, four bassoons, two serpents, two trumpets, one bass trumpet, four horns, three trombones and drums. Prussian bands of the time were smaller: two flutes, two or four clarinets, two oboes, two bassoons, one serpent, two trumpets, two trombones and drums.

Keyed bugles, bass horns and ophicleides were the next instruments to be added, but the following comparative tables of two bands of the second decade of the century show that they did not receive immediate acceptance by all bands. It is also noticeable that two marches of the period by Bishop (in the B.M.) have parts for serpent but not for keyed bugle, bass horn or ophicleide.

Keyed bugles provided a valuable addition to the "treble brass", enabling melodic work to be played in that department in a register which had hitherto been covered only by trumpets without valves, and thus limited to notes of the harmonic series. Despite the introduction of the ophicleide and bass horn, serpents were still retained in many bands.

The band of the Duke of Lancaster's Own Yeomanry had, in 1828, the following instruments:

Flute, piccolo, E \flat clarinet, 8 B \flat clarinets, 3 bassoons, 3 horns, 2 trumpets, trombone, 2 serpents and drums.

Clarinets in B \flat had now replaced clarinets in C, the same step having been taken on the Continent, as the following extract from Kastner's 'Manuel général de musique militaire' indicates:

La substitution de la clarinette en si bémol à la clarinette en ut date de 1814. Cependant, sous la Restauration, quelques régiments se servaient encore de la première; mais les dispositions ministérielles, en date du 13 Octobre 1823, rendèrent obligatoire l'adoption de la clarinette en si bémol.

The invention of the valve, besides contributing so greatly to the increase of amateur bands in many countries, had an equally important effect upon military bands. Keyed bugles were soon replaced by cornets, and the trumpets and horns, hitherto confined to "open" notes, adopted the valve. The woodwind section of the band had already become stabilized as at present, but the bass section, with its ophicleides, bass horns and serpents, was not strong enough to balance the brass and woodwind above them. This weakness is apparent in the following list of the 48 players of the Royal Artillery Band of 1839: one piccolo, two flutes, two oboes, three E \flat clarinets, fourteen B \flat clarinets, four bassoons, four trumpets, three cornets, two horns, four trombones, one ophicleide, two bass horns, two serpents and four percussion.

In 1838, in Prussia, Wilhelm Wicprecht took over the task of reforming Prussian bands and the result is seen in his constitution of an infantry band:

2 flutes, 2 oboes, clarinet in high A \flat , 2 E \flat clarinets, 8 B \flat clarinets, 2 bassoons, 2 contrabassoons, 4 horns, 4 trumpets, 4 cornets, 2 tenor horns (baritones), euphonium, 4 trombones, 4 bombardons (basses) and 5 percussion.

Apart from the use of the high clarinet in A \flat and the contrabassoons, the main difference between this band and that of the Royal Artillery of approximately the same strength lies in the use of tenor horns (baritones), euphonium and bombardons. In the Prussian band we have a complete team, including a quartet of French horns, good "tenor voices" in the baritone and euphonium (used nowadays to reinforce the basses or to play solos — or "countermelodies" — in the tenor register) and the bombardons.¹

¹ A word is necessary regarding the use of the term "tenor horn". In the band just listed, it refers to the

	Royal Band of George IV	Royal Artillery Band
Flutes	4	2
Oboes	3	3
Clarinets	12	11
Bassoons	4	3
Serpents	2	2
Trumpets	4	2
Horns	5	2
Keyed Bugle	—	3
Ophicleide	—	1
Bass Horns	—	2
Trombones	6	3
Percussion	2	5
	42	39

The constitution of French regimental bands was fixed by a decree of 1845, but despite the inclusion of many instruments of the saxhorn family, including four E♭ basses in a band of fifty, two ophicleides still remained. As the newest of the Sax inventions, saxophones also appeared, a curious instance of the introduction of the new keyed instruments together with the retention of the old.

The gradual adoption of valve instruments is illustrated by a few entries taken from a handwritten list evidently kept by the successive storemen of the Grenadier Guards band and produced for the annual inspection of the instruments by the commanding officer. The initial entry of 1848 gives the following list:

2 flutes and "picolo" [sic], 2 oboes (one doubling on "corno inglese"), 3 E♭ clarinets, 8 B♭ clarinets (one doubling on corno bassetto), 3 bassoons, 4 horns, B♭ trumpet, 2 F trumpets, bass trumpet, 1 th (in baritone), 3 trombones (in C, B♭ and G respectively), 2 ophicleides, bombardono and 5 percussion.

In this entry the name of George Miller, the first of a family of military musicians, appears as player on the B♭ trumpet, and in the following year he is entered as playing a cornet "bought second-hand". In 1850 a former ophicleide player now has a "bass tuba". In 1851 the euphonium makes an initial appearance, in 1853 a "bugle" is listed, this being probably a flugelhorn, and in 1856 tenor horns are entered, but they were apparently soon discarded. A list of the Royal Artillery Band in 1857 had two flugelhorns in E♭ and two in B♭. There were also four saxophones, a noticeable feature, as the Grenadiers had acquired one in the following year, though it was discarded in 1864.¹

British military bands derived lasting benefit from two developments which both occurred in the middle of the century. The first was the institution of military band "journals", i.e. regular publication of music arranged and edited by bandmasters of repute, the result being that a standard system of instrumentation was adopted. The second was the formation of a "Military Music Class" at Kneller Hall in 1857. This founding of a training-school was the result of two unfortunate occurrences: the sudden application for their discharge by bandmasters and bandsmen at the outbreak of the Crimean war, resulting in a rapid disintegration of many military bands, and, arising out of this, the poor display by British bands, in comparison with those of France, during a review at Scutari of troops intended for service in the Crimea. The music class developed into the Royal Military School of Music, and the influence of the school, with its training of "pupils" as bandsmen and "students" as bandmasters, has continued right up to the present time.

The following table shows the instruments in two British bands of the same date and, for comparison, that of the Belgian Guides:

	Grenadier Guards 1888	Scots Guards 1888	Belgian Guides 1888
Flutes and Piccolos	3	2	2
Oboes	2	1	2
E♭ Clarinets	4	2	2
B♭ Clarinets	14	12	12
Alto Clarinet	1	—	—
Bass Clarinets	1	2	—
Bassoons	2	2	4
Contrabassoon	1	—	—
Soprano Saxophone	—	—	1
Alto Saxophones	—	—	2
Tenor Saxophone	—	—	1
French Horns	4	4	4
Cornets	6	5	2
Trumpets	2	2	5
Fugelhorns	—	—	2
E♭ Tenor Horns	—	—	4
Baritones	1	1	2
Euphoniums	4	1	4
Trombones	3	3	6
Basses	6	5	6
Percussion	3	2	3
Total	57	44	64

Noticeable features of this list are the inclusion of the contrabassoon in the Grenadiers' band and the absence of saxophones in the British bands, despite the fact that (according to Rose, 'Talks with Bandsmen') several line bands were using them, including the 4th Dragoon Guards, 16th Lancers, 2nd Royal West Surrey Regiment, 2nd Norfolk Regiment, Lancashire Fusiliers, Border Regiment and Oxfordshire Light Infantry.

By the end of the century the practice had grown up of arranging works so that they could be played by an "engagement" band of dimensions less than the full band, involving the cueing of such parts as the 2nd flute, 2nd E♭ clarinet, 2nd oboe, 2nd bassoon, 3rd and 4th horns and trumpets. The string bass was also used in many bands.

Subsequent developments in British bands may be briefly mentioned: alto clarinets have disappeared; the bass clarinet is used only for special purposes; saxophones, particularly the alto in E♭ and tenor in B♭, are now essential; B♭ trumpets have replaced E♭ trumpets; the baritone has been abandoned as no longer essential; the Boehm flute is now employed in place of the former military flute in D♭.

The following lists show the constitution of foreign bands just before the outbreak of the second world war:

baritone saxhorn in E♭, but in English bands it usually denotes the saxhorn in B♭. This nomenclature is misleading because the saxhorn in E♭ is sometimes also called "alto horn" or "althorn" and the baritone saxhorn in B♭ has also been designated as "althorn".

¹ Many cavalry bands had adopted an all-brass constitution, but as this article is concerned only with the brass-and-woodwind teams usually denoted by the title "military band", it will suffice to give one instance, that of the 17th Lancers of the sixth decade of the century: 5 cornets, 2 trumpets, 3 tenor saxhorns, 3 baritones, 2 euphoniums, 3 trombones, 2 basses and drum.

MILITARY BAND

	La Garde Républicaine	Belgian Guides	Mexican Police	Royal Carabinieri (Italy)	German Infantry
Flutes	4	4	6	9	2
Oboes	2	3	2	2	2
Cor Anglais	1	1	1	1	—
E♭ Clarinets	4	2	2	1	1
B♭ Clarinets	14	20	20	24	8
Alto Clarinets	—	2	4	4	—
Bass Clarinets	2	2	2	2	—
Contrabass Clarinets	—	2	—	—	—
Bassoons	2	4	2	3	2
Contrabassoons	—	1	—	—	—
Soprano Saxophones	—	5	7	9	—
Alto Saxophones	2				—
Tenor Saxophones	2				—
Baritone Saxophones	2				—
Bass Saxophone	1				—
Sarrusophone ¹	1	—	—	—	—
Soprano Cornet	—	—	1	—	—
B♭ Cornets	3	3	5	2	2
B♭ Trumpets	—	4	2	2	2
E♭ Trumpets	4	—	2	2	2
Flugelhorn	5	3	3	4	—
French Horns	4	5	4	6	4
Baritones	3	3	2	2	2
Euphoniums	2	3	2	2	1
Trombones	6	5	5	4	3
Basses	8	10	8	8	4
Percussion	4	4	4	6	2
Total	76	86	84	93	37

Military bands formerly played at "high" pitch. This was introduced in 1858 (as the "ancient Philharmonic" pitch) by the Duke of Cambridge. There had been no standard pitch for military bands before. The "low" pitch now used was adopted in 1929.

The programme repertory of the military band, besides splendid arrangements of most of the standard works for orchestra, now has a number of works specially written for the medium. It is obviously not possible to give a list of these, but the first and second Suites for military band by Holst, and Vaughan Williams's

'Toccata marziale', are excellent examples.

The "conductor's copy" in military band music has usually consisted of a condensed three-line part, or even a cued solo clarinet part of works of a simple character, but full scores (some having as many as thirty staves) have been issued of a few works.

A list of the instruments of present-day British military bands is given below, but it must be borne in mind that any change of conductor which may take place before this article is printed may involve changes in the allocation of the number of instruments on each part:

	Royal Artillery	Grenadier Guards	Royal Marines	Royal Air Force	Royal Horse Guards	Royal Ulster Constabulary	Massed Band, Royal Military School of Music
Flutes and Piccolos	3	3	2	2	2	2	12
Oboes	2	2	2	2	2	1	12
E♭ Clarinets	2	2	2	2	2	1	12
Solo Clarinets	8	6	5	6	4	3	24
1st Clarinets	3	4	2	3	2	2	18
2nd Clarinets	3	3	3	4	3	2	24
3rd Clarinets	3	3	3	4	3	2	24
Alto Saxophones	3	2	2	1	2	1	12
Tenor Saxophones	3	2	2	1	2	1	10
Bassoons	2	2	2	2	2	1	12
Horns	4	5	4	4	4	4	36
1st Cornets	6	6	4	3	4	3	20
2nd Cornets	3	2	2	2	2	3	16
B♭ Trumpets	2	2	2	2	2	2	—
Euphoniums	3	2	2	2	2	1	10
Tenor Trombones	4	6	4	2	2	2	20
Bass Trombones	2	1	1	1	1	1	10
Basses ²	9	5	5	5	4	3	24
Percussion	4	4	2	2	3	2	4
Total	69 ³	62 ⁴	51 ⁵	50 ⁶	48 ⁷	37	300

¹ The sarrusophone, mentioned in the French band above, has been occasionally used. It is a metal instrument with a conical bore, played with a double reed. Made in various pitches, it takes its name from its inventor, Sarrus, a French bandmaster.

² One or more string basses are usually included.

³ Over one hundred musicians are available, if required.

⁴ Soprano and baritone saxophones, cor anglais and bass clarinet are employed on occasions.

⁵ Harp, baritone saxophone and bass clarinet are sometimes used.

⁶ Bass clarinet, baritone and bass saxophones and flugelhorn are employed at times.

⁷ This is the list of the full band; the mounted band differs in numbers and constitution.

For comparison, examples are also given of three military bands of other countries:

	U.S.A. Air Force	La Garde Républi- caine	Harmonie Nautique, Switzer- land
Flutes	5	4	5
Oboes	2	2	3
E♭ Clarinets	—	3	2
B♭ Clarinets	16	22	30
Soprano Saxophones	—	1	1
Alto Saxophones	2	2	1
Tenor Saxophones	1	2	1
Baritone Saxophones	1	2	1
Bass Saxophones	—	1	1
Cor Anglais	—	1	1
Bass Clarinets	—	1	3
Bassoons	3	2	3
Contrabassoons	—	1 ²	1
Cornets	8	2	5
Trumpets	2	4	4
Flugelhorns	—	3	3
Horns	7	6	4
Tenor Horns	—	2	3
Baritones	—	1	3
Tenor Trombones	4	3	3
Bass Trombones	2	1	1
Euphoniums	4	4	4
Basses	8	7	8
Percussion	4	(variable number)	5
Total	69 ¹	77 plus percussion	96

H. C. H.

BIBL.—ADKINS, HECTOR ERNEST, 'A Treatise on the Military Band' (London, 1945).

FARMER, HENRY GEORGE, 'Handel's Kettledrums and other papers on Military Music' (London, 1950).

'Military Music' ('World of Music' series) (London, 1950).

MILITARY CALLS.³ The use of musical instruments in war by the ancients—a use which is found in all countries and at all times—appears to have been more as an incentive to the courage of the troops than as a means of conveying orders and information.

ORIGINS.—For the latter purpose certain melodic or mensural "calls" were introduced, and such were used by the Greeks and Romans, who sounded them on trumpets and horns, although the Parthians used kettledrums. We have little evidence of any such usage in the European middle ages, but with the Crusades the western conception of military music changed, and its adoption of the Saracen an-naḥr, ṭabl and naqqāra, as the anafil, tabor and naker, with their linguistic variants, are indicative of our indebtedness. The Saracen custom of using instrumental "calls" seems also to have been borrowed by western Europe, as well as the notion of the noisy military band as a weapon of "fear and affray", as old Bartholomaeus Anglicus of the 13th century says, and as the centre of resistance.

¹ A harp and three cellos are also used.

² A sarrusophone is sometimes used.

³ The official War Office term is "Military Sounds", but "calls" is the current word.

It is in the 12th century that we first read of a trumpet signal used by the Crusaders for a charge. This was at Arsuf in Syria (1191). This instrument continued to hold sway for "calls" until the late 15th century, when we find the Suabian Landsknechte using the side-drum for this purpose.

Macchiavelli, in several passages in his 'Art of War' (written for Lorenzo de' Medici in 1521), clearly states that the drum commands all things in a battle, proclaiming the commands of the officer to his troops. He also recommends the use of trumpets and flutes, and he would give the signals to the trumpets, followed by the drums, advising that the cavalry should have instruments of a different sound from those used by the infantry. This use by the Italians of both trumpets and drums is confirmed by a passage in Zarlinò⁴:

Osservasi ancora tal costume alli tempi nostri; per, cioè che di due esserciti l' uno non assalirebbe l' inimico, se non invitato dal suono delle Trombe e de' Tamburi—ovvero da alcun' altra sorte de' musicali istrumenti.

It was in all probability from Italy that the earliest trumpet signals came: spread over Europe by mercenaries, they were modified and altered by the different troops which adopted them, but the two signalling instruments were everywhere the same.

The first military signals which have been handed down to us in notation are to be found in Jannequin's remarkable composition 'La Bataille', which describes the battle of Marignano (1515) and was published at Antwerp in 1545, with a fifth part added by Verdelot. A comparison of this composition with the same composer's similar partsongs, 'La Guerre', 'La Prinse et reduction de Boulogne'⁵, or Francesco di Milano's 'La battaglia', would be most interesting, and would probably disclose points of identity between the French and Italian military signals. The second part of Jannequin's 'Bataille' (of which the first ten bars are given here in modern notation) evidently contains two trumpet calls, 'Le Bouteselle' and 'A l'étendart'⁶:

⁴ 'Istitutioni armoniche' (Venice, 1558), Pt. I, cap. ii.

⁵ Fifth book of Nicolas du Chemin's Chansons, 1551; Eitner, 'Bibliothek der Sammelwerke', 1551, i.

Jehan Tabourot (Arbeau), in his 'Orchésographie' (1588), says that the musical instruments used in war were "les buccines et trompettes, litues et clérons, cors et cornets, tibics, fifres, arigots, tambours, et aultres semblables" (fol. 66), and adds that

Ce bruit de tous les dicts instruments, sert de signes et aduertissements aux soldats, pour desloger, marcher, se retirer: et à la rencontre de l'ennemy leur donne cœur, hardiesse, et courage d'assaillir, et se défendre virilement et vigoureusement.

That "calls" on the fife were made in the English service seems clear from the 'Lawes and ordinances of warre . . .' (1639) issued by the Earl of Arundel and Surrey, which says that "Every souldier shall diligently observe and learne the distinct and different sounds of Drums, Fifes, and Trumpets, that he may know to answer and obey each of them in time of service", although Francis Markham, in his famous book (1622) would not tolerate the fife in this office and says: "It is to the voice of the Drum the Souldier should wholly attend, and not to the aire of the whistle".

Tabourot's work also mentions that it was the custom among certain German troops for the cavalry to use kettledrums. The illustrations to the 1566 edition of L. Fronsperger's 'Kriegsbuch' give more than one example of this. Similarly in Rabelais we find a description of the Andouille folk attacking Pantagruel and his company to the sound of "joyous fifes and tabours, trumpets and clarions". But though from these passages it would seem as if signals were given by other instruments than the drum and trumpet, there can be no doubt that if this was the case they were soon discontinued. Sir James Turner, in his 'Pallas Armata' (1683), has the following:

In some places a Piper is allowed to each Company; the Germans have him, and I look upon their Pipe as a Warlike Instrument. The Bag-pipe is good enough Musick for them who love it; but sure it is not so good as the Almain Whistle. With us any Captain may keep a Piper in his Company, and maintain him too, for no pay is allowed him, perhaps just as much as he deserveth.

In the numerous military manuals and works published during the 17th century we find many allusions to and descriptions of the different signals in use. It would be unnecessary to quote these in extenso, but Francis Markham's 'Five Decades of Epistles of Warre' (London, 1622) demands some notice as being the first work which gives the names and descriptions of the different signals. In Decade I, Epistle 5, 'Of Drummes and Phiphes', he describes the drum signals as follows:

First, in the morning the discharge or breaking up of the Watch, then a preparation or Summons to make them repaire to their colours; then a beating away before they begin to march; after that a March according to the nature and custom of the country (for diuers countries have diuers Marches), then a Charge, then a Retrait, then a Troupe, and lastly a Battalion or a Battery, besides other sounds which depending on the phantastikenes of forain nations are not so useful.

He also states that a work upon the art of drumming had been written by one Hindar; unfortunately of this no copy apparently exists. Markham is no less explicit with regard to trumpet sounds than he is with drum signals:

In Horse-Troupes . . . the Trumpet is the same which the Drum and Phiph is, onely differing in the tearmes and sounds of the Instrument: for the first point of warre is Butte sella, clap on your saddles; Mounte Cauallo, mount on horseback; Tucquet, march; Carga, charge, an Alarme to charge; A la Standardo, a retrait, or retire to your colours; Auquet, to the Watch, or a discharge for the watch, besides diuers other points, as Proclamations, Cals, Summons, all which are most necessary for euery Souldier both to know and obey (Dec. III, Ep. 1).

It is noticeable in this list that the names of the trumpet sounds evidently point to an Italian origin, while those of the drum signals are as clearly English. To the list of signals given by Markham we may add here the following, mentioned only in different English works, but in which, unfortunately, no musical notes are given: Reliefe, Parado, Tapto ('Count Mansfields Directions of Warre', translated by W. G., 1624); March, Alarm, Troop, Chamadoes and answers thereunto, Reveills, Proclamations (Du Praissac's 'Art of Warre', englished by J. Cruso, 1639); Call, Preparative, Battle, Retreat (W. Barriffe's 'Military Discipline, or The Young Artillery Man', second edition, 1639, and Elton's 'Compleat Body of the Art Military', 1650); Take Arms, Come to Colours, Draw out into the Field, Challenge, General, Parley ('English Military Discipline', 1680); Gathering (Acheson's 'The Military Garden', 1629, and Turner's 'Pallas Armata', 1683), which was a Scottish call.

To return to those signals the notes of which have come down to us, the earliest collection extant is to be found in the second book of Mersenne's 'De instrumentis harmonicis', prop. xix (1635), where the following cavalry signals are given: L'entrée; 2 Boute-selles; A cheval; À l'estendart; Le simple cavalquet; Le double cavalquet; La charge; La chamade; La retraite; Le Guet. Of these signals (copies of which will be found in a manuscript of the 17th century in the B.M., Harl. 6461) we give here the first Boute-selle:

The next collection known is that of Girolamo Fantini, trumpet-major to Ferdinand II, Duke of Tuscany, whose work is entitled:

Modo per imparare a sonare di tromba tanto di guerra quanto musicalmente in organo, con tromba sordina, col cimbalo e ogn' altro istrumento; aggiuntovi molte sonate, come balletti, brandi, capricci, serabande, correnti, passaggi e sonate con la tromba e organo insieme (Frankfort, 1636).

This rare work, to which Georges Kastner first drew attention in his 'Manuel de musique militaire', contains specimens of the following trumpet calls: Prima Chiamata di Guerra; Sparata di Butta Sella; L' Accavallo; La marciata; Seconda Chiamata che si vâ sonata avanti la Battaglia; Battaglia; Allo Stendardo; Ughetto; Ritirata di Capriccio; Butte la Tenda; 'Tutti a Tavola. Some of these are very elaborate. The Butta Sella, for instance, consists of an introduction of four bars in common time, followed by a movement in 6-4 time, twenty-nine bars long, which is partly repeated. We give here one of the shorter signals, 'Allo Stendardo':

GERMANY.—With regard to the German signals of this period, and indeed with regard to the whole history of military music in Germany, we are reluctantly compelled to treat the subject very cursorily, owing to the almost total want of material. Even Fronsperger's classic 'Kriegsbuch' (1566), with its fine plates and details of the duties of military musicians, fails us on the identity of the calls. Kastner's book (1848) and Thomas's 'Bemerkungen' (1863) give nothing earlier than the 19th century. Comparison of these calls with those of other nations proves conclusively that the oft-repeated claim of the superiority of Germany in this respect is simply a myth. It is said that their signals were often derived from popular Volkslieder and that an interesting point with regard to the German calls is the habit the soldiers had of inventing doggerel verses to them. These features are common to most nations (see WAR SONGS). Some of these German rhymes are said to be very ancient, going back so far as the 16th century. The verses were not confined to the signals of their own armies, but were sometimes adapted to those of their traditional enemies, the French. Freiherr von Soltau gives several of these in his work on German Volkslieder (Leipzig, 1845). The following are some of the most striking:

Wahre di bure
Di garde di kumbt. (1500.)

Hut dich Bawr ich kom
Mach dich bald davon. (16th cent.)

Zu Bett zu Bett
Die Trommel geht

Und das ihr morgen früh aufsteht,
Und nicht so lang im Bette leht.
(Prussian Zapfenstreich, or Tattoo.)

A probable reason for the scarcity of old collections of signals in Germany is that the trumpeters and drummers formed a very close and strict guild. The origin of their privileges was of great antiquity, but their real strength dates from the imperial decrees confirming their ancient privileges issued in 1528, 1623 and 1630, and confirmed by Ferdinand III, Charles V, Francis I and Joseph II. Sir James Turner (op. cit.)¹ has some account of this guild, from which were recruited the court, town and army trumpeters. Their privileges were most strictly observed, and no one could become a master-trumpeter except by being apprenticed to a member of the guild.²

FRANCE.—Reverting to France, we find from the time of Louis XIV onwards a considerable number of orders of the government regulating the different trumpet and drum signals. Many of these have been printed by G. Kastner in the Appendix to his 'Manuel', to which work we must refer the reader for a more detailed account of the various changes which they underwent. In 1705 the elder Philidor (André) inserted in his immense autograph collection, part of which is now preserved at St. Michael's College, Tenbury, many of the "batteries et sonneries" composed by himself and Lully for the French army.

From this time the number and diversity of the French signals increased enormously. Besides Philidor's collection, a great number will be found in Lecocq Madeleine's 'Service ordinaire et journalier de la cavalerie en abrégé' (1720) and Marguery's 'Instructions pour les tambours', for the most part full of corruptions and too often incorrectly noted. Under the Consulate and Empire the military signals received a number of additions from David Buhl, who prepared (from 1803 onwards) different sets of ordonnances for trumpets, drums and fifes, which were adopted by the successive French governments during the first half of the 19th century, and still form the principal body of signals of the French army. Buhl had charge of the short-lived (1805-11) École de Trompette at Versailles for the cavalry.

The French signals are much too numerous for quotation in these pages. Perhaps the best is 'La Retraite', the first part of which, arranged for three trumpets, is quoted here:

¹ See also 'Cereemoniel und Privilegia der Trompeter und Pauker' (Dresden, n.d. Quoted in Weckerlin's 'Musicians', p. 110).

² Further information on this subject will be found in Mendel, s. v. 'Trompeter', and in the work quoted in that article, 'Versuch einer Anleitung zur heroisch-musikalischen Trompeter- und Pauker-Kunst' by J. E. Altenburg (Halle, 1795).

BRITAIN.—Returning to the English signals, after the Rebellion and during the great continental wars of the 18th century the English army underwent many changes and was much influenced by the association of foreign allies. The fife had fallen into disuse at the close of the 17th century, but was re-introduced in Flanders in 1745-47. At this period regiments of Horse used trumpets for their calls, while the Horse Grenadiers, Dragoon Guards, Dragoons and Foot regiments used side-drums; but with the restitution of the fife to marching regiments and even cavalry calls for the fife, as well as the drum, became the norm. These calls may be found in the manuals of the second half of the 18th century, notably in 'A Compleat Tutor for the Fife . . .' London, c. 1750-55). How far these calls contain older material is not easy to determine, but considering that only half a century lapsed in the fife's restitution, it is probable that some of them date from the 17th century. There were two distinct systems — "English Duty" and "Scots Duty" — and these continued to be followed until Potter's 'Art of Playing the Fife' (1815) and 'Art of Beating the Drum' (1815) appeared, when, by War Office order (28 Dec. 1816), "Scots Duty" was abolished and Potter's system was adopted throughout the army.

Meanwhile other changes had taken place. Side-drums were abolished in the Horse Grenadier Guards and Dragoons in 1766 and trumpets substituted. Light Dragoons were already using "horns like post boys" in 1761 for certain calls. The custom soon spread, and Hinde ('Discipline of the Light Horse', 1778) delineates a horn of semicircular shape. About the same time it had been adopted by the Light Infantry, Artillery and regiments of Foot. In 1798 the War Office employed James Hyde "to revise the trumpet and bugle soundings", and these were issued in 'The Sounds for Duty & Exercise for the Trumpet & Bugle Horns of His Majesty's Regiments, & Corps of Cavalry', under authority dated 29 Dec. 1898. In places the notation was faulty. Hyde rectified this in a publication of his own, 'A New and Complete Preceptor for the Trumpet and Bugle Horn' (1799). These were the first books of their kind, although James Gilbert states in his 'Bugle Horn Calls for Riflemen' (London, 1804) that he was "the First that Arranged and Published the compleat Duty for the Trumpet and Bugle Horn for the Light Horse Regiments and Associations throughout Great Britain", in 1795.

That most of the calls belonged to the historic past can hardly be doubted. One call, for instance, "To Horse", finds its initial phrase in the "A cheval" of Louis XIV. On the bugle side we see calls being developed by the light infantry in such works as Gilbert (op. cit.) and T. R. Cooper's 'Practical Guide for the Light Infantry' (1806). It was the bugle, taking a new shape with a single wreath in its tube in 1812, which gradually ousted both the drum and the fife calls. Those for the drum lasted until 1856 in the Artillery, but the fife still continued to display a few of the routine calls as late as the 1890s. Originally the bugle was pitched in C, but issued with a B \flat crook. In 1835 the bugle was ordered to be built in B \flat and the trumpet in E \flat . In the same year two other changes were made: the bugle was banned from the cavalry and regimental trumpet calls were introduced by Sir Hussey Vivian. In 1858 a new type of bugle was issued. This had a double wreath on the tube and was therefore a smaller and handier instrument.

Up to the close of the 19th century two sets of calls were the rule: the 'Trumpet and Bugle Sounds for Mounted Services and Garrison Artillery' and 'Infantry Bugle Sounds', while there was also 'The Regulation Bugle Calls as used by the Volunteer Rifle Corps and Light Infantry'. Apparently the last War Office issue of 'Drum and Flute [= Fife] Duty' for the Army was that published on 1 Oct. 1887. Since then all service calls have been assimilated into one manual, 'The Trumpet and Bugle Sounds for the Army' (1902). While its aim at codification was carried out in one direction, it still maintained the old anomaly in another, i.e. although calls for trumpet and bugle may be mensurally identical, they are often harmonically different because of their scales :

Unfortunately some writers have been contemptuous of British service calls, which, to say the least, is ungenerous. It has been stated that these calls, as written down, lack "rests, pauses, marks of expression and tempi", a statement which is not quite true. If one turns to the first published book of British trumpet and bugle calls, and looks at the first example — "Reveille" — there will be found a carefully cadenced call of extreme beauty, admirably phrased and appropriately marked for expression. The same criticism applies to the last official publication (1927). It may be true that British calls nowadays are sounded chiefly in unison, but there were occasions when 'The Roast Beef of Old England' (for "Officers' Mess" call) was sounded on chromatic bugles in three-part harmony which, in the quiet of evening, often made one regret its brevity. There were also corps which would feature "Stables" thus :

Indeed, even without a harmonized setting there is possibly no finer service call than the British "Last Post", and when heard in sad funeral rites, with its final sighing cadence whispering "lights out: lights out", there can be no mistaking its solemn and majestic grandeur.

Many of the British calls have been set by soldiers to doggerel verses which have been part and parcel of military life for a century at least. Five minutes after the "Dinner" sounds is the "Vegetables" call, to which Tommy sings :

Pick 'em up, pick 'em up, hot potatoes, hot potatoes.
Pick 'em up, pick 'em up, hot potatoes, O.

And there is the gibe at the "Officers' Mess" call¹ :

UNITED STATES.—In the U.S.A. also we see the soldiers' playful mood in "Reveille", although the music is borrowed from the French. The first four bars run :

The old American calls laid down by Scott and Casey were largely derived from the French, notably "Retreat" and "Tattoo", but in 1867 General Upton appointed Truman Seymour, afterwards General, to revise and assimilate the calls, and it is his work which laid the foundation for the present system. One still hears relics of both French and British calls. Their "Tattoo" opens with a French call, but concludes with that which for ages has been hallowed by the British. Not infrequently the whole used to be sounded in three-part harmony. "Boots and Saddles" is also French (a corruption of boute-selle), but "Stables" is British. Their old drum and fife calls, dating from the Revolution, were mainly British, and one may still hear the "Scots Reveille".

USE BY COMPOSERS.—Many composers have borrowed soldiers' calls to give local colour to their music. Berlioz, in the 'Damnation of Faust', used the French "Retraite". Most people are familiar with Suppé's overture 'Light Cavalry', but few realize that its opening fanfare is the Austrian cavalry "Retreat". One calls to mind another such use in Bizet's 'Carmen'. The composer probably did not know a Spanish call, and in any case he was writing for a French audience. What he borrowed for his purpose was the French cavalry "To Horse" (à cheval). Lastly, Auber's overture to 'Fra Diavolo' presents the French "Boot and Saddle".

It should be added that the British Army now divides calls into three categories: (1)

¹ Of recent years several collections of Trumpet and Bugle Sounds with adapted words have been published; that by A. C. Atherley (1902) is especially complete.

Regimental Calls, (2) Field Calls and (3) Routine Calls.

W. B. S., rev. H. G. F.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ALTENBURG, J. E., 'Versuch einer Anleitung zur heroisch-musikalischen Trompeter- und Pauker-Kunst' (Halle, 1795).
 BRENET, MICHEL, 'La Musique militaire' (Paris, 1917).
 FARMER, HENRY G., 'Handel's Kettledrums: Papers on Military Music' (London, 1945).
 'Military Music' ('World of Music' series) (London, 1950).
 'Rise and Development of Military Music' (London, 1950).
 KAPPEY, J. A., 'Military Music' (London, 1894).
 KASTNER, G., 'Manuel général de musique militaire' (Paris, 1848).
 KOBBE, GUSTAVE, 'The Trumpet in Camp and Battle' ('Century Magazine', Vol. I., 1893).
 NEUKOMM, EDMOND, 'Histoire de la musique militaire' (Paris, 1889).
 PANOFF, PETER, 'Militärmusik in Geschichte und Gegenwart' (Berlin, 1938).
 THOMAS, GEORGE S., 'Bemerkungen über Militär-Musik im Allgemeinen . . .' (MS in Glasgow Univ. Lib., B1 22-2).
 'Trumpet and Bugle Sounds for the . . . with Words: also Bugle Marches', 4th ed. (Aldershot, 1941).
 WECKERLIN, J. B., 'Musiciana' (Paris, 1899).
 WHITE, WILLIAM C., 'A History of Military Music in America' (New York, 1944).

MILITARY DRUM. See DRUM (C. Side Drum).

MILITARY SCHOOL OF MUSIC. See ROYAL MILITARY SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

MILITARY SYMPHONY. The familiar name of Haydn's Symphony No. 100, in G major, composed for Salomon's concerts in London in 1794. The military music in it, which makes use of "Turkish" or "Chinese Pavilion" effects, is that of the peace-time parade ground, not of warfare.

MILLAR, Edward (b. ?; d. ?).

Scottish 16th-17th-century musician. He was the music editor of the 'Scottish Psalter' of 1635 (Andro Hart, Edinburgh). Educated at Edinburgh University, graduating M.A. in 1624, he is found in 1627 at Blackfriars Wynd, Edinburgh, where he "teaches bairns". In the previous year he appears to have become friendly with James Pont, the son of Robert Pont, one of the versifiers of the psalms, and to the 'Book of Psalmes' (1615) belonging to James Pont, Millar added 75 of the psalms in four parts in his own hand, dated 2 Apr. 1626 at Psalm CL. This precious manuscript is in the possession of Mr. Cosmo Gordon. In 1635 Charles I appointed Millar to succeed Edward Kellie as Director of Music at the Chapel Royal, because of "his experience and skill in the art of music", and in this year he issued the famous Psalter of 1635, which is an entirely different setting from Wood's 'Scottish Psalter' of 1566, and is even unlike his own earlier settings of 1626.

In spite of the disclaimer in his preface "To the Gentle Reader", "the whole composition of the parts . . . belong to the primest musicians that ever this kingdom had, as Dean John Angus, Blackhall, Smith, Peebles, Sharp, Black, Buchan, and others famous for their skill", many of the settings may be said to belong to Millar. After Charles's failure to enforce episcopacy in Scotland in 1637, Millar is heard of no more.

H. G. F.

- BIBL. — COWAN, WM., 'A Bibliography of the Book of Common Order' ('Publications: Edinburgh Bibliographical Society', X), pp. 88-89.
 FARMER, HENRY G., 'History of Music in Scotland' (London, 1947), pp. 220-26.
 LIVINGSTON, NIN, 'The Scottish Metrical Psalter of A.D. 1635' (Glasgow, 1864), passim.
 Millay, Edna St. Vincent. See Bliss (songs).
 Schuman (chorus). Taylor (J. D., 'King's Henchman', lib.). Thompson (R., 'Pierrot and Cothurnus', for orch.).

MILLER, Edward (b. Norwich, 1731; d. Doncaster, 12 Sept. 1807).

English organist and composer. He studied music under Burney and was elected organist of Doncaster on 25 July 1756 at the recommendation of Nares. He graduated Mus.D. at Cambridge in 1786. His compositions comprise elegies, songs, harpsichord sonatas, flute solos, psalm tunes, etc., and he was the author of 'The Elements of Thorough-bass and Composition' (1787) and a 'History of Doncaster' (1804). In his 'Psalms of David for the use of Parish Churches' occurs the famous hymn-tune 'Rockingham'.

W. H. H.

BIBL. — MUS. T., 1901, p. 736.

Miller, James. See Carey (H., 'Coffee-House', incid. m.). Charke (songs in 'Humours of Oxford'). Handel ('Joseph', oratorio). Joseph and his Brethren (Handel, lib.).

Miller, Johann Martin. See Mozart (song).

MILLERAN, René (b. ?; d. ?)

French 17th-18th-century grammarian and amateur lutenist. He was a teacher of English and German in Paris and in music a pupil of Mouton. He compiled an undated manuscript of lute music entitled Livre de lute de M. Milleran, interprète du Roy . . . Recueil des plus belles pièces de lute des meilleurs maîtres sur les 14 modes de la musique, savoir sept en bémol et sept en bécarre.

It now belongs to the Conservatoire Library in Paris and must have been compiled at the end of the 17th century, though Weckerlin assigns it the date 1725. This valuable manuscript contains pieces by Mouton (24), Dupré d'Angleterre, Gautier, Gautier le vieux (in all 17), Gallot de Paris, le vieux Gallot d'Angers, Émond (Hémon) de Launay, Bocquet and some anonymous; also a list of the principal lute masters of the time.

M. L. P.

BIBL. — BRENET, MICHEL, 'Notes sur l'histoire du luth en France' (Riv. Mus. It., 1899).
 WECKERLIN, J. B., 'Catalogue de la réserve de la Bibliothèque du Conservatoire' (Paris, 1885).

MILLET, Luis (b. Catalonia, 18 Apr. 1867; d. Barcelona, 7 Dec. 1941).

Spanish conductor and composer. He was the founder of the Barcelona Choral Society Orfeó Català in 1891. His works consist mainly of choral arrangements of Catalan folksongs, though he also wrote for orchestra.

J. B. T.

MILLEVILLE. Franco-Italian family of musicians.

(1) Alessandro Milleville (b. Paris or Ferrara, 1521; d. Ferrara, 7 Sept. 1589), singer, organist and composer. His father was Jean de Milleville. From 1544 to 1573 he was at the court of Modena as teacher of the Princess of Este. He was appointed singer in the papal chapel, Rome, on 30 Oct. 1552, but was at Ferrara again as organist at the court in 1575 and still held the post in 1584. He composed 2 books of sacred songs and 3 books of madrigals.

(2) Barnaba Milleville (b. Ferrara, ?; d. ?), composer, ? son of the preceding. He was maestro di cappella of Chioggia Cathedral in 1619–20. In 1628 he was at Siena, according to Banchieri¹, who calls him P. D. Barnaba Milleville. He composed masses, madrigals, motets and other church music.

(3) Francesco Milleville (b. Ferrara, ?; d. ?), composer, ? brother of the preceding, son of (1). According to Fétis he was at first engaged at the Polish court, then at the court of Rudolph II. He went to Rome in 1614, became maestro di cappella at Volterra Cathedral and afterwards at Chioggia (?). In 1622 he was maestro di cappella and organist at San Giorgio, Ferrara; in 1627 organist at San Benedetto, Siena. He composed between 1617 and 1639 masses for 3–8 voices, psalms, litanies, concerti spirituali, sacre gemine, concertos for 1–4 voices with continuo, the last a 'Fantasia alla Francese' for instruments (1617); also 7 books of motets for 2–6 voices. E. v. d. s.

Millevoye. See Bizet (2 songs).

MILLICO, Giuseppe (b. Terlizzi, Modena, 1739; d. Naples, 1802).

Italian male soprano singer and composer. Gluck, who heard him in Italy, thought him one of the greatest sopranos of his day, and when Millico visited Vienna in 1772 and was attached to the court theatre, Gluck showed his estimation of him by choosing him as singing-master for his own niece. In the spring of that year Millico had already been in London, where however he found the public but little disposed in his favour, though by the end of the season he had reversed the first unfavourable impression. He had then appeared in Vento's 'Sofonisba', etc., and he took part in Handel's 'Tamerlano' in the following year. In 1774 he appeared in London again, after which he went to Berlin. In 1780 he was in Italy again, attached to the Neapolitan court.

Millico's compositions include three operas, three cantatas and a collection of canzonets, published in London (1777). The canzonets apparently include a small oblong quarto publication of Italian songs, 'Six Songs with an accompaniment [sic] for the Great or Small harp, fortepiano, or harpsichord . . . dedicated to the Hon. Mrs. Hobard by Giuseppe Millico', issued originally by Welcker and republished by Birchall. Three other sets exist. J. M., adds. F. K.

See also Cimarosa (collab. in cantata).

Milliet, Paul. See Bruneau ('Kérin', lib.). Samara (3 libs.). Werther (Massenet, lib.).

MILLIGEN, Simon van (b. Rotterdam, 14 Dec. 1849; d. Amsterdam, 11 Mar. 1929).

Dutch teacher, critic and composer. He was a pupil of Samuel de Lange and Bargiel. After being for several years head of a music school at Gouda he spent two years in Paris studying composition, returning to Holland in 1890. He then became conductor of various musical societies which specialized in the performance of contemporary French music. At the same time he acted as music critic to the weekly newspaper 'De Amsterdammer', later taking a similar post with the 'Algemeen Handelsblad'. From 1902 onwards he was also editor of the musical monthly 'Cecilia', for the first four years with Henri Viotta and subsequently alone. In 1913 he was appointed Professor of Musical History at the Amsterdam Conservatory, which post he held until his death. As a direct result of this work he wrote a comprehensive history of music, 'De Ontwikkelingsgang de Muziek', based on an earlier work by Johannes Worp, which has remained, as edited by Sem Dresden, the standard Dutch work on this subject, and a study of 'The Church Music of the Earliest Christians'.

As a composer van Milligen met with only a moderate success, though two operas, 'Brinio' (1889) and 'Darthula' (1900), were produced in Holland and remained in the repertory for some time. He also wrote a number of songs and song cycles, cantatas for children and short works for mixed and men's chorus, all of which were marked by the influence of Massenet and later French composers. H. A.

MILLÖCKER, Karl (b. Vienna, 29 Apr. 1842; d. Baden nr. Vienna, 31 Dec. 1899).

Austrian conductor and composer. He was educated at the Conservatory of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde in Vienna. After being conductor at Graz in 1864, and at the short-lived Harmonietheater in Vienna two years later, he was, in 1869, appointed conductor of, and composer to, the Theater an der Wien, for which he did all his most brilliant work. He became a most prolific composer of operettas, musical farces, incidental music, etc. Among the operettas, of which he wrote more than twenty between 1865 and 1896, were 'Gräfin Dubarry' (1879), 'Apajune der Wassermann' (1880), 'Die Jungfrau von Belleville' (1881), 'Der Bettelstudent' (1882), 'Der Feldprediger' (1884), 'Gasparone' (1884), 'Der Viceadmiral' (1886), 'Die sieben Schwaben',

¹ 'Lettere armoniche', p. 116.

(1887), 'Der arme Jonathan' (1890), 'Das Sonntagskind' (1892), 'Der Probekuss' (1894) and 'Das Nordlicht' (1896).

Millocker's music is piquant and cheerful, aiming at popularity, which it easily achieved. His operettas enjoyed a considerable vogue in Austria and Germany, and most of them were also given in England and America. 'Der Bettelstudent', which outdid all the others in popularity, was produced at the Theater an der Wien on 6 Dec. 1882 and done in English in New York on 29 Oct. 1883 and London, Alhambra Theatre, on 12 Apr. 1884. Millocker also wrote a collection of pianoforte pieces which were issued as the 'Musikalische Presse' in monthly parts.

A. L.

See also Albéniz (I., adds. to 'Arme Jonathan').

MILLS, Charles (b. Asheville, North Carolina, 8 Jan. 1914).

American composer. He was self-taught in both composition and theory in the earlier stages of his career and in 1934 took his first formal lessons with a teacher in New York, where he worked with the Czech composer Max Garfield. Thereafter he studied with Aaron Copland, Roger Sessions and Roy Harris.

Mills has been awarded a great many prizes. In 1944 he won the Roth String Quartet prize for his 3rd Quartet. In 1948 he received the L.A.D.O. prize for a chamber concerto for ten instruments and in the same year he won the first prize for 'Concerto sereno' for woodwind octet from Columbia University; in 1949 the 2nd prize for his 'Concerto grosso' for small orchestra in the "Young Composer of the Year" contest.

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

CHORAL WORKS

- Op.*
8. 'Festival Overture' (Archibald McLeish) for chorus & orch. (1940).
10. 'Ars poetica' (McLeish) for unaccomp. chorus (1940).
59. 'The Dark Night' for women's chorus & stgs. (1946).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

1. Slow Movement for stgs. (1935).
6. Chamber Symphony (1939).
15. Symphony No. 1, E mi. (1940).
20. Symphony No. 2, C ma. (1942).
26. Chamber Concerto (1942).
78. 'Concerto grosso' for small orch. (1949).

SOLO INSTRUMENT AND ORCHESTRA

15. Flute Concerto (1939).
54. Prelude for flute & stgs. (1940).
75. Pf. Concerto (1948).

CHAMBER MUSIC

7. String Quartet No. 1, F ma. (1939).
9. Sonatina for flute & stgs. 4tet (1940).
11. 'Chorale Fantasia' for stg. trio (1940).
17. 'Concertante' for wind 5tet (1941).
18. Trio, D mi., for vn., cello & pf. (1941).
22. String Quartet No. 2, D ma. (1942).
31. String Quartet No. 3, F# mi. (1943).
68. Serenade for flute, horn & pf. (1947).
77. 'Concerto sereno' for woodwind octet (1948).

UNACCOMPANIED SOLO INSTRUMENT

4. Dance Sonata for flute (1938).
33. Sonata No. 2 for flute (1944).
37. Sonata for vn. (1944).
76. Sonata No. 3 for flute (1948).

ONE INSTRUMENT AND PIANOFORTE

2. Partita for flute (1937).
3. Sonata for flute (1937).
12. Sonata No. 1 for vn. (1940).
13. Sonata No. 1 for cello (1940).
19. Sonata No. 2 for vn. (1942).
24. Sonata No. 2 for cello (1942).
28. Sonata for oboe (1943).
32. Sonatina for vn. (1943).
70. Sonata for Eng. horn (1947).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

16. Sonata No. 1 (1941).
23. Suite, B mi. (1942).
25. Sonata No. 2 (1942).
29. Suite, D ma. (1943).
— 11 Sonatinas.

Also miscellaneous works.

SONGS

- 4 Sacred Canticles (1944).
Also various other songs.

P. G.-H.

Mills, Clifford. See Quilter ('Where the Rainbow Ends', incid. m.).

Mills, Florence. See Lambert (C., 'Elegiac Blues', in memory of).

MILLS, Robert Watkin. See WATKIN-MILLS.

MILLS, Sebastian Bach (b. Cirencester, 13 Mar. 1839; d. Wiesbaden, 21 Dec. 1898).

Anglo-American pianist and organist. His first teachers were his father and Cipriani Potter in London; later he studied at the Leipzig Conservatory under Moscheles, Plaidy, Rietz and Hauptmann, and then came within the circle of young men who were so strongly influenced by Liszt. Mills's first professional engagement was as organist of the Roman Catholic Cathedral at Sheffield, which he took in 1855. He did not drop out of sight, however, as a public pianist, and in 1858 he appeared as solo performer at the Leipzig Gewandhaus. In 1859 he went to New York, where he settled permanently and made his first appearance at a concert of the Philharmonic Society on 26 Mar. in Schumann's A minor Concerto. In 1859, 1867 and 1878 he made brilliant and successful concert tours in Germany. His appearances in the U.S.A. were frequent, and he was an especial favourite in New York, where he played every season at the Philharmonic Society's concerts from 1859 down to 1877, his last performance being on 24 Nov. of the latter year.

R. A.

Milman, Henry Hart. See Sullivan ('Martyr of Antioch', oratorio).

Milne, A. A. See O'Neill ('Success' & 'Ivory Door', incid. m.).

MILNE, Peter (b. Kincardine - O'Neil, Aberdeenshire, 1824; d. Tarland, Aberdeenshire, 1908).

Scottish violinist and composer. He gave up farm work early in life to become a "folk" musician. He still has a wide reputation in the north-east of Scotland. In early manhood he became leader of the orchestra in the Theatre Royal, Marischal Street, Aberdeen, and subsequently held similar appointments in two Edinburgh theatres; but he had a restless nature which made it impossible for him to hold down any regular job for long, and in due course he was reduced to playing on the ferry-boats plying between Granton and Burntisland, on the Forth, prior to the erection of the Forth Bridge. Once, when he was upbraided by a friend for playing a slow air too briskly, he replied: "Aye, fine I ken that, but you see, if we hadna played fast on the ferry-boats, we'd never hae got deen in time to get roon wi' the hat".

When the Forth Bridge replaced the ferry-boats, Milne moved to Tarland, where he stayed with his sister. Finally, he moved into Aberdeen itself, where he taught in desultory fashion. (One of his pupils, however, was the more famous Scott Skinner, the last of the traditional line of Scots fiddle-composers, who never spoke of Milne without reverence.) Cheerful and shabby right up to the end, Milne died in an Aberdeen poorhouse. He lies buried at Tarland, where a monument to him is to be found in the wall of the kirkyard.

Owing to his excessive modesty, little of Milne's music was published during his lifetime. He edited one collection of strathspeys and reels for the publisher Keith, but kept himself in the background. But such tunes as his own 'Aboyne Brig', 'The Brig o' Feugh' and 'The Dean Brig Reel' keep his name living in the north-east. Like the Gows before him, he also gave permanence to many older, half-forgotten airs, through his own arrangement of them, though, unlike the Gows, he never attempted to pass other composers' tunes off as his own. M. I.

MILNER, Anthony (Francis Dominic) (b. London, 13 May 1925).

English composer. He was educated at Douai School, Woolhampton, Berkshire (1939-1943) and studied music at the R.C.M. in London (1945-47) under Herbert Fryer for the pianoforte and R. O. Morris for composition. He also studied composition privately with Mátyás Seiber between 1944 and 1947. He held a scholarship at Douai School and another for pianoforte at the R.C.M., of which he became an Associate in 1947. In Sept. of that year he was appointed tutor in musical theory, history and composition at Morley College.

Milner's compositions so far (1954) are nearly all choral: 'Impropria' for double chorus, string orchestra and organ (1946, rev. 1949); 'Salutatio Angelica' for contralto, chorus and chamber orchestra (1948); Mass for unaccompanied chorus (1951) and 'The Song of Akhenaten' for chorus and orchestra (1952). An oboe Quartet appeared in 1953.

F. B.

MILOJEVIC, Miloje (b. Belgrade, 15 Oct. 1884; d. Belgrade, 1946).

Yugoslav conductor, musicologist and composer. He studied composition in Belgrade and Munich, and obtained a doctor's degree in musicology in Prague. In addition to his work as composer he was professor at the Belgrade Academy of Music, conductor, music critic of the well-known daily 'Politika' and essayist.

His compositions show the successive influences of the French impressionists and of Richard Strauss, but in his smaller works (particularly for pianoforte) he made considerable use of Serbian and Macedonian folklore. His best-known work, which has been played in many countries, is the symphonic poem called 'The Death of Yugovici's Mother' (a popular legend of heroism and tragedy). His other works include the following:

Choral music.
Suite 'Intima' for string orch.
Suite 'Serbian Village Scenes' for full orch.
Works for small chamber ensembles.
Sonatas for vn. & pf.
Many albums of pf. pieces.
A large number of songs.

He also published many books and a vast number of articles on music. K. T.

MILONGA (Spa.). An Argentinian dance of the late 19th century, resembling the tango, but faster in pace. In the early 20th century it tended to become confused with the tango.

MILOSEVIC, Predrag (b. Knjazevac, Serbia, 1904).

Yugoslav conductor and composer. He studied music in Belgrade and Prague. Later he was director of the Mokranjac School of Music in Belgrade. In 1945 he was appointed conductor of the Belgrade Opera and professor at the Belgrade Academy of Music. His compositions contain some traces of impressionism and his principal works include:

Incidental music for dramas
'Hasanaginica.'
'Prince Marko.'
'Servant of Two Masters' (Goldoni).
Choral songs.
'Symphonietta' for full orch.
String Quartet.
Many works for pf.
Numerous songs.

K. T.

MILSTEIN, Nathan (b. Odessa, 31 Dec. 1904).

Russian violinist. He studied at the St. Petersburg Conservatory. On the completion of his studies he toured Russia, where his brilliant playing aroused lively interest. He appeared frequently with Vladimir Horowitz in sonata recitals. In 1926 he began to tour Europe as a soloist, going to America three years later.

Milstein's London recitals showed him to be a performer of exceptional ability. While his technique is of a very high order, the warmth and intensity of his playing give special attraction to his performances. His interpretations of Bach's sonatas for violin solo are particularly remarkable for the thorough grasp of every problem, aesthetic and technical, confronting the performer.

A number of violin transcriptions by Milstein have been published. F. B.

MILTON (Operas). See SPONTINI.

MILTON, John (b. Stanton St. John nr. Oxford, c. 1563; d. London, Mar. 1647).

English composer, father of the poet. His own father was Richard Milton, a well-to-do yeoman of Stanton St. John. Aubrey says that he was brought up at Christ Church, Oxford; the fact that his name is not found in the University registers does not make this impossible, for they were carelessly kept at that time.¹ Perhaps it was at Oxford that he received a gold medal and chain from a Polish prince, in reward for an 'In Nomine' of forty parts, as is related by his grandson Phillips on the authority of the poet. This prince, it has been conjectured, may have been Albertus Alasco, vaivode or palatine of Siradia in Poland, who visited Oxford in 1583 and was entertained by the University with "learned recreations". Milton was "cast out by his father, a bigoted Roman Catholic, for abjuring the Popish tenets", and accordingly went to London to seek his fortune. In 1595 he was apprenticed to James Colbron, a member of the Scriveners' Company, and on 27 Feb. 1600 was himself admitted to the freedom of the company. He married Sarah Jeffrey about the same date and settled in Bread Street. Of his children (five of whom were baptized at Allhallows, Bread Street) three survived: John, the poet, Christopher, the judge, and a daughter, Ann, who married Edward Phillips and was the mother of Edward and John Phillips, the authors.

About the year 1632 Milton, who had acquired a considerable fortune, retired to Horton in Buckinghamshire. In 1634 he was elected to the Mastership of the Scriveners' Company, but avoided serving the office.² On 3 Apr. 1637 Milton's wife died at Horton, and soon afterwards his son Christopher came with his family to live with him, until at some date between Jan. 1640 and Aug. 1641 he moved with them to Reading. There he remained till the taking of Reading by Lord Essex's forces in 1643, when he went to live in London with his son the poet, at first in Aldersgate Street and later in a house in the Barbican, where he died. He was buried in the chancel of St. Giles's, Cripplegate, on 15 Mar. 1647.

¹ See 'A Day at Christ Church' by Ernest Brennecke (M. & L., XIX, 1938, p. 22).

² For particulars of his business career and a lawsuit brought against him and his partner, which was decided in their favour, see Masson's 'Life of Milton', Vol. I.

Milton's musical abilities are alluded to in his son's poem 'Ad Patrem'. His compositions display sound musicianship, but are of no remarkable interest. The following were printed in his lifetime: in 'The Triumphes of Oriana' (1601), the madrigal 'Fair Oriana in the morn', a 6; in Leighton's 'Teares or Lamentations' (1614), 'Thou God of might', a 4 (printed by Burney), 'O Lord behold', a 5, 'O had I wings', a 5 (printed by Hawkins) and 'If that a sinner's sighs', a 5. For Ravenscroft's Psalter (1621) he set two psalm-tunes, one of them twice over. Of his other compositions, 'When David heard' and 'I am the Resurrection' (both a 5) have been printed in No. XXII 'Old English Edition', from B.M. Add. MSS 29,372-77, which also contain 'O woe is me', a 5, 'Precamur sancte Domine', 'How doth the Holy City' and 'She weepeth continually' (all a 6). At Christ Church, Oxford, are 'If ye love me', a 4, and five fantasies in five and six parts.

G. E. P. A.

Bibl.: BRENNÉCKE, ERNST, 'John Milton the Elder and his Music' (New York & London, 1939).

Milton, John. See Accentuation (of words). Arne (1, 'Comus'). Barbandt ('Paradise Regained', oratorio). Bossi (E., 'Paradiso perduto'). Bourgeois (L.-T., 'Paradis terrestre'). Bush (cantata, tenor & pf.). Cianchettini (2, 'Paradise Lost', cantata). Cifra (music book sent home by M.). Comus (masque) Creation (Haydn). Davies (H. W., 'Ode on Time', choral work). Duncan ('To a Nightingale', sop. & orch.). Ellerton ('Paradise Lost', oratorio). Festing (M., 'Ode on May Morning'). Finzi (2 sonnets, voice & orch.). Galliard ('Morning Hymn', cantata). Gatty ('Ode on Time', choral work). Handel ('L' Allegro', choral work, 'Samson' & Occasional Oratorio). Harris (C. H. G., 'Paradise Lost', symph. poem). Hart (P., 'Morning Hymn' from do.). Harwood (B., 'Ode on a May Morning', choral work). Horsley (C. E., m. for 'Comus'). Jackson (1, 'Lyceus', m. for dramatic version). Lahee ('Hence, loathed melancholy', glee). Lawes (2, 'Comus', masque; M's sonnet on L.). Lutyens ('Salute', choral work). McEwen (Nativity Hymn, choral work). Mackenzie ('Temptation', choral work). Marazzoli (M. present as perf.). Markevich ('Paradise Lost', cantata). Mazzocchi (V., letter about). Milton (J., jun., son). Occasional Oratorio (Handel). Paine ('Nativity', chorus & orch.). Parry (H., 'Blest pair of sirens' & 'L' Allegro', chorus & orch.). Poston ('Comus' & 'Paradise Lost', radio versions). Reichardt (J. F., 'Morning Hymn'). Ritter (P., 'Verloren Paradies', oratorio). Rootham (C., 'Ode on . . . Christ's Nativity', choral work). Rubinstein (A., 'Paradise Lost', opera). Samson (Handel, sources of lib.). Schneider (1, 'Verloren Paradies', oratorio). Smith (J. C., 'Paradise Lost', oratorio). Spohr (Psalm). Spontini ('Milton' & 'Verloren Paradies', operas). Stanford (partsong; Symphony on 'L' Allegro'). Sullivan (hymn). Vaughan Williams (partsong). Wellesz (song). Wood (C., 'Ode on Time', choral work). Wyld (2, 'Paradise Lost', cantata).

MILTOU, Maître. See DANIEL, JEAN.

MILWID, Antoni (b. ?; d. ?).

Polish 18th-century composer. He wrote two Symphonies (C major and B \flat minor) and numerous sacred works such as masses, offertories, etc., with accompaniments for a small orchestra and organ.

C. R. H.

MINA (Opera). See THOMAS (A.).

Minato, Niccolò. See Bononcini (2, lib.; 3, 'Conquista del vello d'oro', lib.). Cavalli (8 lib.). Draghi (A., lib.). Freschi ('Iphide Greca', lib.). Handel (? 'Muzio Scevola' & 'Serse', operas). Hasse ('Dalisa', lib.). Pistocchi ('Risa di Democrito', lib.). Sartorio (3 lib.). Scarlatti (1, 'Pompeo', lib.). Telemann ('Gedultige Socrates', opera). Ziani (M. A., 'Chilonida', lib.).

MINCHEJMER (Münchheimer), Adam (b. Warsaw, 23 Dec. 1830; d. Warsaw, 28 Jan. 1904).

Polish violinist, conductor and composer. After his studies under Niedzielski and Hornziel (violin), and August Freyer (theory and composition), he began his career as composer at the age of fourteen. In 1850 he became a member of the Opera orchestra in Warsaw. Shortly afterwards he appeared as conductor of that orchestra. In 1856 he went to Berlin, where for a few months he studied under Adolph Marx. There he met Meyerbeer, who was the ideal of his youthful dreams and whose spell he was unable to shake off for many years. In 1858 he became conductor of the Warsaw Ballet and began to work at his compositions. He finished his first opera, 'Otto łucznik' ('Otto the Archer'), libretto by Jan Chęciński after Dumas, which was produced in Warsaw in 1864. The sketches of this opera he had shown to Liszt at Weimar a few years earlier (1856). Liszt's remark was noted by Minchejmer in his diary: "Naïveté in melodies, and the instrumentation bears the stamp of routine".¹

Minchejmer wrote three more operas. They are as follows:

'Stradiota' (libretto by J. S. Jasiński), produced Warsaw, 1876.

'Mazepa' (lib. by M. Radziszewski, after a tragedy by Juliusz Słowacki), prod. Warsaw, 1 May 1900, given within two years at Lwów.

'Mściciel' ('The Avenger') (lib. by Radziszewski, after an Italian original by W. Miller), prod. by amateurs, Warsaw, 1910.

The vocal score of 'Mazepa', published in Warsaw, was dedicated to Verdi.

Besides his operas Minchejmer composed songs, pieces for pianoforte, two works for string quartet and some orchestral pieces (overtures, suites, etc.). C. R. H.

MINES, Anatole. See CARTER STRING TRIO.

MINGHETTI, Lisa (b. Vienna, 17 Oct. 1912).

Austrian violinist. She studied the violin at the Vienna Conservatory, going later to Berlin to complete her training with Carl Flesch. She made her first appearance at the age of twelve at an orchestral concert of the Vienna Symphony Orchestra. She was afterwards heard frequently in England, playing concertos at the great orchestral concerts in London and the provinces.

Minghetti is in the front rank of modern women violinists, combining sound musicianship with brilliance of execution. F. B.

¹ It is worth noting that a German composer, K. H. A. Reiss, almost simultaneously with Minchejmer wrote an opera, 'Otto der Schütz', which was staged at Mainz in 1856.

MINGOTTI. Italian family of operatic musicians.

(1) Angelo Mingotti (b. Venice, c. 1700; d. ?).

(2) Pietro Mingotti (b. Venice, c. 1702; d. ?).

Opera managers, brothers. They maintained a very good opera company which from 1737 onwards toured Austria, Moravia (Brno) and Bohemia (Prague), repeatedly visited Copenhagen and often played in Germany, particularly at Dresden. Their last recorded appearance in that country was at Bonn in 1764. Prominent singers, a well-chosen repertory and excellent conductors, including Gluck and Scalabrini, ensured a high level of performance. G. Č.

(3) Regina Mingotti (born Valentini) (b. Naples, 16 Feb. 1722; d. Neuburg o/Danube, 1 Oct. 1808), soprano singer, wife of the preceding. Her father, an officer in the Austrian service, being ordered to Gratz in Silesia in the year of his daughter's birth, took her with him. He died there, leaving her to the care of an uncle, who placed her in the Ursuline Convent, where she received her first instruction in music. At the age of fourteen, however, she lost her uncle by death, and the pension which ensured her an asylum with the nuns ceased with his life. Compelled to return to her family, she spent some time very unhappily. In order to escape from this miserable life, though still a mere child, she married Pietro Mingotti, who was some twenty years older than herself and at that time impresario of the Dresden opera. Perceiving all the advantage that might be derived from the great gifts of his young wife, Mingotti placed her at once under the tuition of Porpora, where she made rapid progress in her art. She made her début at Dresden on 25 May 1747, in Scalabrini's 'Merope'. It is said that her popularity aroused the jealousy of a powerful and established rival, the celebrated Faustina Bordoni, Hasse's wife, who actually vacated the field and left Dresden for Italy. Soon afterwards the younger singer also went to Italy and obtained a lucrative engagement at Naples. There she appeared with great success in Galuppi's 'L' Olimpiade'. Engagements were immediately offered her for many of the great Italian operas, but she refused all in order to return to Dresden, where she was already engaged. There she played again in 'L' Olimpiade' with enormous success. The Hasses were also at Dresden again, and Burney tells an anecdote which, if true, shows that their jealous feelings towards Mingotti had not ceased.² From Dresden she went to Spain (1751), where she sang with Gizziello in the operas directed by Farinelli, who was so strict a disciplinarian that he would not allow her to sing anywhere but at the Opera, nor even to practise in a room that looked on the street.

² See HASSE; and Burney, 'Present State' (Germany), I, 157.

After spending two years in Spain Mingotti went to Paris, and thence to London for the first time. Her arrival there retrieved the fortunes of the opera in England, which were in a languishing condition. In Nov. 1755 Jommelli's 'Andromaca' was performed, but "a damp was thrown on its success by the indisposition of Mingotti". She told Burney¹, indeed, in 1772, "that she was frequently hissed by the English for having a toothache, a cold, or a fever, to which the good people of England will readily allow every human being is liable except an actor or a singer". She seems to have been a very accomplished singer and actress; her only fault, if she had one, being a little want of feminine grace and softness. Her contentions with Vaneschi, the manager, occasioned many private quarrels and feuds.

At the close of the season of 1763 Signora Mattei left England, Giardini and Mingotti again "resumed the reins of opera government", and Mingotti sang in 'Cleonice', 'Siroe', 'Enca e Lavinia', 'Leucippo' and 'Senecrita'. She afterwards sang with considerable success in the principal cities of Italy, but she always regarded Dresden as her home during the life of the Elector Augustus. In 1772 she was settled at Munich, living comfortably, well received at court and esteemed by all such as were able to appreciate her understanding and conversation.

In 1787 Mingotti retired to Neuburg on the Danube, where she died. Her portrait in crayons, by Mengs, is (or was) in the Dresden Gallery. It represents her, when young, with a piece of music in her hand; and, if faithful, it makes her more nearly beautiful than it was easy for those who knew her later in life to believe her ever to have been. The dog in Hogarth's 'Lady's Last Stake' is said to be a portrait of Mingotti's dog.

J. M.

BIBL.—MÜLLER, E. H., 'Die Mingottischen Opern-Unternehmungen: 1732 bis 1856' (Leipzig, 1915).

See also Cornelys (member of company). Hasse (jealousy of R. M.).

MINIM (Fr. blanche; Ger. halbe Note, whence the American term half-note; Ital. minima). The half of a semibreve and equal to two crotchets. It is written  and its rest is , a block-stroke placed above a line of the staff: i.e. the inversion of the semibreve rest.

H. C. C.

MINIPIANO. See PIANOFORTE.

MINISCALCHI, Guglielmo (b. ?; d. ? Venice, ?).

Italian 16th–17th-century composer. He was an Augustinian monk and, from about 1622, maestro di cappella of the Church of Santo Stefano at Venice. He published three books of pleasant strophic 'Arie' for solo voice and continuo in 1625 (reprinted, 1627), 1627 and 1630. Vincenti, the printer, introducing the second book, testifies to their great popularity on account of their beauty and craftsmanship. There are two similar songs by Miniscalchi in Carlo Milanuzzi's 'Quarto scherzo delle ariose vaghezze' (Venice, 1624). His other published works are concertato psalms and motets a 2-3, with sinfonie (Venice, 1622, in one volume).

N. F. (ii)

MINKUS, Léon (actually Aloisius Ludwig) (b. Vienna, 1827; d. St. Petersburg, 1890).

Austro-Russian composer of Polish origin. He spent most of his professional life in Russia as a composer of ballet music of the kind familiar to the frequenters of the English major music-halls in the late 1890s, usually composed by the theatre's own conductor. Minkus first attracted attention in Paris, where he collaborated with Delibes in the composition of the ballet 'La Source', for the first and last scenes of which he was responsible. It appeared in 1866, but was by no means his first effort (see below). His 'Don Quixote' (Bolshoy Theatre, Moscow, 1869), with a scenario by Marius Petipa and Gorsky's choreography, still figures in the repertory of the Soviet Ballet. In 1872, when Gedeonov approached Cui, Borodin, Mussorgsky and Rimsky-Korsakov with his project of a joint opera-ballet entitled 'Mlada', he entrusted the composition of the major portion of the ballet music to Minkus. It appears now to be generally assumed that Gedeonov's eventual abandonment of the entire plan was, therefore, an undisguised blessing. Later, when Vsevolozhsky assumed control of the state theatres, he determined to raise the artistic level of ballet music and, being able to recognize the limitations of such journeyman composers as Minkus, he was bold enough to invite Tchaikovsky to collaborate in the now famous 'Sleeping Beauty' and subsequently in 'The Nutcracker'.

It is perhaps a little unfair that Minkus should be subjected to the gibes of critics who have been brought up on the solid fare of modern ballet of the type to which Diaghilev introduced them. Minkus's output was in the style of the ballet music of his period, and while such a composer as Delibes offered something decidedly superior, the general public of Minkus's day did not appreciate anything better than what one modern writer has termed "glib melodies and hackneyed rhythms". The difference between his music, however, and that of the famous composers who have contributed to ballet since his day fully justifies his being placed in the category of the third-rate, and even that classing may possibly be regarded by some as an understatement.

¹ From whose account most of these details are derived.

Minkus made his appearance as a composer in Paris very early, with 'Paquita', written jointly with Deldevéz and produced there in Apr. 1846, with choreography by Mazillier. 'La Fiammetta', with choreography by Saint-Léon, followed in 13 Feb. 1864, and 'Nemca' at the Opéra on 14 July 1864. Then came 'La Source', at the Opéra, on 12 Nov. 1866, Delibes, aged thirty, having been associated with Minkus as a special favour, but utterly eclipsing him with his superior talent. Two more ballets appeared in Paris, with Saint-Léon as choreographer: 'Le Poisson d'or' (1867) and 'Le Lys' (1869).

The first production of a ballet with music by Minkus at Moscow took place on 14 Dec. 1869. This was 'Don Quixote', based on Cervantes, with choreography by Petipa, who was as conventional in his own line as Minkus was in music and who remained associated with him in all the following productions at the Maryinsky Theatre in St. Petersburg:

- 'Les Brigands' (with Delibes), 26 Feb. 1875.
- 'The Adventures of Pelus' (with Delibes), 18 Jan. 1876.
- 'Roxane, la belle Albanèse', 29 Jan. 1878.
- 'Daughter of the Snows', 7 Jan. 1879.
- 'Frizak, or The Double Wedding', 11 Mar. 1879.
- 'Mlada', 2 Dec. 1879.¹
- 'Zoraiya', 1 Feb. 1881.
- 'Les Pillules magiques', 1886.
- 'L'Ollrande à l'Amour, ou Les Plaisirs amoureux', 1886.

M. M.-N.

See also Delibes (collab. in 'Source'). Saint-Léon (collab. in ballets).

MINNESINGER. See NEIDHART VON REUENTAL. SONG, pp. 911-12.

BIBL. — ISBASFCU, MIHAIL, 'Minne und Liebe: ein Beitrag zur Begriffsdeutung und Terminologie des Minnesangs' (Stuttgart, 1940).

MORLI, ANDRÉ, 'Anthologie du Minnesang' (Paris, 1949).

